Mr. Nowlan: They phoned and, of course, they were against the bell. However, these were the committed people after that first week or ten days. I seriously believe that unless this House reforms itself, people will say in the not too distant future that that bell was ringing for this institution. It is almost that serious. One can look around tonight. I am not casting stones because it is the opposition motion. There is not a great, horrendous throng behind me tonight to support whatever I might say or what the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had said earlier today when he made a very reasoned contribution to this debate. However, I am telling Your Honour that I have been on a procedure and organization committee. I was a member of the last one that sat, goodness knows how many years ago. It is almost an absolute scandal in terms of priority of reform in this institution. This is the three hundred and eighth day of this first session of the Thirty-second Parliament. This session of Parliament started on April 14, 1980. It will likely be known not only as the Parliament of the clang, but also long known as the long session. Perhaps there will be other, more derisive terms than that. I will not comment. I will take a lead from my good colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton. This afternoon his strongest word was "regret" at the President of the Privy Council's (Mr. Pinard) contribution to this debate, when he took on, as also the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) took on, the personal attributes or the personal motives of my leader. I am not going to get into that other than to say this, that my leader is not one to take a back seat to anybody on parliamentary reform. I say that, especially when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), the two of them, cannot agree on what is a separatist or a terrorist, or on defining the Prime Minister's most memorable statement last week when he was implying here that this is fascism and that there were reds in the opposition, led by their leader.

• (2040)

I am not going to say anything more than that, but the fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that this is a government which has said in the Speech from the Throne that it was interested in reform, yet we have gone into 200 days of sitting and we have gone into a second year and we have not even structured the procedural organization committee. That is an insult to all members of this House.

This is a very funny thing, and I do not know if there is a conspiracy somewhere. I am going to surprise some members now by saying that the Prime Minister in another utterance some years ago stated that the Members of Parliament on both sides were nobodies. He was speaking from a debating point of view and he was speaking as a supporter of that claim, and I could be also a supporter of the theory. In terms of policy we all know this. Members have said this here today. We do not really have that much input into policy. The whole history and purpose of this institution was not to legislate but to try to control the power of the purse.

I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister does not appreciate that from me, a backbencher—and someone, I think it was the member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), said that he was referring only to the opposition members, but I am referring both to the opposition and to those on the government side.

I can tell you that if I felt like a nobody in the opposition as a backbencher, I really lived as a nobody when I was a backbencher on the government side, in my own party, in terms of real input in policy.

My point is that I am afraid that the Prime Minister does not understand in his dissection of the problem in his very theoretical logic, that that is not a solution to that problem.

If I am a member, elected by my constituents, and I am a nobody, if members of the opposition are nobodies, then I am going to extend this to the backbenchers on the government benches, and if I do not think they are really nobodies, then that will be a reflection on the people who sent us here, and then these people are nobodies. Mr. Speaker, that is the very thing that we came to try to correct in this institution, that it is slowly dying.

We have a funny paradox here. We have the lights of television on this institution, and some of us were here in the House before television lights penetrated to this institution. And, Mr. Speaker, you were one of those members here when I was here earlier, and I would say, speaking in marginal terms, even though some were nobodies, there was still some input before the fundamental rules changes were made in 1969. At that time, I as a backbencher could stand up and when, for example, the then minister of the environment had his estimates on the floor of the House, I could at least address a question on behalf of the members of my constituency to that minister and I could hold up his estimates until I got some type of answer. We know that those rules have changed. This is why we are directing attention to what has happened in the last 15 days.

It is too much to expect that we could enter this debate tonight lightly. The tone has been good, with a few exceptions, but there is very much scarred tissue from what has happened. We have to remember that much of the scarred tissue has been formed, as was said by the President of the Privy council, not only on the members but a scar is left on the institution. That is why we put this motion forward here today, to cause ourselves to address ourselves to the problem of reform of this institution.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many things in terms of reform that I would say. Like my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), we all know that people are trying to find answers to some of these fundamental problems, and we know that to some of them there are no fundamental answers. I am not going to talk about the perversion of the bells. We have all listened to them in the last 16 days. I was looking upon what happened in the last 16 days in a most kind way. There was a mechanical filibuster, mechanical except for the bells, ringing and clanging.

Mr. Speaker, you could pick up the newspapers tonight, you could look at your television or listen to the national news tonight, and you would see other problems in other countries where they are shooting each other, where they are killing each other, where they are blowing one another up. Bells are not bullets. We have just had a bell ringing for 16 days. It did cause some inconvenience. Perhaps it caused some auditory problems in the corridors, and also it fouled up the government timetable tremendously. But nothing was hurt fundamentally. The reason for the mechanical filibuster, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council knows full well, is that the Conservatives felt that in so many fundamental rule changes, in terms of opposition, an opposition really cannot debate now until the cows come home, in order to get the message out, and they have to "use" any device possible to try to focus attention on something which the opposition feels very strongly about.

I have been in the House for the last 16 years and I never expected those bells to ring for 16 days, and, frankly, I can envisage when they might ring for another 16 days. I do not know. I can tell you that it was not just the cause of the energy security bill. There is no opposition worth its salt that would dare to try to ring bells for 16 days, if it were just about a complicated 150 or 170-paged bill, with all the implications that that bill contains. That might have been the catalyst, but I do not think there is a member in the House who believes that it was solely the bill that caused those bells to ring. It was a combination of factors, and that was the last straw.

As to the mechanical filibuster, I do not think anyone was really hurt by that. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that even my friends from the government side were a little surprised at the focus of attention and the divided opinion as to whether this was a good thing or a bad thing in terms of whatever the people thought about the energy bill, whether they thought that the government should be brought to a halt, whether they thought that there should be an election, whether they thought that Pierre Trudeau had gone too far, whether they thought Joe Clark was great or poor. Many people interpreted that bell in their own way. All I am going back to say is that that bell was ringing for this institution. We have to address ourselves to that problem.

Mr. Speaker, part of the problem is that we do not have the English system here. I do not want the phrase "Mother of Parliaments" repeated ad nauseam in this House. We are not English. We have just had the Canada bill winding its way through the staid, stuffy House of Lords, which is an insult to Canada, as far as I am concerned. Absolutely. So let us not quibble about our Parliament, because that is not relevant to what is going on in the House of Lords regarding the Canada bill. We have a federal system of government here, not the unitary system that they have in a homogenous country like England.

Let us not get into details, following these rabbit tracks when we are hunting elephants, because that is not going to address the problem here.

Also, what they do have in England, and what we do not have here, is a transfer of power, from Labour to Conservative, and in the old days from Liberal to Conservative. We know that in every period of eight to ten years there was a change of government there and that such a change occurs much more regularly than it does in Canada. They are therefore in the position of knowing that they will be in government in eight to ten years. They will not abuse whatever rules they have because they know they will be confronted with that abuse when they come into power. Mr. Speaker, in this country we have an imbalance in anticipation of events, with the government party stalled in central Canada and particularly in Quebec, with the Tory party very strong in western Canada and west of the Lakehead. We do not only have that imbalance but we have an imbalance in the history of transfer of power.

One of the saddest things that has happened in Canada is that the Conservative Party was in power only for eight or nine months, and that meant that there was not an education process for sincere members on the government side to spend some time in opposition, to realize that in opposition it is a very difficult role to hold. When you are in opposition, boy, you will use any process, any ambit or gambit, to try to focus the attention of the public on those things that are fundamental. But you do not have to be in the opposition or the government to know what I have come to realize in this business, Mr. Speaker.

There is a Parkinson's law or Murphy's law, and one day after St. Patrick's day I would like to coin a Patrick's law. If I have learned anything in politics or in Parliament, it is this; the only consistency in this business is its inconsistency and uncertainty. That is number one.

As my hon. friend from Nepean-Carleton said earlier with respect to Parliament, you can pervert or prostitute any rule of procedure of any institution, especially the House of Commons, unless there is some good will and tolerance and unless there is respect for each side and its arguments, even though you violently oppose their position. What has happened in this institution is that instead of good will, we have rancour; instead of tolerance, we have arrogance; instead of trust, we have suspicion. It is a combination of all those things which caused the bells to ring for 16 days. It was not just the energy security bill. I did not understand the details of it when the bells began to ring. I can tell you, as can most of the public, I now know substantially more about the energy security bill than I did on Tuesday, March 2.

There must be the respect, tolerance and good will flowing back and forth in this institution, but it is not possible when the leader of our country says that we are a bunch of nobodies because that means by inference that the people are nobodies. That cannot help the institution.

There is a fundamental reform needed in the House of Commons with respect to prime minsters, not this particular Prime Minister but any Prime Minister. I agree with the paper put forward by my hon. friend from Nepean-Carleton, the former president of the Privy Council. I have also heard some other useful ideas today. The leader of the NDP, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), made a suggestion which I frankly feel has a lot of merit. That is that the House meet for three weeks and members spend the fourth week in their ridings, which would be complimentary to their constituency office.

With respect to the mechanics of the House, I am in agreement with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. In terms of perks, in terms of staff and in terms of the salary, I am much better off than I was when I came to this institution in 1965 because, unlike him, I shared an office with another member. If a secretary came in the office, one member would have to leave because there was not enough space in that small office. The parliamentary secretary is absolutely right that there has been a tremendous transformation in the mechanics of the House of Commons.

However, there exists a fundamental paradox. Through the increase of perks and technology, we have the ability to communicate, yet I do not think we are being heard, because of this institution, as well as we were heard when we did not have some of the technology, including telephones. We go through the form and we have more paper flowing across our desks. Perhaps we are closer to being nobodies than we were in the mid-sixties when I first came to this place.

You can have all the reforms you want. You can have committees with powers to investigate the matter of the Ocean Ranger, but, as the hon. member for Gloucester, chairman of the transportation committee, said earlier, it is an insult to me as a Canadian to have to listen to the national news about the Ocean Ranger to discover what happened to Canadian lives in Canadian waters through an American congressional committee when the Canadian committee could not hear that evidence.

My time is almost up but I would like to say that my fundamental premise for reform is that the right of the Prime Minister to dissolve Parliament must be restricted. I believe that this was said earlier by the hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) when he was discussing block voting. Unless we are prepared to face the fundamental issue that we only have a vote of confidence for the defeat of the government on a Speech from the Throne, a budget or a tax bill, then we are just toying with the issue. As members we should vote on a bill to determine if it can receive a majority of support in the House. If it cannot, the very next question which should be put by the Chair without debate is, the bill having been lost, does the government have the confidence of the House. In most cases there would not be a vote against the government, it would only be against a particular bill, thereby directing the minister who introduced that bill to redraft it.

Without going any further, I would just say that it is crazy to give me a salary, which is becoming more reasonable, and all the benefits of my office while having me, along with 281 other members, play the same game and in effect vote the same way as was done in the days of John A. Macdonald. The bell is tolling for us, and unless we address our problems and at least organize the procedure and organization committee, this place will be even more ludicrous than perhaps it is now.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to indicate to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) that the chairman of the transport committee is the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) who represents a constituency neighbouring on mine.

I do not want to comment too much this evening about the events of the last 16 days since I would like to make some other points. I would only say that it has been a regrettable period. Basically, I support the position taken by the government House leader, which was to maintain the tradition that the majority in the House of Commons has the duty, responsibility and power to determine the orders of the day and to decide upon the form in which legislation is to be presented in the House of Commons subject to the ruling of the Chair as to its acceptability and its form.

That tradition is basic and must remain that way, otherwise I do not see how any democratic assembly can work. Filibusters have taken place before, and I suppose this form of filibuster which we have seen, because it was different and new, has dramatized a filibuster tactic much more. I think that we have underestimated the extent to which this institution functions on mood and human feelings. Although filibusters will occur in various forms, I repeat that I deplore the sort of filibuster we have just had because it prevented us from coming to the House of Commons to answer or ask questions and debate. However, in a country as diverse and complex as Canada where people have referred to it as a human experience—certainly a political experience—it is understandable that this institution will always be difficult to operate because of that diversity.

[Translation]

I would like to separate my comments on parliamentary reform into four parts. First, I believe that there are certain reforms or changes which would be easy to bring about that concern our everyday life as parliamentarians. When I say this, I mean among other things our trips to our constituencies and our families. I would simply like to point out that situations where surprise votes may be called at just about any time do not lead to a parliamentary way of life that should be acceptable today. As recently as this week, I twice had to cancel elaborate plans for meetings in my constituency with groups who wanted to consult with me. This is very important for a Member of Parliament, and twice I had to revise my plans simply because my whip told me that I had to be in Ottawa lest there should be a vote. This is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, and in a country as large as Canada, in a country where the federal government is losing its credibility in certain areas, it is very important for Members of Parliament to be mobile. In order to maintain efficient political and public relations, it is most important for a Member of Parliament, when he has told a chamber of commerce, a municipal council or an industrial commission, that he will meet them at a certain time on a certain date, that he should not have to change his plans two or three times in the same week, simply because there can be surprise votes in the House.

It seems to me that nothing should prevent us from making plans and if this recent crisis should give us the opportunity to effect some changes, I believe that we sought to start by trying to update our system. I am willing to leave in our procedures sufficient latitude for the official opposition to delay the work of the House in one way or another. I believe that we need loopholes here and there for the opposition and even backbenchers to delay the work of Parliament. I do not think that we can realistically expect the Canadian Parliament to have a system completely free of such loopholes.

However, Mr. Speaker, I believe that, in a modern Parliament, we should eliminate the problems of session adjournments, surprise votes and bells which can ring for nights without anyone knowing whether or not the vote will be held, and I believe that this could easily be the first stage of our parliamentary reform. The second issue that I want to raise is the consideration of budgetary estimates, and the third is the handling of legislation. I shall deal with both of them at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, traditionally, and this is important in my view, Parliament votes the estimates in order that the government may govern. Over the years, as mentioned by the previous speaker, we went into Committee of the Whole and ministers were summoned here, on the floor. Members could ask questions, they could delay matters as long as they wished. This was changed in 1969, I was here at the time, so that the estimates could be referred to committee and we could have a specific date on which the estimates are deemed to have been reported by committee, even if the latter refuses to do so.

• (2100)

Mr. Speaker, the old custom is worth while, but it is preposterous to suggest that members of Parliament should scrutinize in detail the estimates each year in order to hold government accountable with the means at our disposal. It is not done, because it is not possible in a modern society. We now have accounting methods that were lacking previously. We have computers, we have the Auditor General, we have a Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and I feel, Mr. Speaker, that one of the things we should seriously consider—the hon. member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) raised this issue in the motion tabled on February 25, I believe, and I would like to take this opportunity to commend him for that as well as for his speech this afternoon, because I think he has a very considered approach, that of changing the procedure for consideration of the estimates with a view to making government accountable to Parliament.

[English]

I believe the kind of examination of estimates we have now is a total waste of time. It is boring for members of the government. It is a boring exercise for us, and a frustration for members in the opposition. We assume it is necessary in a modern society to make a detailed yearly examination of estimates, but it is humanly impossible.

What I would rather like to see, if I had a choice—and here I come close to what my colleague, the hon. member for Rosemont, proposed this afternoon and proposed in his resolution of February 25—is that we give the opportunity to small groups of Members of Parliament in special committees of the House, with the appropriate staffs, to pick five-year plans of departments. We do not change the notion of accountability of ministers, but the mere fact that we are going to look at five-year plans automatically puts an onus on officials to account. Ministers, technically, will have to account, but then those committees can put departments to the test for one year, with the appropriate staffs, and really grill certain departments and find out where they are going in the long term. That is better accountability than what we have now, which is really an exercise in frustration for everybody. It is a waste of time, and we should not even pretend we are examining the estimates of the departments. Officials do not have to account because they know all they have to do is give long answers and the bell will ring at eleven o'clock, and by a certain date the matter has to be reported. I suppose in a technical or parliamentary sense it is still some kind of examination. The government still has the confidence of the House of Commons. We on the Liberal side could decide that estimates are bad, and we could kick the government out. Right now six or seven Liberal Members of Parliament could, I suppose, force the government to change its mind, but that would really not be a proper examination of a department.

The way to do that is to do something like the Senate did with the Department of Public Works some five or six years ago and to give a committee a mandate to look at a department and its five year plan. We could have real accountability, and departments—and I include officials—would have to answer to parliamentarians for their actions. Parliamentarians could say, "Instead of the policy you are following, we think you should go another way." Those reports would be read by the government. They would be examined by the public, and they would be taken seriously. The reports we have now as far as the estimates are concerned are not worth very much, unless there is a rebellion on the government side and five or six members of the government decide they want to kick the government out. However, that is not very smart, unless we want to have an election.

What we have now is not really an examination or the accountability of the government to Parliament. If I were to vote against my government and be confronted with an election, that would be somewhat irresponsible. It would be irresponsible for any group of Members of Parliament privately to decide we should have an election at a certain time.

The third part of my speech is related somewhat to the second part with respect to the estimates. I believe we should do a little bit of the same thing with legislation. I think there is value in the parliamentary system, versus a congressional system, in having the majority, that is the government, propose the legislative timetable and propose a philosophical framework. However, once that is done and once the whole House of Commons has voted on a resolution—which could be ten pages long—why not let a committee of Parliament write the legislation? Why not give it the time and hire the staff and have it write the legislation? I have reflected on this a little. I am not a lawyer or a draftsman, but I do not understand why a civil servant who works in the Department of Justice or in the Privy Council can write legislation while any person from the public cannot write legislation. If that were done, members of Parliament would feel they were part of the legislation. If there was a conflict and if something were to block somewhere, it would block on a question of policy and not on some picayune matter which has to do with drafting. As a matter of fact, one could suggest that the government would not have to keep so many of the officials who write legislation now. People in the country would probably develop expertise in the drafting of legislation, and they could work for Members of Parliament or for parliamentary committees.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): There would be a lot of unemployed lawyers.

Mr. Breau: In the fourth part of my speech I want to deal with the question of policy formulation. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), the hon. member for Rosemont and a few others, including the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), have talked about parliamentary task forces. In this Parliament where we tend to think we are in a great crisis and the institution is breaking down, it is paradoxical that there has been, in my view, an important parliamentary reform in this session. I was involved in two parliamentary task forces, and I do not say this only because I was involved in them, but the setting up of parliamentary task forces has demonstrated an important reform in attitude. It was not really a great structural reform, but it was an important reform in attitude. I know the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton is proud of that because he was part of the government, the former government, which in a sense seeded the idea. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) formed the government the last time, he found this idea appealing and felt it a good way to involve parliamentarians. That has been an important reform of this Parliament. Never before have Members of Parliament been so involved and so effective in providing policy. That is not proper accountability, and it is not proper examination of legislation or estimates, but in terms of policy formulation I think it has been a great reform. Most, if not all, reports are unanimous. Members from the different parties have been able to agree to a coherent political statement. That is a very important reform and it worked because of members' attitudes. First of all, the subject was chosen by the government and therefore was on the political agenda of the government. It expected a report and wanted the opinion of parliamentarians. Also, it was obvious from the start—because the chairmen were proposed publicly by the Prime Minister—that there would not be the usual kind of party discipline directed to the subject. In the parliamentary task forces that I chaired—and I suppose it was the same in the others—when we first sat down with the opposition it was obvious that the Liberal members were free of party discipline. We were free to hire such staff as the opposition would agree to and were free to go wherever we thought it made sense to go in terms of policy orientation. As soon as that was clear, members of the opposition—who after all are here to do a job for their constituents—as soon as they realized that their opinion was worth something, they worked positively. Any disagreements were disagreements of philosophy, of policy, of substance. Once disagreements are reduced to those terms, it is easy to work them out. With skilful draftsmen it is easy to get around problems and to come up with a statement that is not so diluted that it does not make sense.

I have spoken on four different aspects of this matter, Mr. Speaker. The first is parliamentary life. I want to stress again that we must do away with this matter of surprise votes. Members of Parliament have to be free to go back to their constituencies without worrying about votes. Then there is the question of the bells, the question of voting, the question of fixed adjournments, and it seems to me that we should deal with them very quickly. I do not understand why we do not.

The other three aspects of the matter are estimates, legislation and policy formulation. With regard to these three I believe we must provide a better committee system and rely upon it more.

[Translation]

Again I would like to commend the hon. member for Rosemont for his motion of February 25, 1982. What I am proposing is very similar in substance to what he is proposing, except that he went further than I did, he proposed a solution. The solution is open to discussion, but what is important is making the government truly accountable to Parliament. This is as far as we can go in a modern society, Mr. Speaker, if we put aside exaggeration or the make-believe suggestion that it is possible for 282 Members of Parliament to make every year a detailed examination of the estimates for some 30 departments. A far better approach, Mr. Speaker, is to examine departmental structure and long-term direction within the framework of a study that can extend over a year, with the staff needed, the resources needed, resources to travel, to call for witnesses and experts. Then hon. members could really pass judgment and influence long-term policy.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few comments to make about the debate. Perhaps I should begin with a reference to the parliamentary impasse that we have just experienced and which is part and parcel of the reason for the debate tonight. I think it was a good idea for the official opposition to provide Parliament with an opportunity to debate parliamentary reform.

I should like to reinforce what my leader said this afternoon about the attitudinal dimension of parliamentary reform. As good as the rules for human relationships might be, without the proper spirit we will not be able to proceed to the kind of reform and the kind of Parliament that members have envisioned this afternoon.

There were people on both sides of the issue, of course. There were those who supported the ringing of the bells and those who thought that what the Tories were doing was a terrible thing. People appeared to judge the impasse according to their political loyalties. However, there were a great many people who simply felt that nothing had changed.

As we moved into the final day of the impasse it rather scared me that nobody seemed to care. The relevance of Parliament was being demonstrated by the bells rather than being created by the bells. Among my constituents I could not find a sense that the decision-making process had been interrupted. Because there is a feeling in the country that the real decisions are not made in Parliament in any case and in so far as that is the perspective behind the Conservative motion, I think it is a good one. People do feel that Parliament does not have as much power or relevance as it ought to.

Personally, as a new Member of Parliament, I am dissatisfied with a number of things. Some good reforms have been suggested vis-à-vis committees and I should like to see them go through. I find committees to be a sort of make-work projects for Members of Parliament. We have the impression that we are doing something, but it is a false belief. Committees are run by the government. The people who appear before the committees get a false impression too, as they believe they are speaking to people who can do something when in fact they cannot. That is unfair to the witnesses and their perspective of the democratic process.

Just recently I read or heard something about the Prime Minister's famous comment about Members of Parliament being nobodies. I wish I could remember the source. The problem is not that Members of Parliament are nobodies. When we are in our constituencies we are somebodies; it is only in Parliament that we are nobodies. The minute we walk off the Hill, as far as our constituents and others are concerned we are somebodies because thousands and thousands of people voted to put us here. The minute we walk into this building we become nobodies because of the way things are structured and the attitude of the government party that has been in power too long. In all fairness, I must say that it is destructive of the democratic spirit for the Liberal Party to have been in power as long as it has. But the point that has to be made is that it is only when we are here that we are nobodies.

The point made earlier today by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) about party discipline is a good one. If there is absolutely no possibility that through good argument and good debate or whatever we have to offer in this chamber we can change anyone's mind on anything, then there is no point to debate. There is no point to it if everyone has his mind made up on how he is going to vote on everything before the debate begins. This seems to me to vitiate the whole notion of what a debate is, particularly now that people give set speeches. I understand that in the "olden days" there used to be a little bit more actual debate when members asked questions of each other. But that tends to spoil the set speech that a member may want to send back to his riding for broadcast on cable TV. There seems to be an unwritten rule that this sort of thing is not done any more because it spoils the entertainment value of the speech.

That brings me to another point, Mr. Speaker, the dimension of modern politics that has been left out of this whole debate, the media. There are other actors in the democratic process who also have a responsibility to ensure that Parliament as an institution and as a symbol of democracy is held in appropriate respect. An incident that occurred earlier today demonstrates this. After the Leader of the Opposition spoke, I was outside the chamber and I noticed that there was a bunch of cameramen waiting to interview him. Doing the good thing, he sat and listened to the government House leader make his speech; then he listened to the leader of the New Democratic Party make his speech. Meanwhile the cameramen were going crazy because they wanted him to come out for an interview. As I walked by, I heard a cameraman say, "Enough of this crap about democracy; I have deadlines to meet".

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Where are they now?

Mr. Blaikie: Exactly, where are they now? The Press Gallery is empty, and I have looked at an empty Press Gallery more than I want to think about since coming here. People say that members of Parliament do not have anything substantial to offer. I want to say something in defence of all of us, even though I have listened to a lot of crappy speeches. I have also listened to many good ones which went completely and totally unreported because it was past the deadline, too complicated, or no one could be bothered to listen to them. This is something I wanted to put on the record. There is a thing called "the media" which also has responsibilities in this business. They are the interlocutors or the people who stand between us and our constituents, between us and the country; they are the filter. I happen to think that from time to time they do not do a particularly good job. If that means that I will not get any press coverage from now until doomsday, so be it.

Another matter the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) wanted me to mention is something which I do not think has received enough attention tonight. I am referring to the entire question of voting, the incredible amount of time which is taken up voting in this place, and the need for reform of the amount of time required for us to vote. In many different parliamentary and legislative assemblies around the world, there are methods of voting such as electronic voting and voting with cards. Various mechanisms are available which would make possible a much more efficient method of voting. The one thing I like about the way in which we vote is the symbol of people having to rise to say where they stand on a particular issue. I would be distressed to see that sort of human side of voting taken away by any reform, but perhaps it is something we must consider.

Also I should like to see reform of the way in which we perceive the act of abstaining on a vote in Canadian politics. In many other institutions at least people have three options—they can vote yes, they can vote no, or they can abstain and say why they abstain. There is a third position; politicians are not always caught in this either/or situation of having to vote yes or no. It obscures the quality of decision-making and it obscures the ability of Members of Parliament to say where they are on any particular issue. Everything comes down to the vote—one is either for it or against it. This is a very uncomplicated and, in some cases, primitive way of looking at issues. We ought to have more options available to us. I should like to see some reform in this area.

That is about all I wanted to say. I hope this will be the first step toward meaningful parliamentary reform. I get little attacks of despair when I hear members who have been here for ten, 15 or 18 years rising and saying, "We have been talking about parliamentary reform since way back when". I do not know if I want to wait around another 16 years before we actually get around to doing something. There has already been much talk about parliamentary reform, and it is about time there was some kind of consensus.

I was particularly interested in hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) because he chaired a special task force on fiscal arrangements of which I was a member. We managed to come to some kind of consensus about a very difficult matter, although sometimes the hon. member interprets the consensus differently from me. One of my ideas is that perhaps we should have a special parliamentary task force. Task forces have served us well in the past. Perhaps we should set up a small committee to travel across the country to obtain the views of people on parliamentary reform and to come up with a consensus. If the debate this afternoon and this evening has been sincere, it would be something to which all parties could listen and respect, and perhaps by next fall we might have some parliamentary reforms on the books which would make this place a better place in which to work, a better place for Canadians.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak during this debate. While I have been on my feet at numerous times during question period and during the 15-minute period when we are allowed to make motions on anything from the sublime to the ridiculous, I have not had the opportunity to speak at length during debate in the House, due in part to the parliamentary system under which we operate. I know that I can perhaps speak tonight on almost anything, but I will stick to the matter at hand because I feel the subject is of utmost importance to the operation of this great House of Commons.

I welcome the opportunity to speak as the Member of Parliament for the riding of London West, a riding which I believe is the third largest in Canada in terms of population, on this subject of parliamentary reform. Since coming into the House last April following my election, I have had the opportunity of seeing first hand how the parliamentary system works, or does not work. I am afraid to say that quite often the latter is more the case. In coming from a background of broadcast news media which tends to report only the so-called highlights of the action of Parliament, I must confess that it is not until one comes into the parliamentary process in a very personal way that one's eyes are opened to the inaction of much of the parliamentary procedure. Unfortunately, the public, as my hon. friend mentioned just a moment ago, is left with only a sham battle to watch on the television screen and to sit back and watch amazed at the circus antics of question period.

I know that the entire subject of parliamentary reform is a contentious one. I believe it was Mark Twain who said, "Nothing so needs reforming as other people's habits." If this be true, it is no wonder that other attempts at reform have been clouded with doubt and suspicion. For the government side to talk about parliamentary reform is to be viewed by the opposition as some other device to try to slip some piece of legislation quickly through the House. For the opposition to talk about reform is to be viewed by the government as another device to come up with more tactics of delay and of obstruction. Cautious, careful people, always looking about to preserve their reputation and political standing, will not bring about reform. Those who are really honest in wanting reform must be willing to do anything or nothing in the estimation of the citizens of the country.

James Bryce back in 1888 said:

Law will never be strong or respected unless it has the sentiment of the people behind it. If the people of a state make bad laws, they will suffer for it. They will be the first to suffer. Suffering and nothing else, will implant that sentiment of responsibility which is the first step to reform.

I suggest the suffering that Parliament has endured these last two weeks is proof positive of that statement. Is it not time that we all got our act together and entered the real world to get on with the important business of governing our great country?

As a relative newcomer to the parliamentary process, I find that much of my time is taken up in reacting and not enough time is spent in acting or initiating. Because of this reactive nature of our process, I am sure the talents of many politicians in the House are wasted. Backbenchers on both sides of the House need to have greater input into the legislative process. Some might argue that a member has this opportunity in his party caucus. To a point this is true, but the operation of our party caucus is secret. I am not suggesting that we change this, but the public is not made aware of what goes on in caucus. As a result, it is left with a less than honest impression of what Parliament is all about.

• (2130)

An hon. Member: That is your caucus, not ours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Burghardt: Again, I mention the antics of question period as seen and reported by the media. Obviously some members on the opposite side of the House are more attuned to the media than others, or perhaps the media is more attuned to those members. I guess that is where the news is being made these days. Yet far more time is being spent in the House on debates than on questions. Unfortunately, as we all know, the exodus of members, visitors and media from the chamber and its galleries after question period, leaving the House almost deserted, illustrates this point.

There are valid reasons for this. Debate is too long; it is too repetitive; it is too partisan on many occasions, it is too adverse and quite often it does not do the job. The opposition mentality of being against everything and in favour of nothing reduces the opposition's credibility as an alternative government. On the other hand, I feel the government ought to be concerned that its explanations of legislative proposals are not always communicated in a way that the public, and in some cases the House, can understand. To be honest, there are also grounds for suspecting that a government, because of the system, is sometimes forced to bypass Parliament to avoid delays that weaken Parliament as a whole.

I think it must be recognized that practical limitations on parliamentary involvement are necessary. For example, the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform, a committee which was made up of members from all parties in the House, on page 22 of its report on the subject of practical limitations on parliamentary involvement it reported the following:

We are convinced from what we have been told and from our experience working in this committee, that parliamentarians can contribute more to the regulatory process than they do at present. We must report, however, that the general support we found for greater parliamentary involvement in the regulatory process was tempered by the concern expressed by many witnesses that taking on additional functions could, in the long run, be counterproductive. We were cautioned against recommendations that would simply add to the present overload of Parliament and unjustifiably slow progress on the matters that require its approval. We recognize as well that enhanced accountability to Parliament would impose additional obligations on the Government.

Officials in almost all the departments we heard from characterized Parliament as a bottleneck. Significantly, this view was shared by many private sector interests as well. We were advised that some departments had been waiting for as long as four years simply to get bills of "lesser priority" before Parliament. In some cases, measures that might have reduced the burden of federal regulation on the private sector have not been implemented for lack of parliamentary consideration and approval. The parliamentary bottleneck provides further incentive for the government to include broad delegations of legislative power to ministers, regulatory agencies, and the governor in council in new regulatory statutes.

Nothing in reforms should prevent an opposition from opposing legislation before the House vigorously and objectively. But at the same time, reforms must permit a government to get a reasonable legislative program through Parliament. Perhaps a sense of purpose and direction in debate would make it more interesting for all members of the House, certainly for visitors in the galleries and, more important, the media. Normal speeches should be reduced from 40 to 20 minutes. This would make for better use of time in the House. It would give more members an opportunity to speak on a given bill. This proposal to reduce the time for speeches from 40 to 20 minutes has been mentioned many times and as late as this afternoon by the government House leader, and I know the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton has also mentioned it.

In my opinion, the purpose of parliamentary debate is to provide Parliament, and thus its members, with an opportunity to examine legislation before the House intelligently and objectively. This is a process that would create a better atmosphere between Parliament and the citizens of our country. It appears plain enough and easy to understand, but unfortunately, this is not the case. There is an increasing disenchantment with and skepticism of Parliament on the part of our citizens because of the very nature of the present system of rules and regulations which provide for procedural wranglings and delay, giving the impression, with all due respect, that we are nothing more than young school children at play. I believe there will be a greater decline in confidence placed in parliamentary government and little respect for parliamentary institutions if we do not change our ways.

I would like to mention the work of parliamentary committees. I feel parliamentary committees need to have greater control and input in examining a given piece of legislation. It has been suggested before, and I would concur, that our present committees are too cumbersome and that not enough members attend with the proper background and research required to investigate adequately, to scrutinize and criticize a particular bill before them. Too much time is spent in trying to score political points, especially if it is a committee which the media attends.

In many ways the failure, or whatever failure we are encountering in the House of Commons, has been to create a competent committee structure which can have a definite capability of affecting legislation. House committees seem to go mainly through the routine of looking into spending estimates. This point was mentioned earlier tonight. Important as it is, it is nevertheless a routine without much clout. Any attempt to dwell on a specific area is turned aside.

Having said that, some of our special committees, for example, the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, have done an outstanding job at getting to the heart of the matter and initiating specific recommendations. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) referred to this earlier tonight. He was chairman of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, and my seatmate, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki), also was a member of it. That committee made up of members from all sides of the House did an outstanding piece of work. Unfortunately, again because of the system, action on many specific recommendations encounter needless delay. Alternatives are available to make greater use of committee time and effectiveness. It has been suggested at other times that annual reports of any department or government body be automatically referred to the appropriate committee for thorough investigation. This would give them more adequate opportunity to inquire into the needs and operation of a given department. It would also make for a better use of committee time resulting in a greater degree of accountability.

Another area of concern to me as a member, and I am sure to many members on both sides of the House, is that constant pull between the House and the constituency. Constituents legitimately expect a Member of Parliament to be at their beck and call. While parliamentary procedure decrees a member's presence "on the Hill", this sometimes results in a member being neither here nor there. A Member of Parliament is required to play a number of important roles. A Member of Parliament, as I have already mentioned, must seek to be a legislator in debating and amending legislation. A Member of Parliament must also act as an ombudsman for thousands of constituents who have problems in dealing with government and its agencies. A Member of Parliament probably meets with a more varied and diverse group of individuals more often on a day to day basis than a person in any other occupation. A Member of Parliament must be in a position to relate to factory workers, farmers, lawyers, engineers, office workers, the medical profession, teachers and professors, those in administrative positions and so on. A member must be ready to adjust to the particular subject matter at hand. Unfortunately, there is often not enough time to prepare oneself for these varied tasks.

Any reform must take into account the need of the member to be in the constituency on a regular basis and for a sufficient length of time. Now there has been some indication that sitting hours should be amended, allowing members more time in their constituencies, and that some votes on division be deferred to times agreed upon by House leaders in concert with the Speaker, rather than members be required always to stand by waiting for that bell to ring and then drop whatever they are doing to rush into the House only to wait until enough members on both sides of the House assemble for the voting ritual.

I am sure the frustration which many members feel is because the talents and skills which brought them so-called success in private life do not count as much in the total operation of Parliament. Having said all this, Mr. Speaker, I realize that these views coming from one of the newer members in the House may seem rather presumptuous to veteran members who, I know, have long contemplated parliamentary reform. Indeed, I recognize that there have been significant and positive parliamentary reforms. Since 1968, committee investigations have been initiated and are frequent. Parliamentary task forces have been created. The research capability of individual members of each of the parties and of the Library of Parliament have been substantially increased. In addition, the operational facilities provided for the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party have grown considerably, hopefully allowing each to fulfil his official role more competently. But more needs to be done. I have given these views in an attempt to initiate further parliamentary reform and therefore to provide a better system in which we may better represent the citizens who elected us. On that note I feel very privileged and honoured to represent the riding of London West, a riding made up of people who really care and, I have first-hand evidence of this, who are really interested in what transpires here in Parliament.

Just as our country is made strong by our differences, Parliament is made strong by responsible and responsive differences, such as were not displayed during the last two weeks. Let us have responsible government and responsible opposition in Parliament. Perhaps long overdue reform will help all of us to be more responsible and responsive. Let me close, Mr. Speaker, by telling the story of an old farmer who frequently described his experience in life by saying, "Well, I'm not making much progress, but I'm established." One spring when he was hauling some logs, his wagon wheels sank down to the axles in mud. Try as he would he could not get the wagon out. Defeated, he sat atop the logs viewing the dismal situation. A neighbour who had always felt uncomfortable with the farmer's worn-out description of his life came along and said, "Well, brother Jones, I see you're not making much progress but you must be content because you're well established." We may be "established" in Parliament, Mr. Speaker, but if we are "stuck" we are not very productive.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in my initial remarks this evening I want to join with my colleagues in congratulating the hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) on his maiden speech. When I was a student at the University of Western Ontario I was privileged to watch him on CFPL; I enjoyed watching him then, and I enjoyed it even more this evening. I think the contribution he made this evening, particularly as a new member who has not been in Parliament for a long period of time, was extremely constructive and very thoughtful, and it will be very helpful to each of us as we pursue the issue of parliamentary reform.

If you have a taste for irony, Mr. Speaker, I guess it will probably be satisfied this evening because here we are, following a two week impasse in Parliament which tied up the business of the nation and prevented members from meeting in this chamber, and the first piece of business Parliament is called back to deal with is a debate on the issue of parliamentary reform, trying to make this institution work again. Yet what we find is that throughout most of this debate, about 85 or 90 of the seats in this House have been vacant. Also, to the best of my knowledge, not once this evening was anyone sitting in the Press Gallery to report on the activities here.

Now, I say this, Mr. Speaker, not as a criticism of my colleagues for not being here this evening because I know something about the schedules which members keep. There is a myth that Members of Parliament are not busy, that there is not a great deal for them to do. Most MPs do put in 70 to 80-hour weeks, and there is a great deal that they would be doing this evening such as attending standing committees, dealing with correspondence or speaking to various groups across the country, or solving constituents' problems. Nor am I critical of the members of the press for not being here. However, I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the empty seats here this evening speak far more eloquently to the need for parliamentary reform than anything that has been said by any of us here. Members are absent this evening because they know that what happens in this chamber is not of great importance compared to their other responsibilities. Until we can restore this institution to a place of prominence, a place of centrality in our democratic system, this sort of sorry record is going to continue.

What is happening, Mr. Speaker, is that Parliament is fast becoming irrelevant. As we broke for the supper hour this evening I looked at the fossilized limestone from which the Parliament buildings are made. They were quarried in Manitoba—

Mr. Mayer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: My colleague from Manitoba is impressed with that fact. In any event, it is fascinating to walk through the halls and see the fossils which are caught in the limestone. I think there is probably no better symbol for this institution, perhaps, than that fossilized limestone of which the walls are made. It gives testimony to the fact that there was once a living, breathing organism there, but today there is a hollow shell, rigid and dead. To a great extent that is what we find in the House of Commons under the present circumstances.

What we have is an institution which was once vibrant, living, important and central to our democratic system, yet today we find it is hollow and irrelevant. The choice we are faced with this evening is whether we are going to allow that decline to continue, whether we will alow the ossification of Parliament to continue unchecked, or whether we will take action to try to breathe some life into the institution and restore it to a position of prominence.

What importance will this debate today have? Well, it may give a chance to some of the members on the treasury benches to blow off steam. For others, including my colleague, the hon. member for London West, who gave such a thoughtful speech earlier, it will be an opportunity to put their ideas on the record as to how Parliament can be reformed, and students of political science will be able to read Hansard and look at the various suggestions. But the real issue, I suppose, is whether in fact the debate will lead to a reform of Parliament. Will it in fact lead to a revitalization of this institution, or will it simply give us the opportunity to reaffirm, to give a pledge of allegiance to Parliament and say that we believe in the institution and it is important, and that we lament the fact that Parliament has fallen on hard times? That is really the issue we are being forced to deal with today.

When I watched the hon. member for London West on CFPL I was studying political science at the University of Western Ontario. Anyone who has read a political science textbook has learned about where political scientists feel that Parliament fits into our representative system; it is central. And much of the study which takes place in universities across the country on political science deals with the role of Parliament and how it is the central institution in our democratic system. Here is where decisions are supposed to be made as to the future of our country. Here is where the course, the very direction that the country will be taking, is decided. At least that is the theory, but in fact it is not the practice. The fact is that for many Members of Parliament their most important function takes place on election night when, by their election, they help to determine who the prime minister will be and which of the prime minister's colleagues will form the cabinet. There are members in this House who are relevant and do play an important role; but by and large that role, that importance and that responsibility come to them not by virtue of being members of the House of Commons but rather by virtue of being members of the cabinet. For so many Members of Parliament, the responsibility which is left is to act as ombudsmen, to cajole, to persuade, to prod, to embarrass, to try to get members of cabinet to change their minds once they have made up their minds, or to adopt a particular position before a decision has been made.

• (2150)

That is not the role that I understood Parliament should be playing. It is not a role which I think is fulfilling for most Members of Parliament. It is not a role which I think the average Canadian who voted for us to come here expects us to be discharging. Parliamentarians have become ombudsmen and spokesmen instead of legislators. If we have a job to do here, we must surely restore this institution to a place where, in fact, it is central to our system of government and where, in fact, decisions are made and where, in fact, there is some point to representing our constituents here. We should have the opportunity to do something to change the conditions which affect the average Canadian.

I feel frustrated, and I know that hon. Members opposite also feel frustrated, by the inability of members of Parliament to do the job that they would like to do in representing their constituents. I would like to cite one example. I have received a thousand letters following the federal budget. The hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) has publicly mentioned that he has received a thousand letters from constituents concerned about the budget. What is Parliament's role in the budgetary process? What opportunity do Members of Parliament have to correct policies that they believe are wrong or to give some direction and guidance to the government on policies which they feel will be helpful for their constituents or for their country in the future? How many of us can honestly say that we have been able to respond to calls from our constituents who have said, "I will lose my home. What will you do for me?" Have we been able to respond to those constituents who have said that if conditions continue the way they are today, their farms will be lost, or their businesses will have to close? How many of us can honestly say that we have been able to respond to our constituents by saying that we do have some function and that we will be able to do something to ameliorate the conditions which led them to have that concern about their future? I think that if we are honest, very few of us could actually make that claim.

Parliament has been like the gargoyles which we find on so many parts of the Parliament buildings, with very fierce expressions sometimes, frightening to look at, but in fact frozen in stone, incapable of really delivering on their facial threats. Parliament is fast becoming irrelevant. Unless we are prepared to take action now to restore Parliament to a position of prominence, I suggest that it shall become even more irrelevant in the future.

I mentioned earlier that when any of us studied political science, we learned that Parliament was supposed to be the centre of our democratic system. If we had the opportunity, I think it would be instructive to ask members of the executive, whether cabinet ministers or members of the public service, which would perhaps be even more informative, to draw an organization chart to describe their role within the whole of government. I think what we would probably find is that the public servant would draw a box with himself in it; above that would be the deputy minister and above that would be his minister. Beside would be the cabinet and on top of that would be the prime minister. Off to one side, like a malignant growth, would be Parliament. Parliament, far from being the central institution in our democratic system to so many in the government today, is viewed, in fact, as being an impediment and an obstacle, something which must be avoided or circumvented. Unless we are prepared to change that relationship, unless we are prepared to redraw the organization chart, unless we are prepared to restore to Parliament the responsibility and the power that is necessary to discharge our job on behalf of our constituents, I think we will find that this institution will slip further and further into irrelevancy.

Many suggestions for changes have been made over the course of the day which could help to make Parliament more relevant. The hon. member for London West made a series of them over the course of his remarks. My colleague, the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) also made suggestions. People have suggested that we could reform the committee system and the budgetary system, and that the whole process needs to be opened up. Others have suggested that we could have reform of the rules as they relate to the parliamentary schedule, or that speeches could be shorter or that we could perhaps reform the Senate. There is no end to the various proposals that one could make to improve the functioning of Parliament. Personally, I have made a series of proposals on behalf of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. Our fourth report made a very comprehensive set of recommendations as to how we could improve the functioning of the committee system in Parliament. My own feeling is that probably the single most important parliamentary reform which could be made, but which is generally not considered in the context of parliamentary reform, would be to bring down a tough and comprehensive freedom of information act so that Members of Parliament and the people we represent would have the opportunity to know how decisions are made and how the public's money is spent. Today, that is denied us. A tough and comprehensive freedom of information act could help to redress that flaw in the system today.

Probably the most serious thing that could be done, the most profound development which could take place if we were serious about trying to reform and revitalize this institution, would not require a single change to the rules of Parliament. It would not require that we spend a great deal of money on more staff for ourselves, on better offices or improved telephones. It would not require that we pass new legislation. All that it would require would be a change of attitude in this institution. It would require that there be built a feeling of trust among parliamentarians. It would require that there be, on the part of the executive, a willingness to share power. It would require a recognition of the fact that all sides and all Canadians would gain if we could make this institution functional again and if we could take advantage of the tremendous expertise, the tremendous human resources available in this institution which are not being utilized today. I think that the party in power would find that its position would be improved if this institution were less fractious and less partisan and if we were able to build the same feeling of partnership as there was in the various task forces and as there is in the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. That would help the government. It would help Parliament as a whole. I think the government would find that its purposes would be furthered if legislation which passed the House were more properly and more fully scrutinized and if improvements were made which prevented problems arising further down the road. I know that the government would feel that its position had been furthered if its own backbenchers felt that they had an important role to play and that they would not be frustrated in trying to discharge their responsibilities for bringing leadership to the country and for serving their constituents. I would suggest that Canadians as a whole would be better served if this institution could help to pass better laws, could help to hold the bureaucracy to account more effectively, could help to scrutinize legislation that we had passed earlier, to ensure that it is still functional, that it is still serving the purpose for which it was intended and that it is still needed. I think that all Canadians would be better served if Parliament could act as a thread which could be used to bind together the disparate parts of Canada. That is what we could do if we were willing to revitalize this institution.

I cannot walk out of this building at night, and I know the hon. member for London West probably cannot either, without looking back on it and feeling a sense of pride and humility. This is, in part, because of the architecture which is so striking and beautiful; in part because of the history of the institution. However, perhaps even more than that, it is because of the potential of the institution. If we are prepared to take action today to breathe life back into this institution and to make it work again, we can serve the purpose of all Canadians. We can ensure that our country is better off for our participation in this institution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please! It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that under the provisions of Standing Order 58(11), the debate on the motion has been concluded.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—A CHANGE IN APPLICATION OF SALES TAX—POSSIBLE REMISSIONS OF EXCESS TAX. (B) INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to deal, albeit briefly, but, nevertheless, in more detail, with a question which I directed to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) in the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on March 1 relating to the change to be brought about, as a consequence of the budget, in the imposition of federal sales tax. My question to the Minister of State arose out of an answer given by the Minister of Finance to the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist).

• (2200)

He had said on February 12:

> There is absolutely no increased revenue from that particular change. There is absolutely no additional revenue coming to the treasury. I can assure the hon. member of that.

It was with respect to that issue that I posed the question as whether or not the government would be prepared, in the event that additional revenues did in fact materialize, to remit these additional taxes.

The response that I obtained, in my submission, Mr. Speaker, hardly dealt adequately with the issue raised. In the final response of the Minister of State for Finance he said the answer was as simple as the question, simply that as the question does not make sense no answer is necessary.

The question is based on a simple recognition of a mathematical determination that one may readily make. I would urge the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher), or whoever else should reply to this issue in debate, to direct his attention to such a determination mathematically.

It so happens that the only time when there will be no change in federal sales tax, as a consequence of changing the base from the manufacturer's level to the wholesale level, is when there is a mark-up between the manufacturer's level to the wholesaler's level by the wholesaler of 12.5 per cent. Any mark-up less than that would result in a saving or a reduction in the tax. Any mark-up at the wholesale level above 12.5 per cent will result in the imposition of additional tax. For instance, at a mark-up over manufacturer's level of 20 per cent, the increased tax generated will be 6.6 per cent; at a mark-up of 30 per cent it will be 15.5 per cent; at a mark-up of 50 per cent it will be 33 per cent; and should the mark-up double the original manufacturer's costs the increase in tax generated will amount to 78 per cent. That is based upon a change from a level rate of 9 per cent, as it currently stands at the manufacturer's level, to 8 per cent, as appears on page 49 of "The Budget in More Detail" tabled in this House by the Minister of Finance on November 12.

I direct your attention to the first complete paragraph on that page, where the words in the second sentence appear as follows:

> The general rate will be reduced from 9 per cent to 8 per cent.

These calculations I have given you are based upon those figures, which have often been repeated in this House by the Minister of Finance and his colleagues.

The issue does not end there Mr. Speaker. If you will examine the last sentence in that paragraph, you will find the following:

> To equalize the tax between large chain retailers buying goods directly from manufacturers and small retailers buying through wholesalers, the legislation will provide for a higher rate of tax on purchases of taxable goods by the former.

While the 8 per cent level is the general rate of tax giving rise to the increases to which I just referred, we know that the minister intends, indeed, to impose a higher rate of tax for purchases being made under circumstances that large chains are selling the goods to an ultimate purchaser. That increases the tax and does not, in fact, reduce it.

If we were concerned with the consumer of products to be purchased subsequent to the imposition of this measure, we must have regard to the fact that the cost of administering this project by wholesalers, who hitherto had no obligation to adjust their practices and accounting procedures to look after collection of this tax, will have the effect of increasing the mark-ups to which I made reference. The resultant effect upon the consumers of Canada will be that they will pay more for the intervention by the federal government in this area.

I know that the alleged purpose of this change announced by the Minister of Finance, was to assist Canadian manufacturers whose goods have been, he says, at a disadvantage when compared to the goods which are imported into Canada. That is the alleged purpose. The real purpose is to raise additional revenues.

I might say that I know the government is oblivious to the concern that it should show for the consumers of this country as a consequence of these steps. Under any other circumstances, I submit that the perpetrators of this deception would be prosecuted for fraudulent misrepresentation.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this proposal has been under consideration for many years. It is one of the most widely discussed and analysed tax measures which has been undertaken by the government. Contrary to what the hon. member has just said, the shift of tax to the wholesale level is not intended to increase the government's revenue yield. To ensure that this change will be revenue neutral, the general rate will be reduced from 9 per cent to 8 per cent six months after implementation of the change. This decrease in the tax rate will ensure that no additional revenues accrue to the government as a direct result of the change in the tax base. The rate decrease is delayed to offset the cost to the government of refunding about $400 million to new licensees, mainly wholesalers, who convert their inventories from a tax-paid to a tax-free basis to avoid double imposition of the tax.

The November 12 budget proposed that the imposition would remove a serious bias that currently exists against domestic manufacturers, vis-à-vis importers, and correct inequities in the application of the tax among the competing manufacturers who market their goods in different ways. The new tax system will also incorporate a number of other important changes, including detailed valuation provisions and expanded appeal systems.

PUBLIC SERVICE—IMPLEMENTATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS ON EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, on February 26, I put a question in the House to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston). I asked him if he was aware that that particular date, February 26, was the sixth anniversary of the tabling in both the Senate and in this House of the report of the Special Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service. At the time, I was the co-chairman with Senator Buckwold. That report contained 72 recommendations. In my question I pointed out to the President of the Treasury Board that there had been no legislative action taken on any of those 72 recommendations. The report was the result of some 18 months of hard work during which witnesses from unions, management groups and from right across this country were heard. As a result of testimony from one witness I put a question to the then postmaster general in March of 1975. The question was the following:

> Has the Postmaster General been made aware that witnesses for the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, when appearing before the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, stated that the objective of the convention mandate to go for a Crown corporation was because of a preference for the Canada Labour Code rather than the Public Service Staff Relations Board?

The President of the Treasury Board is well aware of my opinion that we went the route of a Crown corporation for the post office because we were not prepared to look into the existing problems the public service was finding under the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

It is interesting that the gentleman who produced the report which formed the basis of the study of the special joint committee was Mr. Jacob Finkelman, who was the chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board since the legislation was enacted in 1967, and had presided over employer-employee relations in the Canadian public service.

Looking in my files before coming to the House this evening I noted on my shelves an array of books and reports prepared by the Treasury Board with titles such as "Performance Review and Employee Appraisal", "Accountable Management", "Program Performance Measurement", "Roles and Responsibilities of the Treasury Board of Canada and the Public Service Commission in Personnel Management", and "A Manager's Guide to Performance Measurement". What bothers me is that we have failed to take any action to come to grips with the problems raised in the report which was tabled in this House over six years ago.

I would like to put on the record just three of the 72 recommendations. In fact, the first one is just a part of recommendation No. 4 and reads:

> —certain revisions to the Public Service Employment Act be made immediately to allow the Public Service Commission to operate efficiently—

I repeat the words, "be made immediately", and that was in February of 1976.

Recommendation No. 5 states:

> That Parliament consider the proposed changes to the Public Service Employment Act as soon as possible, bearing in mind their relationship to changes recommended in the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Again, that was in 1976.

Recommendation No. 8 states:

> That there is a need for additional procedural and substantive amendments to the law governing the collective bargaining relationship, and more appropriate remedies for unlawful activity.

These are just examples of recommendations made over six years ago in an attempt to improve employer-employee relations in the Public Service of Canada.

I have a letter which was sent by the secretary of the Treasury Board on December 4, 1981. The first paragraph is relevant, and he had reference to 1981:

> In March of this year the President of the Treasury Board . . . tabled a report to Parliament entitled "Accountable Management". This report described the government's progress in responding to the recommendations of the Royal Commission of Financial Management and Accountability (the Lambert commission). Among other things, the report outlined the measures that had been or were in the process of being taken to improve our systems for the management of human resources, measures that it was felt responded to the recommendations of the Lambert commission and which took into account the work of the Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle (the D'Avignon committee).

The Lambert commission and the D'Avignon committee—in both of which studies I took a very keen interest—performed their work and submitted their reports subsequent to the tabling of the report of the special joint committee. Both of these works were in some measure influenced by and were the result of the report of the special joint committee. When I look at the legislative program for this parliament I recognize it is going to be extremely difficult to introduce any legislation in the current year. Nevertheless, I plead once again with the President of the Treasury Board to table in the House, so we can study and comment upon it, the legislation of the government to take into account the recommendations of the report.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, during question period on Friday, February 26, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) drew the attention of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) to the fact that that day marked the sixth anniversary of his tabling in this House of the report to Parliament of the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service. As everyone knows, that committee had been established to consider the report on employer-employee relations in the Public Service of Canada prepared by Mr. Jacob Finkelman.

The hon. member served as co-chairman of the special joint committee, so it is understandable that he is anxious to know when the official government response to the 72 recommendations in that committee's report could be expected.

Since the reports of Mr. Finkelman and the parliamentary joint committee were released, the Lambert Commission on Financial Management and Accountability and the D'Avignon Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle have also reported. There are evident relationships among certain of the recommendations of the four reports, and it quickly became apparent that an appropriate response on the part of the government to the special joint committee's report could not be made in isolation from the related recommendations of the other reports.

When the President of the Treasury Board assumed his portfolio after the 1980 general election, he established a program to have the recommendations of all the reports reviewed in light of present-day circumstances with a view to developing recommendations for legislative change where necessary. Shortly after the review was undertaken, the minister had occasion to note publicly that the thrust of any such review ought to be to improve the existing system of employer-employee relations in the public service so that it, first, works in the mutual interests of both employer and employees, second, offers adequate and reasonable safeguards to the Canadian public, and third, ensures the existence of a collective bargaining system that is capable of operating in everyone's best interests in the 1980s.

I am pleased to inform the House that the review program has now been completed, and cabinet now has before it for consideration a number of recommendations respecting employer-employee relations in the public service. In developing these proposals, the minister has relied heavily on the very fine work done by the special joint committee and the extensive review by Mr. Finkelman.

My colleagues will appreciate that I am unable to reveal the nature of the proposed changes until cabinet approval has been obtained and legislation is drafted and introduced in this House. I can say, though, that the minister is grateful for the continuing interest of the hon. member for Vaudreuil in this important matter and the extensive effort he put into the work of the special joint committee.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS—NATIONAL MOBILITY OF LAWYERS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, one of the crucial issues of concern, not only to Canadian lawyers but to Canadians generally, is the national mobility of approximately 30,000 Canadian lawyers. In this age of specialization in the legal profession a whole new approach to national examinations is needed in order to allow Canadian lawyers to move with ease from province to province, as do doctors.

On February 19, 1982, I addressed this issue in a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). His response was as follows:

> —I am not aware of any hard discussions between the various provincial bars or in the Canadian Bar Association itself. I shall have to report the hon. member's concern on this matter to the Minister of Justice.
> I would remind the hon. member, however, that when we discussed the constitutional problem with the provinces, one of our concerns was precisely that shared by the hon. member. We insisted on the importance of having a mobility clause in the Constitution with a view to permitting Canadians of different occupations in society to have the mobility within the Canadian union. Of course, we were partly successful and partly unsuccessful. I share the hon. member's concern in general, and I will report the hon. member's question to the Minister of Justice.

At the present time in Canada, when a lawyer wishes to transfer from one common law provincial bar to another, he is generally required either to re-article and take the bar admission course, or write transfer examinations, depending upon whether or not he has been actively engaged in the practice of law for three years.

What must be emphasized, however, is that regulations differ from province to province and, in some cases, the degree of difficulty with respect to transfer requirements pertaining to lawyers with three or more years of active practice is so severe that they are often encouraged to take the lengthy route prescribed for those lawyers with less experience; that is, to re-article and take the bar admission course prior to writing the examinations.

I should like to stress, in speaking of the mobility of lawyers from one province to another, that the difficulties I have briefly outlined mainly pertain to the nine provinces which have their legal system based upon common law. The province of Quebec is a special case, given that its legal system is based upon civil law. Therefore, it is quite logical that some special provisions should apply for lawyers who wish to enter or leave the province in order to establish a legal practice.

Speaking especially about the nine provinces practising common law, it seems relevant to view the difficulties encountered by lawyers in Canada who wish to transfer to another province in light of the new Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, more particularly, Section 6, which deals with mobility rights. The issue to be resolved would appear to be the following: Do some or all provincial bar societies' regulations relating to the transfer of lawyers, with or without the common denominator of three years of active practice, contravene the provisions set out in Section 6 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms? If it is decided that they do constitute an unreasonable impediment to mobility, then I should like to make the following recommendations: That the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) intervene and confer with the Federation of Canadian Law Societies with the intent of (a) encouraging the elimination of the onerous requirements now in existence in most provinces for lawyers transferring from one provincial bar to another, regardless of how long they have been engaged in active practice; (b) encouraging the development of a more consistent and reasonable model of transfer requirements which all provincial bars across the country could follow; and (c) encouraging the federation to cast aside traditional barriers and to adopt the principle of mobility rights for lawyers, both in theory and practice, thereby setting an example for other professions which impose undue restraints on mobility within Canada.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as pointed out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the House on February 19, in the course of constitutional discussions with the provinces the federal government insisted upon the importance of a mobility clause in the Constitution, with a view to permitting Canadians of different occupations in society to have mobility within the Canadian union. In a discussion paper entitled, "Securing the Canadian Economic Union in the Constitution", tabled by the Government of Canada at the July 10, 1980, meeting of the continuing committee of ministers on the Constitution, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) specifically raised the following concern:

—under the provincial law, associations for the licensing and regulating of the practitioners in various professions impose requirements that vary considerably from province to province and association to association and sometimes discriminate in favour of provincial residents. For example:

(1) Lawyers seeking to transfer to some provinces must have practised law full time in their own province for a given number of years after the call to the bar in order to be eligible for transfer exams. It is not obvious how this ensures greater familiarity with law in the province to which they relocate.

As to whether any discussions are currently under way, planned among the various bar societies, or at the level of law schools aimed at reciprocity of membership for practising lawyers transferring from one provincial bar to another, I understand that the question of national mobility of lawyers is indeed a matter of such current interest to the profession that it is being examined by the Canadian Bar Association. I believe that association could inform more specifically on the scope and status of the work it is undertaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 10.26 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

INFLATION RATE IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Figures released today by Statistics Canada reveal that Charlottetown and Summerside, Prince Edward Island, suffered the highest cost of living increase in the entire Atlantic region in February, 1982, compared to the same month last year. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That the Department of Finance investigate the factors that have caused P.E.I. to have such an alarmingly high rate of inflation, which in recent years has consistently been among the worst in the country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RELEASE FROM EXILE OF SOVIET CITIZEN, IDA NUDEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, given that this House passed a motion on June 23, 1978, concerning the sentencing of the Soviet dissident, Ida Nudel, and given that her release from Siberian exile is slated for March 20 of this year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille):

That in light of Ida Nudel's anticipated release from Siberian exile, on March 20, 1982, the House of Commons urge Soviet authorities to make arrangements so that Ida Nudel can be released directly from exile in Siberia to join her only living relative, her sister in Israel.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) intends to table his equalization and Established Programs Financing proposals today. This is both a unilateral and a grossly precipitous action given that the provinces first heard of the latest equalization proposals only at the recent first ministers' meeting. On top of this the Minister of Finance seems to be stubbornly going ahead with the cutbacks in health care and post-secondary education. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House instruct the Liberal Party to reconsider its abandonment of co-operative federalism, get a new leader who believes in it, and extend the present fiscal arrangements until such time as the federal-provincial process has been given a chance to work on this issue.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DESIGNATION OF MARCH 21 AS AFGHANISTAN DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Merci, madame le Président. March 21 is the day on which the people of Afghanistan have traditionally celebrated the beginning of a new year. As that date approaches, we recall that Afghanistan was invaded by Soviet forces in December, 1979, an invasion condemned by the Government of Canada as a breach of the principles of the United Nations charter and a violation of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of a United Nations member.

The House of Commons continues to be deeply distressed by the suffering and hardship which the Afghanistan people are experiencing under foreign occupation, including the bombing of innocent civilian populations, the destruction of the homes and the means of livelihood of these people. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House, associating itself with the actions of other legislative bodies in the free world to draw attention to the continued defiance by the Soviet Union of the wishes of the international community, declare its intention to designate March 21, 1982, as Afghanistan Day, and that this designation express the determination of this House that continued international efforts must lead to the withdrawal of Soviet troops and the establishment of a fully independent and non-aligned Afghanistan, free from outside interference.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

METRIC CONVERSION

IMPOSITION ON STOREKEEPERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, across Canada thousands of merchants are struggling to keep their doors open. This dictatorial government is forcing conversion from imperial to metric scales, at the cost of $8,000 per scale, a cost which the consumer will end up paying. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That this House condemn the government for driving storekeepers out of business by imposing compulsory metric conversion, and that it immediately respond by making all metric conversion voluntary, as legislated by the House.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on behalf of every constituent of North Vancouver-Burnaby and, indeed, every consumer in Canada. The consumer price index for the month of February has now been released and shows that the cost of food has risen from 295.4 to 301.2. The cost of housing has increased from a figure of 242.5 to 244.6, and the over-all increase in what it costs any Canadian to live has now risen from 249.7 to 252.7. On an annual basis this is 11 per cent higher than last year. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That the House condemn the government for its ineffectual, useless and totally inadequate programs which have allowed the continually creeping cancer of higher prices to destroy Canadian purchasing power and security.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

QUEBEC—PRATT & WHITNEY—REQUEST FOR AGREEMENT ON SHARING OF WORK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas some days ago, several hundred employees were laid off at Pratt & Whitney in Longueuil and the union is supporting the principle of work sharing in order to help the employees in question, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That the Minister of Labour approach the directors of the company with a view to negotiating a work-sharing agreement with the union.

THE LATE ALBERT ROUSSEAU, QUEBEC ARTIST

EXPRESSION OF CONDOLENCE TO MRS. OLIVETTE ROUSSEAU—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Frontenac): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and I ask the unanimous consent of the House in order to pay a last tribute to a great Canadian and a great artist. I am referring to Mr. Albert Rousseau, a Quebec painter who died yesterday in St. Étienne de Lévis at the age of 73. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier):

That this House salutes today the great talent of Albert Rousseau, a Quebec artist, and sends its most sincere condolences to Mrs. Olivette Rousseau and her family and thanks for a last time Mr. Rousseau for his contribution as an artist, as a Canadian and as a Quebecer.

In his own way, he was a distinguished Canadian, and I feel this should be recognized by the House, on behalf of all members and of the Government of Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—REQUEST FOR CHANGES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The 1.2 per cent increase in the consumer price index announced this morning is one more nail in the coffin of the November 12, 1981, budget. The budget has done nothing for Canadians who are suffering from the effects of lay-offs and the high cost of living. Unemployment has increased since the budget was brought down, and the broadest indication of economic performance and economic mismanagement of the government is the value of the Canadian dollar, which has dropped almost to an all-time low in the period since the budget. When will the minister listen to Canadians and bring in changes to the budget to deal with these problems? When will the minister show Canadians that he means business about fighting inflation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member might have been influenced by the debate yesterday on parliamentary procedure to try to develop a question that is more in accordance with the rules of the House. If the hon. member wants to make a speech each time he gets up to ask a question—

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question.

Mr. MacEachen: —then, of course, he will get a speech in return. If he wants to ask questions, then he will get answers to them.

Mr. Nielsen: That will be new.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member asked two specific questions, the first about changes to the budget. The hon. member may not have been in the House yesterday but I answered that question which was asked by another hon. member, and he can refer to Hansard to get the answer. As to his second question, the government is deadly serious—

Mr. Nielsen: Deadly is right.

Mr. MacEachen: —about its determination to bring down inflation. It has set out a monetary policy and a fiscal policy that are geared to bring down inflation. But it is extraordinary that most of the questions asked by the opposition are intended either to undermine the current stance of fiscal policy or to undermine the current stance of monetary policy, both of which are intended to have some effect on the inflationary forces.

INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET LEGISLATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, we have heard words on that subject for about ten years now. What Canadians are looking for is action from the minister.

Mr. MacEachen: How about a question instead of a speech?

Mr. Wilson: We had a comment yesterday from the Solicitor General who very astutely observed that the budget was a disaster and it was seriously flawed.

Mr. MacEachen: Never mind the speeches.

Mr. Wilson: Let me give the minister a very simple and direct question. The minister could have brought in his budget legislation two and a half weeks ago. The government did not have to provoke the opposition with the energy security act. Why did the minister not bring in budget legislation two and a half weeks ago before introducing the energy security act? When is the minister proposing to bring in that legislation so that this House can get around to dealing with the problems in the economy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that there are some urgent pieces of legislation before the House—

Mr. Wilson: Like the budget.

Mr. MacEachen: —including the energy security program. On March 2 we gave notice of the fiscal arrangements bill, which is greatly urgent. It is urgent because the present legislation expires at the end of March.

We have lost more than two weeks because of the strike of the official opposition.

Miss MacDonald: That is not right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Today we are giving first reading to that bill that has been delayed more than two weeks by reason of the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition. I regard that as urgent, more urgent than any other bill emanating from the budget, and I would proceed with that before any other particular bill.

Mr. McDermid: The budget was delivered on November 12. Where have you been?

• (1120)

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I think the minister has been around this House long enough to know that it takes two to tango. The minister has to provide some answers for us on this side of the House. He is looking for specific questions, and I will give him one. When is he going to bring in the budget legislation?

Now, before he answers that question, let me pose my supplementary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: Today's consumer price index maintains the very wide gap of four per cent between the U.S. and Canadian inflation rates. That shows that Canadian industry is becoming more and more uncompetitive, resulting last year in a $23 billion capital outflow through the trade deficit.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Wilson: And 200,000 jobs have been exported to the United States.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Wilson: I would ask the minister when is he going to start to deal with that problem of an outflow of capital as a result of the trade deficit. And don't forget the first question I asked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked when am I going to bring in budget legislation. I gather that he understands that the fiscal arrangements bill emanates from the budget.

Mr. Wilson: The tax legislation?

Mr. MacEachen: Government policy on fiscal arrangements was laid out in the budget, and the budget bill will be given first reading today. I hope hon. members opposite will give it speedy passage so that the current legislation will not expire and equalization payments to the provinces will not terminate because of the strike the opposition perpetrated on the House of Commons for more than two weeks.

An hon. Member: With pay.

Mr. MacEachen: The Ways and Means motions, Madam Speaker, emanating from the budget are known to the hon. member; a draft bill will be presented as soon as possible.

Mr. Wilson: When?

Mr. MacEachen: Not soon; as soon as possible. Not within the next month. When it comes forward—

Mr. Wilson: Not within the next month?

An hon. Member: What, next year?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, we are proceeding in the normal way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The budget draft legislation will be presented and hon. members will have ample opportunity to deal with it, but in the meantime they ought to deal with the urgent legislation we have before the House and not ask for those items which will come later.

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING INDEX

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the minister is positively twitchy. The Canadian people would like to see him on a permanent strike to give them some relief.

Cost of living figures, Madam Speaker, show that over the last year there has been an increase of 11.6 per cent, and that the higher costs are in food, housing and clothing, right where the ordinary person gets it in the neck.

There are three million Canadians living in poverty; they are the people who have been undermined, the 639,000 families and 826,000 single people. When is the minister going to try a new tack? His budget has not brought down the cost of living. The budget came down four months ago and the cost of living is going up—food, housing and clothing. When will he take some new steps, or will he step aside and let someone else try?

An hon. Member: Bring on Kaplan.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I welcome the hon. member back from his sojourn abroad, and I welcome his questions which, as usual, are much more penetrating than those of his successor which we heard this morning.

Mr. Nowlan: It does not make any difference; the answers are as dull.

Mr. MacEachen: And much more to the point. I should tell the hon. member it is true that the cost of living for the past month has gone up. The main cause of the increase in that period was the dramatic and sharp rise in the price of food, especially for fruits and vegetables, which rose by 8.8 per cent—

An hon. Member: What about housing, Allan?

Mr. MacEachen: —and 18 per cent for fresh vegetables alone. I think the hon. member ought to know that this is a temporary situation which is beyond anyone's control and is mainly because of the weather situation in the producing areas of the United States.

• (1125)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Nothing can penetrate the minister's mind, apparently, because nothing can inspire him to action.

The minister said on September 9, 1980, 18 months ago in Halifax, that it was to create jobs, improve living standards and promote greater equity that he took on the position of Minister of Finance. However, all that has happened in the last 18 months is that living standards have gone down, equity has disappeared and we have the largest amount of unemployment in our history. Having failed in all those objectives that he boasted about in September of 1980, will he now resign and hand his portfolio over to someone else who will make a new effort, or does he stick by his statement of November, 1980, that Canadians will have to accept a lower standard of living and adjust to high energy prices? How can he continue in the face of his failure to meet those objectives he boasted about in Halifax just a year and a half ago?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Well, Madam Speaker, I will give give up when—

Some hon. Members: Yea, yea!

Mr. MacEachen: I will give up—

Mr. Stevens: We want Kaplan! Bring on Kaplan!

Mr. MacEachen: I will give up my present portfolio when I have lost the confidence of the House.

Mr. Crosbie: You have! You have!

Mr. MacEachen: The fact of the matter—

Miss MacDonald: You have lost Robert Kaplan's.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How about the cabinet?

Mr. Huntington: You are only there at the grace of the trained seals, Allan.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the fact is that the budget policies have been before the House three times since the budget. Hon. members of the opposition have raised non-confidence motions three times. The budget has been sustained. I have been to bat three times. I have scored home runs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The only time the hon. member was at bat, he struck out, and we had an election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

NEGOTIATIONS ON IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED CARS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question, Madam Speaker, is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I hope he will give us some very straight answers to some very serious questions.

Mr. Nielsen: You have a hope.

Mr. Nystrom: On February 24, in response to questions I put to the Minister of State for International Trade, he said he was confident of negotiating a reduction in Japanese cars imported into this country. This morning we heard some very disturbing news reports on Radio-Canada which stated that the minister has failed to negotiate a reduction in Japanese cars coming into Canada. Are these reports accurate? If they are, can he provide the House with more details?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is true that the negotiations to this point have not gone as well as we would have wished. We have not attained our objectives in those negotiations. The meetings will be continuing, not between ministers at this point but, rather, between officials. Certainly, in any event, this is a lengthy process in which we try to impress strongly and clearly on the Japanese our needs with respect to the automotive market.

Oral Questions

QUERY RESPECTING SANCTIONS AND QUOTAS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): The minister, Madam Speaker, has admitted incredible failure after the government was so confident that it could negotiate a satisfactory agreement. The minister of State for International Trade was also quoted this morning as saying that he is considering recommending certain sanctions against Japan on this issue.

I would like to ask the minister can he tell the House what sanctions the government is considering. Is the government, for example, considering that we introduce in this country a Canadian content rule similar to that of Australia, where 85 per cent of the value of foreign cars must be sourced in that country? Is the minister also considering the imposition of quotas on the importation of Japanese cars, such as recommended by the United Auto Workers in a telex that he will be receiving within a few minutes?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it would certainly be premature to speak of any sanctions. As I mentioned in my previous answer, the negotiations are continuing. What my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, said in Tokyo was that all our options remain open.

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This past year the economy of Prince Edward Island has been devastated by the government's high interest rate policy. Two of our oldest department stores, Holman's and Moore & McLeod's, were forced either to go out of business or to take extraordinary measures to stay in business. Given that the federal government is forcing Prince Edward Island to convert to metric by June 30, businesses are compelled to take very expensive steps to do so. Will the minister consider postponing the metric conversion in Prince Edward Island at least until P.E.I. survives the current recession?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think the hon. member's allegations are justified. Although a number of businesses in the province of Prince Edward Island may be having some problems, I feel the hon. member is exaggerating, to say the least, if he thinks that metric conversion can jeopardize the survival of a business in his province. There must be other reasons.

EFFECT OF CONVERSION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, the minister says that I am exaggerating, so I have this supplementary question. How can the minister justify forcing metric on Prince Edward Island, or in fact on any province, at a time when the retail sector is experiencing record high interest rates, a 77 per cent increase in postal rates, and depressed consumer demand? Does he not agree that forced metric conversion at this time will drive many retail businesses that are marginal out of business?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is apparently against metric conversion, but he should realize that the first piece of legislation in this area was passed in Parliament under Sir John A. Macdonald in 1871, that former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, when he was Prime Minister, created a task force for the implementation of metric conversion, that the former Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Stanfield, approved proposals for metric conversion made in Parliament in the early seventies, and that in 1976, all Conservative members of this House voted in favour of legislating metric conversion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPLICATIONS FOR PASSPORTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why is it necessary for Canadians applying for Canadian passports to register their place of birth?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if I understand the import of the hon. member's question as to the registration of the place of birth, I think he is asking why we have the various kinds of entries that we have in the information we seek from passport applicants. The reason is that there is a relative standardization all over the world as to the matters of information that are sought, and if we did not have our passports in the same form it could be that Canadian passport holders would experience some difficulties in some countries. Indeed, there is a general international movement toward even greater standardization in passports.

REQUEST THAT APPLICATION FORM BE REDESIGNED

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the minister will know that the only countries that benefit from this information are the eastern bloc countries, which consider Canadians who are born in an eastern bloc country still to be citizens of that country and consider it a criminal offence for people to leave that country. As a result, those Canadian citizens who are visiting their homelands are always under the threat of arrest. I wonder if the minister would consider redesigning the application form and the information required in order to protect Canadian citizens visiting their homelands that are eastern bloc countries. Secondly, would he consider taking to cabinet a proposal to withdraw the provision in the Citizenship Act that gives Canadians dual citizenship, because that again threatens those Canadians visiting eastern bloc countries which happen to be their former homelands?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, my friend, the Secretary of State, can enlighten the hon. member further about the citizenship provisions.

We have given a great deal of consideration to the very real problem that the hon. member mentions. It is true that Canadian citizens who are travelling in an eastern European country do have some added difficulties as a result of the fact that the passport draws explicitly to the notice of the border authorities that they were born in that country. But the real problem stems not from that but from the fact, in any event, by the law of those countries they would be deemed to be citizens and the officials there would have other ways of finding this out.

In fact, given the growing standardization that I spoke of, and the need for this information in this form across the world, it is not just for the benefit of those countries, as the hon. member alleged in his preamble; it is really for the benefit of all Canadian citizens travelling abroad that they have the kind of information in their passports which is required to gain an easy admission to the countries they are visiting. So this is a case in which some Canadian citizens may be put at some disadvantage in a situation where others receive an advantage. We are doing our best in other ways to try to deal with the situation of those Canadians who may be disadvantaged.

EFFECT OF DROP IN WORLD OIL PRICES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the world oil glut and the press reports today that the price set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, OPEC, will drop to some $20 U.S. by the end of the year, can the minister assure the House and Canadians generally that the planned oil price increases for this year will be suspended if the world oil price drops or if the Canadian price reaches 75 per cent of that world price?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to reassure the hon. member in that regard, that the Alberta-Canada agreement, as well as the agreement with the province of Saskatchewan, provide very specifically that at no time will the price for Canadian conventional oil exceed 75 per cent of the international price, whatever that price may be. There is no danger that the price of old oil in Canada will exceed 75 per cent of the world price.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM TO ASSIST HOME OWNERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the imaginative minister responsible for housing. The cost of living figures released today show that the cost of home ownership is up a dramatic and alarming 17 per cent. In the present year there will be 635,000 Canadian families renewing their mortgages. Since the bill introduced by the government to deal with housing will provide assistance for fewer than 5 per cent of these families, when is the government going to get serious about the problems faced by the vast majority of home owners and bring in a new program that will be effective?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on November 12, the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance of the Government of Canada indicated its priority in response to the housing conditions of Canadians and allocated an additional $350 million toward solving some of the problems faced by Canadians looking at mortgage renewal, and to those Canadians looking for rental accommodation, especially to those young Canadians with young families seeking to establish their first residence. That bill was tabled in this House before Christmas of last year. Indeed, I sought the co-operation of the housing critic of the New Democratic Party in the month of January, during the recess of this House, for support of expenditure of those funds to bring relief to those Canadians facing mortgage renewals and looking for new accommodation.

This government had to introduce time limits on debate in this House during the month of February in order to proceed to the committee stage, the next stage to put this legislation into place. The committee is dealing with it now. I would ask that the leader of the New Democratic Party consider not only the relief that would be brought to Canadians looking for rental accommodation and to Canadians looking for jobs in the construction of that much needed rental accommodation. I would ask that he reconsider his party's obstruction of those provisions and reconsider the good that could be done for many Canadians across this country by speedy passage of that bill.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister would be a joke if he were not pathetic. The question pertains to the reality that there are 635,000 families renewing mortgages this year. I pointed out to the minister that the government's measures will only deal with 5 per cent of those. Canadians who have homes have the right to maintain those homes without unfair burdens put on them by the banks and mortgages people.

Since the minister has turned down the suggestion that the law should be changed to make the banks put up money at reasonable mortgages levels, will he at least duplicate what was announced in Saskatchewan yesterday, which is a major program that will ensure financial assistance on a monthly basis and bring down monthly payments very significantly for every family in that province whose income is $35,000 or less? Why does the minister not make that a national program for Canadians?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as the leader of the New Democratic Party began his questioning this morning by reference to the cost of living index and the rise attributable to the cost of housing, for the benefit of the members of the House I should indicate that the increase for the last month as compared to the previous month was in fact a downturn. The increase for last month was only .9 per cent, down from the increase in the previous month. It is apparent that there has been an improvement in the market and in the cost of housing to Canadians generally.

He also referred to legislation introduced in some of the provinces following upon the leadership of this government in the budget addressed to assisting Canadians with mortgage renewal problems. I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that the legislation in the province of Manitoba, for example, followed the design of this government's legislation, which stated that Canadians faced with those problems should first direct a percentage of their own income toward solving their housing needs, and that is the 30 per cent rule. That legislation was followed by the province of Manitoba. It is a good step. We think that Canadians should first apply a given percentage of their own resources toward their shelter costs and, second, for those who cannot meet those needs the government should offer help.

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MATCH PROVINCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I hope the minister will be factual now. The figures I referred to were year-over-year increases which the minister knows are up 16.9 per cent for the cost of home ownership. That is the first point. Second, will he agree that the percentage of the budget allocated by a relatively poor province like Manitoba to dealing with the housing crisis makes this government look like the pettiest of pikers when it comes to dealing with it? Will he also agree that the program introduced by the government of Saskatchewan is aimed at providing assistance to the vast majority of Canadians in that province who ought to get housing assistance, whereas this government is only going to assist 5 per cent? Why does the Government of Canada not at least match on a national basis what the New Democratic Party is doing in Saskatchewan and Manitoba?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, when the legislation and the budget provisions which brought in the Canada mortgage renewal plan and the Canada rental plan were made known, I took the opportunity of speaking with all of my counterparts in housing in all of the provinces during the two-week period following the release of the budget. I am very pleased that some provinces, including the province of Saskatchewan, have followed the lead of the federal government in, for example, putting up $350 million toward solving the problems of Canadians with mortgage renewals, and a much needed stimulus to the rental supply. What is more pressing and obviously missing in the response of the leader of the NDP is the need for construction and jobs in this country. There are 70,000 jobs going wanting because of the lack of co-operation of the leader of the NDP and his party with regard to our legislation.

CONCEPT OF TAXATION OF IMPUTED RENTAL INCOME

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. My question is quite simple, and I hope the answer will be simple. Does the minister believe that it is reasonable to describe the rent which those who have saved to buy a home no longer have to pay, as imputed income? Will he now indicate that the concept of the idea itself is totally wrong, and that he has told his departmental staff to eliminate this item in future lists of income as yet untaxed by government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked me to eliminate that concept from the tax expenditure documents that are normally prepared. I will give consideration to that. I think that concept was first included, in the interests of knowledge, in the budget papers put forth by my predecessor in 1979, and they have been continued—that is the question of eliminating the concept from the papers. That can be considered.

What is more important is to clear up the very damaging, dangerous and unfounded allegations which have been made, that it is the intention, has been the intention, or has been considered or will be considered by the government to tax imputed income derived from home ownership. That is absolutely false. It has never been considered by me. I have absolutely no intention of considering it. I want the home owners who have been frightened by irresponsible propaganda which has been circulated by the Dominion Life Assurance Company to know that, and to disregard the blatant, unfounded propaganda put out by that company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL REASSURANCE

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I asked my question for a simple reason. I will put the question again. The Minister of Finance knows fulls well that the 1979 budget listed for the first time the departmental views. In the minister's 1981 budget when he said he accepted the whole idea of the $4.5 billion his department believes ought to be taxed, that home owners somehow get a benefit by not paying any rent, the minister implied for the first time that he will tax it. Having said to home owners he will not tax them, will the minister make it this much clearer to home owners by saying that the whole idea of imputing an income to a home owner, having saved all his life to buy a home, because he no longer pays rent, is morally wrong? Will he say that clearly today to those home owners he has scared?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I reject entirely the suggestion that in any way that fear has been aroused by me in this case. The fear commenced with an irresponsible letter sent out by a high officer in the Dominion Life Insurance Company. That is when the concern developed. I have attempted to allay the concern by stating categorically that the government never had any intention, does not presently entertain any intention, nor will it entertain an intention in the future to tax imputed rent. That is the end of the matter as far as I am concerned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

SALARIES OF HOUSE OF COMMONS EMPLOYEES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board in his capacity as a member of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. The President of the Treasury Board knows that the government has said it will not freeze the salaries of federal public servants. Can we have an assurance that it is not the intention of the Commissioners of Internal Economy to freeze the salaries of the people who serve the House of Commons and that they will be treated in the same way with respect to salaries as are federal public servants?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): The question of freezing the salaries of people who work on the Hill, as Madam Speaker well knows, has never been considered by the Commissioners of Internal Economy.

COMPOSITION OF COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR EXPANSION OF MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to my friend, the government House leader. With respect to the composition of the Commission of Internal Economy, is the government giving any consideration to expanding and changing the membership of the board of the Commission of Internal Economy to include privy councillors drawn from the opposition? If the government has not considered that thus far, would it take a look at this proposal as a way of improving or assisting the administration of the House of Commons, since the administration of the House of Commons is really the business of all members of the House of Commons?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if my hon. colleague could elaborate a little more on his suggestion and perhaps put it in writing, I would be prepared to take it into consideration and see how it would improve services to members and other aspects of our parliamentary life. I would surely welcome such ideas, but I would like to understand better what the hon. member has in mind. I would like to be able to see how things could be improved. I think so far the Commissioners of Internal Economy have done a wonderful job to improve services to hon. members on both sides of the House. If the hon. member has better ideas, I am surely willing to consider them.

CANADA POST

ACHIEVEMENT OF ECONOMIC SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. The minister will be aware that the president of the corporation has expressed some reservations about the possibility of meeting the deadline for self-sufficiency of the corporation. I wonder if the minister could tell the House whether the government is considering changing the deadline for self-sufficiency imposed on the Canada Post Corporation.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member misunderstood what was said by the president of the Canada Post Corporation. I believe he is referring to a media report that apparently claimed the president had no intention of following the objectives set by the government, and I understand that when the president appeared before a parliamentary committee, he was able to clarify this matter. There is no conflict as far as I know.

[English]

POSTAL RATES

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, not only did the president of the Canada Post Corporation say he had some reservations about meeting the guideline, but other members of the corporation have also expressed that concern. Since the government is not anticipating any amendment to the program and to the deadline set, obviously the corporation would be left with two alternatives, to reduce service or to increase postal rates. Since the corporation has already announced increases in services, one can only anticipate another increase in postal rates. I wonder if the minister could tell the House whether the people of Canada should anticipate another increase in postal rates in 1982 or early 1983.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is being very speculative. I personally have had no such information from the president of the corporation. In any case, the decision whether or not to increase the price of postage stamps now rests with the board of directors of the Canada Post Corporation, and I feel it is much too early to speculate on this one way or another. I think the hon. member is making a mountain out of a hypothetical molehill.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

HIGHWAY SPILLAGES OF HAZARDOUS MATERIALS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure the Minister of the Environment is aware of my concern about recent rail problems and the spill of hazardous materials into the environment. It has now become apparent that that is only a small part of a major problem, the balance of it being that on the highways of this country there quite clearly are vehicles travelling which are unsafe. We are now told that there has been, on average, one major spill of hazardous material every ten days. What action does the Minister of the Environment propose to take to protect the environment from spills which take place as a result of common carriers not being adequately inspected?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, there are, through the amendments made to the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, regulations which are being formulated in conjunction with the provinces. I am not sure whether the hon. member is referring to transportation which goes beyond provincial or, indeed, international boundaries, or whether he is discussing simply local transportation within a province or region. If the latter is the case, it would be primarily a provincial concern. If he is concerned about interprovincial transit, there are discussions going on with the provinces with the objective of formulating regulations.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROMOTE SAFETY MEASURES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I know the minister is well aware that I do not care very much where the hazardous material comes from. My only concern is protection of the environment and protection of the public of Canada.

What specific measures will the minister put forward to the cabinet now that would allow, in the first instance, the province of Ontario to proceed with the regulations it has in place which would require common carriers travelling on the roads of this province to meet certain safety requirements, and what further steps will he take to guarantee that there will be no further delay in the implementation of adequate safety measures to protect both the environment of Canada and the people of Canada from unnecessary spillage of hazardous materials which results from inadequate inspection of common carriers, whether rail or road?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology: Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman is concerned about safety and hazards to Canadian citizens, and that is a view which is no doubt shared by all hon. members on this side, indeed by all hon. members in the House. I just finished telling the hon. member that, in so far as our jurisdictional responsibilities are concerned, we are moving to meet them. In so far as provincial responsibilities are concerned we are having discussion with the provinces to see that they are met.

FISHERIES

REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING UNITED STATES SWORDFISH MARKET

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the patient Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In view of the deplorable depressed state of Atlantic Canada's fishing industry I would like to ask the minister when did he last make representations to Washington in the hope of reopening the potential $15 million American swordfish market to Canadians.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I do not remember the exact date, but certainly within the past year we have tried again to get the U.S. Food and Drug administration to have a second look at this question, or a third or fourth look. I am afraid I cannot report much progress.

REQUEST THAT FURTHER TALKS BE HELD WITH UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in my opinion the action taken by Washington of banning swordfish imports is obviously a non-tariff barrier in restraint of trade, since swordfish is available today in practically every state in the United States. Therefore, will the minister discuss this matter with the new United States ambassador to Canada, Mr. Robinson, and will he take this matter up with Washington as well and bring back a report of his findings to this House?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am not an expert in GATT or trade matters. I know it is under the heading of health that the United States administration—and not just this one but previous ones—has gone along with this ban on Canadian swordfish. I will certainly take up with my colleague, the Minister of Trade, the approach suggested by the hon. member. It may have some merit.

AMOUNT OF TRANSFERS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Last week I received from the Minister of Finance a confirmation that fiscal transfer payments to the province of Quebec for the equalization program alone during the current fiscal year had increased by some $400 million, from $1.7 billion to $2.1 billion, yet in the news release of the President of the Treasury Board yesterday he shows supplementaries totalling $276 million for fiscal transfer payments, of which $124 million is for the Canada Assistance Plan. I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board can explain this major discrepancy in transfers to the provinces during this current fiscal year.

• (1200)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the news release which I issued yesterday accompanied the tabling of Supplementary Estimates (E), the final supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year. They reflect the numbers to which the hon. member for Vaudreuil refers, namely, $152 million in fiscal transfer payments due to a revision of fiscal equalization payments, and $124 million under the Canada Assistance Plan. They do not take into account what might have been included in prior supplementary estimates which have been tabled.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFLECTIONS ON RECENT EVENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, before asking the question on House business, on behalf of my colleagues I should like to associate this party with your remarks of yesterday when you said that we have all come through a trying period. Without being specific, I would like to say that a few of us in this House are still going through a trying period. On behalf of my party I would like to express, as you did yesterday, our appreciation for the work of the officials and employees of the House who put in long hours during the last couple of weeks.

Also on behalf of my colleagues, I would like to say that we support the attitude taken by the Chair during these weeks. It was essential, for the neutrality of the Chair, to remain totally apart from the struggle between the parties. We feel that you did this, although I must confess that I was a little puzzled by some of the remarks attributed to you in TV transcripts, especially those referring to the possibility of motions appealing a Speaker's ruling, which were abandoned by the House 17 years ago. But, as I say, we felt your attitude was appropriate and along with everyone else we were happy to see the issue put aside and Parliament back to work.

For this reason we were surprised when the Chair decided to make extended comment on this very sensitive situation yesterday. I again speak on behalf of my colleagues when I say that we felt those comments were very broad in exploring the many procedural questions relating to the ringing of the bells, but we are not convinced these questions can be raised in a neutral way if no reference is made to the issue of the omnibus bill which caused our protest in the first instance.

We felt, and continue to feel, that extraordinary intrusions into the rights the opposition exercises on behalf of Canadians, require extraordinary measures of defence. We feel it is very unlikely that a government would borrow this tactic, as you feared, because the government is equipped with a guillotine rule, a closure rule, supply guillotines, and a myriad of other rules which make life easy for governments and difficult for oppositions.

We were completely at ease with the idea of defending our strategy in partisan debate against all comers. However, we hope that if the use of the bells in this case is to be the subject of comment from outside the arena of partisan combat, then the use of omnibus bills will in future also cause the Chair to raise questions, review precedents, and consider its course of action with very great care under new circumstances.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the government House leader what the business of the House will be for Monday? The Minister of Finance appears to have disposed of that already but I should like confirmation from the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, what the Minister of Finance said was that among the budget bills, fiscal arrangements had high priority and I agree with him. I know that my hon. colleague is trying very hard to allow us to change the order of the day on Monday. What we agreed upon was to negotiate in good faith for six days, which will expire only at three o'clock on Monday. I hope that as a result of those negotiations we will be able to replace Bill C-94 with the bill that will be introduced in a few minutes, but for the time being the order of business for Monday is Bill C-94, the bill on energy security.

Business of the House

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, before I ask a question I wonder if I might say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that I want to thank members of the staff of the House of Commons for the way in which they conducted themselves during the impasse. They had to put up with circumstances that, quite frankly, are out of the ordinary—circumstances which I hope they will never have to face again. I am thinking particularly of those who were required to be on call or on duty almost around the clock.

I also want to commend the Chair for the way in which the Speaker handled the dispute. From my point of view, and expressing the concern of my colleagues, it was handled exactly the way it should have been. Whatever criticisms were levelled at the Chair were wrong, in my judgment. I want to make it clear that the Chair enjoyed and continues to enjoy the support of this caucus.

I should like to ask the government House leader whether it might be possible between now and Monday to see a more extended statement with regard to what we might be going to deal with over the next week or week and a half, so that we may begin to make plans for dealing both with the results of our negotiations and also with such things as the remaining allotted day.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as my colleague knows very well, we will have an opportunity to talk to each other during the remainder of the day. I am sure he will understand that I will be in a better position to be more precise later today or tomorrow or, if need be, on Sunday. I hope to be in a position to be more specific about the business for the whole of next week and about when the last allotted day will be held. This will obviously be known before Monday.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, on another related matter, I wonder if the government House leader might be in a position to tell the House his intentions with regard to the question of parliamentary reform. Yesterday there was a very interesting and worth-while debate during which suggestions were made from all sides of the House that could well lead to some immediate discussion about how reforms might be implemented and what reforms might be considered. I wonder if the government House leader might consider telling us today, or whenever he is ready to make a further announcement, whether we might have some structure that would enable us to proceed with actual reform rather than just continuing with the discussion on reform.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if the hon. member had been in the House yesterday during my speech he would have noticed that I started it with a tear because he was away. I would like him to read what I said.

I will have an opportunity to talk to my colleague later, but it is clear that I intend to go on with the process that I started immediately after the Christmas adjournment when Parliament resumed. At the level of House leaders I will try to look into changes that would not be controversial and that could be implemented in the very, very short term and that would reflect the recommendations made in the past by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I intend to go on with that process as soon as we have settled the matter of the national energy bill. Depending on the result of our negotiations, I will be in a better position to look into means that the government could use to modernize the institution and render it more efficient and more human.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader a related question. I appreciate what he has said about his intention of pursuing immediately certain matters that could be found to be agreeable to all parties and which could be implemented.

In the debate I suggested on behalf of my colleagues that the matter could be referred to the committee that was proposed in the motion of the official opposition or that a special committee could be set up. I am sure it does not matter which committee as long as some committee functions between now and the summer recess. It could work on a number of proposals that could be implemented on a trial basis during the period between when we come back in the fall and December. I think that what the government has proposed is compatible with my suggestion.

I should like to go further and suggest that what I have proposed is desirable; that is, that we do not just act now on certain matters that we could all agree to immediately—those matters may be limited in number—but that we also get under way the serious project of reform with a view to having some of those ideas implemented by next fall. Would the government entertain that approach?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think it would be wiser to wait a few days to see how things evolve before making a reference to a standing committee or a special committee on the broad subject of parliamentary reform. I think it is more urgent than that. In 1975 and 1976 the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization studied for many months many aspects of the rules and came up with some very sound proposals. I think it would be a waste of time to ask the same committee to review again the same question. There are some non-controversial changes which could be permitted now. Once we have agreed on that, I think we could make an intelligent reference to either the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization or to an independent committee which could report to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization within a reasonable length of time.

All those options are open. I would not like to be interpreted as closing the door to any of the proposals of the hon. leader of the NDP, but the first step is the level of House leaders, not in a year but very soon, to see what are the best options to use to ensure that the desired changes be made to make Parliament more real.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, in dealing with this matter, I remind the government House leader that yesterday in the course of the debate the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party indicated that if the government chose to make a reference of an agreeable form, which could be discussed by House leaders, on the question of parliamentary reform and renewal to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, it would be done without a long debate. This was not a representation by House leaders but by party leaders; I repeat that to my hon. friend.

There are reports extant—the last one was 1976—which could be part of a reference. There is the position paper which was filed by me; however, my friend described it as incomplete. There may be other proposals which my hon. friend could bring together, but the point is that in two years the committee has not met and it is not yet even organized. Would the government House leader not consider arranging next week, while these discussions are continuing, the organization of the committee so that its membership can be confirmed and the members themselves can begin to think about the process? It is inevitable that it should be done. It is in the best interests of Parliament that movement be made very, very quickly. I put that to the government House leader in a firm but kind way, hoping that the answer will be in the affirmative.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the hon. member mentioned that the committee has not sat for two years.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It has not been organized.

Mr. Pinard: The organization of the committee would require only a few hours; that is not the problem.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Let us get on with it.

Mr. Pinard: The decision must be made on whether it will be the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. It all depends on what kind of good faith will be shown toward the non-controversial changes which will be implemented in the short term. If we choose the route of an independent committee composed of former Members of Parliament—

Mr. Huntington: Ridiculous.

Mr. Pinard: This decision has not been made. My hon. colleague referred me to part of the speech made yesterday by his leader. I refer him to part of my speech yesterday on the same subject. If last year my hon. colleague was expecting us to organize a committee to look into parliamentary reform while his party was hijacking Parliament during the constitutional debate, I think he was being unrealistic. He was not realistic, either, when he talked about organizing such a committee last fall while they were crying for us to deal with the budget and the economy. But we started the process immediately after the Christmas adjournment; it is ongoing. I think it is about time there were signs of good faith, and quite frankly I expect that those signs will be shown very shortly.

In conclusion, let me remind the hon. member that we had a very serious and important experience last year when we put some six to seven parliamentary task forces into effect. They did a very good job. They had the participation of hon. members from all regions of the country and on both sides of the House. They reported with very reasonable deadlines on major issues in the country. This experiment of the Liberal government could be used for improving the rules in the future.

Mr. Nowlan: You do not improve the rules unless you improve the tone or the temper of this place.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I will not respond to that. I am interested in making the observation that perhaps it is the best indication of the necessity of getting down to the business of looking at the House of Commons. I ask my hon. friend whether or not proposals have been put to the government with respect to parliamentary reform. If so, when were they put? Have they been accepted as yet and, if not, is the government intending to table those proposals at some time within a reasonable period of time?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, in so far as we are concerned, it is very clear that parliamentary reform is most important. My colleague is asking questions on how it will be done and when it will be done. I think I answered those questions very clearly in my speech yesterday; I made very constructive and precise suggestions. Therefore, all he has to do is read my speech and listen to the answers I have given today. He will realize that we are very serious and that all we want is for the opposition to show some good faith; then we will achieve parliamentary reform much faster than if it plays political games.

PETITION

MR. COOK—RECONSIDERATION OF BUDGET AND HIGH INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, as a member of the House, it is my duty to present a petition on behalf of the members of the North Vancouver Chamber of Commerce. The purpose of the petition signed by 114 concerned chamber members is to indicate to the government that the highly regressive effects of the November 12 budget, combined with the government's stubborn adherence to its high interest rate policy, are forcing a housing crisis in the Vancouver lower mainland.

The nature of the petition is to demand that the government reconsider its budget and its high interest rate policy, in order to remedy the zero vacancy rate and minimal housing construction in the Vancouver lower mainland. The petitioners hope that, in Madam Speaker's examination of the petition, you find the petition in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their plea, and use the discretionary power vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible moment.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO MIDDLE EAST

Question No. 1,793—Mr. Cossitt:

On his current trip to the Middle East, did the Prime Minister spend a night in a desert encampment and (a) did he wear clothing of a local nature (b) did he dance with an Arab sheik and, if so, for what reasons and specifically, was it to impress Arab sheiks in order to obtain a larger supply of oil for Canada?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, Citation 171(b).

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND MEMBER FOR OSHAWA

Question No. 1,894—Mr. Friesen:

Since September 1, 1980, were discussions held between the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Oshawa and/or their representatives and, if so, was there discussion of (a) provincial management of natural resources on (i) renewable (ii) non-renewable resources (b) provincial ownership of natural resources (c) provincial control of levels of oil production (d) a Fair Prices Commission (e) the partial or complete introduction of a system of proportional representation in Canada (f) provincial concurrent jurisdiction of international trade (g) the right of the provinces to offshore mineral resources (h) the candidacy of Mr. Ralph Goodale, executive assistant to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in the provincial byelection in Estevan, Saskatchewan (i) a federal appointment for Saskatchewan attorney general, Mr. Roy Romanow?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, Citation 171(ee).

NUMBER OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 3,184—Mr. Cossitt:

As of March 31 and September 30 of each year since 1968, what was the total number employed by the government and how many were (a) employed by Crown corporations and other agencies (b) members of the Armed Forces (c) public servants under Treasury Board control?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and Treasury Board as follows:

Statistics Canada reports that the total number of persons employed by the government and the breakdowns by (a) government enterprises and (b) Armed Forces are shown in the list below (as of March 31 and September 30, since 1968).

Note: Data on "Crown corporations and other agencies" are not available as such. The data provided are in accordance with financial management system concepts whereby an "enterprise" displays the following characteristics:

(i) a majority of its ownership must be vested in government;
(ii) management of its affairs must be relatively independent;
(iii) its primary role must be to provide goods and/or services to other than government;
(iv) the prices it sets for these goods and/or services must reflect the costs of providing them;
(v) the acquisition by consumers of the goods and/or services must be voluntary.

Treasury Board reports that for the purposes of this reply, public servants under Treasury Board control have been defined as all categories of employment (continuous and term or casual) working in departments and agencies for which Treasury Board is the employer (Public Service Staff Relations Act, Schedule I, Part I). Unfortunately, monthly data by this system of classification is not available for the requested dates prior to September 1974. This employment information includes the Post Office Department since the change in status to a Crown corporation did not occur until October, 1981.

CANADA CUSTOMS AT CARWAY AND CHIEF MOUNTAIN, ALBERTA

Question No. 3,364—Mr. Kushner:

1. During 1981, was there a superintendent of customs operations at the port of Carway, Alberta and the port of Chief Mountain, Alberta and, if so (a) what was his/her name, position title or rank and annual salary (b) what were his/her duties and responsibilities?

2. (a) On what date did the superintendent's responsibilities commence and how many days did he/she spend at each port of entry (b) on what date did his/her duties cease?

3. Did the superintendent file any claims with the Department of National Revenue for the reimbursement of expenses and, if so, what were the amounts claimed and what was the total value of the cheques issued for (a) accommodation expenses (b) meals (c) travelling expenses (d) automobile mileage, including the total number of miles claimed and the amount per mile (e) miscellaneous expenses?

4. According to which departmental procedure was the superintendent selected for the position and (a) what were the criteria for the selection process (b) what were the names and positions of the individuals within the department who were involved in the procedure (c) how many candidates were considered (d) on what date did the individuals involved meet, how many times did they meet and, in each case, at what location?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1. During the summer of 1981, there was a superintendent of Canada Customs at Chief Mountain and Carway, Alberta. Chief Mountain is a seasonal port which is closed from September to May, while Carway is open all year with summer and winter hours.

(a) Name: Joseph Gryszczuk
Title: Customs Superintendent
Group/Level: PM-2
Salary Range: $21,413—$24,124

(b) The major responsibilities and/or duties of this position are to:

Direct, supervise, counsel, and train staff at Chief Mountain and Carway;

Review day to day operations, procedures and contentious problems at these customs ports;

Direct, motivate and supervise staff in the administration of legislation pertaining to highway and pleasure craft operations;

Develop an efficient working unit and effective enforcement program;

Co-ordinate the activities of the two customs ports and communicate local requirements to management.

2. (a) Superintendent Gryszczuk commenced duties on May 17, 1981 and as a general rule would spend a couple of hours each day at Chief Mountain. The remainder of his day was devoted to responsibilities at Carway which handles by far the greater volume of international traffic.

(b) Superintendent Gryszczuk terminated his assignment at these ports on September 14, 1981.

3. For that period of time Superintendent Gryszczuk was on assignment at Carway and Chief Mountain, reimbursement was provided for the following expenses:

(a) None.

(b) $1,027.15.

(c) $1,112.60.

(d) Total automobile mileage, 5,943. This was reimbursed at the rate of 23c. per mile for 3,528 miles with the remainder at 9c. per mile.

(e) $221.85.

4. The superintendent assigned to the customs ports of Carway and Chief Mountain is selected on a rotational basis each summer from all superintendents on strenght at the port of Coutts, Alberta. This is a regional or local staffing practice rather than a departmental procedure. During the winter, the customs officer at Carway reports to Coutts.

(a) In order to be considered, one must already be a qualified PM-2 superintendent prepared to spend the summer in travel status.

(b) A Mr. Ray Hagel, the area superintendent is responsible for appointments to the position on a rotational basis.

(c) As referred to in (a) all qualified PM-2 superintendents are considered; however, the actual appointment is made from that staff on a rotational basis.

(d) In view of the staffing practice utilized to designate the seasonal superintendent, there is no requirement for a formal meeting or interview prior to the assignment. For briefing purposes, however, the area superintendent and designated staff member may meet to discuss responsibilities as well as problem areas.

RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS ON TAX INFORMATION

Question No. 3,764—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the names of all the countries with which Canada has any reciprocal agreement on the sharing of income tax information?

2. Are negotiations under way to increase the number of countries and, if so, which countries are involved?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The list below is of the countries with which Canada has ratified a treaty. All of these treaties contain a reciprocal "Exchange of Information" clause.

2. The list also includes those countries with which Canada is presently negotiating or renegotiating new treaties.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask the parliamentary secretary whether he has any explanation to give the House as to why he is refusing to answer question No. 2,042, which was asked on January 29, 1981. That is the question dealing with the total cost of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) December-January world tour of that year and what percentage of that total cost was paid for by the poor unfortunate taxpayers of Canada. Has the parliamentary secretary any possible explanation today why this question has not been answered?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, the government is not refusing to answer any question. As of today we have answered 2,923 questions in this session alone. A question very similar to that concerning another trip made by the Prime Minister was recently answered. The preparation of the answer to this particular question is under way and I will make inquiries on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, would the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, Mr. Smith comment on motions Nos. 62, 63 and 64 listed under Notices of Motions for Production of Papers. I have discussed this matter with the parliamentary secretary before. Would he confirm what he mentioned to me earlier in the week, that the Department of the Environment is prepared to have its memoranda from within those notices produced but that it is the Department of Fisheries and Oceans which is holding up the production of a whole lot of those papers?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am endeavouring to accommodate the hon. member. I hope we will be able to produce those papers quite shortly.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, before we proceed to orders of the day, I have had the opportunity to consult with the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Both members are agreeable to having the motion in the name of the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap called today, if you find that appropriate, Madam Speaker.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—HIGH INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap) moved:

That in view of the fact the Bank of Canada's high interest rate policy has been a major factor leading to unacceptably high levels of unemployment, unacceptably high levels of bankruptcy and unprecedented low levels of consumer and investor confidence, this House calls upon the Government to demand that the Bank of Canada reduce interest rates and to introduce a New Employment Option for Canada in an effort to reverse the current recessionary trend.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today is apt to be a very important day for Canada. Earlier today the consumer price index was announced. We learned that inflation was up over last month 0.2 of a percentage point. It was up over the same period last year by 1.2 per cent. I am sure this news was not necessarily expected either by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) or by the people of Canada. We had been given to believe that the recessionary trend had been slowed, that it is now being reversed and that the consumer price index would likely show a reduction today. But that is not the case.

On top of that, a few minutes from now the Bank of Canada will be making public its annual report. In essence, it will be a Xerox copy of last year's report indicating that after seven years of monetary policy the Bank of Canada feels it appropriate to continue giving it a try for another year to see if the present policy is adequate enough to reduce the inflationary trend.

The government's monetarist policy is supported by its fiscal policy as outlined in the budget introduced on November 12, 1981. I want to say that we in the New Democratic Party feel that the monetarist and fiscal policies of the government are inappropriate, are inadequate, are heartless and cruel; that the monetarist and fiscal policies attempt to fight inflation on the backs of those Canadians who can least protect themselves, such as those on fixed incomes, the 1.8 million unemployed, the elderly, single parents and the like.

I think this begs the question: Why does the government have these policies? Why does the government continue with a policy of high interest rates and the type of fiscal policy that it has? I might add that the monetary policy is supported by the Progressive Conservative Party, its previous finance critic, and the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party is on record on a number of occasions as saying that his party supports the high interest rate policy, that it is the appropriate policy to combat inflation. Why, then, do the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal Party pursue this particular policy? The Liberals and the Conservatives have allowed the structure of our economy to become dependent on and vulnerable to the American economy.

The real problem Canada faces today is the fact that our economy is so closely tied to that of the United States. The important thing that we as members of this House must now begin to appreciate like never before is that the present monetarist and fiscal policies essentially exacerbate the particular structural problem of our vulnerability to U.S. economic trends.

Our present monetary and fiscal policies increase the level of foreign ownership in our economy. These policies do not reduce the amount of foreign ownership in Canada. All we have to do is to look at the backing away from the FIRA proposals on the part of the government, with the support and encouragement of the Progressive Conservatives.

The present monetarist policy hurts Canadian companies having to compete with offshore companies. An interesting example of this was pointed out a few days ago by one of my colleagues. He told us that a foreign company could build a ship in Canada, and is allowed a 20 per cent subsidy to do so by the federal government. But if a Canadian company wants to build a ship here, it is allowed only a 9 per cent subsidy. In other words, we are quite willing to provide greater subsidies to foreign companies for them to build ships in Canada.

Our monetary policy increases foreign competition in our country. All we have to do is look at the nature of our branch plant economy and the fact that branch plants tend to source their parts, components and services from their parent companies. That situation is worsening as a result of present monetary policy. Our present fiscal and monetary policies certainly reduce the level of research and development in this country. These policies increase our indebtedness to foreigners. In 1980 alone, the net outflow in dividends and interest payments to foreigners totalled $5.5 billion. That is a considerable amount of money being drained out of this country on an annual basis which does very little to improve the balance of payments situation in Canada.

Our monetary policy and our fiscal policy create a more unequal distribution of wealth in this country. It is no secret to members of Parliament that in spite of government rhetoric over the years that redistribution of wealth was proceeding, the data available indicates the situation is exactly the same today as it was a decade ago.

In summary, the government's present monetary policy enhances foreign domination of our economy, which then calls for higher interest rate policies, resulting in more foreign domination and a call for more monetary policy. We are in a vicious circle, a Catch-22 situation. We are on a treadmill, as my leader has indicated on a number of occasions. It is difficult to get off this treadmill while pursuing present monetary policy because we are slowly painting ourselves into an economic corner.

I think it is fair to say that the cure which the government proposes to fight inflation—the high interest rate policy—is making the problem worse. The cure has now become the problem. The high interest rate policy is inflationary on its own. Let us consider for a moment the disastrous situation attached to the present interest rate policy. The recent task force of the Progressive Conservatives which went across the country heard from people from one end of Canada to the other, and it was very clear that there was virtually unanimous condemnation of the high interest rate policy of the government. From virtually every sector of the economy the message was clear, concise and the same: the present high interest rate policy is inappropriate and harmful.

The high interest rate policy goes a great way toward explaining the fact that this country now has in real terms 1,800,000 people out of work, and that figure grows daily. We have business bankruptcies up 22 per cent and growing. Farm bankruptcies are up 54 per cent and growing. In February alone 2,403 Canadians declared personal bankruptcy. This does not include the businesses in receivership or those which simply close the doors and walk away from a hopeless situation. It does not include farmers who sell out before the banks foreclose, or livestock operators who liquidate at fire sale prices. It also does not include the number of people who have lost their homes because of high mortgage interest rates.

This monetary policy, Mr. Speaker, is causing economic and social scars which will take years, perhaps decades, to remove. Worst of all, of course, is the fact that the so-called cure has done more to reduce the level of consumer and investor confidence in this country than probably anything the government could do, with the exception of the November 12 budget. That level of confidence is at an historic low. I think some of my most disappointing moments are when I speak to students and I hear young people in elementary and secondary schools saying they have virtually lost hope of finding a reasonable job. Their parents, having worked in a mine or factory for ten or 15 years, are now unemployed. These young people are losing hope in the future, something which has never before happened in this country. The one thing that set Canada apart from almost every other country in the world was the fact that a person here would know that the future would be or could be better than the present. The reason we have millions of people lined up wishing to become citizens of Canada is the hope and optimism which has generally prevailed here. That, Mr. Speaker, is no longer happening today.

Why, Mr. Speaker, are we following this particular course of action on inflation? The Minister of Finance has told us time and time again that it is important to fight inflation. No one in this House would disagree. He says the way to fight inflation is to continue with this monetary policy. We have been on this track for seven years and we are going to continue. However, I suspect there is a more appropriate way to fight inflation, Mr. Speaker. You can do it really in two ways. One way is that which the government is now doing, I suspect with the support of the Conservatives, of strangling the life out of our economy. They are very successful in that. Unfortunately, the evidence indicates that it is not having a very serious impact on the rate of inflation.

There is another way, Mr. Speaker, to begin to reduce the consumer price index which haunts us this morning, and that is through increased productivity. If there is a country anywhere in the world today with the capacity and ability to increase its productivity seriously, it is Canada. Other countries do not necessarily have that option at their disposal. They must presumably continue with a monetary policy such as the Americans have, or that other countries have tried. However, Canada does not need to be locked into that one approach only, and increased productivity is certainly a much more positive option, one which is open to us.

It is disappointing to hear reports that our manufacturing capacity is now operating in the 75 per cent range. I think it is fair to ask what can be done. It is easy to identify the problems, but what are some of the solutions? Well, I suspect at the top of the list is the need to stabilize interest rates. If there is one thing which confuses and disappoints investors, domestic and foreign, it is the fact that our interest rates are on a roller-coaster. We play interest rate roulette every Thursday and cannot predict beyond seven days what the rate is going to be.

An hon. Member: See-saw.

Mr. Riis: It is the old see-saw approach. What businessman or investor wants to expand or start something new in the face of this uncertainty? The one thing an investor in a country looks for is stability. He wants to know with some precision what is going to happen a few months or years down the road. The one thing he does not need is an interest rate policy which allows the rates to fluctuate every seven days. So the first thing that must be done, Mr. Speaker, is to stabilize interest rates.

The second thing, of course, is the need to reduce interest rates. Now, I know we in the New Democratic Party have been criticized for what people have called a rather simple approach—that somehow reducing interest rates will solve the problems. We have never said that. We feel it is appropriate and necessary that they be reduced to, we suggest, at least 1 per cent above the rate of inflation, but that it be part of an over-all and comprehensive strategy. That is simply one component of the attack on inflation. This, of course, would be done not only to help the many Canadians suffering from high interest rates, but lower interest rates would be more compatible with an industrial strategy for Canada. They would give us more options and more opportunities within our economic framework to begin to remove ourselves from a dependency on the United States. In other words, the long-term solution is a lowering of interest rates. The present policy is a short-run and gimmicky solution. An effective economic development program will not occur with interest rates at their current or higher levels. When you consider who the quick-fix and gimmicky people are, well, we are looking at them across the way.

Mr. Smith: No, they are over there.

Mr. Riis: Our leader has clearly indicated a new employment opportunity for Canadians which would lead directly to job creation. It includes the lowering of interest rates, but only as one component of that program. There are many other points. I could talk about the housing program which would put people back to work in the forest, construction and service industries. I could talk about the proposed tax cut for low and middle-income Canadians which would help stimulate the economy. I will not deal with some of these as they are now well known. However, I want to focus on perhaps the most important one, that is, ways and means of assisting the manufacturing sector of Canada.

• (1240)

The Liberal Party, again with the support of the Progressive Conservatives, or with the real urging and encouragement of the Progressive Conservatives, feels that the way out of our economic malaise or dilemma is the megaprojects, resource exploitation, the exploitation of non-renewable resources. I must say that while they will provide some temporary relief in terms of an over-all economic program, we feel that this is not the step into the future. We feel that this is simply more of the same. As a matter of fact, it is a kind of thinking which existed in this country back in the nineteenth century, where we were again exporting raw materials, furs, squared timber and fish. It is that same kind of mentality. Surely this is not the way we will deal with the economic challenges facing the country in the 1980s, by simply exploiting, at a faster and more thorough rate, our natural resources which are non-renewable: oil, natural gas and coal.

We feel that the way to long-term job security and stability and the development of a sound economic base in our country is to develop and strengthen the manufacturing sector of our economy. We should not only strengthen it because this is where the jobs are created, but because here is where one of the major problems exists in our balance of payments.

Mr. Huntington: Tell us how.

Mr. Riis: There is a $21 billion deficit in our manufacturing balance of payment.

Mr. Huntington: Tell us how you are going to do it!

Mr. Riis: I will tell you; just be patient. There is a $21 billion deficit in our manufacturing balance of payments. That is $1,000 that we import more than we export for every single man, woman and child in this country. It amounts to $1,000 today but it is growing. Back in 1970, the deficit amounted to $2.5 billion. Today, it is $21 billion and growing. One can rest assured that the present monetary and fiscal policies will worsen this situation.

Mr. Huntington: Tell us what year this is.

Mr. Riis: A profound crisis faces us in the manufacturing sector and it appears that it is being ignored by the government. It is being ignored by the enthusiastic endorsement of the megaprojects given by the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Huntington: Tell us how you will fix it!

Mr. Nystrom: Tories defend Liberals again!

Mr. Riis: If this $21 billion deficit were to be eliminated, 200,000 jobs would be created for the Canadian people.

Mr. Huntington: With what?

Mr. Riis: I will tell hon. members that this would be good news for people in my part of the country, one of the most prosperous parts of the country, which now experiences unemployment rates in excess of 20 per cent.

Mr. Huntington: Why?

Mr. Benjamin: Because of free enterprise.

Mr. Riis: The hon. member to my right asks why. It is because of the present economic structure of our country, because of the present monetary policy of this government and because of the present fiscal policy.

Mr. Nystrom: MacEachenomics!

Mr. Riis: I hope that is enough reason. What can we do in terms of turning around this deficit?

Mr. Evans: What about mining? Shut that down, too?

Mr. Riis: One of the obvious things to do would be to focus on certain key areas of the economy and establish production agreements in key sectors with the multinationals. Production, whether aimed at the export or the domestic market, must equal the sales in this country. The multinationals must increase their production in Canada and their sourcing of parts and components from Canadian producers. In other words, if the multinationals want to make profits in Canada, then they must provide jobs in Canada. It is not an unreasonable request. Look at what the other western industrialized nations require of foreign investors. They require exactly the same thing. It is not as though we are asking for something new or different. We are simply asking that the Canadian government deal with foreign investors like all the other governments of the western industrialized nation essentially do. We can do the same, for example, in certain sectors such as the transportation area, the auto industry, the telecommunications industry and the aerospace industry.

Let me speak for only a moment or two in my remaining time about the mining industry. In my own constituency, as well as in neighbouring constituencies in central British Columbia, we are about to experience an historic event. Cominco will temporarily lay off 7,000 workers in the next few weeks.

Mr. Benjamin: There is the CPR again.

Mr. Riis: Within the next few weeks, 7,000 workers will be temporarily laid off for the first time in our history. In my own neighbouring area, the Highland Valley, some of the major copper-producing mines in Canada are planning similar temporary lay-offs. Hundreds and hundreds of men will be laid off in the next few weeks. When one looks at the mining sector, it is interesting to note that Canada is the third largest mining producer in the world, yet we import a major portion of our mining equipment and supplies. For example, 15 years ago half of the equipment used in underground mining was imported from beyond the Canadian border. Today, not half is imported but, rather, 75 per cent of mining equipment used underground is imported. That is the kind of progress we have made in the last 15 years.

Mr. Huntington: Why is that?

Mr. Riis: If the hon. member has a question, perhaps I can answer him later, if he wants me to articulate my response in a more clearly defined way.

Mr. Nystrom: Branch plant economy.

Mr. Riis: If we are able to take the initiative and reduce the deficit, when it comes to mining equipment imports we could create in excess of 13,000 jobs in this country just in this one sector alone. Again, I would ask the question as to how much mining equipment a country like Sweden imports, another mining leader in the world. Quite unlike our country, one can rest assured that the imports in Sweden are non-existent when compared with our own.

I think it becomes very clear, as we look at the structure of our economy, that major structural changes are required. At the moment, we have two approaches to economic development which are historic in nature. One is the exploitation and the export of natural resources. This is becoming more and more difficult with the passage of time, as we must now compete with other resource-exporting countries which quite often, because of a number of factors, are able to export more competitively. The other area, of course, is manufacturing. We have always had a weak manufacturing sector as a result of the branch plant economy which has been encouraged and nurtured over the years by the Progressive Conservative and Liberal governments.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh, come off it!

Mr. Riis: We have a weak manufacturing sector which is becoming weaker.

Mr. Huntington: Deliberately misleading!

Mr. Benjamin: Do you want to withdraw that now or later?

Mr. Riis: We do not succeed in either of these two alternatives. The challenge before us is to link our potential comparative advantage in the secondary, tertiary and quaternary sectors with our historically comparative advantage in the resource sector. It is this link, this marriage, which must now begin to take place. We are not adequately bridging this particular gap by rushing ahead and putting all our hopes into the megaproject option. This linkage between these two sectors is now perhaps more important than it has ever been. It is time we started building on our strengths and that we know our strengths. All of us in this chamber could very quickly identify the half dozen areas we should be building on, but we find that we are not building on any of them; rather, we are building on areas with a long-shot option, such as the megaprojects. We must begin to combat inflation, not with the present monetary policy, but with a program of intervention which will result in increased productivity in this country.

Mr. Huntington: What is this program of intervention?

Mr. Riis: Canada has this opportunity which virtually no other nation in the world has. It is one that we must now begin quickly to develop and exploit. This will occur if the government has the courage to admit that the monetary policy now being pursued has been a failure and that, after seven years, it has not wrestled inflation to the ground. We have an opportunity that other countries do not have and the time is not too late to act. In fact, we can act now and take advantage of this opportunity. We should see it as an opportunity as opposed to a problem. Then the long road to confidence building in this country will begin.

• (1250)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I read the motion of the New Democratic Party and I listened to the comments made by the hon. member from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and I feel that, in a sense, the wording of the motion says it all. It illustrates very clearly that the New Democratic Party does not understand the nature of the problem facing the country. The motion attributes all our problems to high interest rates which, in their view, lead to all sorts of other evils. In the wording of the motion there is absolutely no reference to the underlying cause of high interest rates and high unemployment. There is absolutely no reference whatsoever to inflation. The hon. member in his speech did, I must admit, as I listened intently, make a passing reference to inflation and stated that it could be solved by increasing productivity.

All of us understand the importance of productivity, but the hon. member's single-minded reliance on productivity increases as a solution to inflation reminds us all rather dramatically of the supply side of economics that is being promoted as a single way of solving our problems. It is not that simple. If the New Democratic Party motion had said that high inflation is the factor leading to high interest rates and to high unemployment, then it would make much more sense. As long as the members of the New Democratic Party believe that the underlying root of our problem is high interest rates, then they will never be able to offer any solution. They fail to understand that high interest rates are the symptom of underlying inflation, not only in the Canadian economy but in the economy of the United States and of the industrialized countries of the world.

I have noticed for months now that the New Democratic Party has really very little concern for inflation.

Mr. Nystrom: Come on!

Mr. MacEachen: They have no deep understanding of the dangers of inflation. They offer no solution, no policy options to combat, reduce or contain high prices and inflation. Mr. Speaker, their policy options, if adopted, would lead ultimately to even higher prices and more inflation, and then even higher interest rates, and then to even fewer jobs. That is the procession which they are advocating.

I know it is very easy and admittedly popular to denounce high interest rates. Who likes high interest rates?

Mr. Nystrom: Allan MacEachen.

Mr. MacEachen: We all dislike them. But if we are going to get rid of high interest rates, we are not going to get rid of them by directing that the Bank of Canada arbitrarily reduce interest rates. That is the worst possible solution, if the intention is to reduce inflation and high interest rates. There might result some short-term advantage by flooding this system with money and pressing down interest rates, but there would be a resurgence of inflation, not only in reality but in expectations, and ultimately there would be higher interest rates.

That is why I find the approach of the New Democratic Party always puzzling. I know they want more jobs, as we do; I know that they want more growth, as we do; but why do they follow this wrong-headed policy that they advocate and that no industrialized country in the world would adopt as being reasonably acceptable?

The hon. member mentioned France. I was going to mention France. I have a certain interest in the affections of the member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) because from time to time he refers to Helmut Schmidt and then recently, since the election of President Mitterrand, he refers to him. They all belong to the international socialist club.

When it comes to implementation of fiscal and monetary policy, tell me how the monetary and fiscal policy of West Germany differs in kind, or how the monetary and fiscal policy of Mr. Delors, the finance minister of France, differs in kind. The hon. member needs only to look today at the report in The Globe and Mail as to what has happened in France. There they were forced to raise their key lending rate from 15.7 per cent to 18 per cent. That is the key lending rate, which will be followed by other short-term rates. Why? Because they are subject to the same influence that Canada encounters. And they have responded how? By increasing their short-term interest rates from 15.7 per cent to 18 per cent.

The hon. members opposite, in presenting this proposal, are really out of step even with their pals whom they join in the international socialist club, who understand the reality that inflation is deep-seated, it is dug in. It is going to take one very determined effort to get inflation out of our system, it is going to be very painful, and it is not going to be easy.

There are no overnight and easy solutions. If there were, we would adopt them and we would follow an easy, rather than a difficult and painful policy of reducing inflation, if there were easy policies that could be adopted. The New Democratic Party consistently, in their questions, in their policy speeches, have shoved inflation to one side and have gone off to advocate all sorts of policies which, if adopted, would add to inflation and therby permit a resurgence of interest rates to even higher levels. That is my basic objection to the New Democratic Party approach.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not underestimate the seriousness of high prices in Canada and the effects that high prices have on consumers. When I realize, as I do today, that the purchasing power of the consumer dollar, compared to 1971, stands at 40 cents, then I am deepened in my resolve to do what is necessary to bring down inflation and high prices.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) had the floor. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rather interested to see on an NDP opposition day that we have a large gap in the House. I do not know where the hon. members are, but we look forward to having them read our remarks in Hansard.

Mr. Deans: The largest gap is between your ears.

Mr. Wilson: The NDP House leader is getting a little surly these days.

During the remarks the NDP finance critic made on his motion, he said that we should not return to the policies followed in the nineteenth century of exporting our non-renewable resources, such as fish, furs and squared timber. I would like to refer the hon. member to one of the more basic laws of economics. It is known as the law of procreation. I am delighted to see that the member is with us today. I would like to refer to the law of procreation. It is when two little fishes get together and produce another fish. Fish, furs and lumber are renewable resources.

I wish to refer to the NDP motion because parts of it are very accurate. I read from the Order Paper:

In view of the fact that the Bank of Canada's high interest rate policy has been a major factor leading to unacceptably high levels of unemployment, unacceptably high levels of bankruptcy, and unprecedented low levels of consumer and investor confidence—

I agree with that part.

—this House calls upon the government to demand that the Bank of Canada reduce interest rates—

And to introduce new policies.

The gist of that motion is that the Bank of Canada is at fault. I ask the hon. member to reconsider that motion because his plea should not be to the Bank of Canada. His plea should be to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). That is where the problem lies. That is the answer the NDP should be looking for.

There is no question that in this country we must have lower interest rates. We must have an interest rate policy which allows companies to grow and does not burden individual Canadians with the tremendously high interest rates we have today.

Many members have come into contact with individuals who have had to renew their mortgages and must find an additional $200, $300 or $400 a month and sometimes more in a pretty strained personal budget. This is forcing them to disrupt their budget to find the money for their mortgage renewal. It is one of the basic reasons the economy is as slow as it is today. When individuals have to find that money, they must take it from somewhere else, and they take it from current spending.

Many Canadians will have to renew their mortgages within the next two, three or four months. They are beginning to cut back on their spending and set money aside. That is one reason the retail sector in our economy is as weak as it is. There just is not enough money to go around. There is not enough to pay those high interest rates and also buy the normal goods they would buy from the stores today.

The small business community is now enduring probably the worst period in 20, 30 or 40 years. Many companies are just hanging by threads. I am sorry the Minister of Finance did not refer at more length to his own budget, because in that budget the Minister of Finance removed the small business development bond and replaced it with a small business bail-out bond. He took away one of the few sources of strength and one of the few sources of support for the small business community in this period of high interest rates. The program of last year, the small business development bond, cost the government, in terms of the support the bond provided, about $150 million. The new program, the Small Business Bond—no longer the small business development bond—costs the government some $10 million. All that additional burden must now be borne by the small business community which must pay high interest rates.

We are in a vicious circle. Farmers and fishermen are caught up in the same circle. Many of them have had to go bankrupt, and the inadequate responses in the budget have increased the number of bankruptcies in the past couple of months. We have a poor economy. The problem is compounded by the high interest rates we have today. This leads to more bankruptcies, which leads to a poorer economy. Yet interest rates stay as high as they are. There has to be a reason, and I will come to that reason in a few minutes.

The New Democratic Party quite rightly observes that there are two ways to fight inflation. The NDP points out that one of those ways is to strangle the economy, and that is what this government is doing.

Mr. Riis: Shame.

Mr. Wilson: It is strangling the economy and squeezing the life blood out of the economy by taking more money from the economy by means of incredible tax increases. In a time of recession 31 per cent is the rate of increase of revenues in this current fiscal year, and next year revenues will increase by 50 per cent. That is taken right out of the hide of the economy. In addition to that the government is imposing a high interest rate policy.

The second approach to which the New Democratic Party referred is to improve productivity. Members of the New Democratic Party are correct on this, and I am glad they have finally understood the importance of productivity, because they have not been speaking that way in recent years. Up until now they have not understood. Having listened to the policies the finance critic for the New Democratic Party has been espousing, I do not think members of the New Democratic Party understand how to translate the word "productivity" into practice, but that would truly bring about less inflation in this country. There is no question that productivity is the right idea, but the approach of the NDP just would not work.

Members of the New Democratic Party are looking for the quick fix. They are looking for the easy solution. They are looking for the nostrum which will solve all the problems, and it sounds good, but it just does not work.

They have talked in the past—and I heard the finance critic on the news this morning—about the policy they propose of suddenly dropping rates for mortgages to 12 per cent. Their policy is to wave the wand and say to the banks that they must pay for that out of their high earnings. They are saying the rate must be dropped immediately to 12 per cent. However, what happens when that wand is waved? What happens to the mortgage market? The mortgage market is not the property of the banks only. There are credit unions, caisses populaires, trust companies, pension funds and insurance companies. It is a very broad market. The major player in that market is the banks, but they have only about 30 per cent or 35 per cent of that market. What happens when that major player drops its rate from 17 per cent or 18 per cent down to 12 per cent? If the other players want to stay in that market, they have to meet that rate. What happens when a credit union, which is paying 15 per cent or 16 per cent on the savings it attracts from different people in the economy, lends money out at 12 per cent because the NDP waved the wand and said the rate will be 12 per cent? I have asked representatives of some credit unions about this. I have asked representatives of trust companies. They have said they must either go broke or get right out of that market. I have asked representatives of pension funds and life insurance companies this question, and they have said they cannot ask pensioners and widows and orphans who need these life insurance funds to subsidize the market. I was told the government should be doing that. These institutions would pull out of that market.

The NDP approach just would not work because we would lose much of the savings which go into the mortgage market. There would be less savings available for mortgages to create jobs in the housing industry. For a long time members of the New Democratic Party have been saying we must create jobs in the housing industry and that they would do it their way, but that way just would not work.

Mr. Riis: What are you going to do?

Mr. Wilson: It is cruel of them to hold out these easy solutions.

Mr. Peterson: What about yours?

Mr. Wilson: Members of the New Democratic Party have the "quick fix" solution which will make people feel they have the answer, but I think the finance critic knows he does not have the answer.

Mr. Peterson: You have none.

Mr. Riis: What is your answer?

Mr. Wilson: That is why he is making a lot of noise now. That is why he does not like to hear me say this.

Mr. Riis: I want to hear what your answer is, Mike.

Mr. Wilson: Like all the policies of the New Democratic Party, this one would not work and, if anything, would lead to more spending and more regulation, and more regulation and more spending would lead to more inflation. That would be the result of the New Democratic Party policies.

Mr. Riis: What is the budget in Saskatchewan like, by the way?

Mr. McKenzie: The NDP wants exchange controls.

Mr. Wilson: Let us look at a prime example. The Minister of Finance touched on this in his remarks. The socialists were elected in France last year. They had the great socialist dream. They were going to turn things around and prove to the rest of the world that they had the right answers. What has happend? Let me give a few examples. Inflation in France is 14 per cent. Unemployment has increased a full 21 per cent this year over last year.

Mr. Smith: Right.

Mr. Wilson: The private sector in that country is sagging, with the result that the government has moved in with huge spending programs. These will require a lot of government borrowing, which will squeeze out the private sector even further. How is the private sector responding to this? It is being scared out of the country. It is being frightened away. The money is going to Switerland, Germany and the States. Then the government there slapped on exchange controls because the value of the French franc dropped about 10 per cent. That is the result of socialist policies and the socialist dream.

Mr. Riis: What is your answer, Mike?

Mr. Wilson: If we examine some of the policies France has been following, we see a very good comparison with what another member of Socialist International, the Canadian Liberal government, has been following.

Mr. Smith: Rubbish.

Mr. Wilson: We have seen the same kinds of policies and run-away government spending.

Mr. Chénier: Shame on you.

Mr. Wilson: We have seen the high unemployment and the high interest rates France has. That is the sort of thing we have been following in this country.

Mr. Peterson: You don't know anything.

Mr. Wilson: The socialist dream has not come true in Canada, it has not come true in France and it will not come true in any other countries of the world.

Mr. Riis: What is your answer, Mike?

Mr. Wilson: That is the nature of socialist policies.

Mr. Chénier: Give us some answers.

Mr. Wilson: I can see that the two members of Socialist International do not like to hear what we have to say.

Mr. Smith: Rubbish.

Mr. Wilson: I would like to remind hon. members opposite and members of the little red rump to my left that it is the motion of hon. members to my left that we are debating. I am pointing out the shortcomings of that motion, and I do not think they like to hear them.

Mr. Riis: You have no solutions.

Mr. Wilson: I do not think they like what they hear.

Mr. Riis: You have a lot of criticism, but we notice you don't have solutions.

Mr. Wilson: I recommend to the New Democratic Party and the other member of Socialist International, the Liberal government, that they watch closely what happens in France because that is where they will find their answers. That is where they will find the answers to the socialist dream.

The finance critic for the New Democratic Party made a lot of loose statements today about how to get more productivity, how to get more investment, how to reduce unemployment. But none of his statements hung together. They were all part of the "quick fix" solution that party pulls out of the sky which says "This is the way it will be." When people study those solutions they will know they do not hold water. It is immoral and cruel for that party to play this charade on Canadians who are suffering so deeply from the emotional strees and physical hardship caused by high unemployment levels and high interest rates today.

Let us consider what is happening in this country today and see why the problem is not that of the Bank of Canada but the problem of the Government of Canada. The problem has been brought about by the Government of Canada, Mr. Speaker. I would ask hon. members opposite why since the middle of last summer there has been a shortfall in the monetary aggregate, where money supply in this country today is at its lowest level since August, 1980? I would remind hon. members that money supply is the life-blood of the economy. If there is no money the economy does not grow; if there is growth in the money supply, the economy grows. Today the money supply is at the lowest level it has been since August, 1980.

Why has that happened, Mr. Speaker? Why has the government followed a policy of allowing the Bank of Canada to keep the money supply as low as it is today? Why do we have a policy which has interest rates so much higher in this country than they are in the United States?

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) referred to an outflow of capital, interest and dividends amounting to about $5.5 billion. I should like him to turn his attention to another outflow of capital, Mr. Speaker, the outflow of moneys that individual Canadians and Canadian companies have built up over the years and which they are now taking out of the country. We have to ask why that money is being taken out of the country. Why do they feel it is put to better use in other countries of the world like the United States, Australia, the Far East and Europe? The capital outflow in the last 18 months amounts to about six times the rate it was throughout the whole of the 1970s. It has not stopped. The Canadian dollar is still under pressure; it is still bumping along at the lowest level it has been for the past 40 or 50 years. There is a reason for that, Mr. Speaker, and I shall deal with it in a minute.

The government has been forced to maintain the dollar even at that low level through a high interest rate policy which is creating hardship for Canadians all across the country, not just for those who have some money and wonder where to put it. Canadians who are looking for a job or those who have to roll over a mortgage are all affected. The interest rate policy in this country today is not a monetary policy, it is a foreign exchange policy. It is helping to draw in capital from other countries to replace the valuable capital that is leaving the country for other reasons.

I refer to this as our triangular policy trap. The first side of the triangle is a policy which says that we must maintain the level of the dollar at between 82 cents and 85 cents U.S. The second side of the triangle says that we are going to scare money out of the country through the anti-investment policies of the budget, through the restrictive attitude toward foreign investment and the confiscation elements of the national energy policy. On the third side of the triangle is the high interest rate policy which says that any time the Canadian dollar goes below 82 cents U.S. we should jack up interest rates so that it will not go down any further.

We cannot have all three policies, Mr. Speaker. We cannot have a policy which forces money out of the country and also have low interest rates if we want to maintain the level of the Canadian dollar. That just does not work. Members of the government and members of the New Democratic Party just have not learned that simple fact of economics. Something must break if that policy triangle is in place. In this party we believe it is important that the second side of the triangle in the Canadian policy trap be changed. We must alter those policies that are frightening money out of the country. Before we get to the interest rate side of the argument, let us look at what is happening today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, do I have 20 minutes or 30 minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the rule the mover of the motion has 30 minutes and the member speaking immediately in response thereto has 30 minutes as well. All other hon. members have 20 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Take five.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the generosity of hon. members opposite and I shall try to be more gentle with them in the next five minutes.

Mr. Benjamin: You will be forever.

Mr. Wilson: The hon. member who just said that I will be forever is the last in the House who should say that.

The type of money that has been frightened away by these policies is aggressive money, Mr. Speaker, the entrepreneurial money, the capital that creates jobs and has made the country grow. The money coming in is seeking a home with high interest rates, a high return on a bank account or government bond—something that is reasonably safe. It is not creative money; it is passive money. It is what I call widows and orphans' money. We are losing the money that built this country and in return we are getting money looking for a high interest rate which will leave immediately interest rates fall.

We are losing the money that creates jobs and that is bad at a time when 1,100,000 people are unemployed. The approach that the Conservative Party has espoused for some time is that we should shift policies in this country in order to attract that money back. Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the money going out is not all foreign money going home; it is Canadian money that does not like what is happening in the country.

We must reverse some of the disastrous parts of the National Energy Program and some of the disastrous elements of the budget as well as changing some elements of the Foreign Investment Review Agency which is frightening money away. In this party we have always said that we should have that screening agency, but there is a means of administering it that will allow foreigners to feel welcome here and make them want to invest in the country. We should help them understand the policy objectives of the country so that they will invest here. We should encourage them because that will create a better country for all. That is the direction we should go today. We should create a healthy environment to encourage the private enterprise sector of the economy. We should have a positive Government of Canada policy and not the massive intervention and regulation that has been the hallmark of the government's policy and which would be increased substantially if the suggestions made today by the New Democratic Party were in force.

The New Democratic Party does not understand the subject, Mr. Speaker. That has been made clear in the statements made today by its finance critic. The Liberal government has shown by its policies that it does not understand. Many of the problems we are facing today stem from policies which have been followed for the last ten or 15 years. These have led us to high unemployment, high interest rates, and a record outflow of capital. This is what must be changed.

• (1430)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate.

Mr. Bosley: Stand up.

Mr. Smith: I see the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) still has his lungs. I am pleased to participate in the debate on the NDP motion. At first I thought I might hear some solutions and wind up enlightened, but I regret to say that after listening to the NDP today I have not heard any enlightenment or solutions. The most perceptive, succinct and to-the-point comments we have heard today have been those of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

The NDP motion criticizes the high interest rate situation in Canada, leading to high levels of unemployment and bankruptcy and low levels of consumer and investor confidence. Members of that party approach the situation with a magic wand. They seem to think they can push a button and solve all the problems—the quick fix approach. But when it came to solutions, we heard a few mutterings about increased productivity and that was about all. We did not hear any analysis or prognosis of the real problem in the country—inflation.

After listening to the comments of the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) today, one is left with the impression that every morning the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have a bowl of nails and say to each other, "What mean things can we do to the Canadian public today?" That is the impression with which one is left. If one listens, one arrives at the conclusion that members of the NDP do not like high interest rates. Is that not enlightening? I have not met anyone who likes high interest rates, except perhaps a few very wealthy people who have a lot of money to lend.

What were the solutions? We heard a bit about increasing productivity, but we did not really hear what the hon. member meant by it. Did he mean that the same number of workers should produce more goods which they cannot sell? I do not really know what he meant. Without hearing a little more about what he had in mind, I do not see any solutions there. At no point did he address the problems which would result if in fact the government were to tell the Bank of Canada to lower artificially interest rates in the country. It would be nice, but does the hon. member think such a policy would do Canadians a favour?

It seems to me that he forgot one basic principle: in order for someone to borrow money, someone has to lend it. As a general rule people want to lend money where they can obtain the highest rate of return. The hon. member seemed to forget the fact that human nature, being what it is, would probably result in people sending their money out of the country if they could obtain a higher rate of return somewhere else. Did he talk about that? No, he did not. Does he think that it would not happen? Does he think, if interest rates are five percentage points higher in the United States than in Canada, that Canadians will not send their money out of the country?

Mr. Benjamin: Don't let them.

Mr. Smith: The hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) will have an opportunity to speak, and I will not interrupt him. Does the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap honestly think, if Canadians can obtain a 5 per cent higher rate in the United States, that they will not send their money there? What happens when money starts flowing out of the country? Did he address that problem? No, he did not address it. Would there be a drop in the value of the dollar?

Mr. Riis: What about the people who invest in Japan?

Mr. Smith: I did not interrupt the hon. member.

Mr. Benjamin: Who cares?

Mr. Smith: Now they say "Who cares?" What would happen to the inflation rate in Canada if we had to pay a much higher price for the goods we import? Statistically it is a fact that every time we lose three points on the United States dollar, inflation rises 1 per cent in Canada. What happens if there is a drop of about eight or nine cents in the value of the Canadian dollar? We would immediately be faced with a 15 per cent or higher annual inflation rate. Does the hon. member think that would be doing a favour to Canadians on fixed incomes? Did he address that? No, he did not, because as usual the NDP approaches the situation in a naïve manner; with the magic wand and the push-button approach, they have the answers!

Of course, there is one way to stop Canadians from taking money out of the country to obtain higher interest rates somewhere else. We could put on exchange controls. Is the hon. member advocating that? Is his party advocating that? I am not really sure that I heard that. I listened carefully to what the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap said, but I do not recall his specifically saying that. Of course, if we are to have exchange controls, we would have to hire an army of public servants to administer them.

Mr. Benjamin: No!

Mr. Smith: Would they be administered equitably and fairly? I fully anticipate that within a day or two someone in an NDP constituency would be pleading on behalf of someone whose mother had arthritis, needed to live in Arizona, and wanted to take money out, after having worked hard in Canada to save it to buy a house there. Of course, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance, after having had their regular daily bowl of nails, would say, "Oh, no, we will not allow that".

The simple fact of the matter is that there is not an easy way to impose exchange controls which would treat Canadians fairly. Do they want to remove Canada from being one of the major western industrial countries, one of the group of seven, and to sink us down to the tier of second-rate countries with no confidence in their currencies who in order to keep money in their countries have put on exchange controls? Is that the route they want to go? It sounds as if it is, but that is not the route the government wants to take. Once exchange controls are announced, a further drop in the dollar results; everyone is scared off from bringing money into the country if they think they will not be able to get it out. Did hon. members address that problem? They did not even talk about it.

What if we kept money in the country by somehow subsidizing interest rates? The hon. member did not even talk about it, but I am sure we can all figure out what it will do to the deficit. If anyone thinks that is the solution, I suggest it is not. Members of the NDP said that we should have lower interest rates. They said we should not worry about money leaving the country, the increased cost of imports, exchange controls or the inflationary spiral. In addition, of course, we have the NDP policy of spend, spend, spend; abandon caution on the deficit; let the dollar sink to a very low level. We never have to worry about who will pay for it when NDP members are talking.

Mr. Benjamin: Rubbish!

Mr. Smith: The Liberal government believes in a balanced approach. We believe the primary target we must address is inflation. It was one of the main targets of the last budget.

Mr. Huntington: Then why don't you start doing it?

Mr. Smith: Another target was to reduce the deficit. When we do that anyway and revenues are increased we immediately hear a great hue and cry from the Tories opposite who seem to think that it should be done without any pain to anyone.

What about the Tories? At least when members of the NDP are talking we get a consistent message—"Do not worry, spend all you want; do not worry about who will pay for it; stop worrying about the dropping dollar and the deficit—spend, spend, spend"! With the Tories we never really know. One day we have the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) rising and, when the slasher gets going, we hear a real, honest, genuine blue Tory saying, "Cut spending, do not spend any more"! But as soon as the government does anything to reduce spending in a reasonable and conscientious way, such as eliminating some very costly VIA Rail routes, they object to it. The Tories want you to reduce spending, but actually they do not want you to do it. They want you to do it in theory but not in practice. Therefore, when we make a move, as we did on some of the very costly and inefficient VIA Rail routes, the Tories yell and scream. When we suggest that the post office should operate on a user-pay basis and we increase the postal rates, these same people yell and scream. They say "You have to reduce spending. You have to reduce the deficit, but don't actually do it. We want to talk theory but not specifics." When we say that we are not going to be able to maintain the same level of transfer payments, boy, do all the flares go out then! All the crying towels come out for the provinces.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And the grenades start flying.

Mr. Smith: The Tories want to talk theory but they do not want to be specific. The next day you can have the red Tories on their feet and you will hear a completely different story. Maybe the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) will speak or perhaps the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). The message then is spend, spend, spend! You need a score card to tell whether or not their members have a blue shirt on, a green shirt, or whatever colour it is they wear. The red Tories say "Let us spend more on pensions. Let us give more money to the provinces. Let us spend more money on direct job creation, and do not worry about who will pay the bills."

What have we heard today? I must admit that I was waiting in anticipation to see whether the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) would have on his red shirt today or whether he would have on his blue shirt. For a moment, when he started talking about the money supply, I thought he had on an old Social Credit shirt. But I kept listening and I heard a speech that was very heavy on diagnosis, but when it came to prescribing any surgery, I heard nothing.

Mr. Fennell: You don't listen to us anyway.

Mr. Smith: It wasn't too long ago that the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre spoke to the Canadian Club. He basically agreed with the government's policy on restraint. You have to go through the speech quite closely to find out that the hon. member was not differing with the position of the Minister of Finance in his policy of restraint, but he could not quite bring himself to say something complimentary about the minister. The bottom line was that the hon. member was talking restraint, and I suggest that is really what we heard here today.

Coming back to the NDP motion, which is really what we are dealing with, I submit we have a motion that is perhaps well intentioned, I will give them that. I think the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap is well intentioned. But I say this, and I say it very kindly; the motion was naive and simplistic. The hon. member did not address any of the following problems: money leaving the country; exchange controls; the dropping dollar and the loss of confidence in the currency of this country. None of those things seems to bother the NDP.

What does this government do when it looks at the problems that face the country? I suggest this government and this party believe in a balanced approach. We do not belong to Socialist International, contrary to what my hon. friend from Etobicoke Centre suggests. This party and this government believe in social justice but within a free enterprise system. We on this side of the House believe in the work ethic. We on this side of the House believe in incentive. But we are also the party of the government of this country that has brought in the social programs of which we are proud. We on this side of the House believe in unemployment insurance. We believe in old age pensions. We believe in medicare. We believe in universal programs. That, I suggest, is what really boils down to a social justice fabric within a free enterprise system. We have a balanced approach. We are trying to fight inflation on the one hand, while on the other hand we have programs that address themselves to those who are truly in need. Take mortgage rates, for example.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You take them.

Mr. Smith: What has happened? We brought in a bill several weeks ago—

Mr. Fennell: Big deal!

Mr. Smith: —that would provide money for those in dire straits whose interest rates constituted more than 30 per cent of the entire family income. What happened? We heard eight days of debate on second reading from the other side, only to have members opposite vote for it.

An hon. Member: Do more.

Mr. Smith: How did we get the vote? We had to use time allocation to get it and then they voted for second reading. That is unbelievable. Has that bill gone through yet? Of course not, because hon. members opposite have been on strike for the last couple of weeks and we have not been able to move it along.

Mr. Fennell: You cancelled the committees.

Mr. Smith: What about those people who live on farms and need to have more money put into the farm credit bill that we are trying to get through? Can we deal with that? We have not been able to deal with that because hon. members opposite have been away.

Another example of a balanced approach is the job retraining programs which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) recently announced. I think all of these things indicate what I would suggest amounts to a balanced approach by a government that wants to fight inflation, but, on the other hand, one which is able to come up with programs to help those who are in dire straits, such as those who are having problems renewing mortgages.

Those are the things we need to hear in this House. We need a useful debate. A useful debate would put a little more emphasis on solutions. What we have had from the other side today is diagnosis; when it comes down to prescribing surgery, we heard a few mutterings about increasing production. I suggest the most responsible, perceptive and honest statement that has been made in this House today was made by the Minister of Finance. I support him fully, and that is why I am happy to stand up and participate in this debate.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, one thing we should do is congratulate the New Democratic Party for introducing this motion. At least it got the House into discussing something of great concern to the country. I will go further and congratulate the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for coming out with what I believe to be two truths. One is that inflation is the interest rate. Interest rates are a large component part of the whole. That is a truth that has to be stated in this House over and over again because we have some nitwits in the Department of Finance and in the Bank of Canada who actually believe that interest rates are a tool of monetary policy. There is no such thing.

The second truth the hon. member mentioned was the concept of productivity. Sure enough, he did not go into details, but he is on the right track. Whenever there is a large number of unemployed and unused plant capacity and you spend money to put people to work, you fight inflation. I will not go into that in detail but I think the hon. member deserves those few remarks.

On the other hand, by his remarks he opened himself up to attack by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) when he said that he did not understand the system. The Minister of Finance did not go any further, but at least it indicates that the speech of the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) had got through into the hides of the government benches. Naturally there are differences between the parties on many things. But if we can agree in this House that interest rates are the chief issue of the day because people instinctively know they are the one thing that is bringing this economy down and is the biggest component of inflation, we would come a long way in concentrating our efforts on fighting inflation. Inflation is interest rates, and vice versa. It is all the same thing.

Let me cite a few figures. In 1979, the PC caucus got their prime minister to refer the subject of interest rates to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, whereby that committee could question the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance and make them produce figures to show whether their policies were right or whether they had evidence that their policies were working. When these so-called knowledgeable men, including the Governor of the Bank of Canada, could not produce evidence that their policies were working from 1975 on, interest rates did not move upwards for four months until we elected a subservient government which bowed its head to these men of great wisdom. And interest rates have risen and stayed high ever since. When the people have a chance to speak to their elected representatives, the "unwashed" who do not know too much about all the ins and outs of this fine theory, we get sound input which has more common sense than you can get from all the experts.

I said a moment ago that we have to take a look at the figures. I have put them on the record many times. It used to be that we considered inflationary forces to arise mostly from government expenditures, and it was for many years quantitatively the main pressure on prices to move upwards. However, today interest rates lead the race many times over. At any given moment over $500 billion are out under fixed rates, and if you use an average interest rate of 15 per cent, then there is an additional $75 billion annual cost to the economy to carry this interest load. That means that prices rise. The cost to government of servicing our debt is upwards of $13 billion a year. So you can see that interest rates are a much bigger factor in the forcing up of prices.

I do not have the figure on the rise in land costs in the last five years, but I know it is huge. Nor do I have the figure on labour costs, except I know that in the last couple of years they have tended not to grow as fast as inflation. So I would say in all fairness, using the quantitative approach rather than the subjective slogans we are using, that we can say with some conviction that we are right when we say interest rates are the biggest part of the inflationary pressures today in Canada. If you want to fight inflation, the first target has to be interest rates, and that is why I think the House should pay credit to the NDP for bringing in this motion. It gives us a chance to discuss it.

Now, as for the Bank of Canada, I join with the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) in saying do not try to pin the tail of this donkey on to the Governor of the Bank of Canada. He is able, sincere and wants desperately to be a good central banker, but he is going through a period of great change in economic theory. Economists have admitted that they do not know where they have been, where they are or where they are going. All these fellows are naturally feeling for what the right thing is, and in the meantime they try to hang on to the obsolete dictums they have and then they get into trouble. But the hon. member for Etobocoke Centre was right when he said the heart of this belief in a high interest rate policy lies right in the Department of Finance and that is why the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance knows exactly where the trouble lies. He has got up here and poured out his credibility while trying to say the Department of Finance speaks for God and is always perfect and right. Back off, my friend!

Mr. Smith: Wilson agrees with it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): What the Governor of the Bank of Canada should do is stop this weekly bank rate announcement. It is nonsense. No one borrows from the bank, so why should he set a bank rate? It is just a psychological indication of what the bank governor thinks the interest rate should be. But he knows, and you can read it in all his statements, that he is mainly concerned with trying to stabilize the value of our dollar by the use of interest rates. It is not concern over the money supply, it is an attempt to stabilize the exchange rate.

Secondly, the bank should stop interfering as much as it does with the exchange rate. Concentrating on the exchange rate is not solid management of the currency.

Mr. Smith: Look at our reserves, they have not changed for years.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): It is being done by the use of the interest rate technique.

Thirdly, the bank should stick to its primary business, which I think members of all parties would support, and that is, it should control the money supply, hold it in tune with the growth of the economy. If the central bank withdrew from this silly fiddling around with interest rates and concentrated instead on their main function, that of controlling the money supply, I think they would get themselves out of the firing line and we could concentrate our fire on those people in the Department of Finance who take such rigid stands which are not proven necessary by the facts.

Many countries of the world have the same problems as those facing Canada today, and they are wondering what they can do. If you look back over history, Mr. Speaker, you will find that the one country more than any other which is wondering out loud what they should do is the United States. You would never know that from reading the Canadian press or listening to Canadian radio or television. That is because they know, as do we in this House, that we are all pretty stupid when it comes to discussing monetary and fiscal matters. They do not want to get up and make asses of themselves, as we have to in this House by talking about things we do not know too much about. However, we have a duty to talk about them, so I say that we better take a look at possible solutions. I direct these remarks to the new parliamentary secretary because he wants possible solutions to think about, and I am going to give him one.

A long time ago in this House there was a member of the CCF party called Colin Cameron. He is no longer with us, but he did address this problem about 20 years ago and suggested that with growing world trade all countries would have to broaden the base of their reserves. He made the suggestion, which I think was unique and worth while, that we should add to our reserves the special drawing rights of the World Bank to give us a broader base in order to withstand the raids on our currency. In memory of this ex-colleague of ours, I want to bring that subject up again. If our purpose is to stabilize world exchange rates, not only should we consider adding the SDRs to our reserves along with the strong currencies of Japan, Switzerland, West Germany and perhaps still the United States, but I think we should take a look at an old idea and see if it would not be worth while here in Canada. I am referring to the present debate in the United States over whether they should make the American dollar convertible into gold, as it was 50 years ago. All western nations agreed to get off the Gold Standard back in the 1930s. Now that we are all under such great pressure with the instability of our currency, maybe the debate going on in the United States should be brought to the Canadian arena. I would like to know what the effect, would be in Canada of making the Canadian dollar convertible to gold, particularly since the Americans are converting their currency. I would like to know what it does to stabilize the dollar. I would like to know what it does to reduce and stabilize interest rates. I can tell what is likely to happen; but I also have a deep conviction that I do not know for sure. However, maybe if we talked it out publicly, and maybe if we all made ourselves look a little silly and stupid, we would serve our country well by having that debate.

I am not necessarily recommending that we debate it here in the House. As we will obviously need witnesses, it would be a very difficult place to discuss monetary and fiscal policy. I would think that it should probably be discussed in a special committee with two or three parties, because that is probably all we could find who would have the time and the will to go through this detailed examination. However, we could bring in the experts, the top officials from the Department of Finance. They are not evil men. We could bring in the Governor of the Bank of Canada, as he is not an evil man. We could question him and bring these matters forward. I am sure, as we found out in the committee three years ago, that these men will respond and give us a little more information on which we can base our judgment. I would like to know all these things before the emergency is upon us if the Americans convert in May or June.

Therefore, what I have said is only one point in the scenario on how we could put forward some alternatives to the government besides following this horrible, harmful policy of high interest rates. That does not mean that we can forget the fiscal side. On the fiscal side, as the House knows, we will be working with the suggestions from the Conservative benches made last year concerning the various pieces of legislation, trying to apply them so that we can get around the harmful effects of this interest rate policy followed by the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance. We want the Farm Credit Corporation to be effective. Thank heavens some civil servants stuck a clause in the amendment to the Farm Credit Act, Bill C-88, which allows the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow money from sources other than the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This means it can go to private individuals. This section states it can borrow money by any means, and "any means" opens up whole new vistas. Maybe the Farm Credit Corporation can be set up almost as a bank or credit union as a way of borrowing money at 7 per cent or 8 per cent from the public and lending it out at the same rates. Everyone knows how it is done. It is done through the small business development bond program to make money. It is done through the income averaging technique, and there are others. In the debate, on the housing bill, Bill C-89, I proposed that we should do in the housing field what we have done, on second reading and in committee, in the Farm Credit Corporation; that is, to give home owners equality with the farmers. I would like to apply that by restoring the real principle of the small business development bond to small business. I would like to provide that for export businesses. Large companies can look after themselves by the equity route. However, we in the House have some responsibility on the fiscal side to back up what the governor is doing. I do not necessarily want to tell the Governor of the Bank of Canada that he must arbitrarily lower his rates unless I know a little more about what will happen and how he will do it. However, while he and we are trying to make up our minds on that, there is no reason why we cannot go forward on the fiscal side. Therefore, in conclusion, my advice is very simple. I am advising the Governor of the Bank of Canada to quit fooling around with interest rates as a monetary tool, to look on money as simply a commodity, and to let the market decide what the interest rate will be. I have a suspicion it will be a lot lower.

Then, on the fiscal side, my second conclusion is that we should get busy and do something in this House. We should understand what we are doing for farmers, small businessmen, exporters, and those who live in city homes. I would like to add the mining industries and all the other production industries as well. If we work together on this, step by step, I think we will be serving our country well. But, above all, as of this particular moment, I most strongly recommend that we begin openly to debate, and also encourage the media openly to debate, what we will do about this world exchange situation and whether we should consider making our Canadian dollar convertible to gold, along with special drawing rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon on the important matter of interest rates and economic policy. It is important to get across to the Canadian public the message that the government is doing something, contrary to the impressions created by hon. members of the opposition. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Small Businesses, I would like to outline briefly some of the efforts that the government is undertaking to help small businesses in this country. First of all, it is important to note that Canada's one million small businesses represent 97 per cent of the total number of firms in the country. They provide 42 per cent of jobs in the private sector employment and 30 per cent of the contribution of business to GNP, and are a key to regional growth innovation. They are also 97 per cent Canadian owned.

I would like to enumerate some of the measures of the government which are geared to small business: first, there is the Small Businesses Loans Act which provides a federal guarantee to financial institutions in respect of small business loans toward the purchase or reconstruction of business facilities and equipment. As Your Honour is probably aware, the loans under this program are fixed at 1 per cent above the prime rate and are therefore not fixed at two, three or four points above the prime rate, a circumstance which small businesses must often face. Second, there is the small business bond program which was a measure proposed in the November 12 budget. This program enables small businesses in severe financial difficulty to reduce their interest expense by up to 50 per cent. It is a successor to the small business development bond announced in 1979. In my province of Quebec, Quebec firms accounted for some 12 per cent by volume of the loans issued under this program, and 11 per cent of all such bonds were issued to the end of 1981.

Mr. Speaker, there has been much criticism of this program, saying that the banks have been reluctant to lend under it or that businesses are unaware of the program. I would like to point out that under the initial program, in which close to $2 billion of loans were let out, some 13 per cent, or $260 million, was lent to businesses that were in financial difficulty. This meant that the program in its initial form worked, and it worked for the benefit of businesses that were in financial difficulty.

That money is provided in the budget and therefore it is perhaps a matter for businesses to acquaint themselves with this program and require that their bankers exercise the imagination necessary to extend loans under this program.

Earlier today I had the opportunity of participating in a radio program in Montreal, by telephone. One of the guests at this program was the representative of the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses of Quebec. He indicated that a survey of his members showed that some 40 per cent were unaware of this particular program. Mr. Speaker, that might indicate that some work would have to be done in informing their members. I think that organization, the CFIB, could play an important role in informing their members about the program and ensuring that the program does work.

I indicated also that the government would obviously be interested in listening to any suggestions that they might have to make as to how we can make that particular program more effective.

Mr. Speaker, another program that is of aid to small and medium-sized businesses is the enterprise development program. This is designed to assist firms, including small and medium-sized businesses, undertaking relatively high risk innovation or adjustment projects that can be expected to yield attractive rates of return on the total investment. That, because of the high risk nature, takes a number of years to show results.

Under this particular program, in the year 1980-81, some 304 projects were accepted in Quebec, or 43.4 per cent of the total number of projects under that program, for an authorized total amount of $73 million or 22.3 per cent of the loans or the grants authorized under that particular program.

I would also like to mention the Federal Business Development Bank, which provides financial and management services almost exclusively to small businesses and particularly those who do not have other sources of financing available to them on reasonable terms and conditions. This kind of financing includes loans, loan guarantees, and equity financing. The Federal Business Development Bank in 1981, again for the province of Quebec, has authorized loans totalling $113 million to some 1,253 businesses. It has undertaken in 1981 13 equity investments for a total of $4,304,000.

Mr. Speaker, there is another program which I would like to mention, the program for export market development. In 1980-81 Quebec firms received almost 28 per cent of PEMD assistance, that is some $4.8 million. There were 477 applications approved in the province of Quebec.

I would like also to mention another program, one of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, that of industrial and development assistance. A substantial provision of federal assistance for regional development comes under this program, RIDA, and subsidiary units.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have been called to order many times by your good self in this House for not speaking to the point. I am wondering if the parliamentary secretary would tell us what these printed and well known government programs have to do with the debate that is on here today.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do so. The motion refers to employment. It refers to a "new employment option" for Canada, and I think it is totally fitting therefore to mention a number of programs the government has put into place to increase employment or to generate employment in Canada and particularly, as I mentioned earlier, in my province of Quebec.

I also would like to mention the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, which was set up by the government last year as a complement to the textile and clothing policy. That program was announced last June 19. The objective of this policy is to try to continue the efforts of the government to ensure that the textile and clothing sector will become as competitive as possible in world markets.

The government has announced the reallocation of more than $250 million over five years to this effect. This new program will assist the modernization of viable firms—and I would like to stress the words "viable firms"—in the textile and clothing industries, establish new employment in communities affected by the closure of plants, and help displaced workers take advantage of new job opportunities that might be created.

Parallel to this adjustment program, the government committed itself to renegotiating protection measures for the textile and clothing industry to give them time to restructure.

I would like also to remind members of the House that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on October 26 of last year announced the formation of this board to be chaired by Mr. Paul Desmarais, president of Power Corporation. This agency, with headquarters in Montreal, has been in operation for approximately five or six months only and has reached the stage where it is going to be extending loans in the very near future and grants to companies that wish to modernize.

Another initiative of the government is the industrial labour adjustment program, ILAP. Recently we debated in this House a bill designed to provide pre-retirement benefits for people in certain designated sectors, such as the clothing and textile areas, light appliances, and in certain designated communities across the country. This bill was given third reading several weeks ago. This bill will provide retirement benefits to workers between the ages of 55 and 65 equivalent to benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. It will permit workers in these industries to take early retirement. Industries undergoing particularly difficult times will be able to restructure. It will permit the government to establish new industries with as little difficulty as possible for the more elderly people.

After outlining some of the initiatives the government is undertaking to help Canadian industry, I wish to address the matter of interest rates. As everyone knows, high interest rates have created problems for businesses and individuals, not only in Canada but in many other countries. We must ask ourselves what is the problem. Is the problem interest rates or inflation, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada have indicated?

Several months ago the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance circulated a study by the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, which had been done in November 1981, entitled "What really happened to interest rates, the longer run analysis". Very conclusive evidence is introduced in this study to show that interest rates in the period from 1967 to 1980 were related to the rate of inflation. It stated quite unequivocally that the rise in the average rate of inflation fully explains the average increases in these nominal interest rates. I suppose many similar studies have been done which have explained this connection.

Anyone with any kind of logic should know that if the rate of inflation is 11 per cent or 12 per cent, no one would lend money at an amount less that the rate of inflation. Anyone would want a return of 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent on top of the rate of inflation. Therefore, it is evident that the way to bring down interest rates is to reduce the rate of inflation.

The Minister of Finance has been much criticized by members of the opposition and other critics who would like to see an easy solution to this problem. He received some support earlier this week. I wonder whether members opposite paid any attention to that.

At a speech given earlier in Toronto this week, Jacques de Larosière, managing director of the International Monetary Fund, came out with a vehement defence in support of the government's monetary and fiscal policies. On point after point de Larosière supported the policy of the Government of Canada.

In the March 16 edition of the Montreal Gazette, there is a column by Jack McArthur, who is not known to be a great defender of the government's policies. He noted that stagflation, high inflation and economic stagnation, is rampant throughout the world. He said this:

> In other words, Canada can't escape it by itself, however frantically it shuffles policies. It was a reminder that not all problems can be blamed on a single government.

That is quite an admission. Our friends opposite and our friends in Quebec have the tendency of blaming all the problems in the world on a single government. When you see the admission of a journalist that not all problems can be blamed on a single government in this country, it is almost overwhelming.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by congratulating the New Democratic Party on having brought this motion forward on the second day. I will follow that opening remark by saying I do not agree with the impact of the motion. I just agree with the principle of it. The approach to it is abhorrent and it goes in the wrong direction.

One of the troubles I have as I enter this debate is that we in the political arena are always trying to score points. Politics takes precedence and priority over the addressing of solutions to the dilemma we face, particularly in the western democratic industrialized countries. We are always after the political point. We never get together to debate resolutions.

Last fall I had the opportunity to attend a western world conference in the United Kingdom at which the problems facing the western world as a result of low growth expectations were debated. I found myself among some very learned people from the world of economics. However, they were using the conference as a debating society to score points one against the other, getting a long way away from addressing the fundamental issue.

Interest rates do everything the NDP say they do. They are a dilemma that we must face in our free society. Are the causes of interest rates not the political system, the political rhetoric and the promises given to the public in order to maintain and sustain political power? The cause of the inflation factor we are dealing with today is the attitude that governments have encouraged to develop in the land as we move from cradle to grave care in a welfare state. Inflation developed as a result of the wealth and high anticipation levels that were created as we came out of the post-war boom. Everyone wanted a big fridge, a big car, a television set in the bedroom, and these amenities were something to which we thought we were entitled. People worked hard and extra long hours in order to save enough to buy a piece of property and have a higher than average standard of living. However, once that happens, a great levelling starts to take place in the form of social taxation policies. We saw that come into being in Canada with the white paper in 1969, and then in 1971-72 we moved into a socialized taxation policy and dilemma which has delivered us to the dilemma of this hour and day in Canada.

At one time we had the third highest standard of living in the world. Today we are coasting down past and through the thirteenth place. We have allowed nations like Japan and Germany, with their work ethics, frugality and the old fashioned qualities which we at one time had in this land, to surpass us in standard of living and the ability to create work and to serve the markets of the world.

We have moved into a taxation system which wants to structure, wants to control and wants to deliver all power to the bureaucrats. The bureaucrats today feel that even those tax points which have been delivered at large into the community, the wealth-creating community, are theirs. We even have the dangerous concept, showing through government literature and the papers it presents to the House, of tax on an imputed rent basis.

We then come through this taxation experiment from 1972 until November 12, 1981, in which we see a budget finally submitted that is going to cross all the "t's" and dot all the "i's" and put the periods on that social experiment to which we have been trying to adjust.

November 12 let the Canadian innovator, the Canadian entrepreneur, the Canadian manager, the Canadian wealth-creator and the explorer, know that we were finally at the point of being a totally controlled economy and that we had gone way beyond the 50-50 private sector-public sector mix which had been the rhetoric of the last decade. It destroyed the decision-making base of Canada, and it has removed any incentive for a person to create or manage a payroll in Canada unless he is part of a Crown corporation or a multinational corporation which is large enough to move and sway with the shocks which keep coming through the Liberal government's monetary and fiscal policy that is with us in Canada today.

One of the forces most damaging to the inflation factor we are dealing with today has been the nationalization program of this government. The nationalization program, or Canadianization program, has put, I would say, at least $20 billion of demand and call on our foreign exchange reserve account. When we start to increase a nationalization program in the energy sector, which has yet to produce one new barrel of oil—as a matter of fact, there is negative delivery of our exploration potential—and when we start to get into that kind of situation, we are indeed in trouble. All of the savings, the energy and the tax resource of this land are now being delivered to the principle of ownership, when creating jobs and work and development is what we in Canada really need, for we have denied a whole generation coming out of our schools the right to dignity and to self-reliance and the right to work as a result of these nationalization and socialization policies which were finally delivered upon us on November 12, 1981.

How are we going to back out of this dilemma? We have heard all kinds of calls from the government side for our answers. We are not the government. The government is in place with all the resources, all the expertise and all the muscle and might of the Government of Canada to come up with the answers. Hon. members opposite have delivered their idea of what the answers should be. The New Democratic Party supports them in much of what they have been doing because the NDP essentially is seeking the same goals the Liberal government is seeking. Those are centralization of control over all the resources and assets of this country and the acquisition of as much of the means of producing goods and services as the government can acquire, and it is the rate of that acquisition that is delivering us almost into a depression today. When we have one and a quarter million people of a work force as small as Canada's out of work and when we couple that with the percentage of people who are out of work in Europe, we are delivering ourselves into an extremely serious political situation.

Is there a way out? I think there is, but we will have to do some new thinking. We will have to get it through the process of debate, and we will have to apply our minds to it.

In offering a couple of solutions I am not speaking for my party, I am speaking as an individual member of the House. I think there are a couple of things we can do to address the dilemma we have today.

First, the interest rate dilemma of the people of Canada and the Governor of the Bank of Canada is due to the movement of the liquid flows of capital from this country to other countries seeking a higher interest rate haven. However, as a result of the nationalization programs of the Liberal government since February of 1980 we have created an unbelievable demand call on our foreign exchange reserves. This works against the acquisition of shares from foreign owners and against the acquisition of resource companies which were at work in creating payrolls in this country. When we buy that foreign ownership, we do ourselves a disservice and we place upon ourselves a tremendous demand for our dollar to fall and for our interest rates to climb in order to maintain a balance in the international account. As a result of that program, we have created in the last two years some $20 billion of demand on that international reserve account.

How can we quiet down the liquidity as capital moves from one country to the other through that account? I would say we do not have to put on foreign exchange controls. There is a very simple way to do it. We had in place a 15 per cent withholding tax on interest paid to foreign account owners. If we want to take the liquidity off that movement and give ourselves some relief in terms of interest rates, I think we should look seriously at applying that withholding tax again and increasing it probably to the 30 per cent range for anything less than a 60-month call at point of inception. In that way I think we probably could take a very large percentage of the liquidity of call and the demand of call off that international reserve account, and we would find we could then start to move our interest rates downward.

I do not think we can realistically move our interest rates in this country below the inflation rate, although there are some economists and one or two of the more progressive thinkers in the world of international banking who say it is possible, as has been done in Switzerland, actually to manage our own domestic interest rate if we do control and protect our monetary system.

We in this country have prostituted our monetary system. We have printed more money than the growth of the economy called for and, as a result, we have weakened the purchasing power of our medium of exchange. I go back to my early schooling—and that is a long way back—and I still remember the warning in those days. We were warned—at least I was warned in school—that the fiat money system is something which will not work over the long term because political forces in a democracy cannot be trusted. I am not blaming the Liberal government entirely for this. I just think it is the bidding game we have on the attitudes and minds of the Canadian public which causes politicians to promise more than the work force of the nation can truly afford. When we do that, we weaken our monetary system, to the point now where I have heard the call again, and I am surprised to hear it from my colleague, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He is calling again for a fine metal or a gold standard measure in order to return our medium of exchange to some form of honest measurement rather than let it remain at the whim of the politician serving and bidding and catering to the unrealistic anticipation levels of Canadians at large. It is this attitude and expectation level we have to address, and I think the monetarist policies are addressing that because the expectation levels are coming down to the very dangerous level where even the right to private property, home and building is being attacked.

I will probably be booed and jeered by members on the Liberal side for saying that the November 12 budget is a deliberately designed attack on the individual's right to own property in the Canadian system. I consider that to be a very serious thing. It is a resolution which is being brought about mainly because there is no sense of outrage in the country and very little of it in the House, except for what happened two weeks ago. It is that lack of outrage that has taken us away from the standard of excellence which we used to meet with such great pride.

I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) say for two years that we could solve the problem of inflation in this country through increased productivity. Mr. Speaker, productivity cannot be increased under the present taxation system.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should open his mind; it is absolutely locked. Productivity cannot be improved in this land nor can we address the $20 billion deficit in our international trading account in fully manufactured goods, under the present taxation system. My party knows my views on this subject and does not necessarily support what I am about to say.

As the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, knows, the Ottawa Board of Trade financed a research project under an economist, Mr. John Ferguson, who at least was creative. He found that we cannot move ahead in this country and address the world competitive marketplace and deliver our Canadian productive system into that marketplace by continuing to tax profits.

This country needs $1,400 billion of capital between now and the turn of the century if it is not to go back to the wigwam. Sometimes it seems that is where we are headed. If we are to move ahead as an industrial society and address our distribution problems, then we must generate our own capital rather than borrowing from other countries. We will have to stop this excessive taxation of profits and stop legislating a taxation and fiscal policy that is a disincentive to those who have the ability to create and manage payrolls.

Because there are no incentives in this country today, people are inclined to sit on their money and draw high interest. Those who are prepared to risk their money on innovation, to risk capitalizing ventures and modernizing ventures in the marketplace, face too much government regulation and too much trouble. In my own business I have been waiting for nine months for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to agree or disagree with five items so that we can move ahead to cause growth and increase productivity, while reducing the wages cost in our program. We are delivering ourselves to that kind of dilemma because the bureaucracy will not be able to handle the decisions that have to be made on a daily and hourly basis across the land.

If profits are not taxed, there must be a tax on something. If we were to turn our minds to the taxation of net costs in the industrial sector, we would find that all of a sudden the government would deliver an incentive to remove all the waste and fluff from the productive system. I plead with the House to get a study group together to look into this kind of approach to taxation. It might even create a labour shortage, Mr. Speaker. I can foresee that within the next four or five years there could be a shortage of labour in the country if costs were taxed. This would make us competitive in the marketplace. I do not want this to be confused with the value added tax that exists in Europe. I do not think we should follow that route because it means the taxation of costs and profits. We should start out fresh. That would give us an advantage over all the other industrialized nations of the world.

We could then start doing the things that we want to do—reduce government deficits and control the economy. I should like to see the managers in government receive an incentive for reducing their costs. If we could do this, we would develop a feeling of wellbeing and begin to achieve the standards of excellence which would again give us a standing in the world marketplace.

In all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, I believe we will go down the chute as long as we leave the existing taxation base in place. If we want total government control over all means of producing goods and services, then all we need to do is to let the November 12 budget go through. It would be a victory for those who have been working all their lives to make Canada a socialist state.

I want to warn the people of Canada, however, that the egalitarian way is not the Canadian way and it is not the magic that has attracted so many people from other nations to this once great country. There is a way out, Mr. Speaker. We can have these debates and play games of trying to appeal to small business and a lot of other things, but if there is a true desire to resolve our problems with interest rates we should give an incentive to reduce the outflow of capital and we should stop the nonsense of taxing profits at a time when we need unlimited capital, if we are to own our own country. We could then bring our dollar back closer to par. If we could reduce the cost of production, we would control marketplaces all over the world.

That is my plea and my appeal to the NDP, to the government and to my colleagues in this debate on the opposition motion, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak on this motion proposed by the New Democratic Party. I have serious difficulty with the motion, as you might expect, because I think it indicates a degree of naivete about how the economy operates, how the motivating forces in our society are causing events to happen, growth to occur, jobs to be created, the standard of living to rise and prosperity to move forward in this country. It is a naivete that does not understand the causes of inflation nor the debilitating effects of inflation on investment, which, after all, is the engine of economic growth and job creation. It does not understand the historical causes of the problems we face today, nor does it understand what is possible in a world economy.

There are some very serious and far-reaching problems with the proposals put forward in the motion, Mr. Speaker. The problem of interest rates faces almost all western industrialized countries. Earlier in the debate we heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) speak about the situation in France. The French government thought it had some innovative and creative ideas about how it could divorce itself from the world economy but instead, the French franc took a serious battering in the money markets and interest rates have had to be raised by more than 2.5 per cent over a short period.

We are a world economy, Mr. Speaker; we are an integrated world economic system. We have to face that reality. We cannot divorce ourselves from it as a trading nation. This country is probably the most heavily dependent on foreign trade of any nation in the world. We are great traders and we are a great trading nation. We know that 30 per cent of our gross national product comes from international trade and 25 per cent of the gross national product is represented by trade with the United States alone. We should certainly look at ways to diversify trade. In 1976 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) put forward a proposal which was roundly condemned and soundly damned by hon. members opposite. It was called the "third option". It was an attempt to divorce or diversify ourselves over time from a heavy dependence upon the United States as a major trading partner, and to move more into a trading relationship with Europe and the Pacific rim countries. It would be a great boon to British Columbia if we tried to improve our trading position with other countries in the world. We were told that it could not be done and that we were turning our backs on our traditional trading partner. It seems to me that we missed an opportunity, but the opportunity is still there. We can diversify our trading patterns, and we should be moving in that direction. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) is travelling all over the world trying to improve our trading position with other countries so that we can sell more Canadian goods and services.

We must look at the question of interest rates which are debilitating and tearing apart our economic fabric. We must deal with the entire cause of high interest rates. We cannot deal with our economic difficulties by looking at the symptoms of the difficulties. We must go to the heart of the problem. The heart of the problem has been referred to repeatedly both inside and outside the House by everyone who knows anything about what they are talking. The root cause of the problem is inflation. If we do not bring down inflation, we will not solve the problems of unemployment, low productivity and slow economic growth. Inflation is beneath all those problems. It shortens time horizons so that people do not make long-term investment decisions and do not offer five year- mortgages. We have seen it happen. All one has to do is to open one's eyes and look at the historical situation—what happened in the last five years and what the government is trying to do right now. It is trying to bring down inflation.

The proposal put forward today by the NDP flies in the face of reality. We will not have low interest rates because someone says, "Tomorrow there will be low interest rates." The world does not work that way.

Mr. Riis: Who says that?

Mr. Evans: We will not have low interest rates by decree. I hear the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) asking, "Who says that?" In part, the opposition motion reads:

—this House calls upon the government to demand that the Bank of Canada reduce interest rates—

It reads "demand"—do it, wave the wand, that is how it is done! The world does not work that way. One thing hon. members in the corner seem to forget is that there are more savers than borrowers in society. Contrary to what they believe, there are more people who save money than who borrow it. Every time we hear cries from the corner, they are "subsidize borrowers". Do they know whom they are asking to subsidize those borrowers? They are asking little people who are saving for retirement, for example the lady who is now saving slowly but surely to accumulate enough money to live decently in retirement. Those are the people who will subsidize the borrowers.

The marketplace sets interest rates worldwide.

Mr. Riis: It is the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Evans: I hear the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap referring to the illogical jump which would be taken by someone who thinks there is a magic wand solution to the problem of high interest rates.

Mr. Riis: Governor Bouey sets interest rates.

Mr. Evans: Governor Bouey does not set interest rates any more than the hon. member or I do. The market sets interest rates. It is what the public demands to be paid on their savings. It is what people who are saving money or putting money aside are demanding in the form of a rate of return for not consuming today and saving to consume some time in the future.

I believe the hon. member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) indicated earlier that many studies of this nature were conducted. They looked at the relationship between money supply growth, inflation and interest rates. No economist in this country or in other countries questions the fact that a rising money supply at a rate higher than the growth rate or the real output of the economy is what causes inflation over the long term. There are arguments concerning the effect of slowing or increasing the rate of money growth on reducing or increasing inflation and the lags in the system, but no one argues the facts that if the money supply is allowed to grow too fast, the result is inflation or, if it is allowed to grow slower, inflation will be beaten. The only questions are how long it will take and how much output loss and unemployment will result in the process of slowing down inflation.

There can be no doubt that if we slow down the growth rate in the money supply, we slow down the rate of price increase. Also there can be no doubt that if, at the same time as we are trying to slow down the growth rate in the money supply to remove inflation from the system, we run bigger and bigger federal deficits, the output loss and unemployment will be higher than otherwise. That is the logic of the policy of fiscal restraint applied at the same time as the policy of monetary restraint. We can remove inflation from the system faster and with less pain if we follow fiscal restraint at the same time as we follow monetary restraint. In other words, if we are restraining the growth of government spending at the same time as we are restraining the increase in the money supply and the available purchasing power, inflation can be wrung out of the system. These are the facts—monetary restraint coupled with fiscal restraint.

The budget which was brought down in November implements fiscal restraints to complement monetary restraint. We must reduce inflation. We must follow responsible, realistic, workable policies which will reduce inflation. By doing so, we will change confidence levels in society. This will mean that there will be greater confidence, which will lead to renewed investment, which will lead to faster economic growth, which will lead to higher levels of productivity, which will lead to higher wages and higher levels of employment. This is the manner in which the system must operate. We must start with the fundamentals and work from them in order to achieve the objective we want. We cannot start with the objectives and attempt to find policies out of the blue, such as the ones suggested by the New Democratic Party, to move us somehow from a difficult situation to the desired result overnight with the snap of a finger or a wave of a wand.

Basically, it is dishonest to build up in Canadians expectations and hopes day after day. The leader of the NDP repeatedly indicates that his party has a five-part solution. He says that if we do those five things, our problems will disappear overnight. It is dishonest and cruel because it builds expectations. Members of the NDP indicate that if they were in government they would solve all the problems—Canadians would be back on easy street, with prosperity around the corner, money coming out their ears, and mortgage rates at 2 per cent. Time and time again we hear the pie in the sky of the NDP. It is absolute nonsense. We have to deal with difficult problems and difficult economic challenges by applying realistic and sometimes difficult solutions. It is not an easy free lunch world, and the sooner that group in the corner over there gets it straight that there is no such thing as a free lunch, the sooner we will be able to come to grips with our real problems and get ourselves back on track again. That is the reality.

Mr. Riis: Check the budget in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Evans: I hear talk about the budget in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Riis: It is balanced.

Mr. Evans: It is balanced with resource revenues that only two provinces in this country have. That budget is balanced with those resource revenues. That is where the revenue is coming from, and it is coming out of every other province's pocket and balancing the budget in Saskatchewan. Isn't that wonderful? But what about Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba?

An hon. Member: Conservative governments.

Mr. Althouse: Most of the money does not come from oil in Saskatchewan. Check the record.

Mr. Evans: It is amazing to live in naivete.

Mr. Wilson: You should know it well.

Mr. Huntington: You are part of it.

Mr. Evans: One of the real problems which we faced at the time of the last budget—and we have to go back a period of time to look at the history underlying our problems and those of western governments, the United States, Britain, Germany and France, on which I think the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) put his finger—is the way the tax system operates, the kind of burden that taxation puts on creativity, growth and productivity in our society, the United States society and western European society, because what it is doing is pulling things down.

Mr. Wilson: What about the 31 per cent tax increase?

Mr. Evans: Look at what happened during the late 1960s and early 1970s. That is when the United States tried to finance a war by printing money instead of increasing taxes.

Mr. Wilson: What are you financing with the 31 per cent increase?

Mr. Evans: That is precisely what happened in that period. Inflationary pressure built up in the United States and in Canada. At the same time, because we did not have an indexed tax system at that time—the United States still does not have one—increasing inflation and incomes that went up nominally with inflation but greater and greater pressures on the economy and the effective tax burden on Canadians went up. In 1967 the effective tax burden on Canadians was about 6 per cent. It went from 6 per cent to 16 per cent over a three-year period from 1967 to 1971, and perhaps 1972. A massive increase in tax burden took place. Governments here and elsewhere, knowing there was a serious problem, that inflation was growing and was starting to get out of control, took action to try to stop inflation and at the same time tried to offset the negative effects of taxation that were perceived to be too high. It was perceived not only by governments but by people. Investment was falling off. People were becoming displeased with the idea of paying higher and higher taxes.

From 1973-1974 on, we did many things. We had tax cuts year after year, budget after budget. We had cuts in taxation. We had indexation. We had all kinds of incentives put in the system. We had incentives to save and incentives to invest. That was the standard approach used by all western countries to try to overcome these fundamental problems of heavy taxation, inflation and reduced incentives. We found during that period, the last six, seven or eight years, both here and elsewhere, that the kinds of incentives we used were not producing benefits to Canadians, who were, after all, picking up the tax burden for government services in some other way if not being paid by those who were taking advantage of legitimate incentives, but the economic benefits coming back to the taxpayers, to society, from those incentives were less than the cost. Any businessman—and there are businessmen on this side and on the other side of the House—would be loath to invest dollars year after year in a venture where the returns were less than the dollar coming back, in other words, getting back less as the investor. Here the investor is a taxpayer. No one in his right mind would do that. Why does the opposition think that the government should go on year after year doing that? What the budget did was to take a fundamentally new tack, a new approach. It was to remove some of those incentives that were not working, achieving benefits, or giving back results. They were to be offset by reducing tax rates.

I have heard from the other side that this is a socialistic budget. What socialist has ever cut marginal tax rates? Socialists turn things around and raise marginal tax rates. They do not cut marginal tax rates. What socialist would cut marginal tax rates? That is anti-business.

In our society we have an extremely effective indexing system in all areas except in the capital and the corporate sector. The people who are really hammered by inflation are those in the corporate sector and the capital sector. If this were anti-business, why would the government care at all about inflation? Most people are not indexed against inflation. The capital sector is not. The sector that invests is not. That is why inflation is important if we are going to have growth, job creation and a good future in this country.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) had to be so negative in his tone. When he talked about the Saskatchewan budget being balanced because of resource revenue, I want to remind him that during the 1940s and 1950s when our province was very poor, Tommy Douglas had a balanced budget most of the time. It is also very unfortunate that the hon. member for Ottawa Centre said—and I think I have his words written down correctly—that we have a balanced budget because the money in Saskatchewan comes out of the pockets of every other province in this country. It is that kind of negative statement that creates a feeling of disunity and a feeling of negativism across the country toward the federal government and the party across the way. I just wish that the hon. member across the way could be as thoughtful and as positive and offer as much optimism in his speech as did the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and as did the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), a Progressive Conservative member. If more Members of Parliament would do that instead of playing little partisan games, then perhaps the respect of the people of Canada for this institution would be much higher.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: This afternoon I want to raise a couple of important issues that I believe should be changed. We should be taking a close look at them. We all know about the structural problems that we have. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap and others have mentioned the 8 per cent unemployment rate, the 11.5 per cent inflation rate and the very high interest rates. Structurally, we have an economy that is based on a branch plant mentality. We have branch plants of foreign-based transnational corporations in Canada that are basically producing many of the goods and services that we have.

If Samuel de Champlain were alive today, I suppose he would be very happy because back in 1608 when he established the first colonies in Quebec they were established to ship beaver pelts and furs to France from Canada. I suppose he would be very happy to know that we have graduated from beaver pelts to gas, oil, timber and coal. However, we are still exporting raw materials basically unfinished and importing finished goods from other parts of the world.

We have no leadership. We have no vision. We have Liberal members across the way criticizing us because we are talking about some hope and some optimism. We have an economy that is basically a tag-along-economy, tagging along with the United States and other parts of the world, literally shadowing the United States. In 1980, we began to see the consequences of this when we saw our unemployment rise and we witnessed $5.5 billion flowing out of Canada in dividends and profits to shareholders in other parts of the world. What I suggest, Mr. Speaker, is that we need a new Canada, we need a new vision of what we can do in this country. We have to give people some hope that we can rebuild and restructure our country in the way that the Japanese, the French and the Germans did after World War II when those countries were totally and absolutely destroyed. They rose from the ruins to build great industrial states which are stronger in terms of their economy today than Canada, the greatest country in the world in terms of resources, of educated people, and of the future. We are falling further and further behind. I think it is time our nation became a nation. It is time that Canada became Canadian. It is time we asserted our sovereignty, Canadianized our economy and put Canadians in control of their own destiny. It is time we allowed ordinary working people to make decisions over their own lives.

Because of time limitations, Mr. Speaker, I only want to refer today to one area where I think we need some really fundamental structural changes, the area of trade. I do so for the fundamental reason that about 30 per cent of our GNP is tied to trade. That means an awful lot in terms of the national economy and in terms of jobs, and in western Canada, where both I and the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap come from it is even higher than 30 per cent.

We have in this country, Mr. Speaker, a very small domestic market. Indeed, of the seven greatest trading nations in the world, we have the smallest domestic market. Since that is so, we must be a trading nation and we must become more competitive and more specialized in what we are doing. If you look at what has happened over the last few years in Canada, I would suggest to the House that I think we have become the boy scouts of international trade. As a result, we have become the doormat for many countries around the world. Look at what the Japanese said to the Minister of State for Trade (Mr. Lumley) in Tokyo just yesterday when he went there confident of negotiating a new deal under which we would restrict, to a certain degree, the importing of Japanese cars and we would have a new arrangment worked out. The Japanese have said no, and the minister's mission to Japan was a total failure.

In 1969, Mr. Speaker, Canada had 6 per cent of world trade; we now have 3.9 per cent. In 1972 we had 4 per cent of world trade in manufacturing; in 1979 we had 2.8 per cent. We had a deficit in 1970 in finished products of $2.5 billion; in 1981 it was $21 billion. My friend, the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap, referred to mining equipment and machinery. In 1980 our deficit there was $5.7 billion. In 1980 we had a deficit in automobiles, trucks, parts and aircraft of $4.2 billion. These statistics tell us that something is fundamentally wrong. I want to be very honest and say it is not exclusively the fault of the federal government. The government is the leader, the supreme court of the land, and I think it has to be number one in terms of responsibility. However, this also reflects on provincial governments, on our business community, indeed on our nation as a whole. Therefore, I think we will have to make sure that trade becomes a bigger priority in our country if we are to survive.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, 30 per cent of our GNP is tied to trade. That is evenly split between goods and services. If you look at some of the other leading nations of the world, you will find that they are much less dependent on trade. The United States and Japan depend on trade for only about 10 per cent or 15 per cent of their GNP at most. This is why I am concerned about the growing wave of protectionism in our world, because if that happens, as it did in the 1930s, we will be hit harder than almost any other country because we trade more than almost any other country. In addition, more of our trade is with the industrial world. In fact, less than 10 per cent of our trade is with the developing world. We trade very little with the Bangladeshs or Chinas of the world. We trade mainly with the United States, the European Common Market and Japan. However, the European Common Market, for example, has about 20 per cent of its trade with the developing world, the United States has more than one third and the Japanese have about one half. So what happens when the industrial giants start becoming more protectionist? What happens when the United States says that they have to protect their own producers, their own auto workers, their steelworkers, and their aircraft workers? Well, because we trade into that market, we will be the first nation to suffer the consequences of having an undiversified economy, one that is not owned and controlled by Canadians. We are going to be the first ones hurt.

So, Mr. Speaker, I say the time has come where we must make some pretty significant structural changes. We must say to Canadians that we can do better; we can do as the Japanese, Germans and French did after the Second World War. We can build a country to put Canadians to work, a country which will have enough money, security and productivity to clothe, house and provide good medical care for all of its citizens. We could build that future on our great resource base if we only processed and refined more of those resources before they leave this country and, Mr. Speaker, we can do that. We could build that great country of Canada if we started doing more manufacturing and processing in this country.

Mr. Wilson: You bring a tear to my eye.

Mr. Nystrom: We have an interjection here from the official finance critic of the Conservative Party. I am not sure if he was on the special committee on the National Trading Corporation or not—

Mr. Wilson: Not me.

Mr. Nystrom: —But there was a special committee and this is what they had to say about manufacturing:

> Your committee believes there is a potential for exporting roughly $10-14 billion worth of additional manufactured goods and capital projects, a figure that could mean increasing our exports by 15 per cent over present levels. Eight to twelve billion dollars worth of potential appears to lie with exporters who can be pushed to improve their export performance and with companies not now exporting who can be encouraged to become exporters. A further $1.5 billion to $2.5 billion in potential exports exists in the world market for capital projects. Canadian industry has the expertise and the experience to tackle larger capital projects in telecommunications, transportation, energy, pulp and paper, mining and civil works, such as highways and bridges.

That report, Mr. Speaker, says we can increase our manufacturing exports by some $10 billion to $14 billion with a little imagination and courage. I believe we should put our minds to doing just that. However, this afternoon, instead, we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) using his entire time in the House to attack and poke fun at my friend, the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap, for having the courage to come before this House and talk with an air of optimism and hope for the 1980s and 1990s. No wonder Canadians find this institution to be less and less relevant all the time.

I want to mention just one other problem in the area of trade which our country is going to have to address very quickly, and that is the whole area of high technology, the technological revolution. It is a revolution. I want to say to my fellow hon. members that it is here on us now. It is a massive revolution, and it will revolutionize the world. It is important that this House take a look at what is happening and make sure that that revolution becomes a people's revolution, and that we as Canadians control the computers, the robots and the microchips so that they not control us. It is important that we realize what is happening in the world because it is moving very quickly. When I look around us, I see that as a nation we are putting less money and research into development than the Italians and only slightly more than the Egyptians or people in Iceland or Ireland. Last year, for example, the federal government put some $93 million into high technology. The Japanese put about $2 billion into high technology.

• (1620)

In this country we have immensely high unemployment, yet we have a crying shortage of labour in specialized trade. To show this need I can take one into any part of Canada, including my province, where there is a shortage of specialized workers. Here in Ottawa one can go into the riding of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and see some of the computer shops and industries where there is a crying need for people with skills.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: However, in this country we are putting very few people into the technical schools and into electrical engineering colleges. Japan has five times our population. In 1981, they had 40 times as many people in electrical engineering schools. Therefore, what will happen? In ten or 20 years, who will build the hardware? Who will build the computers? Who will build the modern airplanes and farm machinery which require the new technology? Will it be the Japanese or will it be Canadians? Will it be the Americans, the French or the Canadians? I think the evidence is there that we are missing a boat. The Japanese, with half the population of the Americans, now have twice as many robots as the Americans. People in the industry say that by 1990 there will be a deficit of some $10 billion in computers alone in this country. With evidence like this, we will have to show some leadership in this House to ensure that we realize that this revolution is here, that we as Canadians will control it, that workers in our plants are being affected, such as people in the textile and footwear industry in Spadina who are involved in decision-making as to how this new technology will affect them.

We must be concerned about safety in the work place. We must discover whether there is low-level radiation is some cases, or whether some new video machines are dangerous to the health or difficult on the eyes. We have a lot of unanswered questions. It is very important that this government set up a task force or a committee of this House, or perhaps assign some more specific tasks to the minister responsible for technology in order to come up with some really leading and forward-looking suggestions in the whole area of high technology. Then in the future, when we have all of this technology which we will not be able to stop as it is here and coming, it will be humane, it will be there for people, it will help them. It will provide us all with more wealth, productivity and free time that we can use for the general good of our nation as a whole.

The other point I make is that I hope in the future we do not make the mistakes of the past. In the past we thought we could get along with a branch plant economy, that the General Motors of the world, the Exxons of the world, the General Electrics of the world, could establish a few plants in Canada and produce a few goods. However, I hope that as we move into something brand new and different, we as Canadians can have the initiative, the courage and the conviction to establish those industries in our country and to do those things ourselves. We are already good in a number of areas. We are good in telecommunications. For example, we participated in the construction of the space shuttle. We are good in many other areas. We should take the expertise we have, put some more funds into the area, and decide to really be one of the world leaders in this brand new and exciting era. At the same time, we should make sure that we involve the ordinary working people who produce the goods and services in some of the decision-making. In this country we have had much talk and rhetoric for years about political democracy. I think that as we enter this new era it becomes even more important that we start talking and devising plans for economic and industrial democracy so that the ordinary worker, farmer and small businessman has some real input over the direction of his life.

I have only a few minutes left in which to speak, but I believe these are some of the fundamental things we will have to consider in the area of trade. That is not the only area. We must look at many other areas. I hope this Parliament can become more relevant by discussing some of these matters in the future. I hope we can spend less time on name-calling and games-playing back and forth across the floor of the House. If we do that, perhaps we can build a better nation in this country and keep our country together, because more and more Canadians are losing faith in us and in this very nation. This last month in western Canada, for the first time in our history, we had the election of a separatist to the legislature of a province, the province of Alberta. I want to say that I do not think we should over-react. I do not think the press should over-react. However, on the other hand, it is very important that we understand that that separatist was elected because people are fundamentally unhappy with the lack of leadership and vision in this country. I hope we can learn from that that there are options.

There are alternatives. There is a new vision and a new way. I think that the people of Canada are looking at this institution to provide that leadership. We had better do it before it is too late and this country disintegrates.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is my very first occasion to enter a debate as a parliamentary secretary. I would like to say immediately to the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that I appreciate his motion. I think he has given us a very crucial question. I am indeed honoured to be able to take part in this discussion.

The main point I want to make today is that I believe inflation is the worst disease we have in our economy, and we must concentrate on combatting that disease. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made a very powerful and emotional statement right at the beginning of his speech in describing the fears of many of our fellow Canadians that our country is falling behind. I say in all honesty that I found the presentations given, both by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap, missed the point. We will indeed begin to fall behind if we do not exercise the kind of tough decision-making and self-restraint which our times call for. The very fears to which the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville referred will be self-fulfilling if we follow the course of action he laid out. I believe a clear example of this was given by one of my own constituents who came to see me at a mortgage meeting last fall. My constituents wanted to know why mortgage rates were so high. They complained about that fact. One particular constituent told me that she thought her life would be better as she got older and that it would not get harder. In a way, she was echoing the statement of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. She indicated to me that her family has a very high take-home pay. They have a camper truck and they take extensive vacations. They had a very big mortgage, and her husband had recently taken a bath on the stock market. In her judgment, the answer to those difficulties was to lower mortgage rates.

I understand the sentiment that she expressed to me. I understand her desire to have as much as she can and to maintain her living standard as high as she can. But in fact she was unwilling to go through a very simple economic exercise. In her life she simply had to start making a list of her priorities, instead of going after everything that she wants at once. The budget speech says exactly this, right at the beginning of page one, in somewhat less specific or less personal language. I think it is worth quoting here, because it puts the whole problem into perspective. It says:

> We are confronted by severe inflation and extremely high interest rates. Inflation and interest rates at their present levels are bringing economic growth to a standstill and creating grave inequities among Canadians. The impact of high interest rates on home owners, small businesses and farmers is visible and damaging. But high interest rates flow from high inflation and there can be no deep and lasting relief until inflation can be reduced. We cannot hope to insulate ourselves from interest rate policies in other countries unless our inflation rate is lower than theirs.

There is a growing conviction around the world that growth cannot be sustained if inflation is not sharply diminished. That is a very tough question, a very tough challenge, but it is one that we have to meet today.

Turn the coin over. What happens if we begin to do some of the things that were suggested to us in the debate today, if we begin to loosen up, if we ease back from our policy of restraint? Very simply, we will have more money chasing around the country, we will have more inflation, and that inflation will simply add, as the budget points out, to the very problem that we are attempting to solve.

Further on in the budget speech, at page 9, the minister said:

> Such a retreat . . . would damage our prospects for sustained economic growth in the future. I have been urged by some to worry less about inflation and minister to unemployment and growth. There are siren qualities to these entreaties that could well lead us onto the rocks.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding there seems to be a misunderstanding about the connection between some of these forces that work in the country. I would like to answer some of those misunderstandings. I would like to answer really three or four simple questions from my constituents. They ask me why we cannot lower the dollar. They ask why we cannot have a 75 per cent dollar; if we are stuck with the influence of American rates, why do we not set our rates free and let our dollar drop. Other constituents say that inflation is not important to them, that it is interest rates that are causing them harm, not inflation. There are other constituents again who, like the NDP, are arguing that we should beef up our economy again, put a real emphasis on growth, and get going.

Mr. Speaker, as you well know, our interest rates are tied both to the American interest rates and to our own rate of inflation. We know that if American rates drop drastically and our inflation does not drop, then our interest rates will stay up. We will be keeping them up all on our own. At the same time, if we are able to reduce our inflation, we will have at least some greater ammunition to fight with, if American rates stay high or go even higher. These are true facts, but they both point to the simple fact that Canada is part of a larger world, that that larger world is experiencing great trouble from inflation and high interest rates, and that we ourselves are experiencing that trouble as well.

The C.D. Howe Research Institute brought this fact out in its Policy Review and Outlook, 1982, saying:

> Inflation must be lowered in the short term. Failure to do so, in light of lower U.S. inflation, will result in a rapid loss of international competitiveness of Canadian exports . . . Lowering inflation is also a necessary precondition to ensuring robust economic growth in the longer term.

Mr. Tom Shoyama wrote, in the Policy Options magazine, Volume 3, March-April, an interesting article which I recommend to the NDP, entitled "The Economics of Gradual Improvement". He points out there:

> Clearly the overriding and most intractable problem has been the stubbornly high, persistent and seemingly uncontrollable rate of general price inflation.

Further on in the article, he says:

> —there is no doubt that they (interest rates) reflect the persistently high rates of inflation, and the entrenched expectations of continued inflation.

A little further on again he says:

> —the recent peaks (of interest rates) have represented quite unprecedented real rates. But the question is how and why it is that there remain borrowers both willing and able to pay these rates . . . The answer clearly lies in the psychology of a deeply entrenched inflation . . .

I think that the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) brought to our attention the most important fact, that we in this government have to defend the right not only of borrowers but of savers. We have to defend the rights of the whole economy. Why? We must remember that in this economy our interest rates will always sit above inflation. Over a short time we will find them below inflation, but in the long run borrowers will always pay a profit to lenders, borrowers will always pay an interest rate above the cost of living. Money must earn a profit, as the hon. member from Ottawa Centre pointed out. Money must have a rate of return above the cost of living.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding mortgages a few years ago were available for less than 12 per cent. It is common now to find mortgages that are being renewed from a 10 per cent rate up to 16 per cent, 17 per cent, 18 per cent. When those very low rates were made a few years ago, the lenders very quickly discovered that they were losing money, that they were locked into five-year mortgages at 10 per cent—and the cost of living went past that rate. Not only did it stay even with the mortgages but it went past them. In effect, therefore, the home owner was getting a real break from the lender. Today that point has turned over. The lender has learned his lesson from that. Today mortgages are available, only for a much shorter term. I understand that there is only one bank now that offers five-year mortgages. They are not only shorter, but they are much more expensive. People renewing their mortgages are finding that they are going from a situation where they had a profit at the expense of the lender to a situation, a more traditional one, where the lender again is earning a return on his money. It is obviously in the interest of both the lender and the borrower, it is obviously in both their interests, to get the rate down. The lender will still make a proper and traditional profit, the borrower will have his money available at a much cheaper rate. Both of them will profit if the rate comes down; and the rate will come down only if the cost of living comes down, if the inflation rate comes down.

The second part of this issue is the great influence of American rates on our own experience. Of course, recently, American rates have been very, very volatile. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) indicated that he thought that American rates were lower than ours. In fact, American rates are much higher. The prime rate in both countries is 16.5 per cent, but in our country the real rate of interest is around 4.5 to 5 per cent, whereas in the United States the real rate of interest is 6 per cent. There is no sign that American rates are going to relax. There is every sign that these rates are going to react on ours and that lenders will be influenced by the high level of U.S. rates.

Our friends in the NDP indicated earlier that they thought that exchange rates would work. The hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) made a very telling point when he told the story about a mother living in Arizona wanting more money out of someone in Canada so that the NDP member would soon be coming to the government asking for an exception on behalf of his mother. That is exactly what would happen politically. Economically though, such a scheme simply would not work.

I refer anyone who is interested in a somewhat impartial way in this to read the article "Can we have made-in-Canada interest rates?" by R. B. Bryce in the February 1982 Choice Magazine. Mr. Bryce points out:

> Canada has a highly developed capital market, open to capital markets elsewhere in the world without any, serious restraints . . . it is particularly closely related to the huge and open capital market in the United States.

If we were to set up exchange controls as some so quickly and easily suggest, the leaks and sieves would become obvious immediately. It is simply too easy for Canadian investors and lenders to go into the United States and take advantage of rates there. We have seen it time and again over the past two years. Whenever our own rates fall slightly lower than the American rate, pressure begins to develop on the Canadian dollar. We must never make the mistake of assuming, as Mr Bryce points out, that exchange controls can be offered in an easy or flippant fashion. The country is simply too integrated with the general North American capital market.

The other answer that many people put forward to answer this close interdependence in the American market is to let our dollar drop, in effect to devaluate our dollar. As I pointed out, people in my riding have asked, why not let the dollar go down to 75 cents, why hold it at 80 cents? There is no magic in the 82-cent figure or 80 or 85. There is equally no magic in the 75 cent number. People who put that idea forward with such great ease forget there is no guarantee that the Canadian dollar would stop once it hit the desired target of 75 cents. If we then found that out, how would we get it to stop as it continued to drop?

People also forget when they put forward this option that when the Canadian dollar is at 82 cents, it has already gone through this kind of devaluation. We experienced that over the past few years. The supposed benefits we were to experience with our exports are already in place. What we now have to do is to take advantage of those benefits and at the same time stop looking for excuses and stop trying to get another round of devaluation. Instead, we must look at our own economy and solve some of the problems in it.

Some of those solutions are here and in place. I refer my friend from Kamloops-Shuswap to the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the first ministers' conference on February 4. On page 5 of the document which I obtained from his office, he says:

> Experience both here and elsewhere has shown us that you cannot have real, long-term economic development, or generate lasting employment, unless you are first prepared to deal with the problems like inflation which stand in their way.

I want to emphasize the next point made by the Prime Minister:

> There is no avoiding the requirements of self-discipline.

That is the point in our economy today, not the search for quick answers such as a lower dollar or exchange controls or some other externally applied solution. Today we heard some of the answers put forward by the NDP. They were well thought out. The difference I have with them is in timing. We are not going to change our economy in the basic structural way that they indicate quickly enough to be able to answer the immediate problems of home owners or businessmen in my riding or in theirs. Indeed, it becomes somewhat of a self delusion to look only at those answers. By looking at them, we begin to see magic solutions instead of the kind of self-discipline that the Prime Minister has described.

If we are going to attack inflation, we will follow the kind of answers given to us by my predecessor, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre in his earlier speech. I welcome the kind of advice we have heard from the NDP on this matter, that we must continue to look for ways to cushion the most vulnerable people without destroying that sense of self-discipline and that sense of creating economic priorities. We need to create those priorities. We also need to find ways to protect the most vulnerable people.

We again saw a difference between their party and ours today when the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) asked the Minister of Housing (Mr. Cosgrove) what he would do about current mortgage rates. The leader of the NDP wanted a policy that would apply to everyone. The Minister of Housing repeatedly stressed to him the importance of targeting, setting priorities and helping the most vulnerable.

The Minister of Housing is right. We should provide a sensitive program to help people genuinely in need and not give in to the temptation to provide a universal mortgage program. We heard from the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: I just want to make a couple of quick points. We heard from the hon. member for Laurier today about some of the activities being carried out to help small businesses and to assist in job creation. Those are important points. They too target through programs like ILAP, or some of the efforts undertaken in the forestry industry and so on. Those are targeted, not universal projects. Today the country cannot afford vast, universal projects.

We are looking for the middle of the road. We are looking for long-term strength, self-discipline and creating confidence to show we are genuinely serious in our fights against inflation.

As the hon. member for Ottawa Centre said, we need both monetary and fiscal restraint. We need solid answers and self-discipline rather than the sort of magic we heard about earlier. Moving though those magic ideas are, they are no longer appropriate in a tough world where we cannot have everything, where we must make a list and set priorities.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in the very few minutes remaining to me, I want to congratulate the new Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) on his excellent maiden speech in that capacity. He has a very difficult job. I certainly would not want the job of supporting the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). In all likelihood he is going to end up burned out, washed up, just like the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) whom he so recently replaced.

• (1650)

To get back to the motion before us today, I have read it through with some interest. It is divided into two parts. The first part concerns itself with interest rates, and the second concerns itself with what is billed as a new employment option. I do not really know what that is supposed to mean. I suspect it is one of those terms such as "the just society," "made-in-Canada oil prices," "blended oil prices," or something like "the national energy policy."

Mr. Althouse: "Short-term pain for long-term gain".

Mr. Nickerson: It is a handy little catch phrase, and hon. members can go around the country giving speeches and saying, "What we want is a new employment option". However, they are not really obliged to say what that means. We all remember "the just society" and what happened to that. We remember "blended oil prices" and what that really meant. We remember the "made-in-Canada oil prices." What that really means is that we are moving up to 75 per cent of the world price. It is a catch phrase which does not mean anything. I hope that at some time our socialist friends will explain exactly what they mean and what the implications will be for Canadians. I doubt very much if they ever will—and I hope they do not—but in the very unlikely event the NDP is ever saddled with forming a government, Canadians will want to know in detail beforehand what members of the New Democratic Party mean. And Canadians do not want to get caught in a new "blended oil price".

Getting back to the main topic today, that of interest rates, in the past few days two differing views as to what should be done about interest rates have been explained to us. One view is that of the Liberal Party, and the second is that of the New Democratic Party. The New Democratic Party's suggestions have been criticized this afternoon by the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance as being naive. I think I would go even further than that and describe them as childish in their simplicity. The idea is that the Minister of Finance can pick up the telephone and tell the Governor of the Bank of Canada to reduce interest rates, and that will have solved the problem. Perhaps great speeches on this subject can be made in Saskatoon or Regina, but it is not really a viable option. We must consider the consequences.

Mr. Riis: What is your option?

Mr. Nickerson: I am going to get around to what my option is.

Mr. Riis: You have only seven minutes left.

Mr. Nickerson: I will tell the hon. member what my option is, but let me first deal with the consequences of doing this, unless it is thought all the way through. Money will end up being drained from the country. That will be the first consequence, unless something else can be done at the same time. Exchange controls would have to be imposed.

Mr. Riis: Is that the best you guys can do?

Mr. Nickerson: The people of Canada would have to be told they cannot go to Disneyland for their holidays.

Mr. Riis: Offer a solution.

Mr. Nickerson: There is no point in saying that if we are going to have exchange controls we can put the burden on the banks and big companies. That would not work either. It is the little guy who would be saddled with exchange controls, if we were to take the naive and simplistic view of the NDP.

Mr. Riis: Six minutes left.

Mr. Nickerson: On the other hand we have the Liberal presentation. What the Liberals do is to throw up their hands in disgust and say there is nothing they can do about this, it is a worldwide problem, it is caused by the United States of America, it is in every other country of the world, there is nothing they can do about it and all they can do is keep our interest rates several percentage points higher than those of other countries in order to attract money into this country.

I do not think either of those views make a great deal of sense. It is true that Canada is tied into the international finance system and that we do not have a fantastic amount of leeway. We cannot have interest rates of 2.5 per cent or 3 per cent in this country when they are 15 per cent in the United States. We cannot go that far but, in my opinion, if we play our cards right there is a fair amount of leeway. We can have reduced rates in this country. We have seen them in Switzerland and Japan, and we could have them without recourse to exchange controls.

Mr. Riis: How?

Mr. Nickerson: As one of the hon. members who spoke previously said, we probably cannot reduce interest rates significantly below the rate of inflation. That would be unfair to lenders, especially in view of the high tax rates on interest in effect today. However, we have to make Canada a good place to invest.

Mr. Riis: How do you do that?

Mr. Nickerson: We have to make people want to put money into Canada, whether they be Canadian citizens or citizens of other countries.

Mr. Riis: That is your preference, isn't it, citizens of other countries?

Mr. Nickerson: If people wanted to put money into Canada and if Canadians wanted to invest in their own country—and if they could do that with confidence, which they certainly cannot do right now—that would automatically bring interest rates down. It is a matter of supply and demand. If people are to put money in, there will have to be lower interest rates than those in effect at present. People would accept such rates. Right now we have to accept excessively high interest rates in Canada in order to attract money which does not really want to come here but would really rather go some place else.

Mr. Riis: Do you support high interest rates?

Mr. Nickerson: There are many, many Canadians who do not invest in their own country because of a lack of confidence. They lack confidence for good reason, and they prefer to send their money abroad. That is what many people are doing, and that is why we have to have high interest rates. We have to have them to keep money here.

Mr. Riis: That is what you advocate, right? You advocate high interest rates and the continuation of the policy?

Mr. Nickerson: I wish the gentleman to my left would not keep making unnecessary remarks, because he knows full well—

Mr. Riis: Three minutes left.

Mr. Nickerson: —that the policy of the Conservative Party is to maintain relatively low interest rates. He saw that when we were in office. The highest interest rate during our term was 14 per cent, and look what we have now.

Mr. Riis: You raised them four times in nine months.

Mr. Nickerson: Another thing we can do to decrease interest rates for the farmer in this country who has to borrow, and for the home owner who has to renew his mortgage, is to decrease the amount of government borrowing.

Mr. Evans: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: How can the home owner compete for limited funds with the Government of Canada or the government of a province? He cannot. The Government of Canada obviously has an A-1 credit rating. It is borrowing money at interest rates lower than those generally obtainable on the market, and a person who has to renew his mortgage obviously has to compete against the government and bid higher for the limited funds available. The soundness of government borrowing also has an influence on rates government has to pay and, as a consequence, the rates other people, businesses and home owners have to pay.

We can see that the majority of funds borrowed by governments in Canada—because it is not just the federal government which is to blame—are used for current account purposes. It is used for paying interest on existing debt. They are not being used for the purposes of building capital assets in the country, and when a lender sees that that is the use to which his funds are being put, he will have certain reservations about the ability of the borrower to pay back that money at some point in time. The risk factor is increased, so the rate of interest is increased, and the rate for those people who are in competition with the government for the borrowing of funds also increases.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 5 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) proceedings on the motion have expired.

APPLICATION OF FREIGHT RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, as is usual on the first sitting of the House following the first day of spring, I rise to invite all hon. members to enjoy the evidences of spring symbolized by the daffodils from Esquimalt-Saanich available in the lobbies, and to seek their support in favour of this motion, which is seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this House urge the government, in close consultation with the Horticultural Council of Canada and other producer spokesmen, to ensure that Canadian producers of flowers, vegetables, fruits, fish and other natural products shall not be forever disadvantaged as they now are by the preferential freight rates, particularly air freight rates, accorded by their governments or national airlines to some offshore suppliers of these products to the Canadian market.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, earlier this month an article in the American Wall Street Journal revealed that last year the Canadian government spent $58 million on advertising itself. This level of expenditure placed the government not only as the number one advertiser in Canada, higher than General Foods, but at the top of a list of all western nations, including the United States, based upon the percentage of each nation's total advertising spending. This leads me to move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this government immediately cease these costly, self-aggrandizement programs and use the millions of dollars saved to provide urgent and much needed assistance to the thousands of Canadians who have lost or are losing their jobs, their homes, their farms and their businesses.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ASTRA TRUST

DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, an interim distribution of the assets of the federally incorporated Astra Trust Company is now under way with the federal government receiving almost 92 per cent of the proceeds. In these hard-pressed times when the government is already gleefully taxing away the retirement savings of people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the government first look after Canadian investors who have lost their savings in this fiasco, rather than scratch and claw its way through the courts to claim a lion's share of the Astra Trust pie.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY

ALLEGED CAVALIER ATTITUDE OF MINISTER CONCERNING PROBLEMS RAISED BY QUEBEC LIBERALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas a resolution proposed by Quebec Liberal delegates at a convention in Trois-Rivières on the week-end, asking the government to make a 25 per cent cut in interest rates for farmers, small businesses and property owners was headed off as a result of action taken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House censure the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for his cavalier attitude to problems raised by militant Liberals from Quebec.

Madam Speaker: Order, please! This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

BANKS AND BANKING

MORTGAGE LENDING PRACTICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, some of the banks today are charging compound interest on long-term loans on homes and land. As a result a person, after paying interest for a number of years, finds that he owes almost as much as he owed in the beginning and, in some cases, a little more. This is most unfair and actually is worse than piracy on the high seas. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the government investigate this practice immediately with a view to stopping this robbery of our people.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORTS

BASKETBALL TITLES WON BY UNIVERSITY OF VICTORIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas on Saturday, March 20, the Victoria Vikings won, for an unprecedented third consecutive time, the Canadian interuniversity athletic union men's basketball title with a 74-60 victory over St. Mary's Huskies of Halifax, and whereas the University of Victoria women's team, the Vikettes, earlier this month also captured, for the third consecutive time, the women's national title, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the House send a message of congratulations to the Victoria Vikings and the Victoria Vikettes and their coaches, Mr. and Mrs. Ken and Kathy Shields.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

CALL FOR REPLACEMENT OF MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has obdurately maintained that his harsh budgetary and tax measures were necessary to control inflation, and whereas latest figures show that this policy is not working and that inflation continues to run rampant, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the Minister of Finance now recognize the futility of his policies and that, on failing to do so, he be replaced by the Minister of State, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or the Solicitor General.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provision of Standing Order 43. In light of the dramatic escalation of the nuclear arms race; in light, particularly, of the development and planned deployment of the Cruise missile, a new weapon with great sophistication, accuracy, undetectability and potential "first strike" use; in light of the fact that two of our five NATO partners that have been asked to base these missiles within their borders have so far refused to agree; and in light of the need both to suffocate the nuclear arms race and prevent the Soviet Union from seeking a weapon equivalent to the Cruise missile, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House endorse the Prime Minister's strategy of nuclear suffocation as presented to the United Nations in 1978, take note of the refusal of two NATO partners, the Netherlands and Belgium, to have the Cruise missile deployed on their soil, and urge that Canada, in the interest of freezing the nuclear arms race, refuse to allow the testing of this new generation of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DISCUSS INTEREST RATES WITH CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Whereas present interest rates set by the government through the Bank of Canada are creating tremendous problems for Canadians, and especially for farmers, small and medium-sized businesses and home owners and renters; whereas the adoption of a resolution in favour of reducing interest rates, moved by the member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois), was rejected by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) last Saturday at a convention of the Quebec wing of the Liberal Party of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the entire cabinet spend some time with Canadians across the country to see for themselves the disastrous effects of their high interest rate policy.

RAILWAYS

NECESSITY FOR COMMUTER RAIL SERVICE IN LOWER MAINLAND OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. There is an urgent need for commuter rail service to begin in the B.C. lower mainland as soon as possible. One impediment to establishing this important transportation alternative is the reported demand by CPR for $30 million to be used for track upgrading. Since the upgraded trackage will be used more for freight than for commuter trains, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That the Minister of Transport advise the CPR that he condemns this latest attempt by CP to hold Canadians up to ransom, and further that the minister direct the railway to permit commuter access at a cost no greater than that charged to VIA under the CTC costing regulations.

IMPUTED RENTAL INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The proposed budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is a cruel hoax perpetrated on the Canadian people. Nowhere is this more evident than the outrageous suggestion by this finance minister that home owners may be taxed on the imputed rental value of their own homes. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the government withdraw immediately this Damoclean sword hanging over the heads of Canadian home owners.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

APPLICATION OF STANDARDS TO MINISTERS AND PUBLIC SERVANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns that most basic of freedoms, freedom of speech in Canada. The Liberal government has a double standard, one for the Joyals, the Bégins, and the Kaplans, and another for the Neil Frasers. Cabinet ministers enjoy selective immunity while public servants are punished for their candidness. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the government be reprimanded for violating its own charter of rights in denying Neil Fraser his most basic freedom while allowing its own members off the hook, at the same time retaining their jobs.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS IN PARTS MANUFACTURING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who will be aware that, according to figures published today, 38 per cent of employees in the Canadian auto parts industry are unemployed. This industry is not experiencing a recession for its workers; it is a new depression. What exactly does the minister propose to do about this economic and social disgrace?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we have already taken a number of substantial steps to help deal with the situation even though the problem is linked with the fact that some 80 per cent of our production is exported to the United States, and they are in a major recession.

However, just a few weeks ago we instituted a new program to provide $25 million over the next two years to the auto parts industry to help firms take advantage of new productive opportunities. We have also taken steps to restructure and help continue in operation companies like Chrysler, and Ford in Oakville, which provide important outlets for the production of independent Canadian auto parts manufacturers. So we have taken important steps, and we are going to be taking other steps in the future.

CANADIAN SHARE OF UNITED STATES MARKET

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I draw to the minister's attention that the result of these steps so far has been that 38 out of every 100 auto parts workers are out of a job. Fifteen years ago Canada accounted for 75 per cent of American imports of auto parts; today that that figure is 38 per cent. Under the auto pact our share of the U.S. market has been cut in half and the result, of course, is the human and economic misery which is the by-product of thousands of lost jobs. Is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce content that these jobs be lost permanently and, if not, precisely what does he propose to do to recapture a reasonable share of that market?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I am glad my hon. friend has confirmed the importance of the United States market to Canadian auto parts and vehicles, and I want to repeat that there is no question that the severe recession in the United States and the resulting downturn in the market for automobiles has hurt the opportunities for employment of Canadian auto parts workers. We certainly want to see their economy recover, but certainly their economic policy is not something under our control.

An hon. Member: Thank God.

Mr. Broadbent: That is why they are doing well.

Mr. Gray: But we are continuing to work to make sure that, through the auto pact, we continue to have fair access to that market. We are going to continue our consultations with the United States authorities to deal with problem areas we have seen emerge under that pact, so that we continue to have our present and hopefully increasing access to that key market for Canadian auto parts companies and workers.

EFFECT OF CHANGE IN CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, conditions in the United States have absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with the percentage of that market that Canadians get. That the pie is reduced has nothing to do with the share of the pie that Canadians get.

Let me go to the new automobile manufacturing industry where thousands of jobs have also been lost in places like Windsor, Stratford, and dozens of other communities across Canada, as a direct result of the change in the capital cost allowance provisions in last November's budget. Can the minister explain, if he knew beforehand, why he would permit this provision to be included, knowing full well that it will dramatically reduce the number of new car sales in an industry which is more depressed now than it ever has been since World War II, and if he did not know beforehand, does he now support that provision which is costing thousands of Canadians their jobs in order to provide this government with additional tax revenues? In other words, Madam speaker, is he content to justify this federal tax grab on the backs of thousands of unemployed Canadian auto workers?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not accept the premise of my hon. friend's question. We on this side have voted—and the majority of the House has voted—to support the budgetary proposals of the Minister of Finance.

I know something more important when it comes to the reality of new investment in the industry, and that is that last week the president of Chrysler Corporation announced that Chrysler was beginning an expansion program for its plants in Windsor, leading to an investment of about half a billion dollars. This is as a result of the action taken by this government in its restructuring agreement with Chrysler.

Just a few weeks earlier, through an initiative by this government, Volkswagen announced it was opening a plant at Barrie and, in addition, sourcing $150 million of parts from independent Canadian parts producers, aimed at bringing some 1,500 new jobs to that important sector. My hon. friend is spinning around. We are taking concrete action in support of maintaining and creating jobs for Canadian auto workers.

Mr. Jarvis: Tell that to the unemployed, Herb.

REQUEST FOR RENEGOTIATION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. I want to assure him that hon. members on all sides of the House know the importance of the American market, but our share should be bigger.

During the last 17 years since the auto pact was signed we have built up a $20 billion surplus in vehicle assembly, but also an incredible $35 billion deficit in automotive parts, and that is where most jobs are. Studies undertaken by the province of Ontario have indicated that if Canada had a fair share of both the parts and the assembly business in the automotive trade, our fair share would result in an additional 25,000 jobs. An additional 25,000 workers would now be employed. Is the minister sufficiently committed to Canadian jobs for Canadians that he will negotiate a fair share clause in the auto trade agreement?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, there has been a substantial increase in employment in the auto parts sector in Canada since the auto pact began. If I am not mistaken, there has been about a doubling of employment in that sector since 1965 when the pact went into operation. At the same time, there is no doubt that while there has been a tremendous increase in investment and production in the Canadian auto parts sector since the pact began, as well as a tremendous increase in exports of auto parts, this deficit situation my hon. friend has mentioned definitely exists, and that is why we have begun consultations with American authorities about problem areas we see connected with the auto pact, and why we intend to continue these consultations actively to bring about solutions in problem areas such as the deficit on auto parts.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I wonder how I can tell the additional 1,100 persons who were laid off in St. Catharines this morning that the minister has increased employment in the automotive industry. The minister knows that the automotive parts industry is in difficulty because of the policy of his government respecting the importation of motor vehicles and the $15 billion deficit in the auto trade agreement. Is the minister prepared to stand idly by and watch the automobile business disappear just as the electronic business disappeared, and let imports come into this country without even so much as a single Canadian bolt in them?

Mr. Taylor: All he will do is talk about it.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, in spite of the lay-offs about which the hon. member is talking I think it is a fact that the over-all number of people working in the auto parts sector in Canada is substantially higher than the number working in that sector when the auto pact began. At the same time, in recent months and years we have taken a number of substantive steps aimed at strengthening employment opportunities in the auto parts sector.

I have mentioned the Volkswagen agreement. I have mentioned the programs to strengthen Chrysler and Ford in Oakville. I have mentioned the $25 million auto parts investment program. I have also just mentioned our discussions with the Americans. My colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, has also been carrying on discussions with the Japanese. Those discussions obviously must be actively pursued, but we are certainly committed to maintaining and continuing efforts to have strong employment levels in the auto parts sector. I think we have taken very strong action in the past, and we will continue to do so in the future.

TRADE

NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPANESE GOVERNMENT ON EXPORTATION OF AUTOMOBILES TO CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but before asking it I would like to say that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce should know very well that in spite of his rhetoric our imbalance in trade in automotive parts is worse now than it was before the auto pact came into being.

• (1425)

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs this question, following the statement made in Japan by the minister of trade, prior to the weekend, that he was not concerned even though his proposal for increasing Canadian content in Japanese-produced vehicles was turned down flat, and seeing that the import agreement negotiated between Canada and Japan terminates within a week, and that it did not bother the Minister of State for International Trade that nothing was put in its place. Considering this, and considering that the Japanese increased their sales in the Canadian market, obtaining a 54 per cent increase in one year, is the minister himself more concerned than the Minister of State for International Trade, and can he give us one concrete achievement that was negotiated with the Japanese last week?

Mr. Deans: Or even last year?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State responsible for international trade and I take exactly the same position.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: Obviously, it is precisely because we are concerned about the content of the possible arrangement with the Japanese that we have not come to an agreement at this point. We regard the negotiations as continuing, and they will be continuing soon with officials, and probably subsequently again with ministers.

We do not regard the date of April 1 as being of great importance. You will recall that last year the agreement for the year beginning April 1 was reached only in June. Since the Japanese are not disputing whether or not there will be an agreement but what the contents of the agreement will be, we do not deem it to be a matter of great concern whether we reach the agreement by April 1 or not. We are confident that when an agreement is reached it will begin on April 1, and since it will be a year-long agreement, the shipping of automobiles in the early months will, of course, be taken into account in the over-all figures for the year.

CANADIAN CONTENT IN IMPORTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I remind the minister that the agreement we got last year was supposed to achieve a 4 per cent reduction in imports from Japan, and as a result of the brilliant negotiations conducted by the Liberals it resulted in a 54 per cent increase.

We are a little concerned on this side of the House, I can tell the minister. Can he tell us why it is the case that Brazil has a 95 per cent Brazilian content requirement for foreign automotive companies; that Mexico has a 50 per cent Mexican content requirement for automotive companies; that Australia has an 85 per cent Australian content requirement for companies operating there; and why it is that these countries which are concerned about their industrial future can obtain these objectives when the Canadian government obtains absolutely nothing?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would not really ask me to comment—

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. MacGuigan: —to comment on the policies of other countries.

An hon. Member: Poland?

Mr. MacGuigan: It is true that we have—

An hon. Member: You do it every other time.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is true that we have not reached agreement with the Japanese up to this point for the next year. The reason we have not is precisely that we are not satisfied with the kind of arrangement which is available and we are negotiating for a better arrangement. I want to assure the hon. member that we will make the best arrangement which is possible with the Japanese, and I would also remind him of the fact that we have a favourable balance of trade with Japan.

JAPANESE TARIFF ON CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the more than 30,000 laid-off automotive workers will find a lot of reassurance in that answer from the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to switch to a different part of the country also involved in the trade negotiations that are going on in Japan. Right now in British Columbia there are 30 per cent of the workers in the lumber business who are unemployed. Many of them could be at work producing finished lumber for export, in part going to Japan, if it were not for a Japanese 10 per cent tariff which in effect keeps it from coming into the country. How can the government account for its failure in this area? Why could it not get that 10 per cent barrier removed entirely, or substantially reduced, so that some of these British Columbia workers could be put back to work? Finally, when is the government going to come to grips with producing a manufacturing strategy for Canada instead of perpetuating its resource sell-out strategy?

• (1430)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for making my case. The fact is that our negotiations with Japan do not concern only the automotive industry, although that is a very important part of our negotiations with the Japanese. They concern other products such as the white woods of British Columbia, which he mentions. My colleague was negotiating on those subjects as well with the Japanese.

Mr. Broadbent: He lost that as well.

Mr. MacGuigan: We have not lost anything. We are negotiating with the Japanese.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF INDIAN WOMEN MARRYING NON-NATIVES

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She has lost so much weight lately, I am not sure she is in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Greenaway: My question concerns the situation where Indian women marry non-natives and lose their status. I notice in the March 12 edition of the Vancouver Province that the minister had been speaking to the Women's Network in Vancouver. I will read part of one sentence where she said:

—the fact that no Indian woman has lost her status rights by marrying a non-Indian since she was first appointed a minister in 1976.

I thought that was a rather interesting statement. We telephoned the Department of Indian Affairs. In the four years from 1976 to 1979, 1,792 women in Canada lost their status for this very reason. Can the minister clarify this statement for us?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): With pleasure, Madam Speaker, because it is a very important matter. The hon. member has made innuendoes that are not acceptable, beginning with a false quotation which I would like him to check and correct. What I said and repeat to the House, and it can be confirmed by my women colleagues in cabinet in particular, is that in the past five or six years the members of the special committee of council, which is the committee that must approve in order that such loss of status can be enforced, has not approved them while I was a member. I understand it is continuing to do the same. In fact 41 women have been reinstated in the recent past as far as their status is concerned. The hon. member should state the complete situation.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S SPEECH

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I anticipated that the minister would probably say I had not given her the facts. I have a copy of the speech she gave on March 5. I quote from page 9:

> Well, I will tell you that since 1976, when I was first appointed minister . . . no Indian woman has lost her status as an Indian.

That is her speech. The same thing was reported in the paper. The minister is telling me I do not have the facts. Last year she told me I did not have the facts when I told her there was tuberculosis in northern Quebec. There is still tuberculosis in northern Quebec. I would ask her to clarify the statement once more for the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I must say that the hon. member's questions are among the most dangerous ones I have ever heard in the House, because of their distortion of the facts. Last year, the hon. member did not say there were cases of tuberculosis, because everyone was aware of this, and we are trying to deal with it. He said that people had died. He is not playing fair ball, and today, he is still distorting the facts. I am going to repeat what I said before. I could even send him a tape. I repeat, for his sake, that the special committee of council and the cabinet committee that has to approve the procedures to which he is referring and which are carried out in the department, did not approve them.

TRADE

SALES OF LUMBER TO UNITED STATES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Whereas employees in over three quarters of the lumber mills in the Atlantic provinces are out of work because of the loss of Canadian and American markets, and in view of the recent upturn in housing starts in the United States, what measures is the minister taking to promote sales of Canadian lumber in the United States and Canada? Specifically, has he recommended a reduction in the federal sales tax on building materials as it relates to lumber, to the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for me to comment here on the range of comments or advice I may give from time to time to the Minister of Finance or that he may give to me from time to time.

The hon. member raises an important point when he says there has been some upturn in housing in the United States. This is a factor that should lead to some improvement in the situation involving sawmills in his province and elsewhere in Canada. In the light of this upturn, our trade commissioners and our offices across the United States will continue and hopefully intensify their efforts to make sure that the good qualities of Canadian lumber are kept in mind by American home builders. I am sure this is the case not only with our efforts in the United States but in other important markets as well.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

LOCATION OF INDUSTRIES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. I suggest to the minister that the range and value of the federal instruments used to promote an economic catch-up have obviously not been equal to the task. I would urge him to explore some further measures along the lines I have suggested to the Minister of Finance.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is currently engaged in an expensive media advertising campaign to pat itself on the back for the past glories of DREE before it was dismantled. Instead of using the campaign for self-praise, will the minister use the campaign to encourage industries to locate in the Atlantic provinces, promote the purposes of his programs, and advise Canadian firms across Canada, not just in the Atlantic provinces, how they can obtain incentives and of the real benefits to locating in this most attractive part of Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend's question and the premises in it explain why this relatively limited information program is required. DREE has not been dismantled. It is very much in business providing its very worth-while programs to Atlantic Canada and similar regions across our country. Instead of being dismantled, it will eventually be integrated with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to form a larger, even stronger and more active department of regional industrial expansion.

One of the objectives of this information program is to remind those who have made use of the department's service, and others who may make use of it, of the very strong incentives available and of the very important success stories that have already come to a number of firms in Atlantic Canada because of these programs. Therefore, they should think further of making use of these incentives for the kinds of purposes mentioned by my hon. friend.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR COMPANIES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have already sent a letter to the minister regarding two important maritime companies. This was over a month ago, and the minister has not yet answered. Now that he has been made aware of the need for rail car orders for Hawker Siddeley in Trenton, N.S. and orders for rails from the CNR for the Sydney Steel Corporation, what are the prospects for immediate help for these two important corporations which are so important to the Nova Scotia economy and to the communities concerned? I know that CN has given its usual 88,000-tonne order to SYSCO, but this is just a continuation of past ordering practice. What new incentives of the type the minister talks about is he prepared to give to these two companies which have already had so much assistance from the taxpayers?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, if my recollection is correct, the bids from the steel car manufacturing companies in Canada, including the Hawker Siddeley company, were received by the Department of Transport around March 8. They are being actively evaluated with the assistance of my officials. I would anticipate that the results would certainly be to recognize the very good capacities for manufacturing in the firms my hon. friend mentioned.

SHIPBUILDING

MEASURES TO CANADIANIZE INDUSTRY

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, the minister must also be concerned about the fact that PetroCan is in the process of chartering offshore supply vessels built by the Hyundai shipyards in Korea while east coast shipyards need a great deal of help. What steps is the minister going to take in connection with his important portfolio, and in connection with his cabinet colleagues, to Canadianize not just the energy sector of our economy but also a little bit of our shipbuilding capacity?

• (1440)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, Petro-Canada, if I am not mistaken, has recently placed a contract for a supply vessel with the Saint John shipyard in New Brunswick, and as part of our industrial benefits policy we want to make sure that all companies, including Crown companies, are aware of the importance of providing a full and fair opportunity to Canadian suppliers on a competitive basis, including Canadian shipyards.

We are reviewing a number of options at the present time to make this existing policy which we announced at the end of August even more effective, and the point raised by the hon. member is certainly very much part of our concern and part of our ongoing policy.

BANK OF CANADA

MONETARY POLICY ADVOCATED BY GOVERNOR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, last Friday the Governor of the Bank of Canada handed down his sentence to the people of Canada by indicating that he was not prepared to relent from his tight-money and high interest rate policy. This policy has been in effect since 1975, and the Governor himself has acknowledged that inflation remains at the same level today as it did in 1975.

Will the Minister of Finance continue to allow the Governor of the Bank of Canada to tighten the screws even further into the Canadian economy as a result of his present monetary policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I had an opportunity on Friday to deal more extensively with the view of the hon. member which has been so frequently expressed by members of his party, that inflation really is not a matter which should be taken into account and causes no cost to the economy. That view which is so frequently expressed by the members of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Deans: That is quite untrue.

Mr. MacEachen: —puts us miles apart. Therefore I do not know how it would be possible for me, if that is the view of the New Democratic Party, to justify to him the necessity of controlling the money supply in circumstances of an anti-inflationary program.

Mr. Riis: That accusation is absolutely untrue. This party has never taken that position.

MINISTER'S POSITION ON POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that we are deep into a recession and falling deeper all the time as a result of the present monetary policy. How many Canadians must be unemployed, how many businesses must go bankrupt, how many personal bankruptcies must be filed, how many businesses must go into receivership, how many farms must go into bankruptcy, how many cattlemen will have to sell their herds at fire sale prices—what is the minister's bottom line before he admits that this policy is inappropriate, and when will he start listening to the people of Canada and not to the Governor of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party had an opportunity on Friday to lay before the country their policy to fight inflation.

An hon. Member: Give us the bottom line.

Mr. MacEachen: The fact of the matter is that they have no concern about inflation. They do not care about inflation.

Mr. Deans: That is not true.

Mr. MacEachen: They are prepared to see prices rise even further, because every policy that they recommend would lead to higher prices, more inflation, and higher interest rates.

Mr. Deans: No. Lower inflation.

Mr. MacEachen: That would be the result of their policy. It is time that the people of Canada understood how careless the NDP is about high prices. They do not care about that phenomenon in our economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TOURISM

IMPACT OF MERGER OF TRAVEL AGENCIES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses and Tourism. In view of the announcement of the merger of Sunflight Vacations Ltd. and Skylark Holidays Ltd., a step which will create a company more than three times larger than any other company in the industry, with control of more than 50 per cent of the Canadian travel industry, is the minister concerned about the impact both on smaller competitors and on the consumer, and has he referred the matter to his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I have read about this in various press reports in Canadian newspapers. I share the hon. member's concern for maintaining the competitive value of this industry for the sake of the Canadian consumer, and I have already raised the matter with my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

AGRICULTURE

OUTBREAK OF FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE IN DENMARK

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture will be aware of an outbreak of foot and mouth disease on an island off the coast of Denmark. He will also be aware of the serious concern of the entire cattle and sheep industry about even the thought of that disease. He will also remember, as I do, the outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Regina in 1952. I would ask the minister, therefore, what steps he and his health of animals branch are taking to protect the cattle and sheep industry from any possible outbreak of this disease in our country as a result of the ongoing export of Common Market surplus frozen beef supplies presently coming into Canada from Denmark?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we are very concerned about this disease and its outbreak in Denmark. They do not know how it happened. It has been confined to one herd, and not even to the total herd in that farming enterprise. Those animals have been destroyed and every precaution possible has been taken. We have banned all meat products brought into Canada, either frozen or fresh, that are in store. Our records show that none have come to Canada for two months.

If the hon. member has any other evidence, I would like to have it because we are very concerned about what this could do. According to the rules under international trade, I believe they will need to be free of the disease for two years from the time that they discovered this disease in their country before they can export to us again. They follow the same pattern we do with other trading partners. I am told that they believe that this is a reasonable pattern to follow.

It is a disastrous occurrence for Denmark because they depend on the export of agricultural products for their livelihood and the export generally of swine—over three quarters of their production. So, it can be economically disastrous for their country. We sympathize with them because, even as cautious as Denmark or any country can be, it just proves the fact that this can happen.

DANISH BEEF EXPORTS TO CANADA

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister. I am sure that the minister is aware that there are several million pounds of European Common Market surplus export beef coming from Denmark presently in storage in Canada. What are we doing in Canada with that supply since it is a possible contamination source, and in view of the fact that foot and mouth disease cannot be detected in beef supplies? This is a serious situation. Can the minister say what our policy has been on it, and if he has been in touch with corresponding officers in the United States about this matter?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I do not know if they have been in touch with the United States concerning this situation but we have issued an order that all beef and any fresh beef product, whether beef or pork from Denmark, be detained wherever it is in Canada and not allowed to be distributed.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF INDIAN WOMEN MARRYING NON-NATIVES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it is supplementary to that asked by my colleague from Cariboo-Chilcotin. The minister knows that there is a requirement for the cabinet to approve the disenfranchisement of Indian women, in other words, the removal from the Indian rolls of women who, by reason of marriage, no longer have status in their reserve. The minister also heard his colleague say that there has not been such cabinet approval since she and her colleague have sat in cabinet since 1976. I would simply ask the minister how he can explain that his department has disenfranchised, not including 1980 figures, 1,792 women since 1976 without cabinet approval.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, 1976 is going back a few years. Needless to say, the hon. member must have pursued this with the same zeal with my predecessor, the minister in the Conservative government. Having said that, I think the hon. member is well aware of the provisions of that particuliar act of Parliament called the Indian Act which indicates quite clearly that a status Indian woman who marries a non-Indian male loses her status under the Indian Act. There is in addition another discriminatory provision in the Indian Act with respect to the double motherhood clause, as the hon. member is aware.

There is also provision in the Indian Act that allows the minister to exempt application of this particular section but, according to legal opinions, it is only to be exercised very rarely. That is the law that Parliament has approved. I can only assume that the hon. member wishes any minister to obey the laws of Parliament until such time as they are changed. That is the situation as it stands.

I think the best possible way to correct this is the way that I have gone about it. I have sent a notice to every Indian chief and band council in the country saying that if they will give me a band council resolution asking me to use my powers of exemption under the Indian Act not to apply the provision of the Indian Act that results in an Indian woman losing her status, I will obey that direction, so that I could not be accused of arbitrarily flouting the law.

Of course the bottom line solution to the whole question, as the hon. member is well aware, is to amend the Indian Act so that this discriminatory feature can be done away with once and for all.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE LEGISLATIVE ACTION TO PROTECT INDIAN WOMEN

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, the minister knows full well that I do not need a lecture on what the Indian Act says about this particular problem. The lecture is required by his colleague in cabinet who said that there has not been any disenfranchisement since 1976. In 1980, 1979, 1978, 1977 and 1976 there have been over 2,000.

May I ask the minister how it is possible for his department to proceed with removing Indian women from the rolls without cabinet approval? His colleague said that she is sitting in cabinet and that there has not been any disenfranchisement throughout the country.

What is the minister going to do about this? The time to do something was when the Constitution was passed. What is he going to do now in terms of legislative action, instead of writing to Indian chiefs? How much response has he had from the Indian chiefs? What is he doing in terms of legislative action to remove and redress this incredible disgrace that our country has placed on his shoulders?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, this contrived outrage by the hon. member—

Mr. Lewis: She made the speech.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —is really something to behold. There was and is a section in the constitutional provisions which are on the verge of being patriated, that does away with this discrimination once and for all.

Mr. Oberle: Nonsense; it does not. You have sold them out. That is what you have done.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): As I recall, it was that very Constitution containing that provision that every member of the opposition—

Mr. Oberle: You sold them out.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —opposed, week after week. Perhaps the hon. member would like to face every Indian woman who is going to lose her status and explain why he sat there and opposed the Constitution for so many months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESPONSE MADE BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Was the Minister of National Health and Welfare speaking for the government when she responded to my colleague, the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin?

Miss Bégin: He doesn't know.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I would have to read the provisions. I would have to read her speech. I have not read the speech but I will read it and I will be pleased to answer the Leader of the Opposition tomorrow. I do not think it is unreasonable to say that we do not all zealously go around reading each other's speeches. I assume that my colleagues can make a speech, speaking for government authority, and I am assuming that my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare did so.

There is a refinement, however, that perhaps the Leader of the Opposition should consider. I will check the legality of it, but if my memory serves me right, when a minister does exercise those unique powers of exemption under the Indian Act—which in fact frustrates the application of the Indian Act, which is the discriminatory part—then I believe a special order in council procedure is required. I will check that. It may be that this is what my colleague is referring to.

May I conclude by saying that not only is my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, particularly concerned about this discriminatory feature, but she has been one of the foremost spokesmen in the government for doing away with this discrimination once and for all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I was not asking a question about a speech. I was asking whether, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare answered a question posed by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin in this House today, she was speaking the policy of the government. Can the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development say that?

Miss Bégin: Ask me.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I have already told the opposition, and I am now telling the Leader of the Opposition, what the policy of the government is. Whatever I heard quoted in her speech did not differ from that policy one iota, in my opinion. What I have said is with regard to the fine print in my colleague's speech which was quoted, and knowing the capacity of some hon. members to be rather selective in their quotes, I should like to read the speech and then I will be more than happy to answer the Leader of the Opposition tomorrow.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the government might seek refuge in fine print but the status Indian women have lost their status unnecessarily over the last two years, because this government refused to act, unlike the government I had the honour to lead which was beginning to act in January, 1980.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Indeed, this government is still delaying action that would bring equality to Canadian status Indian women.

Let me ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if her colleague agrees with her when she indicated in the House today that no Indian woman has lost her status since 1976.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to repeat exactly what I hope I said in Vancouver since I do not have the transcript of my speech.

I explained to the Women's Network in Vancouver that there is a role that could be actively played everywhere in government in various instances. I used as an example the occasions when my former colleague, Iona Campagnolo, who sat next to me, and I were women ministers sitting in particular on the special committee of council, and used the limited power, it is true, but we used it positively all the time I sat on that committee, and I sat on it since 1976, although I do not sit on it now. We refused the unanimity needed to approve certain losses of status by Indian women. We did that systematically. That was within our power and we exercised it, knowing full well what we were doing. We did that expressing the wish of this government that Section 12 be repealed, and it will be repealed. My colleague, the minister responsible for the status of women, announced that some time ago in this House, and it is being done and will be done in a human way by consultation with the various bands.

I am pleased to have an opportunity to make a correction of some words. I said 41 women were reinstated in their status but I made a mistake. I meant 41 bands.

Further to that policy of the government, which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows very well because his colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands, subscribed fully to the only action the caucus of women of this House of Commons took, and that this government applied. Forty-one bands have already—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order, please.

NUMBER OF WOMEN AFFECTED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tell this House how many status Indian women have lost their status since 1976?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I will get the precise figure, but I can almost assure the Leader of the Opposition that fewer women have lost their status as a result of the policy implemented by this government, when we succeeded his government and applied the policy whereby we met the chief and band council to direct us to use our powers of exemption to prevent Indian women from losing their status.

In examining the record of my immediate predecessor, may I say that not one constructive act was undertaken by the previous government to do anything about this discriminatory feature.

• (1500)

Mr. Clark: Ask native women.

GRAIN

REVIEW OF FEED GRAINS POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, and it relates to feed grains policy. In light of the recent announcement of a partial move away from the corn competitive pricing formula and the introduction of subsidy programs to keep stocks available in central and Atlantic Canada through the Canadian Wheat Board, proving that the open market is unable to supply adequate feed supplies, could the minister tell the House if and when he will be conducting a full review of the feed grains policy? When will he be submitting the entire question of the open marketing of feed grains to a plebiscite of producers, as promised when the program was first introduced in the mid-1970s?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I disagree with some of the things the hon. member has said. First, there has never been a shortage of feed grain on the feed market for those people who use western feed grain, whether it be in British Columbia or in eastern Canada. The hon. member knows full well that central Canada is more than self-sufficient, and that in part of Ontario and part of western Quebec there is a surplus in grain production. Ontario produces surplus production of about 400,000 tonnes at the present time. This does not mean that they may not use some western grain at different times, but this policy is one which will take out the inequity of grain supplied at the Chicago competitive price by the Canadian Wheat Board. There is still a lot of grain being supplied—and he knows it—by the off-board grain sales, by that operation. We said in the press release we made last week that we would continue to review the feed grains policy. We want to be fair and equitable to all concerned.

FARM STORAGE PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I note that the minister did not discuss the question of a plebiscite, which was part of the original proposal. However, in addition to that question, I should like to ask the minister what work, if any, has taken place to pursue the proposals for a farm storage program, following the suggestions of the advisory committees to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board and to the Canadian Wheat Board.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, at the present time, concerning farm storage proposals, I do not believe any further action has been taken. As the hon. member knows, the program has worked fairly well in those areas where there has been a shortage of feed grain.

Concerning the plebiscite, the hon. member also knows that it was not a firm part of the agreement. It was a suggested part of the agreement by some people, but the agreement indicated that we would review it. Naturally, we are reviewing the possibility, but not in the great detail of a plebiscite at this time. He knows that full well also.

MR. COOK—RECONSIDERATION OF BUDGET AND HIGH INTEREST RATE POLICY

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and eighty-fifth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) on Friday, March 19, 1982, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

STANDING ORDERS

REVISION RESPECTING DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN LEGISLATION

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we have concluded the negotiations commenced immediately after the vote on the motion of the official opposition to adjourn last Wednesday. I am pleased to report that we have reached a major agreement. May I now seek unanimous consent to move the appropriate motion?

Madam Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to the hon. minister to move the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That the Standing Orders be amended by adding, immediately following Standing Order 75, the following:

75.1(a) The purpose of this Standing Order is to provide for the orderly and timely consideration of the following proposed bills, to be introduced no later than april 8, 1982 and to be finally disposed of no later than June 30, 1982:

1. An act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act;

2. An act to amend the Petro-Canada Act;

3. An act to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act;

4. An act to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act;

5. An act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto;

6. An act respecting energy monitoring and to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act;

7. An act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3);

8. An act respecting motor vehicle fuel consumption standards.

(b) When the House is considering any of the said bills, Standing Order 31(1) shall not apply and notwithstanding any Standing Order the House shall sit between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays.

(c) Maximum cumulative totals of time for debate shall be allotted to the various stages of the said bills as follows: a combined total of 35 hours to the second reading stages and a combined total of 35 hours to the report and third reading stages, to be divided among the parties as set out in subsequent paragraphs of this order.

(d) When the cumulative total of time for debate by members of a party has reached the limit set out in this order for that party for a given stage of the said bills, no additional member of that party may be recognized for the purposes of debate at that stage of any of the said bills.

(e) When all parties have exhausted their time allocation for debate at a given stage, or when no more eligible members rise to participate in the debate at that stage, the Speaker shall forthwith put, without further debate, any questions necessary to dispose of that stage of any of the said bills which have not already been disposed of at that stage, and for that purpose any necessary motions, including motions to amend, shall be deemed to have been proposed. For greater clarity, each bill may proceed through its several stages independently, subject to the time limits set out in this order; and a bill may be considered at a subsequent stage notwithstanding that the over-all time limits applicable to an earlier stage have not yet been reached.

(f) Each party shall be entitled to participate in the debate at second reading stage of the said bills for a maximum cumulative total of not more than 21 hours for Progressive Conservative Party members, 7 hours for New Democratic Party members and 7 hours for Liberal Party members.

The Government and the opposition parties shall endeavour to ensure that all the said bills are referred to committee no later than May 1, 1982.

(g) A Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, consisting of 10 Members to be named at a later date, shall be appointed for the purpose of considering the said bills, and the provisions of Standing Orders 65 and 66 shall apply thereto.

(h) Notwithstanding any other Standing Order, each of the said bills shall upon completion of second reading be referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and each of the said bills shall, subject to paragraph (k) of this order, be reported or deemed to have been reported to the House, with or without amendments, no later than June 4, 1982.

(i) Each party shall be entitled to participate in the debates at report stage and third reading stage of the said bills for a maximum cumulative total for both stages of not more than 21 hours for Progressive Conservative Party members, 7 hours for New Democratic Party members and 7 hours for Liberal Party members, and each party may apportion this time as between the debates at report stage and third reading stage in such manner as it determines.

(j) In any case, notwithstanding any other Order of the House, but subject to paragraph (k) of this order, at 15 minutes before the ordinary time of adjournment on June 30, 1982, the Speaker shall, if any of the said bills remain to be disposed of, interrupt the proceedings and put all remaining questions necessary for the passage at all remaining stages of any remaining bills, without further debate or amendment.

[English]

(k) If Parliament is prorogued before all of the said bills have received the royal assent, in the next ensuing session such of the said bills that have not received the royal assent shall, at the request of a minister of the Crown and following concurrence in any relevant Ways and Means motions, be deemed to have been proceeded with at all stages attained in the previous session and restored to their respective status at the time of prorogation, and any evidence adduced by the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation shall be deemed to have been tabled in the House; and the dates set out in paragraphs (f), (h) and (j) shall be read as if they referred to the fifteenth, thirtieth and fiftieth sitting days respectively of the new session; and any time used in the previous session in debate at any stage of the said bills by members of a party shall be deducted from the time allotted to that party by this order.

(l) This order shall not be construed so as to deprive an independent member of the right to be recognized by the Speaker.

(m) This Standing Order shall expire and be deleted when the said bills have been finally disposed of by Parliament.

I seek unanimous consent, Madam Speaker, for you to dispense with reading the motion again and for it be approved without delay.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I know the difficulties that are present in the translation of a very complex order such as this, and while consent is immediate for paragraphs (k), (l) and (m) as read in English by the government House leader, if you will forgive me and if the House will be tolerant, I will read the rest in order in English because I conducted our discussions in good faith on the basis of English and that is what I agreed to. I did not get the correct translation. Indeed, some of it did not come across. Therefore, with the indulgence of the House, what we are agreeing to is this:

That the Standing Orders be amended by adding, immediately following Standing Order 75, the following:

75.1(a) The purpose of this Standing Order is to provide for the orderly and timely consideration of the following proposed bills, to be introduced no later than April 8, 1982 and to be finally disposed of no later than June 30, 1982:

1. An act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act;

2. An act to amend the Petro-Canada Act;

3. An act to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act;

4. An act to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act;

5. An act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto;

6. An act respecting energy monitoring and to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act;

7. An act to amend the National Energy Board Act (No. 3);

8. An act respecting motor vehicle fuel consumption standards.

(b) When the House is considering any of the said bills, Standing Order 31(1) shall not apply and notwithstanding any Standing Order the House shall sit between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays.

(c) Maximum cumulative totals of time for debate shall be allotted to the various stages of the said bills as follows: a combined total of 35 hours to the second reading stages and a combined total of 35 hours to the report and third reading stages, to be divided among the parties as set out in subsequent paragraphs of this order.

(d) When the cumulative total of time for debate by members of a party has reached the limit set out in this order for that party for a given stage of the said bills, no additional member of that party may be recognized for the purposes of debate at that stage of any of the said bills.

(e) When all parties have exhausted their time allocation for debate at a given stage, or when no more eligible members rise to participate in the debate at that stage, the Speaker shall forthwith put, without further debate, any questions necessary to dispose of that stage of any of the said bills which have not already been disposed of at that stage, and for that purpose any necessary motions, including motions to amend, shall be deemed to have been proposed. For greater clarity, each bill may proceed through its several stages independently, subject to the time limits set out in this order; and a bill may be considered at a subsequent stage notwithstanding that the over-all time limits applicable to an earlier stage have not yet been reached.

(f) Each party shall be entitled to participate in the debate at second reading stage of the said bills for a maximum cumulative total of not more than:

21 hours for Progressive Conservative Party members

7 hours for New Democratic Party members

7 hours for Liberal Party members

The government and the opposition parties shall endeavour to ensure that all the said bills are referred to committee no later than May 1, 1982.

(g) A Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, consisting of 10 members to be named at a later date, shall be appointed for the purpose of considering the said bills, and the provisions of Standing Orders 65 and 66 shall apply thereto.

(h) Notwithstanding any other Standing Order, each of the said bills shall upon completion of second reading be referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, and each of the said bills shall, subject to paragraph (k) of this order, be reported or deemed to have been reported to the House, with or without amendments, no later than June 4, 1982.

(i) Each party shall be entitled to participate in the debates at report stage and third reading stage of the said bills for a maximum cumulative total for both stages of not more than:

21 hours for Progressive Conservative Party members

7 hours for New Democratic Party members

7 hours for Liberal Party members

and each party may apportion this time as between the debates at report stage and third reading stage in such manner as it determines.

(j) In any case, notwithstanding any other order of the House, but subject to paragraph (k) of this order, at 15 minutes before the ordinary time of adjournement on June 30, 1982, the Speaker shall, if any of the said bills remain to be disposed of, interrupt the proceedings and put all remaining questions necessary for the passage at all remaining stages of any remaining bills, without further debate or amendment.

The remaining clauses of the House order, namely, paragraphs (k), (l) and (m), had already been read in English by the government House leader. What he read reflects accurately the agreement which was reached among the House leaders.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, for the first time in history we were able to have translation in both official languages of a major complicated and long House order. The opposition House leader saw fit, after having listened to it being read in French, to make sure that it reflected our will and our agreement by reading it in English. I do not mind his doing that, but to be consistent I would like to hear the opposition House leader read paragraphs (k), (l) and (m) in French. If he cannot do that, I insist on doing it myself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, since my skills are not of a degree to permit me to read those paragraphs in French—I could read them in German but not in French—I will ask my colleague the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) to read them in French so that I do not fracture the French language. We will, therefore, hear the hon. member for Joliette read paragraphs (k), (l) and (m) in French.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): It is with great pleasure, Madam Speaker, that I shall respond to the wishes of both sides of the House.

(k) If Parliament is prorogued before all of the said bills have received the royal assent, in the next ensuing session such of the said bills that have not received the royal assent shall, at the request of a minister of the Crown and following concurrence in any relevant Ways and Means motions, be deemed to have been proceeded with at all stages attained in the previous session and restored to their respective status at the time of prorogation, and any evidence adduced by the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation shall be deemed to have been tabled in the House; and the dates set out in paragraphs (f), (h) and (j) shall be read as if they referred to the fifteenth, thirtieth and fiftieth sitting days respectively of the new session; and any time used in the previous session in debate at any stage of the said bills by members of a party shall be deducted from the time allotted to that party by this order.

(l) This Order shall not be construed so as to deprive an independent member of the right to be recognized by the Speaker.

(m) This Standing Order shall expire and be deleted when the said bills have been finally disposed of by Parliament.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I hope this is not the practice that we are going to follow on every occasion; otherwise there would be no purpose in having instant translation, would there?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: The Standing Order as read and reread in both official languages is exactly as I anticipated it was going to be presented. We support it.

We hope that it might be possible in the future to get the kind of co-operation that was shown over the course of the last few days by all members doing things similar to this with regard to House orders in dealing both with government and opposition business. You can understand, having seen what happened here, why it took us five days.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to the motion moved by the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Carried and so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

PROPOSED QUESTION OF MR. McKINNON

Madam Speaker: I have notice of a question of privilege by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). I must tell him that, from reading his notice, my feeling is very clear that he does hot have a question of privilege. Furthermore, it deals with matters having taken place in a standing committee, and if the hon. member has a grievance and wishes redress he should seek it through the committee, not through the House.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I think I understand the nature of the question of privilege the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) intends to raise. While I agree immediately and completely with the Chair that the question of privilege may not now exist, once the committee reports and the evidence is before the House it may well be that at that time the Chair may wish to consider it a valid question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is quite right. If at a later time this grievance is reported to the House, then it can be discussed in the House.

MR. HALLIDAY—POLAND—IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege today to table a petition signed by concerned citizens of the constituency of Oxford who decry the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau's) weak and lamentable response to the imposition of martial law in Poland. The petitioners feel that the Prime Minister's statements about Poland have given comfort to the enemies of freedom and have been used for propaganda purposes, to the detriment of the Polish people.

IGOR GOUZENKO

Question No. 676—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to a question by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville concerning Igor Gouzenko on May 21, 1975 at page 5981 of Hansard, which stated in part "from 1946 to 1962 Mr. Gouzenko was looked after entirely by the Canadian government", is the government aware that Mr. Gouzenko claimed in a press interview with the Toronto Sunday Star of April 13, 1980, that he received nothing from the government in the way of support during the years in question and, if so (a) in what way can the government account for this discrepancy (b) were cheques issued payable to Igor Gouzenko or any members of his family and, if so, were they given to the payees?

2. Did an Inspector Chick of the RCMP visit Mr. Gouzenko shortly after the question was answered in the House?

3. To the knowledge of the government, did Inspector Chick tell him that "there'd been a mistake, that politicians talk a lot of baloney" as claimed by Mr. Gouzenko in the Toronto Sunday Star?

4. Was the first pension received by Mr. Gouzenko paid in 1962 by the government?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): 1. The government is aware that Mr. Gouzenko claimed in a press interview with the Toronto Sunday Star of April 13, 1980, that he received nothing in the way of support during the years in question.

(a) The discrepancy would appear to have been the consequence of an administrative error. According to the McDonald commission, which investigated the matter of Mr. Gouzenko's finances, a phrase was omitted from the initial RCMP draft reply. This omission substantially altered the meaning of the reply. However, the commissioners have concluded that no intentional design was apparent to mislead as a result of the answer given in the House of Commons in 1975.

(b) No cheques were issued payable to Mr. Gouzenko or his family, nor were government funds allocated for the Gouzenko family during the 1946-62 period.

2. Inspector Chick did not visit Mr. Gouzenko shortly after the question was answered in the House.

3. No, not to the knowledge of the government.

4. The first government pension was granted to Mr. Gouzenko in 1962.

Order Paper Questions

RECIPROCAL STATUS UNDER MINERAL LANDS LEASING ACT

Question No. 2,364—Mr. Crosby:

1. Was Canada granted reciprocal status under the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 in the United States and, if so, for how long has the grant been in force?

2. Was an application made to Mr. James G. Watt, the secretary of the interior of the United States, to withdraw the grant of reciprocal status on the grounds that Canada no longer grants similar privileges to persons or companies resident in the United States?

3. Will Canada's ability to obtain and retain reciprocal status under the act be affected by the provisions of Bill C-48 which enacts the Canada Oil and Gas Act?

4. Did Seagrams Company Limited of Montreal make requests to the Prime Minister or to the government or to any member thereof concerning the possible loss of reciprocal status by Canadians under the act?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Canada was granted reciprocal status under the U.S. Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 (MLLA) before 1936.

2. On March 26, St. Joe Minerals Corporation petitioned the U.S. secretary of interior to declare Canada a non-reciprocal country under the terms of the MLLA. St. Joe requested "(i) that Canada be declared a non-reciprocal country based on the denial of similar or like privileges to citizens or corporations of this country under FIRA, (ii) if the department of interior cannot order an immediate decision that Canada's current reciprocal status is not valid, then the status should be suspended until the department has an opportunity to evaluate the effect of FIRA and the consequences when the Parliament of Canada passes the Canada Oil and Gas Act, which is discriminatory on its face." This petition will be considered as part of interior's year old study of the MLLA.

3. Canada's reciprocal status under the MLLA will ultimately be determined by the U.S. government. One of the factors which the administration could choose to consider in the course of their review of the MLLA is the bill enacting the Canada Oil and Gas Act.

4. The Department of External Affairs is unaware of any requests concerning possible changes to the MLLA regulations made to the Prime Minister, the government or any of its members by Seagram Company Limited of Montreal.

GIUSEPPE CALAMUSA

Question No. 2,701—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was Mr. Giuseppe Calamusa deported by the Department of Employment and Immigration and, if so, in each case (a) on what date and for what reason (b) did he first illegally enter the country and, if so, by what means?

2. To the knowledge of the government, does he have a criminal record and, if so, what is the record?

3. (a) Did he live in the Hamilton-Niagara Falls area and, if so, at what address (b) what are all his other known addresses in Canada, as far as the department is concerned?

4. (a) On his final illegal re-entry to Canada, did he proceed to the area of Winnipeg, Manitoba (b) was he deported via Emerson, Manitoba and (i) if so, what are all the details (ii) if not, what was the point of deportation?

5. Did he arrive in the United States after being deported from Emerson and was he immediately presented with a ministerial permit from the Minister of Employment and Immigration allowing him to return to Canada forthwith and, if so, on what grounds did the minister take such a step?

6. Did a member of the staff of the Department of Employment and Immigration raise serious objections to the treatment afforded Mr. Calamusa at Emerson and were his objections acted upon and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Employment and Immigration Commission and the Ministry of the Solicitor General as follows:

1. Yes.

(a) Ordered deported 8/4/70 for criminal convictions and because he did not possess an immigrant visa. Ordered deported 11/9/74 for returning without consent. Ordered deported 8/12/76 for returning without consent. Ordered deported 9/5/79 for returning without consent, not in possession of a valid passport, engaging in unauthorized employment, overstaying visitor's status.

(b) No, entered as a visitor 25/3/68.

2. Policy emanating from the Identification of Criminals Act and cabinet directive No. 35 does not permit the RCMP, who maintain the national repository for criminal records, to reveal the existence of a criminal record to a third party. However, this does not preclude anyone from personally obtaining his own criminal record, if one exists, by submitting such a request, along with a set of his fingerprints, to police authorities.

3. (a) He lived in Niagara Falls at 7375 Westfield Drive.

(b) Toronto—815 Coxwell Ave.; 232 Monarch Park Ave.; Winnipeg—6 Southam Street. As far as we know these are the only addresses where he resided.

4. (a) No. The commission was under the impression that Mr. Calamusa and his family were living in Niagara Falls. They subsequently moved to Winnipeg without informing commission officials and the date of their move is unknown.

(b) Yes. He entered the U.S.A. on June 20, 1980, from Emerson, Manitoba.

5. Yes. He was allowed to re-enter Canada at Emerson on a minister's permit on June 20, 1980. The permit was issued for humanitarian and compassionate reasons.

6. The Employment and Immigration Commission has no record of any such objection being raised.

SUMMIT CONFERENCE AT CANCUN, MEXICO

Question No. 3,481—Mr. Malone:

1. What was the total number of staff from CBC radio and TV that were on hand during the summit conference on world poverty at Cancun, Mexico?

2. What was the (a) daily per diem (b) highest daily per diem of the staff?

3. What was the total cost of air travel, air freight charges, food and hotel facilities for the staff?

4. Who was the immediate CBC staff personnel representative in charge of determining the size of the staff delegation and/or allotting and approving the budget for travel to Cancun?

5. To the knowledge of the government, what was the size of the (a) CTV staff (b) Global TV staff for the conference?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Privy Council Office as follows:

1. Fourty-one. These were production staff and reporters assigned to the conference on behalf of five separate services, each with its own distinct and specialized coverage requirements: English radio and television, French radio and television, and Radio-Canada International.

2, 3 and 4. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the costs related to individual program projects or the names of staff members involved in such projects. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, answered November 6, 1975.

5. (a) Six. (b) Three.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 3,730—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of public servants working in the Department of Veterans Affairs in Quebec indicate English as their first official language?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The answer is 15 per cent.

MEDICAL DOCTORS

Question No. 4,035—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Since 1978, did the Department of National Health and Welfare hire medical doctors from the United Kingdom and, if so (a) how many (b) according to what criteria (c) what is/was their position?

2. Were the doctors British public servants and, if so, in each case, what was his/her (a) position (b) area of specialization?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

WHEAT CONTRIBUTION TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Question No. 4,055—Mr. Neil:

Was a $4 million contribution in wheat made to the People's Republic of China and, if so, what was the price per ton paid to the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canada has supplied two $2 million contributions in wheat to the People's Republic of China. The first contribution was 8,221 metric tons at $231 per metric ton and 426 metric tons at $231 per metric ton. The second contribution was 8,432 metric tons at $237 per metric ton; for a total of 17,079 metric tons.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Madam Speaker, the bill now called deals with fiscal arrangements which will prevail during the next five years. It reflects consultations which have taken place with the provinces beginning in December, 1980, and intensifying after the tabling of the government's proposals on November 12. During that period I met frequently with my provincial counterparts, individually, at federal-provincial conferences of finance ministers, and most recently at the first ministers' conference.

The bill also reflects the fact that for the first time members of this House were given the opportunity to become directly involved in the review of the fiscal arrangements before the legislative stage was reached. This work was done through a parliamentary task force chaired by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). The task force held hearings in every part of the country, met with representatives of all provincial governments, and produced a substantive report last August which has helped us to understand more thoroughly the concerns of the provinces and the people most directly affected by those arrangements. Most provisions of the bill now before us are compatible with the recommendations of the task force.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, is an important one. If passed it will transfer an estimated $105 billion to provinces over the next five years under two major programs: fiscal equalization; and established programs financing. This amount is substantially larger than the comparable figure of $61 billion for these two programs in the five years which are now ending. The bill will also provide our federation with a new equalization formula. This will meet the needs of financially disadvantaged provinces for assistance, and take account of representations they have made as to how my proposal of last November for a new formula could be strengthened. In addition, the bill will continue this government's strong support for health and post-secondary education. Finally, the bill will meet to some extent the government's own need for fiscal restraint.

As I indicated in the budget, current circumstances require that the federal government apply restraint in all areas. Since transfers to provinces account for approximately 20 per cent of total federal expenditures, they cannot be insulated from our restraint effort. However, the restraint which must apply to federal transfers to provinces should be tempered with equity. I am convinced that the means whereby we propose to moderate the growth of these transfers is equitable. While the changes we propose to established program financing would affect all provinces, except the richest, in more or less the same way, the new equalization system would be particularly beneficial to those with the lowest fiscal capacity.

In arriving at the government's position on fiscal arrangements, we have taken account of the marked shift in the distribution of total government revenues in the past 20 years. Between 1961 and 1981 the federal share of total government revenues declined from over 57 per cent to 49 per cent, while the provincial local share increased from 43 per cent to 51 per cent. The change in the federal government's position is even more striking when intergovernmental transfers are taken into account. When federal transfers to provinces are deducted from federal revenues and considered as provincial revenues, the federal share of the total revenue pie, which was 50 per cent in 1961, drops to 38 per cent in 1981. It is evident that the provinces now spend the largest share of public moneys raised in Canada. What these numbers indicate is that Canada is one of the most fiscally decentralized countries of the western world.

Specifically, the measure before Parliament would do the following: First, it would provide for a substantially changed fiscal equalization formula featuring a representative average standard and a comprehensive measure of fiscal capacity.

Second, it would modify established programs financing arrangements by eliminating the portion of these transfers compensating provinces for termination of the 1972 revenue guarantee and by making established programs financing transfers to all provinces equal per capita, without reducing federal contributions, to health and post-secondary education programs.

Third, it would authorize the federal government to transfer to oil-producing provinces their share of the federal oil export charge for oil exported during the period November 1, 1980, to January, 1982.

Fourth, it provides for special arrangements under which the federal government would make payments to certain provinces equal to the amount of recoveries under the equalization program for the 1980-81 and the 1981-82 fiscal years attributable to the June, 1981 census of population.

Fifth, it extends for an indefinite period the fiscal stabilization program which protects provinces against a reduction in revenues arising from a sharp downturn in economic activity and, therefore, would facilitate their borrowings.

Sixth, it extends for another five years the personal income tax revenue guarantee program which is associated with the income tax collection agreements.

Finally, it provides for technical amendments to sections of the fiscal arrangements act dealing with reciprocal taxation.

The fiscal equalization program is a cornerstone of the Canadian federation, and I now turn to the specific provisions of the bill which give effect to that particular aspect of the Canadian federation. These provisions are in two parts. Part I of the bill modifies the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and, more particularly, the provisions of the act relating to fiscal equalization and established programs financing.

Part II of the bill empowers the Government of Canada to transfer to the oil-producing provinces their share of the oil export charge and to make payments to certain provinces equal to the amount of recoveries under the equalization program for the 1980-81 and 1981-82 fiscal years attributable to the June, 1981, census of population.

Among the most important provisions of the bill are those modifying Part I of the fiscal arrangements act, which sets out the fiscal equalization system. The program seeks to make it possible for all provinces to provide reasonable standards of basic public service to their residents without having to resort to unduly high levels of taxation. It is estimated that under this new system about $29.3 billion of equalization would be paid to six provinces during the next five years compared with $16.5 billion under the present system over the past five-year period.

With the formula provided for in the bill, over-all federal cash outlays over the next five years are projected to be $1.148 billion higher than the original budget estimate. That results from the fact that at the first ministers' conference the initial proposal was enriched by $1.148 billion. All of this amount would go to the six equalization receiving provinces. Some $311 million would be delivered through the fiscal equalization program, and $837 million would be delivered through EPF, which would have higher cash payments as a result of replacing the proposed Ontario standard by the representative average standard.

As I have suggested, the new formula will be based on a representative average standard instead of an Ontario standard as initially proposed last November. It would also apply to a much more comprehensive set of provincial and local revenues than the current formula.

In order to understand why these changes are being made, it is important to appreciate that the equalization program has two fundamental components. The first is the measure of provincial fiscal capacity, that is, the capacity or potential of a province to raise revenues through taxes and levies of various kinds relative to the capacity of other provinces.

Hon. members will recall that I had originally proposed to broaden the measure of fiscal capacity by bringing into the formula, in addition to the various provincial and local taxes and levies now subject to equalization, all provincial revenues from natural resources which are currently excluded and all local taxes currently excluded, namely, taxes levied for municipal purposes.

The bill now provides for an even broader measure of fiscal capacity. It is proposed to include a further source of local government revenues, namely, receipts from the sales of goods and services. As a result of the broadening of provincial fiscal capacity an additional $16.5 billion of provincial revenues would be equalized under the formula in 1982-83. Broadening the measure of fiscal capacity meets the requests of provinces and, as the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will recall, the recommendations of other groups, notably the parliamentary task force in which the hon. member participated and also the Economic Council of Canada.

The second basic element or component of the formula is the equalization standard. That is the minimum level to which the potential revenues of all provinces based upon the comparable measure of the fiscal capacity should be raised. We had initially proposed to combine the broadening of the fiscal capacity measure with a shift to an Ontario standard. Of course, that was changed as a result of representations made by the provinces, which argued, for various reasons, that a more representative selection or, indeed, a broader basis was better from their point of view.

The bill also provides for a number of additional features which in certain circumstances would make the new system more advantageous for the provinces than the initial proposal. One of these is a minimal level of payment or "floor" provision which the government is proposing in response to the concerns of certain provinces which feared that their equalization entitlement might drop drastically if they were to experience a sudden upsurge in their resource revenues.

On January 22, I proposed a floor provision whereby beginning with 1983-84 no equalization receiving province could have a total entitlement for a fiscal year that would be less than 85 per cent of its total entitlement for the preceding year. As a result of further provincial representations, particularly from the province of Nova Scotia, the floor provision provided for in the bill is even more generous. The 85 per cent minimum is now increased to 95 per cent for provinces whose per capita fiscal capacity is equal to, or less than, 70 per cent of the national average per capita capacity, and to 90 per cent for provinces whose per capita fiscal capacity is over 70 per cent of the national average per capita fiscal capacity but equal to, or less than, 75 per cent. Putting it more understandably, Mr. Speaker, the minimim payment will be higher for provinces with a lesser fiscal capacity. I believe that is an aspect that hon. members would be inclined to agree with.

In the course of consultations held since the budget, provincial ministers of finance expressed some concern about the initial proposal, that is, bringing all provinces up to the Ontario standard. I had believed that the province of Ontario provided a level of services that was good, that was regarded as good by the people of Canada. I had believed that to bring all provinces at least up to the standard provided in Ontario would be satisfactory. Well, some concern was expressed by the finance ministers. They argued that no single province could be sufficiently representative of the ten provinces to constitute an appropriate standard, and that equalization payments would be unstable with a single province standard since the standard would be influenced by economic developments in one province only. I was confident that we were hitching our wagon, so to speak, to a rising star in the case of the province of Ontario, and that its economic future was bright and prosperous. But others were less confident; they felt they would be more at ease if we could broaden the base.

The provinces were concerned also that such a formula would result in an undesirable treatment of natural resource revenues because of the relatively small natural resource base of Ontario.

In order to meet these concerns, the government has put forward in the bill a more broadly-based standard, taking account of five provinces with over 80 per cent of the total provincial population. Under the new system the fiscal capacity of recipient provinces—the four Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Manitoba—would be raised to the average per capita capacity of provinces collectively considered to be most representative of all ten provinces, namely, Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. These provinces constitute a type of median of the provinces in terms of per capita fiscal capacity. Alberta would be excluded at the top, and the four Atlantic provinces at the bottom. The two exclusions would be closely balanced, since Alberta and the Atlantic region each account for approximately 9.2 per cent of the total provincial population.

Another new feature is the transitional arrangement protecting provinces against too abrupt a change in the level of their equalization as we move from the current system to the new one. In this case, following representations from the provinces, particularly Manitoba, I proposed in January that any province entitled to equalization in 1982-83 be guaranteed an increase in its equalization in that year at least equivalent to its average annual increase in equalization in absolute terms between 1977-78 and 1981-82. The arrangement provided for in the bill extends the transitional protection from one year to three years and builds steps into it so that the minimum equalization entitlement of each province would be higher in the second and third years.

That is a vitally important provision for the province of Manitoba because, as I recollect the numbers, the providing bill's feature will mean, if approved by Parliament, a flow of an additional $165 million into the province of Manitoba.

Finally, as proposed in the budget, the bill provides for a ceiling under which the growth of total equalization payments to all provinces will be constrained by the rate of growth of the gross national product. However, to accommodate the provinces, the ceiling would begin to apply only in 1983-84. Our original proposal was that it should apply in 1982-83. It is obviously a contingency measure. Our forecasts indicate that it will not likely come into play, but past experiences have shown that it is wise to provide for such a contingency.

There you have it, Mr. Speaker; those are the essential features of the equalization system provided for in the bill. It would achieve the historic purpose of equalization by means of the most comprehensive measure of fiscal capacity ever used since the inception of the program 25 years ago, and of a more stable standard, reflecting economic and fiscal developments in five provinces accounting for about 80 per cent of the country's population and provincial fiscal capacity. Equalization payments would increase by 13.6 per cent in 1982-83 over 1981-82; and the average annual rate of increase of equalization over the five full years would be 11.2 per cent.

I do not understand how the term "cutback" can be applied to this particular program. A rate of growth next year of 13.6 per cent and a five-year rate of growth of 11.2 per cent is, in my view, a reasonable annual rate of growth to the provinces.

It is obvious that the system provided for in the bill is significantly different from the one proposed in the budget, and it is different because the government has tried to accommodate the provinces as much as possible. We have provided the features that I have mentioned at the suggestion and on the representations of the provinces. I am hopeful that the equalization receiving provinces will in the main support our efforts.

Four of the six equalization receiving provinces have formally indicated to me that they find the representative average standard system conceptually superior to the Ontario standard and consequently they are able to support it. I have received written communications to that effect from the Hon. Richard Hatfield, Premier of New Brunswick, the Hon. Joel Matheson, Minister of Finance of Nova Scotia; the Hon. Dr. John Collins, Minister of Finance of Newfoundland; and the Hon. Lloyd MacPhail, Minister of Finance of Prince Edward Island. I have had detailed discussions with each of these ministers on the implications of the equalization formula for the province concerned. I have had negotiations with finance ministers as a group; I have had them individually; and I have had discussions with them by telephone since the first ministers' conference. I believe that we have made an effort, an honest and successful effort, to accommodate the principal concerns of equalization receiving provinces.

I now want to turn to another major component of our fiscal arrangements known as established programs financing, commonly called EPF. These are dealt with in Part VI of the fiscal arrangements act. The transfers made under EPF since 1977 have served two distinct purposes. First, they have funded provincial health care and post-secondary education programs. Second, they have compensated provinces for termination of the 1972 tax reform revenue guarantee.

The bill before us modifies EPF in two ways. The first change stems from our concern for equity. Federal EPF contributions have two elements, the transfer of tax room and a payment in cash. Under the present legislation, the total per capita federal contribution is higher in those provinces where the yield from the tax transfer is higher.

As a result, over the coming years Alberta and British Columbia would benefit substantially more from established programs financing than any other province. This is inequitable since those receiving more are the provinces best able to finance activities. Consequently, the bill modifies the computation of EPF cash transfers so that the per capita value of the total federal contribution to all provinces will be equal.

This change would rectify one aspect of established programs financing which both Quebec and Ontario have criticized in the past. It would also implement once again a major recommendation of the parliamentary task force on fiscal arrangements.

The second modification to EPF proposed in the bill would end that portion of the EPF transfer that has so far compensated for the termination five years ago of the 1972 tax reform revenue guarantee. This element was added to the EPF arrangements in 1977 at the request of the provinces, although the EPF arrangements were essentially designed to provide financial support for public health insurance and post-secondary education. One personal income tax point and the cash equivalent of a second point were added to the arrangements in 1977 by way of compensation.

Provinces have argued in the past that compensation for the revenue guarantee should not be taken into account in computing the federal share of the financing of these programs. It will be argued in the House that, by removing the revenue guarantee, we are undermining our support for post-secondary education and health. I am saying that is not so, because it cannot be defended.

Even the premiers, meeting last summer, when putting together the contributions by the federal government to these important elements of our Canadian society, health and education, explicitly declined to include the revenue guarantee as a portion of the federal contribution to these two sectors. The same view as that expressed by the premiers was adopted by Justice Hall in his 1980 report on health programs, which states that the federal contribution to health programs does not include the two tax points attributable to the revenue guarantee negotiations.

If I had more time, I would add to the list of authorities a number of others, including the president of the Canadian Medical Association who argued in Halifax after the budget that the revenue guarantee was never and was not intended to be a part of the contribution by the federal government to health care. I believe similar statements can be attributed to spokesmen for those interested in post-secondary education.

I state quite firmly that ending the revenue guarantee will not lower the level of federal support for these two programs. In fact, the value of the federal contribution to these programs will continue to grow in line with the gross national product over the 1982-87 period. Removing the revenue guarantee will simply moderate the growth of the total established programs financing transfer in 1982-83.

I should also add that the effect of removing the revenue guarantee compensation will be partly offset by the increase in provincial income tax revenues arising out of the tax measures announced in the November 12 budget. In 1982-83 alone, the resulting increase in provincial revenues is estimated at $685 million.

I want to say again that following the presentation of the report of the parliamentary task force and hearing the views of the provinces, I made a deliberate effort in the budget through the selection of these tax changes to flow revenues into the provinces in order to mitigate for them the loss of the revenue guarantee. It was a deliberate choice. It was very carefully decided. Mind you, I did not get very much credit or acknowledgement for that. However, it is still a fact that in 1982-83 alone, the resulting increase in provincial revenues as a result of the tax changes made in the November budget will amount to $685 million. That is an important sum of money.

I know that the intention to restrain the rate of growth of transfers to the provinces has been criticized in some quarters. We are not cutting back. We are not refusing growth. Transfers to the provinces will continue to grow, as I have indicated, by 13.6 per cent for equalization in 1982-83, plus 11 per cent for the five-year period for EPF, growing in line with the gross national product, growing as fast as the economy. Therefore, there is no intention to cut back. There is no justification for the use of the word "cut".

It is true that it is not possible to satisfy—I was going to say the wildest expectations, but that might be misunderstood. It is not possible in present circumstances to allow transfers to the provinces to grow at 15 per cent and 20 per cent when it is absolutely essential to apply restraint to all expenditures of the Government of Canada if we are going to control our deficit.

As I have already mentioned, transfers to the provinces account for approximately 20 per cent of total federal expenditures. One fifth of what we spend goes to the provinces. Is it reasonable to decide to moderate the rate of growth for 80 per cent and not moderate the rate of growth for the 20 per cent that goes to the provinces? I argue that it is not reasonable to think we cannot apply some restraint even as we increase the transfers to the provinces.

I could not find any valid reason for continuing the revenue guarantee compensation. The revenue guarantee program was first designed to protect provinces against unforeseen reductions in revenues which might have resulted from the 1972 tax reform. The beginning of the revenue guarantee was in 1972 when we undertook tax reform. It was initially intended to last two years only. It was extended to five years at the request of the provinces and expired at the end of 1976. But then, throughout the consultation that led to the 1977 fiscal arrangements act, the provinces sought compensation for the termination of the program. Although the federal government felt the program had fulfilled its purpose, it offered to enrich the EPF transfer then being negotiated by one personal income tax point and the cash equivalent of another point to settle all outstanding issues. The offer was accepted. I argue that the provinces have now had ten years in which to adjust their tax rates since the 1972 tax reforms. The justification for this particular aspect of our system no longer exists. It no longer has any raison d'être.

I should also add that the budget proposals dealt with the program aspects of EPF. The government has proposed that the national standards for health care be clarified and an effective mechanism for their maintenance be developed in consultation with the provinces for incorporation in new federal legislation by March 31, 1983. We also propose that new federal-provincial arrangements for the financing of post-secondary education and human resources development be devised in consultation with the provinces for incorporation into new federal legislation by March 31, 1982.

I recall that the parliamentary task force had a good deal to say about the program aspects of EPF. They did not neglect that area at all. They made some rather helpful proposals in support of the direction in which we are now moving. Having made this proposal to incorporate these changes in new federal legislation by March, 1983, at the first ministers' conference held in February, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tabled a proposal that would maintain the EPF transfer unchanged until March, 1984, subject to certain stipulations. This new proposal would allow two full years for consultations and discussion of ways of implementing the national objectives with respect to post-secondary education. My colleague the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) will be pursuing this matter.

There are other provisions as well modifying the fiscal arrangements act. Other provisions of the bill would extend those parts of the fiscal arrangements act dealing with the fiscal stabilization program, the personal income tax guarantee program, and the reciprocal taxation program.

Part II of the fiscal arrangements act authorizes the government to make fiscal stabilization payments for the period beginning April 1, 1977, and ending March 31, 1982. The bill provides for an extension of that authority for an indefinite period. The purpose of these payments is to protect provinces from sudden year to year losses in revenue as a result of a severe economic downturn in the national economy or, indeed, in their own economies. This provision has been of value to provinces when they borrow in foreign capital markets and we believe its value would be enhanced by making it of indefinite duration.

Part IV of the fiscal arrangements act authorizes the federal government to make revenue guarantee payments in cases of a serious disruption to provincial financial planning resulting from federal tax policy changes during the five-year period ending March 31, 1982. The bill extends the authority to make such payments to March 31, 1987. The purpose of this program is to encourage the maintenance of a common tax system across Canada.

Part VIII of the fiscal arrangements act authorizes the federal government to enter into reciprocal taxation agreements with provinces whereby provinces pay the federal manufacturers' sales tax and the federal government makes payments in respect of sales taxes, gasoline taxes and motor vehicle licence fees as if it were taxable. The bill provides for a few amendments to relevant sections of the act. The government continues to hope that in the interest of tax harmonization, the other four provinces will eventually enter into similar agreements.

The bill also provides for the transfer to oil producing provinces of their share of the federal revenues which accrued from the oil export charge from November 1, 1980, to January 32, 1982. It was originally intended that the provinces' share of export charge revenue, estimated to be approximately $450 million for the above 14-month period, would be transferred under authority contained in the energy security bill, that this transfer would be effective before March 31, 1982, and that 50 per cent of the revenues transferred would be equalized in 1981-82, as is done for other provincial revenues for non-renewable resources. However, it is now evident that sharing payments could not be made under this authority until the 1982-83 fiscal year.

The province of Saskatchewan has asked that some method be found to allow it to receive its share of the oil export charge before March 31, 1982. This is a reasonable request given that the revenues have actually accrued and are being held by the federal government pending the passage of legislation to authorize the sharing. It is in the light of these considerations that we have decided to include in this bill a special provision authorizing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to transfer the provincial share of the federal export charge that has accrued in respect of oil produced in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta from November 1, 1980, to January 31, 1982. The relevant provisions are in Part 11 of the bill.

The bill also authorizes the government to make payments to certain provinces equal to the amount of recoveries under the fiscal equalization program for the 1980-81, and 1981-82 fiscal years attributable to the June, 1981, population census.

It is very important to observe that preliminary data recently issued by Statistics Canada indicate that the estimated population of certain provinces is significantly lower in each of the two years mentioned than the pre-census population estimates used in computing equalization payments for those years. Because population is a key factor in determining a province's equalization entitlement, the equalization payments to all provinces must be recalculated on the basis of census estimates. This means that rather sizeable amounts would normally have to be recovered from provinces whose share of total census population is lower than that used in the pre-census estimates.

These recoveries are quite substantial. They certainly could create very serious problems for the five affected provinces whose fiscal capacity is below average. The fact of the matter is that, based on the revised population data issued by Statistics Canada, for the last two years the five provinces would have had to pay back to the federal treasury an amount of $217 million. I believe it ranges from $70 million in the case of Newfoundland to the amount of $30 million for the province of Manitoba, except for a lesser amount for the province of Prince Edward Island, with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick falling between Newfoundland and Manitoba. Certainly in the case of these provinces, the requirement to pay, which is in the law, would be very serious. As I recollect the figures, $70 million for the province of Newfoundland would be more than serious.

Therefore, following representations from the four Atlantic provinces and Manitoba, the government has agreed to make special payments which would fully offset the recovery of these post-census population adjustments from provinces applying for equalization in 1982-83. This is provided for in Part II of the bill. The payments would be determined by calculating a province's final entitlement to equalization for each of the two years mentioned, with pre-census population substituted for post-census population, and then deducting the amount obtained from the province's final equalization entitlement, which would continue to be based upon census population.

On this particular point I had detailed negotiations with the Premier of New Brunswick and the minister of finance of Newfoundland, as well as some discussions with the ministers from Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba. I am pleased that I have been given the authority by cabinet to include in the bill a provision that would waive the recovery of these amounts which were owing to the Government of Canada from the equalization receiving provinces.

I believe it is evident from what I have been saying that, since the tabling of the proposals in November, the government has gone a considerable way toward meeting the concerns expressed by the provinces. This is illustrated by the fact that four of the six provinces which will receive equalization have expressed their support for the new equalization formula provided for in the bill. Adoption of this legislation will make it possible for the federal government to contribute an estimated $105 billion for equalization, health care and post-secondary education over the next five years. That $105 billion speaks volumes about the strong role which the Government of Canada will continue to play in providing to Canadians the services that they need and deserve.

I know that members of the House of Commons are equally determined to ensure that equalization is maintained and strengthened. I know they are equally concerned that our support for post-secondary education and health is maintained and strengthened. I believe the sums provided for in the bill will carry out these commitments which we all share, and I hope the House will be able to give this bill careful study, but study that will not prevent the recipient provinces from receiving their payments at the appropriate time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, before I get into my remarks I want to draw your attention to the minister's mention of $105 billion. He will appreciate that it is only $105 billion if he counts the money the provinces raise in taxes. When the government starts counting money that the provinces raise in taxes as its contribution to established programs and other clearly provincial responsibilities and, through a press release, claims that it is giving the money to the provinces, it creates a rather false impression. I think the minister would probably want to correct the amount of cash he says is being transferred. Perhaps he should talk about the cash being transferred, not about what is supposed to be a nominal tax point average and so on, that the provinces might receive if they happen to levy taxes in accordance with the suggestions in his iniquitous budget of November 12.

The minister suggested that the provinces were going to be well off if they followed his budget. He said they would receive $685 million more this year if they went along with the budget. How would that happen, Mr. Speaker? In the case of the province of Quebec, it would have radically to change the corporate tax structure, as would Ontario and Alberta. Only if they made the massive amendments suggested by the minister would they get that kind of money. The money comes from capital cost allowances.

The November 12 budget tore industry apart in those provinces. It provided that industry and people in business in those provinces would have to settle for half capital cost allowances in the first year. But Mr. Speaker, that is when people need the money to buy assets; it is when business needs stimulus in order to get going. It is only if a government wants to rip business apart or wants to hurt its industry that it will adopt the stupid, idiotic course outlined in the November 12 budget which was declared a political disaster. That is the only way the provinces could come anywhere close to $685 million. That projection is based on an increase in the GNP. We know what has happened to Canada since November 12. We know that the projections in the November 12 budget, as the minister's projections usually are, were fraught with something that the minister must have been smoking.

The budget of November 12 called for equity. The minister said that the budget stood for equity, renewal and restraint. We know what kind of equity it produced—absolutely none. He made sure that people who earn over $53,334 per year pay less income tax and that 54 per cent of those earning under $30,000 pay more income tax. That is the minister's idea of equity.

The minister talked about renewal but made sure that there is no development in business and industry. We have seen people thrown out of their jobs. We have seen bankruptcies and farm foreclosures. We have seen the kinds of things that he promised in renewal. I do not know what kind of renewal it was, but the other day the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) called it a political disaster. I say it was an economic disaster. The minister knows that his budget provided no renewal.

Where is the restraint, Mr. Speaker? The only restraint shown in the budget of November 12 was the restraint on the money being transferred to the provinces—a restraint of nearly $1 billion in the reduction of EPF transfers to the provinces.

Let us go over the figures, Mr. Speaker, and not talk about the man in the moon ideas of the minister. The minister said that the provinces will get more money, but the blue book gives the answer, Mr. Speaker. The blue book shows that for health related matters about $4 billion will be transferred to the provinces this year. Last year roughly $4.3 billion was transferred in nominal dollars, ignoring inflation. The provinces will get $300 million less for health care, for hospitalization, medicare nursing homes for old people and extended health care. It will be $300 million less cash, Mr. Speaker.

For the year ending March 31, 1982, the minister will transfer $1.68 billion for post-secondary education. For the year 1982-83 only $1.5 billion will be transferred, which means a difference of $180 million less in nominal dollars going to the provinces. Yet the minister says more is going to the provinces. The blue book gives a different answer. In total, $480 million less cash will be transferred than was the case a year ago.

The established programs financing arrangements call for the amount of money to be transferred in accordance with the moving average of GNE. If the amount last year was increased on the moving average of GNE, instead of receiving $480 million less, the provinces would have been receiving $450 million more. In total, nearly $1 billion is being taken out of the hands of the provinces or is being taken out of post-secondary education and health care.

Let us not have any more smoke, mirrors or suggestions about what one obtains in taxes according to the budget. Let us not hear any more about how wonderful is the minister or how he is not cutting anything. The facts are that he is cutting $500 million from the cash last year and there should be another $500 million next year because of escalation and the moving GNE. Everyone knows that goods will be more expensive next year than they are this year; the rate of inflation has been 11 per cent to 12 per cent. Of course the minister should be transferring more. He should be transferring $500 million more, but he will be transferring $500 million less. This is what it is all about. This is what the blue book indicates, this is the record. Let us not have any more drivel and nonsense from the minister. The former member for Broadview-Greenwood spoke about smoke and mirrors. The minister provides lots of smoke, lots of mirrors and lots of illusions. This is what it is all about!

Let us talk about how expenses have been curtailed. I thumbed through the blue book and noticed that while the government can restrain medicare, hospitalization expenses by the provinces by $1 billion, it can give the National Film Board $7 million and the National Arts Centre another $3 million; it can increase foreign aid under CIDA from $802 million to $945 million, which is almost another $141 million; it can increase the CBC by $73 million, which is well over 15 per cent. These are the priorities of the government. Restraint is not one of the priorities of the government. The government's priorities are in its own power. The minister sees money which should go to the provinces to pay for established programs, and he says, "I cannot control those established programs, so let us cut them back; let us have more foreign aid; let us give more money to the CBC and to the Commissioner of Official Languages." We can say something about these departments, but the government restrains what Canadians want in terms of education for their children, education which ensures that the country grows and develops and ensures a supply of engineers and foresters, which we heard in committee were needed to build the country through the 1980s and 1990s.

What about the health care upon which all of us have come to depend? No, the government will spend money on foreign aid, the Commissioner of Official Languages and the CBC. They are important because the government controls them. It will spend less on the things it does not control. We could have restraint across the board, we could have budgetary restraint. I do not think anyone would object to that. I do not think anyone would object to each of us bearing his own share of the load; but let us not say that restraint is when the government transfers less money to the provinces, and that because less money has been transferred somehow expenditures have been restrained. This is not the case and the minister knows it. He knows that his budget costs, on a national accounts basis, will be up from $74 billion this year to $86 billion next year. There is no restraint. His expenses are up right across the board at 13.5 per cent.

The minister talked about the fact that the provinces were receiving too much money and that they had a fiscal balance in their favour. I remind him that the net after transfers by the federal government will amount to 38.3 per cent of the spending power or the taxes collected in the country in 1981. In 1978 it was only 32.3 per cent. In other words, the effect of the minister's actions over the past two years has been to increase the percentage of money spent by the federal government and to decrease proportionately the influence, power or spending of provincial and local governments.

We all know that this does not make much sense. Most of the services we receive are provided by the municipalities. They pick up the garbage, they run local primary and secondary schools, they look after local roads and such. The next most important service in society is education and health care which are supplied by provincial governments. When we look at what the federal government does for us, we wonder whether in truth it provides 38.1 per cent of what we receive from government, or is it to some extent not nearly worth 38.1 per cent?

The outlook is quite different than the minister suggested. According to figures published in the budget, between the current fiscal year and the 1983-84 year, the federal government expects to increase its revenue after transfers by 38.1 per cent and to increase its expenditures after transfers excluding public debt by 31.8 per cent. We must remember that the increase in transfers to other levels of government is rising 38 per cent on taxation and 31 per cent on expenditures, but the expenditure increase to provincial governments is only 13.7 per cent, which is very considerably less than the rate of inflation.

In terms of gross revenue received and relating revenue received to transfers to provinces, in 1978 28.4 per cent of the revenue of the Government of Canada went to other levels of government. Last year it was down to 22 per cent, and very shortly it will be down to 18 per cent. We have had a massive seizure of revenue-raising potential and expenditure plans by the federal government, which is now trying to squeeze even more out of local taxpayers, as it takes a greater and greater share of the national product. This might be appropriate in times of war, but in times of peace it is inappropriate. The fiscal arrangements task force analysed the appropriateness of the level of taxation and the level of government expenditure which should take place. Prior to the Second World War, and for a short time after, provincial expenditures were considerably more than federal ones. Indeed, the natural mean is for provincial and municipal expenditures to be about 70 per cent and for federal expenditures to be about 30 per cent.

I want to deal now with the question of equalization. The minister will know that equalization was thoroughly explored by the task force. For the minister's benefit, we analysed the question of the Ontario standard and threw it out as totally inappropriate. I am pleased that after consultation the minister has thrown it out as being totally inappropriate. We analyzed other forms of breakdown.

However, the minister has come up with a five-province theory. The five-province theme is probably a poor scheme for him. When we were analysing how we should work out an equalization formula, the task force accepted the concept that you have to put all provinces in the pot in terms of determining the representative tax system and in determining what equalization should be.

One of the problems of going to a situation, as in this bill, of using only five provinces for the standard is that you create a phony or unreal situation. There is no evidence that the five provinces now selected, being Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and B.C., are appropriate provinces for a mean average of Canada. Indeed, going back over the question of equalization over the years, we note the only province that has never received equalization is the province of Ontario. If we look at the fiscal capacity of Ontario, it will be noted that the fiscal capacity of Ontario province is deteriorating. Indeed, it would have been a situation under the present act whereby Ontario would have received significant sums of equalization. Under the amendments now proposed, Ontario probably will not receive equalization, but it could. What we have is an equalization situation where we try to spread and create an equal fiscal capacity for all provinces. But to pick out five provinces and say all of a sudden that it is their average that will be used will create a problem in the future.

I say that to the minister because one of the justifications the government has had for its raid on what was previously provincial sources of revenue—being taxation on natural resources—was that the federal government had to have revenue in order to treat provinces equally. In other words, to create the equalization we have had. But, first, when you take only five provinces as a standard, you lose a great deal of the justification for the taking of those revenues.

Second, when you have only five provinces you do not justify a federal national taxation system. At the moment that system is broken down. At one time the federal government was the tax agent for personal income tax and for corporate tax for all of Canada. Quebec now has its own personal and corporate tax system. Ontario has broken away with its corporate system, as well as Alberta. There is even the possibility of British Columbia setting up its own tax collection system. We are breaking away from this federal taxing system. However, when you use only five provinces for equalization, you create the tendency to break away from a national taxation system.

The formula given will produce a return to the provinces on equalization very much like the kind of formula recommended by the fiscal arrangements task force. That task force recommended—and I am pleased the minister has followed through—that a number of matters should be brought into the pot of provincial revenues to be equalized. Up to this point there have been 29 tax areas that have been equalized. This bill brings in a great many more. It breaks up old oil and new oil, as well as a number of other things not mentioned by the minister. There are municipal revenues from municipal taxation. The bill goes on further to mention municipal licence fees and the like, presumably for the sale of water and hydro by municipal utilities, etc. It takes those revenues or profits into account. That is good. I think had the task force gone on and felt that these were valid arrangements, the task force members would have said: "Good; we think all revenues should be brought in." I think the new equalization arrangement of bringing in new forms of revenue will improve the quality of equalization.

The minister says he is bringing in $16.5 billion of further provincial revenues to be equalized. He says that and sort of leaves the impression with the House—maybe I am mistaken—that somehow he was adding in more money to recipient provinces. That is not the case. Equalization is really a balancing act.

It is done by taking the income that an average province would receive and averaging out how all provinces receive income from a taxation source. We do that now from 32, 33 or 35 taxation sources or whatever it is. We average it out on a per head basis to find out whether a province is above or below average. The result is a balance.

Last year the provinces received $4.285 billion from this form of payment. According to the estimates, the provinces will receive $4.709 billion. The minister tries to give us the impression that this is of great benefit to the provinces, as though he had created a system that would make the provinces vastly more well off. But the minister does not tell us that he now has far greater access to oil and gas revenues than he ever had before. He does not point out that in 1980-1981 the amount of money transferred for equalization was 3.53 billion. Therefore, the increase is not much different than has always existed.

For the past three years equalization payments by the federal government to the provinces have increased by about half a billion per year. The reason for the increase is not the minister's fancy new formula, but because parts of the country do not have the fiscal capacity they should have. Equalization attempts to balance the fiscal capacity on a per capita basis between provinces. It does not take too much from the rich or give too much to the poor; it averages them out. The reason for this increase over the past three years is not the changing formulae; it is because an imbalance has occurred in the community. That imbalance has to be corrected by the federal government in accordance with our new Constitution because we have entrenched equalization in that Constitution. This is not a gift to the provinces; it is not something which the minister has that belongs to the federal government. It is something which the federal government exists to do. It is a question of fiscal balance and the responsibility of the government under the Constitution. It is no more and no less than that.

I wish now, Mr. Speaker, to turn to the question of revenue guarantees. The minister made a great thing about the fact that the revenue guarantee was some sort of protection to the provinces because of an arrangement made after tax reform came in on January 1, 1972. He said that really what we were doing was carrying on that arrangement and, you know, it is now 1982 and that is all past now and we do not need to worry about it. I want to quote what the minister said to the fiscal arrangements task force in his submission on April 23, 1981, in connection with revenue guarantees. On page 83 of his brief he said:

> The latter amount is the cash equivalent of one equalized personal income tax point per capita in 1975-76. This was part of the negotiated settlement. It was intended to provide compensation for termination of the 1972 Revenue Guarantee program and was given to the provinces on the condition that they agreed to integrate the hospital insurance program into the EPF arrangements on April 1, 1977. (The provinces had the option of continuing to receive shared cost entitlements for hospital insurance until July 15, 1980, when the hospital insurance agreements were due to expire.)

That revenue guarantee, Sir, was part of a deal in 1977. It was one equalized tax point in cash which was added to the deal to get the provinces to sign. It was not a revenue guarantee, it was added to a block transfer. How the provinces used that block transfer was nobody's business but theirs. They could use it any way they wanted to. There is nothing in the agreement which demanded the provinces use one iota of it for medicare or post-secondary education. They had a block transfer and they had the responsibility.

Let us now talk about what Donald Macdonald, the then minister of finance, said on third reading of the bill. Reading from page 4264 of Hansard for March 23, 1977, he said:

> We started off with the position from the revenue guarantee, which terminated as of the end of 1976, that there was no further obligation to pay. We met the provinces half way on that, split the difference, and settled the compromise. Even that was finally agreed to by the provinces. Sure they would have liked more. Sure, from the standpoint of our having to go to the federal taxpayer we would have liked to pay less. I think it was Premier Davis who said at the end of the meeting that it was as the result of a compromise between parties. The allegation was made that the final authority rested with the federal government and therefore they had to accept the fact. In a certain sense that is true, but it is also false.

For example, the arrangement with respect to the hospital program could not have been carried out by the federal government without the agreement of the provinces. This was their blocking point with respect to the established programs financing. As I said, they agreed with the principles and they are prepared to come up in this regard.

Sir, clearly there was no arrangement that revenue guarantees were separate, and all we have to do is look at the blue books for 1977, 1978 and 1979. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is here and he can tell us that nowhere in the blue book last year did it say there was a transfer for revenue guarantees.

What happened was that the block fund determined in the 1976 negotiations was arbitrarily split. Roughly 68 per cent was for health concerns and 32 per cent for post-secondary education. The cash for health concerns was broken down in some fashion and the minister of health wrote a cheque. The cash for post-secondary education was broken down and the minister responsible wrote a cheque. Nowhere did it say "revenue guarantee". Nowhere did it say anything about escalating $20 per year per capita, or whatever, for extended health care. And for the government to come along and say that somehow for all of this period of time the revenue guarantee is something else, is for the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to say: "I have been sucking along for five years and now I want to whistle." The trouble, Sir, is that he has too many soda crackers in his mouth to whistle. He will not be believed. Nowhere in the record did he say anything about that.

The whole question of revenue guarantee was thoroughly analysed by the task force, Mr. Speaker. On page 7 of their recommendations they said:

—that the division of the EPF program transfer (that is, the total EPF transfer excluding that portion associated with termination of the revenue guarantee) be allocated to the health and post-secondary components in the proportions established in 1977.

They conclude that:

—by virtue of the internal allocation established by the federal government, fiscal transfers associated with the revenue guarantee must now be considered part of the health care package and/or post-secondary education transfers and should therefore be allocated, in the renewed EPF arrangements, to health and/or post-secondary education, in proportions to be negotiated.

Sir, that should deal with that issue. The minister should forget about that and come clean with us. If he wants to reduce money flowing to the provinces by a billion dollars, then he should come clean with the provinces and say so; but let him not confuse the subject with some spurious statement about revenue guarantees no longer being applicable and with the assertion that that revenue guarantee is in relation to the 1972 change to the Income Tax Act. That is nonsense and the minister knows it. He has admitted it is and he should not come before us now and try to con us more.

I want to deal next with the question of cash and tax transfers and how they work out in relation to post-secondary education and health care. The transfers under the EPF are a mixture of cash and tax points. Up until now each province received 50 per cent of its allocation in cash, and the balance of 50 per cent was made up of tax transfers plus cash. In other words, no matter how well a province did under the tax system—if it did really well, as Alberta has been doing lately—that province got all the money it got out of the tax system and 50 per cent cash. On the other hand, if a province was not doing so well—like Ontario lately—and it was not raising enough revenue through equalized tax points, it got what it raised in taxes plus enough to bring it up to 50 per cent in cash and then another 50 per cent in cash. That is how these transfers were worked out.

Under the bill the minister, as he says, follows the prescription of the task force and says we will treat it all as one; the provinces take the money they get out of the tax points, and whatever money is required to bring them up to the full EPF transfer we make up in cash so that each province is treated equally. Those provinces which have the ability to raise more money on tax points do not receive extra benefits because, after all, as the minister points out, they can afford it. I have some concerns about that in the long run. There is nothing wrong with that in the short run, but I would be concerned if in the long run the amount of federal transfers for these programs diminished to the extent that the amount of cash to some provinces became virtually nil. We might then run into some serious concerns about established programs and federal standards.

The task force spent a great deal of time dealing not with the question of whether there should be revenue guarantees but with the necessity of maintaining transfers for health care and post-secondary education. With respect to health care the task force concluded that the present block-funding arrangements should have stricter conditions and monitoring enforcement mechanisms that would provide effective mechanisms to ensure compliance with national program conditions. They say:

For this purpose, it will be necessary to establish operational program criteria, perhaps monitored by a parliamentary committee or a national health council, with federal payments conditional on compliance with program criteria, but conditional in a flexible manner—

They go on to say:

—that the Minister of National Health and Welfare report to Parliament—

The report concludes that hospital and medical care premiums should perhaps not form part of taxation, and so forth.

There are a number of recommendations in the task force report suggesting that Parliament monitor effects on health care and concerning how money transferred by this Parliament to the provinces is spent. The same generally is the case with respect to post-secondary education. In that regard we recommended that the first ministers' commitment made in 1976 with respect to consultation be honoured. We suggested that there is a federal interest in post-secondary education in terms of manpower training, that there should be consultation in relation to goals for future higher education and that in particular the council of ministers of education report annually to Parliament about transfers and the appropriateness of federal support programs.

What has happened is that the federal government had some leverage and has now decided that its leverage is not important at all. The federal government has elected to forgo any leverage it had with respect to education and health care. How did that happen? The federal government has taken $1 billion this year from what it would normally have transferred in cash to the provinces. The federal government has decided to cut that back. In so doing it has made it virtually impossible for any of the recommendations of the task force concerning monitoring and splitting block funds into two separate blocks, one for education and one for health care, to be carried out. There can be no monitoring of any federal influence on how educational programs or medical care programs can best be worked out for Canada as a whole. The federal government has abandoned all that completely. When the minister takes this money away, he in effect hangs the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) out to dry. Perhaps she should be held out to dry.

I want to refer to some questions asked of the Minister of National Health and Welfare by my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) who is here today. As recorded at page 14610 of Hansard for February 3, in answer to the hon. member's question, the minister said:

> Other than that, the member should know, because I think I stated it a few times in answers to him, that we are planning the first of a series of conferences on renewing medicare, at which time I will put to my provincial colleagues the new rules of the game to strengthen medicare. He knows this is not a simple black and white matter where we can suddenly withhold payment and slow down services. I do not see how that would help people who have health problems.
> It is true that we are manoeuvring around these various roadblocks—

One of the roadblocks she was talking about is quite clear now. That roadblock happens to be the Minister of Finance. The Minister of National Health and Welfare huffs and puffs, hems and haws and talks about the great things she is going to do in acting on the Hall commission report. She says she is upset about things like balanced billing and extra billing. She says she is all worked up about extra charges in hospitals. She goes about the country talking this way, but she is actually nothing more than a pussycat with no power whatsoever. She has no control or clout. She might as well resign. If the minister thinks she will have any power at all in terms of reviving, improving and changing medicare, she should not worry; if she has been upsetting some members of the medical profession who are opting out, they need not worry because she has no control. She has lost all the control in the cabinet she had; she is down the drain.

According to the same issue of Hansard to which I previously referred, the minister went on to say that the cost to her department would be increased in the coming five years by an average of 13.4 per cent. The minister's mathematics are rather strange. This year the amount of money passing from her department to medical care and medical concerns is decreased by 8 per cent. She says there will be a 13.4 per cent increase. The dear minister cannot add or subtract. In view of this bill, I suggest her only recourse is to hand in her resignation. That would be the responsible thing to do. But I am not so sure she will do that. She has already indicated that she does not think that the budget is too good, but she still stays on. Here again she has shown to the House and to the nation her incompetence. She cannot add or subtract, she cannot figure out a percentage. When we see transfers for medical concerns reduced by 8 per cent a year and she says they are going up 13.4 per cent, we know that this minister is finished politically and is without clout.

Mr. Speaker, it is not just that minister that is finished. The former premier of the province of Nova Scotia, that brave province, is now the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan). He claimed, in answer to questions by me, as reported in Hansard of February 10, 1982, at page 14855, that there was going to be more funds. He said there was going to be an increase of 12 per cent in each year for the next three years. His parliamentary secretary, speaking in the late show debate, at page 15090 on February 16, 1982, had this to say:

> The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) offered to continue the present EPF program and give it a 12 per cent increase per year until March 1984. The hon. member may want to call an increase of 12 per cent a cut. I cannot rewrite the dictionary.

I do not know what he was talking about. Where is the 12 per cent increase per year, for three years, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was talking about, according to the Secretary of State and the parliamentary secretary? We cannot find that increase. We find a reduction in the cash by 8 per cent this year. We find that the amount goes up by the moving average of the GNE but there is no arrangement in this bill for an extension for post-secondary education, any monitoring of the activities of councils of ministers of education. So we have a Secretary of State who comes to us and he huffs and he puffs and he says that the transfers for education are going to go up by 12 per cent, but they are going down by 8 per cent. He proudly tells a meeting of the Canadian Association of University Teachers that they are going to have no cuts, that they are going to be better off and are going to get more money. He even tells his own university in the city of Halifax that they are going to get more money. He has to look at the blue book where the transfers of post-secondary education are reduced from $1.65 billion last year to $1.5 billion this year. That is his record. On that basis, having made those representations, he has no alternative but to give up his ministry.

Mr. Speaker, the task force committee was made up of four Liberal members, two members from this party, myself and the member from Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), and one from the New Democratic Party, the hon. member from Winnipeg-Birds Hill. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) was chairman. The hon. members from Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and Verchères (Mr. Loiselle), both from the province of Quebec, were there. The hon. member for Scarborough

West (Mr. Weatherhead) was there; he was on the Liberal team.

That team unanimously made a number of recommendations. I wonder how the member for Scarborough West is going to vote on this bill. I remember time after time in the committee meetings across Canada he boasted about the fact that his daughter was at Queen's University. He told students there would be no reduction in post-secondary education transfers. I wonder how that member is going to vote when this issue comes up. I wonder if he is going to vote the same way as he did with respect to the budget, after his comments concerning the budget.

I wonder also how the hon. member for Gloucester will vote. He so proudly talked about his alumni from his alma mater, the University of Moncton. I wonder how he is going to vote when he sees these transfers reduced for post-secondary education.

I really wonder how the hon. members for Vaudreuil and Verchères will vote. They were so proud of the Quebec medicare system. They said that the doctors in Quebec cannot send an extra bill. They said that medicare is free in Quebec and doctors are not entitled to overbill or opt out, and if they do, their patients do not get paid, the additional fees. Oh no, that cannot happen. That is the kind of report that was presented and they stood behind medicare there. They were proud of their system; they were proud of the fact that the province of Quebec, alone among the provinces in Canada, spends more money on post-secondary education, proportionately, than any other province. I am sure they are going to be able to stand up and vote according to their conscience, and according to the way they voted in committee. That is their obligation; their obligation is to point out to the Minister of Finance where he has gone wrong. Somewhere along the line they have an obligation to their colleagues in the committee to stand up for the report of the committee.

We all signed the report, Mr. Speaker. I will quote two paragraphs from that report. In Chapter X, on page 193, we said:

> We hope that the general message of this long and complex report is clear, however. We are agreed that the programs examined in the course of our work are serving vital social needs and merit undiminished support. Over-all funding of these programs should, in our view, be maintained at no less than current levels. In our appraisal of the programs falling within our order of reference, we identified none in which reductions in over-all levels of funding could be undertaken without a serious risk that important program goals and standards would be jeopardized.
> We are all agreed, therefore, that federal-provincial negotiations should be directed toward the goal of undiminished funding for both the health and post-secondary sectors supported through EPF and the social security programs financed in part through CAP.

Down further on that same page we say:

> It is our view that there is now, for the most part, no fat left in the system—no fat in post-secondary education, no fat in the health system, no excess spending in social assistance, little redundancy in social services. We accept the representations of those who argued before the task force that serious cuts in program funding would cut into muscle and sinew, not fat. Unless one could presume that federal reductions in funding would automatically be matched by corresponding increases in provincial expenditures—a presumption that may not be considered altogether plausible—then in order to maintain present standards, programs would have to be privately financed to a greater extent than at present. In health, this would mean greater appeal to user charges and more extra-billing; in education, higher fees. In either case, basic national objectives of equity and equality of access would suffer.

This country is going to see the basic qualities of equity and accessibility suffer. We are going to have higher student fees, we are going to have increased provincial taxes. This business of restraint is a transfer of a federal expense to a provincial expense. It would be different if the federal take of taxes in the country were going down, but it is not, it is going up. It is going up by 13.5 per cent. So we are going to have the provinces forced to add in something. We will wind up with people paying for going to operating rooms or for using emergency centres in hospitals. We will wind up with doctors having extra billing and maybe a two-level medicare system.

There is no rationalization here, Mr. Speaker. It may be that our country is not doing as well as it once did. It may be that we are not as affluent as we once were. It may be that we have to restrain ourselves. It may be that the government must cut back on expenditures. But to the public out there, there is no apparent cutback in expense. Our salaries were not cut back, nor was the cost of running the House of Commons, the foreign aid bill or the salaries of senior civil servants. What was cut back was what the public wanted, what people demanded. I read briefly from the representation made to the task force by the Canadian Medical Association:

> The delivery of health care has become interwoven with the fabric of government and intergovernmental financing arrangements. The people of Canada invariably rate health care insurance—medicare—as the most valuable, most appreciated service provided by government. We believe that the public ascribe that connotation to government in the generic sense of the word, not specifically related to either the federal or provincial government.

What we have, then, is a cutting back of that which the federal government somehow does not control, and spending, spending, spending on that which the federal government does control. The time has come when this budget, with these arrangements made in the budget and since negotiated in this bill, should be set aside for perhaps a year or two so that we can reorient our priorities.

I am not saying that we do not need to cut back. As a country we cannot go on spending as though we were earning. We could be earning if we were properly directed, represented and organized financially, but we cannot go on in a willy-nilly fashion. We must set aside this cutback on post-secondary education and health care transfers and analyse where these cutbacks fit in with other things that should be cut back.

Ask somebody whether he would like an increase in the CBC budget and a decrease in the medicare budget. Ask somebody if he would like to see $141 million more go to a CIDA project for foreign aid while at the same time having his kids pay a great deal more for university tuition or not ensuring that the books are in the library and that the university is able to work well. Ask Canadians what their priorities are.

Let us remove those provisions from the bill and go ahead with the equalization arrangements. Let us go ahead with the other projects, but with respect to established programs financing, EPF, let us get some reason.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy)—The Economy—Inquiry whether minister will meet provincial ministers to establish program to stimulate economic recovery; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Regional Economic Expansion—Request for measures to assist industries in Nova Scotia; the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett)—External Affairs—(a)Canada-United States agreement on testing of Cruise missiles. (b) Request that agreement be tabled.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin this debate on equalization and established programs financing, or as they are also known, federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, by pointing out that the situation in which Parliament and particularly members of the opposition find themselves in is similar to the situation which led to the event known as "The Bells" over the past few weeks. By this I mean that we have before us a false dilemma.

The finance minister claims that this legislation has to go through by the end of the month. Of course, it creates a lot of pressure when a bill is brought in ten or 12 days before the end of the month when the legislation has to be passed. It is only the equalization aspects of the financial arrangements which expire at the end of March. The established programs financing aspect of the legislation could well continue past March 31, 1982, and be presumably debated for a much lengthier period of time, and it deserves to be debated for a much longer period of time.

It is in the proposals of the government with regard to established programs financing for health care and post-secondary education that I find the most offence. Yet, we are in the situation of being presented with a package and not having the ability or the opportunity to debate it as long as it deserves.

It is appropriate to reflect for a minute on the debate that occurred the last time the established programs financing arrangements were set out by this Parliament in 1977. I have had the opportunity to look through some of the debates at that time. Our party was concerned about the fiscal arrangements coming into place at that time. Tommy Douglas, our spokesman and former leader of the party, expressed the concern of the NDP that the block-funding arrangements would lead to an erosion of health care standards in the country. He said it would lead to the situation spoken about earlier where the federal government would not have leverage over the provinces. The provinces would be given too free a hand as far as standards were concerned.

I hate to be an "I-told-you-so", but the fact is that many of the concerns expressed at that time by Mr. Douglas have turned out to be quite legitimate. I hope the government might learn from history and listen to members of the opposition, particularly the NDP, on this issue because we have a concern about medicare. We have made predictions about Liberal actions in this area in the past and on the whole they have turned out to be remarkably accurate. I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), his parliamentary secretary and others who will participate in the debate this afternoon to consider that they might be wrong and to consider the predictions I am about to make as to what the present proposals will do to medicare. Consider that they might be as accurate and as legitimate as the concerns expressed by my party five years ago when the government was setting out its proposals for fiscal arrangements.

Our concern about the established programs financing is that there is going to be a cutback in the support for health care and post-secondary education. I would like Liberal backbenchers to listen to me. If they accept the rhetoric of their party and the finance minister on this, they are being deceived.

As the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) pointed out, the revenue guarantee is a fiction. It has had no status since 1977. It is simply a term for an agreement between the federal government and the provinces which expired in 1977. While they were renegotiating the established program financing, the provinces were grumbling that this revenue guarantee agreement had expired and that the federal government was attempting to negotiate an agreement in a completely different area. The federal government told the provinces that it realized they were unhappy about the expiry of the revenue guarantee and would therefore throw in so much more money to sweeten the EPF pot and enhance the bargain. It asked the provinces if it would go for this proposal and they said they would.

There was an extra amount of money contributed to the established programs financing. It did not have the name "revenue guarantee". It went into a program called established programs financing. Unless I have a complete misunderstanding of linguistics, it seems to me that when you contribute money to a program called established programs financing, it is money for programs.

The fact of the matter is that the Liberal government itself saw the revenue guarantee this way. It went across Canada, particularly at the beginning of 1979, self-righteously quoting the percentage of federal spending on health care and post-secondary education which included the revenue guarantee. They were quoting these figures to the provinces and would indicate to a province that the federal percentage of spending had risen to 56 per cent in "x" province, for example, while the province's expenditure had gone down to 44 per cent and wasn't that terrible. They were pounding the hustings with these figures which they then completely disowned in their budget and now in this particular proposal. For five years those funds attributable to the revenue guarantee, which were thrown in to sweeten the bargain in 1977 were said by the Liberal government to be used for health care and post-secondary education, and they chastised the provinces for not spending that money for that purpose, from one end of the country to the other.

I admit that those provinces which adopted those arguments talked themselves into a corner. The provinces have said the contrary, that the money attributable to the revenue guarantee was not earmarked. They said they did not have to spend it on health care and post-secondary education. In fact, some provinces said that the money which they received through the tax point transfers was not earmarked and they were not accountable for that money. The fact is that the Liberal government said that those funds were to be used for health care and post-secondary education. We supported their position. It was our belief that the money was earmarked for those two particular programs.

The irony of this situation, which I have been trying to articulate since the budget, is that the Minister of Finance is now beginning to sound like the provinces when he says that the money is not for health care and post-secondary education. We refer to this situation as the irony in the task force report on fiscal arrangements. The federal government now appears to have adopted the views of the provinces and the provinces seem to have adopted the views of the federal government.

After seeing this irony and considering the various alternatives of how this money which is attributable to the compensation for the termination of the revenue guarantee can be used, what were the recommendations of the task force? The task force said that by virtue of the federal government's own internal allocation over the years the revenue guarantee should be regarded as money for health care and post-secondary education. The reason for this view was that we did not want to see any reduction in the over-all funding for those programs. In addition, there is the question of consistency and, I submit, of honesty. If the federal government has taken the position for the last five years that the money was provided for health care and post-secondary education, it cannot withdraw that perception whenever it feels it is convenient to do so. We will not let the Minister of Finance get away with that kind of sophistry.

No matter how many times the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) rises to say that she has obtained a 12 per cent or 13 per cent increase in funding, it is clear that the percentage she is talking about is a percentage of the base without the revenue guarantee. When you take into account that revenue guarantee, the result is approximately a 4.6 per cent increase and really an 8 per cent reduction. Those are the facts.

What will be the consequences of this? Not only will there be less money for these programs, which is a serious consequence in itself, but the political consequences, as I see it, will be even greater. The Minister of Finance is creating a political context, indeed, the political pretext for the provincial governments—at least some of them—to blame the federal government for the erosion of medicare. There are those provinces which are not philosophically wild about medicare. The province of Ontario is one example. The difficult economic times we are experiencing would have been reason enough for some provinces to say they have to find more ways of obtaining private funding for their publically funded health care programs. They are beginning to do so already, but now the federal government has aided and abetted those forces which would like to dismantle the extent to which the medicare system is publically funded.

Once again, this is an irony. The Minister of Finance introduced medicare in the House when he was the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I suggest that he is now creating a political scenario which will eventually lead to the erosion of medicare as a national health care system. There will be those provinces which will, for various reasons, not see their health care standards eroded; but mark my words: the Minister of Finance has created the political pretext for governments such as the Ontario government—which does not want medicare in any event—to introduce more private funding mechanisms while using the federal government as an excuse for doing it.

I wish to make it clear that I do not feel that the provinces were without guilt in the past or will be in the future, but as a member of the House of Commons of Canada, it is my responsibility to point out to the government what it is doing wrong. It is not sufficient for members opposite to blame the provinces, two wrongs do not make a right. As a result of the Liberal government adding to the restraint which has been practised by so many provinces, particularly in health care, since the 1977 agreement, the problems which face medicare have become compounded rather than improved.

In that respect, the confidence with which the Minister of Finance claims that the government's proposals are in tune with those of the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial arrangements is completely false. The federal government has followed through with some recommendations of the task force, but they are not central to the over-all political and social impact of this particular proposal. For example, the task force recommended that municipal property taxes be included in the equalization scheme. That has been done. The task force recommended that there be an equal per capita entitlement in EPF. That has been done. These are some of the recommendations of the task force which have been adopted, but recommendations such as the one with regard to the revenue guarantee being money used for anything other than health care and post-secondary education have been ignored by the government and there is absolutely no way to read the report otherwise.

With respect to equalization itself, the proposal of the government for the five-province standard has only been in existence for about a month. I believe it was first proposed to the provinces at the first ministers' conference in February. We are expected to pass this particular proposal by the end of the month, however. The provinces have not had a decent chance to look at it nor have we in this House had a decent chance to look at it. The number crunching will go on for weeks in an attempt to figure out who is losing and who is gaining from this new equalization scheme proposed in the bill. It is very complicated, Mr. Speaker. The complication of the census figures, the relationship between the EPF equalized tax points, the budget tax changes, what the provinces will collect as a result of those changes and what they will receive in cash, is difficult to understand. I do not believe that the government has provided enough time for Members of Parliament, let alone the public, to understand what is going on. That is why I deeply regret that the government decided to bring these measures forward in a package.

The hon. member for Mississauga South referred to a question that I put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare last month. I asked whether she would consider graduating the withholding of funds when provinces do not meet certain national standards. Of course, the question presupposes that the minister would get around to defining what she or the government means by national standards. The medicare crisis has been with us since 1979—some people say since the fall of 1978; actually it has been with us since the last fiscal arrangements were negotiated. Since then we have had the Hall report and the report of the task force, but there has been no action on national standards. There have only been vague promises of meetings with health ministers in the future.

This proposal makes it less likely that when the Minister of National Health and Welfare meets with her counterparts to negotiate national health care standards, she will be able to obtain a ban on extra billing or whatever she has in mind. We are never quite sure what that is. The government cannot, on the other hand, ask the provinces to accept tougher and therefore more expensive health care standards while, on the other hand, taking money from them or while acting unilaterally on equalization at the same time that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is saying that co-operative federalism is dead. The minister cannot expect to act in a complete political vacuum. What she wants to accomplish can only be done with the co-operation of the provinces. The actions of her colleagues make it impossible for her to meet her goals. That is the terrible irony of the situation, Mr. Speaker. If she is as serious about health care in this country as she sounds, then it is about time she began to stand up to the Minister of Finance about the cutbacks in health care and post-secondary education and to the Prime Minister who goes around the country bad mouthing co-operative federalism. Until they are put in their place, what she says she has in mind is not likely to come about.

So far, I have tended to concentrate on the medicare question, but I should now like to turn to the question of post-secondary education, Mr. Speaker. Over the course of the last few weeks thousands and thousands of students have tried to bring their concerns to the attention of politicians. They are rightly concerned that the cutbacks that begin at this level will filter down and mean higher tuition fees, fewer books in the libraries and a reduced quality of education. There is not just the question of the effect of the cutbacks; there is also the question of motive, which is suspect on two grounds. First, there is the general suspicion that we ought to have of any government which, when it is faced with a deficit, declares that it must go after health care and education to alleviate the situation. I think this is an indication that its priorities are all fouled up. I hope to get back to that matter, Mr. Speaker.

The second suspicion concerns the approach that the federal government seems to be taking to post-secondary education. All the hints and approaches that we see seem to suggest that it wants to turn our universities and community colleges into instruments of the national economy—that it wants to reduce education to an economic instrument. It is angry at the universities because they are not turning out the kind of people it wants. It would like to have greater leverage in the post-secondary education community, and so it proposes to cut back the money for them and use it somewhere else in a more manipulative fashion in order to bring the university community into line. This is a serious situation, Mr. Speaker. We find ourselves with a government that wants to redefine post-secondary education and make it instrumental to its own larger economic goals.

I am not saying that people should not have good advice and be trained for the jobs that actually exist. On this side we are very well aware of the difficulties of planning for training to meet the economic needs of the future. We would like to see some work done on that question. I am worried about some of the rhetoric that I hear from cabinet ministers, however, and the rhetoric that I see in the various documents issued by the government which seem to indicate that it wants the post-secondary education system to wither or become something that is only instrumental to what the government perceives as the needs of the economy.

I said that the government's motives in regard to post-secondary education were suspect for two reasons. The first is that we must be suspicious of any government which, when there is a deficit, looks to health care and post-secondary education as a way of meeting it.

One of the findings of the task force did not receive too much attention, Mr. Speaker. It was to the effect that the fiscal imbalance, which the government has been talking about for a number of years, is a fiction—that there is no structural imbalance between the fiscal capacity of the federal government and the fiscal capacity of the provinces. There is no reason for the federal government to feel sorry for itself and cut back on transfers to the provinces because it thinks the provinces are spending more money than it is. It never mentions that one reason for this is the decisions taken by the Liberal government. Mr. Speaker, the Liberals always act as if they had just arrived here when actually, of course, they have presided over many of the decisions that led to the situations they now lament. The task force concluded that there was no fiscal imbalance; that is, that the deficit that the Minister of Finance wants to correct is a discretionary deficit. It is an accumulation of political choices made by the Liberal Party and by the Liberal government over the years. The deficit has grown, for reasons other than the established programs financing, and faster than the rate at which the money spent on established programs financing has grown. To turn around and do anything to suggest that these are the kinds of programs which are at the root of or the cause of the deficit is, in my view, totally repugnant. By taking this avenue out of the deficit, rather than having the political guts to raise the money which is out there by closing tax loopholes which should have been closed in the last budget, instead of the ones that were closed, the Liberal government is attacking medicare and post-secondary education.

In principle we are against that strategy; we are against it symbolically and practically. We were against it when it was followed by Progressive Conservative provincial governments across the country which really never gave block funding a chance. We were against block funding, but speaking in sympathy with it for a moment, one of the reasons block funding never got a good opportunity was that it was coincident with the existence of seven or eight Progressive Conservative governments across the country which used the freedom under the new system to save money, not to innovate, to spend on new programs or to do the very best possible within the system. It was as simple as that.

In this case we have the Liberals aping the provincial Conservatives. During the course of the debate we hope that they will be persuaded—but we do not really believe that they will be persuaded; we do not expect that any more, do we—to see the folly of their ways with regard to cutbacks in established programs financing and not follow down the road of their Conservative colleagues who would sacrifice these programs to attacks on their respective deficits.

That is about all I have to say at this point. I suspect my time is running out in any event. The point has been made that what the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare are telling the nation, quite simply, is just not true. They are taking a great risk with the medicare program and with post-secondary education. They are contributing to a political scenario which I believe will be very damaging to medicare over the short and the long run. They are acting with regard to federalism in a way which will further contribute to the lack of co-operation we have witnessed over the last while. I think it is a tragedy, and I hope they will see fit to change their minds, even at this eleventh hour.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, perhaps one of the strengths of our arguments, which should be mentioned early in the debate, is that I do not know of very many times when the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), coming as they do from quite different parts of the political spectrum, would find complete agreement on the facts, as they have shown by their comments thus far in the debate. Perhaps this might add to the hon. members' suggestions that backbenchers opposite should take seriously the claims being made about the facts represented in the bill.

I must say that I was somewhat worried when I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill commence his speech today by linking the suggestion that the bill should be split to a mention of the bells. For a moment I expected the infamous motion. Of course he is correct that the package makes it very difficult to consider the bill. We had hoped, perhaps as a result of the experience of the last while, that we would no longer see packages that tie the House to a timetable on one necessary part of the bill and at the same time restrain adequate debate on another part of the bill to which the mandatory timetable does not apply. Therefore, one wonders why the bill was introduced in this way.

I listened with great interest to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) had to say today. I had hoped he would tell us why it was necessary to tie the two parts together under that timetable. Among other things, he did not tell us that. Also it became clear today that, unlike the budget, the Minister of Finance had at least read this bill before presenting it to the House. This indicates that perhaps he is, more than anyone realizes, no longer willing to negotiate any of the matters in the bill, that it is all a "done" thing.

I noted with great interest his particular comments with regard to the source of these proposals being his deliberate commitment in the budget to these matters. This may in fact suggest that what he has been saying for some months, namely, that other matters in the budget are open for further representation and negotiation by Canadians, is equally untrue. This is extremely worrisome.

I have some substantive comments I want to make, but perhaps I can preface them by saying that when I was a little boy in Toronto—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bosley: The hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) will know to what I am referring. When I was a little boy in Toronto, if I was lucky, I was taken to the then art gallery of Toronto, which is now the Art Gallery of Ontario. On Saturday mornings there were sessions for young people, which was one way in which we were encouraged to take an interest in the arts. A morning show was put on for children, the star of which was a gentleman known as Peter the Magician. He also performed at the toy department of Eaton's. As children, most of us thought that we would never see again the likes of Peter the Magician. He had an incredible capacity for sleight of hand. I listened today to the Minister of Finance, and I think Peter the Magician has met his equal. The suggestion that one can take $111 billion over five years, cut it to $105 billion and say, "I have not cut but have increased", is a sleight of hand worthy of Peter the Magician.

Also I was reminded of one of the most famous debates which occurred between the Oxford and the Harvard debating teams. The Harvard team rolled in with reams of facts, impressive lists of facts, and used statistics which boggled the mind and numbers which spewed out of card file systems. In response, the captain of the Oxford debating team simply looked at the captain of the Harvard team and said, "I have listened with great interest to all the items mentioned by the captain of the Harvard debating team. I have to say to him in humility that much of what he said was true and much of what he said was relevant. Unfortunately none of what he said that was true was relevant, and none of what he said that was relevant was true." This is the exact thing I want to pursue with regard to what we heard today. For example, the minister made a great deal of the changes in federal spending power from 1961 to 1981. He indicated that the federal share in advance of transfer payments had dropped from 57 per cent to 49 per cent, and that the total revenue pie, after transfers, had dropped from 50 per cent to 37 per cent. Those are true figures but they are irrelevant to the issue. The issue is a change in procedures agreed to originally by the provinces and the federal government, for the purposes of this debate, in 1971 and modified in 1976 and 1977. If one wants to use relevant figures in order somehow to prove a point, one should at least use figures which relate to the period of time about which we are talking. I understand why the minister did not use those figures. It was because they do not make his case. In fact, they make the opposite case. Not surprisingly, he would not quote them to the House, but I will.

In the period from 1971 to 1981, federal revenues after transfers increased by 286.5 per cent. Federal expenditures after transfers increased by 339.6 per cent. Federal transfers to other levels of government increased by only 225.2 per cent. Those numbers are all large numbers, Mr. Speaker. But between 1971 and 1981 the federal government has increased its share of spending on everything else. It can hardly argue now that it must reduce transfer payment requirements, because it has been giving away all spending power to the provincial governments. The figures are clear. The figures are from the minister's own budget document. The minister ought at least to use the accurate figures relating to the period of time that he is talking about if he ever wants to convince anybody that somehow the federal government has been hard done by during that period of time.

If the minister's figures are irrelevant, we might go to one of the minister's relevant comments. His most relevant comment occurred, I suggest, in the debate today when he pleaded on behalf of restraint. The minister suggested that because the government is so committed to restraint on the 80 per cent—and I will return in a moment to the topic of the government's commitment to restraint—that as it is doubling the advertising budget and buying two new planes for cabinet ministers, the government clearly must be committed to restraint on the 20 per cent that goes to the provinces under these programs. That is certainly a relevant argument, but it is simply not true.

It is not true that the government proposes to restrain its spending on the other 80 per cent. Those figures are equally from the minister's own documents. The hon. member for Mississauga South spoke about this, and I will expand on these figures. They are very revealing. According to figures published in the budget, between the current fiscal year and 1983-1984 the federal government expects to increase its revenues after transfers by 38.1 per cent; to increase its expenditures after transfers—excluding public debt interest, which under this government is likely to become a horrendous figure—by 31.8 per cent, while increasing its transfer payments to other levels of government by only 13.7 per cent. That is considerably less than the expected rate of inflation over that period. Consequently, according to the government's own figure, contrary to the claim of the Minister of Finance, relevant as it was but not true, transfers as a percentage of federal revenues will drop from their projected 1982-1983 level of 21.3 per cent to 18.3 per cent in 1983-1984. But the share of federal expenditures, again including public debt interest, will fall from a projected level of 23.8 per cent in 1981-1982 to 21.2 per cent by 1983-1984. Those figures would compare to levels—and these are most revealing—of 25.1 per cent for revenues and 28.0 per cent for expenditures in 1971. Not only has the government chosen, as is its privilege, to increase its spending rapidly and dramatically on everything else, but it is now choosing to reduce the share of its budget that will go to programs which support the basic services on which Canadians rely across this country, delivered to them by provincial governments, originally at the request of the federal government. This is a point to which I will return later.

To suggest, therefore, that the reason these transfer payments need to be restrained is the restraint program globally, implies that the federal government was actually proposing to restrain the rest of its spending and taxation of Canadians. Perhaps in that context it would be fair to restrain transfer payments.

I think most Canadians are well aware that restraint must now be the order of the day until the economy grows again.

Most Canadians understand that the economy is not going to grow again until governments of the day—notably the government opposite—truly begins to restrain its take of the economic pie; otherwise there will be no economic pie to tax, there will be no money to transfer. In spite of all this, the government proposes to increase its revenues in the first two fiscal years by 52 per cent, according to the minister's last budget. It is proposing to increase both its spending and its taxation at a rate substantially greater than inflation, substantially greater than the transfer payments, which are taking a real dollar cut, and the government is then arguing that the transfer payments for medical care and university support are simply being restrained in line with the government's over-all budget. But the facts do not bear out that claim. I repeat that if they did, there would be some logic to what the minister is saying. I am convinced that he will have a very difficult time explaining this. He has already had a difficult time. But he will have difficulty explaining why the government was justified in taxing people more and more and putting less and less in real dollars into the services on which they rely. For instance, it will be very difficult to explain this to students over the next two or three years who will find themselves faced with tuition increases. What about those who will be faced with increases in OHIP in the province of Ontario? The minister will have a very difficult time explaining those increases.

To understand this government's logic, which says, "We have to restrain transfer payments just like we are restraining everything else," you would have to see a real dollar doubling in transfer payments over the next five years, because that is what the government is doing with everything else. But the government is saying that in real dollars, transfer payments will fall. This is very similar to the way the government has treated those who live on the guaranteed income supplement. The government promised in the election campaign an increase of $35 per person, but when it was elected it granted only $35 a household. But this government has also hit people with nearly $1,400 in new indirect energy taxes per household over the next five years, with no corresponding tax cut for those who are on GIS. In other words, the current strategy of Allan J. MacEachen, The Magician, is to say to Canadians, "First, I will give you $35 more per household, but in return you get taxed $1,400 per household." People are supposed to believe they are better off.

That is the same theory as is explicit in the argument made today by the Minister of Finance in the House when he said "I am not going to cut your funds, I am just going to reduce them a little." That will not wash. It will be perfectly clear to Canadians. Canadians only have to listen to what the minister says about the revenue guarantee. I have several things I would like to say about the revenue guarantee. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue my remarks on that later. Perhaps we could call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned at six o'clock I was attempting to move into the revenue guarantee items of the bill. I should perhaps orient members in the chamber this evening by indicating that the basic argument being made by the Minister of Finance with regard to this proposal is that the government believes that it has two needs for the changes it proposes to equalization and for the established program financing proposals, first, that there is somehow a fiscal imbalance in the relationship between federal and provincial financing today, and second, that it fits in line with the government's restraint program.

Prior to six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I said that the second argument is utter nonsense given the fact the government proposes to increase its revenue and spending on everything else in the budget by two or three times the amount of its transfer payments. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I read some figures into the record with regard to what has in fact happened between the levels of government between 1971 and 1981, and I should like to continue that because they are the figures which most accurately describe the current fiscal relationship as regards government revenues and spending in Canada.

The federal government maintains that its position vis-à-vis the provincial governments has worsened. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is worth remembering, as I indicated earlier, that the federal figures alone indicated that while federal revenues after transfers have gone up 286.5 per cent, federal expenditures after transfers have gone up 339.6 per cent, and federal transfers have gone up only 225.2 per cent between 1971 and 1981. The comparable figures at the provincial level are revealing, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated, the federal government argues that its position has worsened vis-à-vis the provincial governments. Since 1971, federal revenues after transfers have gone up by 286.5 per cent. The comparable figure for provincial and local government revenues, after transfer payments, is 285.9 per cent. In other words, using the government's own figures, even after transfer payments, the amount of money collected by the federal government has been just slightly higher, over that period of time, than provincial revenues, including transfer payments. Perhaps we can therefore dispose of the arguments made by the Minister of Finance and his colleagues to suggest tht somehow the federal government is worse off now vis-à-vis the provinces compared with 1971. Clearly that is not the case.

There must be, therefore, other reasons for the urgent need for this bill as claimed by the minister. One has to go inside the bill to find its effect on our provinces and our people, Mr. Speaker. Certainly those from Ontario have never really understood equalization because it has not been a matter which, until now, has affected us greatly. Only recently has Ontario qualified for equalization, and perhaps members will forgive me if I do not spend a lot of time on that except to say that equalization has been the backbone of other provinces and should continue to be that, if only for that reason. I think that was indicated quite clearly in the constitutional discussions.

However, I should point out the irony of the original idea of changing equalization to base the formula on Ontario alone, which was an earlier proposal of this government. Most of us from Ontario took that as a way of making sure that Ontario would never qualify for equalization because it would be the mid-ground. There are some of us from Ontario who think there is something to be said for that idea, because I am not sure that Ontarians are ready for the idea that Ontario may be a have-not province. Nevertheless, the new formula would appear to be the best of both worlds in that it creates a more honest balance and still leaves Ontario the opportunity to benefit should things get terribly worse in Ontario, which they may do under the policies of this government.

However, Mr. Speaker, the other part of this bill which changes the established programs financing provisions is of direct and vital importance to Ontario. I am going to take a couple of minutes to explain to those outside the House who are not familiar with what is involved. The established programs for most Canadians, are known most simply as medical support programs and the university financing provisions that the federal government enters into. Two elements of EPF in general are being changed, Mr. Speaker. The revenue guarantee component of the EPF entitlement is being eliminated; that was the provision introduced by the then minister of finance, Mr. Macdonald, in 1977, in order to get provincial approval for changes. The formula for calculating the cash proportion of the EPF entitlement is being changed. The EPF is transferred both as tax points under which the provinces get more money, and as cash payments directly from the federal government. The elimination of the revenue guarantee component of EPF reduces the level of provincial entitlements by 6 per cent to 7 per cent from what they would have been had the existing formula been continued. Moreover, until now the cash portion of EPF has consisted of three elements: basic cash, which was equal to half the entitlement; equalization payments to those provinces where the value of the tax transfer was less per capita than the national average; and a transitional payment in cash to those provinces where the value of the tax transfer plus equalization did not equal the value of the basic cash. Provinces where the combined value of the tax transfer and basic cash exceeded the entitlement level were allowed to keep the surplus.

Under this bill the federal government pays in cash from now on only the difference between the value of the entitlement and the value of the tax transfer. This ensures equal treatment for all provinces under EPF and does correct an inequity by which the richer the yield from a province's personal and corporate income taxes the more EPF was worth, which was, under the old provision, a kind of reverse equalization.

Together, these two changes will reduce the level of federal cash payments by about $915 million from what it would have been in 1982-83. So much for the minister's argument that this change in EPF, and particularly the revenue guarantee, will not cost anybody anything. In fact, actual cash payments will be almost $400 million less than in 1981-82. That is less by that amount in real dollars. The revenue guarantee termination accounts for well over 90 per cent of this decline. Moreover, by permanently lowering the base on which EPF entitlements are escalated they will save the federal government a total of $5.7 billion over the five-year term of the fiscal arrangements. For Ontario that is extremely important because Ontario alone will experience a cut from what it would otherwise have received of nearly $1.9 billion. So this particular change in the bill is much more important today and in the next five years to Ontario than equalization ever was.

When he was explaining this provision the minister said that in effect it was not a cut in funds for service—this is what he said earlier today—that removing the revenue guarantees simply moderated the rate of increase in 1982-83, that it was in fact offset by increases in provincial taxes as a result of the budget, that all it had the effect of doing, he said, was to mitigate the effect of eliminating the revenue guarantee, and that that is what his tax proposals would do. He cannot have it both ways. The minister attempts to say it will not cost Ontarians, for example, $1.9 billion in lost services. The minister knows full well that $1.9 billion will not flow, as it would have, from this capital to that capital. Someone has to pick up that bill. The minister cannot argue in good conscience that by taking the money away from the provinces there is not in fact the likelihood of a cut in services. That is what every responsible expert who has looked at these proposals, including the parliamentary task force, has determined. The all-party task force, one Liberal member of which is next to speak in the debate—and we will be waiting to see whether he supports in the House the provisions he supported as a member of the task force—in effect said it was vital not to do this.

The minister argues that the problem is solved because the tax changes in the budget which give the federal government more money will produce more money for the provinces. How can the minister try to have it both ways all the time? According to the minister, the federal government needs to make these cuts because of its general program of restraint. To the average Canadian, restraint means the government will spend less and tax less in real dollars. How can the minister therefore argue that it is not a cut, and use as his defence the fact that he is going to increase taxes and thereby increase provincial taxes?

Let us just look at the numbers and even accept the current estimate of revenues likely to accrue to the provinces in total of something over $3.1 billion under the new budget arrangements and new taxes, which, I might point out, are down from the $3.7 billion which was originally claimed by the minister—until the accountants got at it and said, "Well, just a minute; it is not quite that much"—and nobody is yet clear what the amount will actually be. Certainly with an economic slowdown we have no way today of predicting what tax revenues the federal and provincial governments will actually have accruing to them. However, if we are going to argue that the provinces will inevitably receive more money because of the federal increase in taxation, we ought at least to admit that we are therefore not restraining the size of government budgets, and therefore the earlier argument which was used to defend the restraint in the transfer program is defeated by the minister's own comments about the value of the provincial taxes which will be increased by the budget which the minister uses to defend eliminating the revenue guarantee.

Whichever way we play the minister's own argument we wind up with the fact that the federal government will have substantially more money than it had under last year's budget. Those estimates have ranged in the minister's own budget estimates, but minimum assumptions are $54 billion from the energy deals, if the energy program comes on stream as it should. The minister's own budget expectations say the government will increase its spending by 52 per cent to 53 per cent in the next year or two. That is not restraint, and it is only because that is not restraint that the provinces will get more money as they are tied into the tax arrangements. I repeat that we cannot therefore argue—because this is the guts of the argument as to whether in fact a cut is occurring—and we cannot in good conscience turn to Canadians, after we tax them more at this level by 50 per cent or 60 per cent, and say, "Look what we are doing for you by restraining the transfers to the provinces," because the net effect is that the federal government inevitably is saying it will simply spend even more than that on the rest of its programs. Otherwise we cannot square the circle.

For example, the government has argued under one set of figuers that its over-all spending next year will be up only 16 per cent or 17 per cent net of these transfer payments. If the transfer payments drop to 12 per cent or 13 per cent increases, clearly everything else will be up. That is self-evident. That is the first lesson in basic mathematics when we go to school. If that is true, there is not restraint elsewhere, and it becomes clear when we get into this bill and look at the evidence used by the minister to defend it that the arguments being advanced to defend this bill are the single best proof that the government is not restraining its over-all expenditures in other areas. Otherwise it could not come up with the figures it uses as net figures.

Second, it will be very difficult to explain to my people—and I frankly think it will be impossible—how it makes sense to impose more taxes here and give less of that to the provinces, so that they will have to tax our people in Ontario again to pay for the same service they now have. But that is what is being proposed. Let us be very clear that the argument is being advanced that in order somehow to save us money, it makes sense to increase taxes here, to reduce transfers to the provinces, and to have them increase taxes to pay for those services. What happens in the end is that we will have the same level of services. We will have paid the federal government roughly 50 per cent more taxes over the next couple of years, directly and indirectly—that is 50 per cent in two years net—and meanwhile the provinces will have had to put up their taxes in order to pay for services Canadians already use, trust and rely upon. Those are such services as university education, hospital services, homes for the aged and all those gut level basic social services which are fundamental to the welfare of Canadians, either for training our next generation or looking after those many in our senior generation who cannot now care for themselves adequately. The argument is that simple.

In its case the parliamentary task force put it as clearly as it could be put. It would be wise to read it into the record one last time, and then I will conclude. The task force argued several things. I am sorry I cannot find the actual quote at the moment, but I can paraphrase it. The task force argued persuasively that in no way could it be said with any kind of fairness that existing services at the provincial level on which Canadians depend have any fat left in them. There is no justification at the federal level for moving to make those cuts. It also argued persuasively, Mr. Speaker, if you read the report carefully, that fundamental to the principles of federalism is the way in which you rationalize the programs which both levels of government pay for. It should be remembered, if anyone argues about who actually spends the money in Canada—which is one of the minister's arguments—that these programs are largely programs which the federal government quite properly encouraged the provinces to get into on the basis that they would pay for large chunks of them. Therefore, those provincial payments are in fact on behalf of all of us. It is almost nonsense to argue that somehow, if we take the money from here and have it spent there, and have it spent on jointly agreed programs, we are not in fact all getting the benefit. It becomes nonsense to argue whether it shows up in the spending column of this government or that government, when it is always the same pocket that pays the bill and it is Canadians everywhere, whether they are federal or provincial Canadians, who get the benefit. To argue now to rationalize those services by a unilateral decision of this level of government, flies absolutely in the face of what Canadians have understood for years to be the federal-provincial relationships which makes this country work.

It may not be surprising to see that today, after what happened with VIA Rail, after what happened on the Constitution, after what happened in the recent conversations about the energy omnibus bill, where the members opposite waited 15 days to make the deal which they knew they could make in the beginning and which they ultimately brought in today.

Mr. Evans: It was the members opposite!

Mr. Bosley: They would not even discuss it until this weekend. Let me say this, Mr. Speaker to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), who is no longer a parliamentary secretary, who may now finally be able to tell the truth about the budget he so loudly supported around this country, knowing he was saying to other people around this town that maybe he was not quite so sure. Perhaps we will see what he does now that he is not a parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude with this. This country will not work if provisions like this change, which radically affects 20 per cent of federal spending and the basic services to Canadians. The country cannot stand another attack by this level of government on those programs unilaterally. We are in a state of difficulty in Canada, and those who do not understand that yet have only to go west and look at some of the feelings about central Canada and about Canada in the west. We do not need another attack on co-operative federalism from the other side. In my view, Mr. Speaker, this proposal, imposing as it does unilateral cuts on the provinces without their support and agreement, is a method that is opposed to the royal commission that was recommended by my leader, wherin we had it as a policy to review federal-provincial payments and transfers in order to get the co-operation of the provinces, to recognize the realities that are coming to Canada.

If you choose not to do it that way—as this government proposes to do—if you choose to move again against the provinces and against those services that the people care about, then you can expect that you will get—and you are getting it—an ever greater concern, ever greater belief that Ottawa does not listen, that Ottawa does not care, and that Ottawa is interested only in pretending to be interested in restraint, while it cuts off those services that the people care about.

Mr. Speaker, surely we should know by now that that attitude will not work and that we risk something very dangerous when we continue with an attitude that flies directly in the face of those Canadians who care deeply about true federalism and co-operative federalism.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we will see throughout this debate the beginnings of the change which is necessary on the other side on this, as we had to wait to see it on the energy bill, as we had to wait to see it on the constitutional proposals. I hope, at least now that it is here, that we will see a recognition finally, that you cannot cut off transfer payments to other levels of government unilaterally and cut services that people like and are used to and need, without expecting a terrible backlash against the level of government that proposes to do that; and we need and can stand no more of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the habit of responding to remarks of previous speakers, but the hon. member who has just taken his seat did make a direct reference to me, and in the course of my remarks I shall be replying specifically to the point he raised concerning the recommendations of the special parliamentary task force and the position which I played on that committee.

The provisions of Bill C-97, which amends the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, follow many of the recommendations of the all-party parliamentary task force which reported last August. The task force, on which I was privileged to serve, held hearings in every part of the country, and met with representatives of all the provincial governments. These meetings led me to understand better the concerns of the provinces and of the many groups and individuals affected by these arrangements. As a participant in that special task force I paid particular attention to each recommendation and I fully support every one of the unanimous recommendations.

Where a recommendation was not unanimous, and where I wanted to make it clear that I was not in agreement with the recommendation, I did so by recording in writing to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), on the day that the report was released, my own comments on the particular recommendations. I made that letter public. I did so not because I had any major disagreement with the report of the task force but because I felt that it was necessary to elaborate on certain points. Since I could not get them into print in the report, I added them at the time that the report was released.

There is one such item which I will mention here, and I will not hide behind either the report or its recommendations. The recommendation to continue the revenue guarantee was not a unanimous recommendation. I was one member of the committee who wanted the revenue guarantee discontinued. I saw no value to the continuing of the revenue guarantee; in my opinion it should have been discontinued in 1977. Nine of our ten provinces can decide on the percentage that they will get from the amount that is levied by the federal government on its tax form. Each year each individual province can change that percentage if it so wishes. The provinces therefore can take upon themselves the raising of the funds which they need for their own provincial purposes. In my own province, the province of Quebec, the province has its own direct provincial personal income tax. Thus, that province also can decide the level to which it wants to tax its citizens. In seven of the ten provinces there is an agreement on corporation taxes. However, three of the provinces levy their own corporation taxes. Once again the provinces themselves can decide to what level they want to tax their citizens.

I fully support the maximum possible funding at the federal level, and I support it for a reason which is not often discussed, and I am not afraid to discuss it. I support it because, in my opinion, the raising of funds at the federal level is in itself a form of equalization. Quite apparently, more money is taken from those who are wealthier, who have larger incomes and therefore pay more taxes. Quite obviously and quite apparently the people in the province of Alberta pay more in taxes than the people in the province of Newfoundland.

Thus I fully support the maximum use of the federal taxation powers as a form of distribution in this country where, in my opinion, there is already too much decentralization. However, as far as the revenue guarantee was concerned, which was introduced in 1972 in order to tide over the provinces while they made their own arrangements for the raising of funds, which, it was alleged in 1972, could have been reduced as a result of a federal budget, they did not take advantage of the opportunity between 1972 and 1977 and asked for a further extension.

Under the circumstances, I suggest there is absolutely no logic and can be no logic to the continuation of the revenue guarantee. I say publicly and openly that as far as I am concerned, it should be discontinued in its entirety. I am very pleased that the Minister of Finance has seen it that way. I have previously supported him, as I did after the budget speech, in the discontinuance of that particular program.

This bill is going to transfer $105 billion to the provinces in the next five years under the two major programs I will be talking about in more detail in a little while: fiscal equalization and established programs financing. It is a 72 per cent increase over the amount of $61 billion which has been transferred in the past five-year period. These totals do not include many other major fiscal transfer payments from the federal treasury such as, for example, the Canada Assistance Plan.

The bill provides a new equalization formula to help financially disadvantaged provinces such as my province of Quebec. It continues the government's very strong support for health and post-secondary education. I shall be making remarks on both the health program and the post-secondary education program in a few moments.

The critical issue on fiscal arrangements is the re-establishment of the political and financial balance within the federation. This involves the financial balance between the federal government and the provinces and the financial balance among provinces. Since 1975, the federal government has more than quadrupled the amount of tax room made available to provinces in the personal income tax field, particularly by means of tax transfers, enabling the provinces to finance expenditures in the areas of health and education.

The significant development of the past few years has been the decline in the financial position of the federal government. This is indicated among other things by the size of its deficit and has reached the point where its freedom to initiate policies and programs is severely limited, even when the national interest is at stake. At the same time, the over-all deficit of provincial governments has built into a surplus.

The seven provinces without oil and gas revenues continue to have deficits, but these, with the exception of Quebec, have been relatively stable compared with the federal deficit. As far as the interprovincial balance is concerned, the enormous increase in provincial natural resource revenues has so far accrued almost entirely to three provinces. The spread between the fiscal capacity of Alberta and the other provinces is now well in excess of any gap which existed in the past between rich and poor provinces. Alberta's fiscal capacity prior to federal transfers is virtually double that of all other provinces and about four times that of the Atlantic provinces. These disparities between Alberta and other provinces are not significantly taking account of intergovernmental transfers.

While there are numerous considerations which determine the political leverage of any government within a federal system, it is clear that fiscal strength is one of them. To avoid competition between the two orders of government, it is necessary that the balance which exists in the fiscal and political situations of the two orders of government be capable of gradual adaptation to reflect shifts in the other social and economic circumstances. One of the means of ensuring this is periodically to review fiscal arrangements, as we are doing.

Transfers to provinces account for approximately 20 per cent of total federal expenditures. Between 1961 and 1981, the federal share of total government revenues declined while the provincial and municipal share increased. The change in the federal government's position, when intergovernmental transfers are taken into account and federal transfers to provinces are deducted from federal revenues and considered as provincial revenues, is striking.

The federal share of total revenues, which was 50 per cent in 1961, dropped to 38 per cent in 1981. One can see that the provinces now spend the largest share of public moneys raised in Canada. It is abundantly apparent that Canada is one of the most fiscally decentralized countries in the western world.

Mr. Speaker, I often get angry when I hear ministers from the government of my province, the province of Quebec, complain about transfer payments made by the federal government to the provinces. Last Friday, in a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), I said, and I quote:

—for the equalization program alone during the current fiscal year had increased by some $400 million, from $1.7 billion to $2.1 billion—

I asked the question because when I travelled across this country last spring, the figure given for the equalization program was $3.4 billion for all provinces receiving funds under the program, including $1.7 billion for the province of Quebec. A month ago, I saw the revised figures, and I asked the Minister of Finance whether it was true that the amount had now been raised to a total of $2.1 billion, and I received a letter confirming this. Yes, I did. It means that since last spring, for April, May and June, the amount earmarked for the province of Quebec under the equalization program was increased by a total of $400 million. So I wonder why the province's ministers and premier keep complaining that they are getting less from the federal government.

I also mentioned the fact that in addition, the supplementary estimates of the President of the Treasury Board show $124 million for the Canada Assistance Plan. That means additional expenditures, and I am sure that the province of Quebec will get probably one quarter or one third of that amount.

When I look at these figures, I see that between April 1 of this year and March 31 of next year, Quebec will be getting another $5.5 billion out of the two programs we are discussing this evening, and this funding is to go up to nearly $9 billion by 1986-87, so that again, I fail to understand why there are complaints from the province of Quebec.

[English]

The fiscal equalization system makes its possible for all provinces to provide reasonable standards for basic public services to their residents without having to resort to unduly high levels of taxation. With this bill, about $29.3 billion of equalization will be paid to six provinces during the next five years compared with $16.5 billion under the present system over the past five-year period. That is an increase of over 77 per cent.

As I have already mentioned, the province of Quebec will share in this amount, going from $5.5 billion next year to almost $9 billion in 1986-87. In addition, this bill extends, for an indefinite period, the fiscal stabilization program which protects the provinces against a reduction in revenues arising from a sharp downturn in economic activity. Therefore, it facilitates their borrowings. I need not say that the province of Quebec will have difficulty borrowing in the next year or two. I will talk about the economic situation in Quebec in a few minutes.

Furthermore, there is a floor provision whereby no equalization receiving province could have a total entitlement for a fiscal year which would be less than 90 per cent of its total entitlement for the preceeding year. Payments would increase by 13.6 per cent in 1982-83 over 1981-82. The average rate of increase of equalization over the full five year period would be 11.2 per cent.

Preliminary census data recently issued by Statistics Canada indicate that the estimated population of certain provinces is falling significantly. Once again need I say that in my province we see the population decreasing. Once again I ask myself why we hear so much double-talk from the government of Quebec. It has introduced legislation that discourages the entry into the province of those persons who would ordinarily replace those who are moving to other provinces to find jobs or have been transfered by their companies. It is suddenly discovering that its tax base is becoming lower and lower and its capability to tax its citizens is becoming increasingly difficult. Its present level of taxation of the individual in Quebec is so high that anyone who now has the choice chooses to live in another province. Yet the federal program still tries to take care of such a situation and tries to help a province that is doing precious little to help itself.

Population is a key factor in determining the equalization entitlement of a province. Sizeable amounts would normally have to be recovered from provinces whose share of the total population is lower than that used in the present census estimate. Recent calculations indicate that these recoveries could be substantial and could create cash flow problems for affected provinces whose fiscal capacity is below average. The federal government has agreed to make special payments which would fully offset the recovery of these census adjustments from provinces qualifying for equalization in 1982-83. Even when the population falls because of the actions of the provincial government itself, the federal government still tries to help.

The equalization system provided for in the bill would achieve the purpose of equalization by means of the most comprehensive measure of fiscal capacity ever used since the inception of the program 25 years ago.

I would like to address a few remarks on established programs financing. These transfers have funded provincial health care and post secondary education programs. The bill modifies the computation of the EPF cash transfers so that the per capita value of the total federal contribution to all provinces will be equal. This change would rectify one aspect of the EPF that Quebec has criticized in the past. It would also implement a major recommendation of the Parliamentary Task Force on Fiscal Arrangements. Once again Quebec spits in our face then turns around and asks for more.

The fiscal arrangements act authorizes the federal government to make fiscal stabilization payments, and this bill provides for an extension of that authority for an indefinite period. The purpose of these payments is to protect the provinces from sudden year to year losses in revenue as a result of a severe economic downturn in the national economy or their own economies. Once again, the downturn in the Quebec economy is greater than in any of the other provinces except for some of the smaller Maritime provinces. This provision has been of value to provinces when they borrow in foreign capital markets and its value would be enhanced by its indefinite duration.

The major issue with respect to the EPF arrangement is whether the additional flexibility that the provinces now enjoy compared to that under previous cost sharing is compatible with the maintenance of national standards in the health care field. The provinces have always had to comply with certain program conditions in this area, but recent developments have raised an important question, namely, how the federal government can effectively enforce the national health care standards.

I would like to spend a little time on this because it was an issue which was discussed at length by the members of the parliamentary task force. I do not think I would be telling any secrets if I said that the division was very clearly on party lines, certainly in the position of the more right-wing members of the committee, that the provinces should have the freedom to decide, for example, whether they would permit extra billing by doctors, whether they would permit daily charges by the hospitals, and on all kinds of methods by which these provinces with Tory governments would try to raise funds. I do not think I would be telling tales if I indicated that the Liberal members of that committee were strongly opposed to the continuation of these practices. It goes without saying that so was the representative from the New Democratic Party. But we did not get a recommandation into the report that these practices, of which I strongly disapprove, be discontinued. Part of the reason for that was that it was recognized that the responsibility lies with the provinces. Being a provincial responsibility, there was probably no way in which the federal government could enforce any such conditions that would require the provinces to either discontinue or refuse to allow extra billing by doctors plus charges such as daily charges for hospital care.

Personally, I can only plead that the provinces recognize that it is their responsibility; they also recognize that such charges are made to the sick and that in those circumstances the charges are grossly unfair. I will also point the finger at the federal government, however, and I have done this by letter on many occasions.

The government of the province of Ontario levies a charge under the Ontario Hospital Insurance Plan. Everyone who works is obliged to make a contribution. The contribution is the same for every person, without regard to level of income. Thus, it is obviously much harder for a person with a low income to pay than it is for a person with a high income. In other words, it is a very regressive form of taxation. It is a means of raising money of which I strongly disapprove. As I said previously, however, members of the committee recognized that it was impractical for the federal government to try to impose conditions on a provincial government in connection with such health insurance payments.

Where the federal government can play its part is by discontinuing the contribution it makes for such payments to the employees in the federal public service. When I say discontinue, let me hasten to say that I recognize that payments to anyone are never reduced these days. What I suggest is simply that as the various agreements with the unions terminate, we fold into the salary scales the amount the federal government now contributes for health insurance premiums and that we no longer consider ourselves obliged to participate in this regressive form of taxation. This would be one way the federal government, which has attempted to indicate its feelings for the poorer people in the country, could use its federal powers and could discontinue what I consider to be a very poor practice.

I want to spend a few minutes now on the subject of post-secondary education. As you may be aware, Mr. Speaker, in one province this year—which will terminate on March 31—the amount of federal contributions to post-secondary education exceeds, by a considerable amount, the total that that particular province spent on post-secondary education. In fact, there is even a second province that does not spend all the moneys it receives for post-secondary education. I feel that this is unjust. I tried to get the committee to look at a different method by which it could share the moneys that were available for post-secondary education among the provinces. I reiterate that it would not bother me if the total amount were increased, but nevertheless, I wanted to see a fair distribution.

Since I have been critical of my own province in my previous remarks this evening, I will now say a good word for what Quebec has done in the field of post-secondary education. In the universities in the province of Quebec there are, on a percentage basis, more out-of-province students and more out-of-country students than there are in any other province. In fact, as a percentage of the total funds spent on post-secondary education, on a per capita basis, the Quebec government spends more than any other province. To be fair, I will say that I should like to see the example set by the province of Quebec followed in the other provinces. I say this because I believe that portability, accessibility and the exchange of students from province to province is an excellent thing for the country. I am very pleased that Quebec students can go to St. Francis Xavier university in the maritimes, to Queen's and to Toronto university and others across the country and that students from Ontario can come to the universities in the Province of Quebec.

The daughter of the hostess where I was staying last summer, while on holiday in Victoria, British Columbia, was a student at the University of Quebec where she was majoring in language. I think that is what our country is all about, and I was very proud and I want to say publicly how pleased I was that a girl from Victoria, British Columbia—which is not known for its bilingualism, and I say that not in too critical a sense—was a student in the province of Quebec majoring in the French language. This is an excellent thing for the country.

I was disappointed that the three provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, had a rather restrictive policy. In fact, they restricted the out-of-province students to a total of 5 per cent. I recognize that distances in this country are such that it is not likely that that percentage would be substantially increased, but I do not like the fact that it exists. For that reason I suggested to the committee—my suggestion did not carry but I am trying to make a point tonight—that part of the payment for post-secondary education should be based on full-time enrolment. Obviously the point would be that more moneys would go to the provinces that had, on a per capita basis, more students in the universities. I did not win my point and we are continuing with the present arrangements. I am not particularly sad about that, and I make the point tonight only because I want to explain why not every one of the recommendations in the report is unanimous. Mind you, I must add that I was very happy, in a general way, with the report and that the points I have raised tonight are not of great significance.

Despite the difficulty we have had with criticisms of the budget—and I see the Minister of Finance is here tonight and he will remember that the day after the budget I had the opportunity to speak in the House and I fully supported the direction of that budget—I want to reiterate that the general direction taken by the Minister of Finance in his budget was one that I fully supported the day after and fully support today. I received several hundred complaints from my constituents and, with the exception of about 20, every one was based on a false assumption—the number of representations which I received from airline company employees, for example, who were worried about the taxation of their passes. The point is that the Minister of Finance in his budget was taking care of expenses which must be looked after as a result of Bill C-97, which we are hoping to pass into law before March 31.

I have brought into my remarks tonight my concerns about the fact that the province of Quebec complains on a daily basis about the federal government, despite the fact that it is the major beneficiary of the programs included in the bill. Of course that is no reason for the amounts to be reduced. Nevertheless, I hope, in the course of the debate and the passage of the bill, that members from the province of Quebec will talk about the amount of these transfers, the fact that in fiscal equalization the sum is not fixed and that as a result, within the current fiscal year the province of Quebec will benefit by $400 million more than it could have expected last spring. Also I hope that they will mention such programs as the Canada Assistance Plan which pays, without limit, 50 per cent of the cost of social programs, and that the province of Quebec, once again finding itself in difficulty, is able to turn to the federal government for financial assistance.

I sincerely hope that this bill, which in my opinion is extremely generous and extremely beneficial to the province of Quebec, will be passed with the approval of all hon. members of the House including the opposition. I hope it receives speedy passage.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in the debate on Bill C-97, which has a fairly complex sounding title which reads:

An act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces.

That is the short title of Bill C-97 which is being debated this evening.

I do not imagine there is a bill which could be debated in the House of Commons that would more accurately reflect the reality of Canada than this one which deals with equalization payments to the provinces which have and the provinces which have not. With the complicated formulas in the bill and the many clauses of it, I share the concern of many other hon. members who have spoken today that we are faced with a relatively short period of time in which to analyse fully all its implications. In that context, I compliment the parliamentary task force and several of the members who have spoken. I congratulate my colleague who led off the debate, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), and other members who were on the task force. There were approximately nine members on the task force who contributed much time and effort to this most complex subject. In view of the amount of paper which comes across one's desk, I dare say that all members have not had the opportunity or taken the time to digest the report of the task force which, in short, is called, "Fiscal Federalism in Canada". I think the members who served on that committee deserve credit. It was really the blueprint, the map and certainly the photograph of what happened in terms of rationalizing fiscal arrangements between provinces and the federal government. It tried to balance national objectives and to pay respect to provincial jurisdictions. I think the task force did a very good job.

Something that has not been mentioned much thus far is that as we talk loftily about federal transfers and provincial jurisdictions, we are really just talking about something which has a common denominator, that is, the needs of the people of the country being taken care of out of their pocketbooks. The pocketbook is not federal or provincial. It is the pocketbook of taxpayers which pay for social, health and educational needs.

An hon. Member: It is the same old pocketbook.

Mr. Nowlan: As my friend behind me says, fundamentally it is the same old pocketbook. We are really following the steps of history tonight, as did the task force earlier in the year. We can follow them right back to the Rowell-Sirois commission which in effect conducted the first major review of tax policy and fiscal arrangements between provinces and the federal government ever held in the country. It started to chart what is here today. It certainly reviewed the changes which occurred from confederation to 1940, when I think the commission finally reported. In that context, we are dealing with the fundamentals of providing for the social needs of Canadians from coast to coast. Certainly we in Atlantic Canada are most sensitive when members start talking about equalization payments because, as Alberta was in the Rowell-Sirois days, at the present time we are still a have-not area. Thus, any change in the formula, the base or the percentage which affects the dollars flowing to Atlantic Canada, in particular to the province of Nova Scotia, causes us a great deal of concern.

As I listened to the debate thus far, I thought that perhaps there were two things polluting a rational, objective discussion of the bill. One was very political and concerned the credibility of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) from Nova Scotia. If the present Minister of Finance could obtain the crystal ball which Mackenzie King, his erstwhile mentor, followed, if he could look at the path followed by the last Liberal minister of finance from Nova Scotia, the Hon. J. L. Ilsley, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, and if he could have a conversation with that gentleman who was a classical Liberal full of principle—

Mr. MacEachen: Why do you not refer to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)?

Mr. Nowlan: I distinctly said the last Liberal minister of finance from Nova Scotia, the Hon. J. L. Ilsley. He was a very fine Canadian and a very fine classical Liberal in the finest sense of the word, before it was polluted and changed from Liberalism to Trudeauism. I will not comment upon that too much because my speech will not be partisan tonight. If the present Minister of Finance could talk to Mr. Ilsley in the hereafter, I am sure Mr. Ilsley would say, "For goodness sake, Allan, you can play with the figures all you want, you can talk about a 1961 base, but watch out". It was not relevant for the minister to talk about the 1961 base and how federal revenues slid down because we are talking about 1971 to 1981 when in fact the increase in federal revenues and the increase in provincial revenues were approximately the same.

It concerned me when I heard the Minister of Finance this afternoon talk about how the federal government would increase the gross absolute figures of the established programs financing from something like $60 billion to $105 billion five years down the road. Statistically he was correct, but he did not point out—and I do not think he forgot it—that if there was any change in the financing formula under EPF arrangements, instead of $105 billion five years down the road, there would be an extra $5.8 billion in the program to help with the health care needs of all those who receive it and to help with the post-secondary education costs of those who require it. That is one thing the minister has to confront, because it comes back to the old credibility situation which he faces on the basic message of the budget.

I will come back to the shell game, but first I want to mention something the hon. member for Vaudreuil said, which I do not think he intended to say but it might be repeated by other members here in this debate, because, frankly, I think it pollutes discussion on any bill before us. I am a realist in terms of politics, but I wonder, in terms of rational, objective discussion on this equalization bill and anything else, how much we are adversely affected by the present political reality of the country. There seems to be a pecking order whereby the federal government has to make sure it is supreme because there is another government in Quebec that has a certain philosophy—it is certainly not my philosophy for Canada, but the governing party there is a recognized political party. There does seem to be an issue here on the floor of the House about whether what the Ottawa government says will put the Quebec government in its place.

In the 1940s, or whenever the Rowell-Sirois commission was created, there was the interesting irony that Alberta stayed out of the deliberations. I do not think Alberta put in an appearance before the Rowell-Sirois commission, but the government of Quebec did. I do not know all the history of the 1930s and the 1940s when Mr. Aberhart was Premier of Alberta, but if one reads the debates or the press reports of the day, I do not think one would find there was the emotional negativism registered against the have-not province of Alberta that there is today being registered by the federal government against, admittedly, a separatist government in Quebec. In my opinion, this pollutes the atmosphere of any discussion we have in the House of Commons even on something as fundamental as the unity of the country as contained in this bill which is to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act. Those two matters are a sort of shroud of Quebec that hangs over this chamber and at the present time over the future and the credibility of the Minister of Finance. This affects rational, objective discussion of Bill C-97. Those two matters give me a great deal of concern because this bill is really the financial mortar which helps to hold this country together with the financing formula and arrangements it defines and implements for the benefit of most parts of Canada, and certainly the have-not parts of Canada.

I hope that somehow we can discuss those points on their merits. We should not always cast stones at different provinces. We should not try to play a financial shell game right here in this chamber when we deal with figures in a bill. What accentuates this situation is not just the Minister of Finance and the shell game, but the classical statement which I think represents the present philosophy of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he said not too long ago that co-operative federalism is dead; that it is over, that it is through, that he tried and he was rebuffed, he was burned in the kitchen. It is like a little boy in grade seven playing football who said that if we did not play to his rules, he would take the football home so we could not continue to play the game. That type of petulance is fine for a boy in grade seven but it is not very fine for a Prime Minister of this country who has a responsibility and a duty to make federalism work.

In effect, that is the overriding matter which adversely affects rational discussion of Bill C-97. Let us be realistic and human. What premier of a province, not just Quebec's premier, or what provincial treasurer worth his salt, on hearing the epitaph from the Prime Minister that co-operative federalism is dead and from now on the federal government will charge ahead regardless of jurisdiction to do its will, will sit down and rationally be able to negotiate and discuss matters as serious as equalization when a red flag is waved before his eyes? I suggest this country is in serious trouble, Mr. Speaker. Personally, I do not believe that it has ever been in more serious trouble, certainly not in the 16 years I have been in this chamber. Unless the leader of the land, fundamentally the Prime Minister, develops in his psyche some capacity for conciliation and rationalization to challenge that intellect he has, rather than his attitude of confrontation and simplistic epitaphs which insult Canadians, provincial premiers and treasurers, we will not have that type of atmosphere of trust and respect that one has to have in the House of Commons.

We all know that it was missing in the last few days, and the clanging of the bells testified to this. If that is symbolic here in the House—there is not a bell outside of this chamber from coast to coast—what we have is disagreement, discord and distrust. That is one of the reasons the Minister of Finance has a very difficult job despite the budget. Even if his budget of November 12 were not politically flawed, as the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) calls it, his job is difficult. The Solicitor General is now standing firmly behind the Minister of Finance. I am very glad for the Minister of Finance that the Solicitor General did not say on March 11 or whenever the Ides of March are he was standing behind the Minister of Finance. We all know what happened to Caesar and Brutus. I do not know if the Solicitor General really has the strength to lift a knife, but verbally he certainly cut into the back of the Minister of Finance, behind whom he was standing, with his rhetoric and his letter to the Toronto Real Estate Board. Be that as it may, assuming the budget was really well thought out and put together and tried to achieve the objectives which, as the minister so proudly stated here tonight, he delivered before it was dissected, even if it were a good document, with the atmosphere outside the House among the first ministers of the land—and we can forget about the Canada bill because it is out of the way—the Prime Minister said that co-operative federalism is dead.

Earlier I said half facetiously that the Minister of Finance should talk to the former Liberal minister of finance from Nova Scotia. But I say that a former Liberal prime minister, the person who coined the term "co-operative federalism" is not very happy tonight, wherever he may be, about the present Prime Minister saying that co-operative federalism is dead. If co-operative federalism is dead, how can one expect agreement on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements? At the moment there is no agreement. That is part of the problem.

I spoke earlier today about the credibility of the minister on this matter. It was repeated by the hon. member for Vaudreuil who was trying to justify the argument that in effect the reason federal-provincial transfers were being cut down was the restraint program here in Ottawa. But the figures actually show that, in terms of federal revenue after transfers from 1971 to 1981, the federal revenue grew by 286 per cent, which is about the same rate of growth of provincial revenues after transfers. Yet the interesting contrast is that in the same period federal spending increased 335 per cent, whereas provincial spending increased approximately 250 per cent. A very real difference. Admittedly, between 1961 and 1971 federal revenues showed quite a substantial change, but the point is that this government has been in control basically for all that period of time. The programs they brought in were under their control. How can they now come into the House complaining about changes in 1961 to 1971, when we are talking about 1971 to 1981, when they were fundamentally in control of all programs and tax policies? To suggest now that the provinces, which did exercise restraint, should now have their transfers decreased to help compensate for the excess spending of the federal government is to penalize those provinces and the people in those provinces, which is manifestly unfair.

I come back to the other point about the shell game tag which is going to be applied to the minister continually if he continues to play with figures the way he did today. Statistically speaking, there is no doubt that under the new program there is a spending increase in dollar terms. Of course there is an increase, just as there is an increase in everything else, such as the population and the inflation rate. Every year there is an increase in almost everything. Yet the minister stands here this afternoon and without even a smile suggests that five years down the road we will have spent from $60 billion to $105 billion, but he does not point out that without these changes this amount would have gone up by an extra $5.8 billion to over $110 billion.

I do not know about you, Mr. Speaker, but when I get into billions of dollars it is almost impossible to relate it to people, but let us talk about the differences which will result from C-97 and what the situation would be if there was no change. We are talking about a shortfall of over $5 billion, and someone has to pick up that shortfall. I said earlier that it was the same taxpayer who pays the bill, at whichever level of government, but in this shell game between governments where the federal government is, in effect, going to cut back over $5 billion on programs established by the provinces for health care, hospitalization and post-secondary education, the federal government is going to put real pressure on those provinces to pick up the shortfall. They are going to have to either increase university fees, increase the cost of health care or cut back in service, or a combination of all those things. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this, especially for the region I come from, that is Atlantic Canada, places an unfair hardship on the provinces which will have to make up the shortfall of several hundreds of millions of dollars. The minister will have to take the political responsibility for that shortfall, and he will have to explain it to the university students and, certainly, to those in need of hospital and medical care in Atlantic Canada.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am so happy to participate in this debate in order to accentuate the fact that over all of this you have the federal provincial equation—Quebec against Ottawa—which adversely affects almost every type of discussion we have in this chamber. Compounding that, we have the credibility problem of the Minister of Finance with regard to his own budget. I just do not see how the minister can justify this, Mr. Speaker. To summarize the conclusions of the "Fiscal Federalism in Canada" report, it says in effect that there is no more fat to be cut from health programs or post-secondary education. It has been cut to the bone now, and if you cut any more, you are going to affect the programs adversely. Those are not my words, Mr. Speaker; that is the conclusion of this all-party task force on page 193 of its report where it says this:

> We hope that the general message of this long and complex report is clear, however.
> We are agreed that the programs examined in the course of our work are serving vital social needs and merit undimished support.

I would just point out that the programs they talk about are the programs under EPF: hospital care, medical care and post-secondary education. It goes on to say:

> Over-all funding of these programs should, in our view, be maintained at no less than current levels. In our appraisal of the programs falling within our order of reference, we identified none in which reductions in over-all levels of funding could be undertaken without a serious risk that important program goals and standards would be jeopardized.
> We are all agreed, therefore, that federal-provincial negotiations should be directed toward the goal of undiminished funding for both the health and post-secondary sectors supported through EPF and the social security programs financed in part through CAP.
> It seems clear to us that levels of federal funding in these programs to date have been adequate to initiate and sustain them through early development phases. But since 1977, within the discretion that was deliberately made part of the arrangement negotiated at that time, most provincial governments have significantly restricted program funding under EPF and under CAP. It is our view that there is now, for the most part, no fat left in the system—no fat in post-secondary education, no fat in the health system, no excess spending in social assistance, little redundancy in social services. We accept the representations of those who argued before the task force that serious cuts in program funding would cut into muscle and sinew, not fat. Unless one could presume that federal reductions in funding would automatically be matched by corresponding increases in provincial expenditures—a presumption that may not be considered altogether plausible—then in order to maintain present standards, programs would have to be privately financed to a greater extent than at present. In health, this would mean greater appeal to user charges and more extrabilling; in education, higher fees. In either case, basic national objectives of equity and equality of access would suffer.

That is the conclusion of the task force on Bill C-97 as it affects hospital care, medical care, and post-secondary education. These are the very things that members on all sides have asked questions and shown concern about. Increased costs and user fees are going to result if there is no change in C-97 to make sure that five years down the road there is the same funding as exists today.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope that when this matter is referred to committee changes can be made to protect the have-not provinces which depend on equalization as a fundamental contract of confederation. I cannot think of another mortar which would bind together the bricks which form the foundation of this country more securely than the principle in which all parties believe, namely, equalization, which simply means that those who have share with those who have not. One could almost preach a sermon on this in terms of the Christian ethic. It is fundamental, and we should not start playing around with the formula in such a way as to leave the have-not provinces without the tools to carry on the programs they presently have. National goals are set by the national government. We know we need national goals in our programs, but if we play around with the formula, we will put an unduly heavy burden on the provinces.

This matter should be resolved by negotiation. It cannot be resolved through unilateral challenges, and it cannot be helped by the Prime Minister, who says that the whole essence of this land, co-operative federalism—a phrase coined by former Prime Minister Pearson—is dead. If the Prime Minister honestly believes that, then for the sake of this country he should get out and let someone else who believes in this country and in co-operative federalism carry on. He should let a minister of finance who believes in that philosophy carry on in a constructive way rather than take a negative approach. It was not a negative approach that developed this country in the first place, and a negative approach will not get us out of the difficulties we are in today. It will take a much more objective and constructive attitude to bring the diverse parts of this country together.

It is a tragedy that the Prime Minister knows more about the world than he knows about this country. I wish he had worked in the woods of British Columbia when he was going to school, in the survey camps of the Iron Ore Company up the Moisie River, in the iron ore fields of Labrador, at Schefferville, Algoma or at the Kitimat plant. I wish he had gone across this country when he was young so he could have a feeling about this country as he does a little bit about the world.

It is sad that he says co-operative federalism is dead because there are good Canadians in all political parties from coast to coast who believe in this land. There are students who believe in this land, yet the number one man in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister, says that the concept which is the reason we came together is dead. That does not augur very well for the future.

Hopefully, the Prime Minister will listen to some hon. members on the government side who have an appreciation for this land. It is not too late, but it is a challenge. It is a difficult challenge for the Minister of Finance in the face of the totality of the political circumstances in this land tonight, but part of the challenge will be for the Minister of Finance to come to an agreement with the provinces on fiscal transfers—transfer payments—in a spirit of mutuality. His challenge is to rekindle some of the trust and respect which was there before. If we cannot develop that in this House—and we have shown that it is and has been missing—I am not optimistic about the success of the minister in meeting the challenge confronting him. Perhaps the best thing to do is to debate in the House as objectively as we can. If we did that, we might be able to set a standard for the ministers who are responsible for carrying out the law in their dealings with other governments. We might give them some background and support. But if we cannot support each other in a spirit of mutuality, respect and goodwill, as I said during the reform debate, we can pervert or prostitute any rule of procedure. If that happens to be the law and the lesson of parliamentary rules, I think it is even more the lesson for dealings between the federal government and its provincial counterparts.

Taxpayers are not federal taxpayers. The federal government collects the taxes. We all know what happened after the Rowell-Sirois commission in 1941; the provinces rented out the taxing system to a centralized authority because of the war effort. The centralized authority has kept that authority since, and that is likely a good thing, but it is the Canadian taxpayer who pays the tax, and we must recognize the needs of the taxpayer as we try to share the wealth.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to speak about Bill C-97 at the second reading stage of debate. This is the stage when we deal with the principles of the bill, and I stand with some sense of sadness because one of the principles lying behind this bill is the principle of unilateral action by an unpopular central government. In its unilateral action this central government would reduce funding to provincial governments for human services in the fields of health and education. This cut in funding brings to mind the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced with great fanfare some 13 years ago the existence of an across Canada medical program by which the health of Canadians would be improved because the federal government, the collector of taxes at the central level, would make a significant contribution to the payment of the bills that would result from the provision of improved health care.

As I examined the accounts of Canada I found that not once in the last eight years, since 1974, has the federal government been able or would have been able to make its payments to provincial governments and to the people of the provinces if it had not borrowed the money. As I look at the public accounts of Canada, I am forced to the conclusion that over the last eight years we have enjoyed a health care system which is probably the envy of most countries of the world, but it is a system which is deteriorating and no longer improving. We have enjoyed that system at the expense of the taxpayers of tomorrow. We have a government which wants the political credit for contributions to post-secondary education. It clearly wants the credit for contributions to our health care system. However, at the same time it wants to blame the providers of the services, the people of the provinces through their provincial governments, for any inadequacies. The federal government wants to take credit for any successes, but lurking in the background somewhere is the fact that the credit it wants to take is credit it is paying for with borrowed dollars which the taxpayers of tomorrow will have to repay for the sake of those who are enjoying the health care and post-secondary education of today. I have been in this House only two and a half and going on three years. When I was elected, the size of that debt required 18 cents of every tax dollar to pay the interest. As I stand here today, it requires 23 cents of every tax dollar collected. That is five more cents of every dollar for bankers in Sweden, New York and London. Five more cents of every tax dollar is not available for health care or post-secondary education.

Where does the blame lie? Why are we considering a bill today which might cut the guts out of our health care system and our post-secondary education system because we are more interested in paying money to bankers? We have been forced into that, and where does the blame lie? I suggest it lies in part with the New Democratic Pary which, back in 1972-74, bargained with and leapt into bed with the Liberal government to create an explosion of spending, borrowing and long-term commitments without the necessary revenues and without the discipline required to collect the money. Then, in 1979, when we were finally presented with a budget deemed to be the fairest to poor people, a budget which would have brought interest rates down and a budget which would have cut down payments to bankers and made money available for health care and post-secondary education, members of the New Democratic Party stood in the House and threw that budget out. They threw that government out. Therefore, they must accept the responsibility, at least in part, for the tragedy that exists in so much of the legislation which we face in this House.

Mr. Blaikie: You could have been smart enough to get re-elected, but you weren't.

Mr. Hawkes: The hon. member says, you could have been bright enough to get re-elected, but you weren't, that from a member of the New Democratic Party that went to the Canadian people, in bed with the Liberals, and said that an 18-cent tax on a gallon of gasoline was too much; and who refused to join in our bells for freedom in any kind of active sense, when we said 98 cents a gallon, hidden in 15 bills, was quite a bit more than 18 cents and far too much against freedom. The NDP speak out of several sides of their mouth and they should be careful. But they are culpable and they are small.

Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of this chamber is that there are so many silent members on the government side. They will not speak to this bill, they will not speak on a lot of legislation. I suspect they will not speak up strongly in caucus. They will not build an alliance to put the reins on a cabinet minister who is going astray. Somehow they are more concerned with some kind of future gain, perhaps, and their concern is so strong that they will not join together to act on behalf of their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I come from the province of Alberta. As most members of this House know, the per capita income of people in that province is higher than the national average. There is room for increased taxation for the kinds of services that people want, the health services and post-secondary education. I stand in this House, Mr. Speaker, as someone from that province, trying to draw the attention of the House, and of the cabinet minister from Prince Edward Island, and of Members of Parliament from Newfoundland and from Quebec, to the fact that the people in their provinces are quite heavily taxed, that the people in their provinces do not have the same average per capita income, that they do not enjoy the same level of medical facilities and the same kind of medical care.

Yet, some day in the not too distant future, the members from those provinces, Liberal Members of this Parliament from Quebec and Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, will stand in the House and will vote on this bill, and with their vote they are going to be saying to the people of their province that those people will have to cut the health care services and the expenditure on post-secondary education.

We can often escape facts, we can play games with the truth, but there is a bottom line and that bottom line is that once this bill is passed, the governments which are charged with the responsibility of providing medical services and post-secondary education will have less money and will have very little capacity to tax their citizens in more ways to raise more revenue.

The fact remains that this piece of legislation will do that to those people in Newfoundland and Quebec and New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The only reason that bill will pass this chamber is that the people, the voters of those provinces, who sent Liberal members to the House, will watch those Liberal members stand up and vote for those budget cuts, they will watch those Liberal members put loyalty to the party ahead of sound planning, ahead of humane considerations. That is what that vote will signify, Mr. Speaker. We on this side of the House, in the Progressive Conservative Party, will carry the case once again for the people of Quebec. The people of Quebec sent 74 members to this House out of 75 seats. Our one lone member, the member from Joliette (Mr. La Salle), is very busy on all kinds of standing committees, he speaks on all kinds of subjects—

Mr. Roy: And master of none!

Mr. Hawkes: —he does so much of what this government is doing and intends to do, he is responsible to the people of Quebec.

The bells rang for two weeks to bring to the attention of Quebecers that the government wants to tax gasoline at 98 cents a gallon. The people of Quebec were not supposed to find out about that. This government wants to turn over to an appointed body the authority to take land away from the province of Quebec for a power corridor, in a manner that would not allow witnesses to appear, that would not allow public input. And 74 members of this chamber from that province sat mute, sat silent, not concerned about the people of Quebec. One member of this chamber from that province stood up and one party stood up.

As I stand here tonight, very vivid in my mind is a speech given by the Prime Minister about one week ago, when he stood on a platform in the city of Toronto and said that this party, the Progressive Conservative Party, in standing up for the rights of democracy, for the rights of Canadians to be heard, was fascist, just like, he said, a number of countries that he cited, including Spain.

Mr. Speaker, the first thing to note from that is that the Prime Minister is not an adequate student of history, that he has not examined those European countries and the conditions which led those countries to the fall of their democracies. If the Prime Minister had taken the trouble to read a history book about a country like Spain, what would he find? He used Spain as an example. If he looked at the history of Spain and its difficulties, from a historical perspective—

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I am wondering what the history of Spain and the debate about fascism and about bells and all that have to do with the fiscal arrangements, and I wonder if you might call the hon. member's attention to the rule that he is supposed to speak to the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has been listening with interest and attention to what has been said. There has been a general discussion about powers and transfer of powers. The rule of relevance has not been infringed upon, but I am sure the hon. member will take notice of what has been said.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned in my opening statement that the issue of unilateral action was one of the principles that this House and every member in it had to consider. When they vote on this bill, they are voting for unilateral action. They do so in a context in the month of March, 1982. That unilateral action bothers me, partly from its consequence for the health care system and partly because some five miles from my riding border a separatist was elected in the province of Alberta. That came about partly because the people of my region on principle did not like unilateral action. They recognized that unilateral action is frequently uninformed action.

Democracy died in Spain because of two or three major factors. One of them was regionalism. Many regions of Spain, if I can quote the following:

> —especially the Basques and the Catalans, strongly opposed a central government which they saw as being paternalistic, authoritarian, incompetent and as favouring the economic interests of central Spain—Castile.

Thus there was a struggle between Madrid and the regions and, as contemporary events indicate, that regional struggle is alive and well in Spain today. Republican Spain was polarized between competing social and economic philosophies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member does appear to be straying from the point at the present time. Perhaps he can come back to the bill before us.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This country is straying between competing social and economic philosophies and we are faced with a unilateral action. We are faced with a decay and decline in our capacity to provide health services and in our capacity to provide post-secondary education services. I could go on about that comparison.

Mr. Blaikie: Don't.

Mr. Hawkes: "Don't", say the NDP. The decay of democracy was brought about by left-wing forces in Spain and not a right-wing force. It was the leftists and their belief in central government, their belief in appointed people, instead of democratically elected people who brought about the decline of parliamentary traditions and practices and ultimately of the democracy. It is the same in southern Europe and Weimar-Germany.

An hon. Member: Great friends of yours.

Mr. Hawkes: The NDP say they are great friends of mine. This is the party that consistently stands up for the weak in Canadian society, those less able to take care of themselves. It stands up for the right of the opposition in a Parliament and the right of individual members, whether they are in the NDP or government back benches. It stands up and encourages this chamber and all members in it to move toward a system where collective wisdom shall prevail and not a system where people are told what to do, where this chamber is used simply as a voting chamber, where members collectively, like a group of sheep, pass legislation which is bad for this country. That was never the purpose of this chamber.

I wonder how Liberal members from Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Quebec are going to explain to their constituents that they stood in this chamber and, on second reading, voted to reduce the money available for the health care system in those provinces. They stood in this chamber and voted to reduce the money available to the students and educational institutions in those provinces. How do they justify that? It will not just be on second reading but, I suspect, at report stage and third reading stage. They will stand again and again in the House and support policies that do not harm my region in particular, but harm their regions, the regions which sent them to this chamber. How can they justify that in their minds?

Saturday afternoon, there was a public meeting in my riding. Several things were bothering the people of my riding, that are reflected in this bill. Somebody said to me that the record of the last 14 years of this government is characterized by several strategies, supported in large measure by the NDP. One of the characteristics of this government is to cover up or hide the truth, especially financial truth.

The history of EPF and the government's lies about what is going on with EPF is a characteristic strategy of that time. They try to cover up the truth. The finance minister said there was going to be a shortfall of a little over $3 billion. Lo and behold, a month later when some provincial people computed the numbers, the finance department admits it had underestimated the amount by $1.9 billion. That is one thousand nine hundred million dollars, a small mistake. It is a typical mistake. What will the mistake be tomorrow? That is one of the strategies of the government as supported by members opposite.

The second strategy is to transfer the decision-making, the blame and everything else, to appointed people and away from elected people. There are over 450 Crown corporations. All deputy ministers are appointed by the Prime Minister. There are our courts. In almost every piece of legislation, there is a new board or commission being appointed in private through order in council. The amount of remuneration is determined by the cabinet, not by elected people. There is never a principle of scrutiny.

The third tactic is to create chaos, discord and fights, so that the media will concentrate on the fight and the personalities and lose sight of the policy issue. Can we concentrate the media fight between provincial ministers and federal ministers and get all the press people and television cameras looking at the fight, and ignore the fact that in Canada today waiting lists for entry into hospitals are growing? Our Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), talks about finances. I searched long and hard to see whether she had made a speech which talked about health care issues, and I cannot find any. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

THE ECONOMY—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL MEET PROVINCIAL MINISTERS TO ESTABLISH PROGRAM TO STIMULATE ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, last year on December 4, I asked the Minister responsible for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) about the Parti Québécois government's habit of boycotting federal-provincial conferences held in Ottawa. In fact, this boycott had affected a number of departments and agencies including Agriculture, Justice and Status of Women, and finally Tourism. The boycott was not only political, as practised by members of the National Assembly and ministers, but also involved Quebec civil servants who were forbidden to take part in federal-provincial conferences.

Considering this question, Mr. Speaker, and the disastrous economic situation in Quebec—25 per cent of the labour force lives in Quebec and one out of every three unemployed Canadians lives in Quebec as well. The province has about one third of Canada's unemployed workers, and I and all federal Liberal members from Quebec are particularly concerned that 20 per cent of those under 25 are among the unemployed, that we have the highest tax rates in Canada—20 per cent to 25 per cent higher than anywhere else—and that we pay the highest price for gas compared to the other Canadian provinces.

Mr. Speaker, 52 per cent of the province's budget is spent on the civil service payroll and only 2 per cent on job creation. This is a matter of concern, Mr. Speaker. The province has 8 per cent fewer civil servants than Ontario, but has 35 per cent fewer people, which means that Quebec's civil service is much larger than Ontario's, and its members earn $3,250 more, on average.

That reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of the report on the economic situation tabled by the Quebec development and planning board. The board is a provincial agency, and in its report, it pointed out that for the year 1981-82, the government of Quebec would have a budget deficit of $2.5 billion, and that three quarters of the deficit, namely, $1.7 billion, was due to the fact that employees in the public sector were better paid than those in the private sector. That was one of the conclusions drawn by the Quebec development and planning board.

In light of the facts I have just mentioned, I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) whether there were any plans for a meeting with provincial authorities in order to establish a joint economic recovery program for Quebec. Instead of thinking about fielding candidates in the next federal elections, perhaps the Parti Québécois would be better advised to put its own house in order before criticizing its next door neighbour.

It seems to me that in light of this situation—these olympic-sized deficits—we as federal members from Quebec have a share in the development of these policies, and I therefore ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion to meet with his Quebec counterparts in order to stimulate the recovery of the Quebec economy. That is why I asked the minister how important a meeting of this kind would be. This evening, I want to stress the importance of this matter once again to the parliamentary secretary, and I want to ask the minister to set up a weekly review of all economic files at Regional Economic Expansion or Industry, Trade and Commerce and any related department, to keep our Quebec file from gathering dust on the desks of public servants. I feel that we should all work together and that we need active co-operation to keep those files moving, and that decisions must be made as soon as possible so that we can help industry and small- and medium-sized businesses in Quebec benefit from various federal programs.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that in fact as a result of the hon. member's suggestion and suggestions by a number of our colleagues in the Quebec caucus, a meeting was held in Quebec City on March 1. The meeting involved the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe), representing the Government of Canada, and on the other side, Ministers Landry, Parizeau and Biron. On that occasion, a senior officials liaison committee was formed with orders to report in a month's time on ways and means of harmonizing and co-ordinating business assistance programs administered by both governments.

However, I would point out to the hon. member that the federal ministers reminded their provincial counterparts that the Canadian government lends assistance to small and medium-size businesses in Quebec through the following seven instruments:

(1) The Small Businesses Loans Act. More than 5,000 loan guarantees were authorized in Quebec in 1980-81 under this program;

(2) The business expansion program under which 250 grants and 54 loan guarantees were approved in Quebec in 1980-81;

(3) The Federal Business Development Bank authorized more that 1,200 loans in Quebec in 1980-81 and underwrote 13 risk capital ventures;

(4) The program for export market development. No fewer than 477 grants were authorized in Quebec during fiscal year 1980-81;

(5) The Department of Regional Economic Expansion legislation on industrial grants. No fewer than 612 grants were approved in Quebec in 1980-81;

(6) The Export Development Corporation loaned $608 million to Quebec companies and provided insurance coverage on goods exported from Quebec and valued at $931 million;

(7) The federal bond program for small and medium-size businesses enabled over 1,318 Quebec businesses to secure loans worth $186 million during the period from April, 1981, to January, 1982.

In addition to those seven instruments, the Canadian government has established in the past year, as the hon. member knows, a few programs aimed at helping businesses and workers adversely affected by foreign competition, including the industry and labour adjustment program and the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ASSIST INDUSTRIES IN NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, this evening I wish to continue the statements I made on February 25 to the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray). On that occasion I requested, on an urgent basis, some aid for key Nova Scotia industries, specifically Hawker Siddeley Corporation and Sydney Steel. I was told by the minister who answered my question, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) that I would get a satisfactory response. As yet I have not received one.

It is very tempting to be sarcastic and partisan tonight and point out to the minister that his priorities are wacky, and that so are those of his government in that they expanded greatly the foreign aid of this country to the tune of 20 per cent. Among other things this will build a $200 million airport in Trinidad and Tobago. It has recently increased the allocation through export development by another $50 million, so that it can fund to a greater extent that monument to the Algerian revolution. There is still no meaningful response to the real requirement that something be done to save the trained work force and the proven capacity of industry in places like Halifax, Trenton, Sydney and others in the entire Atlantic region.

However, I will resist the temptation to be totally negative tonight, although I must say I think I have provocation because of the complete lack of courtesy shown to me by my colleague in responding on an urgent basis to some of the requests I made. I suggest to him that if it is a question of funds which he requires to provide some much-needed material for the CNR, for Canadian shipyards and, indeed, for SYSCO, I trust I can show him a couple of avenues he might pursue.

First, I point out that as far as the Hawker Siddeley corporation is concerned, Sections 261(b) and 262 of the Railway Act—and I asked the minister to bring this to the attention of his colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin)—requires or stipulates that railways must furnish adequate and suitable accommodation, that is to say rolling stock, for carrying of traffic.

CN has hardly been operating without a profit within the last year or so. A simple directive to CN stipulating that it use some of its profit to purchase some rolling stock from an industry such as Hawker Siddeley would be in the national interest. It has recently given its usual order of 88,000 tonnes of rail to the Sydney Steel Corporation. That order could very easily be expanded, in the same ways, to this industry which is already in dire straits. Despite the fact that for a change it is being well-managed and has received substantial help from the federal government, it requires more assistance, and at the present time CN has the capacity to order more rail. Certainly it has the capacity and obligation to provide more rolling stock which could be purchased from a very suitable corporation; that is to say, Hawker Siddeley.

There is another source of revenue which I believe is available, provided the legislation were changed to make it possible. As Mr. Speaker will recall, several years ago when Don Jamieson was minister of transport, the Maritime Pollution Claims Fund was set up. At the present time there is around $50 million in the fund. There has never been a significant drawdown from it, and, indeed, I believe insurance companies have furnished much of the funds which were used to take care of any marine disasters.

In Korea at the present time offshore supply vessels are being built, thanks to the policies of Korea and the lack of policies of our government, for use in the Atlantic region of Canada. In all seriousness I ask, why not take $10 million or $20 million of that $50 million presently in the Maritime Pollution Claims Fund and use it to subsidize, to some extent, the construction of vessels which will be used in east coast oil exploration, so that shipyards all the way from Lauzon to Marystown, Newfoundland, will receive the benefit of the construction of these types of vessels. They are ideal, for example, for Halifax Industries Limited or Ferguson Industries Limited, to name two important shipyards in Nova Scotia. Instead, what is happening is that Husky Oil and Federal Commerce are having these ships built offshore. They are doing it to the detriment of the shipyards in our country which badly need the work.

I am sure the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has had this matter brought to his attention, but I want to draw his attention to an aide memoire which I will be very pleased to give to him, if he does not have the information. It was prepared for me by the Canadian Shipbuilding & Ship Repairing Association on March 8. I sent Mr. Henry Walsh a copy of the urgent letter which I sent to the minister. The same minister has not replied to my letter or my request for a meeting about Hawker Siddeley. I asked on an urgent basis that we talk about some way to promote shipbuilding on the east coast. Mr. Walsh pointed out a somewhat shocking statistic:

> Importing companies tend not to publicize their offshore purchases. However, the CSSRA by reviewing the foreign technical press has identified close to $1 billion worth of foreign purchases by Canadian companies over the last 18 months.

The government and the minister have stated in the past that they will bring a new dimension to regional development and that they will place greater emphasis upon the industrial side to help industry which has a proven capacity for domestic as well as export production. I remember the minister telling me via satellite from Ottawa, when we were conducting an information program on the CBC, what he was going to do for the maritime region to help industries. The minister has done the square root of nothing so far. Some of us were alarmed at the tendency of this minister when he was minister of industry, trade and commerce to spend a minuscule amount of his budget on the eastern part of Canada. We were hoping when he was given the opportunity of regional expansion, the old DREE portfolio, that he would put that tendency aside and do something meaningful to develop industry in Atlantic Canada, but those of us who were hoping he would turn over a new leaf, as it were, have been very disappointed so far.

I noted today in response to my colleague, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), the minister stated there were certain good things he was doing or about to do. I urge him tonight to take a very close look at what is required to save three important industries in Nova Scotia, namely, ship building, steel production and railway car production.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minister I wish to acknowledge receipt of the letter to which the hon. member has made reference. Indeed, the minister has been giving considerable attention to its contents. I also acknowledge the additional comments made by the hon. member this evening. I can assure him that the minister will give his utmost attention to this matter and I will personally undertake to ensure that the minister is made aware of the hon. member's concerns.

The importance to the economy of Nova Scotia of the Sydney Steel Corporation and the Hawker Siddeley (Canada) Ltd. works in Trenton is undeniable. The federal government, through a cost-sharing subsidiary agreement with the province of Nova Scotia, is engaged at the present time in a $96 million program to modernize the facilities at the steel plant, the first phase of such a program. A firm of project management consultants has been hired and contracts are shortly to be let for blast furnace design and rolling mill design. Discussions are currently under way with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on the possibility of expediting rail orders by Canadian National. The minister is confident that this can be done since rail quality problems, which seem to have occurred in the past at SYSCO, have been overcome at the present time.

This latter point refers directly to one of the comments made by the hon. member in which he noted that SYSCO has received an order for 88,000 tonnes of rail. He suggested that perhaps this could be extended. There seems to be an indication from the comments of the minister that this is indeed possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The allotted time of the parliamentary secretary has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—(A) CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT ON TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILES (B) REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE TABLED

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) why Canada had entered into an agreement at the request of the United States to flight-test the new Cruise missile on Canadian soil. This missile is sophisticated, highly accurate and potentially capable of first strike use. This missile, if developed and deployed, will only lead the Soviet Union, the other super power, to try to develop an equivalent weapon. In short, why is Canada allowing the arms race to be further escalated.

Second, I ask why this was kept secret. Why did Canada settle upon what the minister refers to as a framework agreement late last year, secretly, without informing the Canadian public, Parliament or the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which is at this very moment preparing a report on Canada's position to be presented to the United Nations' special session on disarmament? Was the minister and the government afraid that if they made it public there might be, as indeed there now is, some public opposition to our complicity in the escalation of the nuclear arms race by giving support to the testing of the Cruise missile? Was the government afraid there might be a response here comparable to that in western Europe where a great many people are vigorously protesting the deployment of this very Cruise missile?

The minister says we cannot pursue a course of unilateral disarmament. That is a red herring. We are not talking about unilateral disarmament any more than The Netherlands which refuses to deploy the Cruise missile, or Belgium which refuses to take any decision on it at all—not at all. I would have hoped the Canadian government could have taken an independent stand, perhaps even set an example, since it was Canada which first enunciated the strategy of nuclear suffocation, by saying no, we do not want Cruise missile testing on Canadian soil anymore than we would want Cruise missile deployment. The two are inextricably linked.

In addition, the minister did not answer the question as to whether the reason we so supinely and secretly agreed to this testing was because it was part of a deal; perhaps in return for some benefits we might receive in the purchase of the F-18s. He seemed only confused when I asked whether we were still pursuing a strategy of nuclear suffocation, yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), just on Saturday, according to The Globe and Mail, said that Cruise missile testing would contradict that very strategy.

It is absolutely imperative, Mr. Speaker, that the minister or the Prime Minister immediately table in this House—not just "give consideration to it"—the framework agreement drawn up late last year so that we in this Parliament, and through us the Canadian public, will know exactly how we have been further unnecessarily and wrongfully involved in this incredible escalation of the arms race which, as I said, will only lead to the Soviet Union attempting to get an equivalent weapon.

• (2225)

The minister must also make up for the affront both he and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) perpetrated against the standing committee discussing questions of security and disarmament, and come back to that committee this week—because this is the last week of our deliberations—and tell us what is in the agreement and why it was kept secret. Two Canadian journalists found out the truth in Washington. Why was it kept secret, and in what way will it possibly advance the cause of ceasing the escalation in the arms race and working toward arms control?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) I will attempt to answer some of the questions raised by the hon. member.

Throughout her remarks the hon. member kept referring to a secret agreement. It seems quite clear from the answers given by the minister to her questions that there is no such secret agreement and the proposals have indeed been made for the negotiation of a framework agreement under which Canadian test ranges and associated air space may be used for the testing and evaluation of United States defence systems. Such tests would take advantage of Canadian conditions of climate and terrain not available in the United States. Among the tests anticipated under the agreement would be tests of unarmed air launched Cruise missiles.

The Canadian decision in principle to permit such testing, subject to the negotiation and conclusion of the appropriate agreement and arrangements with the United States, demonstrates Canada's support for NATO. I stress the fact again that this is subject to the negotiation and conclusion of the appropriate agreement and arrangements with the United States. Contrary to what the hon. member has said, there has been no agreement to date, and such an agreement remains to be negotiated.

Miss Jewett: The framework agreement.

Mr. Berger: Air launched Cruise missiles are intended to form part of the United States strategic deterrent force which provides the nuclear umbrella for both North American and other NATO countries on which our alliance depends, as it must in the present circumstances, to prevent war and preserve peace.

Miss Jewett: It is a fighting instrument.

Mr. Berger: Canadian security policy in the past 30 years has rested on three complementary foundations: First, deterrence of war through the collective security arrangements of NATO and NORAD; second, pursuit of verifiable arms control and disarmament agreements; and, third, commitment to the peaceful settlement of disputes and collective efforts to resolve the underlying economic and social causes of international tension. In this context, allowing the flight testing of the Cruise missile by the United States in Canadian air space is entirely consistent with Canadian arms control and disarmament policy.

Canada remains fully committed to the pursuit of equitable arms control and disarmament measures. The government has advocated and will continue to advocate the negotiation of agreements between the two major nuclear powers to achieve balanced limitations and reductions of nuclear weapons.

In conclusion, I might add that, in his answer to the hon. member on March 18, the minister said he would consider tabling the agreement once it has been concluded.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE BUDGET—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It is no secret that last November's budget was a political disaster. It was also a personal disaster for the average Canadian, and three cabinet ministers agreed. One illustration of this comes from a constituent who writes:

> Having just gone through a 34.9 per cent increase in my mortgage cost in December, now I am being told my company car will add $900 to my taxes. I just got the car 6 months ago as part of my total wage package. I don't have a chance to renegotiate my wage, and with the decline in the economy I have little leverage. The proposed budget and changes to the status of company cars is unfair.

In light of this complaint and thousands of others, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

> That this House urges the Minister of Finance to withdraw the budget and, after proper consultation with the private sector and citizens groups, to introduce a budget that really is fair and equitable.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SOVIET UNION—UKRAINIAN PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my motion today under the provisions of Standing Order 43 is further to a petition I presented a few weeks ago signed by nearly 11,000 people. It relates to continued violations by the Soviet Union of national and human rights in the Ukraine, which today, along with Afghanistan, Poland, and the Baltic nations, bears the brunt of such violations. Canada is a respected member of the international community for her role in promoting national and human rights and social justice in the world, and it supports the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the United Nations Declaration on Independence for Colonial Countries and Peoples which states that:

> The subjugation of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental human rights, is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and is an impediment to the promotion of world peace and co-operation.

In view of the fact that the government of the U.S.S.R. continues to persecute and imprison numerous Ukrainians who uphold the aforementioned rights, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

> That the Canadian government be required to employ all the necessary steps to persuade the government of the U.S.S.R. to release from imprisonment and/or exile the following of the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group: Yuriy Shukhevych, Lev Lukyanenko, Oksana Popovych, Mykola Rudenko, Ivan Hell, Ivan Kandyba, Rev. Vasyl Romanyuk.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EFFECT OF POLICIES ON EDMONTON COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

> That the Minister of Finance explain why his policies, on just one day last week, forced four companies which belong to the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, into receivership, and four companies to lay off 172 employees and I will provide the minister confidentially with a list of these companies. Further, that the Minister of Finance consult with the management of these companies to learn first-hand the kinds of fiscal policies necessary in the next budget, which the whole country hopes will be very soon, to rescue the economy and encourage again the entrepreneurial spirit originally responsible for the development of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM COMPENSATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Canadian taxpayer pays $3.4 billion a year through the petroleum compensation program to pay for foreign crude oil imported into eastern Canadian markets while at the same time Canadian crude oil is being shut in in Saskatchewan and Alberta for lack of markets, and in view of the fact that we may be able to save up to $800 million a year if we substituted this domestically produced oil for the foreign oil, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House urge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to change the system currently used by the Petroleum Compensation Board—that is the flat rate compensation system—and at this time of decreasing world oil prices the minister use the moneys so saved to give Canadian consumers a break by reducing the next increase in gasoline prices scheduled for July 1, 1982, so we don't have the crazy situation where we are paying more than the Americans.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SECURITY MEASURES AT EDMONTON INSTITUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the recent escape of convicted killer Harvey Andres from the maximum security Edmonton institution, and in view of the many allegations that security at the Edmonton institution is not up to standard, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche):

That this House instructs the Solicitor General to conduct an independent inquiry into security measures at the Edmonton maximum security institution to ensure that security measures are in place to guarantee the safety of residents and prison personnel.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EFFECTIVENESS OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The farm economy which continues to be seriously threatened by the government's high interest rate policy faces another major crisis as spring planting time approaches. Many farmers face the possibility of not being able to finance their planting needs. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That the Minister of Finance take immediate direct action to ensure that the small business bond is effective; immediately institute the agri-bond concept for private agricultural lenders, place a six-month moratorium on farm foreclosures, and work with farm groups to provide short-term financial solutions.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SUGGESTED LAUNCHING OF COMMUNITY JOB-CREATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent matter. Federal government policies have deliberately increased unemployment in Canada adding greatly to poverty in all regions of our country. In B.C. thousands of laid-off workers have been added to over 46,000 poor families on welfare who receive only 64 per cent of the minimum poverty line income established by the National Council on Welfare. Part time workers and those on minimum income, many of them women heads of families, are often much worse off. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That the federal government launch a major community job-creation program and establish a national income standard to ensure incomes are above the poverty line, and that the government require provincial adherence to this standard as one of the terms for shared funding under the Canada Assistance Plan.

DOMINION LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

CALL FOR REVOCATION OF STATEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield):

That the Dominion Life Assurance Company be asked by this Parliament to revoke the irresponsible and misleading speculative statement which it widely distributed and which provoked anxiety and distress among thousands of Canadian citizens by suggesting, without any basis of truth—

Mr. Clark: Except for the budget speech.

Mr. Hudecki:

IMPUTED RENTAL INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to take exception to remarks attributed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) with regard to imputed rent. These hon. gentlemen attempted to deflect the blame for this insidious tax grab on home owners by accusing the president of Dominion Life Assurance of scare tactics. The facts are that imputed rent is spelled out on pages 5 and 31 of the budget document entitled "An Analysis of Federal Tax Expenditures for Individuals," and is totally the creation of this mob of socialist sheep in wolves' clothing across the aisle. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That, as well as getting off the backs of Canadians, the finance minister and the Minister of Public Works get off the back of the president of Dominion Life Assurance and own up to the public that the seed for the imputed rent idea came from government discussions and budget papers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, whereas Prime Minister Trudeau and his Liberals are trying their best—

Some hon. Members: Order. Order.

Mr. Taylor: —to kill co-operative federalism in Canada having stabbed it in the belly with compulsory metric—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. Would the hon. member read that first sentence again? I think he will want to change one word.

Mr. Taylor: The Right Hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, and his Liberals—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: —and his Liberals are trying their best to kill co-operative federalism in Canada. They have stabbed it in the belly with compulsory metric; in the lungs with civilian internment camps; in the throat with gun laws; in the heart with the national energy policy, and in the brain with the November 12 budget. They are now considering a final blow to the kidneys by taxing home owners for the imputed rent on their own homes. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That this House demands the resignation of the right hon. the Prime Minister at once. A general election must be called before the Liberals completely destroy this country and kill co-operative federalism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROTECTION OF ONTARIO MOTORISTS AGAINST TRANSPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS GOODS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That the Minister of Transport make a statement on motions explaining why the motoring public in Ontario is being denied the benefit of the Ontario regulations which would require common carriers to improve vehicle safety as it affects the transportation of hazardous goods.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SHIPBUILDING

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, because of the capital cost allowance provisions in the disastrous November 12 budget, the owners of eight of 11 ships now under construction in Canada are faced with a 5 per cent increase in the after-tax cost of their ships, which translates into $1.5 million to $2 million more per ship. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

• (1415)

That the Minister of Finance honour his promise of equity and fairness in Canada's tax laws by allowing the ship owners to claim the full capital cost allowance as was the provision when the construction contracts of those ships commenced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CHANGES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As it now appears, the Minister of Finance has finally recognized that his budget of November 12 has inflicted serious damage upon the Canadian economy, throwing our country into a deep recession, creating widespread uncertainty among the key sectors of the economy, thereby costing hundreds of thousands of jobs. The minister now considers it to be advisable and worthwhile to consult with the business community about future economic conditions. Given this apparent conversion of the Minister of Finance, can he now say whether there will be fundamental changes to his budgetary proposals, or can he give the House and the country some hope by making a commitment that his budget will be withdrawn, or will he give the country some encouragement by pledging to the people of Canada and to this House that a new budget will be brought in before we break for the summer recess?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member speaks about conversion, and I would occasionally like to see a bit of a conversion on the other side of the House. However, in this case there is no conversion involved, because in the budget paper which was tabled at the time of the budget, entitled "Economic Development for the 1980s," there was a clear statement of the intention of the government to enter into consultations with business and labour concerning each of the economic policies described in this paper. If the hon. member will refresh his memory and go back to that budget document, he will find that these consultations were described as "forming the basis for a continuing dialogue about economic issues and new government policy thrusts as they emerge in the coming months." That is the statement which was made in the strategy on economic development. Any meetings which may be held with the private sector are a fulfilment of the commitment which was given in that budget document.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, the minister knows that his budget is a disaster and he should acknowledge that.

Some hon. Members: Nonsense.

Mr. Mazankowski: He is either immune to the human misery and suffering that he has inflicted upon Canadians across this country, or he refuses to acknowledge it.

DISCUSSIONS WITH REPRESENTATIVE GROUPS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, since the minister and his circle of advisers have obviously misread and miscalculated the depth of Canada's economic ills, what hope can the minister now offer to the people of Canada at this critical time in our history, when they are losing their jobs, their businesses and their farms? Is he, as a minimum, prepared to withdraw those destructive provisions in his budget, or will he at least consider having these disruptive and offensive measures re-examined? Further, if he is to arrive at a national economic consensus through consultation, how can he expect to achieve that without the involvement of labour?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is not the intention of the government to attempt the achievement of a national consensus without the involvement of labour. It is the intention of the government to have discussions with a range of representative groups, including labour. No representative group will be excluded.

TRANSFER OF PUBLIC SERVANT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, newspaper reports state that we welcome the direction the government now seems to be following in terms of reintroducing some tax incentives which were removed from the previous budget. The minister knows that this is a direction which the Progressive Conservative Party has been supporting and advocating since the November budget, but one which has been opposed by his advisers.

• (1420)

Since his advisers represent a very important part of the decisions that he is going to make, would the minister tell us why he has transferred the left-leaning adviser Neil Brooks from a temporary relationship with the government to a permanent position within the government—because this man has consistently opposed tax incentives?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not aware that Mr. Brooks has either left-leaning or right-leaning tendencies. It is not my custom to subject public servants to an ideological test.

An hon. Member: What about Neil Fraser?

Mr. MacEachen: If that is the attitude of the Conservative Party, it is an attitude from which I would like to dissociate myself.

IMPUTED RENTAL INCOME

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the minister again has failed to answer the question. I presume he just does not want to answer that question because it is too close to home.

Let me refer to one other matter in relation to the budget. One of the most socialist elements of the budget and the tax policy that enters into the budget is the proposal referred to in the budget documents of taxing the imputed rent on the homes that individual taxpayers own. I know that the minister is going to say that last Friday he said under no circumstances was he going to do that sort of thing. But I want to put a question to the minister that has been asked of me by Canadians.

How can we as Canadians rely on the word of the Minister of Finance when in 1974 the same government said they would not bring in wage and price controls and then a year later they brought them in? And in 1980 they said the people should vote Liberal to keep energy prices down, and you know what has happened now. Can the minister answer that question for Canadians: how can they rely on him?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): It is on occasions like this that I really would like to see the member for St. John's West back in his seat and asking questions on finance, because he would be able to put some point to the questions. If I could search deeply into that massive verbiage, I would find the reference to imputed rents. Of course, today during the Standing Order 43 period of the House hon. members opposite came to the defence of the Dominion Life Assurance Company, particularly the president, and seemed to believe that it is fair for any responsible corporation in the country to put out false propaganda—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: —propaganda to the effect that it was the—

An hon. Member: That is your preserve.

Mr. MacEachen: —intention of the government to tax the imputed rents of Canadian home owners. Now, Madam Speaker, that is a very serious question.

An hon. Member: Why are you doing that, Allan?

Mr. MacEachen: Many home owners in the country are asking if the propaganda put out by Dominion Life is accurate. I want to make it clear again and again, if asked, that there never has been an intention, there is no such present intention, to tax imputed rents.

An hon. Member: In the budget.

Mr. MacEachen: If hon. members want to be fair and want to find out the origin of the concept of imputed rent, they will go back to the budget documents tabled by the member for St. John's West when he was minister of finance in 1979.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He tabled a Liberal document.

Mr. MacEachen: I wonder why Dominion Life did not get up on its high horse in 1979 when that concept came from the Tory party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PEOPLE'S TRUST

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker—

An hon. Member: Go get him Michael.

Mr. Wilson: —let me remind the minister that the paper that was issued when the hon. member for St. John's West was minister was a departmental paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: Taxation imputed rent was referred to in the budget speech of this minister and in the appropriate budget documents attached to the budget speech. That is why the Dominion Life letter was put out, because this minister legitimized it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order.

• (1425)

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, let me ask the question very succinctly of the minister. It is a very serious question. How can the people of Canada trust a government which in 1974 said that there would be no wage and price controls, and there were, and in 1980 said "Vote Liberal to keep energy prices down?" How can they trust them?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that is a question the Canadian people will answer—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Give them the chance.

Mr. MacEachen: As I said, that is a question that the Canadian people will be able to answer at the appropriate time. All I know, based upon past experience, is that when given a choice between this party and the Conservative Party, they always decide to trust this party and not the Conservative Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON JOB CREATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. First, I would like to say to the Minister of Finance that he has clearly demonstrated that, given the choice between a Liberal budget and a Conservative budget, there is no difference.

My question to the Prime Minister is relevant to the concerns of more than one million Canadians who are unemployed. For the past two years the government has said that it is going to be active in job creation. No fewer than three ministers have embarked on programs which they said would provide jobs. The net result is that since November we have had a decline in the manufacturing sector alone of 140,000 jobs. My question to the Prime Minister is asking whether the government is serious or not about job creation. If it is, when are the more than one million unemployed Canadians going to see some action?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question was asked of me about three or four weeks ago. At that time I gave several examples of announcements which were of a job-creating nature. Since then there have been at least two or three more. I believe there was one by the Minister of Employment and Immigration on human resources, and another by the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing.

ROLE OF MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, since the Prime Minister gave that answer a few weeks ago, the figures for unemployment have been released. They show the highest level of unemployment in Canadian history since statistics were compiled. That is the net result of those programs. I would like to ask him very specifically about an area that affects Canadians from coast to coast, the manufacturing sector. We have a $21 billion deficit in manufacturing trade. If the Prime Minister is concerned about job creation, will he take steps that will turn this around by calling in to his office the heads of the key multinational corporations in the manufacturing sector, and obtain from them commitments for job creation in Canada that are at least in proportion to their sales in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not propose to call them into my office. However, as the Minister of Finance indicated in his first answer today, we are meeting with business leaders. I met with some in Toronto a short while ago. I met with some co-operative leaders in the west. The Minister of Finance is proposing to meet with business leaders as well as with labour leaders in the coming days and weeks.

MANUFACTURING AND TRANSPORTATION EQUIPMENT SECTORS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, surely the point is not to simply have meetings. The point is to obtain very specific commitments that will produce jobs for those Canadians who need them. I would like to ask a particular variant of the question that I just put to the Prime Minister with reference to the manufacturing and transportation equipment sectors. If we remove the imbalance in trade of these two sectors, we would have more than 118,000 jobs in Canada. Will he, as Prime Minister, speak to the heads of the largest multinationals in these two sectors and ask them to make specific commitments that they will earn their profits in this country by providing jobs in Canada proportionate to their sales? Why can he not do that?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in so far as producing jobs in this country is concerned, the hon. member knows that the Foreign Investment Review Agency is precisely set up with a view to ensuring that further expansion by multinationals or investment goes along with that type of condition. If he is talking about the present situation I think that the hon. member is in some difficulty if he is insisting that I get the multinationals to do what—to sell below cost in world markets, or is he suggesting in some way that they should be more competitive with world markets? If so, that involves prices but it also involves wages.

As the hon. member knows, many unions in the United States are renegotiating a downward reopening of wage packages. They are not doing that in Canada yet.

FISHERIES

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF CANADIAN LAW BY FRENCH TRAWLERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to ask the minister what transpired between Canada and France while two French trawlers were hiding out in St. Pierre following orders from Canadian fisheries authorities to report to St. John's, Newfoundland, for alleged violations of our Canadian Fisheries Protection Act. Will the minister table copies of the diplomatic exchange which took place between our two countries?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, on Sunday, March 14, Canadian fisheries officers boarded two French fishing vessels in Canadian waters off the coast of Newfoundland and found that their log books had underreported their catches. The vessels initially refused to comply with orders to report to a Canadian port for inspection. Instead, they went to St. Pierre.

Following representations to the French authorities, the vessels proceeded to Halifax where charges are in the process of being laid. I believe that the charges are for offences under summary conviction and they are for the obstruction of a fisheries protection officer in the execution of his duty under Section 7-D of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

I am not aware of any written exchanges between the governments of Canada and France. I will check to see what kind of exchanges took place, but I suspect that most of the exchanges were between the French fishing boats and the French government.

Mr. Crouse: The French should not be short of codfish for in 1982 they were allocated more than 56 million pounds within our 200 mile zone, with more than 45 million of them coming straight out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

STATUS OF AREA WITHIN 200 MILE LIMIT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, is this fisheries battle a major problem, or is it a side issue to the overriding controversy with France concerning who has jurisdiction over this disputed area within our 200-mile zone? What is the status of any negotiations and discussions concerning this matter, and will he bring the House up to date, since authorities in St. Pierre have asked Paris to send a gunboat to protect French trawlers from Canadian authorities?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member has pointed out, this present problem is related to the controversy between Canada and France over the area which may rightly be claimed by both countries; off Newfoundland in our case, and off St. Pierre-Miquelon in the other. We have had some negotiations with the French government on this point. It is not yet resolved. I do not anticipate an early resolution of this problem.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

FUNDING FOR SIGN LANGUAGE SUMMER SCHOOL

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. He will be aware that the school of translators and interpreters of the University of Ottawa, reacting positively to a major recommendation of the Special Parliamentary Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped and the minister's personal assurance of a quick response to implementing the "Obstacles" report, applied last fall for a small grant of $80,000 to assist in setting up a summer school for sign interpreters in both languages this summer. Because the summer school program at Ottawa University should have been finalized in January, and in view of the minister's own announced commitment, will he give early approval of this application?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I hope that I will have some news for the hon. member on this particular subject before the week is out.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is good news, and I think it is the result of public pressure, which indicates that the public is really ahead of the government in wanting to initiate programs for the disabled.

"OBSTACLES" REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, in view of the public emphasis on implementing programs for the disabled as evidenced by the generous response of the general public to the Terry Fox Marathon of Hope, wherein they provided some $23 million to help find solutions for the disabled, will the minister give top priority to implementing Phase II of the "Obstacles" recommendations as he promised he would do when he assumed his responsibility for the disabled last fall, and thereby catch up to the public demands in these matters?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member again for his very real interest in this subject. The hon. member will recall that we tabled in the House the response of various departments of the government to approximately 40 of the recommendations contained in the "Obstacles" report back in December. Within the next 30 days I hope to table a considerable number of further responses from various departments.

The hon. member will be interested to know that we are also following up with a monitoring system on the implementation that has been undertaken in the various responses by the departments, to determine their effectiveness and to determine whether further action in those areas is warranted. May I also say to him through you, Madam Speaker, that we are making every effort to see to it that we achieve, as nearly as possible in this current year, all of the recommendations that are contained in the "Obstacles" report.

NEW BRUNSWICK SEED POTATO STOCK

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Quebec minister of agriculture has been blaming, in my opinion in a most irresponsible way, New Brunswick produced seed potato stock for the current regrettable situation in the province of Quebec. Can the minister assure us that Mr. Garon's affirmations are not true and that they are irresponsible and damaging to the whole potato industry in Canada, at a time when we are aggressively promoting offshore markets, and are cruelly unjust to New Brunswick producers who have in place the best available disease control program in North America? Did the minister ask Mr. Garon yesterday to put a stop to his false statements and wild accusations?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, Mr. Garon and his officials did meet yesterday with some of my officials and myself. We discussed the issue at length. The evidence that has been presented to me by my officials shows that what the hon. member says to me is correct. The inspection service that we have, the procedure that we follow, is one of the best in the world. We are confident that the seed potatoes produced in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are as safe as anyone can find in the world. We asked Mr. Garon to take this into consideration in what he is saying in the statements he is making which are damaging the image of these potatoes which are as safe as any that can be bought. They are as disease free as any that can be bought anywhere in the world.

FORESTRY

DISCUSSIONS ON LAY-OFFS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA INDUSTRY

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Talks have been taking place for some time now between the minister's officials and the British Columbia government regarding special forestry-related employment programs for the 14,000 unemployed woodworkers in British Columbia. Over 85 per cent of the woodworkers in my riding alone are unemployed as of this week. To date these meetings have involved federal and provincial officials, the Council of Forest Industries, the industry trade associations and Forest Industrial Relations, but no representatives from either the IWA, the silvacultural contractors or the reforestation workers' associations. The people who do the work have not been allowed to take part.

Why has the federal government or the British Columbia government not consulted the very people who know most about the people to be employed and the complexities of the job to be done, and how does the minister square this very one-sided and self-defeating approach with his and his government's oft-repeated policy of consultation?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think this question would be more appropriate directed to the minister of labour in the British Columbia government. I undertook to meet directly with the minister of labour and offered a federal response under Section 38 by saying that we would be prepared to use our funds to support major job-creation efforts in the forestry industry. From that point on it really is the responsibility of the provincial government to follow through. We have had meetings with the provincial government, and I am anxiously awaiting its response.

I can say to the hon. member that, in addition, we have had very positive responses from other provinces, and I will be in a position to make announcements in the next few days. However, as far as meeting with the labour unions is concerned, I think it would be a proper thing to do, and I would be pleased to pass the hon. member's comments on to the minister of labour in the British Columbia government, who would have to initiate those discussions.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I certainly hope it is the job of any federal minister to ensure that we get the biggest bang for our bucks when it comes to the jobs we want to create in that very hard hit industry. I have just returned from meetings with the silvacultural contractors, the tree planters and the IWA. Many of the contractors and tree planters are non-union. If there are not the consultations I have suggested, the program might simply employ some workers and cause equal unemployment amongst others. However, if the program were intelligently applied it would do a better job and employ twice the number of people for exactly the same money.

Will the minister agree to approach the British Columbia government, as he has suggested, very soon, and how soon does he believe we can expect some action on this potentially very important program for British Columbia?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, just by way of a very short reply I should also tell the hon. member that I personally met with members of the IWA union when I visited Vancouver Island. I talked to them about this very project and received their endorsement. I also asked my officials to meet with them so that we could establish some short-term employment response projects on Vancouver Island and so that we could have a close contact with them. However, with the hon. member's encouragement and support and, I am sure, the encouragement and support of his entire caucus—at least I hope his entire caucus because they have not been entirely enthusiastic up to this point in time—we will go ahead and pass his message on to the British Columbia government and hopefully have an agreement in place in a very short period.

TAX DEDUCTION FOR DAYCARE EXPENSES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. He will know that for a young family to survive today it has become almost mandatory for both spouses to work and, to permit that, daycare is essential. The minister will know that if the wife works and the husband goes to school, the cost of child care is deductible, but if the situation is reversed and the wife wishes to increase her work skills, no deduction is allowable.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission recommended to the minister in its 1980 annual report the elimination of this discrimination which, it said, "perpetuates negative attitudes to women who are working or completing their education".

Having brought in two budgets without eliminating this discrimination as recommended, when does the minister plan to do so?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am quite aware of the concern which has been expressed by the Canadian Human Rights Commission. It is a matter which has been raised several times before. At present there is an interdepartmental review in progress which is dealing with this matter. A number of departments, I believe including the department responsible for the status of women, is involved, and I hope the results of that review will lead to some constructive results.

Miss MacDonald: Get on with it.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, the minister will know that not only are the terms of the deduction discriminatory but also the size of the deduction has not been increased for some time.

LEVEL OF DEDUCTION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, the government itself recently increased the cost of child care to Canadians greatly by raising the minimum wages payable to family helpers. Can the minister explain to Canadians why the deduction was not at the same time increased, or if it will in fact be increased in the immediate future to cover the costs that the government itself is asking Canadians to bear?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I hope the review committee will take into account these particular factors the hon. member mentions and devise some way of handling them.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON INTEREST RATES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. As virtually all economic forecasters are predicting that unemployment will continue to rise as long as the government persists with its high interest rate policy, I would like to ask the minister if he could tell the House just how high the government is willing to have the unemployment rate rise before he is willing to consider a policy of allowing interest rates to fall to a level just above the rate of inflation and using the resultant drop in the value of the dollar to stimulate the economy, as has been done very effectively when used in this way in the past, and in this way restore employment in Canada to a satisfactory level.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, with his experience the hon. member knows that the basic reason we have high interest rates in Canada and other countries of the world is because we have very high prices and very high inflation, and the moment we succeed in bringing down inflation we will see an improvement in interest rates. That is why the purpose of the government is to pursue an anti-inflationary policy in order to bring interest rates down.

I do not believe it would be in the best interests of the country to reduce interest rates arbitrarily, and expect our problems to be solved that way. I believe, as stated by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre some time ago, that would be a policy of desperation. That is one area of economic policy in which I agree with the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre and disagree with the hon. member for Northumberland.

EFFECT OF POLICY

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the minister's point of view is that "everybody is out of step but Allan", because all the businessmen of this country are in favour of the policy I have mentioned. Farmers are universally in favour of it. In fact everybody in the country you talk to, including the vast majority of Liberal members sitting on that side of the House, is in favour of it. The Canadian people own the country, not the Minister of Finance and his little coterie of advisers, including the Governor of the Bank of Canada. The people of Canada own the country. It is their country, and if they want a policy introduced, does the minister not think they are being asked to bear an awfully heavy burden just to sustain the stubbornness of a government which simply will not see and is completely out of touch with the economic realities of the day?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member says I am out of step with everybody. I just read a comment made today by Henry Kaufman, the chief economist for Solomon Brothers in New York, who is probably Wall Street's most respected financial analyst. The hon. member is a former president of a stock exchange and I thought I should quote somebody he might respect.

Mr. Hees: I quote Canadians, not Americans.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Kaufman says that Canada has done much better than the United States and that Canadian fiscal and monetary policies are better structured. That is a witness who might impress a former president of the Montreal Stock Exchange.

Mr. Hees: The people who impress me are Canadian economists, not Americans.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECTIVENESS OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Amidst all the economic difficulties he has been enduring and dealing with in the last while I would like to ask the minister if he has noticed that spring has sprung and that, with that, the agricultural community is facing another severe difficulty in looking for financing for spring planting. One thing that might have worked, which is not at all working in areas where it is needed, is the small business bond. There have been a number of questions and answers, but the reality is that at the level of the individual farmer the mechanism is just not working. Banks have excuses, and there are a whole bunch of things wrong.

• (1450)

Has the Minister of Finance talked to the banks? Is there anything which he is prepared to do to ensure that that mechanism in fact works, so that the agricultural community has access to funds for spring planting?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asked whether I propose to speak to the banks. I know that the last time the question was raised in the House, conversations were held with the banks. They were asked whether indeed the benefits of the small business bond were being made available. The fact of the matter is that at the present time there is almost $3 billion committed to financing under the small business bond. I believe it offers very promising results for farmers.

The hon. member will recall that he was one of those who urged me to apply the benefits of the small business bond to unincorporated businesses, including farmers. That was carried out. Certainly the banks have my encouragement and support in providing the fullest possible service to farmers.

The hon. member said that there were a "bunch" of difficulties. That is an awful lot, if they come in bunches. I would be glad if the hon. member would give me some specifics so that I could follow up the matter further with the bankers with whom I will be holding consultations in the very near future.

THREATS TO FARMERS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. I think his response indicates to the Canadian people just how far he and his policies are out of touch with reality or with what is going on at the local level. I said, "a bunch". I challenge him to show me the number of farmers or the number in the agricultural community who have actually received the small business bond.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gurbin: I will leave that and ask a supplementary question. Madam Speaker, $3 billion was development. We are in the bail-out bond business now and it just is not working. Does the Minister of Finance understand another point with banks and farmers, that is the point that banks are now threatening farmers who have become involved in movements to try to create some solutions to the problem? They are threatening them with cutting off their credit. These are farmers who already have lines of credit established, being threatened by banks that their credit will be cut off if they do not stop being involved in movements to try to solve some of the problems. Is the minister aware of that and, if he is, will he do something about it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of that. If the hon. member could provide evidence that bankers are threatening farmers because they are carrying out their responsibilities as citizens, I should like to have facts on the matter and I will raise them with the Inspector General of Banks.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

RESTRUCTURING OF FINANCING OF ASSOCIATION CANADIENNE FRANÇAISE DE L'ONTARIO

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and concerns official language minorities programs. On February 16 of this year, the Department of the Secretary of State, without prior consultation with the persons concerned, announced the restructuring of financing of the Association canadienne-française de l'Ontario. Whereas the Secretary of State's position is not set forth in any public document in which concrete proposals could be examined; whereas a number of organizations have asked the Secretary of State to reconsider a decision that can be qualified as hasty, unilateral and in some ways even threatening for Franco-Ontarians; whereas 13 out of 19 regional associations are giving their democratic support to the provincial ACFO, is the Secretary of State prepared to grant a one-year moratorium so that there can be democratic consultation as well as an in-depth study of this question, and thus maximize the impact of his department's programs by restoring a dialogue and a spirit of co-operation with official language minority groups?

[English]

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I acknowledge my appreciation of the genuine interest of the hon. member in the welfare of Franco-Ontarian people. There is no effort on the part of my department to undertake a financial reconstruction of ACFO. Indeed, my department funds a great number of Franco-organizations in the province of Ontario, of which ACFO is by far the largest, the most important, and the most extensive in the work that it undertakes on behalf of Franco-Ontarians.

We have indicated that in the current year we will increase the amount of support which we give in assistance to the cause of Franco-Ontarians. What was under consideration was a redirection of part of the funds to local areas instead of channelling all the funds through the central organization. In view of the objection which has been made to it, I am happy to inform the hon. member that I will be meeting with officials of ACFO on Thursday of this week, in the afternoon, for a further discussion of the matter.

COMMUNICATIONS

LICENSING OF PAY-TV COMPANIES—JURISDICTIONAL SITUATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Since the Pay-TV announcement of the CRTC last Thursday at least two provincial governments have challenged the authority of the federal government to license this new television service. The Minister of Communications has known for months that, unless the jurisdictional conflict was resolved, the whole development of Pay-TV for Canadians may be in jeopardy. Yet, at past meetings of provincial communications ministers the minister has done nothing to resolve the issue; even worse, he has often refused to have it debated at the table. What does he intend to do at this late date to ensure a quick and orderly resolution of the jurisdictional problem? What specific plans does he have to ensure that the March, 1983, starting date for Pay-TV for Canadians is not jeopardized?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am pleased the hon. member highlighted the important part of the CRTC decision which heralds the introduction of Pay-TV service in Canada. We will see a good part of the profits of that system flowing back to the Canadian program production industry. As far as the federal government is concerned, there is no jurisdictional issue.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE JOINT JURISDICTION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, surely the minister must look upon this as the most recent example of co-operative federalism, such as the wars which have been fought in health care and in post-secondary education. He seems to be only adding to the conflagration, or possible conflagration, by assuming that there will not be court battles over the matter, unless he is joking. I think there will be. Would the minister consider seriously offering joint or shared jurisdiction with the provinces over the hardware or the delivery system, while the content regulations remain federal or under the jurisdiction of the government or the CRTC?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, since the meeting of last September with communications ministers to which the hon. member referred, there have been a number of meetings at the deputy minister level with all provinces, with the exception of the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

Twice the government of Quebec has been invited to meetings with my deputy minister, and twice the government of Quebec, through its deputy minister, has refused to attend these meetings.

[English]

The whole purpose of these meetings was to see whether we could harmonize the federal interest and the provincial interest. However, with the type of positions which have been taken by many provincial governments to the effect that Pay-TV was a matter of provincial jurisdiction, it is very difficult to harmonize those interests. I, for one, feel that it is rather difficult to interpret Pay-TV as being a matter of local or provincial interest or jurisdiction when we are talking about a national signal being sent up to a satellite sitting 23,000 kilometres above the equator and then distributing the signal across the country. I have some difficulty in understanding how this could be a matter of purely local nature.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR LAY-OFFS—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO STIMULATE PRODUCTION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion. The minister is aware of the problems facing the footwear industry, and I apologize for bringing the matter up once again. However, considering the fact that the footwear industry may be losing 2,400 jobs by the end of April if no action is taken by the department, and since rumour has it that the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board is to announce special measures regarding the footwear industry within two months, can the minister confirm the truth of this rumour and that one of his departments will be announcing new measures within two months?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have already announced that the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board will have $17 million to help finance the modernization of the footwear industry, and also $250 million for the purpose of restructuring the clothing and textile industry. So the rumour has, in fact, already been confirmed, Madam Speaker.

INQUIRY WHETHER IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENTS WILL BE MADE BY MINISTER

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. I am sorry, but the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will have to have a talk with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, because last weekend in Trois-Rivières, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to cheer up his Liberal supporters about the economy, said at a press conference that in two months the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board would be making some important statements on the footwear industry. So I would like to ask once again—or perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources could have a little talk with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, since it seems they are not quite in agreement with each other, so I would ask the minister a second time whether the statement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is to be taken at face value, or was the minister merely trying to make some political hay with his Liberal supporters?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, statements made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are always worth while. I will have to check with the minister what he actually meant and said, but I can confirm that we have already announced sizeable funds for the footwear industry and we are reviewing and considering proposals that were submitted by the footwear industry to our colleagues in the Quebec caucus.

MR. HALLIDAY—POLAND—IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and eighty-sixth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) on Monday, March 22, 1982, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I direct a question to the government House leader and ask him what business the House will be dealing with tomorrow, Thursday and Friday. Could he also give us an indication, as far as he can, what business the House will be dealing with next week?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I can deal with the business until Friday. Today and tomorrow we will be dealing with second reading stage of Bill C-97. Thursday will be the last allotted day in this period of supply. Even if the last day under the rules is March 26, we can choose an earlier date. Therefore, this coming Thursday will be the last allotted day in this period of supply.

In so far as Friday and next week are concerned, I intend to have a House leaders' meeting as usual tomorrow or Thursday, and we will discuss that.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I address one further question to the government House leader and ask him whether he has received any indication from Her Majesty with respect to the possibility of her attending in Canada to participate in any ceremonies that might be planned in connection with the patriation of the Constitution?

MR. GREENAWAY—MOUNT CURRIE, B.C.—REQUIREMENT FOR NEW SCHOOL

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 198 students and friends of students at the Ts'zil School of the Lil'wat Nation in Mount Currie, B.C. It will be noted that there are in excess of 200 students attending the school at the present time.

The purpose of this petition is to alert the Parliament of Canada to the grave danger the students are subjected to each day they attend school. This old school has been condemned three times; it is a fire hazard, it has leaky roofs and is located dangerously close to a frequently used railway line.

The nature of the petition is to demand the immediate commencement of construction of a new school in order that it be completed by the target date of July, 1982 as promised by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Construction was to have commenced by July, 1981, but innumerable bureaucratic delays have held up the project.

The petitioners hope in your examination of the petition, Madam Speaker, that you will find it in order and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of Speaker of the House to allow discussion and referral to the appropriate committee at the earliest possible time in order that the continued danger to the students' health and safety may be minimized.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 1,621—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 76 in which it is stated, "Parliament has traditionally recognized that . . . it is not in the public interest for EDC to discuss the terms of its export transactions . . . " (a) what are all the references in House of Commons Debates where Parliament as a whole has agreed to such a tradition?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): In so far as the Department of External Affairs/Export Development Corporation is concerned:

(a) As to references in the House of Commons Debates where Parliament as a whole has agreed to a tradition that it is not in the public interest for EDC to discuss the terms of its export transactions, it is suggested that in the true sense of a tradition as a "custom or the like transmitted by practice, without writing", once any such agreement had been recorded, the custom would have become more than a tradition. In any event it is unlikely that agreement has been given by Parliament as a whole such as by way of resolution or unanimous consent.

There are, however, references in the Debates to publication of documents and details of operation of Crown corporations.

In the House of Commons Debates, 1955, second session, Twenty-second Parliament Vol. I, pp. 892-3, there is quoted a statement by the Speaker on a motion for the production of papers in relation to the operation of the Canadian National Hotel in Montreal. It reads in part ". . . but all leaders of parties, in or out of power, have always agreed that they should not insist upon production of papers which are declared not to be in the interest of the House to get—"

In the House of Commons Debates 1960-1, fourth session, Twenty-fourth Parliament vol. II, pp. 1187 and 1629, a minister, in response to a member's statement that "the representatives of the people are entitled to know down to the last detail what is happening within Crown corporations," stated "that is not the policy . . . of this government" and the Leader of the Opposition is quoted as adding "Nor of the opposition."

The government considers that in export transactions certain information furnished to EDC by exporters and certain information on export financing, such as the rate of interest, must be treated as commercially confidential in view of the intense competition that exists between competing exporters and among exporting countries.

ARCTIC PILOT PROJECT

Question No. 2,806—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Did the government of Denmark make representations on behalf of the government of Greenland concerning the sea route to be followed by the ships of the Arctic Pilot Project and, if so (a) on what date and what was the nature of the representations (b) was a reply given at the time or at any time since and, if so, what was the reply?

2. Does the Arctic Pilot Project envisage off-loading its liquefied natural gas (LNG) at Port Hawkesbury or Gros Cacouna?

3. At what location are the LNG ships to be built?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of External Affairs and Transport as follows:

1. Consultations with the government of Denmark have been proceeding for several years on a number of marine environment matters of mutual interest including the Arctic Pilot Project and a possible marine environment co-operation agreement between the two countries. The concerns of Greenland with regard to the sea route to be followed by the ships of the Arctic Pilot Project have been conveyed by the government of Denmark during those consultations. The last formal round of discussions was held in Copenhagen from July 30 to August 1, 1980.

Since that date a joint working group of experts comprising representatives of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Petro-Canada, the Danish Ministry for Greenland and the Greenland home rule authority has met several times to study potential environmental implications for Greenland. The Canadian government has also kept the Danish government informed of developments relating to the Arctic Pilot Project through the Canadian Embassy in Copenhagen and the Danish Embassy in Ottawa.

In a diplomatic note dated December 23, 1980, to the Department of External Affairs, the Danish Embassy expressed the concerns of the Danish authorities over possible adverse impacts which the Arctic Pilot Project could have on Greenland interests. The note drew particular attention to concerns over the location of the route to be followed by the Arctic Pilot Project vessels in the waters between Canada and Greenland, and indicated the importance of continuing consultations between Canada and Denmark on the subject.

In a diplomatic note dated March 13, 1981, to the Danish Embassy, the Department of External Affairs reaffirmed the commitment of the Canadian government to the preservation of the Arctic environment and to meaningful consultations on the Arctic Pilot Project. The government of Denmark was assured that all aspects of the project, particularly any possible environmental implications for Greenland, would be carefully examined before a final decision is taken. To this end, the department proposed dates for a further round of formal consultations on the Arctic Pilot Project and marine environment co-operation agreement.

The Danish authorities have not yet taken up this Canadian offer to hold a further round of formal consultations. In a diplomatic note dated March 25, 1981, the Danish Embassy expressed the opinion of the Danish authorities that the visit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs would provide a suitable opportunity for a general exchange of views on the Arctic Pilot Project.

During that visit, on June 2, 1981, the Danish foreign minister again emphasized the general concerns of Greenland with regard to the possible environmental impact of the Arctic Pilot Project. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the environmental studies being made with regard to the project by the joint working group of experts and once again emphasized the necessity for the concerns of Greenland to be made known through continuing consultations during the planning stages of the project when they may be accommodated in the decision-making process. The Danish authorities expressed their hope that they would be ready to sign the marine environment protection agreement in the fall of 1981.

During the visit of Greenland's Premier Motzfeldt to Ottawa, February 27—March 2, 1982, the Danish authorities indicated that they are now prepared to resume discussions on the agreement and the Arctic Pilot Project. Mutually acceptable dates for these discussions will be agreed upon in the near future.

2. The decision has not yet been made.

3. The decision is for the proponent to make.

EDC LOAN TO ALGERIA

Question No. 3,892—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the building of a monument to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of the independence of Algeria, did Mr. Claude Baillargeon of the Department of External Affairs answer a telephone inquiry on February 5, 1982 from the office of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville asking whether or not any Canadian funds were involved in this project in the form of loans and grants and which in any way involved the government or a Crown corporation?

2. Did Mr. Baillargeon state the answer to the inquiry was "absolutely not" and was information given in the House of Commons, when questions were asked on the subject on a later date by the hon. member for Central Nova, that admitted government involvement to a certain extent and, if so, how does the government reconcile these answers?

3. What are the exact terms of any agreement involving the government or any Crown corporations on this matter with Algeria and what is the interest rate being charged for any moneys involved?

4. Are there any specific reasons that Mr. Baillargeon would give one answer to the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville and that the government would produce a contradictory answer in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The question that Mr. Baillargeon was answering on February 5, 1982, concerned the possibility of there being Canadian representation at the ceremonies marking the twentieth anniversary of Algerian independence. The commemorative monument was referred to only incidentally. Mr. Baillargeon pointed out that because this important commercial contract has been awarded to a Canadian company, Canada should perhaps be represented at these ceremonies.

2. Without being asked specifically how this operation was to be financed, Mr. Baillargeon indicated that Canada was in fact participating in the construction of the monument, and implied that such financing would be supplied commercially, since an "important commercial contract" was mentioned. There was no mention of a grant.

3. EDC did make financing available to Banque Algérienne de Développement by allocating in 1981, Cdn. 47.6 million under a line of credit with the said institution to support a sale of goods and services by Lavalin International Inc. for the building of a monument in Algeria.

As a matter of general policy the corporation does not disclose details of transactions such as that which is of the subject of the present request.

4. Since Mr. Baillargeon did not go into detail about the methods of financing, his reply was compatible with the items of information provided by the government, namely that this was a commercial contract obtained by a Canadian firm that had received ordinary commercial financing from the EDC.

CIDA EDUCATIONAL PROJECTS IN CARIBBEAN

Question No. 4,034—Mr. Herbert:

How many educational projects in the Caribbean that use Canadian teachers and professors are presently (a) partially (b) fully funded by the Canadian International Development Agency and in which countries are the projects in force?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) There are 19 educational projects in the Caribbean that use Canadian teachers and professors which are partially funded by the Canadian International Development Agency, through its non-governmental organizations division.

These projects are in the following countries:

Antigua
Bahamas
Barbados

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 3,482 can be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 3,482 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMUNITY AND YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Question No. 3,482—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

In the past three years, by constituency, what was the distribution of funds on community employment programs and youth employment programs and, of the distribution, what funds were foreseen for projects for the native peoples and what amount was actually allocated to such projects?

Return tabled.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, March 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Federal Transfers to Provinces

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to resume where I left off last evening discussing Bill C-97, which comprises a unilateral decision of the federal government and the Liberal cabinet to cut funding significantly to hospitals and to post-secondary educational institutions. Between ten o'clock last night and three o'clock today, an important event occurred: the Standing Committee on Public Accounts met this morning.

As we discuss today the government's decision to cut out close to $6 billion worth of funding to hospitals and post-secondary educational institutions, we hear government speakers indicating strongly that this is necessary, that the federal government needs to cut out its expenditures for health care and post-secondary education.

Officials from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources appeared before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts this morning. Their testimony clearly and unequivocally indicated that the import compensation program this year will cost Canadian taxpayers $850 million that it does not have to. Let me repeat that amount, $850 million. All it would take to retrieve that $850 million for the taxpayers of this country is a little common sense.

We discovered in the public accounts hearing this morning that it was possible to buy a barrel of Mexican crude oil this month for approximately $32 Canadian. It is possible in this country today, Mr. Speaker, to buy an equivalent crude, from the province of Saskatchewan in particular, for something less than $24 a barrel. You would think in a nation characterized by common sense that that difference would lead oil companies to buy the Saskatchewan crude and the saving would be passed on to the Canadian consumer. However, when we look into the situation we find that the Government of Canada in its wisdom has decided to give the multinational oil companies $17.50 compensation for importing Mexican crude. The end result is that the cost to the oil companies to import that crude is $9.03 a barrel cheaper than Saskatchewan crude.

Those of us from that region of the country know that the separatists are out there armed with that knowledge and they are walking the streets telling everyone, including the kids in grade school, about that and saying that this is what confederation is all about. This is a government which will subsidize an oil company to the tune of $9.03 a barrel to import Mexican crude while at the same time shutting in Alberta and Saskatchewan crude, because no one in their right mind would buy it if it is $9.03 more expensive. The difference is paid by the taxpayer.

We asked those officials this morning, Mr. Speaker, whether or not the amount of shut-in western crude exceeded 100,000 barrels a day. The answer was yes. We asked how many barrels are imported per day. The answer was 400,000. Then we asked whether, if the 100,000 barrels of Canadian crude were being used in Canada, we could eliminate 100,000 barrels a day of imports and how much would we save in compensation charges. The answer was $850 million this year. It is a remarkable coincidence, Mr. Speaker, that that saving, which would in turn encourage Canadian production and create jobs through the purchase of trucks, steel products and so on, which would increase our tax base, would also restore these cuts in health care and post-secondary education. All it would take, Mr. Speaker, is a little common sense, perhaps a bit of a backbench revolt in the Liberal Party, and a little bit of caring about the reality of Canada.

How, Mr. Speaker, can you go to your riding and explain to your constituents that their tax dollars are being given to the oil companies to subsidize the cost of Mexican crude and at the same time increase the over-all price of our crude? How do you explain that? There are five Liberal members from the province of Newfoundland who will be expected to stand up in this House and vote for this legislation to cut funding for their hospitals. Let me just read from a report by the Canadian Council on Hospital Accreditation concerning one major Newfoundland hospital:

> This hospital is blessed with many fine, dedicated, diligent, sincere and well motivated people who are doing their utmost to deliver high quality care. Unfortunately, in an overcrowded, congested, antiquated plant supplied in many areas with ancient museum piece equipment, there comes a time when even superhuman efforts cannot deliver the modern health care that Newfoundlanders deserve. If the plant and equipment can be updated before the hospital loses its most valuable asset—

That is, its people:

> —there is every reason to believe that the maximum accreditation award can be redeemed.

The accreditation award for that major Newfoundland hospital has already been lost and the cuts those five members from Newfoundland are expected to vote for have not even been implemented. The equipment is antiquated, the health care of Newfoundlanders is already at risk, but those five members will be expected by the Liberal Party of Canada to stand in this House and vote to reduce further the funding to those hospitals.

Let me read to those members another part of this hospital accreditation report:

> The crowding and congestion in the laboratory is phenomenal. It is so extreme as to compromise the quality of care in the hospital. If there is no relief in sight consideration should be given to purchasing two or three trailers and placing them on the grounds to alleviate the congestion.

When those five members stand up and vote for this cut, will their constituents ask them about the funds for the five trailers, let alone the funds for dealing with the antiquated equipment? Where will the funds come from, Mr. Speaker, for the five trailers which should be there to relieve congestion? I quote further from the report, Mr. Speaker:

> The overcrowding in this hospital shows up in patients being held in corridors and nooks and crannies. It shows up in the overlap of medical patients into the surgical wards, and of surgical patients into obstetrics. It has also resulted in a waiting list of 543 patients for the 279 acute care beds that are in the hospital. This long waiting list exists in spite of, or perhaps because of, the fact that for the past six months a 32-bed ward has remained closed because there is not sufficient money to pay the nurses required to operate it. There are now about 50 major surgical postponements every month and patients awaiting elective surgery must wait approximately four months for admission.

Not too many years ago in this country, Mr. Speaker, we could expect to be admitted to hospital for most kinds of elective surgery in three to six weeks. In most parts of the country today it has become three to six months. In a country like England, that period has become three to six years. In wartime, there was a concept called TRIAGE. In a war, there are limited facilities, limited practitioners, but an almost unlimited supply of patients, the casualties of war. TRIAGE dealt with the difficult concept of ultimately deciding who should live and who should die. In most of those wartime situations, a kind of plan for that was developed. However, the first to receive medical care were the seriously wounded, with a good chance of surviving, those with less serious injuries, simply had to wait. The most seriously injured, those with limited chances of survival, were given pain killers and allowed to die.

It is rapidly becoming a fact of life in this country that there are more people dying on waiting lists than dying on the surgical table. In that context, I searched. The present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has held that position for most of the time since 1976. I have read the speeches, press releases and quotations in the newspapers. The remarkable fact involving the life of this present Minister of National Health and Welfare is that she has very seldom spoken about a health care issue. She has very seldom spoken about the length of waiting lists or the need for new technology. In her tenure in this office there has been an almost total lack of moral leadership which would put pressure on all of us to make the commitment to health care which is necessary. Instead, we find a health minister who consistently deals with the world as if she were, or wanted to be, a finance minister, and in a manner deliberately calculated to cut down the funding for medical care instead of increasing it.

As all hon. members of this chamber approach the necessity to vote on this piece of legislation, I think they should ask themselves whether they want their tax dollars put into health care or whether they want their tax dollars put into the hands of the multinational oil companies—Venezuelans, Mexicans and the Saudis. There is a choice to be made. I hope that the Liberals in the back benches will force their cabinet ministers to make the human choice instead of the inhuman choice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have two comments to make on what was said by the member who just finished speaking, the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I feel he may have involuntarily misled the House, and I should therefore like to quote some official statistics to set the facts straight, especially, Mr. Speaker, since the statistics I have before me were tabled at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on December 4 of last year. In committee I did not have an opportunity to answer the hon. member since I was in the chair, and it was of course his duty and responsibility to make comments and ask questions. However, he is still referring, as he did yesterday during his speech, as reported on page 15705 of Hansard, sizeable budget cuts in the area of health, welfare and social affairs. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows perfectly well he is saying half-truths or hiding the truth altogether. I want to remind him that at the meeting on December 4, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), when questioned, tabled the budget figures for 1981-82 and 1982-83 covering contributions for health care under estalished programs financing, but excluding the guaranteed income supplement. I am looking at the increases for the hon. member's own province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, which received $689 million in contributions in 1981-82, which will go up to $772 million in 1982-83, an increase of 12 per cent. He was referring just now to the situation in Newfoundland, and since an election has been called in Newfoundland I wonder whether he was not acting as a spokesman for Mr. Peckford. In any case, people in Newfoundland are watching us right now, and when he says that cuts have been made by the Department of National Health and Welfare, I can see from the budget figures given by the minister at the meeting of the standing committee on December 4, that $182 million was budgeted for Newfoundland and will be increased to $204 million, in other words, an increase of 12.3 per cent. In my own province, Mr. Parizeau has been speaking in the same terms, and I would not be surprised to hear the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) repeating them, although the amount budgeted for the province of Quebec, which last year was $1.9 billion for health care, is to increase to $2.2 billion for 1982-83, in other words, an increase of 12.2 per cent. This is not being mentioned by Mr. Parizeau and it is not being mentioned by the official opposition, but these are the official figures, the real thing. Before getting on with my speech, Mr. Speaker, I think that a member of this House has no right to take half-truths lightly, especially since I was chairing the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when the minister, in answer to these questions, tabled the document I have before me.

Mr. Speaker, the second half-truth told by the member for Calgary West was heard yesterday evening when he was speaking for Quebec, just as he was speaking for Newfoundland just now. He said that the only Quebec member who spoke for Quebec was the member for Joliette. Here again, Mr. Speaker, it is not a case of deliberately lying to the House, but it is perhaps a different interpreation of the facts. I understand that the member for Joliette is a frequent participant in press conferences. If there is a microphone somewhere, either for radio or television, the member for Joliette is there as the expert, and whether it is the Constitution, the footwear industry, pipelines, potatoes, fiscal arrangements, the member for Joliette is always on hand to answer any questions. He is an expert, on what I don't know, but many people say he is an expert on political organization. In fact, judging from his attendance record for the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, for instance, which I have been chairing for two years, the member for Joliette has never attended committee meetings, where 20 per cent of the total budget of the Government of Canada is examined. If the member for Calgary West were fair, he would tell us where Quebec's interests lie and who is defending Quebec in this area. I see the member for Joliette is in his seat, and I dare him to confirm what I just said, namely, that he has never attended the health committee, a committee that examines 20 per cent of the total budget of the Government of Canada.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The member for Laval is challenging me to prove that I did or did not attend the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. With all the responsibilities he attributed to me just now, he should understand that I have not had time to attend the committee's meetings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member did not raise a point of order.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, the member for Joliette has just confirmed that in two years he never attended meetings of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs where 20 per cent of the government's total budget, namely, the votes for welfare, health, hospital insurance and health insurance, is considered. Well, this goes to show how mistaken the member for Calgary West was yesterday when he said that the hon. member was the sole spokesman for Quebec. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I see him as the record player stylus of the Progressive Conservative Party in Quebec, because he speaks on every possible subject. However, I said that he at least had a talent for political organization. Unfortunately, since 1968 his only achievement has been to keep his own riding. All other Progressive Conservatives in Quebec have been eliminated, so that the hon. member's organizational talents have been limited to his own riding. So when the member for Calgary West tells us that the member for Joliette is the only member defending the rights of Quebecers, I think they are in much better hands with the 74 members here in the House who work on committees, are active at the caucus level, work on legislation and are doing more than making all kinds of statements, from the footwear industry to the Constitution and including all the items I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: All talk and no action.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, after reading Bill C-97, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces, I wanted to take part in this debate for two reasons. The first is that this bill provides for the sharing of taxes according to provincial needs and the capacity to pay of individuals which can be reflected within a province by an industrial structure which can generate employment or by natural resources which are an important source of revenue. The second reason is the importance of this bill, which, as I mentioned earlier, represents 20 per cent of the total federal budget. The purpose of this legislation is therefore the sharing of revenue either within a province where some people are better off than others and revenue can be shared through the taxation system. In a federal system, provinces which are better off, either because of their industrial structure or because of the revenues generated by their natural resources, must share with the others. Richer provinces must share with the poorer provinces. This is the purpose of the bill now under consideration, and this purpose is achieved through four programs, namely, equalization, hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education.

The proposals of the federal government provide for an increase in the amount of the transfers proportionate to that of the gross national product over the next five years. These proposals are the result of consultations with the provinces. since December, 1980, the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has met with his provincial counterparts on five occasions. There were also bilateral consultations between the officials of most provinces last summer. Since then, there have been 13 federal-provincial conferences and meetings between officials. The hon. member for Calgary West stated that this was another unilateral decision made by the federal government to amend the fiscal arrangements. Once again, this is only a half-truth. In addition to all these consultations and those 13 federal-provincial conferences, a parliamentary task force was created to examine these fiscal arrangements. This task force held public hearings throughout the country and looked at the changes which should be made to previous agreements to make them more realistic and functional and to make sure that they always reflect the objectives of the federal-provincial agreements, because federal-provincial relations are a central and irreplaceable element of our federal system. They provide essential communications between the two levels of government while allowing all the flexibility required to distribute effectively the powers of taxation, of spending and of legislation laid down in the Constitution. These consultations have been going on for 18 months. Hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education are very important elements of the fiscal arrangements between the federal government and the provinces. While these programs are administered by the provinces, they are to a large extent financed by the federal government even though the Canadian public is not necessarily aware of the origin of the funds. The provinces even attempt at times to hide the source of financing or not to divulge where it gets the money to implement its medicare, health services or hospital insurance programs.

In 1980-81, the amount of federal cash grants and revenues derived from fiscal points in respect of personal and corporate income tax granted by the Canadian government to provinces totalled $9,600 million for those programs and $3,400 million in equalization payments. Those are moneys collected by the federal government and redistributed to the provinces under these arrangements, but unfortunately the provinces hid the source of that funding and the Canadian government received no credit for it.

I must admit that the terms "fiscal arrangements" and "federal contributions to equalization payments" and the health and hospital care policy are unknown to the Quebec Péquistes. They make a point of not mentionning those 20 per cent contributions, preferring instead to talk of independence and turn down every federal initiative. I think the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), who is right in front of me and is a physician, could speak at length on the matter of hospital and health care.

So these terms have been completely ignored since 1976 by the Péquistes. Who said that Ottawa was levying taxes without being entitled to those moneys. Strangely enough, Mr. Parizeau is now saying that if they do not get those moneys, well, they will have to levy more taxes. Some 24 per cent of Quebec's revenues come from transfers from the Canadian government to the Quebec provincial government, 24 per cent of their revenues come from moneys levied through federal taxes and repaid to Quebec under the fiscal arrangements, the major part of which, being equalization payments, are unconditional transfers. Let us look at the Canadian government contributions to the province of Quebec for the fiscal year 1981-82. They were as follows: $592.2 million for hospital care; $203.9 million for medicare; $376.6 million for secondary education; $186.3 million for supplementary health services; and also for 1981-82, equalization payments totalled $1,779 million, or $281 per capita. All this means, Mr. Speaker, is that more than 50 per cent of all equalization payments go to the province of Quebec, but nobody mentions it. The Péquistes prefer to talk about sovereignty, meaning independence and language priority, or so they say. Well, that so-called equalization contribution to Quebec accounts for more than 52 per cent of the total paid to Canadian provinces. Newfoundland received $410.9 million; Prince Edward Island $94.4; Nova Scotia $480 million; New Brunswick $411 million; Manitoba $355.2 million; Saskatchewan $55.2 million, for a total $3,587 million. More than 50 per cent went to the province of Quebec, but Mr. Parizeau ignores it. And fiscal equalization is an unconditional transfer program from the Canadian government to certain provinces so that they can supply a reasonably comparable level of basic public services without having to tax too heavily.

Under the existing arrangements, three provinces receive no equalization payments, namely British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario. That is why I said that only certain provinces received equalization payments, unconditional transfers from the Canadian government to the provincial governments. In 1980-81 that program cost $3,395 million to the federal government and will reach $3,587 million in 1981-82. All provinces do not have the same capacity to generate revenues from the taxes they raise to finance the services for which they are responsible under the Constitution. That is why the equalization program was established in 1957. The formula was based on provincial revenues from three tax fields: personal income taxes, corporate income taxes and succession duties. The formula was changed over the years and grew ever more complex. The one we are using now dates back to the 1967 principles when the whole range of provincial revenues was incorporated and it features a reclassification of revenues in over 20 different categories.

• (1540)

The year 1982 is the twenty-fifth anniversary of equalization. As Canada's Minister of Finance pointed out, and I quote:

> It would be appropriate if we could highlight this anniversary by making further improvements to what is already, in my opinon, one of the best programs of this type in the world.

I must emphasize that under this equalization program, this taxation program for unconditional transfers to the provinces, the amount at the outset of the program was $140 million or 1.6 per cent of the whole budget. Twenty-five years later, those unconditional transfers of funds to the provinces have gone up to $4 billion or 6.5 per cent of federal expenditures on the basis of the national accounts. What were the general principles which, 25 years ago, underlaid those fiscal arrangements between the federal and provincial governments? The fiscal arrangements were designed to enable the federal government as well as the provincial governments to gain access to sufficient tax resources to discharge their responsibilities under the Constitution. They must ensure that each government is responsible to its own electors for its taxation and expenditure policies and makes its decisions while keeping in mind their effects on the other governments. Through an equalization payments system, the fiscal arrangements make it possible for each province to provide an appropriate level of public services without having to resort to significantly higher tax rates than does any other province. They must guarantee that the federal government wields enough taxing power to meet its economic and monetary responsibilities as well as its expenditures. Specifically, they must leave to the central government a fair share of direct taxes both on private individuals and on companies in all provinces so that it will be able to use for economic purposes the variations in the size and form of direct taxes and to ensure fairness in the tax load throughout Canada. They ought to lead to standard agreements among governments and to identical implementation of federal legislation in all provinces. The fiscal arrangements ought to provide the mechanisms to reconcile the policies and priorities of the federal and provincial governments.

Three basic principles stem from those general principles. The principle of responsibility whereby each government must assume before its own electorate the responsibility for raising the revenues required to finance its own programs. Second, the principle of access whereby each level of government enjoys all the necessary constitutional powers to draw the required revenues from each of the major sources available to the state. Third, the principle of interprovincial equality which gives real sense and value to the principle of access by all provinces by providing equalization payments to those provinces whose self-financing potential is lower than the per capita average of the provinces as a whole. Under Bill C-97, will the share of the federal government be smaller, as the opposition and the provinces claim, or are the provinces going to maintain standards and hospital services as provided for in previous fiscal arrangements?

Well, the Minister of Finance was quite clear when he tabled Bill C-97 and announced that under the amended legislation on fiscal arrangements, an amount of $105.5 billion was earmarked for the provinces while $61.3 billion had been paid to the provinces since 1977 under the legislation now in effect. Over the last five years, the provinces collected $61 billion and with the bill now under consideration that amount will be increased to $105 billion.

In light of those general and basic principles, the equalization program is the cornerstone of the Canadian federation. I would now like to deal with the various aspects of the bill which reflect that particular aspect of the Canadian federation. Those clauses are divided into two parts. The first part of the bill will amend the 1977 legislation on fiscal arrangements between the federal government and the provinces and on the financing of established programs and more especially the clauses of the legislation concerning the equalization payments and the financing of established programs.

Part 2 of the bill authorizes the Government of Canada to transfer their share of the export tax to the producing provinces and to pay some provinces an amount equal to the amount recovered under the equalization program for the years 1980-81, 1981-82, according to census date of June 1981. Among the most important provisions of the bill are those amending Part 1 of the act on fiscal arrangements which define the tax equalization program. The program will enable all provinces to ensure proper public services to their people without unduly burdening their taxpayers. Under the new system, it has been estimated that almost $29.3 billion will be paid to six provinces during the next five years in comparison with $16.5 billion paid during the past five years under the present system. As I said earlier, the equalization program is one of the cornerstones of the Canadian federation and the amendments to Bill C-97 are specifically made in keeping with those basic elements.

Now, with respect to hospital insurance. According to those arrangements, payments for hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education were no longer tied to provincial expenditures on a 50-50 basis. Instead federal contributions were increased in terms of GNP growth. At that time, most of the conditions governing the partial financing of those programs were done away with except for a few broad principles of universal access and protection, and non-profit administration. Those changes, wherever no monitoring device was provided for, led to an increase in national expenditures, in nominal dollars, of some 24 per cent in the first three years of implementation of that agreement, while provincial expenditures decreased by about 13 per cent; this ultimately resulted in Ottawa financing 60 per cent of the total cost of the programs. So, Mr. Speaker, did those changes result in the provinces or their residents getting less from the federal government? Definitely not. To my mind, a close look at the speech made by the Minister of Finance shows that he clearly stated that the federal government has absolutely no intention of reducing its participation in those various programs. However, should we not, at some point in time, reconsider the efficiency or performance of those programs?

• (1550)

Is there enough flexibility for the provinces? Is it consistent with the need to maintain national health standards? Does the implementation of this program by each and every province mean that we do indeed have national health standards? How can you say that the health care program is universal when a number of provinces authorize extra billing? I need only refer to the Hall report, Mr. Speaker, which deals with Canada's National-Provincial Health Program for the 1980s. Here are a few chapter headings. I should like to refer for instance to Chapter 2:

Federal Funding Arrangements and Provincial Spending.

During the course of my hearings, there were allegations that some provinces had "diverted" "federal health funds" to other than health purposes, and that, as a consequence, some provincial programs have been "underfunded", thereby causing some doctors to "opt-out" and/or extra bill, resulting in an "eroding" of the Medicare Program.

I have concluded, after examining the evidence, that we are confronted in these allegations with two major issues which are distinct and not necessarily related. The first is the complex question of the effects of the transfer of federal funds to the provinces under The Established Programs Fiscal Arrangements Act (1977). The second, of course, is whether the provinces are fulfilling the conditions of The Hospital Insurance and the Medical Care Insurance Acts.

A little further, the report mentions (1) the ever-growing number of physicians who resort to extra-billing, and (2) the controversies that flow from the conflicts between the medical profession and the provinces over the scale of fees payable to physicians. There is another chapter which deals with the national standards. Justice Emmett Hall stated, and I quote:

I received numerous submissions dealing with the fact that because the provincial tariffs were not uniform, citizens of a province taking ill or needing medical or hospital services in another province found:

(a) That they had to pay the provider then and there;

The provider, meaning, the physician, then and there.

(b) That there was no reciprocity between provinces in the matter of insured charges;

(c) That on returning to their province of residence, they found difficulty and great delay in being reimbursed or partially reimbursed for expenditures incurred while absent from home;

(d) That when sent to a specialist is another province by their own physician, they were only reimbursed in part according to the tariff of the resident's province.

There is a whole chapter on portability. I think it reflects the concern of Canadians regarding the application of standards in connection with the national health program.

I should like to conclude my remarks on the subject of health and hospital services, for I see I am running out of time, with part of a statement made by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I quote:

I must admit that I am worried about extra billing and hospital costs which are charged in certain areas of the country. Finally, how long can we tolerate that a government which pays 60 per cent of the costs receives no credit for it? How can the government inform the public about its contribution? I talked earlier about various social policies and I shall now deal with post-secondary education. We have established certain criteria concerning post-secondary education. The federal government believes that colleges and universities must continue to play a crucial role in the economic and social development of the country, but that the institutions, teachers and students must receive every reasonable support and encouragement. The federal government therefore plans to review its program in the next two years and to request that the provinces increase the amounts they provide for post-secondary education by at least the same percentage as the rate of increase of the cash and tax point transfers under the established programs financing.

The second condition is that the provincial governments must undertake to have discussions with the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) concerning a mechanism to meet the major national objectives for comprehensive support to post-secondary education. Those objectives would be defined in the federal legislation governing transfers granted for post-secondary education under the established programs financing which would be enacted at the end of the 1983-84 fiscal year. The federal objectives of mobility, accessibility, accountability, joint planning and languages are those of the Canadian government. The third condition is that the federal and provincial ministers in charge of programs will use future meetings to examine the mechanisms which would make them more accountable to the legislature and especially the federal Parliament for their expenditures and to ensure that the public is aware of the origin of the funds granted for these programs. At the present time, over 50 per cent of post-secondary loans are paid by the federal government, and the percentage can vary between 52 and 48 per cent.

I am about to conclude, Mr. Speaker, as I see my time has almost expired. What impact will the fiscal arrangements bill have on the finances of the government of Quebec? Under the fiscal equalization formula provided in the bill, Quebec will receive $15.8 billion in equalization payments during the next five fiscal years. That is almost twice the amount—$8.6 billion—Quebec has received during the five-year period ending on March 31.

The average annual increase in equalization payments to Quebec during the next five years will be 10.7 per cent, which is higher than the inflation rate projected over the same period. The bill also maintains established programs financing under which the federal government is funding a sizeable share of provincial hospital insurance, health insurance and post-secondary education. Quebec will be receiving federal cash transfers of up to $7.7 billion and fiscal transfers of up to $11.6 billion over the period 1982-1987, which means a total of $19.4 billion. During the last five years, this amount had been $11.8 billion, which means that under the bill, tranfers will increase from $11 billion to $19.4 billion.

As a result of changes in the equalization payments and established programs financing provided under the bill, federal cash transfers and fiscal transfers to Quebec will increase at an average annual rate of 10.8 per cent. It is estimated that the transfers will amount to a total of about $35.2 billion during the next five years, compared with $20.4 billion over the last five years. The latest estimates for federal transfers to Quebec over the next five years indicate that there will be an increase of $1.4 billion over the figures given in the budget last November. Quebec has strongly criticized the Ontario standard for computing equalization payments proposed by the federal government last November, and the new standard provided under the bill was developed with this in mind. It is based on the revenue average of five representative provinces, namely, Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

In concluding, I believe that the present state of the economy has forced the federal government to restrain its expenditures in all areas. Since transfer payments to the provinces represent 20 per cent of the federal government's expenditures, they cannot escape the government's policy of restraint, and we must ensure that cutbacks are made fairly, and that the projected changes reflect the principles of justice and equity. Mr. Speaker, I trust that in light of the statistics that were given to me here in the House—these are official statistics obtained from the Department of Finance—Mr. Parizeau will stop letting the people of Quebec believe that he will be forced to increase taxes because of the new fiscal arrangements with the federal government and will therefore be compelled to put a heavier tax burden on Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to Mr. Parizeau—and I have the figures right here—that I read an article under the byline of Mrs. Marie-Josée Drouin which appeared in La Presse of Saturday March 20, on the sorry state of public finances. As the managing director of the Hudson Institute Mrs. Drouin listed the errors she had found in Mr. Parizeau's estimates. In 1977-78, a $670 million deficit was expected while in fact it amounted to $884 million. In 1978-79, a $1 billion deficit was expected while in fact it reached $1,475 million. In 1979-1980, a $1,450 million deficit was expected while in fact, it reached $1,816 million. Finally, Mr. Speaker, in 1980-81, the deficit expected to be $2.3 billion in fact amounted to $2.8 billion. That is a series of errors in previous estimates nearing $2 billion. Then Mr. Parizeau should not suggest that he has to increase taxes in Quebec because the fiscal arrangements entered into with the federal government have reduced their revenues. The evidence shows that the federal share will go up by 12.5 per cent in the next year and by an average of 10.8 per cent over the next five years. Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Finance who is the sponsor of that bill and I beg all my colleagues to remember that it is essential for this legislation to be passed as soon as possible so that the funds provided in it may be paid to the provinces.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to participate in this very important debate about the fiscal foundation of the Canadian confederation. It is a debate on matters which affect the health and welfare and future opportunities of all Canadians.

Consistent with the history of the present government, this bill again is a movement in a unilateral manner. It is arbitrary. It is based on some suppositions and assumptions that nobody in this country shares but some of the ministers and their back room bureaucrats.

Why are we faced with a bill which includes changes in the equalization program and changes in established programs financing? This bill is almost like the proposed energy security act, over which the bells were kept ringing for quite a long period of time. This is another of those pieces of legislation in which many things are lumped together.

The government claims that the equalization program is to expire March 31 of this year and therefore it needs to have this bill put through. As is the case with many things the government is claiming with respect to this proposed legislation, "it just ain't so". Indeed, the equalization agreements do expire, but they can be extended until negotiations are held and concluded. Such negotiations with the provinces and other jurisdictions in this country would work out how best the equalization program should work.

There is no need to change established programs financing. There is no need to force a change in EPF by March 31, 1982. That is a fallacy. There is no need to rush this piece of legislation through Parliament and give us only a matter of a week or so to debate this legislation which will affect the fiscal foundation of Canada. This is atrocious, and on behalf of my party I wish to express our outrage at the manner in which the government is proceeding on this particular piece of legislation.

Why make changes now? Surely this government has booted the provinces and other jurisdictions around enough. The attitude in this country is one of mistrust, anger, bickering and lack of co-operation. At a time when we as a society are going through some very serious and difficult social, economic and technological changes, the people of this country are disgusted that their politicians are not exercising their responsibility and are fiddling while Rome burns. The people are disgusted because we are debating how the deck chairs should be arranged while the Titanic sinks.

I suggest that there is no group which must take greater responsibility for the state of chaos which exists in the country than the group which sits opposite. Hon. members opposite surely could have avoided initiating moves to disrupt programs which have been nurtured along for decades. This government is behaving like a bull in a china shop. Since its election it has been struck by a sense of paranoia and by a sense that nobody out there seems to love it any more, so this government is going to change the order in which Canada regulates itself. True paranoia becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy, and the behaviour of this government bears that out. The more paranoid it becomes the more paranoid it acts, and the more paranoid it acts the less people love it. Indeed, the public opinion polls tell that story every time they come out.

As I mentioned before, the relationship between the federal government and the provincial governments in the areas of education, social services and health is an intricate relationship which has been built up over many conferences, royal commissions and studies. We were blessed—or cursed, depending on how we want to interpret historic facts—with the BNA Act, which divided jurisdiction over health and education between the provinces and other jurisdictions and the federal government. However, in our truly Canadian fashion we have evolved because there has been a recognition that we cannot neatly divide those areas of jurisdiction. So over the years institutions have been established and programs and accords worked out. With this legislation those are all blown away, and this creates a sense of insecurity in the health profession and in the educational institutions of this country upon which people depend. Their lives and professions have been built around those agreements, and they are totally insecure and fear the future.

All this is occurring at a time when we in this country need co-operation. We need to work together because the future is looking more and more insecure. We are experiencing changes; the whole world is experiencing changes; this creates more insecurity and more social dislocations. We need co-operation; instead, this government acts irresponsibly and runs around like a bull in a china shop.

An essential element of making a country tick is trust among various levels of government. There must be trust that an agreement made today will be honoured tomorrow and that statements made today will be applicable tomorrow. The level of trust of Canadians and other jurisdictions in the government opposite has fast eroded.

In 1976 when the EPF was announced, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) guaranteed that there would be three years' notice given of any changes. Can we trust the government to live up to its word, if the past record shows that time after time it breaks its word? Of course the people of the country and other governments are not able to trust hon. members opposite. Can we blame them? The record is one that a sane person would come to the conclusion that hon. members opposite are not to be trusted and their word is not to be taken seriously because it changes from day to day depending upon their whim at the time.

Why are they moving now? One major reason is to reduce the federal deficit, but why should money be taken out of health and educational programs? I suspect that planners in the back room thought they had a cute little device to cut back health and educational programs in such a manner that it would appear as if the provinces were doing the cutting. The provinces will get the heat and the federal government will save revenue. This type of ploy might have worked a few decades ago, but I suggest that at the present time Canadians are too smart for that. I am sure that the cuts proposed by the government opposite will carry through and that Canadians will recognize that they are cuts by the federal Liberal Party.

Why is there a 7 per cent effective reduction of federal payments to health and welfare programs? The reason was to reduce the deficit of government. We must remember that it is the government's deficit as a result of years, nay decades, of Liberal mismanagement of the economy and their own house. It is this mismanagement which other jurisdictions are being called upon to carry. I suggest this ploy will be recognized for what it is.

It is not the provinces, the universities or the hospitals that are to blame for the deficit. It is the mismanagement of the Liberal government. It is not the hospitals or the provinces that were responsible for over $1 billion blown by the government on Mirabel airport. It is not the fault of the provinces or the universities that the energy program in the country did not make sense, was insane and stupid. It was not the fault of universities, hospitals or provincial jurisdictions that the interest rate policy increased or aggravated the effects of the deficit. It is not the fault of the provinces, universities or hospitals that many regressive tax breaks introduced by the government opposite during the 1970s eroded its tax base. Why take out the mistakes and sins of hon. members opposite on the health and educational systems? Hon. members opposite are to blame; they should clean up their own mess.

When the agreement was put into place in 1977, the federal government at the time wanted the provinces to introduce restraint in their health and educational programs. This is why it introduced block funding. There are some pros and cons about block funding. We suggested some of the things that were wrong with block funding. At that time the former leader of my party, Tommy Douglas, predicted that there would be a deterioration of the health system. In fact, this has come about. When the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and other hon. members opposite blame the provinces, in part they are correct; but also in part Tommy Douglas was correct when he laid the blame in 1976 and 1977 at their door. They were also to blame.

Miss MacDonald: The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) was your leader at the time.

Mr. Blaikie: That is correct, but Tommy Douglas was our spokesman on health.

Mr. de Jong: Yes, that is correct. Of course, hon. members to my right—and they are always to my right—also supported the new arrangements at the time. Let us not forget that essentially the reason for the new arrangement was to help introduce cutbacks in education and health. This is exactly what happened; there were some serious cutbacks in education.

For example, since 1976 there has been an increase in tuition fees of 60 per cent across the country. From 1976 to 1977, the participation rate at universities fell from 19.4 per cent to 18.4 per cent. Statistics Canada predicts that it will fall to 17.4 per cent in 1986. The federal-provincial task force on student assistance, when it released its report in 1981, indicated that one out of every five people surveyed who did not attend post-secondary education did not attend because they lacked the finances to do so. In that period of time we have seen that the amount of money flowing into the social affairs envelope has decreased in proportion to the increases in other envelopes. For example, in 1980 the social affairs increase was only 9.4 per cent, while social envelope expenditures increased by some 14 per cent. Indeed, the financial arrangements made in 1977 forced the provinces to start cutting back. There have been cutbacks in education and in health. Obviously hon. members opposite are not happy. They want more cutbacks and they will stick it to us all.

At the time there was another wonderful promise by the Prime Minister which the country learned to accept with a grain of salt. As reported on page 1992 of Hansard for December 14, 1976, the Prime Minister said that the federal government would intervene at some stage down the road to correct a deteriorating situation if such should develop. Of course, there was the assurance of 1976, but he shrugs, "Who remembers 1976? That was a long time ago." That is the philosophy of the Prime Minister.

I should like to deal with one other aspect about which federal Liberals should be disturbed. It concerns the present arrangements and deals with their lack of visibility. They are afraid that they are being ignored or that no one appreciates their good works. I have suggested in my constituency before that there was a simple solution. If the university in Regina could maintain its present funding by erecting a billboard indicating that so much money for its great edifice was donated by whatever minister was in office at the time, I am sure it would do so. If our poor friends across the way want a little recognition and a security blanket in the form of a billboard in front of a university to make certain that all students and passers-by know and appreciate the great contributions that they have made, then I am quite prepared to support that proposal. But at least I say to them stop the cutbacks, stop the nonsense. If hon. members over there want a billboard, we will give them a billboard, in neon if need be, with flashing lights or even a statue of the honourable minister. We will put up statues to all ministers as though they were great Roman emperors! But I say for heaven's sake, stop the cutbacks; stop the nonsense; stop the insanity.

I would like to place on the record the concern of and prediction made by the Premier of Saskatchewan, the hon. Allan Blakeney, when he suggested that moving toward block funding might create some problems for federal politicians regarding visibility and accountability. He stated the following:

> Through shared-cost programs, the federal government—in fact, all Members of Parliament—retain a direct involvement in, and identification with, the provision of health, post-secondary education and social services. We welcome that involvement.
> We want Members of Parliament—from Saskatchewan, from all across Canada—to maintain a vigorous and direct interest in these programs. And we want Canadians generally to know of this interest and involvement.
> . . . In this imperfect world, it is not easy to imagine a federal politician rallying support for these programs through a passionate advocacy of equalized tax point transfers.

I think the premier at the time properly predicted the problems with block funding, that there was not going to be an accountability for federal politicians, that there was not going to be a visibility for federal politicians. That is what they wanted. That is what they got. If they are unhappy with that situation, they should go to the conference table and do some decent negotiating, rather than acting unilaterally like the king before the tides, demanding the tides not come in. Surely that is not the way in which this country should operate and be run.

I want to turn my attention now to the field of education. In the report of the parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements the importance of education and the turmoil which the educational facilities in this country are going through is described, and on page 121 of this report we find the following:

> It is clear to the task force that the Canadian post-secondary education sector is in a period of difficult adjustment. Furthermore, much of the evidence we heard suggests that this painful process of accommodation to rapid change will be protracted. We therefore see our role as suggesting how the two orders of government might co-operate more closely to facilitate provincial and institutional responses to change.
> A co-ordinated response would help to ensure a post-secondary sector adequate to the needs of a vast, regionally-diverse country in a highly competitive economic environment, and adequate also to serve the intellectual and spiritual aspirations of individuals in a bilingual and multicultural society.

That report is pure wisdom compared to what has been coming from the benches opposite.

Is there any recognition by the action of this government of the state of our educational institutions in Canada? Is there any recognition of the role they should be playing?

Mr. Blaikie: They want to turn them all into community colleges.

Mr. de Jong: I suspect what my colleague has just said is right, that this government wants to turn the educational institutions into community colleges or technical institutions. I will come to that a little later.

Mr. Blaikie: Philosophy is dead in the Liberal Party.

Mr. de Jong: It has been predicted as a result of government studies that we are going to be experiencing major shortages in skilled manpower in this country, that it might be difficult for us to obtain even the modest goal of 1.5 per cent of our gross national product going into research and development because we might be lacking trained and skilled manpower needed to accomplish that goal.

One tends to think a government that commissions such a report would go out of its way to make certain that the university institutions are capable of educating the trained people that will be needed in the years ahead. But that is not happening. The government instead is unilaterally cutting the means from underneath the university institutions. The government is going to shave $1.5 billion from grants to provinces. In turn, the provinces will be forced to take that money out of health, educational and other programs. In other words, the government is going to tighten the vice. The government is doing this at the very time when the opposite is what is required.

I had the privilege today of being on a panel with a member of the Progressive Conservative Party and a member of the government. A group of provincial civil servants told us of their concern about technological changes that will have vast repercussions on the labour force in Canada. These changes will specifically affect women in low skill job areas. Hundreds of thousands of typists, secretaries and clerks will be losing their jobs in the years ahead. That situation is being recognized and understood. It is recognized that that State of Affairs is coming. But surely a sane person would expect his or her government to lay out the programs to allow these people to be re-educated. Sane people should expect that from a sane government, but sane people realize we have an insane government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Who put them there?

Mr. de Jong: With the proposed cuts, the ability of our educational system to deal with the technological changes that are coming around the corner has been severely hampered. Why do people opposite go on such a self-destructive course in this country? Do they not like Canada any more? Why is this government going around with an axe destroying the institutions that have given this country strength? What insanity has possessed this government?

Mr. Blaikie: Its members are tired, bitter, weary and cynical.

Mr. de Jong: If we as a country are to maintain our economic and cultural position, if we are to remain united as a country, if we are to flourish in terms of understanding each other and each other's culture, then we need strong educational institutions. Our educational institutions are one of the major sources of strength for Canada. Why does this government create an aura of insecurity for them? In order for our educational strength to be nurtured and developed, the institutions need security. Institution administrators need to know that financing will be there next year and the year after and the year after that. Our young people who are taking doctoral degrees in the sciences or the humanities want to know that funds will be available down the road. But instead these people are faced with insecurity, not knowing how deep and how broad the cuts will be. This is not responsible government. It is irresponsible, crazy government.

The university and student associations have made various recommendations. In a brief to the Prime Minister from the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada dated January, 1981, the following was requested:

(1) The federal government recognize that its cash transfers under EPF provide an essential underpinning of university financing in Canada and that it is important, therefore, that any changes in EPF that may be developed with the provinces ensure the continued financial viability and effectiveness of Canadian universities in meeting both provincial and Canada-wide needs;—

• (1630)

Secondly, they called upon the federal government to:

—respect the commitment, made by Prime Minister Trudeau in 1976 when he announced the EPF program, not to amend the EPF arrangements without giving three years' notice of any such intention.

They called for a broad-based royal commission or public inquiry to address itself to the whole question of the function of universities, how much financing they will need and how it is to be arranged. They are asking for a reasonable response, for a process of consultation and co-operation so that education, which is not just a federal or provincial responsibility, can be carried out in a co-operative manner. That is what the universities are calling for, exactly the same as the students.

The National Union of Students, Mr. Speaker, also called for a royal commission or public inquiry into the educational system. Let it be open, let there be input from the public, from students and faculty, from the administration, and from the provinces as well as the federal government. Do not do it in a secretive and unilateral manner, the way the government is now proceeding.

There is a lot of fear in the educational system, Mr. Speaker, about what type of universities and what type of education the great masterminds across the way have in mind. Are they going to withdraw support now through the provinces and replace it in the future with direct grants—perhaps, for example, a voucher system, something which the students are totally dead set against. I share their paranoia about the intentions of this government because it certainly has not been open. We do not know what its intentions are. I suspect, Mr. Speaker, it has some grand design in mind. I suspect it wants to model its own type of university. I have a feeling it might think the system has not worked quite the way it should have and it is going to do it better.

An hon. Member: It has not worked to its advantage.

Mr. de Jong: Well, that is exactly it. It has not worked to its advantage; it has not worked to the Canadian people's advantage either. Yes, there is some more fine tuning which should occur. Yes, universities are badly in need of funds, but the basic structure is there. Universities in this country have evolved and developed over decades, and for the government to think that it can do it better reflects the same wisdom and knowledge which went into its mad design to build the super airport in Mirabel. I suggest it is the same type of planning and thinking and it will be a ghastly and costly mistake which future generations will have to bear.

Is it really the intention of the government to fine tune the education system, so to speak, so that it will produce just technical robots because the government feels this is what the country is going to need and, by golly, that is what the universities are going to have to pump out? Is it concerned that the social sciences and humanities are going to fall by the wayside, because in these times of economic restraint the arts, philosophy and the social sciences are surely frivolous? In fact, it is in those areas particularly, Mr. Speaker, that federal support has fallen so drastically during the 1970s. Is it the government's design to really change our universities into technical institutes because this will fit into its grand economic plan and strategy?

We are not opposed, Mr. Speaker, to future economic planning but it has to be done openly and honestly. It has to be done in consultation with industry, the provincial governments and the universities. It has to be a co-operative process, not a unilateral process. It cannot be something which comes out of the back room of some government bureaucrat—"The new fad for this year is to change our universities". Surely Canada has had enough of governments which deal with one fad this year and another one next year. We need responsible government, Mr. Speaker, and this bill we have in front of us today is irresponsible government. It damages the institutions which have been built up over the years. These institutions can, of course, be changed; that is part of natural evolution. But it should not be hacked and chopped to pieces in the way being threatened by this legislation.

Let there be no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that we in this party will stand opposed to and will fight this legislation. I suspect that in years to come, in other debates in this House, the remarks and predictions made today and yesterday will be quoted, as we in turn are quoting people like Tommy Douglas.

Mr. Kempling: Don't count on it.

Mr. de Jong: What we are seeing is a progression of irresponsible behaviour which will take years to correct. My colleagues and I, Mr. Speaker, stand opposed to this legislation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean)—The Budget—Impact on voluntary sector and municipalities; the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields)—National Energy Program—Effect on Alsands project. (b) Request that minister change policy; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen)—Finance—Taxation of northern allowances—Request that minister meet union representatives. (b) Request that minister withdraw budget measure.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I feel that Bill C-97, tabled last week by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and amending the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, will have a tremendous impact on the federal system in Canada and especially on the economy.

First of all, may I point out that I shall be speaking mainly from the perspective of the province of Quebec, which I represent. Members of la belle province's provincial government will, of course, express their dissatisfaction, as usually happens when there is a federal-provincial discussion. It is most unfortunate, at this stage, that no agreement could be reached on this very delicate matter, but I feel that in the coming months or perhaps in the days or weeks to come, Quebecers will be hearing a lot about this bill which is being debated here in the House. They will be hearing a lot of figures and as usual, the provincial government will be saying that Quebecers are always penalized and that they are not getting their fair share. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that Quebecers, and they are still Canadians, must be told first of all that Bill C-97 does not create a situation that is unfavourable to Quebecers, and that many representations made by the provinces, especially by the province of Quebec, were considered when the new fiscal arrangements policy was established.

Earlier, I heard my colleague, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), discuss the fiscal arrangements situation, and he said that many Quebecers were surprised to hear that much of the funding for post-secondary education came from the federal government. They were surprised because what happens is that federal contributions in the context of federal-provincial programs tend to be, as has already been said by one of our colleagues here in the House, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), the best kept state secret in our country. Quebecers are not allowed to know what they get from Ottawa, because they might start to wonder about the representations made by our provincial authorities regarding the finances of the province of Quebec. Now about this situation, I was very surprised yesterday to hear anglophone Progressive Conservative colleagues discuss the predicament of Quebecers in the following terms: What are the members from Quebec going to do when there is a vote on this bill? What are the Quebecers on the other side of the House going to do, they said yesterday evening, how are they going to support the federal government's financial policy? Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that we can tell Quebecers straight away that under the revised Fiscal Arrangements Act, $105.5 billion are going to be transferred to the provinces across Canada. When people say that the provinces will not have their fair share, we must not forget that $61.3 billion have been transferred to the provinces under the existing fiscal arrangements in 1977. During the 1982-83 fiscal year starting April 1, federal transfers for health and post-secondary education will amount to $11.677 million, which represents an increase of $1.212 million over 1981-82. These transfers are, of course, made under the established programs financing arrangements. In view of these two series of figures and especially of the date of April 1 which I have just mentioned, I was very surprised to hear a member of the New Democratic Party say that we had to act quickly, but that it was not really necessary to pass this bill in so much haste, that everything had been done quickly and that the hon. members, or at least those on this side of the House, were not ready to consider this bill. Mr. Speaker, all the members are well aware that the financial agreements will expire on March 31, 1982. How could a responsible government, in the absence of an agreement, fail to introduce a bill after allowing all parties concerned to discuss the matter so that we can have some legislation and some major mechanism to govern financial arrangements after April 1, 1982? I think that we have to be realistic and that, because of these dates, we had a deadline which we could not overlook.

We have also been told that the government always acts unilaterally and that there have not been any discussions or negotiations, but there certainly have been negotiations in the past months. There have been meetings of the finance ministers, there was a federal-provincial meeting early in February and there have certainly been negotiations involving senior officials. Moreover, changes have been made to the original proposals and the Canadian government has included these changes in Bill C-97. As I have just said, Mr. Speaker, there have been negotiations, and this bill includes changes requested by the provinces, and this is the point that I wanted to make, even some of the representations made by the elected provincial representatives of Quebec have been accepted. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal once again with the major aspects of this bill and come back afterwards to the changes which have been made and which, in my humble opinion, will satisfy the people of Quebec. Equalization payments will increase from $4.1 billion this year to $4.7 billion in 1982-83 under the new system which extends provincial and local revenues subject to equalization and sets a standard based on a representative average.

As for the main changes to the existing formula which will expire at the end of the current fiscal year on March 31, they are as follows, Mr. Speaker: revenue coverage is extended so that the comparison of the respective fiscal capacities of the provinces take into account nearly all revenues and taxes received by the provinces and their local administration. This will add approximately $16.5 billion of additional revenue in 1982-83. This includes various categories of revenues obtained from natural resources which were previously excluded from municipal property taxes and local government revenues from the sales of goods and services.

And now a very important element, namely the new equalization standard, the new formula, the set standard, the level to which the fiscal capacity of the provinces will be raised. The national per capita average was used as a standard under the formula due to expire at the end of this month. The budget advocated an Ontario standard and Quebecers will recall that the present Quebec government objected to that formula because, in their opinion, it was rather unstable and a more equitable formula had to be devised. In light of such representations from Quebec and other provinces as well, a new equalization formula was devised. That formula is contained in Bill C-97 and the Canadian government feels that it is fully geared to the economic realities of the 1980s. As I said earlier, this new formula has been developed to take into consideration the many suggestions made by the provinces during the federal-provincial consultations. According to the hon. member who spoke before me, none were held. He must surely be unaware of recent developments these past few months and over the last year.

As I pointed out, Quebec's finance minister had indeed stated on several occasions that such standard might quite simply unbalance the situation as regards equalization. So what has been done and suggested for the future is a standard based on the per capita average of five provinces which do not include either the richest or the poorest provinces, as follows: British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. Mr. Speaker, those five provinces do represent somewhat of a half-way standard amid the ten provinces with respect to the per capita fiscal capacity and therefore it should be a representative standard. Everything considered, the Quebec government ought to be quite satisfied with the equalization provisions. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Quebecers ought to be told right away that it would be rather surprising if we were to hear more about it from various quarters and be told that it is an unacceptable situation. In any event, perhaps it will be ignored and they will say: "Here we go again, the Canadian government in Ottawa is not giving Quebecers their fair share".

Mr. Speaker, there are people and perhaps elected Quebec members who will misinterpret my intentions and say that I am assuming what the reaction will be in Quebec. Mr. Speaker, the past bears witness to the future and since 1976, keeping in mind the many representations and the many incidents witnessed by Quebecers, we can count on the fingers of one hand the good things that were to come out of Ottawa. Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, we are obviously waging a war of words and statistics which has just begun, in my opinion, and I think we should try to listen to Quebecers such as those I meet in my riding of Lotbinière who are getting tired of listening to people who keep repeating that anything that comes from Ottawa is no good and that only the government of Quebec does the right thing at the right time. I will come to that later on in my speech when dealing with statistics and I will indeed give the figures, the amounts of money which the people of Quebec pay to us and get back from us. Quebecers will realize just what the situation is and especially the ever larger amounts of money paid to the province of Quebec by the Canadian Government. A good many people will say that those payments are taxes paid by Quebecers and to which they are entitled. Fair enough, Mr. Speaker. I am one of those who benefit from taxes paid by Quebecers, but I hasten to add that in light of the figures which may be quoted later on it will be seen that, given their population and the amounts of money they receive, Quebecers happen to be in a situation which is quite different from what we are led to believe.

The new arrangements will effectively protect the provinces receiving equalization payments against any sharp decrease in their payments following a change in their financial position. They will also take into account representations made by the provinces. The yearly increase in equalization payments after 1982-83 will be geared to the growth rate of the GNP, the data for 1982 being used as a basis for the computation.

As I said earlier, let us quote a few figures to determine what amounts Quebecers may expect to receive under the new fiscal arrangements provided for in Bill C-97. This year, as of March 31, Quebec has received $20.4 billion. However, under the provisions of the bill now before the House with regard to fiscal arrangements and established programs financing, Quebec will receive $35,234 million out of a total of $105,544 million. Which means that Quebec, with approximately one fourth of the Canadian population, will receive one third of Ottawa's fiscal transfers; moreover, the payments made to Quebec will increase gradually by as much as $5,557 million in 1982-83 up to $8,682 million in 1986-87. The figures indicate a gradual progression. Let us consider what Quebec has received for the period ending March 31, 1982; it has received $20.4 billion, or roughly a third of the total fiscal transfers. Today, under this bill, this proportion is maintained and the increase is nearly $15,234 million for the period ending March 31, 1982. What do you make, Mr. Speaker, of all these accusations that Quebecers have nobody in Ottawa to represent them when you see all the money they are getting?

In equalization payments alone, Quebec will receive $2,306 million in 1981-82. Under this new bill, it will receive $2,552 million in 1982-83. A projection shows that Quebec should receive $3,831 million in 1986-87. Mr. Speaker, these figures are quite significant and telling about the federal government's contribution to post-secondary education and health care. And I would like to insist on the figure situation, giving as much explanation as possible, to stress that such federal contributions to health and post-secondary education programs under the legislation will total $11.7 billion in 1982-83, a $1.2 billion increase over the current year. As far as Quebec is concerned, and this is where figures are important, such contributions will rise from $2.7 billion this year to $3 billion in 1982-83, a $300 million or 10 per cent increase.

How many Quebecers were quite surprised to hear recently, since negotiations started, about participation in an area where it is said, or rather the Constitution provides, that the provinces have jurisdiction over education. But on the other hand, they are quite happy about the Canadian government's contribution to post-secondary education. They are quite happy to receive those moneys, but there should be no reference to it because we will be attacked here in Parliament because we look for visibility. Well, this is quite normal, in my view. How could a government contributing very substantially, to the extent of nearly 60 per cent in fact, to post-secondary education in Canada not ask Canadians, Quebecers, to recognize such a contribution to our post-secondary education? I think this is most important. And as I said, this year there will be $2,711 million, in 1982-83; $3 billion; in 1983-84, $3,375 million and so forth, until 1986-87 when it will be $4,851 million.

This may be a lot of figures, but concerning those figures, Quebecers should be told that despite the current situation in Quebec they are receiving a large part of the fiscal transfers, and on the face of such increases over the period ending March 31, 1982, let them not have Quebecers believe during the coming weeks that if there are tax increases as it has been rumoured for some months, that it is due to the Canadian government. Because when the facts on transfers are examined, the figures I just gave, it will be seen that $35,234 million, or a third of the fiscal transfers go to a quarter of the people. How many Quebecers have been told since 1976: We account for a quarter of the people, we do not receive a quarter of fiscal transfers, we do not have our fair share of fiscal transfers? Well, the actual share is a third of fiscal transfers.

Looking at the over-all situation, under equalization Quebec will be receiving 54 per cent of the transfers, or close to $16 billion over the five-year period, out of a total $29 billion. That contribution to equalization is part of the building of our Canadian federation under the principle that certain have-not provinces need more than others. And what is more natural considering the conditions that existed in the thirties when western Canada was facing serious financial difficulties and eastern Canada contributed to its development. Today, provinces such as Alberta are very rich as a result of their oil resources. What is more natural under the present federative system than to try to equalize revenues as much as possible according to the natural resources of all provinces, not their per capita income but their financial position, so that the Government of Canada can redistribute the taxes collected from Canadians taxpayers to ensure some kind of equality—

Mr. Tousignant: —equity and justice!

Mr. Dubois: —as the hon. member for Témiscamingue has just said, equity and justice.

However, I point out to Quebecers that the Quebec government will no doubt say it is not enough. When one looks at the figures, one cannot help saying it is a lot just the same and enough to enable the Quebec government to supply services comparable to those enjoyed by the average Canadian, so long as they manage provincial finances with a minimum of efficiency and care. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I say to Quebecers that they should be wary when they are told in the coming weeks or months: "People of Quebec, we are unfortunately compelled to increase your taxes." Yet, Quebecers are not overtaxed so much, only 20 per cent more than in Ontario and more indeed than in the province of my colleague, the Minister of Veterans' Affairs (Mr. Campbell), a rather small province where the tax rate is lower than in Quebec.

It is in this belle province of Quebec that gas is more expensive than elsewhere. It is also in this belle province of Quebec that hydro costs more than elsewhere. We, Quebecers, have seen our tax bills go up by some 16 or 17 per cent. I was quite surprised, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding and throughout the province for that matter, with regard to gas, hydro and tax increases, people did not try to blame the Canadian government or, better still, Ottawa: I was very surprised to hear nothing to that effect. But, Mr. Speaker, those are the facts on the basis of which Quebecers, both men and women, have to judge the financial situation of their province as compared with that of the nation as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, may I now broach the figures that were quoted by the Quebec govermment at the last federal-provincial conference held in February. Referring to those figures, financial arrangements for the coming five years were being discussed; Quebecers were told on the national network that the federal government was making proposals for the year 1982-83, within the framework of a five-year plan. What splendid rhetoric, what wondrous mathematics! To be told that a five-year plan is being negotiated taking into account only the year 1982-83! The forthcoming years, up to the end of the plan, to the end of the five-year program, that is 1986-87, were of no consequence whatsoever. But it was good propaganda, and it was a good opportunity for indulging in the rhetoric Quebec does so well, and to tell the people: Listen here, according to the tables showing fiscal arrangements over the five-year period from 1972 to 1977, we got so much money; from 1977 to 1982, we got a little less, and over a five-year period ending in 1986-87, only 1982-83 was mentioned, the amount was even less than before.

Mr. Speaker, in view of this situation and the figures being mentioned, a number of questions come to mind. How come, as a result of proposals made between 1977 and 1982, Quebecers are receiving one third of fiscal transfer payments, and, in terms of figures I gave earlier, fiscal equalization payments according to the proposed formula will rise and keep pace with inflation over the next five years? Are Quebecers, in terms of the budget, is the province of Quebec—and we are only discussing fiscal equalization payments—is it not clear, Mr. Speaker, that the province of Quebec, by receiving this third, and I am referring to total federal transfers, can we say that Quebecers, with the taxes they are getting back . . . It is really extraordinary, and it should be pointed out again and again to Quebecers: We represent one fourth of the population of Canada and we are getting one third of the fiscal transfer payments. A number of Quebecers, faced with a certain degree of credibility reflected by the federal system, are beginning to question a government that is setting itself up more or less as our own Quebec government and telling us: You are not getting your fair share, let's stay in our own little Quebec, let's separate and we can check all this out ourselves. We are complaining about the present financial situation, when we are getting more money per capita. I think we should be asking ourselves these questions, and we should be giving Quebecers the answers within the coming weeks, and that is why, Mr. Speaker, in this situation, I am not ashamed to tell my constituents in Lotbinière: You are getting one third of the fiscal transfer payments although you only represent one quarter of the Canadian population.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it has been said by others who have taken part in this debate that this is a very important bill. Indeed, it is the fiscal framework of confederation, and this behooves us to address the bill very seriously.

Just over five years ago when I spoke during second reading of the act whose amendment we are now considering, I said that the act itself, which was brought in in 1977, represented federalism at work, embodying as it did a consensus which all parties involved in the negotiations concluded they could live with. That was the situation in 1977. All parties who were involved in the negotiations at that time concluded that they could live with the outcome of the negotiations.

When I spoke to this act some five years ago, I was able to note with satisfaction that it provided for adequate but by no means generous funding on the part of the federal government for four vital national programs. They were equalization, hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education.

I regret that I certainly cannot be anywhere as sanguine about this bill which is before us today. It is true that it does have some good features which merit mentioning, just as its very negative features merit great consideration. I want to mention the good aspects of the bill. It embodies a new set of arrangements for equalization which do reflect a real compromise between the two levels of government. It extends two very valuable ongoing programs which protect provinces against sudden declines in their revenue levels due to economic calamity or abrupt changes in the federal tax bases on which provincial, corporate and personal income taxes are levied. It carries out a pledge made to the three prairie provinces in the 1980 budget to rebate to them 50 per cent of the revenues from the oil export charge on oil exported outside Canada from those provinces. As well, it removes an inequity by which the established programs financing entitlement of wealthy provinces exceeded those of the have-not provinces. That was indeed an inequity and it must be removed.

However, these useful alspects of the bill cannot erase or make up for a provision in it which will discourage adequate funding of health and post-secondary education, reduce Parliament's ability to enforce existing national standards in health care, make agreements on more precise and enforceable standards almost impossible, and prevent agreement on goals of mutual interests to the provincial and federal governments in the field of post-secondary education. That is a provision which contains all these negative aspects. The provision to which I refer, of course, is the removal of the revenue guarantee component of the established programs financing.

This proposal, which will reduce the financial commitment of the federal government to health care and post-secondary education, those two very essential and vital services across this country, will reduce the federal commitment by some $5.7 billion over the next five years. It represents as well a rejection of the spirit of federalism. This is not only because it is being done unilaterally—that method is the favorite method of the Trudeau government—but also because it reneges on a commitment that the federal government made to the provinces and to these programs when the present act was negotiated back in 1976 and 1977.

I should also point out that every independent group, every organization which has studied this massive fiscal arrangements issue, whether it is the all-parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal relations, the Economic Council of Canada, the Canadian Council on Social Development, or the Business Council on National Issues, has recommended against the termination of the revenue guarantee, or indeed any other step that would reduce federal funding, federal support, for health care and post-secondary education. Every group has advised against it.

One must ask, is everyone out of step but the federal government? There has been only one change in the position that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has taken since he announced his intention in the 1980 budget to reduce the expenditures in the social affairs envelope and achieve more savings for the federal government by reducing transfer payments to the provincial governments.

As hon. members will recall, the minister started out in 1980 by saying that he wanted to save $1.5 billion in two years. He now wants to save $5.7 billion in five years. It is a good thing that he did not have another year to get more greedy so that he could gut these programs instead of merely crippling them, which is what he is doing now.

At no point has there been any inclination on his part seriously to consider alternative approaches, whether those approaches have come from the provinces or from groups concerned with the programs that we are discussing. We live in hope that the minister may yet be persuaded of the folly of his obstinate approach and we will be proposing an amendment to the bill which we consider to be very reasonable and would permit the existing arrangement under the established programs financing to continue for another two years.

During that time the provinces would agree to increase their spending on health and post-secondary education by at least the rate of increase in the established programs financing escalator which, I understand, will be approximately 11.5 per cent in 1982 and 1983. One half of that two-year period would be spent in joint federal-provincial consultation with the interested groups concerned with post-secondary education and health care. The rest of that period would be spent in serious negotiations—not the kind of negotiations we have seen happening in the last few months—between the two levels of government on the appropriate support for a method of funding established programs financing by each level of government so that we may come to a real determination of the proper method of support and funding for health care and post-secondary education in Canada.

That period could also be the beginning of a process of establishing more precise and enforceable national standards in health, and of reaching agreement on goals of mutual interest to be pursued in post-secondary education. Surely that is an amendment which should be acceptable to any government which is truly concerned about the quality and accessibility of basic health care and post-secondary education services in this country. It is not asking for the unreasonable, and if the government is really concerned about these issues it will see that the amendment is accepted.

I will be anticipating support for it certainly from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), in whose interest it lies, and from the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan), who is in his seat and who I look to for support in regard to this amendment. The Secretary of State represents, among other things in his constituency, such noted institutions as Dalhousie University, Saint Mary's University and Mount Saint Vincent. I am sure he will want to see that there is no cutback in post-secondary funding to those institutions and that he will want to advocate to other members of the cabinet that this amendment be agreed to by all hon. members on the government side.

I point out to the Secretary of State that in substance the amendment we will be putting forward is the same as a recent proposal by the Canadian Association of University Teachers, so I am doubly confident that he will give it very favourable consideration. I see him shaking his head, and I trust he is doing so in the affirmative.

There certainly is no justification for a further reduction in the federal financial commitment to these programs at the present time when the revenues of all provincial governments are already being squeezed by the current recession. The strain on provincial budgets and, thus, on services such as health and post-secondary education this year will be very severe in any case. Terminating the revenue guarantee portion of the established programs financing can only add to that strain and can only justify the fears of the all-party task force on federal-provincial fiscal relations. I know most hon. members have read the report of that all-party committee and its recommendations. Among other things, the all-party committee said this:

—in order to maintain present standards, programs would have to be privately financed to a greater extent than at present.

Who is asking for that? The all-party committee went on:

In health, this would mean greater appeal to user charges and more extra billing; in education, higher fees. In either case, basic national objectives of equity and equality of access would suffer.

That was the judgment of the all-party parliamentary task force which unanimously recommended against terminating the revenue guarantee.

Yesterday my colleagues, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), ably refuted the rationale the government has been using to support removing the revenue guarantee component from the established programs financing. When they took part in this debate they pointed out that the revenue guarantee was the price the federal government paid to get the provinces to agree to accept block funding for the hospital insurance program in 1977. That was the agreement then entered into, and for the past five years the federal government has claimed it to be a contribution to health and post-secondary education. The federal government itself has seen the revenue guarantee as an ongoing contribution to health and post-secondary education.

My colleagues stated as well that the termination of the revenue guarantee now cannot be treated as anything other than a reduction in program funding. They pointed out that this is the only major item in the government's spending program which is being so severely restrained and that the cutting of its cash support for health and post-secondary education is permitting this government to spend far more on other government programs. It is ignoring the basics of health and post-secondary education and diverting those funds to other items, which surely have to be of less priority than health and education. My colleagues pointed out that far from being a growing burden on the federal treasury, since the introduction of the 1977 fiscal arrangements total cash transfers to the provincial local sector have fallen from 27.3 per cent to 22 per cent of federal revenues and from 22.7 per cent to 19.7 per cent of federal expenditures.

Even more devastating for the government's argument is that even if there was no termination of the revenue guarantee component of the established programs financing, by the end of the 1983-84 fiscal year, according to the government's own projections, federal cash transfers to other levels of government would continue to fall both as a percentage of federal revenues and as a percentage of federal expenditures. That is the case even if we exclude public debt charges from federal expenditures. If we look at the purchasing power of all federal cash transfers to other levels of government, we find that from 1977 to 1981 they dropped in value by 1.3 per cent and that, according to the government's own economic and fiscal projections, between the 1981-82 and 1983-84 fiscal years they will drop in constant dollars by a further 8.8 per cent.

I mention these figures because the Minister of Finance took a different tack yesterday. Yet even in the face of these figures, which can be derived from the government's own projections, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Secretary of State have the nerve to pretend that reductions in the real value of all federal transfers of that magnitude will not result in higher taxes and a lower level of services at the provincial/local level. I wonder if they are dreaming in technicolour when they make that kind of statement, because no one else is making it. Everyone else who has examined the reduction in federal transfers to the provinces says it will result either in a reduction of standards or an increase in provincial taxation, or both.

I am also concerned by the implied assumption of the Minister of Finance when he justified these cuts on the ground that the federal share of the total government revenues after transfers is much lower now than it was in 1959. That is a base year which was used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he referred to this matter in his November 24 speech in Vancouver. He used 1959 as a base year. Yesterday the Minister of Finance used 1961 as a base year. They both said that this represents a very dangerous erosion of the power of the national government.

I want to take a look at that because, leaving aside for the moment the fact that the federal share of revenues after transfers is now at the very same level as it was ten years ago, its share of expenditures after transfers is at the highest level it has attained since 1966. I believe that when we examine why there was a decline in the federal share of government revenues after transfers between 1959 and 1971—or between 1961 and 1971, as the Minister of Finance stated yesterday—we will conclude that it reflected not a loss of power by the national government but, indeed, an assertion of power, because during that period five major national programs were initiated: hospital insurance, the Canada Assistance Plan, equalization in its current form, expanded transfers in support of post-secondary education, and medicare. Those five large national programs have used the federal spending power to finance services in fields of provincial jurisdiction. Surely that was proof positive of an assertion of the federal power during that period of time.

The purpose of all these programs was to provide for a basic national minimum standard of services across the country, services which would be portable from province to province and would be provided, in the case of health programs and social services available under the Canada Assistance Plan, under terms and conditions specified by the national government. Again this was the national government asserting its will and power. It set the national standards by which all these programs would operate. The effect of these programs in making Canadian citizenship real and important, in so far as it relates to access to social, educational and health services, has been immeasurable. They have also encouraged national economic decisions relating to the mobility of Canadian workers and Canadian capital, making the availability of employment and opportunity for profit rather than the availability of provincially-supplied social and economic infrastructure, the key determinants in such choices.

In short, these programs, which I say are a reflection of the assertion of the national will during that period, have been among the major success stories of the Canadian nation. However, because both constitutional scruples and considerations of administrative efficiencies made it seem wise to the federal government, which initiated these programs, to leave direct financing and day to day administration of them to the provinces, their establishment meant a transfer of money and tax points to that level of government from Ottawa.

The federal government initiated these programs and the provincial governments were asked to carry out the day to day administration. As a result, there were certain transfers of cash and tax points. This was not an unfair bargain. The federal government, which initiated the programs, received full credit for them when they were established. Also the federal government escaped the day to day headaches of administering them, and the negative political disability of labour disputes and controversies over whether services were being adequately or fairly provided were assumed by provincial governments.

The federal government had the option when the programs were instituted and every five years when they were renewed, of making its financial assistance conditional upon provincial adherence to specific program standards. This option was exercised with hospital care, medicare, and the Canada Assistance Plan, but not with equalization or post-secondary education transfers. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) wants to claim that the Diefenbaker and the Pearson governments were wrong to have set up these programs, that they were wrong to provide for an expansion of and a greater degree of equality in the important services provided in these programs, then of course he is acting properly in reducing his obligations under EPF on the grounds of fiscal imbalance. If he wants to claim that the governments of those days were wrong to bring these great national programs into being, of course he is quite right in going ahead with the niggardly approach he is taking today. But I think he will have to go a long way before he finds many Canadians who will agree that hospital insurance, equalization, the Canada Assistance Plan, aid to post-secondary education or medicare were mistakes.

What happened to the so-called fiscal balance once all these programs were in place across the country in 1971? In 1971 the federal share of revenues after transfers was 38.3 per cent, and in 1981 it was still 38.3 per cent. More significant, on the spending side, the federal share of expenditures after transfers rose dramatically from 37.5 per cent to 42.4 per cent. Compared with ten years ago, the federal share of revenue is unchanged and its share of spending is up 5 per cent. If anyone has cause to be worried about the shift in the fiscal balance in the past decade, I suggest it is the provinces and the municipalities, not Ottawa.

Comparisons are often made between the level of services provided in health and post-secondary education under the cost-sharing arrangements which were in place until 1976-77 and the level of services under the block funding arrangements which came into effect in 1977-78. There can be no doubt that the real spending of these services increased much more rapidly in the first period to which I referred than in the second, but I believe this was due less to the shift from one form of funding to another than to three other factors which are all too often overlooked. The first of these is the simple fact that real growth in the economy was far more rapid between 1971 and 1976 than it was between 1976 and 1981. In the first period real GNP rose by 26.3 per cent; in the second period it rose only by 12.4 per cent. Consequently, both provincial revenue bases and federal transfers tied to GNP were putting less new purchasing power in the hands of provincial governments, unless they opted to increase their own tax rates. That meant that resources to expand services were less plentiful than they were during the previous five year period.

Second, the 1971 to 1976 period coincided with the filling out of the basic health and post-secondary systems in most provinces. This was the period when they undertook to carry out the commitments which they made earlier. New hospitals, colleges and universities were being built, staffed and equipped to accommodate the demand for health services which was really unleashed by the introduction of medicare and rising enrolments as the baby boom generation came out of high schools. Naturally this meant higher growth rates in costs for these services. However, by 1976 enrolments were levelling off and the growth in demand or health services was moderated. Less expansion of existing facilities was needed to accommodate the demand, and growth rates in expenditures could drop off to some extent without services deteriorating.

Finally, the third reason I would mention is that global federal transfers in cash and tax room for all programs affected by revisions to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, increased to the real value far less rapidly than they had under previous fiscal arrangements.

Resources were shifted from the Canada Assistance Plan in the 1972 revenue guarantee to the established programs financing. For the first three years of that program its growth rate was further enhanced by transitional levelling-up payments. This explains why, by singling out established programs financing and using data only from its early years, inflated claims could be made by the federal government as to the share of established programs which it was funding. However, those same arrangements cut the 1972 revenue guarantee in half and sharply reduced growth in equalization, so that when all transfers are taken into account the picture changes sharply.

Between 1971-1972 and 1976-1977, total cash and tax transfers to the provinces for programs affected by the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements 1977 Act and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, rose by 33.4 percent in real terms. Between 1976-1977 and 1981-1982, they rose by 9.3 per cent in real terms. As a result, total federal cash transfers as a percentage of provincial local revenues fell from 18.9 per cent in 1978 to 17.5 per cent in 1981. As a percentage of provincial local expenditures, they fell from 19.2 per cent to 18.1 per cent. In other words, the federal government is now paying for a smaller share of total provincial local expenditures and accounting for a smaller share of provincial local revenues than it did when block funding came in.

Clearly, that has been a further constraint on top of the slow economic growth in recent years to provinces wishing to expand services. Let me make it clear I am not absolving the provinces of responsibility for the restraint which they have imposed on health care and post-secondary education. Even when the factors I have mentioned are taken into account, some of them have been clearly far less generous than they should have been. I have no reservation about making that statement. But I would say to hon. members opposite that those governments have to account to their oppositions and to their electorates for any negligence on their part for the spending decisions they have taken. I am also saying that much of the responsibility also rests on the federal government, not only because it has been less generous in the past in its funding of these programs but also because of its inability to maintain a healthy and viable economy in this country, which has had such a tremendous impact on the whole question of federal transfers.

If the Minister of Finance goes ahead with what he is proposing now, the federal government will deserve even more of the blame for the inadequate funding of these services and for the erosion of national standards which unfortunately will surely come about. That will be the result of what he now proposes.

Our approach to this issue is constructive. We do not intend to obstruct this legislation. We are prepared to support the new equalization formula and all its other provisions after a reasonable period of examination in committee. But for that part of the legislation we cannot support—the reduction of the government's obligation to post-secondary education and to health care in this country—we are proposing through our amendments a viable alternative which we believe to be fair to both levels of government and, most important, fair to the programs involved.

The votes of members opposite on that amendment will tell us if they are truly concerned for those programs or if their only concern is that the programs are costing the federal treasury too much money.

After examining the probable consequences of a reduction in the federal obligation to support health and post-secondary education through its cash transfers to the provinces, the Economic Council of Canada, in its submission to the parliamentary task force on the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements concluded with this statement:

> In our view there does not seem to be any principle that supports such an outcome.

That is what the Economic Council of Canada said when it recommended strongly against the removal of the revenue guarantee and the reduction of funding for post-secondary education and health care services in this country. It is our conclusion as well. If the bill is not amended to postpone that regressive and reprehensible step while real negotiations on health care and post-secondary education take place, despite all the other provisions in the bill—some of which I have mentioned are good—we will be forced to vote against it when the time comes for a vote.

I hope, however, that there will be a real outbreak of common sense on the government benches and that members opposite will accept the amendment we will be putting forward so that Canadians everywhere will not be faced with a situation where a federal Liberal government unilaterally decides that the standards of health care and post-secondary education in this great country will be reduced because of measures such as this bill.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) for a very in depth and proper consideration of the problems which the provinces of Canada are presently facing. The statistical backup of the situation as it exists is real and undeniable and should be considered by all of those who have followed the lead of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet in every proposition that has been made to Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With one or two exceptions.

Mr. McCain: The exception are so minimal that they have not made much of a contribution to Canada. They have amounted to lip service only and they have not really been there when the votes are counted.

I want to read an excerpt from a speech delivered by the then member for Don Valley. It is reported on page 2125 of Hansard for May 7, 1974. It reads:

> Not only are individuals being badly hurt, but we are reaching a stage in this country where many of our institutions, many of the things that are fundamental for the wellbeing of the country are beginning to break down and be destroyed.

What was at that moment in time an economic prophecy has become a sad reality as we face the situation proposed by this bill on this day in the House of Commons, because the institution of federalism has been challenged in a fashion which is not in the best interests of our nation. We have seen provinces at loggerheads with the federal government and we have seen the federal government issue some edicts to the provinces which they cannot digest in good faith. It will give them trouble. An editorial article in The Globe and Mail today included a comment made by the Prime Minister last month which reads:

> The old type of federalism—where we give money to the provinces, where they kick us in the teeth because they didn't get enough, and they go around and spend it and say, of course, "It's all from us"—that type of federalism is finished.

I want to say to you that the provinces entered into various agreements with the federal government and they entered into them in good faith. At no time has there been any denial by the province of New Brunswick that it is dependent because of its have-not status upon the moneys from the federal treasury, and at no time has it lacked public statements of appreciation for the contribution which was made to the wellbeing of that government and to the people which that government served. For the Prime Minister to pick up the route which was adopted by our minister of health in the House from 1979 to 1980 until she got her fingers rapped and claimed that the provinces are not spending the money in the pursuit of the purposes for which it was paid is not in accord with the facts as they are. To verify that one merely has to refer to the all-party committee which investigated provincial expenditure. As my friend, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) stated in the course of her remarks, they were not diverting these moneys from the purposes for which they were allocated by the Government of Canada.

We cannot continue—I plead with this House and the cabinet ministers—on the basis of confrontation, which has been characteristic of this government for so long. Putting finances aside for the moment, I plead and appeal to the government to get down to the nitty-gritty of how to re-establish the framework of friendship which existed in virtually every other federal-provincial negotiation on cost-sharing and federal funding. The article which I read from continues:

> But there is a difference between renegotiating a contract and delivering ultimatums.

These are not my words; it comes from today's issue of The Globe and Mail. It is self-evident that even the press recognize that the provinces are no longer negotiating with the federal government; they are receiving ultimatums. They are virtually immovable ultimatums. The government does not want to deviate from its initial position, and consequently we find the provinces in the position of having eventually to submit themselves to whatever they can get regardless of what it may do to them. The article goes on to say:

> Mr. Regan did offer last month to extend support for post-secondary education, on the present terms, through 1983-84, but he laid down three conditions: that the provinces agree to match federal funding of post-secondary institutions for the next two years, which seems reasonable; that they agree in principle to let national goals govern their universities and colleges, which seems unreasonable; and that they discuss mechanisms to improve accountability for their spending, and idea which smacks of unwarranted federal interference in provincial affairs. Ottawa's main preoccupation seems to be with receiving credit for the money it raises through its taxing powers—a foolish exercise which is unlikely to concern the average taxpayer who pays the shot whether a federal or provincial government removes the money from his or her pocket.

Mr. Cullen: Blow it away and no accountability.

Mr. Epp: No accountability? Be serious.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I am shocked that a former member of the cabinet of this nation would make such a snide and irresponsible remark. I would ask you to refer to the report which was issued under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). He will deny the insult which you just passed out because, believe me, there are voters looking over the shoulders of every provincial government in this nation, and irresponsible expenditures—just listen for a minute, will you?

Mr. Cullen: I am listening to the hon. member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member is aware that remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. McCain: You might remind that former cabinet minister of that because he seems to be somewhat ill-informed, Sir. I say that respectfully and without any intent to offend the position of the Chair.

Mr. Taylor: The only time he makes a speech is when he is sitting down.

Mr. Cullen: You have not been listening, Gord.

Mr. McCain: If these provincial bodies do not render a satisfactory level of service to their voters they do not stay in office, believe me. That is one of the checks and balances of the system. All irresponsible accusations to the contrary, Mr. Speaker, those moneys have been allocated in the best possible way by the government of the day in every province in Canada.

These are not my opinions which I have read into the record, Mr. Speaker. These are the opinions of a writer in the press. I want to repeat what it said:

> —a foolish exercise which is unlikely to concern the average taxpayer who pays the shot whether a federal or provincial government removes the money from his or her pocket.

The article goes on to suggest that the government has other ways of approaching this:

> It may even offer bursaries—additional to its level of funding—to encourage students to enter these fields.
> But it should not use coercion to tell the institutions what to do. It should not use its taxing power to blackmail the provinces into letting Ottawa intrude in areas under provincial jurisdiction. The educators have enough worries dealing with one level of government—they should not have to cope with a federal level which has a history of leaping in and out of shared-cost programs when the mood strikes it.

Under such a climate, which is properly assessed in this article, post-secondary institutions cannot function. The article goes on:

> The federal government encouraged the provinces, through shared funding, to expand the country's system of colleges and universities. If it wants to change the rules, it should do so through negotiation and consensus. Mr. Trudeau's notion of a new and unyielding federalism will do neither side any good.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned with perhaps every aspect of our economy which will alter the future of young people, middle-aged people, and the security of the senior people of this nation. We have a problem: any cutback in post-secondary education assistance by this government is going to exacerbate the existing problems, particularly with respect to requirements of high technology. This is a subject which the Minister of Finance and other ministers have belaboured for quite some time. This was to be the future of Canada. Yet today we read in two different papers that Canada may need to bring in up to 25,000 high technology specialists for operations for which we do not have trained people. Is this the time then to suggest to the provinces, the universities and the people of Canada that there should be any reduction whatsoever in the federal contribution to post-secondary education, whether it be a community college, a vocational school, college or post-college? Surely not, Mr. Speaker, at a time when we might need 25,000 specialists if our economy takes the turn we hope it will take. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) had the floor.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that high technology, as the future employer, developer and economic base for Canada, will be most damaged by any cutback of federal funds directed to college education or community college education of those who will be engaged in that industry. There has perhaps never been such a need for recognition that research is necessary to make possible a valley in Canada such as "Silicone Valley" in California where chips are made. In Canada we have the expertise. Around the city of Ottawa, we have some of the leadership, entrepreneurship and general capability to put that into shape. We have the training capability in our colleges and community colleges. If there was ever the need for this to be accelerated, not braked, it is now. The hue and cry from the college crew which is working on this subject matter is that they do not have the amount of money necessary to give this skill, this science, the attention which it presently needs. In the present economic climate in Canada, we are losing to those who will pay more, the minds which could develop Canada as the "Silicone Valley" was developed outside of Stanford University.

This budget and the federal-provincial agreement will deter the development of the very high technology aspect of our society which was so highly played up in the budget presentation and in speeches which followed. We are here negating the principal thrust in the fields of education, science, development and employment. However, there is nothing new about this. As early as 1973, it was my pleasure to be at Guelph University where I had dinner with some of the professors who were very anxious to see graduate work undertaken at Guelph on a larger scale. However, it was not taking place as they wished, and they said, "We have to encourage our students to go to schools outside of Canada to get their post-graduate education. We have not been extended the privilege of doing agricultural research which will encourage a student to get the base he requires in his agricultural education. We do not have the salary, the capability or the research opportunity to attract people". As a result, those faculty members were advising people in 1973 that there was too little research and the pay was too low. They said that Canada was not interested in agriculture. We had a brain drain in the agricultural field. Now those brains in the high technology field will join those brains in the agriculture field, and too many will depart from our presence in Canada at a time when we can least afford it. These are some of the consequences.

I cannot understand why the Secretary of State of Canada, (Mr. Regan) a former premier in the province of Nova Scotia, would give his okay as a cabinet minister to any federal-provincial agreement which will reduce the moneys available for colleges anywhere in Canada, but particularly in the province of Nova Scotia. I cannot understand how that Secretary of State could have so little understanding and knowledge of the educational needs of the Atlantic provinces, having been a premier. I accuse that man of turning his back on the educational needs of Atlantic Canada, in general, and of the province of Nova Scotia, in particular. This is a very serious situation. Few men have had the privilege of coming to the House of Commons with the knowledge possessed by the present Secretary of State concerning the demands and the needs. Few men understand how many people from outside Atlantic Canada, and particularly from outside Nova Scotia, are educated in those universities in the Atlantic area of Canada. Yet they are to be shortchanged by the ultimatum from the Government of Canada while he is the Secretary of State and responsible for that particular item.

Let us go a little further in what the provinces' needs are going to be. The provinces' needs are going to multiply in the particular economic climate in which we find ourselves. For instance, we found that in early 1980-81 corporate profits were declining by 13.5 per cent and unemployment was going up. Is it correct, as has been stated in the press, that in the first quarter of 1982 corporate profits are down 31 per cent from those of a year earlier? Is that correct? If it is not, it is correct in round figures. It is in that climate we now have budget estimates and dominion-provincial agreements under consideration in this House. There have been few, if any, years in the history of the provinces when they could less afford to have a decline in their income. Yet they are going to have a decline, because the economy is down; and the federal government is going to save $5.7 billion of its own expenses in reduction in grants, if I remember correctly the figure which was quoted by the member for Kingston and the Islands.

So they are caught in a double squeeze, with prices rising in every aspect. What is their position? The position is, among others, that they will have to borrow 20 per cent more in the 1982-83 year than they had to borrow in 1981-82. That is their position.

Part of the cause, according to this article in the newspaper, quoting a firm's current provincial finance letter, is as follows:

> The significant increase has been caused by the recession and problems over revenue-sharing with the federal government. The estimated figure for next year is 40 per cent more than the cash requirements in fiscal 1980-81.

That is a lot of money. So we are going to shortchange them instead of giving them the assistance they need. It states further:

> The economic slump increases provincial funding needs by putting upward pressure on social assistance spending, while cutting into tax revenue from hardpressed individuals and corporations.

To quote again:

> But in fiscal 1981-82, the Canadian market provided only $1.15 billion or just more than 10 per cent of the total requirements. By contrast, the U.S. market provided the equivalent of $4 billion, while the Eurodollar market chipped in another $1.5 billion.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces have been put in the hazardous position of borrowing in foreign currencies at an uncertain time in our economy. Yet they are compelled to take the risk of exchange losses and compelled to go into the foreign market because the Canadian market cannot supply the money from provincial borrowings. That, of course, means that we have somewhere between half or three-quarters of a billion dollars in extra outflow of Canadian money in interest payments on that debt. So what we are doing is just rubbing salt into the economic wounds of Canada both at the federal and the provincial level. We are putting ourselves further and further away from any possibility of a balance of payments and we are using the provinces as our goats in this area. That is what we are doing and that is the climate in which we are doing it, and it is wrong.

This budget was brought in at a time when Statistics Canada complained. You always have to be very careful of what you quote in this House, because they sometimes think it is not authentic. But I guess hon. members opposite like Statistics Canada. So let me quote the following:

> Six days before the budget was introduced, Statistics Canada repeated its warning that the "market slowdown in activity could develop into a recession during the coming months. The sharp decline in indicators of economic activity has already led firms to cut production, and layoffs had become widespread."

The Conference Board of Canada said:

> Next year holds a bleak prospect for the Canadian economy and for households in particular ... Continuing double digit inflation, interest rates, increasing unemployment, declining business investment and the weakness in the United States all combine to rule out the possibility of a quick turnaround in the pace of economic activity!

That is the climate in which the Government of Canada wants to reduce its payments to the provinces upon good faith contracts made as much as 20 to 25 years ago. Mr. Speaker, this is not acceptable.

Business bankruptcies in 1981 were 22 per cent higher than in 1980. Farm bankruptcies were 18 per cent higher than in 1980 and 109 per cent higher than in 1979. The inflation rate in January was 11.4 per cent and 12.5 per cent; the annual average rate of inflation in 1981 was the largest annual rate in 33 years. Gasoline prices have risen 75 cents a gallon since this government came into power. In the face of all this, we are asking the provinces to take less and we are including education amongst those areas of cutback.

This is being done to the provinces, and to the Atlantic provinces in particular, at a time when virtually every service is costing them more than it had hitherto, in a catch-up process to try to reach the level of payment that is given to doctors, nurses, technicians, etc., in other parts of Canada, such as Ontario, Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan. The pressure upon those governments to recognize those standards of pay which have been given or granted in other provinces is telling now on the budget of every province in Atlantic Canada. That is the time when we are going to cut them back. Mr. Speaker, the timing could not be worse.

Mr. Wilson: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: To save a paltry $5.7 million over the next five years we are going to run those provinces through the economic meatchopper. Where are they going to get that money? Every source of revenue in those provinces is down. The revenue from the gasoline tax is down; the revenue from the income tax is down; the revenue from corporate tax is down; and the revenue from private income tax is down. We are going to step on them when that revenue is down. We are going to grind them in the dirt. How, Mr. Speaker, how can this government have that little conscience?

Welfare payments in the province of New Brunswick are really reaching the point where the minister of social services has put before the committee considering that budget, an estimate, and he has openly stated that he has absolutely no certainty that it is within 20 per cent of what he may require, if the economy continues to go as it is.

We have backed off at the federal level from responsibility for unemployment insurance. We have transferred that expense to the maritime provinces in the form of welfare, social assistance, and it is becoming a backbreaking load. What tax can they increase? The burden of taxation on a per capita basis is about as high as the public can stand in that area, regardless of which province you come from. At what point in time do you reach diminishing returns. We know what happened in the province of Quebec, when it imposed an exorbitant gasoline tax, in an effort to come closer to balancing the budget. We know what happened there; they had to back off. At what point in time do you break the back of the economy in that area? That is the question at which I think the provincial premiers are taking a long, hard look. This is happening in the province of New Brunswick at a time when doctors are trying to negotiate a better paying situation. There is not any question of doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the doctors in most of Atlantic Canada, if not in all of them, have less real take-home pay today, than they had 15 years ago. The increase in payment when related to the increases in office and other costs has by no means kept pace with inflation except perhaps in certain very special fields which are always quite lucrative and provide for the specialist very adequately. However, in the normal practice of medicine in the average community, the average take-home pay is down.

Doctors in New Brunswick who have the skills which we need and which could be practised in any jurisdiction in the United States and most jurisdictions in Canada are taking a hard, long look at abandoning the practice of medicine in that province. This government is going to cut from Atlantic Canada and the other less favoured provinces $5.7 billion at a time when costs are escalating faster than perhaps in any other area.

This, of course, is but one small measure of it. When we backed away earlier in our negotiations with the province on the cost of RCMP as a police force for New Brunswick, we stuck it to them again. It was not a case of negotiating. It was a pure, sheer ultimatum. There were no negotiating opportunities presented to them whatsoever.

There are going to be those who say the payments went up 10 per cent. When they say that, I wish they would look at the fact that the costs in those provinces are going up more than 10 per cent and they cannot control them in this climate created by those who are seeking higher pay.

There is no question but that as the income tax revenues in the Dominion of Canada go down, payments to the provinces will also decline. It is not a specific payment. It is paid on a points basis of what is collected. These are not block or fixed payments. They will decline as the economy continues to decline. This will exacerbate an already serious problem. those from Atlantic Canada who sit in the House and support this situation deceive themselves by thinking that everything is rosy in the less favoured provinces. I cannot do that.

This reminds me of the Liberal dealing. It started in 1947 when the first negotiations were begun so that the federal government could have the income tax field and it would give the provinces a share of it. It dealt with and negotiated province by province. There was one good deal, one bad deal. Each deal got better with one province after the other. Finally, in 1952 the provinces insisted that the federal government sit down at the same table and work out the same deal for all.

That too was a very scrawny deal when another Liberal government in its lack of wisdom dished out to the provinces in the Atlantic area. They did that at a time that is significant and proper for comparison to this situation. The province of New Brunswick was in such a difficult financial position that it virtually had to get the approval of a committee appointed by the world of finance in this nation as to what it was going to spend, how fast, what, when and where it could borrow.

That province was virtually in receivership. We did not quite get there, but that is virtually where we were. At that time a very scrawny deal was made with the Atlantic provinces, New Brunswick in particular. It was not until a Conservative government took office in 1957 that the needs of Atlantic Canada were recognized and the situation became liveable.

We are now rolling back the clock. Is it maybe because the government is two or three years away from an election? Is that the story? Are we going to be scrawny and scabby in our treatment of Atlantic Canada now and then become Santa Claus just before the next election? Is Ottawa going to give money directly to the students rather than to the university coffers administered by the provinces?

Let us not hear anymore about the misdirection of these moneys as was suggested this afternoon by a former cabinet minister. Let us bear in mind that the joint committee found that the provinces in fact spent their money for the purposes for which it was allocated. We do not want any more cheap talk like that interjection this afternoon.

Let us be realistic. Let us recognize the real need. There is declining income, increasing expenses at the provincial level, declining cost-sharing and declining equalization. I agree that the equalization payment is not too bad. It will not keep up with inflation or with the rate of expense, but it is the best of the deal. The rest of it on a declining basis will result in a saving of $5.7 billion, but that will be on the backs of the provinces and the provincial taxpayers, with this government collecting taxes at a rate hitherto unheard of in this country.

I plead with the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Secretary of State, a former great Nova Scotia premier, to take a hard, long look at what they are doing to the underserviced areas, and to give them what they deserve and that to which they have been historically accustomed to receiving.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the legislation now before the House in Bill C-97 relates to a central and irreplaceable feature of our federal system, namely, the major intergovernmental fiscal transfer programs.

As hon. members are aware, it is traditional to review the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements every five years. The bill reflects that tradition and also reflects the numerous consultations that have taken place between two levels of government over the past 14 months. It provides for important modifications to some of the fiscal transfer programs and adapts them to current economic and fiscal circumstances.

The major transfers from the federal government to the provincial governments, such as equalization and established programs of hospital care, medical care and post-secondary education transfers, have grown over the past 25 years. When equalization began in 1957-58, the amount was approximately $135 million. Total transfers, excluding tax rental payments, were about $350 million in 1957-58. In the coming fiscal year, the federal outlays for equalization and established programs financing will amount to almost $16.5 billion. This will account for about 20 per cent of all federal expenditures.

During the past few months critics both in the House and outside have suggested that the federal government is cutting payments to the provinces. They accuse us of endangering health programs and the support for post-secondary education. They conveniently choose to ignore the fact that the federal government intends to provide significant increases in all transfer areas and that our dedication to the support of health and post-secondary education programs remains vigorous and unchanged. For example, payments for equalization will increase to $4.7 billion in the coming fiscal year from some $4.1 billion in the year now ending, an increase of $600 million in the first year. For established programs on medicare, hospital and post-secondary education, the federal contributions to the provinces will be $11.6 billion in the new fiscal year; up from the $10.4 billion in 1981-82, an increase of $1.2 billion. That figure for 1981-82 excludes the element that compensates for termination of the 1972 revenue guarantee. It is an element which has entirely different roots from those of the federal transfers in respect of health and post-secondary education.

It is interesting to examine the amounts that have been allocated to our western provinces to help finance health care and post-secondary education. Alberta, our wealthiest province, will receive an additional $100 million next year for a total of $1.134 billion. It is estimated that over the next five-year period covered by this legislation, Alberta will receive $7.7 billion to help finance these vital social programs in that province.

The province of British columbia will receive an extra $167 million in 1982-83 to bring its share of transfers in respect of health and post-secondary education to $1.383 billion. It will receive an estimated $9.2 billion over the next five years.

The transfers in respect of health and post-secondary education to Saskatchewan will increase to $482 million next year, $54 million more than the $428 million they received in the current year. Saskatchewan will receive an estimated $3.1 billion over the five-year term. Manitoba will receive another $44 million in the coming year, for a total of $464 million for health and post-secondary programs and an estimated $2.9 billion over the next five years.

The federal government will, of course, be continuing the vitally important fiscal equalization program. This program is recognized by all Canadians as an integral part of the Canadian federation. It ensures that all provincial governments are able to provide reasonable levels of public services without having to impose unduly high tax rates. The western provinces have always been strong supporters of the principle of fiscal equalization. I should note, however, that Alberta and British Columbia received equalization payments when the program began in 1957-58 and for the subsequent five years. Indeed, Ontario is the only province which has never received a fiscal equalization payment.

The bill broadens the measure of fiscal capacity which underlies the calculation of equalization. The base has been broadened in response to representations from the provinces themselves. Municipal taxation payments and municipal revenues from the sale of goods and services have been added to the measure of fiscal capacity. In addition, in order to ensure that all types of provincial revenues are treated in the same manner, 100 per cent of natural resource revenues will now be taken into account when measuring fiscal capacity.

As a result of this broadening of the measure of fiscal capacity, Saskatchewan will no longer be eligible for equalization payments beginning in the 1982-83 fiscal year. However, as we are all aware, the growing economic strength of Saskatchewan in recent years has resulted in a declining relative importance of equalization payments for that province. In fact, during 1975-76, Saskatchewan was not eligible for equalization payments. This continuing trend and the broader measure of fiscal capacity reflect the growing fiscal strength of the province of Saskatchewan.

My home province of Manitoba continues to be eligible for equalization payments.

An hon. Member: Not for long.

Mr. Bockstael: It will receive some $431 million in 1982-83. Projections indicate that Manitoba will receive almost $2.4 billion in equalization over the next five years. It was with Manitoba primarily in mind that a special transitional arrangement feature was incorporated into the revised fiscal equalization program of this bill.

Mr. Blaikie: Manitoba still gets the worst of the deal.

Mr. Bockstael: The federal government has introduced this measure since it appeared that Manitoba would not qualify for an increase in its equalization payments in the 1982-83 fiscal year. This transitional measure will provide for some $165 million in equal payments to Manitoba over the next three years. The bill will also ensure the continuation of the fiscal stabilization program for an indefinite period. Although no payments have been made under this program, residents of western provinces in particular will appreciate the importance of this provision. The fiscal stabilization program ensures that the federal government will, in effect, guarantee the yield of the provincial tax system and the equalization payments in each province, from year over year, absolute declines.

This measure has been of considerable importance to provinces when borrowing abroad. This provision of the bill indicates the federal government's ongoing commitment to the principle of supporting provincial revenues. Members should also be aware that another important feature of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, namely, the income tax agreements, will be continued. The authority of the Minister of Finance to enter into these agreements is contained in Part III of the 1977 Fiscal Arrangements Act. This part of the 1977 act is not being amended by the present bill.

I would like to point out that the income tax collection system is very important to our Canadian taxpayers and that our western provinces have been strong supporters of that arrangement. However, I recognize that Alberta saw fit to undertake to administer its own corporate income tax this year. But we sincerely hope that they will continue to harmonize their corporate income tax system in conjunction with the federal system and that of other provinces.

In this connection, I note that in Bill C-97 the personal income tax revenue guarantee provision, which is basically an element of the income tax agreement system, will be extended for another five years.

This provision reflects the commitment of the federal government to the principle underlined in the income tax collection agreements and its resolution to continue and strengthen these arrangements.

Another part of this bill, which is of special importance to the west, authorizes interim payments to three provinces to cover their share of the oil export charge relating to the period between November 1, 1981, and January 31 of this year. Saskatchewan will receive $273 million; Alberta will receive $174.5 million and Manitoba will receive $1.2 million.

The negotiations which preceded the introduction of this legislation were not easy. They never are. Provincial governments are always seeking to obtain as much funding as possible from the federal treasury, and they cannot be faulted for this. But given the over-all need for restraint in federal expenditures it was important that restraint be applied in all spending areas, and the area of transfers to provinces could not be excluded. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) said in his budget speech, the aim was not to cut back these transfers but to moderate their rate of growth. This bill achieves that goal while still providing increased payments to all programs.

I would like to illustrate that point. When we add up the estimated impact on provincial revenues of the proposals in this bill along with the estimated increase in provincial tax revenues that will be brought about by the tax changes in the budget, we get a clear picture of how much provinces will benefit. These increased benefits are in terms of cash transfers and the growing yield of the income tax points that were transferred to the provinces in 1977.

For the coming fiscal year, total benefits to the provinces from this package will show an average increase of 11.5 per cent over the year ending on March 31, 1982. Over the next five years, the average annual gain will be 11.8 per cent. Projections indicate that the Government of Canada can expect to provide more than $105 billion to the provinces in the next five years.

Mr. Wilson: Less what?

Mr. Bockstael: While the arrangements which are about to expire provided the provinces with over $61 billion in the previous five years, the difference represents an increase of an estimated $44 billion, that is, an increase of about 75 per cent in a five-year program. No one can logically refer to such an increase as a cutback.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out the benefits of these financial arrangements for the province of Manitoba, as follows: Federal transfers to the province of Manitoba for health and post-secondary education will increase by $44 billion over the year ending on March 31. The new total for 1982-83 will therefore be $464 million, which represents a total of about $2.9 billion during the next five years. Manitoba is still eligible to equalization payments, and in 1982-83, these will amount to $431 million for our province. According to our figures, these transfers will represent $2.4 billion over five years. Under a transitional arrangement, Manitoba will receive about $165 million during the next three years. Manitoba will also obtain its share of the oil export charge; this share will amount to $1.2 million. The fiscal arrangements contain other guarantees for Manitoba. The measures contained in Bill C-97 provide for an average increase of 11.8 per cent a year for the provinces for the five-year term of the agreement.

The proposals of the federal government therefore provide nearly $5.5 billion to Manitoba over five years. There is no reason to believe that the federal government is trying to reduce its contribution to health and post-secondary education programs and to established programs financing when there are increases in every area.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker , in this debate on Bill C-97 I intend to concentrate today not necessarily on numbers—although I will mention some of them, that is, those which pertain to this bill—but, rather, on what I believe is the spirit of federalism which is needed if the numbers which are before us in this bill are to be effective in terms of the delivery of the system.

I found it somewhat interesting that my good friend, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael), was willing to be used merely to bring forward numbers in the manner he did, because I think he, as other hon. members have done, recognizes that the numbers used by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) have been brought into some very serious question as equalization has been debated, not in this place but in federal-provincial conferences, over these last few weeks.

When one takes a look at federal-provincial relations, certain Canadian characteristics come to mind, and I think it is important that we remind ourselves of some of Canada's characteristics. One which comes to mind very quickly is our vast space. Members of the House might well ask what that has to do with equalization or fiscal payments. It is the very fact of the geographical size of the country—and therefore the diversity which results from that size—which requires us to be very careful when we look at financial formulas to see that they in fact serve that geographical diversity. Obviously there will be different conditions and different financial impacts, for example, in an Atlantic province such as New Brunswick, as opposed to a populous province, such as Ontario, or a province which has a very strong resource base, such as Alberta. I believe the vastness of Canada is an important and direct consideration in determining whether a financial formula is adequate and seen to be fair.

Second—and I have already touched on it—I would like to discuss the diversity of Canada. No matter what we think of the regions from which we come, the fact remains that while we say our diversity is a Canadian strength, that diversity also results in some areas of the country not being able to produce the same amount of revenues as other areas. Consequently, since the early 1860s the concept of a federal state to respond to both this plurality and this vastness was a concept which the Fathers of Confederation saw as necessary and, in the Canadian context and in the context of what we are debating in the House tonight, I think it is still necessary.

Let me explain. People might say that a democratic system is cumbersome. There is sometimes interminable debate in this House, in provincial legislatures and in committees, but the fact remains that in a country as diverse as Canada dialogue must be open and have a purpose, and that purpose is to create a meeting of minds. In the face of our diversity we should be able to meet and come to agreement through negotiations, and such agreement should serve us all. Dialogue also means we must have a federal system, and it is incumbent upon us in the House and in the provincial legislatures and governments to make federalism work.

What we are dealing with today is not the idea of federalism, but, rather, the fiscal arrangement which makes federalism work. It is one element of federalism. I want to say in the early part of my remarks that I believe federalism works. If we have seen federalism fail, it has not failed because of the system. Granted, the system is not perfect, but federalism has not failed because of the system but because of an unwillingness to make it work. I do not know how many hon. members of the House recognize that in a given calendar year a province could be involved in as many as 360 different federal-provincial negotiations. They could range all the way from a minor arrangement in a narrow area of agriculture to a major reworking, after a five-year period, of the financial arrangements between federal and provincial governments. If that number of meetings takes place, obviously it is understood that federalism works and that those meetings lead to some success.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has been involved in this debate since 1977 when the matter first came before the House. She pointed out that there was a number of positive parts to the bill. We have become familiar with positive elements in terms of federal-provincial arrangements, such as medicare, hospitalization, funding of post-secondary education and the principle of equalization. I do not think any hon. member of the House, no matter of what political affiliation or partisanship, would disagree that those are elements of the federal system we want to preserve and would like to see strengthened. The question is not whether the federal government should receive a larger share or a larger placard because of its involvement in those areas, but how we can improve the ability to deliver those services to Canadians. This should be the only question facing us today.

What conditions are facing us tonight in an attempt to deliver such services? I have already mentioned the imperative of consultation. We can have discussion, but we must question whether it is dialogue. Often there are discussions at federal-provincial conferences, but frequently we do not have dialogue where there is a meeting of minds. In this respect, negotiations started back as far as December, 1980. The Minister of Finance said in the House today that he had consulted with the provinces for a long period of time and finally had to make a decision. I do not think the length of time is that meritorious. What is important is whether the Minister of Finance actually entered those discussions with the distinct purpose, not to win necessarily for the federal government, but to win for Canadians. That is the question I ask today.

If we return to the agreements of 1977 and the negotiations which took place in 1976 and 1977, we realize that there was co-operation, agreement, consensus, give and take. An agreement was reached because the people sitting at the table knew that the best thing which could happen for Canadians would be agreement. I say to the minister that I do not believe the same spirit was in the discussions which led to Bill C-97. Today we have unilateral action.

Often people say that federal-provincial relations are not of deep concern to average Canadians, but what has impressed me as I have travelled around the country is that the statement which concerns Canadians is the one of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that co-operative federalism is dead. Everywhere I travel Canadians are concerned about the statement because they fear that the federal government now feels that its purposes are better served by confirmation than by consultation and agreement. Possibly some of my colleagues would disagree with me when I say that the Prime Minister is at his political best when he is in a fight or taking on someone. I suggest that equalization, post-secondary funding, medicare and hospitalization are too important to be brought into the arena of confrontation, as I believe the Prime Minister has done. If that is the case, then we reject the spirit of federalism which must work and has worked in the past. Equally important, we renege on past commitments regarding fiscal transfers. People have plans and programs regarding past commitments and they believe there must be some continuity in the programs.

There is a second point which must be made as we look at the bill tonight and that is the question of block funding. When block funding came into being, members of the New Democratic Party were some of the most open opponents to it. From their perspective they argued that at least it would enable the provinces to divert some moneys, which were designated for hospitalization, medicare or post-secondary funding, to other provincial programs. They made that point and brought to the attention of the public that if that reality did not at least exist, the possibility of it happening was there. The task force chaired by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) looked at that question. It reported back to the House that there was no evidence that funds designated for post-secondary education, hospitalization or medicare were shifted to other programs.

There is one point which was made by people who were opposed to block funding which remains valid, that is that the programs are so important to Canadians that they do not want any cloud surrounding fiscal transfers which might give cause for apprehension that the programs might be under attack.

The third point which confronts us when we look at Bill C-97 is the entire matter of figures. Whose figures does one believe? The hon. member for St. Boniface referred to some figures tonight. I have heard them before; those are the figures of the government. I hope I do not have the reputation of being the most cynical member of the House, but the Minister of Finance has had some difficulty with figures since November 12. I wonder whether we should believe him tonight any more than we have been able to believe him since November 12 regarding the figures which the department has pumped out. One underlying factor which remains about the figures is that Canadians have a deep, deep suspicion that the figures being used are not necessarily the correct or complete ones. At this moment there are provincial governments that are reworking the figures because of changes made in the Department of Finance. Let us be careful about the figures. The minister cannot have it both ways. On the one hand he cannot say that he is increasing payments when on the other hand he says that everyone must share in restraint. I do not know how one could square those two points of view, but the minister is trying, and I will leave it at that.

The fourth condition which confronts us when we look at Bill C-97 is the desire of the Liberal government to be more visible. In my more candid moments I would suggest that it would be best for the Liberal government if it reduced its visibility. Speaking seriously, Liberal members say they are not getting sufficient visibility for the federal dollars that are spent. That is why, even before the footings were in the ground a sign was put up with a DREE grant months before to show that a plant was going to be constructed and DREE had been involved. While I can appreciate the federal government wanting visibility, and I have no difficulty with that even though I think it is somewhat questionable, whether we should concentrate our efforts on that kind of a process, I must ask the question: what is the commitment of Canadians to their country? We must give them a certain cause to believe that the federal government does touch people's lives daily, not only in a negative way but also in a positive way. So often the federal government touches people's lives in a negative way through regulations, taxation and so forth. But when you ask Canadians what is the highest visibility of the federal government in your life, generally they answer, the Post Office, although that has not been too positive to date either. But when you put a question to them regarding the federal government's visibility in the area of post-secondary education and hospitalization, that generally engenders a positive response. If that is the case, and the federal government wants a higher positive visibility, should it then not be doubly careful in its approach to fiscal transfers and financial arrangements, and approach the question with as open a mind as possible so as not to further erode Canadian's identification with positive federal programs?

I do not want to reflect tonight on what is happening, for instance, in western Canada and the alienation in western Canada from the federal government because this bill is not the umbrella under which I should do it, but I do want to point out something to the federal government. I suggest that it be very careful when looking at federal-provincial relations. The federal government should use the camaraderie, the goodwill and the personal contacts that have been developed in order to build a federal presence and to make it a reality, rather than making the federal presence, to those who say the country has nothing to offer them, a reason for them to want to leave. That is my responsibility as a federal member, but it is doubly so the responsibility of members opposite.

Another point surrounding Bill C-97 is the whole question of national standards. As I understand federal-provincial arrangements in the area of medical and hospitalization especially, the purpose was to give the have not provinces, those with less revenue, the ability to provide a certain standard of hospitalization and medicare.

I have a question for the federal government. Has the federal government calculated, through the efforts of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin), whether when these arrangements come into being the have not provinces will be able to maintain the standards? Is the federal government convinced that those standards can be maintained by, for example, the province of New Brunswick? Are members opposite convinced that that can be done? Have they looked at that question seriously?

Just today the province of Manitoba is in a difficult position because doctors are closing their offices for a day or two for study sessions. What about this question of extra billing? The question of extra billing possibly does not hurt any member in the House, but does it hurt our senior citizens? It is not necessarily the financial aspect as much as the fear that hurts. As people advance in age, they fear a lack of security. Fear so often becomes a part of their lives. There is one area where that security has been much better rooted in Canada than in the United States. When an elderly person needs medical care, the resources available to him or her should not be removed for lack of funds nor should the person be in debt for the rest of their days. That is why I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare tonight whether she has studied these figures to the point where whe can say unequivocally that our national standards will be maintained, not in the have province but in the have-not provinces?

Then we have this whole question of equalization which surrounds this bill. At the beginning of my comments I said I was not going to get involved in the various numbers. Others have done that and others will continue to do that. Equalization is a uniquely Canadian development. It is part of our federal system. It is an outgrowth of what I mentioned earlier about our space, our pluralistic society and our diversity.

I believe every member of this House agreed to putting the principle of equalization into our Constitution, and that that principle should have constitutional form. But even before the Constitution is home we are debating today in very practical terms whether equalization is as valid as it was made out to be during the constitutional discussions. In this regard I refer members to the committee discussions. I find that not only disturbing but ironic.

I want to spend some time on how this proposal will affect the have-not provinces. In the House yesterday the minister indicated that he had support for Bill C-97 from the have-not provinces. I believe he feels that he has received support from the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island. I will not address that matter but will leave it to members who come from those provinces to do so. However, I want to address that question from a Manitoba context.

Perhaps you will be surprised, Mr. Speaker, that I might be very much in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on this topic. I have not been in agreement with him very often in the House, but if I am in agreement, I think I should be forthright enough to say that I am. The reason is that I believe you will find members of the New Democratic Party, both federally and provincially—and I feel a little strange to speak for them in this context—or members of the Progressive Conservative Party, provincially as well as federally, agreeing as we look at the figures, that the province of Manitoba will be very hard hit by the provisions of Bill C-97. That conclusion has been reached not only by Manitobans. If hon. members speak to other people who have studied the bill, they will hear the same point conceded. I am addressing this subject today not in any partisan way, but I am questioning whether any government in Manitoba has the ability to provide the service for Manitobans. My responsibility as a member from Manitoba is to make sure that question can be answered in the affirmative. That is why I asked the question today of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I asked whether or not the people of Manitoba, through their government, will in fact be able to maintain national standards.

Mr. Blaikie: She has not been in the House since the debate started; how can she answer the question?

Mr. Epp: Keeping in mind equalization and national standards, how can that province maintain those services? Let us look at some of the statistics. This is public knowledge; it was produced by the Manitoba government and the Department of Finance and presented at the last first ministers' conference on the economy here in Ottawa. The cutbacks to the have-not provinces will in no way have an equal impact. For example, the have-not provinces will bear 71.6 per cent of the cutbacks, yet they only have 43.5 per cent of the population and only 36.6 per cent of national output. Where is the principle of equalization? In contrast, for example, the have provinces, such as British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario, will bear 28.4 per cent of the cutbacks with 56.5 per cent of the population and 63.4 per cent of national output. So the ability to pay for those services obviously now, with the weighting of the formula, falls very much in favour of the have provinces.

The Minister of Finance says we must have restraint. He says you have to have restraint in post-secondary education, medicare and hospitalization. It is, however, interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that allowing for inflation, the budgeted increase in federal expenditures is 13.5 per cent. However, if you look at these expenditures in all areas other than provincial transfers, you find that the government's budget increases by 16.1. So I ask the government: What are your priorities? Obviously they are more heavily weighted in areas other than post-secondary education, medicare and hospitalization.

Do statistics mean anything, Mr. Speaker, if one does not relate their effect in some way to the average family? Well, the federal cutbacks will affect a family of four in the following way. In the year 1982-83 the total impact per family of four in Manitoba will be a reduction of $465. That is the highest of any province. The average is $162. In 1983-84 the net impact on a family of four in Manitoba will be $640. The national average will be $246. In 1984-85 it will rise to $745, and the national average of $370. In 1985-86 it will rise to $835, with a national average of $350. In 1986-87 it will rise to $949, with a national average of $410. I did not go into the other provinces, Mr. Speaker, because I did not want to bore the House with a lot of statistics. I am pointing out, however, that there is no question that the average family in Manitoba will have to pay a disproportionate amount of provincial and municipal taxes if it wants to meet national standards.

We in Manitoba have a choice, Mr. Speaker. The choice we can make through our provincial government is to reduce medical costs. But what happens to our standards? We can get into extra billing. But what happens to the senior citizen? What happens to those who do not have the ability to pay? More fundamentally, why should the Manitoba resident be faced with the prospect of extra billing or lower standards when residents of other provinces are not faced with the same cuts? You might say, Mr. Speaker, that I am being too provincial or parochial. I hope I have not been, because that was not my intention. The reason I raise the Manitoba figures is not only that I come from that province, but that almost everyone who has looked at the figures agrees that Manitoba will be the hardest hit. I think it is important, and I want the House to take note of it because it is a somewhat unique experience, that on this issue the members of the NDP and the Progressive Conservatives from Manitoba are united.

Mr. Kempling: That is strange.

Mr. Epp: It is strange, but I believe it is so for the simple reason that we look at the impact on our province and it comes back to the point I make that the question is: can we deliver that service to the people? That is the issue; I have no other interest. Underlying this whole issue of federal-provincial relations and government in the modern age is a question I have been troubled with for some period of time. Perhaps this bill is a good vehicle by which to raise this question in the House. Hopefully, it will occupy the time of members in the future, at least to some degree. The question is this: as we develop the social welfare state programs which are good in themselves, at what point do we get to what some observers now call the ungovernability of the social welfare state? The problem lies in expectations and programs becoming so onerous in terms of financial commitment that it becomes very difficult for governments at any level to establish priorities. Obviously, I feel that the priority this government places on cutbacks in medicare, hospitalization and post-secondary education is wrong and that it is a misplaced priority. However, how do we, as hon. members of the House, grapple with this question? How does one set priorities? How does one set national goals? What I see happening more and more is that when a proposal is made, people react to it in terms of a special interest group rather than in terms of the national context. Some people might want to accuse me tonight of having done the same thing. However, I will leave this question with the House: do we have both the willingness and the instruments in the House, in our committees, through public accounts, to hold the government accountable and to address the question of how we set and fund priorities in such a way that they will best serve Canadians? I suggest that we do not.

The question then remains: how do we change this place? We need to address that question because if we do, I suggest that Canadians would then have a better understanding and feeling for the federal system. I am not referring to better feelings toward the federal government. That is another issue. I am referring to the federal system.

Therefore, I say to Your Honour that I commend the amendment of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. We should get this matter to committee quickly and get answers to some of these questions. Obviously, one of the questions I want answered is the one that we have asked tonight of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The other one is: how do we establish priorities so that we can better serve Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to rise this evening to address Bill C-97, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces.

This is a bill at second reading, which is the stage of debate where we deal with principles of a particular bill, knowing that from here it goes to committee for detailed examination, clause by clause. Therefore, tonight I will restrict my comments to those of the various principles reflected here in Bill C-97.

I must say that I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). During his comments, and during those of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), it became clear how we on this side of the House, in opposition, differ from the government. I have listened to the last number of speeches as hon. members of the government stood up, as did the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael), and laid out pages and pages, minutes and minutes of statistics and data dealing with fiscal relations. As I listened I wondered if each of those hon. members fully understood what they were saying, if they believed those figures, if they understood those figures, if they had, in fact, assembled those speeches themselves or if they had been handed speeches written by some civil servant or bureaucrat. I must admit that that is the way it sounded to me. However, in listening to speeches on this side of the House at this stage of debate where the principles involved in these various bills are to be analysed and discussed, quite a different discussion took place. The context of the comments by the hon. member for Provencher and the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill were set in the context of Canada. In other words, when we are dealing with something as complicated as federal-provincial fiscal relations, the fact that we live in the country of Canada, with its very unique geography and social fabric, means that we must deal with our kinds of problems differently from the ways in which the countries of Sri Lanka, Belgium, Switzerland or others deal with theirs. In geographic terms, we are the second largest country in the world. We are diverse and multicultural in context where one region of Canada differs dramatically from another region. Therefore, we as Canadians have a special problem facing us when we speak about federal-provincial relations or federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

Certainly, as the hon. member who spoke previously indicated, we have a commitment to federalism in this country. The federal system can work. We have seen it work in other nations. We have seen it work in our own country in times past; but it is certainly not working well today. It is a good system. It is a system which lends itself well to Canada. However, like any other system, it is only as good as the people involved in it. Where there is a commitment on one or more sides not to be co-operative, not to work together in a state of harmony, to exist in a stance of confrontation, to be competitive and to be argumentative, the federal system does not work well under those terms. It falls to the government to set that kind of tone.

If we are to have a federal system which works in our country, the tone must be set by the federal government which then permeates throughout the nation into the various levels of government at the provincial, regional and local levels. Yet the kind of approach we have seen in this country, especially over the last number of months, does not lend itself to the kind of co-operative federalism that we in this House would like to see.

Tonight I want to speak about six principles involved in Bill C-97. The first principle I want to look at is the principle of unilateral action which has been taken by the government. The provinces have not agreed to the proposal we are discussing tonight. The provinces have not been in favour of the figures we have heard read out by hon. members from the government side who have previously spoken. The government, once again, has ignored the people of Canada in this particular bill. That comes as no surprise to hon. members on this side of the House.

We have seen how the government has approached the monetary policy as of late when, essentially, its decision to go with a high interest rate policy and a fiscal policy resulted in an ongoing recession. Is that what Canadians want at this time? Is that what Canadians who are appearing in delegations before our caucuses or before the special committees of this House are calling for? No, it is not. One looks long and hard to find a single individual in this country who is asking for a high interest rate policy. However, the government flies in the face of that particular reality. What about the VIA Rail cutbacks? Is that what the people of Canada were asking for along those particular lines? What about the energy pricing agreement? Again, we have seen, time after time, government action which essentially flies in the face of the people of Canada. I think the saddest comment we have heard in the last number of days was when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that co-operative federalism is dead in Canada. The second most discouraging occurrence was when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought in Bill C-97 and clearly demonstrated that co-operative federalism in this country is dead. At a time in our history when co-operation is needed like never before, the federal government ignores the leadership role which it ought to be playing today in terms of developing that state of co-operation in Canada.

The second principle I want to refer to this evening is a principle which touches on the matter of the omnibus bill which recently resulted in the bells ringing here for two weeks. One could say that the bill we are discussing this evening is not unlike the energy security bill in that it contains a number of clauses which the minister has indicated must be dealt with before the end of March. He has given us a handful of days in which to deal with perhaps one of the most complicated matters we have had before the House in the last two years. He has given us a few days in which to deal with perhaps one of the most important pieces of legislation in terms of the future wellbeing of Canada and the provinces. It gives us a handful of days to deal with this, because it has to be done by March 31. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. Certain sections of the bill ought to be dealt with by March 31, but not all sections.

Again, the kind of thing we would have liked to see on this side of the House is a bill broken up adequately to allow an appropriate level of debate and analysis and adequate time to deal with this. Again, we are looking at this case, this rather unilateral action, when it was introduced into the House as of late.

Of course, as we have seen, one of the most important principles in this bill refers to the matter of post-secondary education. This bill will threaten the health of post-secondary education. There is no question that this bill will slash something in the neighbourhood of $5.7 billion from previously established levels of payments to the provinces between now and 1987. The provinces will inevitably have considerably less money in their treasuries as a result of this particular bill.

It is interesting to note what the task force on fiscal arrangements had to say, and I would like to quote it. The task force itself concluded that:

> —by virtue of the internal allocation established by the federal government, fiscal transfers associated with the revenue guarantee must now be considered part of the health care package and/or post-secondary education in the renewed EPF arrangements (projected April 1982) in proportions to be negotiated . . . and then considered earmarked for each program area and not meant for other purposes.

When one looks closely at the revenue guarantees that will be altered, we see a number of very substantial losses to the provinces that will occur in the 1981-82 period.

I want to read into the record, taking just a few moments, just what some of these losses will be to each of the provinces. The province of Newfoundland will lose in excess of $17 million; Prince Edward Island will lose nearly $4 million; Nova Scotia will lose $25 million; New Brunswick, $21 million; Quebec, $186 million; Ontario, $254 million; Manitoba, $30 million; Saskatchewan, $29 million; Alberta, $63 million; and British Columbia, $80 million.

It is difficult to understand how members opposite stand up time after time and say that there will be no losses to the provinces, that in fact the provinces are going to gain over the next number of years. It is perfectly clear from this side of the House that the arrangements have been altered and that what the provinces had been planning for will be seriously reduced, reduced to the extent of the province of British Columbia losing in this next year alone $80 million.

Over the next five-year period, the provinces will be losing nearly $6 billion as a result of this bill we are debating this evening. When we start talking of $6 billion, Mr. Speaker, that is not small change, particularly when one understands that the major areas of impact will be post-secondary education and health care.

What does it mean when the provinces will have substantially less money in their treasuries? It means very clearly that post-secondary education will suffer. In my own province of British Columbia we have seen serious program cutbacks throughout the universities, the colleges, the technical schools and the trade schools. We see increases in tuition fees, which goes against the very grain of education, when we see education being more and more an opportunity available to only a certain sector of society and more and more people finding it difficult to pursue post-secondary education as a result of the increased tuition fees and costs associated with education.

We see serious cuts in laboratories, in libraries, in research facilities of one kind or another. What does that mean in a country that is struggling so hard to increase the level of research and development to prepare us for the technological revolution that already is upon us?

Mr. Blaikie: The Liberals have the multinationals for that.

Mr. Riis: We hear time and time again that research and development in Canada is approximately on par with that of Egypt in terms of the gross national product spent in this very critical area. That is no reflection on the country of Egypt. I think anyone would agree that Egypt is not a world leader when it comes to technological innovation, and certainly Egypt is not considered one of the advanced western industrialized nations.

Mr. Blaikie: They have a sphinx for minister of finance.

Mr. Riis: It gets very, very serious, when one considers the competition that we face as Canadians at a time when research and development through to production is at such an abysmal low. Yet at that same period of time the government is cutting back funding to post-secondary education.

Mr. Speaker, I think one of the most sad aspects of these educational cutbacks has to do with our reputation nationally. We have some of the best research institutes and universities in the world. There is no question that a number of our universities, research facilities, libraries, laboratory facilities, rank with some of the best in the world. Yet today the presidents of those same universities, those same research institutes, are saying that that no longer will be the case, that as a result of the attention they are receiving now from federal ministers as well as provincial ministers their ability to expand their research facilities is being continually threatened as cutbacks occur in those very critical areas.

It is a sad day, Mr. Speaker. Recently I had the opportunity of visiting two of the community colleges in my own riding. I was talking with the administration, the faculty, the students and staff, and listening to what they had to say about the future of those small colleges in British Columbia. The future looks very, very bad.

I do not throw stones only at the Government of Canada. I think the provincial governments must take some responsibility in this regard. In fact, provincial cutbacks, now followed with these federal cutbacks, will soon seriously erode the advances that community colleges have made, in British Columbia as well as in other provinces, over the last number of years.

Another principle involved in this particular piece of legislation relates to the matter of the deficit. Here presumably is an effort by the federal government to reduce the deficit. I think it begs the question: who created this deficit. Was it the students and faculty, the patients, nurses and doctors? No, it was the Government of Canada that created this deficit. When one looks at some of the infamous items along that particular track, the Mirabels, the advertising funds, the patronage contracts, the CANDU grants, the millions of dollars going to fund mines in foreign countries, the millions of dollars going to build statues in northern African countries, the tax give-away, the tax loopholes, we could go on and on, is it at all surprising that we are into this deficit situation in which we find ourselves today? How does the government plan to deal with that? They identify something that presumably they consider to be rather frivolous spending, government spending, education and health care. That is the kind of government spending that we on this side of the House do not consider to be government "spending" but an investment in the future of the country. It is a government "investment". As in any good business, you have to spend money in order to make money. We have to invest in the future of this country. We are suggesting that ought to be maintained and expanded, and not cut back as this government is proposing. Education is certainly not government spending but government investment.

To make matters worse, Mr. Speaker, we read in the newspapers in recent days that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) says that we will have to invite 20,000 skilled tradesmen into Canada next year because we do not have enough skilled tradesmen in our own country. At the same time we are saying we do not have the skilled tradesmen and have to invite 20,000 people from overseas to come to Canada, we are cutting back on our education required for the training of professional tradesmen in those areas. That kind of logic tends to baffle one.

We have heard of the principle of recognition. It is a human characteristic to want to be recognized for work that one does. The government feels it has not been recognized for its good works. It wants to control the funds going into education and health care so that when funding occurs it will be recognized for the role it has played. The Liberals in the west say they are not recognized for all of their good works.

I suspect that the way to become recognized for good works is to do good works, not to ask for a billboard or a plaque on the wall of a new facility. That is not the way to obtain recognition and appreciation for the work you do. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill said and also the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) that if the government wants billboards, let them build them and say it is due to the investment of the federal government. If it wants neon lights, so be it. However, let us stop cutbacks in these critical cornerstones of Canadian society simply because it does not receive the recognition it feels it deserves. Surely there are better ways of handling that than cutting back and advancing at a later time.

Fundamental to this bill in terms of a very critical principle is the whole matter of health care, accessibility to health care and the feeling that essential health care services should be available to all people in this country. It is rather ironic that the Minister of Finance at an earlier time when he was minister of national health and welfare introduced the concept of medicare. He felt very proud of that. He ought to be given credit where credit is due. However, today he takes steps to cut the very basis of medicare across our country, making it into a rather patch-quilt type of medicare program. Now the provinces will receive cutbacks by the federal government in this very critical area.

I suspect that a number of more right-wing governments at the provincial level will use this as a golden opportunity to cut back on health care in their provinces, to turn it over more to the private sector, to privatize medicare. We will see more extra billing, user fees and the like brought in. What that means very clearly is that essential health care will be kept from the people of Canada, especially those who need it the most and can least afford it.

In a country like Canada we cannot afford to have a checkerboard system of health care. We need to have standards that are enforced from one end of this country to the other so that all Canadians, whether they be on Vancouver Island or Newfoundland, can expect the same level of health care.

I listen with interest when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) goes about the country saying how hard she is going to work for a universal level of health care. She says it loud and clear at all stops. What is the action? What does she deliver? It will be difficult for her when she gets around the table with the ministers of health in the various provinces and tells them that the federal role is to cut back on funding, and they have to improve health care in their provinces and end extra billing. She will have to tell them that the federal government will withhold funding and ask them to expand theirs at a time when everyone in the House knows the provinces are faced with real financial stress. I do not think Canadians will stand for this kind of nonsense. They will not stand by and watch these two cornerstones of Canadian society begin to crumble. Post-secondary education is critical for our future. Accessible health care is something we now assume to be a right that Canadians can come to expect.

We see around us forces tearing our country apart. I can understand the motivation of western separatists. Just the other night in my community of Kamloops the Western Canada Concept held its meeting which over a hundred people attended. It is not that they are particularly interested in having a separatist party in western Canada. They are angered at this government, frustrated at the way the government appears to be insensitive not only to western needs but to all needs. I am talking now from a western perspective.

Mr. McCauley: Did you speak for Canada?

Mr. Riis: Of course I did. There are western separatists, Quebec separatists, northerners disgruntled with the attitude of this government against them. Native people are upset. Women see that long overdue legislation is not even introduced on the floor of the House. People in Newfoundland are disappointed. There are many external forces ready to rip this country apart.

The economy will worsen. All of us in the House know that over the next number of quarters it will not get better. People will react in one of two ways. Either they will take on the stance of the survival of the fittest and turn against their friends and neighbours in an effort to survive on their own, or they will come together in a co-operative way to tackle the common foes we have identified. To ensure that the latter takes place will require leadership and encouragement by the federal government. It is the government that must set the tone to lead to co-operative efforts by Canadians. It has to lead the way to co-operative federalism. That is not the kind of leadership we see being demonstrated in this bill on federal-provincial fiscal relations. I want to end by saying that we have before us a golden opportunity, an opportunity that is ours to take to provide the necessary positive co-operative leadership. We simply must have the will to do that.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements because of the very great importance of his legislation to our country. This is a very complex bill. It is difficult to comprehend all the parts of it and the implications of the changes being proposed. We have had a very interesting and productive debate in trying to draw out these different aspects of the bill. In my opening remarks I would like to take an overview and look at some of the aspects of this bill from the standpoint of our federal system.

I think all members of the House will agree that the co-operative federalism which has been a part of our country has been a keystone of confederation over the past number of years. In that regard, we were all shocked at a comment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last month. It is as follows:

> The old type of federalism—where we give money to the provinces, where they kick us in the teeth because they didn't get enough, and they go around and spend it and say, of course, "It's all from us"—that type of federalism is finished.

I think that was a very disturbing comment on the part of the Prime Minister. He served notice here that the way of life, the existence and relationship between the two levels of government has been fundamentally changed.

What we have enjoyed over the past 115 years will be quite different. It has aroused great concern among Canadians, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that surely this is the wrong attitude to be taken by the Prime Minister. It is not in keeping with Canadian tradition.

I believe that we all recognize that the provinces have been hard bargainers in this whole process, but we also must recognize that they are partners in confederation. What we should be doing in the House of Commons is not debating the question of killing one form of federalism or another but trying to explore in what ways we can make the federalism that we have today work better.

We had a preview of the attitude of the Prime Minister last year during the constitutional debate. We saw the same arrogant attitude adopted by the Prime Minister and his government during the debate last year when eight of the ten provinces were opposed to what the government was proposing to do. The partners of the federal government were being ignored in the debate on the Constitution. At that time, the official opposition, and, according to a number of polls, about 65 per cent of Canadians were opposed. It was only as a result of the opposition from this side of the House and by many, many Canadians that the federal government referred the matter to the Supreme Court, which found that the approach taken by the government was unconstitutional—legal but unconstitutional—and it was only then that the Prime Minister and his government listened to the provinces and agreed to sit down around a table to work out an agreement, to work out a compromise that would be satisfactory to nine out of ten of those provinces.

In the words of the Prime Minister, the provinces could have been kicking him in the teeth then but he would not have listened. He would not have listened until he was forced to listen by the power of public opinion and the attitude of the House about the direction in which he was heading.

We want to attempt to take that approach, not to the degree to which we were forced to resort last year, but to take that kind of approach this year in order to try to force the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to slow down and consider the implications of this legislation on the relationship between the two levels of government. It will be hard with the arrogant attitude of the minister but we on this side of the House want to try to get some common sense introduced into this debate and into this legislation.

Let us review the fundamentals of the Canadian system, the different levels of government, federal, provincial, and municipal. Within the Constitution the provinces have jurisdiction over health and education. In past years, the federal government has used its taxing power and the financial strength of its position to exert its influence and to establish national standards and programs. This is acceptable and I think we can understand the use of that power. However, it is the change in the use of that power that is at issue today.

The government now finds that it has run out of money through profligate spending over the past few years. This is evidenced by the 22 per cent increase in spending this current year, as well as the expenditures which have occurred almost every year over the past ten years in excess of the growth of the national economy. That is what has led us to the position we are in today where the government cannot afford to do those things Canadians wish it to do.

The government had large revenues in earlier years; it established a number of programs and forced its will on provinces; it invaded the provincial fields of education and medical care. But now it does not have the money nor the will to control its spending so that it can continue to finance its obligations and responsibilities to these programs. It now wants to shift the problem over to the provinces, it wants to shift the deficit problem which has built up to such enormous proportions at the federal level down to the provincial level.

If there was true restraint shown at the federal level we could understand what the federal government is trying to do today, but it has yet to show any degree of restraint which is consistent with those ringing words in the last budget, "this is a budget of restraint". There has been a 22 per cent increase in spending, 50 per cent faster than the growth in the national income.

The only sign it shows of cutting spending is by shifting the burden of the established programs funding on to the provincial governments. The provinces are now moving into a deficit position, a position which will make it more difficult for them to finance this shift in spending. This is true particularly in Ontario and in the eastern provinces which do not have the substantial energy revenues of most of the western provinces. That is not co-operative federalism. That is predatory federalism, and it will not and cannot work in this country.

I was recently talking to a long-term observer of federal-provincial affairs. He made the observation to me that federal-provincial relationships today are at the lowest ebb that he has seen in his 35 years of experience. We have seen examples of this quite clearly. For example, there was the recent federal-provincial conference on the economy. I have already referred to last years constitutional legislation. The energy legislation of last year is another example, but this shift in government spending is the last straw that we have seen cast by this government in a very difficult area.

This is occurring at a time when there are great strains on federalism. We see separatism being discussed in the provinces of Quebec and Alberta as well as some other western provinces. It also comes when there are great pressures for increased regionalism and increased involvement in the affairs of the regions by the regional governments themselves.

This is not just a Canadian phenomenon. It is worldwide. There are many countries in the world which are suffering the strains and stresses of this same phenomenon. We must understand in Canada that it is not because we have some difficult people in certain parts of the country whom we find it hard to get along with but that it is due to a worldwide situation.

This is no time for confrontation and it is no time for unilateral action. This is a time when we need co-operation to nurse the tender relationship which exists between the two levels of government.

Let us study the effect of these stresses and strains between the federal and provincial governments. Let us review this in an international perspective with regard to what it is doing to our economy. Every time there are disputes between the two levels of government in Canada, those stresses are transmitted and reflect in the attitudes of people in other countries.

Probably the most blatant outbreak of this stress and strain occurred last year during the constitutional and energy debates. We saw in Canada an outflow of capital fully six times the level of the average in the 1970s. Without going into great detail, the impact of this is high interest rates and lost jobs and therefore all Canadians suffer. It is not just an impact which is felt in the rarefied atmosphere of federal-provincial relations. It is felt by all Canadians. It is something that is felt by all Canadians through the economic impact of the outflow of capital and the strains at the level of federal-provincial relationships.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE BUDGET—IMPACT ON VOLUNTARY SECTOR AND MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, this evening I am hoping to receive some indication from the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan)—or a parliamentary secretary—in his capacity as minister responsible for encouraging voluntary action programs and groups, that the government understands the devastating effects its November 12 budget has had on the "caring services" offered by Canadian volunteers.

On December 2 in response to my questioning the Secretary of State said he had no intention of asking the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to modify the budget so it does not penalize volunteers and local governments across Canada in their caring efforts.

Since that time I have sent a letter to the Secretary of State asking for his comments on specific recommendations, of which his cabinet colleagues are well aware. I hope he will address tonight, through a parliamentary secretary, some of these points.

The voluntary sector in this country wants information regarding the government's long-standing commitment to bring forward a national policy on voluntarism. The widespread conviction, which I wholeheartedly share, is that the budget's total neglect of the needs and contributions of the voluntary community stems from the fact that the government has never yet signalled our civil service—least of all officials of the Department of Finance—that it values and appreciates the role of this sector.

Without any national policy direction from their political masters our civil servants continue to be hamstrung in their efforts to bring forward some practical and creative recommendations. During "Consultation '81," held in January, 1981, ministers of this government committed themselves to the development of a comprehensive voluntary action program. It would establish guidelines, federal department by federal department, for aid and support for our voluntary sector. But no such initiative has yet come from the cabinet.

One specific measure of which both Department of Finance and Department of the Secretary of State officials have become aware in recent years is the "give and take" tax proposal for charitable donations promoted by national voluntary organizations. This proposal has the potential to improve substantially the fund raising capacity of charitable groups. It would also encourage average taxpayers to support more generously the irreplaceable services donated by this country's 2.7 million volunteers. Can we expect that this long overdue measure will be incorporated in an anticipated policy on voluntarism, or possibly in a new budget when it is brought down?

Yesterday the House heard the speech of the Minister of Finance introducing his proposed legislation to alter federal transfer payments to the provinces. The minister made no mention and demonstrated no understanding of how this legislation will affect the voluntary sector. The minister and the cabinet should take note of the following excerpts from the presentation of the Social Planning Council of Kitchener-Waterloo to the Progressive Conservative task force on the budget this past January 12, 1982.

> It is the budget's effects on the transfers to the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan and the Established Programs Financing Act that will affect local services most directly.
> In our 1981 report entitled "Shifting the Load; a Study of the Future Funding of Human Services in Waterloo Region" we projected that, because of federal reductions, municipalities would have to contribute 55 per cent more than at present just to maintain current levels of service. We feel that putting any further demand on the municipal tax base is both inappropriate and counterproductive. Municipal property taxation was originally designed to raise revenues for municipal services, such as education, roads, sanitation and local planning. It was not designed to cope with broad national problems, nor to maintain reasonable national standards of health and social services. This is the responsibility of the federal government.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the proposals of the Minister of Finance put the brunt of the increased social burden directly on those groups and individuals most needing the otherwise unavailable caring services of the voluntary sector; senior citizens, the disabled, single parents and others whose incomes will not rise to meet new tax demands. The new tax demands are the only recourse of municipalities to the minister's plan to shift the load. Surely, as the council concluded, it is in times of economic hardship that services to people in need should be increased, not threatened.

In conclusion, the government's budgetary proposals to cut EPF transfers will result in increased user fees for medical services, creating an immediate need for larger voluntary health services. EPF cuts will force post-secondary institutions to curtail their valuable contribution to the community, and voluntary agencies will be unable to plan effectively because the needs of the community they serve will multiply suddenly overnight.

I ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) tonight to stop and think about how the government's fiscal direction will affect the fabric of Canada, and to present immediately to his cabinet colleagues the long-sought policy statement, including incentives to encourage Canadians to give, rather than the disincentives provided in the budget.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has missed the point. The budget will not have any direct impact upon the activities of either voluntary organizations or municipal governments. The council on social development warned that if federal social transfers are cut, and if provinces respond by cutting back further, indeed there will be an increased burden on voluntary organizations and municipalities. However, federal transfers to the provinces are not being cut. Their growth will be more moderate because we are seeking to restrain growth in federal spending, but the transfers themselves will grow.

The total value of equalization and established programs financing transfers to the provinces is estimated to increase by almost $1 billion next year, by $2 billion the year after, and by almost $2.5 billion in the third year of the new program. Indeed, we are trying to restrain the rate at which these transfers are growing. However, if provinces use the increased revenues they could collect as a result of proposed budget changes to supplement federal transfers, between 10 per cent and 12 per cent more money or between $1.6 billion and $1.8 billion more will be available next year.

The major change in the transfers being proposed in the budget is the elimination of the 1972 revenue guarantee. The guarantee itself ended in 1977. For five years the Government of Canada has transferred cash and tax room to help provinces adjust to the change. When that compensation was added, many provincial budgets noted it as a fiscal contribution, not a program-related one. As recently as this summer, provincial premiers seemed to have excluded the revenue guarantee in presenting their estimates of Government of Canada contributions to health and post-secondary spending.

Finally, federal ministers will be discussing with the provinces the need for national standards in some of these areas and for regular public reporting, so that Parliament can determine how the money of taxpayers is being spent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 10.10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EMPLOYMENT

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the skilled labour shortage is a prime concern facing many in the small business community throughout Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the federal Minister of Employment initiate discussions with his provincial counterparts so that apprentices could take part of their training in other provinces, and develop laws and programs for licensing apprentices that are consistent throughout Canada in providing for a continuing program in the event of lay-off, closing of the sponsoring firm, or a move to another province by the apprentice's family.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NOMINATION OF LIBERAL CANDIDATE IN SPADINA RIDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, given the news and how quickly events move in the riding of Spadina, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the House today congratulate the pro tem member for Spadina on his impending elevation to the Senate, as tomorrow may be too late; and that the House, given that there are 14 vacancies in the Senate, congratulate the other 13 members who presumably will be similarly elevated before the Liberal Party gives up on its attempts to ram its PET clone, Jim Coutts, down the throats of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT DIRECTIVE ON BAND SPENDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas the government has stated as policy that it encourages Indian Bands toward self-government and control of their resources and destiny, and whereas a government directive to take effect on April 1, will severely restrict bands in determining their own future by requiring government approval for the spending of their own funds on projects of their own choice, and whereas this regressive policy contradicts commitments made by the minister to the native people of Canada, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That this House direct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to withdraw immediately this harmful, backward and unilateral directive and resolve to consult more fully with the native peoples of Canada before seeking to adopt measures of this nature.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE LATE MR. ROBY KIDD

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY TO BEREAVED FAMILY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Madam Speaker, on Sunday, March 21, Canada lost one of her most prominent and distinguished educators with the death of Mr. Roby Kidd. Mr. Kidd was one of the world's most renowned authorities on adult education, believing that learning is a lifelong process. He was a great promoter of Canada and encouraged the study of our Canadian heritage in our school system. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House extend its deep-felt sympathies to his wife, Margaret, and their family.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the House will want to show its sentiments appropriately.

S.O. 43

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

HOLDING OF PLEBISCITE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On April 14, 1982, the government of the Northwest Territories will be conducting a plebiscite on whether or not to divide the territories into two separate regions. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House express its support for the initiative taken by the government of the Northwest Territories, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada and the Dene, and urge the Government of Canada to pay close attention to the aspirations of northerners as expressed through this most democratic of forums.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF ASSASSINATION OF ARCHBISHOP ROMERO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, two years ago today a sniper assassinated Salvadoran Archbishop Oscar Romero as he was saying mass at the altar of a hospital chapel. Moments before that he had called on the Salvadoran officials, "In the name of God I implore you, I beg you, I order you: stop the repression."

In memory of this tragic anniversary, and in light of yesterday's expression of dissatisfaction with Canadian government policy toward the whole of Central America by representatives of major Canadian churches and religious orders, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That this House urge the government—in particular our Prime Minister who refuses to meet with Canada's church leaders—to change Canadian government policy in Central America in order to take an active and courageous role in the search for a negotiated non-military solution to the conflicts which result in so much bloodshed so close to our borders.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

FINANCING OF WORLD UNIVERSITY GAMES IN EDMONTON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of considerable import. Today we have in Ottawa many Canadians who were instrumental in the successful effort to have the World University Games staged in Edmonton in 1983. They are in the city and their task is to inform the MPs and to increase the general awareness of the public in connection with these games. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier):

That the House congratulate and welcome these western Canadian visitors who were instrumental in bringing the games to Canada, commend the federal government for actively supporting the games, and recommend that the government undertake to finance an appropriate share of the costs of the games.

THE BUDGET—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the November 12 budget of the hon. Allan MacEachen is a disaster—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Taylor: —as the hon. Bob Kaplan said.

Mr. Smith: Sit down!

Madam Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please refer to the hon. Minister of Finance rather than to his name?

Mr. Nielsen: I would like to call him something else.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The November 12 budget of the hon. Minister of Finance—

An hon. Member: That's it!

Mr. Taylor: —is a disaster—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: —as the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) said. In addition, it is deceitful, as the people are saying: instead of hitting the wealthy as the minister said, it strikes at the poor and the middle class and at all who would invest their money in this country. Instead of introducing a budget which would fight inflation and high interest rates, it is a brand new system of taxation which is increasing inflation and unemployment. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the people of Canada start ringing bells that will force the Liberals to withdraw the budget, just as the Tories forced them to split the energy bill.

Will the Liberals again wait until they are forced to do this or withdraw the damaging thing now?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED REVISION OF POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a timely matter of urgent and very pressing necessity. In these hard times of high unemployment, recent rigid UIC interpretations and definitions of lay-off are just plain stupid and counterproductive to any rational employment or social policy and, further, are contrary to the spirit of recently adopted legislation, such as Bill C-78. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That this House urge the government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to revise immediately unemployment insurance policy to allow senior employees, many in their fifties and sixties, to receive unemployment insurance benefits during voluntary lay-offs in favour of junior employees, thus enabling many younger, healthy workers with families and mortgages to continue working during periods of dislocation at no additional cost to the system.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

APPLICATION OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM TO FARMERS AND SMALL-BUSINESS MEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, farmers and small business-men across the country are experiencing severe financial difficulties with absolutely no relief in sight. The small business bond that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) introduced in his November budget is not working the way it was intended. I therefore move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner):

That the government restore the original provisions of the small business development bond so that the banks can proceed with issuing these bonds to help farmers and small-business men who desperately need this mechanism in order to survive.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

COMMUNICATIONS

JURISDICTION OVER PAY-TV—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) stated yesterday that "as far as the federal government is concerned, there is no jurisdictional question" surrounding Canadian Pay-TV. In view of the fact that Saskatchewan already has its own system, two other provinces are contesting the federal jurisdiction, and the Supreme Court of Newfoundland has ruled that the CRTC never had the jurisdiction in the first place, it would appear that the minister is lost in outer space.

The minister's claim of exclusive jurisdiction over any TV signal bounced off one of our orbiting satellites as one step in its delivery system is naive, impractical, and possibly even without legal foundation. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen):

• (1415)

That the minister come down to earth and at the earliest possible time reorient himself at a session of the federal and provincial ministers' bargaining table.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—REQUEST THAT LOANS BE GRANTED TO AFFECTED HOME OWNERS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. Last night the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation completely divorced himself from any interest in the urea formaldehyde foam insulation problem, saying that the only individual who could deal with that was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In his absence, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would urge his government to allow CMHC to make direct loans to those people who are in financial difficulties because they cannot refinance their homes due to the presence of urea formaldehyde foam insulation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Public Works was quite correct in stating that in the cabinet it is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who deals with this subject, and he has made reports to the House in answer to questions in that regard.

REFINANCING OF HOMES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the interest of the Prime Minister is heartwarming, to say the least. Jim Rogers of Norval, Ontario, has lost his business because of urea formaldehyde foam insulation. He has lost his family, and now he stands to lose his house because nobody will refinance it. What will the Prime Minister do to assure Jim Rogers, and all the Jim Rogers of Canada who, in spite of CMHC insurance being offered, cannot refinance their homes? What is he going to do to take care of these people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think I could be expected to know this particular case, but if the hon. member wants to refer the case to me I would see in what way this gentleman could be helped by the policy announced by the minister.

USE OF FUNDS ALLOCATED FOR HOME RENOVATION PROGRAM

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Let me try something else on the Prime Minister, who seems to be so interested in this. Yesterday the minister of housing announced that $30 million would be allocated for home renovation as a job-creation program. Would the Prime Minister recommend that these moneys be targeted to home owners who want to remove the UFFI and who would not otherwise qualify for assistance? This would not only create more jobs than were announced by the minister but would also help those who, through no fault of their own, are so adversely affected.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seems to forget that a sum considerably in excess of that which he just mentioned has been devoted to the solution of the UFFI problem. If the hon. member says no, then he certainly should read the statement that the minister made in the House; he would find that the amount is considerably in excess of that.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As he is not in the House, I would like to defer it until he does come in.

AIRPORTS

CHARLOTTETOWN AIRPORT EXPANSION

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Last week we were advised that the proposal for the Charlottetown airport expansion was to go to Treasury Board tomorrow, March 25. I understand now that it is not going to Treasury Board tomorrow. Is it going to the Treasury Board tomorrow; if not, why not; and if it is not going, when is it going?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the other day when I was asked the same question I gave the member a full report, with a timetable and agenda and so on. If this has not materialized exactly on the hour that I indicated it would, I will find out and report as precisely as I did the last time.

EMERGENCY MEASURES

QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the President of the Privy Council. It is in relation to the emergency planning order. The President of the Privy Council has publicly stated and recognized that Canadian emergency legislation—in fact, the only legislation we now have, that is, the War Measures Act—does not embody Article IV of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. He further acknowledged that the Charter of Rights is of no protection to Canadians in a time of emergency.

• (1420)

When may we expect the tabling of any new emergency legislation, having regard to the fact that we now have in place the emergency planning order, which is planning for peacetime and wartime emergencies?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have the impression that the hon. member completely misstates the position taken by the minister and the government. It is on the contrary, that the Charter of Human Rights does afford protection for anyone who would be the victim of an abuse of his rights, whether under the War Measures Act, any emergency order or anything else. The hon. member shakes his head no, but I say to him that he should study the law and the Charter which this party put before the House and which the members of that party supported.

REQUEST THAT ORDER IN COUNCIL BE RESCINDED

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, obviously the Prime Minister is again chastising the President of the Privy Council for misstating the situation. The President of the Privy Council clearly stated the charter of rights would have no application in an emergency situation. He has further stated that the government will use the Royal or Crown prerogative if a peacetime emergency arises and Parliament is dissolved or cannot otherwise be quickly assembled.

Since we live in a country under a system of a constitutional monarchy where Parliament is supreme, and since the McDonald commission specifically recommended that all regulations dealing with emergency circumstances be approved by Parliament prior to implementation, will the Prime Minister at least agree to rescind the emergency planning order at this time and bring in emergency legislation at an early date so that we in the House of Commons can look at it in a cool and dispassionate manner and protect the civil liberties of Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must again point out to the hon. member that I am not chastising the President of the Privy Council. I am perhaps reproaching the hon. member for closing his mind to what the President of the Privy Council said very clearly, that there is a redress under the charter. I remember the minister saying explicitly that there is a redress either by way of prerogative brief or by compensation. That is spelled out in the charter. I wish the hon. member would put his head together, look at the charter and see the value of that charter which this party brought into the Constitution.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES FOR 1982-83

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. For many years the government has agreed that Indian people should have greater control over their own affairs. Can the minister say how this policy fits with the fact that the estimates for Indian band administration have remained constant this year with no allowance for inflation, funding for Indian associations for policy development and consultation is being slashed by 9 per cent, while at the same time a 25 per cent increase has been given to the executive in the administration of his department?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I have been informed that I will be appearing before the standing committee next week. I will be more than happy to go into all the figures and financial implications of the department's budget for next year or any other year that the hon. member wishes to examine. Suffice it to say that this department has received, and it is indicative of the commitment of the government, substantial new moneys which the hon. member is well aware of because I identified them to him in this House of Commons.

There has been substantial new money for housing in particular that will result in a doubling of the total amount for Indian housing, and this is just one area, and hopefully a tripling of the total amount within a three-year period. That gives some indication of the commitment of this government to do something substantial about the poverty situation of the Indian people. It is hardly indicative that we are transferring our priorities in terms of funds from needed areas just to administration.

TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I think that the minister owes this House a better explanation than that, and not just in committee. Last year Indian bands had to get Treasury Board approval for all aggregate budgets over $4 million. For the coming fiscal year this has been changed and they now have to get Treasury Board approval for all aggregate budgets over $3 million. Does this mean that the policy of Indians' control over their own affairs is working in reverse, or is it simply a reflection of the fact that Treasury Board has lost confidence in the increasingly expensive Department of Indian Affairs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I do not think that it is indicative of either one of the conclusions that the hon. member has reached. The fact of the matter is that, as the hon. member is aware, the Auditor General came to certain conclusions with respect to the appropriateness of the way in which the department was handling funds, and the Indian leadership is well aware of that. These are not unusual safeguards in response to those criticisms by the Auditor General.

May I point out that many opposition spokesmen are constantly making statements implying severe criticism of the department when we do not positively respond to observations in the Auditor's report. When we do, they seem to take the other tack, which is somewhat contradictory.

EMERGENCY MEASURES

STAFFING FOR PLANNED CIVILIAN INTERNMENT CAMPS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, with respect to the emergency planning order that has been referred to earlier, my question to the Solicitor General, who has the responsibility under that order to plan for and set up civilian internment camps in this country, is that fundamental to that planning there obviously must be a decision, which must have been made by now, as to who would provide the staff for those internment camps. Would it be members of the RCMP, members of the Armed Forces, members of the correctional service, or some special force being planned by the minister?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as I indicated when the member asked questions in a similar vein before, no planning and details of that level have as yet been given any consideration at all in my ministry. We have been assigned the responsibility, in the event of a war emergency, of preparing for a regime of civilian internment camps, but no work has been done on it in my ministry yet. I am not in a position to answer that question.

ESTIMATED NUMBER OF POTENTIAL INTERNEES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, again one has to question why the emergency planning order was brought forward in the secretive way it was, and why we are getting these day after day evasions on the part of the minister and the Prime Minister. Certainly very basic to the whole question of internment camps has to be how many people the government is planning would eventually be the potential maximum. I ask the minister and if not him, the President of the Privy Council, would it be five hundred, five million, five thousand or how many?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, when answers are available to questions like that they certainly will be made available. As I indicated, they are not available. All we have now are regulations that were implemented to establish internment camps during World War II. Many Canadians remember that. They remember the grave injustices that were done under that system. A responsible government ought to look at those regulations and ensure that if an emergency of that sort ever develops in Canada again, especially given the overriding position of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which would take precedence over any emergency regulations, regulations are available which would comply with the charter of rights and would permit the government to deal responsibly with a war emergency if one should ever arise.

CRITERIA FOR RELEASE OF CRIMINALS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is to the same minister. That same authority enables the Solicitor General to discharge people selectively who have been convicted of a criminal offence from penitentiaries in order to make room for those who are supposed to be interned in the new internment camps. What will the criteria be to release convicted criminals in order to make room for people who have not been convicted of a crime?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the member can see from the question he has asked what difficult issues arise.

Mr. Epp: You had better believe it.

• (1430)

Mr. Kaplan: He should not be surprised to hear that no work has been done in implementing that particular policy directive or in the preparation of plans in that regard.

Mr. Clark: You had better write another letter.

Mr. Kaplan: On the other hand, if that hon. member or other hon. members opposite are prepared to agree that this type of emergency is one worth considering and one for which there ought to be a plan, I would be very happy to have the hon. member's views on how those problems should be dealt with.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET CHURCH LEADERS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. As was mentioned earlier in the question period, two years ago today Archbishop Oscar Romero was assassinated in San Salvador. Since last November the Canadian churches have attempted to meet the Prime Minister to discuss this very serious crisis with him, and to this time they have not been able to make that appointment. Would the Prime Minister please tell the House if there is a special reason why he cannot meet them and, if there is not, when he will see them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I want to point out that I answered the communication addressed to me by the church ministers in November with, I think, a somewhat lengthy and substantial letter. I conveyed my views there, so it is not a matter of refusing to hear their representations or, for that matter, of disagreeing with many of them. It is a matter I thought I had settled; I felt I had at least dealt with their concerns in my answer to their letter. I see now that they still want to meet with me. I will consider that request along with those of the very large number of other groups which are constantly asking to meet with me, including Members of Parliament.

Mr. Ogle: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the indication of the Prime Minister of his willingness to meet with the group. I am sure that will be arranged as soon as possible.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY ON CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, the Archbishop of San Salvador was very vocal about many things. Shortly before his death he said, "Me they can kill, but the clamour for justice among the people they cannot silence". Since his death the situation in Central America has deteriorated. The level of violence has risen. This is not an East-West confrontation but a legitimate clamour for justice among the people.

When will Canada make a clear statement of policy which is distinct from that of the United States administration, and make it clear that we do not support the repression which is going on under United States approval and aid?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am somewhat surprised that the hon. member, who follows this matter with great attention, should be so erroneous and mistaken in stating that the position of the government has been the same as that of the United States. He knows that on the matter of supply of arms and on the precise matter of not seeing the issue he raises as merely a matter of East-West but of justice and social peace in those countries, our policy is quite different from that of the United States.

I want to point out to the hon. member that there is far from any kind of consensus existing on the best way to deal with the problem in Central America, even amongst church members and church authorities. We all regretted the tragic death of the Archbishop last year, and our representatives at the United Nations have repeatedly made protests before the Human Rights Commission about the abuse of human rights in that part of the world. However, it is incorrect to say that there is some clear solution which perhaps the hon. member's party has or perhaps even church representatives have. On the contrary, as we know, most South American countries, with the exception of a few which are not very democratic, for the most part support the position the Canadian government is taking, to wit, that there should be an election and that we should seek an end to this civil war by that electoral process.

We will know soon whether this policy is successful or not, but it is hardly fair for the hon. member to suggest that the Canadian government is alone and erring in this matter when the overwhelming majority, not only of the Latin American countries but also, I dare say, of many of the church authorities including, if my memory serves me correctly, the Pope, support the position we have taken in the case of El Salvador.

Miss Jewett: Quiet acquiescence.

REQUEST THAT CANADA SUPPORT PEACE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, as we all know, the election in El Salvador will be held this coming Sunday, and many observers feel there is no solution. I will ask the Prime Minister a final question. Would he be willing, even at this late date, to continue to support negotiations, with the help of Mexico and other countries, in El Salvador following the election, and clearly oppose all interference to destabilize Nicaragua by any outside force?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I discussed this very question with the foreign minister of Mexico a week ago, and we agreed that we would consult shortly after the election in El Salvador as to what steps could be taken toward the goal we both have of bringing about a peaceful and political settlement in El Salvador.

CANADIAN ABSTENTION FROM UNITED NATIONS HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION VOTE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister stated that Canada has protested human rights violations in El Salvador, and he referred to one case in particular. I would like to ask him specifically why Canada abstained from condemning human rights violations in El Salvador at the recent meeting of the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the United Nations Human Rights Commission is not a political forum. Despite that, there was a political part of that resolution, a part we attempted to negotiate out but were not successful in doing so. Because of the political portion we therefore, along with Britain, West Germany, Japan, Australia and many other countries, decided to abstain from that resolution. However, we gave an explanation of our vote at that time in which we stated that had the resolution included only the human rights portions, we would have supported it, and that we felt very strongly about the human rights violations in that country.

REASONS FOR CANADIAN ABSTENTION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam speaker, I will put my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He mentions that there were certain other countries which abstained. I did not realize we took our positions before international bodies on the basis of what other countries did. I thought Canada was a free, independent and sovereign country and could take its own position.

Since Canada has condemned human rights violations in Poland—and rightly so—and since Canada has condemned human rights violations in Guatemala—and rightly so—what is the difference in political considerations that he orders his ambassador to abstain from condemning human rights violations in El Salvador?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, obviously the hon. member was not listening to my answer. We did condemn human rights violations. We did not vote on that resolution. We abstained because of the political portion of the resolution. However, at the same time we did that we also condemned the human rights violations in that country.

I want to state unequivocally that we are prepared to take issue with human rights violations wherever they occur in the world because for us they are not part of domestic jurisdiction; they are a matter of international law on which we are entitled to express opinions regardless of the domestic jurisdiction of the country involved.

AFGHANISTAN—CANADIAN ASSESSMENT OF SITUATION

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We have had a great discussion of many problems in troubled spots in the world, not the least of which is El Salvador, and problems of repression in Poland and other countries. Could the minister inform the House of his assessment of the situation in Afghanistan?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the situation in Afghanistan has, lamentably, not shown any improvement in recent weeks nor, indeed, in recent months. In fact there are now allegations, which we have to investigate, that the Soviet Union is using chemical means of warfare in that country. I want to tell the hon. member that we were pleased to join in the Afghanistan day of protest across much of the world in the last week. I issued a statement on that event. We do not want the world to forget about Afghanistan, where violations of human rights are being committed daily.

POLAND—REQUEST THAT CANADA EXERT PRESSURE IN RESPONSE TO IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I want to ask the minister about the situation in Poland. It is a month since the government gave its response to the imposition of martial law and the question of human rights in Poland. In that statement of a month ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs repudiated the Prime Minister's position on interference by the U.S.S.R. and concluded that the U.S.S.R. had interfered in the Polish situation.

As the minister knows, there has been no change in the Polish situation since his statement of February 23 when he announced these very weak measures. Is the government now prepared—

Mr. Trudeau: Tell us about the monkeys in Gabon!

Mr. Crosbie: The Prime Minister is extremely agressive as we note from his interjections. I wish he would not interfere with my questions like this, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Trudeau: Are you sensitive about the monkeys?

Mr. Crosbie: Poland has not quailed at the minister's statement. Are the minister and the government now prepared to bring in some real measures that will indicate our concern to the Polish government and the U.S.S.R., and is he prepared to exert some pressure on those governments to change the situation that is now in effect in Poland? It is three and a half months since the oppression occurred that the Prime Minister so favoured back in December.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman well knows that the government has expressed its grave concern over the events in Poland many times. We have announced sanctions which are of a piece with those taken by all the allies, with the exception of the United States. We are continuing to participate actively in the development of NATO policy with respect to Poland. I would inform the House that we are now in a position to announce a further grant to the Canadian National Congress of $200,000 to enable that organization to purchase additional food, medicines and clothing for the suffering people of Poland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT CANADA-U.S.S.R. TREATIES BE ALLOWED TO EXPIRE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, on February 23 the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced a really ferocious measure with respect to the U.S.S.R. The government is going to limit Aeroflot to its present traffic frequency of two flights per week. It took two and a half months for the minister to get the Prime Minister to agree to that slap on the wrist.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs consider really indicating our displeasure to the U.S.S.R. by announcing that the friendship treaties, so called, with the U.S.S.R will be allowed to expire at their expiry date? Could he advise the House whether the government will now stop subsidizing interest rates for the building of gas pipelines in Russia? Could he tell the House whether perhaps the Polish government will be told it can no longer take 12,000 tonnes of fish from within our 200-mile economic limit—

Mr. Trudeau: And let them starve?

Mr. Crosbie: —unless they are prepared to change their approach and reverse the measures they instituted on December 13? In other words, when does co-operative east blocism end just as co-operative federalism ended?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the only friendship treaty, so called, which exists is so called by the right hon.—by the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Leader John!

Mr. MacGuigan: —and his right hon. friend. In his question and his recitals the hon. gentleman is not able to distinguish between the interests of the Polish government and the Polish people.

The fish that are being taken from our waters are for the use of the Polish people. This government has taken the position that it will not use sanctions against Poland which hurt the people of that country rather than the government. If the official opposition wants to take a different position—

Mr. Crosbie: We do.

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. gentleman says that they do. I take it then, that the policy of the official opposition is to starve the Polish people.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: Just like the monkeys of Gabon!

Mr. MacGuigan: I am proud to say that is not our position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENITENTIARIES

ESCAPE OF INMATE FROM EDMONTON INSTITUTION

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the recent escape of convicted killer Harvey Andres—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Is he our Andre?

Mr. Elzinga: —from the Edmonton maximum security institution, and the many allegations about security measures at the institution itself, made not only by residents of the surrounding area but by staff of the institution, will the minister immediately conduct an inquiry into all aspects of security, to be carried out by personnel other than the personnel employed at the institution?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, an investigation is going on at the moment into that particular escape. I would be very glad to know from the hon. member, now or after question period, what he meant by the reference to the possible involvement of other than security personnel at the institution.

I should like hon. members to know that this particular escape took place during one of the worst blizzards that has ever occurred in that area of Alberta—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Like flooding the rink.

Mr. Kaplan: —under conditions such that visitors and tradesmen at the institution were unable to leave it by normal means—

An hon. Member: But he was.

Mr. Kaplan: —and had to stay overnight at the institution.

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Kaplan: In the heavy blizzard which occurred at the institution, surveillance, I am told, was impossible. The escape took place under these circumstances. The investigation is under way, and if the hon. member was hinting that he has some evidence or information that ought to be brought to the attention of those conducting the investigation, I hope he will bring it forward.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is what they said about Hal Banks!

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, that snow job is almost as bad as the snow job we had on the evening of his escape. Would the minister not concur that the prime concern has to be public safety and that, in order to assure us of that public safety, an inquiry has to be conducted by personnel other than those employed at the prison? The present inquiry is being conducted by individuals at the prison itself.

The minister asked me to share other information with him. There are allegations such as that he is going to de-man the towers on April 1; there are questions that relate to the security of the electronic fence; there are questions that relate to the patrol units around the perimeter of the fence, and in addition to my request for an inquiry, the Alberta government and the City of Edmonton are requesting one.

Would the minister not concede that the prime concern must be public safety? If he does not grant an independent inquiry he is not guaranteeing the protection of life to the residents and security personnel themselves.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I hasten to give that assurance, that the prime concern is public safety in the area around these institutions, that the investigation is not being conducted by the personnel of the institution but is being conducted by the Inspector General and that when that report is complete and available for me I will be willing to discuss it with the hon. member to see whether any circumstances justify carrying the inquiry any further.

From what I understand in a preliminary way, the circumstances of the blizzard and the degree of surveillance that was being conducted in the prison at the time explain why the escape took place.

RAILWAYS

SAFETY INSPECTION OF ROLLING STOCK AND EQUIPMENT

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In light of the recurring train derailments that have taken place recently which indicate that train safety is deteriorating, may I ask the minister how he can justify the 33 per cent reduction of staff involved in the inspection and maintenance of rolling stock equipment in places such as Dauphin?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we have been in touch with the railways on a number of occasions, inquiring about the lay-offs. We have been assured that these workers were not contributing or were not in the business of providing safety in transportation. On the totality, as the Leader of the Opposition would say, of safety in rail transportation in Canada, there are many proofs to the effect that rail transportation in this country is amongst the safest in the world. CP and CN always place first or second in the North American assessment of safety of rail transportation.

REQUEST FOR HOLDING OF PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister who seems to be ignoring the fact that there has been an increase in derailments. Would he consider setting up immediately a public inquiry into rail safety so that we can uncover some of these facts, and freeze all lay-offs relating to railway workers, pending the outcome of such investigation?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend should be aware that about a year and a half ago this House passed the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act. Since then—and I will provide the hon. member with all of the information he needs to have—a tremendous effort has been made at both federal and provincial levels with regard to the development of inspection, and what not, to help increase the degree of safety in the transportation of dangerous goods.

A year or so ago the Grange inquiry took place and reported to this House. Some days ago I reported on the progress that has been made since the publication of the Grange report. Therefore I would be very pleased, either in debate or in a personal conversation with the hon. member, to inform him of progress that has been made in this area of safety, both in rail and air transportation. The provinces presumably, are working very hard on highway safety.

FISHERIES

CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING ARREST OF FRENCH TRAWLERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to an answer which the minister gave yesterday concerning the impounding of French trawlers. Aside from the conflict between the evidence put on the record yesterday by the minister about overfishing and the fact that the logs and the contents in the holds did not correspond, which led to the eventual charge of obstructing a fisheries protection officer, would the minister say whether these particular charges were laid because the trawlers were fishing in what we consider to be Canadian waters, but what the French consider to be their waters?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I may have left that impression yesterday, and indeed I am not sure that I was entirely clear in my own mind as to whether the occurrence was in disputed waters or undisputed waters, but I have since been informed that the waters in which the ships were stopped were undisputed Canadian waters. Therefore, the boundary dispute involving Canada and France over St. Pierre-Miquelon does not really form part of this particular problem.

The problem discovered by Canadian fishery officials was in the so-called conversion factor converting—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Pounds to kilos.

Mr. MacGuigan: —not pounds to kilos as the hon. member suggests, but converting the fish into round weight figures. Our fisheries officials were of the opinion that the conversion factor was too low and that the log books of the ships underestimated the weight of the fish taken and therefore were infringing our regulations.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, that is a very fishy story to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF CHART SHOWING FRENCH JURISDICTIONAL CLAIMS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, since this was not a matter of disputed or undisputed waters, would the minister be prepared to produce a chart showing the claims of the French government in the Gulf of St. Lawrence over what we consider to be Canadian waters?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether there is a single French claim, in that the 200-mile zone in some directions conflicts with the Newfoundland mainland. I think it can take different shapes. However, I will undertake to discuss this matter with the hon. member outside of the House to try to fully acquaint him with the facts.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How about right here?

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member says he would like it right here but I am not sure in what form I would present it to the House. May I discuss this with the hon. member and, if we can agree on a form in which it can be presented to the House, I would be pleased to do that.

GARRISON DIVERSION

UNITED STATES FIRST PHASE DEVELOPMENT PROPOSAL

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs also. On February 24, in discussions between Canadian and American officials over the Garrison diversion project, a proposal was advanced by United States delegates, who basically put forward irrigating lands in South Dakota and limiting the development of the Garrison proposal in North Dakota to areas within the Missouri River basin as a first phase development. What has Canada's reaction been to this proposal? Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate the kind of follow-up that Canada is having with the United State concerning this proposal?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe the proposals to which the hon. gentleman refers could more accurately be described, if I understand the proposals to which he is referring, as being in a preliminary stage. They are ones to which no formal endorsement is given by the United States. Therefore it is really not for us, at a time when the U.S. is merely exploring the idea themselves, to give our reaction or to help in publicizing these proposals. I might say that we are following the unfolding of this project in close collaboration with the government of Manitoba.

QUERY RESPECTING CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure it would be of help to Canadians, certainly to Manitobans, and to United States officials, if there were some indication as to whether a proposal such as this would meet general acceptance not only by the federal government but also by the province of Manitoba. Does the federal government view this kind of a proposal as a representation of a possible new direction to the whole question of the Garrison Diversion Project which, as the minister knows, has been so contentious in the province of Manitoba?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the proposals being made can fairly be said to be more limited than some suggestions that have been made by American spokesmen in recent years. The problem we have in assessing them at the present time is that a great deal of engineering detail would be necessary before we could judge their impact. Obviously, we will need that kind of information at some time in order to make an assessment before we would be in a position to respond, even if the proposal were made formally by American authorities.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SEQUEL TO GUILT IN LIBEL ACTION

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. The western region of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has been reprimanded by the Supreme Court of British Columbia and it has been found guilty of libel. A CBC reporter has been fired. A producer has resigned. Why has the western regional director not been fired?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, this is obviously a matter for the internal management of the CBC. I would be pleased to bring it up with the management of the CBC. The hon. member may laugh, but of course he laughs in ignorance, which is usually the case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: The present government is not involved in hiring or firing employees of the CBC, and we do not intend to change that practice.

DISCIPLINARY ACTION CRITERIA

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, the taxpayers will have to pay over $200,000 in fines and costs in this matter which has been labelled as mischievous and irresponsible on the part of the Vancouver office of the CBC. Will the minister tell us that the limit is of licence and behaviour allowed employees of the CBC before fitting disciplinary action is taken?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I believe that the hon. member would probably agree that the type of disciplinary action that was taken in this case was indeed the appropriate one. The CBC actually dismissed the employee in question. Obviously the CBC has a code of conduct for journalists. I understand from discussions that I had, as recently as last night, with the President of the CBC, that the corporation is working on new codes of conduct for its journalists.

VACANCIES

TIMISKAMING—BRUCE LONSDALE, BY DECEASE
LEEDS-GRENVILLE—THOMAS COSSITT, BY DECEASE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Bruce Lonsdale, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Timiskaming, by decease. Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a writ of election for the said electoral district.

Also, I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Thomas Cossitt, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Leeds-Grenville, by decease. Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a writ of election for the said electoral district.

• (1500)

Mr. Clark: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, we have just been advised officially of the vacancies in two electoral districts, and there is one other. I wonder if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would indicate when the byelections will be held.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Madam Speaker, I will in due course.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,529, 3,269, 3,319, 3,326, 3,749 and 4,028.

CONCESSION FOR ADVERTISING AT AIRPORTS

Question No. 2,529—Mr. MacKay:

1. Does the Department of Transport have a policy with respect to the granting of the concession for advertising at airports and, if so, does the policy include a provision for the concession to be subject to public tenders?

2. Were tender calls made for the concessions and, if so, how many and on what date was the last one held?

3. (a) Which companies now hold the concessions and how long was the original term (b) were extensions granted and, if so (i) how many (ii) for what periods (iii) for what reason (c) were new terms negotiated with the contract holder to increase revenue and, if so, what were they?

4. Does the department plan to re-tender the concessions in the immediate future and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. The major airports (ten) were initially tendered as a single concession in the fall of 1969. In order to develop a national advertising concept, the concessionaire was also permitted to negotiate contracts at smaller airports. The concessionaire subsequently entered into further agreements at 14 additional airports.

3. (a) Charles Baker Advertising (VIP) Limited holds the concession rights. The original term was for ten years from January 1, 1970.

(b)(i) Two extensions were provided to the original term.

(ii) The periods of the extensions were from January 1, 1980 to December 31, 1980 and from January 1, 1981 to June 30, 1982.

(iii) The department had not finalized its policy concerning language requirements for commercial advertising at airports.

(c) The financial terms of the agreement were not changed as it was considered that the percentage of gross sales had already been maximized for this type of business.

4. Yes.

MR. ROWLAND FRAZEE

Question No. 3,269—Mr. Cossitt:

1. To the knowledge of the government, did Mr. Rowland Frazee, Chairman of the Royal Bank of Canada, state on October 19, 1981 or thereabouts that Canada's economy will suffer if the government does not relax foreign ownership restrictions and, if so, is the government evaluating the merits of his statement as it formulates future policy concerning the Foreign Investment Review Agency?

2. Will the government take steps to permit wider legitimate foreign investment in Canada to assist our economy?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

1. The goverment is aware of a speech by Mr. Frazee on October 19, 1981, in which he emphasized the need for a balanced view by both government and business with respect to the issue of foreign ownership in Canada. The government is not aware of a statement by Mr. Rowland Frazee on or about October 19, 1981, that Canada's economy will suffer if the government does not relax foreign ownership restrictions.

2. It is the declared policy of the Government of Canada to welcome foreign investment that is likely to be of significant benefit to Canada.

ANNUAL REPORT OF FIRA

Question No. 3,319—Mr. Deans:

1. Did the 1980-81 annual report of the Foreign Investment Review Agency state that it was necessary to renegotiate certain undertakings with companies due to economic circumstances and, if so, which companies renegotiated undertakings in 1980-81?

2. Did the report state that "continued efforts were also made to achieve the government's objectives with regard to equal opportunity programs" and, if so, what efforts were made and with what results?

3. Was FIRA unable to comply with equal opportunity program objectives while meeting the government's restraint program of 1979?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

1. Yes. Westlig Ltd., Ontario Stone Corporation, Dainippon Ink & Chemicals America Inc., Hayes-Dana Inc., Koppers Company, Inc. and Norton Company.

2. Yes. In 1980-81, the main thrust of the agency's efforts to achieve the government's objectives with regard to equal opportunity programs was in the area of equal opportunity for women. During the year, appointments were made to 29 vacant positions in the agency. A total of 250 applicants applied for these positions of which 73 were women and 177 were men. Of the total female applicants, 42 or 58 per cent were interviewed. Of the total male applicants, 77 or 43 per cent were interviewed. A total of 18 women and 11 men were appointed. At the officer level, eight women and eight men were offered positions and one woman did not accept the offer. No applications were received from persons identified as native or handicapped and, as a result, no such appointments were made.

3. During the government's restraint program of 1979, all staff reductions were accomplished through normal attrition. The government's equal opportunity objectives were observed in the limited number of selection processes conducted during the year.

MAIN ESTIMATES

Question No. 3,326—Mr. Herbert:

For each of the past three years, was any amount of the main estimates not referred to a standing committee of the House for study and review?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): In each of the past three years, all votes in the main estimates requiring approval by Parliament through an appropriation act were referred to a standing committee of the House for study and review. All items of a statutory nature, i.e., those approved by separate acts of Parliament, were not referred since they emanate from statutes that, in the legislative process, were referred to committees.

CPP DISABILITY BENEFITS

Question No. 3,749—Mr. Greenaway:

1. By constituency, over the past three years, how many applications for CPP disability benefits were made by residents of British Columbia?

2. By constituency, how many of the applications resulted in benefits being granted?

3. By constituency, what is the average monthly disability payment made by CPP?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): There is no breakdown of this information below provincial level. The figures requested are therefore not available by constituency.

1. The total number of applications for CPP disability benefits made by residents of British Columbia over the past three years is 11,991. There were 3,814 applications in 1978-79; 3,936 in 1979-80; and 4,241 in 1980-81.

2. Of that number, 8,934 applications resulted in benefits being granted. 2,537 applications were accepted in 1978-79; 3,192 in 1979-80; and 3,205 in 1980-81.

3. The average monthly disability payments made by CPP were $185.30 in 1978-79; $203.26 in 1979-80; and $230.19 in 1980-81.

MR. KENNETH JOHNSON

Question No. 4,028—Mr. MacKay:

1. Was a Mr. Kenneth Johnson appointed Director of Aviation Safety in the Department of Transport?

2. Was the appointment made by virtue of a normal public service competition and, if so, on what basis was he found to be more highly qualified than the other contenders?

3. Did Mr. Walter McLeish participate or have any input in this selection process?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, on November 16, 1981.

2. Yes. The appointment was made by a normal public service closed competition. Mr. Johnson was found to be the most qualified candidate based on his extensive experience in the civil aviation industry together with his strong and solid management experience at the regional and headquarters levels.

3. No.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 88.

FIRA COMMUNICATIONS RE TATE AND LYALL LIMITED SHAREHOLDINGS IN REDPATH SUGAR LIMITED

Motion No. 88—Mr. Herbert:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all agreements, correspondence, notes and other communications relating to the requirement by the Foreign Investment Review Agency that Tate and Lyall Limited reduce its shareholdings in Redpath Sugar Limited.

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Section 14 of the Foreign Investment Review Act, the papers requested by the hon. member are confidential and may not be published. Consequently, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Herbert: Transfer for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Point of Order—Mr. Herbert

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HERBERT—MOTION FOR PAPERS NO. 85—ALLEGED NON-COMPLIANCE WITH HOUSE ORDER

Madam Speaker: Before I reach orders of the day, I would like to reply to the point of order brought forward by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). If the hon. member feels the documents which were tabled are incomplete, it is not incumbent upon the Speaker to determine whether they are complete. If the hon. member feels there are documents which should have been tabled, he may seek redress by proposing a new notice of motion for those documents.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, it puts us in some difficulty. The reason I rose on the point of order rather than raising a question of privilege is that I was aware there was at least one document, which I have personally seen, which was not included in the package. The difficulty, of course, is that under other circumstances one can never be sure whether one is receiving the total package. Now, under existing conditions I can produce a document which will illustrate that everything that was supposed to be tabled in this House was not in fact tabled; but I seek your guidance because I find it a most difficult situation. A member might be in the very difficult position of either not knowing everything which is supposed to be in the package, or, because in my case I know there is at least one document not in the package, suspecting that there may be others. If I raise the point again I do not see what it achieves in the final analysis.

Madam Speaker: Well, the Chair is obviously in the same difficulty as the hon. member. How can the Chair determine if all the documents have been tabled? I gave my guidance to the hon. member; he may make a new motion for the tabling of documents in the hope that he will get those documents which he is certain exists and which have not been tabled.

Mr. Herbert: Madam Speaker, I reserve a question of privilege for tomorrow when I will have the document in my hand.

Madam Speaker: There is no question of privilege. If the hon. member wants to get more documents, the way to proceed is to make a new motion for the tabling of documents.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, last night at ten o'clock I indicated that I felt it was a major backward step on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to state that co-operative federalism was dead. I said that because I felt it displayed a total lack of sensitivity towards the different regions of this country and a lack of understanding of the problem of increasing regionalism, and not just in Canada, although that is very much a factor in our country. However, it is also a growing phenomenon in many other countries of the world as well. Against this broad background it is no time for unilateral action within Canada and no time for confrontation. It is no time for unilaterally forcing cuts in the established programs funding when we have ten provinces unanimously opposed to this proposal.

Yesterday my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), suggested deferring a decision on the established programs funding cuts for two years, and she will be proposing an amendment to this effect. One good reason for such a proposal is the confusion over the figures we are talking about here. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) indicated in the budget that the net cuts for all provinces were of the order of $1.9 billion. About two weeks later he and his officials acknowledged there was a mistake; the net cuts were something of the order of $2.5 billion. About a month after that we heard reports that the net cuts were much larger than that, something like $4.5 billion.

We have been trying to get an answer from the Minister of Finance to a certain question. On budget night, he was prepared to force a cut in financing on the provinces amounting to $1.9 billion net, then, two weeks later, amounting to $2.5 billion, and amounting to $4.5 billion a month later. How can the minister propose continuing on this path when he knows that that substantial increase in cuts was much more than he had previously anticipated and much more than he had made his plans on? That is one of the very key problems which must be reviewed during this two-year period that my colleague has proposed.

There is another factor here. Taking the action of unilaterally cutting the financing, which the government is now proposing, and then having some discussions with the provinces, surely puts the cart before the horse. We should be reversing this procedure. First, we should hold national conferences to discuss the broad objectives and the levels of responsibility and, following that, decide whether the federal government, the provincial governments or the users will pay. That is surely the way we should solve this problem.

Time and time again, in our special committee on the budget, members of the public came to us and said that the budget process was wrong as the minister proposed significant changes in the budget without any provision for recourse or understanding of the effects, which could have been determined through discussions with the people who would be affected. There was no consideration of the impact of those changes. The minister is repeating the same mistakes again. Surely, from the loud outcry from the opposition concerning this disastrous budget which he brought down on November 12, the minister understands that the process was wrong then. He has even indicated that. However, he has not learned, as evidenced by his actions on the established programs financing cuts. The minister is wrong. He has made this same major mistake again. All Canadians will suffer from a cut in services for post-secondary education and health.

The minister is also playing games with figures. We have had a great deal of difficulty in understanding the minister concerning the size of the cuts that we have here. He says there will not be any cuts. However, when we look at the official estimates of government spending, they show that for health and related matters approximately $4 billion will be transferred to the provinces this year. Last year the transfers amounted to $4.3 billion. Therefore, there will be a $300 million loss in health programs. Similarly, using the same source, there will be a $180 million spending cut in the post-secondary education area. Therefore, the spending cuts have increased by $480 million from last year. That is surely proof positive, in black and white terms, that we have a clear spending cut of $500 million. Those amounts should result in an increase in spending of the order of $500 million or $600 million to keep pace with inflation. In effect, the provinces are suffering approximately a $1 billion cut in what they would have received had the program stayed in place. That is the nature of the problem. The provinces cannot afford to take that sort of a cut. I will come back to this in my remarks later this afternoon.

We have a problem here which is partly financial. The government has a major deficit problem. That has been building up over the past ten years and I think the government must deal with the problem. However, there is a very clear question as to how it should be addressing it. Should it be addressing that problem from the standpoint of unilateral cuts, throwing the problem of the deficit on to another level of government, or should the government be addressing the problem in its own house? The government has raised spending this year by 22 per cent, when the economy is growing only at the rate of 14 per cent. That is surely not a display of restraint. The government has gone to the provinces, as it has gone to the Canadian people, and has said. "You must show more restraint. We are showing restraint." That has been stated by a government which is showing "restraint" by a 22 per cent increase in spending.

There is another element which I believe to be one of the reasons the general public is so cynical about government and public institutions today. The former Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) said most clearly last year in Winnipeg: "We want more profile; we want to get more of the credit". The government does not seem to realize that there is only one taxpayer who pays the taxes for the federal government, for the provincial governments, as well as for the municipal governments. That taxpayer does not care where the service comes from, he wants the service. That taxpayer wants to see the service provided to meet his needs. However, one level of government is saying, "We will not continue this program; we will cut it outright because we are not getting the credit that we think is due to us". That just does not wash any more.

This is why we have such a cynical attitude toward government today. This government is showing utter contempt for the taxpayer by doing that sort of thing. Therefore, we must rethink this whole system, this system of federal-provincial relationships, so that we do not have such unseemly squabbling between two levels of government over which one gets credit and which one pays at the end of the day. Governments must get together.

I thought the former provincial treasurer for the province of Ontario made some very astute remarks and proposals in his speech the other day. He said that the public is growing tired of these conflicts, of the waste, and of the expense of keeping two levels of government operating in the same fields of activity. He suggested that a small task force or a royal commission should be set up with a real sense of urgency in order to come up with an understanding of this problem and some clear recommendations. This is the approach we feel should be followed by the government, rather than rushing headlong into making these cuts in funding which drastically affect services.

Let us look at what we could do by extending the established programs financing for two years. That would allow time for such a study. We could hold national conferences in the two areas of activity most affected, namely, medical care and post-secondary education. That would provide understanding of national objectives in those two very important areas. Once we had established those national objectives, we could then sort out the areas of responsibility and decide which level of government would pay.

Another interesting observation very clearly arose in our budget committee work. There was a concern that the federal government was using this cut in the established programs financing to move into a greater, more direct role in those two areas of activity. In the case of post-secondary education, there was concern that Manpower would be using this as an excuse to come in directly with funded programs, with direct federal government coercion in the area of post-secondary education. It was called "streaming" in the meetings we held.

The merits of this were questionable because it went right to the heart of the role of higher education in our country. What is the primary role of the university? Is it supposed to produce bodies like sausages at the end so that we will have 5,000 lawyers, 3,000 engineers and 4,000 computer scientists? Or is the objective to educate people and give them freedom of choice as to the type of education they want? Should there be the type of education that the university thinks is right for the community that it is supposed to serve? That is one of the key questions which must be asked here, because if we have a withdrawal of the freedom of decision concerning the type of education we have from the regional level to the federal government level, we will lose the sensitivity of today's universities toward meeting the needs of their communities.

We need a national overview and we can get that from Manpower. That would be important in helping the universities and the students. What we do not need is the federal government using the power of taxation to force universities to do things that might not fit in with the requirements of their regions.

Let us also consider the practicalities of greater control by Manpower of what comes out of the universities. That question was put at three separate hearings with three different groups of people. Interestingly enough, the same answer came back each time to the following question: who has the best feel as to what job opportunities are going to be available in five, six or seven years' time? Each time the same answer came back: The students—not the university president, not the professors, not the placement officers, but the students. It is very interesting that the student should have that best understanding of the opportunities available for him, because it is his life, his job, that is on the line. If the universities, the professors and the placement people cannot understand better than the students what the opportunities will be in three to five years' time, how can the Manpower department here in Ottawa have a better understanding? I would hope that the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) would address that question.

The concluding question we must ask is whether the federal government should take an active interventionist role in the courses being offered. Equally important, are they capable of it? I think we have learned quite clearly from our budget committee that they are not.

The conclusion that we have come to on this side is that not only is this part of the bill wrongheaded but it could have disastrous effects on the universities and on the colleges, on the hospital funding and on the operations of the hospitals. Let us not make hospitals, universities and colleges a battleground between the federal government and the provincial governments. Let us solve those problems not on the backs of the hospitals and universities; let us solve those problems outside of that arena.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Let us take the approach that we have discussed here and that is proposed by my colleague from Kingston and the Islands. Otherwise, these two important pillars of our society and our country will be undermined.

There is no real question that we have a problem. It is a problem compounded by the weak economy and by the budget that the Minister of Finance brought down last November. It has undermined in so many ways the ability of the economy to operate, and therefore the ability of the economy to generate the revenues on which governments must rely to finance their operations. So let us not compound that problem by moving precipitously without adequate consultation.

In my closing minutes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss one aspect of the rationale that the government has given us for moving in the way it has. It is said that there has been an imbalance in the financial strengths of the two levels of government, the federal and the provincial. The federal government has said that it is necessary to embark on this path to restore the balance that was in place ten years ago. Let us look at some of these figures. If you look at raw figures between 1959 and 1978, apparently the federal share of total government revenues dropped from about 52 per cent to 32 per cent. I maintain that that is not an accurate reflection of what is happening because those figures back in 1959 were still high as a result of the type of government responsibilities that we had coming out of the post-war era. So, viewed in isolation, you cannot say that there is an apparent problem.

Let us look at what has happened since the early 1970s, to get a clear understanding of the problem. There has been a reversal in the surplus and deficit positions of the national and other levels of government. During that period, the provincial or local level was in surplus in 1978 and the federal government was in a very large deficit position. Let us look behind those figures. First, the draw from the federal share of revenues after excluding the amount of transfer to the provinces reflected not so much a loss of power by the national government, but rather an assertion of its power in establishing programs. I am thinking here of the programs for hospital insurance, the Canada Assistance Plan, medicare, post-secondary education and so on. It used its federal spending power to finance services in the fields of provincial jurisdiction. The federal government which initiated these programs did so to leave the direct financing and day to day administration of them to the provinces. But their establishment meant that a transfer of the money and the tax points to that level of government from Ottawa was an important element in that whole process. That is not necessarily an unfair bargain because I think we can all understand that the level at which the taxation occurs, or at which the financing of those programs occurs, should be related to the administration of those programs.

We reached a watershed in 1977 because in return for granting greater flexibility to the provinces in the spending of the health care transfers, the federal government was released from its open-ended commitment to match provincial expenditure according to various cost-sharing formulas for health and post-secondary education. From 1977-78 on, transfers of hospital insurance, medicare, post-secondary education, and the remnants of the revenue guarantee were unified into a package which was labelled the established programs financing, EPF. Part of that was financed by a transfer of personal income tax and the rest was in the form of cash grants.

What has happened since we reached that watershed? What has happened since 1977-78? From then until 1981 the federal share of revenues after transfer climbed from 32.3 per cent to 38.3 per cent, back to roughly the level it was in 1970-71. That has occurred because of the National Energy Program and other revenues; but the simple fact is that the financing capacity of the federal government has increased substantially. Transfers as a percentage of total provincial and local revenues continued to fall from 18.9 per cent to 17.5 per cent, compared to the 1971 level of 20.8 per cent. Transfers as a percentage of provincial local expenditures also declined from 19.2 per cent to 18.1 per cent, again down from the 1971 level of 19.8 per cent.

So by every measure the provinces and the municipalities are now less dependent on federal transfers than they were a decade ago. Indeed, the federal government now has as large a share of total government revenues, after transfers, as it had in 1971, and a significantly larger share of total government spending. Yet in 1971 the federal government was practically in a break-even position. I think it had a small surplus in that year, and I do not recall that there was any reputable person raising the spectre of the fiscal imbalance at that time. You will remember that better than I would, Mr. Speaker.

So it should come as no surprise that in the same period from 1978 to 1981 when we saw federal revenues after transfers increasing 81.9 per cent, and federal expenditures after transfers increasing only 50.7 per cent, we should have a significant cut in the federal government deficit and a redress of the balance that the federal government was so concerned about.

The outlook today is that between now and 1983-84, according to federal projections, the federal government expects to increase its revenues after transfers by 38.1 per cent and increase its expenditures by 31.8 per cent, while increasing its transfer payments to other levels of government by only 13.7 per cent. Obviously that is considerably lower than the rate of inflation.

The clear message that I want to leave today is that we have an expectation that the Government of Canada is freeing up its financial resources for new spending programs, more government, more intervention, a higher visibility in the economy, more direct funding programs, more interference in the grassroots programs in the country, with no cost-shared programs and no involvement of the provincial governments and local governments in the administration of these programs.

What we have is a repetition of the great wave of federal spending that we had in the early 1970s. It is going to return us to the same problems we had at the end of the seventies at a time when we have shifted a greater load, and therefore a greater taxing requirement, onto other levels of government. The result will be that the over-all provincial and federal government tax load will be considerably greater once we move through this process. The goal is not merely to restore the fiscal balance that prevailed about ten years ago, but to establish a new balance which is substantially more favourable for the federal government. That will take place at the expense of adequate funding of the programs we are talking about today, post-secondary education and medical care.

There is no question that this is something that Canadians must be concerned about. The decision of the federal government to use none of the energy revenues to enrich the equalization programs or continue the financing of the established programs such as the medical and post-secondary education programs reflects the belief of the government that all additional revenues should be applied either to lowering the federal government deficit or, as I indicated a minute ago, to increasing federal government programs and spending; in other words, larger government.

We have had no indication of the government's desire to put some of that money toward an energy tax credit. There are no job-creating programs of any substance, no flow back into the economy through tax incentives and these huge revenues that are coming in as a result of the energy programs. What we have is the government trying to put forward an image of a steadily eroding federal authority over the national economy. That is very suspect indeed. A very persuasive case can be made that without radical changes the federal role in the national economy will become more and more dominant, maybe as dominant as in the early post-war years.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin my remarks by dealing with some general thoughts about the financial times and the problems that face not just Canada but other countries of the western world. After I have dealt at some small length with these problems in general, I would like to turn my attention to the question of post-secondary education wherein my particular responsibility lies.

It is generally recognized that the levels of deficits being operated by government in Canada, the United States and some other areas are contributing in a significant way to inflation. It is generally recognized, not just by economists but by most citizens, that it is important for elected governments to show some restraint in relation to the growth of expenditures and make every effort to reduce the deficits that exist. If that is to occur, it is going to take the co-operation of the different levels of government to defeat inflation.

We have a situation which was referred to by the hon. member who preceded me in that the amount of tax dollars expended by the federal government as compared to those of the provincial and municipal governments has vastly decreased in relation to percentage of over-all expenditures of tax dollars in the country over the past number of years. That means that efforts of restraint by the national government alone can be much less effective in combating an evil like inflation today than would have been the case 20 years ago.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) carries out fiscal negotiations with the provincial governments in such a manner as to attempt to keep the level of most transfers to the provinces from the federal treasury to the same level that the Government of Canada is prepared, with difficulty, to restrain the growth of those dollars expended directly by the federal government on projects in the interest of our country, he presents a reasonable proposition. It is a proposition which says that the national government in its direct expenditures must restrain the rate of growth of those expenditures and do something to contribute to a reduction of the deficit. The national government in its transfer of funds to the provinces under the various programs must do something to restrain the rate of growth of those funds so that they are not totally unharnessed in relation to the manner in which they grow.

Beyond that, the provincial governments have the parallel responsibility to fight inflation and contribute to the welfare of their citizens by combating this evil and restraining the growth of their expenditures. That is the essence of what we are dealing with.

The Minister of Finance has made it quite clear to the provinces that there will be no reduction in the amount of dollars transferred. Indeed, between the various transfers and the benefit of the tax point transfer and the cash transfer, there will continue to be growth. In particular, in the areas of post-secondary education and health care there will continue to be a very substantial amount of growth.

This is a fact that becomes the subject of repeated distortion by opposition spokesmen and some provincial politicians. Having been a provincial premier, I can well understand that a province, faced with the responsibility of meeting the needs of its citizens and aspiring to undertake new programs, is naturally anxious to receive as much in the way of transfers from the national government as is possible. It is always easier to spend dollars that someone else has the pain of taxing. It is easier to spend than it is to tax. So perhaps with reference to those financial responsibilities, there are times when provincial administrations do not tend to treat the use of funds that are transferred from the federal government with the same serious concern as those that they have the pain of extracting from their own citizens by way of direct provincial taxation.

Let me say a word about the problem of inflation. One of the myths that we hear again and again across the country is that the government has followed this policy of restraint for a very substantial period of time, yet inflation still has not gone down or been conquered. It is quite true that inflation has not been conquered. It is also quite true that through these responsible policies Canada has been able to avoid the ruin of savings of individuals and families which has occurred in many other countries where inflation has not stayed in the vicinity of 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent but has risen to 20 per cent, 30 per cent and in some cases to 50 per cent or higher, resulting in the destruction of everything that working people have achieved.

Therefore, when we talk about fighting inflation let us remember that if you walk away from a fight, if you abandon the policies that are aimed at bringing down inflation, it does not mean that inflation will merely stay where it is. Every economist will agree that there is no structural reason whatsoever why the type of unbridled inflation of 20 per cent, 30 per cent and 50 per cent which has occurred in other countries cannot happen in Canada, if you continue to have a steady growth in the amount of the deficits of national and provincial governments and if you do not undertake the policies of restraint that are necessary to combat inflation.

Let us keep in mind that there is no secret about the level of inflation being 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent, and that if you walk away from the fight, tomorrow you could well end up with inflation at levels which have never been seen before in this country and which have resulted in ruin in other countries.

Restraint is not a happy posture for Liberals. When the economy has allowed for it, this party has led the way in social programs and also in transfers to our friends at the provincial level. Those transfers which have grown so much and have gone into different areas of governmental undertaking have been brought in, nourished and have grown under Liberal governments. We are proud of those, as we have been proud of the social programs that we have been able to undertake.

But we have to be responsible. We have had to take the stance of restraint in the interest of our country, and it is a stance that I suggest any responsible party would take if it was in office and not in opposition.

Mr. Mayer: Do you want to trade places?

Mr. Regan: There is no question about it that it is a great pleasure and there is no greater joy than for people who give their time to public life to be able to introduce new programs for the general welfare of the public and undertake benefits for people who have particular needs which were not met in the past. I have had the privilege of knowing that great feeling of satisfaction when participating in governments in the past. But this has to be done hand in hand with responsibility or you may fail to meet the responsibility for which you were elected. Every member of this House of Commons is chosen by the electorate to serve and is charged with great responsibility, not with reckless spending, not with just trying to appear always to be the good guy, but with facing the difficult issues and with recognizing that you have to take a harder stance for the general economic welfare of the country as well. I am proud of the fact that even if it does not make the government popular when it goes through those difficult times, we on this side of the House are meeting our responsibilities in that regard.

There is a fine test to determine the responsibility for the troubles that governments have. That test can often be applied by asking the question: are the problems that we have restricted to our country or are they general? If you find that they are problems which exist only in this country and not elsewhere, or only in one province and not other provinces of equal resources, then you know there is something strange and perhaps wrong with what the government is doing. It may indicate that there is a need for change of personnel, political party or whatever.

However, if we are extremely troubled and concerned about the economic challenges in Canada and the world today, surely it is at least useful for us to recognize that the troubles with which we are confronted are not limited to knowing how to combat and recognize those challenges. Surely it is useful for us to know—useful but sad—that unemployment is higher in the United States than in Canada. Surely it is useful to know that unemployment is higher in Germany—that country of economic miracle—than it has ever been since that country was re-established at the end of the war. Unemployment there is twice as high as the historical levels during those years.

We also know that the problem of high interest rates besets these other countries. We know that the problems of the economy are general across the free world and, indeed, extend behind the Iron Curtain to those countries of the Soviet bloc. So we are not confronted with a problem which is inimical only to Canada and indeed to which we alone cannot find solutions. When we look at our employment situation in Canada, for example, and at the amount of unemployment which exists in British Columbia in industries which depend upon American markets for the sale of our forest products, when we see the unemployment which exists in some of the maritime industries which sell their goods to the American market, we recognize that we cannot sell those goods and therefore cannot have full employment and recovery unless there is an equivalent American recovery which enables Americans to buy our goods and make investments. That may sound like a limited and simplistic example, but for an exporting country such as Canada it is a valid one because it applies to the same degree to European markets and many other areas. So I say that the test of how we are performing is whether we are doing as well in combating those problems as other countries which are confronted with these economic problems today.

We are not content with the situation at all. If anything, I personally want to say that I am distressed about the economic situation, but I think we are taking those steps which are necessary to combat our problems and inflation.

Mr. Thomson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Regan: I will be happy to answer questions at the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

On the question of deficit reduction, it is interesting to see how politicians—Liberals as well as Conservatives, and certainly the NDP—change their stories and point of view a little when they are the opposition as compared to the government. I noticed that the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) who just spoke managed to pay no attention, from what I heard, to the question of deficit reduction. Yet when the Conservatives were in office and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) brought in his ill-fated budget, he dealt at great length with how important it was to reduce the deficit and he proposed cutbacks in various areas in order to do so. Yet when the Minister of Finance, a man who has had a magnificent and shining record as a social reformer and as a man wanting to implement programs for the benefit of the people, faces the necessity of carrying on policies of restraint to combat the deficit, they then twist it around to make it something very different.

• (1550)

One major difference between the position which has been taken by this government and the position which was taken by the former Conservative government is that it wanted to fight inflation—I will give it credit for that—but it wanted to fight inflation on the backs of the people. That is one difference. Hon. members opposite wanted to cut back on social programs. The government—

Mr. Manly: Has done the same thing.

Mr. Regan: —has carried on its effort to fight inflation in such a way as to see to it that there is no reduction in the funds that are used for the support of social programs. That is quite a difference, and it is also quite a difference from the situation in the United States. I have also to be critical of the Reagan government because of the fact—

Mr. Waddell: Don't confuse the name!

Mr. Regan: —that it has cut back social programs and caused great suffering and loss to the ordinary working people, and the poor people in that country too. That is the difference between the position we have been taking and the position of the Conservatives.

Mr. Manly: They preach and you practice.

Mr. Regan: However, one thing about members of the New Democratic Party is that they do not want to make their words clear here in this House. They speak from the comfort of opposition and without the responsibility of office.

Mr. Waddell: Don't worry, we won't be here very long.

Mr. Regan: The inflation we are attempting to fight harms the people who members of the New Democratic Party purport to represent more than it harms any other segment of society, yet members of the New Democratic Party never come here with any suggestions as to how to fight inflation.

Mr. Waddell: Made-in-Canada interest rate policy.

Mr. Regan: They never come here supporting restraint. They never recognize the necessity of restraint. Instead, they talk about more and more new programs and expenditures. They do so even in these times.

Mr. Waddell: Eliminate PIPS.

Mr. Regan: Members of the New Democratic Party are in opposition and they are able to take such an easy and luxurious position.

I would love to see a higher level of responsibility taken by the opposition in these matters. I would like to see consistency. If hon. members opposite want to reduce the deficit when they are in government, then let them recognize the need for doing so when they are in opposition.

Mr. Crosby: You are the one who stopped the hospital tax.

Mr. Regan: As usual, I am more concerned about the positions taken by the Conservatives than I am about the positions taken by the New Democrats.

Mr. Jarvis: Don't fight with your friends, Gerry.

Mr. Regan: I am just trying to call it as I see it, Mr. Speaker, and the way I see it is that—

Mr. Crosby: Tell us about stopping the hospital tax.

Mr. Regan: —there is a very serious thing happening in this country. It is not a creeping thing but a galloping growth, sponsored by some elements of the Conservative Party, of the worst form of McCarthyism, a disease which spread across the United States back in the fifties. We are seeing it again today.

Mr. Lewis: Smear. That is what you are doing right now.

Mr. Regan: You are seeing it today in great measure. Let us look at several examples of it. There has been a letter sent out by the Dominion Life Assurance Company signed by John Mahn.

Mr. Kempling: Is that relevant to the bill?

Mr. Regan: It certainly is. The letter was sent out to all that company's clients across the country saying the same thing that some members of the Conservative caucus have been saying across this country. It suggests that the Department of Finance was considering taxing the imputed value of renting a home instead of owning in it.

Mr. Lewis: It is.

Mr. Regan: The sad thing about this is that it has never been considered by the Minister of Finance. He has never contemplated that, and he has made that quite clear in a letter and in statements he has made in the past few days when this particular red herring has been brought forward.

Mr. Lewis: Budget documents.

Mr. Regan: I am glad the hon. member opposite mentions budget documents because I would like him to look at the December, 1979 budget document of the hon. member for St. John's West entitled "Government of Canada Tax Expenditures Account", which lists imputed rent among tax expenditures. That is exactly where this idea originated. It originated not with the present Minister of Finance but with the former minister of finance.

Mr. Lewis: Tell the truth.

Mr. Kempling: It has been in every Liberal budget since 1967.

Mr. Regan: I would be happy to send a copy of that document from the Crosbie budget to anyone in the country who would like to write to me asking for it.

Mr. Lewis: Tell us about Adrienne Clarkson.

Mr. Regan: I am starting to get to them over there, Mr. Speaker. They are getting all worked up. One thing they cannot take is the truth, because they live on insinuations.

Let me mention a couple of others. Another insinuation they have been living on these days is the insinuation respecting internment camps. They insinuate that this government has some plan to lock people up in internment camps. They do not come out and say that, but they ask questions around the edges of the fact that we in this country have always had regulations relating to what to do if a war should break out and if there were people about who were subversive. They say, "This will fit in with our pattern of trying to say these guys are quasi-socialists and against free enterprise".

Mr. Kempling: Read the order in council.

Mr. Regan: They try to suggest those kinds of lies.

They also spread around the country the idea that the government will restrict the right of people to own property and that we are against private enterprise.

Mr. King: Absolutely.

Mr. Regan: This nonsense is also a type of McCarthyism, but that is the only way they can find to fight the government today.

I want to deal today only with those distortions which relate to this bill. However, I want to say that we are fighting inflation, but we are doing so in a way which protects the social system which has been built up. We want to protect our ordinary citizens, medicare, hospitalization, the Canada Pension Plan, family allowances and the Canada Assistance Plan. These are programs the Liberal government has built up over the years. We are fighting inflation in such a way as to protect the interests of the people.

One would think we were living in many solitudes, because no matter how often it is repeated, hon. members opposite will not take note of the fact that transfers for education and health have not slackened and will not decrease. They will continue to grow. Equalization continues to grow. I have figures here which show, for instance, that transfers from the Government of Canada to my province of Nova Scotia will increase this year from $513 million to $606 million.

As I said earlier, more than any person in this House, the Minister of Finance has shining credentials of Liberalism and of protecting our working people, and I believe that stands to his credit when he is forced by economic circumstances to restrain and to cut back expenditures.

Let me talk about education. A little while ago we heard an hon. member cite some myths. One of the myths is that we are going to tell the universities that they must be turned into glorified vocational high schools and teach people trades, and that we will no longer support the pursuit of higher education as it has existed in the past. The truth, of course, is the exact opposite. The truth is that we have said to the provinces that we are prepared to continue to increase funding for post-secondary education.

At the same time, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced the expansion of a skilled trades program out of new funds and the expansion of funds for programs that in many instances will be utilized, I presume, through community colleges. This means that the skills needed in industry today will be provided. At the moment it is a national disgrace that industries have to bring in immigrants because Canadians are not trained in the skills that are in demand.

Just this week the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced that an additional $208 million will be made available to support training at the higher levels. This is not a transfer of money from the universities nor a lessening of efforts to support post-secondary education. This is an area in which one distortion occurred and I want that to be clearly understood.

We have difficulties with post-secondary education in this country today. The government wants to do its share in this field. We want to see to it not only that the universities are maintained but that they continue to improve. This level of government has been paying the lion's share of the cost of operation of post-secondary institutions in the country.

Unfortunately, the block funding concept which was introduced in 1977 has not worked well. Some provinces, notably Ontario and Saskatchewan, have failed to act in a responsible manner and have used federal funds that have no strings attached in such a way as to allow them vastly to diminish their own percentage contribution to the cost of post-secondary education. That has posed a very serious financial problem for the universities.

The public wants the two levels of government to pull together, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the statement on that score made by the hon. member who spoke ahead of me. I think we are all public servants elected at the national or the provincial level and it is the expectation of the people who elected us that we will work together. But it takes two to tango, Mr. Speaker, and federal bashing has become a national preoccupation with too many provincial governments.

Mr. Waddell: That is because the target is so tempting.

Mr. Regan: I think it is important that we have a good working relationship, but I would have it work in such a way that the people can properly judge what each government is doing.

Let me outline where we stand in regard to post-secondary education since I assumed this portfolio of Secretary of State some four or five months ago, Mr. Speaker. My first task was to become familiar with the people involved in post-secondary education in this country and to find out what they think about higher education at this time. I have had meetings with the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the Association of Canadian Community Colleges, the Canadian Federation of Students, educators, administrators, individual students and groups of students from Halifax to Victoria. I found that these people are proud of the post-secondary education system which was built up during the 1960s and 1970s but that they are concerned about the future financial health of the institutions as a result of persistent under-funding by some provinces. There is concern for the autonomy of educational institutions and concern about financial barriers which prevent people from all segments of society from taking advantage of the opportunities presented by higher education.

Notwithstanding their concern about the future of post-secondary education, people associated with our universities and colleges have shown positive feelings towards the role of the federal government in higher education. On March 4, 1982, the AUCC stated as follows:

> While recognizing the primacy of provincial responsibility in constitutional terms we emphasize the importance of a continuing major federal role in the support of universities.

On March 1, 1982 Donald Savage, the executive secretary of the Canadian Association of University Teachers, stated:

> If ever there was a constitutional convention in this country, the joint responsibility of the federal government and the provinces for the financing of universities is surely it. Both sides should live up to their responsibilities.

All across the country I have been saying that the federal government is prepared to live up to its responsibilities. It is prepared to do its part. I believe that the way to accomplish this is to change the present system so that the people of Canada know the contribution that each level of government is making to post-secondary education. Let the provinces accept our offer to finance post-secondary education separately and not as part of block funding, along with health or anything else, so that people know exactly how much money is transferred by the federal government to the provinces for that purpose. Let the provinces agree to that. People could then calculate what the budgets are for all the post-secondary institutions in a particular province. They would then see how much we offer as our portion. It is much more than the provinces pay out as their share. They would then see whether we were pulling our weight. The amounts would be available for everyone to see. If some provinces resist that, it is because they have had the comfort of spending federal moneys and of making it look as if they were provincial moneys.

Some hon. members have suggested that we want to gain political credit for this. Do we want plaques to be put in universities showing that the national Government of Canada has given x number of dollars to such and such an institution? Not at all, Mr. Speaker. It is not a question of political credit; it is a question of the right of the public to know what is done with their tax money. There is only one taxpayer, and he pays federal and provincial taxes so he has a right to know. The principle of accountability is involved and he has a right to know what the government has done with his money and whether it has been wasted or used properly. That is what is important.

If we can achieve that, then we can move into an era of better relations between the federal and provincial governments. The same would hold true in the case of health financing and other things.

I like to quote the great American poet, Robert Frost, who once said that good fences make good neighbours. That analogy is apt. We need clear-cut arrangements between the provinces and the federal government about the percentage that each is willing to pay. I am prepared to negotiate those percentages. It is not so important how much each level of government pays; what is important is that we try to give equal opportunity to people in all parts of the country to attend a post-secondary institution and that people know how their tax money is spent.

That is why I believe it is extremely important that we develop a system that will contribute to the sort of federal-provincial relationship in which there is no reason and no temptation for governments to claim credit for efforts of other governments. We must have a mature and harmonious relationship between the federal government and the provinces if this country is to thrive.

The national government now spends directly only 32 per cent of the total tax money spent in the country. If the country is to survive and if the people are to think that the national government is relevant, then it is important that it deal more directly with the delivery of services to its citizens.

Contrary to what the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre said, I think we have gone as far as we dare in decentralizing. There is no federation in the free world in which the provinces have as much power, vis-a-vis the national government, as they have in Canada. I think it is part of our tradition and part of our way that our provinces be proud, be independent and have pretty widespread powers. But you could only go so far in that direction before destroying the integrity of a national government. I do not care whether the national government here is a Liberal one, a Conservative one or a New Democratic one; whatever it is, it will be important that the government have relevance to people in every part of the country and that this chamber, where the elected representatives meet to debate the laws of the country, has first relevance to Canadian citizens.

What we have to do is to be seen to be delivering our programs. We have to be accountable to the public. It is not a question of political credit; it is a question of good constitutional sense to keep that proper balance between the provinces and the federal government.

There are other distortions that I would have dealt with had time allowed. For instance, the allegation that what we are suggesting would interfere with the autonomy of universities is utter nonsense. We have asked provincial representatives if they would sit down with us so we could discuss with them the general ways in which our universities could be improved in terms of accessibility and mobility so that citizens who do not find the particular course they want to take in their own province can have free access or entry to a university in other parts of the country. This seems fair if the national government is to continue to pay more than half the cost. It is only fair that Canadian citizens should be able to attend university wherever they like.

What we do want to do is quite contrary to what has been suggested by some people. I hope the last thing this national government or any national government would ever want to do would be to bring down the standards of our universities. If we are to be able to provide a standard of living to our young citizens tomorrow who are in the educational system today, and if we are going to give them an opportunity to compete in the world effectively, in a world where change is the only constant factor, where technology is changing at such a rapid rate that people may have to be retrained three or four times in their lives, then I think we have to give them a better education than any other country.

We believe that Canadians want their children to have the best possible education to adjust to changing technology. That is the position we take and that is the position I will pursue in my negotiations to reach a harmonious agreement with the provinces on the future of post-secondary education.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-97 regarding fiscal arrangements between the federal and provincial governments. As we look at this bill, I think the most eloquent comment on the principles that lie within it were made outside of the House and before the bill was tabled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when he said that co-operative federalism is dead. We question that statement. Was it simply the despairing word of a tired man, the kind of utterance that we all make from time to time when things have not gone our way? Was this the kind of statement that we might want to characterize as being unforgivably naive, or was there something deeper and more significant in what the Prime Minister said? This bill and other recent actions by the Liberal government—for instance, the VIA Rail cutbacks and the abolition of the Crow rate—indicate the Prime Minister and his cabinet have changed course and no longer accept the principles of co-operative federalism. They do indeed believe that co-operative federalism is dead.

When we look at the track record of some of the provincial governments, we must agree that their intransigent attitude has not been helpful. Too many of them believe more in their own political survival than they do in the welfare of Canada and of all Canadians. Fed-bashing is an easy and popular thing to do, especially when the Prime Minister adopts such an indifferent manner toward the very real problems of Canadians in all regions of this country. But fed-bashing is not the answer. I would like to suggest to members opposite that province-bashing is not the answer either, nor is budget-slashing.

Because some provinces act like spoiled children, that is no excuse for the federal government to join them in their childishness. In spite of the provinces, the great majority of Canadians would like the federal government to provide leadership within a framework of co-operative federalism.

Looking at this bill, New Democrats oppose its unilateral action of imposing a new equalization formula on the provinces. I think all Canadians join in the basic support of the principles of equalization. Equalization payments to poorer provinces ensure that all Canadians have access to a basic standard of services without people in those provinces having to pay a disproportionately high rate of tax. But all Canadians have not yet agreed on the precise formula for calculating these payments. Because the federal and provincial governments have not yet agreed on a formula, the federal government has decided to act unilaterally.

First, the federal government proposed a formula that was entirely based on conditions in Ontario. Because this was clearly unacceptable to the provinces, the government has now proposed a formula based on five provinces. This formula has been proposed so recently that the provinces have not yet had time to determine all of its implications. But the proposal appears to be particularly unfair to the province of Manitoba. Over the next five years there will be an over-all increase in Manitoba of 9 per cent during the tenure of the agreement while other provinces will get between 11 per cent and 13 per cent. The people of Manitoba are very concerned about this. Other provinces are not yet aware of all the implications the formula has for them. Surely, given a consensus that all Canadians have about the desirability of equalization payments, it would make sense for the fedeal government to be patient in establishing a new formula.

We suggest that the government extend the present formula until a new formula, agreeable to all parties concerned, can be found. This could meet the March 31 deadline and give all parties time to negotiate. We emphasize and reiterate that preemptive unilateral action on the part of the federal government does not help.

Our most serious concern with this bill is the provisions in it that eliminate revenue guarantee compensation. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) when intoducing the bill on Monday anticipated our concern when he said "It will be argued in the House that, by removing the revenue guarantee, we are undermining our support for post-secondary education and health". That is exactly what the federal government is doing. I suspect the Minister of Finance will realize this when he seriously considers the implications of what he is doing.

The Minister of Finance maintains publicly that no cutback is involved. But however we want to argue about the meaning of words, the fact remains that over the next five years the provinces will receive less money. The reduction of transfer moneys to British Columbia means that the province of British Columbia will receive $93.8 million less in 1982-1983 than it would otherwise. It will receive $107.2 million less in 1983-1984 than it would otherwise.

Over the next five years of the agreement the elimination of the revenue guarantee compensation will mean that the provinces will receive $5.7 billion less than they would have were the compensation still in place. In the double-speak of the Minister of Finance, this may not be a cutback, but it certainly looks like one to me and, I suspect, to most Canadians.

It is true that over the past several months the provinces and the federal government have played an elaborate game with these funds. The federal government in its propaganda lumped these funds with federal funding for health and higher education. The provinces in turn, wanting as much latitude as possible, denied that these moneys were in any way tied to health services and education. Now, Mr. Speaker, we seem to have reached half-time and the teams have changed ends. The federal government now claims that the revenue guarantee was never intended to be part of the contribution to health care or education.

The parliamentary task force on fiscal arrangements made a lengthy study of this question and I think its report, "Fiscal Federalism in Canada", puts the whole question into perspective. On page 12 the task force concludes that:

> —by virtue of the internal allocation established by the federal government, fiscal transfers associated with the revenue guarantee must now be considered part of the health care package and/or post-secondary education transfers and should therefore be allocated, in the renewed EPF arrangements, to health and/or post-secondary education, in proportions to be negotiated.

Regardless of the game being played by the two levels of government, we need to recognize that eliminating revenue guarantee compensation will seriously affect provincial revenues. This in turn will have a serious effect on national standards of health care and opportunities for higher education. New Democrats have always insisted on the primacy of health care for all Canadians and we oppose any measures resulting in a lessening of those standards.

Taken by itself the cut in funding would have an eroding effect on our medicare system. It would be part of the slow but steady wearing away of a system which was the crowning achievement of an earlier Parliament. The present Minister of Finance was responsible in an earlier—and for him I presume a happier—day for piloting medicare legislation through this House. Many speakers have pointed to the rather sad irony involved in that same minister now introducing a bill which will help to erode our health care system.

Time and again the parliamentary task force was told there was no certainty that the provinces would be able to or would want to pick up the slack caused by this lack of revenue. For the provinces the decrease in revenue leaves them with three possibilities: to increase taxes or premiums to pay for these services, a regressive measure because it puts an increased burden on poor people. British Columbia this past month has had a 30 per cent increase in its medicare premiums. Second, they can cut back their health care services. They can introduce user fees and double billing, of which we are seeing examples in different parts of Canada. Third, the provinces can rearrange their priorities and cut back in other areas.

We know very well, Mr. Speaker, that some provinces and their governments are not that keen on medicare and would not hesitate to cut programs. I think this points to the more serious effect of this decrease in funds. Over the past four years some provinces have cut back on the universality of medicare by introducing user fees and double billing.

When the task force looked at the situation they saw that many provinces had already pared the medicare system to the bone; that in fact there is no fat in the system. New Democrats, both in this and previous Parliaments, have consistently urged the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to force the provinces to maintain a program which will ensure all citizens access to medicare. We want to defend the principle of universality and the minister has consistently maintained she is doing exactly that. I suggest that the present bill, by withdrawing revenues from the provinces, will give them the very argument they want so that they can stand up and tell the minister that they are not able to afford universal standards and they have to introduce double billing and user fees, and maintain those practices already in effect.

This bill will have a similar effect on higher education. There will be cutbacks in programs, higher tuition fees, and education will become more the privilege of the few rather than the right of all who can benefit by it. The country will lose the benefit of critically trained minds at a time when these people are becoming more and more important to our economy. The result of these cutbacks will be that teachers are laid off. In effect, it will mean a gigantic waste of our most precious resources. As we look at those provinces which are already increasing tuition fees and cutting back, we see that these cutbacks will simply give the provinces a convenient out and the federal government will once more become a convenient whipping boy for the cutback mentality which is most detrimental to our program.

The federal government wants to have a greater degree of credit for its good works. I suppose that is understandable. The scriptures tell us that you should not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing. Certainly that is characteristic of the government in other respects, but when it comes to having any kind of program which gives benefits to people the federal government wants to shout it from the rooftops. I suggest that the federal government's attitude is—well, it is understandable. Regrettably it is like that of a parent neglecting legitimate responsibility for his or her own children in order to be involved in highly visible community affairs. Cutting back on funds for health and higher education in order to dole out money in highly visible programs is irresponsible.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that Canadians do not want to see a continuation of this foolish squabble between the federal and provincial governments. They do not want to see it used as an excuse for cutting health and education programs. Canadians are not too much in favour of provincial governments being more powerful than the federal government. They want to see governments, both federal and provincial, which can work together in their interest. With that in mind, I hope that the government will be very open to amendments when this bill goes to committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, during the last couple of days in which I have had the opportunity to listen to the debate, if I may say so, present company excepted, the tone of the debate has improved. I would compliment the hon. member who spoke previously, the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan), and particularly the member of Parliament for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) who spoke yesterday. Although obviously I do not agree with the conclusions reached or some of the stances taken by hon. members opposite, it does seem to me that our debate has improved when some of the rhetoric has been taken out and we have had an opportunity to examine the facts. I think it was a mark of intellectual honesty on the part of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands when she conceded in the debate yesterday that there were some provinces that were at fault as they were not maintaining their share of the post-secondary education dollar, and that they had a responsibility. She said that the people who elected those particular governments should see to it that they live up to their requirements under this particular act and to their responsibilities, chiefly for education, which is a jurisdiction they guard very jealously, as we all know.

The Secretary of State indicated what I thought to be an appropriate position, namely, that we should set aside the post-secondary education costs and look at what the provinces and the federal government are contributing. He said that we should leave the same formula in place. He felt that three caveats should be attached to that particular agreement, but the provinces could not agree. It seems to me that some of them may not want to agree because, as he pointed out very clearly, they have a greater responsibility to the people, particularly the young people that they are endeavouring to educate at the post-secondary level, than they have been fulfilling.

I remember a debate concerning whether we should maintain the old system where provinces had to account for each and every dollar that they spent on post-secondary education. The provinces said to the federal government, "Look, we have an elected Parliament as well; we are elected legislators; we have a responsibility to the electorate. It seems that we should be trusted, under the block-funding system, to use the money in an appropriate way". I believe it was primarily the party opposite, the New Democratic Party, which felt that that was inappropriate. The party was somewhat apprehensive that the provinces would take that particular action. As it turns out, it would seem that at least two provinces have been less than candid or proper in their application of the funding that they received from the federal government. When one looks at the statistics, and I do not think anyone really argues with the amount of moneys which have been transferred, one finds that the share that the federal government has paid for post-secondary education has gone up. However, in some of the provinces, at least, that figure, that responsibility or that commitment has gone down because they know that they no longer have to account to the federal government under the block system. Therefore, they have been able to utilize that money in other areas where, in their view, they may get more political impact for the dollar, or, to give the best interpretation, they might have felt that they had adequate facilities, that they were able to compensate the professors, adequately, that they were able to keep the tuition fees at a decent level and, on that basis, the money would be better spent in another area.

I do not know, at this time, whether the block-funding system was a good move, but it was a move by the federal government in the hope that the provincial governments would not apply the money that they received for post-secondary education to other areas. The hon. member who spoke previously indicated what is felt on all sides of the House. I do not think that anyone could seriously argue with the philosophy of equalization where the have-not provinces need assistance. There has been a suggestion that the amount of money from the federal level had gone down. I will deal with that in a few moments. On the basis of that, it has been suggested that the federal government does not care, or else has lost touch with the people. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands indicated—although it was sort of a back-handed compliment—that it was at the federal government level that we moved into many areas where the provinces have responsibility. We moved into the unemployment insurance field, the pension field and the health field. However, I would remind hon. members opposite, and sometimes hon. members of this party who might forget, that it was this particular party, while in power, that brought in great social measures, such as the Canada Pension Plan, the Old Age Pension Plan, the guaranteed income supplement, that established the Farm Credit Corporation to help the farmers and that introduced the Adult Occupational Training Act in, yes, the field of education. That was done in recognition of the fact that the federal government also has a responsibility. However, it alone could not train young people. It had to move in conjunction with the provinces on an individual basis, entering into agreements with the provinces every three years to train the young people of this country. Many colleges of applied arts and technology are very happy that the funding is available under the Adult Occupational Training Act at the federal level to help maintain their running expenses.

Modesty prevents me from commenting on who is responsible for a particular bill, but we do have immigration legislation which the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees wishes every country had in place because of the humanitarian way we treat refugees and immigrants who wish to live in this particular country. We received commendations specifically because we incorporated into our legislation a responsibility to refugees and described the manner in which we would deal with them. We expanded the definition of refugee. We have a concern for the ordinary person. People commenting on this particular bill who might take the position that we are not paying as much as we should because we are uncaring have not read the legislation. Great social benefits have accrued to the Canadian people and to immigrants to Canada as a result of legislation brought forward by this particular party and this particular government.

What has been the size of the contribution of the federal government? I will go into this in more detail in a few minutes. However, on the surface, I think people should recognize that the transfers to the provinces alone represent 20 per cent of the expenditures of the federal government. In other words, the taxes are collected by the federal government, and 20 per cent of the expenditures we make are turned around and immediately transferred to the provinces for their use. I think the figures, in fact, do bear repeating. The press release issued by the minister indicated that an estimated $105.5 billion would be provided to the provinces under the amended fiscal arrangements act. Under the present act, $61.3 billion has been transferred to the provinces since 1977. We are therefore talking in terms of large amounts flowing from the federal level to the provincial level, as is appropriate under the fiscal arrangements act.

Mr. Crosby: How does that compare with other increases?

Mr. Cullen: During the 1982-83 fiscal year beginning April 1, federal transfers for health and post-secondary education programs will amount to $11,677 million. That is an increase of $1.2 billion over 1981-82 program-related transfers. Therefore, there has been no cutting back of the federal commitment to assist in these particular fields. In fact, not only will there be an increase, but it will be significant, amounting to $1.2 billion in one year alone. Equalization outlays—

Mr. Crosby: You already made that speech.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member has the right to heckle me because I was heckling him yesterday afternoon and he nailed me right between the eyes. I apologize for one of the statements made. He certainly handles heckling better than I do.

Equalization outlays will—

Mr. Waddell: Flatter him. He may shut up.

Mr. Cullen: —grow to $4.7 billion in 1982-83 from $4.4 billion in the current year under the new system, with expanded revenue coverage and a representative average standard. It is anticipated that six provinces will benefit.

Mr. Crosby: Give us some original material.

Mr. Cullen: I did indicate that I was repeating something that I felt had to be repeated so that the message will get across, hopefully, to hon. members opposite, and certainly to remind people in this particular party, in case they should be feeling a little apprehensive, that the federal government has been anything but picayune in the amount of money that it has been transferring to the provinces.

Mr. Crosby: Come on. You had three weeks to think about this.

Mr. Cullen: I would like to comment on the general issue of the fiscal balance within the Canadian federation and the more specific issue of how this relates to the need for restraint by the federal government and how this need is being implemented. Some comments on these matters might be useful in view of the importance attached by members of the opposition to these matters in the debate on Bill C-97 and to their apparent lack of understanding of the relevant facts or a refusal to acknowledge them—and, of course, that is a political position which we can understand.

• (1640)

In his opening remarks yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) referred to the striking decline in the federal share of total public sectors' revenues in the past 20 years. This was criticized by some hon. members challenging the minister's use of the 20-year time span and contending that a ten-year time span from 1971 to 1981 would be better. They argued further that, using a shorter time span, the position of the federal government vis-à-vis the provinces has been improved. From this they went on to imply that the cuts in the federal transfers to the provinces are unreasonable.

I thought that at that time there was really nothing sacred about a 20-year time span. Other periods of time could be used. For example, a good case could be made for going back 25 years and starting with 1956. If we do this, we find that the decline in the share of revenue at the federal level is much more significant than that of local government. It would bring about $60.5 billion of additional revenue into the formula in 1982-83.

When I looked at the period of 1956 to 1981, I found the federal share of total government-owned source revenues had declined from 64 per cent to 49 per cent on a national accounts basis. Its share of total revenues, after transfer payments, has declined from 61 per cent to 38 per cent. I have done the research on this particular subject, Mr. Speaker, because it is my honour to chair the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and it seems to me that we have to have the actual figures before us, we have to understand the percentages that we are talking about to determine if, in fact, the revenues flowing to the federal government have declined. It would seem from the research and the study that I have done that most assuredly that is true.

In addition to looking at longer time spans, let us look at the shorter time spans. If we take a ten-year time span we do not find, as certain hon. members suggested, that the federal share has increased. Thus, if we compare the federal government share of total revenues from own sources between 1971 and 1981, we find that it declined from 51 per cent to 49 per cent. In the case of total revenues after transfer payments, the share remained unchanged at 38.3. While this may suggest to members that a levelling off has occurred, the fact of the matter is that a substantial portion of present federal revenues in recent years has been earmarked to pay for oil import subsidies—which have protected consumers in all parts of Canada from high and economically-disruptive oil prices.

Federal revenues available for general expenditures are now significantly lower than that which is shown in the national economic accounts. It is, moreover, the case that federal government responsibilities have increased markedly in recent years as a consequence of its primary role among Canadian governments in responding to a succession of international shocks to the world economic system. These considerations lead me to believe that the federal government faces unprecedented demands upon its revenues to meet new types of expenditure, and that this had led to a situation of unprecedented need to restrain existing expenditures of all kinds.

The federal government has responded to this need for restraint. However, it has done so in a careful and well-balanced manner which has avoided disruption and dislocation to particular parts of the economy. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, if there had not been any intervention, the impact that the OPEC nations, action to quadruple the price of oil would have had on the economy of Quebec and the four Atlantic provinces? But the government saw fit and considered it appropriate enough to intervene and, as I have said, to avoid disruption and dislocation in that particular part of the economy.

Some hon. members might have us believe otherwise, but the facts are there for all to see. They argue that federal expenditures are growing uncontrollably, and that the only place where restraint is being exercised is in federal payments to provinces. Mr. Speaker, this is certainly not true. First of all, if we look at the government's total outlays on a public accounts basis, we find that they are growing more slowly than the consumer price index. Thus, in the last budget, total federal outlays were projected to increase by 11.7 per cent in 1982-83 as compared with 12.3 per cent for the CPI. Also, for the longer period from 1981-82 to 1985-86, total outlays were projected to grow at an annual rate of 10.9 per cent as compared with an annual rate of 11.2 per cent for the CPI. Also, these rates of growth are consistent with the government policy adopted in the mid-1970s that the trend growth rate in its total outlays should be held within the trend growth rate of the gross national product.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the treasury benches at that particular time, I well remember that position being adopted by the government of the day and I am happy to say that it has met the commitment that was made, not just recently but back in the mid-1970s, to see that the rates of growth were consistent with the growth in the CPI.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn, finally, to one other allegation made by certain hon. members, that federal constraint is being applied in such a way as to fall almost exclusively upon the provinces. Again, this allegation is not valid. Federal restraint has not, should not, and in any case could not possibly apply evenly to all programs or to all years. If we look at the rate of growth of federal outlays from 1981-82 to 1982-83 we find that they are relatively high for public debt charges and national defence, and relatively low for transfers to provinces because of a change in the latter which will lower its growth rate for a single year. However, if we look at outlays over a longer period, beginning with 1981-82 and including the year in which the growth rate for transfers to provinces is reduced, that is, 1982-83, we find that transfers to provinces are growing at a rate which compares favourably to the rate for the total of other federal expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, the word "totality" was in my notes, but I cut it back to "total" because I find the word "totality" a difficult one to use, as a Liberal, from time to time.

Specifically, transfer payments to provinces are projected to grow at 11.8 per cent through to 1986-87 while all other expenditures projected in the budget for the four-year period to 1985-86 are projected to grow at 10.9 per cent.

Finally, I would emphasize that federal outlays under the fiscal arrangements are not being reduced. They are growing, and they are growing in each and every year. Payments under two major programs—equalization and the EPF—which were $61 billion in the five years ending this coming March 31, will amount to $105 billion over the next five years. We estimate that if we had continued the revenue guarantee and had not made EPF transfer payments equal per capita in all provinces, federal outlays would have amounted to about $110 billion for these same five years. In other words, the two changes that are being made in EPF will moderate somewhat the growth of transfers to the provinces.

In my view, this applies a degree of restraint to transfers to provinces which is entirely acceptable and which is comparable to what is being done for other categories of federal expenditures. It is something to which provincial governments should be able to adjust without great difficulty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also am pleased to rise on Bill C-97. My colleagues have expanded in some detail about the financial aspects of this bill. We have said, of course, that our party is opposed to Bill C-97 for a number of reasons. First of all, we oppose this bill in principle because it is an autocratic, unilateral action on the part of the federal government. It is typical of this Liberal government that disregards the financial agreements made with the provinces in 1976, that makes changes in the established programs financing arrangements unilaterally, changes that will severely curtail health care and post-secondary education. It also eliminates revenue guarantees to provinces, as has been pointed out.

We also oppose the cutbacks, of course, which will create inequity and inequality in provincial health and education services. The cutbacks in this bill will allow and encourage the privatization of medicare, a process which has unfortunately already started in a number of provinces—the provinces particularly, I might mention, of Alberta and Ontario. It will make it difficult, more difficult indeed, for progressive governments, such as those of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, to continue universal health care for their citizens—a principle that I would hope all parties in this House would certainly endorse.

I want to concentrate on the community impact and the human impact on people in areas such as my riding of Vancouver East. They will suffer as health services are cut as a result of the cutbacks laid down in this bill. It is important that we not only maintain but extend our health care services with increased financing.

If we look at the demographic trends in the Canadian population, we see an aging population with many expensive health care needs. These will increase. It is important that these needs be met not by institutional and long-term care, but with preventive care so that our older population can remain in their homes as long as possible and receive support services in the community.

Those from the west know—and I must say the Liberal government is not tuned into this—that there is a new mobility pattern in our country. Thousands of people are moving west and north, particularly young people, in search of employment. There will be new communities in the future. Adequate health care services must be provided for workers in some of the more remote areas. Expensive new facilities such as hospitals will be required. Increasing unemployment and economic stress has created increased pressure for millions of people. This creates an impact on the need for physician and psychiatric care services. Increased poverty means poorer nutrition for children and young families, and as a result they will require increased health care, something they are entitled to in a country like Canada.

It is a federal responsibility to increase funding for medical research. For example, urea formaldehyde has been a frequent topic of discussion in this House. There are new environmental hazards as well as the impacts of microtechnology, particularly on women workers. All this is in addition to chronic illnesses such as cancer, heart disease and arthritis for which we have not yet found a cure. Therefore, there must be increased federal funding.

My colleague, the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) talked about the impact of these cutbacks on provinces such as Manitoba, so I will not dwell on this in my remarks. It is particularly important for the federal government to assist not only in maintaining but in improving health care services. I will not touch on post-secondary education; other colleagues will speak to this subject. It is a struggle just to maintain the status quo. In addition to investing funds, we must plan properly so that the health care dollar is better used. This may help to reduce or at least sustain the present level of health care costs.

Members opposite have said that the federal government made a mistake by moving into block funding for health care services. We agree it was a mistake. It gave up federal control over the need for general health care standards across this country. It lost some of its negotiating power with the provinces with regard to insisting on certain priorities which are essential for a sound preventive health care program.

As I said, I want to concentrate on the human side of health care services and the kinds of services that will be affected by the federal cutbacks and, therefore, the lack of adequate funding to the provinces which are implied in this bill. It is also important to talk about the health needs of young children. I refer to reports presented to the House last spring by the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare and its recommendations with regard to young families, and the federal responsibility toward them.

Finally, in my remarks I will refer to concerns of the National Action Council on the Status of Women in its brief presented to the task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. It is concerned particularly with the health care of women in Canada.

First I want to talk about the type of health care services which will give us a more sensible and practical value for our dollar. This will help to alleviate some of the expenses of chronic institution care which consumes so much of the health care dollar. My party believes that not enough funding is given to medical care services, medical delivery systems and community health programs. I refer to programs that should be readily accessible to families and individuals in their neighbourhood, adapted to local conditions.

I wish to speak about the importance of community health clinics that are developed under the guidance of community boards which provide services geared to the ethnic make-up of many communities. My riding of Vancouver East is multi-ethnic. There is a large proportion of low-income people. The services they require must receive federal funding. They require demonstration grants from the federal government.

Some years ago in my riding a health centre was developed. It was established as a model for other clinics. It is called the Reach Clinic and was developed in co-operation with UBC medical services and local general practitioners. A community board runs the operation. It is a non-profit organization which employs workers from many different ethnic backgrounds. It serves a multi-ethnic community. There is a medical card which can be used by families for all health services. It was one of the first community clinics to develop a dental program for low-income families, a very important service that is not available in most communities.

Recently the Reach Clinic began a program for adolescent parents. I have talked before in the House about the extreme social and health problems caused by the great increase in adolescent pregnancies. There is a need for a whole range of support programs for teenage mothers. Many are really children trying to rear children of their own. This kind of clinic provides support for adolescent parents and education with regard to job training, and helps young mothers with child daycare programs so that they can get on with their lives knowing that their children are receiving proper care. It provides information on parenting skills, nutrition and an awareness of basic health needs.

The experience of health community clinics in Quebec adds another important dimension. I refer to the whole question of prevention. There are family-life education programs, access to contraceptives, and freedom of choice with regard to abortions which should be available through community health care clinics. In my riding we also have a downtown health society which was adapted to the needs of street people, including alcoholics, drug addicts and those who live in the downtown area of Vancouver. Most of these people have extremely low incomes, inadequate diets and severe health problems. Therefore this downtown clinic, again with a community board, stressed hot meals and good nutrition for street people. It helped to provide dental care to those who had no access to it and provided referrals to many community services.

In the Chinatown area next door, another health care concept is being developed as part of a social and co-operative housing project. This is largely for Chinese Canadian residents, many of whom are elderly and do not speak English. There are also many public housing projects in this community and, therefore, a public health department has agreed to decentralize and move into the basement of a new senior citizens development. This unit will be open to all residents of the community. It will provide a Cantonese-English-speaking staff as well as a community advisory committee. It is possible to adapt this centre to the needs and desires of elderly Chinese people to make available traditional herbal medicines and acupuncture in the future.

Another important health care centre is a day care centre for adults which provides medical care for the disabled and elderly. This will allow many of them to remain in their homes. Again, this centre would have a Cantonese staff, provide Cantonese meals, which will provide beneficial mental health and morale as well as good nutrition for these people.

I mention these examples because I believe it is extremely important that they be funded and not just maintained as demonstration projects. They should be expanded in every community, certainly throughout the metropolitan areas in Canada. This cannot be done without adequate funding and without fiscal arrangements which are fair to the provinces.

As I have mentioned, most of these services are provided in poverty areas. This requires a very high degree of subsidized care. For example, some centres in Victoria, Winnipeg and other cities have new health care clinics which have a combination of social services, health care services and a multiplicity of comprehensive support services. They provide services which prevent and cure the early symptoms of poor health which would ultimately relieve the expense of institutional care for these people.

As mentioned, there were a number of recommendations made by the subcommittee on the international year of the child to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs last spring. I would like to refer to a number of recommendations which were made on behalf of Canadian children with regard to health services. There were several medical practitioners on the committee.

I would like to refer to a few excerpts from this report, particularly from the section on children and health. It was felt by members of the committee that fetal and neonatal mortality and risk of handicaps are still substantial, varying widely from province to province. The recommendation went on to say:

> The risk could be reduced with improved prenatal care. A key issue is the need for a system of reproductive care that provides among other things: regular care and supervision for all mothers during pregnancy; information for parents about the effects on the unborn of nutrition, smoking, and alcohol and drug usage during pregnancy; and good prenatal child care.

There was also considerable concern that with our sophisticated medical practices in Canada, many Canadian children are not being adequately immunized. It was recommended in particular that an extensive public education program be undertaken through federal and provincial co-operation to make the public more aware of the effects on the fetus of maternal nutrition, smoking and the use of drugs and alcohol during pregnancy and to stress the importance of immunization for young children.

You may think that this does not apply to the bill under discussion today but I can assure you that these recommendations relate very directly to the need for adequate funding for health care and preventive services to provide for the future good health of our children.

It was also proposed that family allowances should be extended so that mothers at the time of pregnancy will receive the proper nutrition to provide proper prenatal health care so that children will be born well developed physically and mentally.

The committee also stressed the quality of nutrition, which ties in very closely with health services and preventive health care, which is of serious concern, particularly the entire diet provided to children from low-income families.

I saw examples of inadequate diets for many children when I worked in co-operative food stores in public housing projects where children of families on very low-income used their money for junk food. This is not only true for low-income families but these families do not have the money for nutritious foods. Positive steps must be taken for adequate nutrition. Nutrition programs should be made available in preschool and elementary school hot lunch programs.

Another recommendation was to consider having more non-profit food banks operating on a permanent basis in Canada for distribution to those in need.

I would indicate that this report has never been dealt with in the House. It has not gone to cabinet and has not been considered by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). I consider this to be a disgrace after the amount of work that has been put into this report, not only by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs but also by many voluntary groups across Canada.

Another problem severely affecting young people, predominately from the age group from 15 to 19 years, is suicide. Preventive measures must also be adopted to avoid fatal accidents. We also advocated recommendations based on studies which reveal the increasing number of adolescents who are using tobacco, alcohol and drugs, and we recommended that school help programs should stress the dangers of the use and abuse of such drugs. It was our belief that there should be a national advertising campaign warning against the harmful effects of drug abuse. Also, education and treatment service should be provided to control drug and alcohol abuse among the employed. This should not be a matter of concern only to the unions who are launching programs to improve the health conditions of workers, but to employers as well.

Those are some of the recommendations in the report on children and the need for federal funding to be continued and expanded for the preventive health care services.

In the alternate report which I presented to that committee on behalf of our party, I also stressed the importance of expanding the public health facility to enable health care nurses to reach out into the community, particularly homes where families are not likely to be using traditional medical services. Health care nurses should meet with young mothers to get them involved in supportive services and provide the kinds of health care services that are needed at a very early age so that children will have a better future.

• (1710)

Finally, if time permits, I would like to raise some of the points respecting health care cutbacks, which are of particular concern to women in Canada. These points were raised in a brief submitted to the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women in July, 1981. The National Action Committee stated:

> —health care is an area of particular concern to women . . . Women are much more frequently diagnosed as suffering from health problems than men are. Women feel the effects of federal and provincial cutbacks in health care more severely since they are the principal consumers of health care services.
> Health care cutbacks put women in a double jeopardy position. First, the unequal treatment of women causes them to have higher rates of health breakdowns and second, society restricts their access to the means of ameliorating their health problems.
> We are also concerned with the cutbacks in the funding of health care services from the standpoint of women as workers. Except for the highly skilled positions of doctors or managerial staff . . . the majority of workers in the health care system—
>
> By far, are women.
> The fact that this committee invited both the Canadian Nurses Association and NAC's member group, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, to make representations at its hearings indicates that the committee recognizes the enormous implications of the cutbacks for the women who work in hospitals.
> From the perspective of women, both as consumers of health care services and as workers in the health care system, we are tremendously concerned by the over-all decrease in funding as well as the elimination of mandatory federal-provincial cost-sharing formulae.
> With the introduction of the Established Programs Financing (EPF) arrangements in 1977, the federal government limited its expenditure increases to the over-all growth in the economy and eliminated conditional grants in favour of cash and tax-point transfers to the provinces. While this change was supposed to give the provinces greater autonomy in the health care field, it has simply meant that there has been a substantial decrease in health care funding on both the federal and the provincial levels. The provinces have used the introduction of the EPF system as a means of decreasing their share of health expenditures. In 1975-76, the provincial share of health care expenditures was 41 per cent of the total. In 1980-81, it dropped to 27.8 per cent of the total moneys expended. By allowing the provinces to evade their responsibility in this area, severely restricting its own contribution to health care, the federal government has reneged on its commitment to the Canadian people to provide equality of access and a quality health care service from coast to coast.

Quality health care is our right. It is not a privilege conferred upon us by our federal or provincial governments. The National Action Committee, therefore, demands that the over-all level of funding from both federal and provincial governments for health care services be increased substantially and that the federal government reinstitute a cost-sharing formula to ensure that the provincial governments live up to their responsibilities. It is clear to us that block funding is ineffective: the provinces are not sufficiently committed to the delivery of quality health care services without some form of incentive—

Cutbacks in post-secondary education have more or less followed the same pattern as the cutbacks in health care, with the result that there are fewer places open in post-secondary institutions, fewer jobs, and the cost of users is escalating.

This affects women particularly.

Women's access to post-secondary training has traditionally been severely limited because of discrimination in selection and lack of resources.

This lack refers to education training resources. I might add that there is a lack of adequate manpower allowances and a lack of daycare to go along with them. The brief goes on to read:

Eighty per cent of women in the paid labour force are concentrated in five low-paying employment ghettos: clerical/secretarial, small manufacturing, hospital work, teaching and services. These five areas are the very ones that will be most severely affected as a result of the introduction of micro-processing technologies over the next two to five years.

Paid employment is the fundamental right of every adult who wants it and if women are not, once again, to be pushed out of the labour force, massive job retraining in the non-traditional areas of employment as well as in new technical sectors must be provided to them. To cut back post-secondary education funding at a time when women are going to be facing a technologically-induced employment crisis is to effectively bar women from the labour force. The National Action Committee, on behalf of the more than three million women that it represents through its member groups, strenuously objects to any policy that negatively affects the employment prospects of women. We demand that our federal and provincial governments immediately expand funding for post-secondary institutions and make every effort to ensure that women are recruited for training and retraining, as well as for jobs in these institutions.

Recently, women in Canada have witnessed the severe contraction of subsidized child care spaces, rules to limit access further, the lowering of standards, and the introduction of child care businesses that cut corners and make profits at the expense of our children. The National Action Committee vehemently opposes any effort by our governments to transfer responsibility for child care from the public to the private sector. One of the original bases upon which NAC was founded was to fight for a publicly funded, twenty-four hour, free, child care system that would be accessible to all.

I can tell hon. members that this party soundly endorses that recommendation. The brief goes on to say:

The National Action Committee is concerned because recent cutbacks in day care funding and the refusal of our governments to regard child care as anything but a welfare service have restricted access to the already-inadequate child care system and resulted in the lowering of standards and in poor wages and working conditions for child care workers, almost all of whom are women. We would like to reiterate most strongly the demand, articulated by women across Canada, for a free, universally-accessible, twenty-four-hour child care system.

In this area, we are particularly concerned that an incentive funding program be developed to force provinces to provide adequate levels of funding and ensure that uniform, quality services are available from coast to coast. A cost-sharing approach will no doubt give the federal government the much needed incentive to drastically expand child care, as well as provide provinces with the necessary stimulus to develop the programs.

We would like to point out here that if the federal government is genuinely committed to the principle of economic equality for women, a principle to which it has so often paid lip service—

But done little.

—it must initiate action on this fundamental underpinning of women's equality—a good child care system available and accessible to all. The federal government can no longer hide behind the argument that this is a matter for provincial jurisdiction. The time for child care has come.

A number of other issues could be raised on behalf of women, and I am sure other speakers will be raising them, but since my time is now up, I would just like to stress once again the importance of an adequate federal funding program for health care services and post-secondary services, particularly for women in Canada and their children, who must have a better start in life.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise to speak in criticism of Bill C-97. Although some of the points that I will make have been touched upon already, I shall make them again, as well as some more specific points, because they bear repetition and clarification.

As well as being arbitrary and one-sided in the way it has been handled in comparison with the tradition of federal-provincial negotiations, this bill also represents very interesting manœuvring on the part of the federal government to make the principle of federal-provincial negotiations fairly unworkable. Delays were introduced which had the result of making it impossible to meet the timetable set for serious negotiations.

First of all, I want to comment on some of the effects of the cuts that have been envisaged and about which we have been warned and which, to some extent, have already occurred.

In the riding of Spadina and in the city and province in which it is located, cutbacks in education and health care services and specifically post-secondary education are already being experienced. The federal government will maintain that this is all the fault of the provincial government, yet it seems to give different figures at different times. For example, at the present time a figure in the range of 55 per cent of the funding for post-secondary education in Ontario is given by federal government spokesmen. I remember that last summer a spokesman for the federal government claimed that it was contributing 87 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education at places like the University of Toronto. That statement came from a person who had been engaged, as secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in a good deal of the planning and manupulation of the figures. He was hoping to move further up the ladder and into cabinet. I refer, of course, to Jim Coutts, the one and always aspirant to election in Spadina. He stood in front of the university, at Convocation Hall, and asserted that this government was paying 87 per cent of the cost of universities such as the University of Toronto. Since then other government spokesmen have said it is paying something like 50 or 55 per cent. Either the government has cut its contribution by almost half within a few months or the figures given by one spokesman or another are not to be believed.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the effect of cuts by both the federal government and the provincial government of Ontario are already being felt in the area of post-secondary education in the province. Next fall the fees will be raised by at least 12 per cent, and when the cuts now proposed by the federal government go into effect, the fees will undoubtedly be raised again for 1983. There have been cuts in programs at the University of Toronto, Queen's University and colleges such as St. Lawrence and St. Clair. There is a general cut in accessibility. During the past year 50,000 student applications were rejected by the post-secondary education system in Ontario because places were not available. In fact, only 45 per cent of applicants for 1980 and 1981 were accepted. There simply is not enough room to educate the students we have, even though the ratio of university educated people to population is lower in this country than it is in the United States and Japan.

What is happening is that the money envisaged as being withheld from post-secondary education as such, is to be recycled into specific job training tailored to particular job needs. That does not provide the equivalent of a genuine post-secondary education which the country needs and which many other countries still provide.

There is, in fact, no attempt to set any sort of minimum standard on post-secondary education. There is no standard of accessibility relating to the poor, the immigrant, the native peoples. There is no standard of quality in education. Of course, the trouble is that the government which enacted the original legislation for EPF and revenue guarantees failed to ensure any such guarantees. It claimed that if the matter went badly it would ensure them, but now it is backing out.

In the field of health, such a well-known hospital as Toronto Western has closed its obstetrics department. This was not done cheerfully, the director told me, but after great heart-searching. There were operating deficits and something had to go, so now the obstetrics department has gone from one of the major hospitals of our country. Previously, that hospital had closed wards and made other cost-cutting moves. Such things do not contribute to the wellbeing of any hospital. There have also been cuts in public health services in Toronto and other cities and municipalities.

Of course, the general cuts in hospitals have, through antiunion legislation, mainly been borne by the nurses, nursing aides, orderlies and cafeteria workers. While doctors are allowed to strike—just like the Tories—nurses are not allowed to strike, and hospital support workers are thrown in jail for doing what doctors and Tories do with impunity.

OHIP fees have been raised and hospitals are inventing all kinds of new fees for patients. Things that were previously part of the service are now not available under OHIP but are charged separately. Hospital admissions have slowed down, and there have been cases of serious illness or injury where people were not treated in time because of delays in admissions. There have also been cases where people have been discharged prematurely, evidently because of over crowding once certain wards and facilities were reduced. There have been cases where people were discharged prematurely and their health suffered afterwards, even to the point of death in some cases.

The point is that the government introduced Bill C-97 which, if it passes in its present form, would amend current legislation and result in changes to two of the most important programs developed in this country, the established programs financing and fiscal equalization.

We in the New Democratic Party are deeply concerned with the reduction in federal funding for essential social programs and by the government's refusal to work co-operatively with the provinces in order to ensure first-rate education, health and other basic public services.

I want to comment now on the established programs financing and how it evolved for health care and post-secondary education. Federal transfers to the provinces originated in the imbalance between federal and provincial expenditure responsibilities and revenue capacities. Under the BNA Act the responsibility for health, education and welfare resides with the provinces. After World War II the federal government used its superior fiscal resources to initiate a number of national shared cost programs in these areas. These major new programs were designed to ensure that national standards in the quality of health and education programs delivered by the provinces would be achieved. This undertaking that certain standards would be achieved and maintained was made at that time.

Throughout the late 1960s and the early 1970s the federal government became increasingly alarmed by the rapid growth in its financial transfers to the provinces for hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education. Over the strong objections of the provinces, many of which could never have participated in these national programs without substantial federal cost sharing, the federal government instituted a number of arbitrary and controversial measures to cut back its contributions to these programs.

Federal contributions to post-secondary education programs were capped in 1973-1974. In 1975 the federal government announced a schedule of annual ceilings to its medicare contributions, and gave its notice of intention to terminate the hospital insurance agreements in 1980.

Reacting in part to the unanimous concern expressed by the provinces over this arbitrary imposition of ceilings and in part to continuing concern about the rate of increase of its contributions, the federal government proposed new funding arrangements for health and post-secondary education in 1976. Effective April 1, 1977, federal conditional grants to the provinces in support of hospital insurance, medical care and post-secondary education were replaced by the established programs financing arrangements that we now have. EPF replaced federal conditional cost-sharing payments in these program areas by unconditional cash grants, together with the transfer of tax room from the federal to the provincial governments. The per capita federal EPF transfer to the provinces escalates annually at the rate of increase in the gross national product. It is calculated independently of provincial program expenditures. One of the important points is that the federal government knowingly separated its granting from any co-operation by the provinces; it foresaw the possibility that that co-operation would fail. It undertook to restore a requirement of co-operation, and it has now reneged on that undertaking.

There were five principles to the established program financing. They were announced by the Prime Minister at the conference of first ministers in June, 1976. First, the federal government should continue to pay a substantial share of program costs. Second, federal government payments should be calculated independently of provincial program expenditures. Third, there should be greater equality in per capita terms in federal contributions to the provinces. Fourth, funding arrangements should be permanent. Fifth, there should be continuing federal participation in the development of policies of national significance in health and post-secondary education.

These principles announced the end of traditional cost-sharing in hospital insurance, medical care and post-secondary education. An unconditional block funding arrangement was implemented with no matching requirements by provincial governments. Two restraint objectives were intended. The first introduced an element of certainty for the federal government in its financial commitment to these programs. The second provided increased flexibility for provincial budget planning to allow greater scope for cost-saving measures.

The principle of predictability and certainty of federal transfers was to give provinces the opportunity to undertake proper expenditure forecasting, secure in the knowledge that federal contributions would not be capped or withdrawn.

By establishing the financing of these programs on a permanent basis, the federal government attempted to alleviate provincial uncertainty concerning future federal contributions. At the June, 1976, conference the Prime Minister stated exclusively the federal government's commitment to the principle of long-term certainty. He said:

> The fourth principle (of EPF) is that the arrangements be established on a more or less permanent footing, to reduce the uncertainty that has attended in the past the questions of continued federal involvement and the dimension of federal financial contributions . . . (notice of termination) would not be given lightly, because the intention is to underline the relative permanence and stability of the new arrangements.

Not all the provinces were encouraged by the new funding proposal. There are serious liabilities in having an unconditional block fund approach to federal financing of provincial programs when national standards in the quality of these services are paramount. Notwithstanding concerns, the actual financial offer made by the federal government was judged unacceptable by all provinces. In brief, the provinces were asked to assume all the financial risk in large program areas that were experiencing substantial cost pressures. Moreover, provinces were assuming this risk at the same time the federal government was proposing to terminate the 1972 revenue guarantee program.

The revenue guarantee was to become a central aspect of both the 1976 and 1981 negotiations on established programs financing. The revenue guarantee was introduced by the federal government in 1972 to encourage provinces to parallel federal income tax reform. It was a promise by the federal government that over a five-year period the provinces would lose no revenues by adopting the federal income tax changes. Although the provinces warned the federal government that the tax reform measures would significantly reduce revenues, the federal government insisted that the loss of revenue would be minimal. Ottawa optimistically assumed that revenue guarantee payments to the provinces would be small. Despite an arbitrary formula change by the federal government which reduced revenue guarantee payments to the provinces for 1974 and subsequent years, payments were nearly $1 billion per year by 1976 and were escalating.

Provincial estimates of the cost of tax reform have been absolutely correct. Termination of the revenue guarantee would severely disrupt provincial finances. Although the federal government recognized there would be a difficult period of adjustment for all provinces when the guarantee ended, it resolutely maintained that the guarantee would expire at the end of 1976.

Given the importance to provincial finances, the ten provincial premiers unanimously requested the transfer of four personal income tax points and associated equalization as partial compensation for the termination of this program. The stage was set for a major compromise.

Central to the negotiations was the federal government's legal commitment to cost-sharing under its hospital insurance agreements with the provinces until mid-1980. Provinces would have been entitled to claim any difference between this open-ended cost-sharing arrangement and the hospital insurance component of EPF for the first three years of the new program. The federal government wanted to get out of this commitment.

The federal government offered the provinces financial compensation. There was one equalized point of personal income tax plus an equivalent amount of cash for termination of the revenue guarantee. Significantly, the compensation for termination was included as a permanent part of the basic structure of the EPF arrangements and as an inseparable component of the contributions paid to the provinces for health and education. In exchange, the provinces agreed to waive their rights to open-ended cost-sharing under the hospital insurance agreements.

• (1740)

In the period 1977 to 1981 there were further major developments. Given federal assurances in 1976 that EPF was a permanent arrangement for funding of health care and higher education, the provinces had reasonable expectations that EPF would evolve smoothly. However, five major developments occurred over the last four years which put in question the federal government's real commitment to EPF, that is to say, to the national health program and the post-secondary education system.

The first was the 1978 federal budget cuts. In August, 1978, the federal government announced significant budget cuts and a re-allocation of funds from existing programs to new priorities. Included were major unilateral cutbacks in federal-provincial transfers. At a November, 1978, finance ministers' meeting the federal finance minister suggested EPF would be the target for reductions. That proposal startled the provinces. EPF was not yet a year and a half old and was supposedly based on stability and predictability. In retrospect, this was the first indication that the federal government was anxious to back out of its financial commitment under EPF. The provinces, aware that reductions in federal funding would have lowered health and post-secondary education standards, rejected the federal proposals. As a result, the federal government cut back other transfer payments to the provinces.

Second was the federal allegations regarding the provincial misuse of EPF funds. Beginning in 1979 the federal government initiated an attack against the provinces, alleging provincial misuse of EPF funds. Provincial governments were accused of diverting medicare funds to other programs. These allegations precipitated a royal commission report on Canadian health services. Although the Hall commission report concluded that the provinces were not diverting health dollars, the federal campaign escalated up to and through the recent fiscal arrangements review. Over the past year provincial post-secondary education expenditures have become the favourite federal target. That there was an increase in federal contributions to the financing of health and post-secondary education in relation to provincial expenditures may be true, in some provinces, for the initial years of the new arrangements. This is not surprising, however, given the nature of the block-funding proposal introduced by the federal government.

One other technical feature of the EPF formula influenced the relative size of federal contributions in the initial years. Transfers to the provinces are escalated each year on the basis of a lagged three-year moving average of the growth in the national economy. During the early years of block funding the escalator was, to a considerable extent, based on the inflated but declining growth rate of the Canadian economy during the mid-1970s. This naturally inflated federal contributions to the established programs during the initial years. This was known to all governments in 1976 and its effects were predictable. The fact that EPF was deliberately front-end loaded during its introductory years, made this aspect of the formula an effective characteristic for selling the new arrangements to the provinces. It was also well understood in 1976 that provincial program costs would rise faster than federal contributions during a period of accelerating inflation. That is the current situation. In recent years provincial governments have been carrying an increasing portion of the accelerating health and education costs.

When the block funding arrangement was proposed in 1976, stable and predictable transfers for health and post-secondary education programs were primary objectives. These have been achieved by the current arrangements. Federal projections of the transfers under the EPF arrangements provided to the provinces in 1976 were extremely accurate; within 2 per cent of the amount actually transferred.

The third thing that happened in those four years, Mr. Speaker, was that the federal government became increasingly preoccupied with the lack of public visibility for federal transfers to the provinces. Given the nature of the block funding financing arrangements, it is no surprise that the federal government is having visibility problems with the EPF. As far as public accountability is concerned, the federal government not only can but is obliged to enforce the conditions specified in the national medical care and hospital insurance acts. If accountability is a problem, then the federal government is either not carrying out its obligations, or the specified conditions do not clearly spell out the respective responsibilities of the federal and provincial governments. It is a federal problem, not a provincial problem, and the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) and the Minister for National Health and Welfare (Miss Begin) should get moving in carrying out their duty to enforce these principles of accountability and equal access to a quality level of care.

The fourth thing that happened in these years was the October, 1980, federal budget. The federal government indicated that it intended to achieve significant savings in social transfer payments to the provinces beginning in 1982-83. At the December 17, 1980, federal-provincial finance ministers' meeting the provinces urged the federal government to proceed with negotiations at the earliest possible date so that a mutually acceptable agreement could be reached in the interest of all Canadians. However, the federal finance minister was not willing to discuss the federal government's proposals at that time. He finally agreed to hold a meeting in March, 1981 but the meeting was never called.

At the western premiers' conference in Thompson, Manitoba, on April 28, 1981, and again at the meeting of the western provincial finance ministers and treasurers on May 5, 1981 in Victoria, the western provinces repeated their call to the federal government to table EPF proposals as soon as possible. Ottawa disregarded both requests. At the 22nd annual premiers' conference in August, 1981, the premiers were unanimous in agreeing that intergovernmental negotiations on EPF must commence immediately. Ottawa again ignored the provinces.

For more than an entire year, Mr. Speaker, Ottawa stonewalled the provinces in their repeated requests for ministerial negotiations on financial arrangements. The federal finance minister delayed meeting with his provincial counterparts until November 23, 1981, in Halifax. We must conclude that the federal timetable was designed to ensure there would be no time or opportunity for real negotiations and consultations.

The fifth thing to happen was the establishment of the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements in February, 1981. Its mandate was to examine fiscal arrangements within the context of the federal government's expenditure plan as set out in the October 28, 1980, budget. It was to report to Parliament by the end of June, 1981. The main thrust of the federal finance minister's presentation to the task force was that transfers would have to be cut significantly to meet the federal government's over-all strategy of reducing its deficit. He implied that transfers were a major contributing factor to the federal deficit, and confirmed that the federal government was seeking net savings in social program transfers of $1.5 billion. In August, 1981, the task force released its report and flatly rejected that part of its terms of reference, requiring its examination to take place within the context of the October 28, 1980, federal budget.

In addressing the federal government's concerns about its deficit, the task force stated:

—federal grants to provinces and municipalities expressed as a percentage of total federal spending have been fairly constant since 1970. There is, therefore, no ground to suggest that the federal transfers have been getting out of hand. In fact, they grew at a slower rate in the 1970s than they did in the 1960s.

The task force rejected the arguments that federal-provincial transfers were responsible for the federal deficit. In the view of the task force, the federal deficit is the result of the general economic situation and federal tax and expenditure decisions. If the federal government gives away billions to the wealthiest corporations in this country and refuses to collect taxes from them, it is no wonder that the federal government has a deficit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: In his presentation to the parliamentary task force, the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada likewise took issue with the federal finance minister's statements that transfers to the provinces must be cut to reduce the federal deficit. He said that one should seriously doubt the wisdom and fairness of solving the federal deficit problem by merely transferring the problem to the provinces. This is not a solution at all. In the summary and conclusions to its report, entitled "Financing Confederation Today and Tomorrow", the Economic Council reiterated its position. The Council's first recommendation was that the federal government reconsider its proposed reduction in transfers to the provinces.

I now wish to look at the federal cutbacks to the EPF. The federal government announced in its November, 1981, budget that the changes to the established program financing arrangements were as follows: first, effective April 1, 1982, compensation to the provinces for the termination of the revenue guarantee which had been built into the EPF will be eliminated; second, as of April 1, 1982, federal contributions for health and post-secondary education programs will be on an equal per capita basis; and third, by March 31, 1983, new federal-provincial arrangements for the financing of post-secondary education and human resource development will be devised. If the provinces are unco-operative in developing these new arrangements the federal government will freeze future transfers to the provinces for post-secondary education at their 1982-83 levels. Fourth, by March 31, 1983, the national standards for health care are to be clarified and an effective mechanism for their maintenance is to be developed. This is to be done in consultation with the provinces and incorporated in new federal health legislation.

The financial implications of these steps are as follows: the elimination of the revenue guarantee will save Ottawa $813.7 million in 1982-83 and $5,306.2 million over the five-year period of the 1982-87 fiscal arrangements. Savings to the federal government, by placing the EPF transfers on an equal per capita basis, will amount to $127.9 million in 1982-83 and $574.6 million over the next five-year period. In total, the federal government will cut back transfers for health and post-secondary education by $941.6 million in 1982-83 and by $5,880.8 million over the period 1982-83 to 1986-87. These cutbacks are substantially greater than the savings proposed in the federal budget of October, 1980.

What we have to consider is the misleading federal presentation and data errors. In its November, 1981, budget, the federal government attempted to mask the real impact of the cuts to the EPF by presenting tables which suggested that increased provincial revenues resulting from the tax increases contained in the federal budget would offset EPF cutbacks. This is extremely misleading. Any additional tax revenue received by the provinces is from provincial home source revenue. It is collected from provincial taxpayers as a provincial income tax. It is not a federal transfer. Moreover, in those years when the federal government instituted tax changes which reduced provincial home source revenues, there was no thought of compensating the provinces with increased federal transfers. Even if this tactic were acceptable, which it is not, the actual cost of the EPF cutbacks to the provinces was further misrepresented by massive errors in the federal budget. By its own admission, the federal government overestimated the alleged revenue increases to the provinces by almost $650 million.

The federal government has never presented the provinces with a complete EPF proposal. It has always split its negotiations and threats. The deadline of March 31, 1982, was set by the federal government for legislation on the financial aspects of the EPF. This was after the federal government delayed for a year the request of the provinces for negotiation on this very point. The deadline for legislation on program issues is March 31, 1983. The latter is accompanied by the threat to freeze federal payments for higher education if the provinces cannot agree to as yet unspecified federal conditions. The package is incomplete. It provides for financial cutbacks without first addressing the programs to be financed. This is a complete reversal of the proper process of review and negotiation. Definitive federal proposals with respect to health and higher education objectives and conditions have not yet been made. The federal initiatives are completely contrary to the principles outlined by the Prime Minister when he introduced EPF in 1976. Of course, if the Prime Minister resigns in the next month or two, he can slough off all responsibility for all of his promises.

In essence, the federal government is attempting to reduce its financial involvement while increasing its control over provincial spending in health and higher education.

Mr. Blaikie: Won't work. The health minister should resign.

Mr. Heap: It should be noted that, except for a three-year notice of termination clause in the EPF arrangements, there is no legislative deadline for changes to EPF. Without legislative action, the existing financial arrangements will continue indefinitely, in keeping with the intended long-term nature of EPF. The federal government's stated intention to establish new financing arrangements for post-secondary education clearly indicates that it wishes to terminate the current EPF arrangements within one or two years. However, no notice of termination has been given in the House of Commons in spite of the Prime Minister's stated principle of permanency and stability. It is not known whether or not these new financing arrangements for post-secondary education will be accompanied by further cutbacks in federal funding for universities and technical schools. The pattern is clear, however. The federal government is seeking more political visibility for lower levels of spending without any concern for quality of services provided to Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a bad one. I believe it should be voted down by this House. I hope that the federal government will seriously reconsider it and, particularly within the committee, will be willing to accept amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1), this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

CALL FOR REVIEW OF INTEREST RETURN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that there has been no increase in the yield on government annuities since 1976 to reflect both the massive increases in the cost of living and the massive increase in interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately act on the recommendation of his department made in February of 1976 that increases be reviewed from time to time to reflect further fluctuation of interest rates so that some measure of relief can be offered to those who purchased these annuities in good faith to supplement their income and retirement funds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's "hens" are coming home to roost: He played the east against the west, and now we have "separatists" in Quebec and in the west. He subtly worked toward a socialist state and discouraged free entreprise at every turn, and literally drove capital out of the country, and now we have little investment and one million people unemployed. He approved a budget which supports high interest rates, that attacks businessmen and farmers through eliminating IAACs and reducing capital cost allowances, etc., and now businesses and farms are going bankrupt or barely surviving. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House demand that the Prime Minister and the Liberals change their policies at once or get out of the "Hen Hoose". The Canadian people, free enterprisers, will not stand for much more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

SUGGESTION MINISTER MEET MIRAMICHI TRI-LEVEL ASSOCIATION OFFICIALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, since last November the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has repeatedly been asked to meet with the Miramichi Tri-Level Association. To date he has not accepted the invitation. On one visit to Ottawa by the association, the group was told that the minister was too tired to see them. In view of the calamity which has developed in the region with reference to horrendous unemployment, which will be capped by the government's foreclosure of CFB Chatham, and considering that he is the cabinet minister responsible for New Brunswick, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That the House instruct the minister to go to bed, rest up, and meet these officials in an effort to cope with the crisis.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—ROLE OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS AS ELECTION OBSERVERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that two

hon. members of the Conservative Party, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) and the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), with the approval of the sometimes external affairs critic of the Conservative Party, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), have agreed to a request by the Salvadoran government to act as election observers, and in view of the fact that the upcoming elections in El Salvador are an affront to democracy and a mockery under circumstances in which thousands of people, including innocent Salvadoran and foreign journalists have been deliberately murdered by Salvadoran government troops, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House urge the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands who, along with this party, has opposed the sending of Canadian observers to these elections, to keep her Conservative colleagues in Canada and not have anything whatsoever to do with these farcical Salvadoran elections.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

PASSAGE OF CANADA BILL AT WESTMINSTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the British House of Lords has today given third reading to the Canada Bill, thereby completing the final legislative step in the patriation of Canada's Constitution, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael):

That this House convey our appreciation to the members of both British Houses of Parliament for their co-operation in bringing this historic and final chapter of nation building to a successful conclusion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says "yes" there must be something wrong.

Mr. Lawrence: It needs Royal Assent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DESIGNATION OF BILINGUAL POSITIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I move this motion in the same spirit as the current mindless and vacuous application by the government of basically good rules, this time with regard to bilingualism affecting the security service of the RCMP, and pursuant to the second protest from members of the RCMP in the capital region. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That all staff of foreign missions in the capital region be tested for proficiency in both official languages; that failure should require attendance at language courses; and that those who fail such tests after two years instruction be declared persona non grata; further, that Mr. Max Yalden be provided with a list from the security service, in both official languages, of those who are suspected of spying in the capital region so he can establish the level of bilingualism in this particular group; that spooks not meeting the criteria be required to take up residence outside the national capital region, and finally, that the designation of bilingual positions in the security service be postponed until potential spies being surveyed by the RCMP become suitably bilingual.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—IMPLEMENTATION OF TAX CHANGES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, massive uncertainty in the business community, over what might be the rules considering sales taxes, what might definitely be the rules with respect to life insurance and annuities, and what might or might not be the rules in connection with pension plans, capital cost allowances, etc., is contributing to the lack of jobs and general malaise affecting the country. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

• (1410)

That this House does direct the Minister of Finance to present to this House the amendments to the Income Tax Act affecting persons and businesses on or before March 29, 1982, and at the same time on motions advise this House as to the procedure leading to the implementation of his suggested changes in the sales tax.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENSIONS

CALL FOR REFORM OF SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said yesterday that it would take between 25 and 30 years to provide significant income benefits for retired Canadians if the country is to rely on the private sector to reform our pension system, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That this House recognizes that the need for pension income reform is today, and directs the government to use the additional moneys it will gain from the energy agreements and the new taxes from the budget, to increase pensions immediately for those who are retired now, and to bring forward reforms to our public pension system so as to provide decent and adequate pensions for all retired Canadians, now and in the future.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, whereas recent forecasts indicate that the agricultural community will suffer a significant drop in income during the next two years due to escalating input costs and stable or falling returns, and whereas the biggest single factor contributing to the disastrous position of Canadians farmers is without a doubt the government's disastrous high interest rate policy, because farmers are dependent on borrowed capital to maintain their operations, and whereas the foolish and impossible restrictions on the small business development bond are forcing thousands of farmers out of business through bankruptcy and foreclosure, because they do not qualify for the small business development bond, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That the government immediately ease the regulations for obtaining a small business development bond by the farming community, so that our farmers may actually qualify for this bond, allowing them to remain in business, so that Canadians may look forward to continuing food production in this country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

NORTHERN ONTARIO WASTE DISPOSAL SITE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Recent earth tremors, as high as three on the Richter scale, have been registered in northern Ontario, near the town of Massey, where Atomic Energy Canada Ltd. is looking at plans to dispose of radioactive waste in subterranean reservoirs. In light of the serious problems this presents, and the fear the local people have of the waste contaminating the town's water supply, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House instructs the Minister of Energy and the Liberal member from Algoma to accept the local MPPs' idea of a meeting with local residents to discuss AECL's plans, and further, that the minister and AECL accept the democratic right of the local residents to accept or reject the use of their region as a test site for nuclear waste disposal.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NEGOTIATIONS OVER IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to our powder puff negotiator, the Minister of State for International Trade. The minister has just returned from a trip to Japan, where he has failed in his negotiations in every way, shape and form on behalf of the Canadian auto industry. He has come back without one encouraging word for the industry which, as he knows, is suffering from record high unemployment and bankruptcy in the parts sector. All the minister had to say about his failure on that matter, before he returned, was that "he was not concerned." Therefore I would like to ask the minister if he could at least tell this House and, more important, the industry, just what he considers to be acceptable target objectives in this very important matter, before even more jobs are lost.

• (1415)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I want to advise the hon. member that I too was disappointed that the Japanese government failed to respond to what I thought was a very fair proposal which the Government of Canada put forward with respect to three items: first, on a short-term basis the restriction of automobiles for the coming year entering the Canadian market; second, with respect to a ceiling on commercial vehicles, and third with respect to a commitment to undertake negotiation concerning a long-term content proposal. Negotiations are still under way. We hope that, as soon as a decision with respect to the United States-Japan negotiations are finalized, we will be able to finalize the Canadian negotiations.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN CONTENT REGULATIONS BE IMPOSED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, these negotiations, consultations, and broken promises made by the Liberal administration, have been going on for over two years while unemployment in this country has skyrocketed to record levels. Surely it is time to stop pussy-footing around and take a much tougher position. I would therefore ask the minister if he is now prepared to take the necessary unilateral action, for example the imposition of Canadian content regulations, before it is too late. Surely some action has to be taken now. If the minister is not prepared to take that action, I would like him to tell us and the industry why not. Negotiations can no longer go on. They have gone on long enough. We need action. That is what is needed.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, obviously we would much prefer to have negotiations take place with the Japanese in a very positive manner. It is totally unrealistic to assume that Japan will decide what to do with Canada's arrangement until such time as it finalizes its arrangement with the United States, being that 90 per cent of its market in North America is the United States. We should give the Japanese government the benefit of the doubt and allow them a couple of weeks to think over the proposal.

LENGTH OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, the minister surely knows that most industrialized countries of the world have now and have had for some time various agreements with the Japanese without having waited for their neighbours to make agreements. Since the minister and his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, are unable to come up with a policy, I will direct my final supplementary to the Prime Minister.

I would ask the Prime Minister how much longer he is prepared to allow his ministers to negotiate unsuccessfully on behalf of and at the expense of the economy and the Canadian worker. Will he stand up in this House as the Prime Minister and tell us when there is going to be a firm policy and some firm action taken with regard to the automotive industry, which is responsible for one out of seven jobs in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asks how long I would be prepared to let the minister negotiate. I would say I do not think he should take anywhere near as long as that party took to not reach an agreement with the premier of Alberta on a matter of Canadian concern.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRADE

JAPANESE TRADE PRACTICES

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of State for International Trade. How long is the government going to put up with the unfair trade practices of Japan? How many Canadians will be compelled to lose their jobs before his government takes some action?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as I indicated in the speech that I gave to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Tokyo, Canada agrees with the principle of free trade, but we want to see fair trade. We indicated to them a number of areas to which we would like to have access in the Japanese market because we believe Canadian manufacturers can compete with anybody in the world, provided we are given access to the Japanese market equal to that they are given here in Canada.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I completely agree with the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: I am a free trader too, but saying being a free trader does not make it free. The Japanese will not trade fairly. We are shut out of the Japanese market by tariffs and non-tariff barriers in our agricultural products, forest products, automobile parts and other products. You know that it is a one-way street. I want to ask the minister when is the government going to say to Japan that we are not going to play the game any longer? It is a two-chance situation; lose and lose.

• (1420)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member because my voice is rather hoarse and I cannot shout across the aisle as he shouted at me. I am sure that the hon. member is aware of the fact that we are one of the few nations in the world that actually has a trade surplus with Japan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: While the United States of America and the European community have a trade deficit with Japan, we happen to have a substantial trade surplus. We are not happy with the size of that surplus or with the market penetration of our manufacturing goods, but we have indicated to the Japanese that access may not be as easy in this market unless we have an equal and fair opportunity in their market.

CANADIAN PROPOSAL TO JAPAN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the same minister on the same subject. The minister came back from Japan without getting an agreement either on the reduction of exports of vehicles into Canada or, much better, a commitment to produce parts or vehicles in Canada. Nor was he able to get a reduction or elimination of the 10 per cent tariff which stops finished wood products in British Columbia from going into Japan. In short, he struck out on all counts.

Considering the statement made by the minister that we do indeed have a trade surplus, but considering that this is overwhelmingly in raw materials, what specific proposal did the minister take to Japan to flesh out the idea that Canada is an industrial nation also, and Japan cannot go on having free access to our resources without importing some of our manufactured goods as well? What specific proposals did the Governement of Canada make?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is aware of the proposal which I made concerning the 10 per cent tariff on SPF. I am disappointed to find out that he has not mentioned that the two negotiations we have undertaken during the past two years with respect to the forest industry in British Columbia and its penetration of the Japanese market have borne fruit in the early months of this year. In fact the Japanese government has indicated that it will change the standards for softwood plywood with respect to the housing market, which opens up a substantial market potential for the British Columbia lumber producers. That will likely be undertaken in July. The fact that the building codes have been changed with respect to three-storey condominiums for wood frame housing, or two by four housing as it is called in Japan, is also a substantial export potential for Canada. These are two positive elements which have been undertaken by this government during the last three months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, they are two positive elements but they still did not come to grips at all, with automotive trade or affect the 10 per cent tariff on finished wood products which are the most important items of trade both to British Columbia and Ontario, in particular.

TARIFF BARRIERS BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister and it is with respect to the Senate Report on Trade Relations with the United States. It is noted in the Senate report that trade barriers in terms of tariffs only between Canada and the United States will be removed by 1987. Considering that the United States has in place a whole range of non-tariff barriers—in fact an 87-page FIRA report lists all those non-tariff barriers—does the government plan to take steps to ensure that our industry in Canada can survive by 1987 if tariffs will be removed but the United States maintains a whole series of non-tariff barriers which unfairly discriminate against Canadian producers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, this is a subject which has been raised at the GATT meetings and at the Economic Summit meeting. Various countries complain about non-tariff barriers being erected against them. As the hon. member indicated, the United States does have non-tariff barriers, as well as Japan. I suppose we would have to say that in some cases Canada does also, in support of the hon. member. What we are attempting to do in the GATT negotiations, and indeed at the Summit negotiations, is to de-escalate these barriers on a multilateral basis.

ROLE OF MULTINATIONAL FIRMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister is going to de-escalate the barriers, to use his phrase, and move toward free trade, not only in terms of tariffs but non-tariff barriers, my next question concerns the fact that 45 per cent of Canadian manufacturing is owned in the United States. Does the Prime Minister accept the view that if these barriers are removed, and with 45 per cent of manufacturing owned in the United States, the inevitable tendency will be for manufacturing to shift completely south of the border unless the Canadian government takes steps to ensure that those multinationals in Canada will produce our fair share of the jobs? Given the government's decision to move toward free trade, what is the government going to do with these multinationals to make sure we have these jobs in Canada?

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, several years ago this government issued guidelines to ensure that the multinationals situated in Canada would follow a certain number of steps which are compatible with and, indeed, pursuant to Canadian interests rather than foreign interests. These guidelines were issued publicly, and their application is of concern and a matter of surveillance by the government.

CRIMINAL CODE

OFF-TRACK BETTING

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Prime Minister, but it is on a different subject. Has the Prime Minister's government passed an order in council which as yet has not been made public, or is he contemplating passing an order in council which would drastically change public policy in respect of off-track betting or any other form of gambling which, up until now, has not been authorized under the law of this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would have to take the question as notice. I am not familiar with any such order in council. My understanding is that the Criminal Code determines this matter and that it could not be changed by order in council.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I assume he will have no difficulty asserting to this House and guaranteeing that before there is any change in government policy in respect of these matters, the change will be debated in this House, the government will not be handing a fait accompli to this House or to the people of this country, and there will be no attempt to change that policy by virtue of any back door process of order in council but instead there will be a legislative amendment presented in the House of Commons.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Surely, Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that no order in council would be upheld by any court if it were in contradiction of the law.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—QUERY RESPECTING CROWN IMMUNITY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice, who has been away so long in England he will probably come back with an English accent, my question is directed to the acting minister, the Solicitor General.

As the minister knows, lawyers for Uranium Canada, one of the six corporations charged under the Combines Investigation Act with conspiring to fix uranium prices at less than competition, have asked the courts to exclude Uranium Canada from hearings on this matter. Uranium Canada claims it is immune from prosecution because its affairs were directed by the federal government and therefore the Crown is immune. Can the minister tell the House whether it is the position of this government that it is licensed to break the laws of Canada without consequence on the basis of Crown immunity?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that is a ridiculous question. We are prepared to proceed on these matters always in accordance with the law. That has always been our policy and our practice in the past. It will always continue to be the way in which we conduct ourselves.

INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I will not comment on the description "ridiculous", except to say I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I am sure the Prime Minister understands the gravity of this matter. I would like to know what the Prime Minister and the government are hiding with this kind of tactic in the courts.

I want to ask the Prime Minister a question with respect not to the court proceeding itself but the instructions which are being given to counsel. Will the Prime Minister tell us whether it is the minister responsible for Uranium Canada who is instructing counsel in this matter, or is it Gordon McNabb, the president of the corporation and one of the unindicted co-conspirators, who is giving instructions to counsel with respect to the position this Crown corporation is taking?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, normally the instructions would be given by the minister, and I imagine that is the case in this particular circumstance. I am not quite sure why the hon. member is dragging in the name of Mr. Gordon McNabb. If the hon. member has something to say, he should not hide it. Why does he not go ahead and say what he has to say?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I did.

AIRPORTS

TERMINAL AT SARNIA, ONT.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Today the City of Sarnia celebrates its 125th anniversary. I should like to know from the minister if the airport terminal is on track and will be built.

Mr. Lawrence: Tell him he will have to wait another 125 years.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not know if you can say about a runway that it is on track, but the project itself will be realized on time.

STATUS OF WOMEN

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION EMPLOYMENT POLICY

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last year the minister, who was then responsible for the status of women in Canada, indicated publicly that voluntary affirmative action did not work and that mandatory action would be required. Privately, however, we learned that the minister and the cabinet continued to pursue a very ineffective go-slow approach. Now we hear from both the minister who is responsible for the status of women this year, and also from the Minister of Labour, that the same thing applies—that voluntary affirmative action does not work.

Will the Minister of Employment and Immigration explain what evidence he had that led to this statement? Will he also tell the House what action he feels is needed to replace a voluntary affirmative action policy?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. member asked that question because it gives us the opportunity to explain that over the past several months we have been engaged in a very active discussion about affirmative action programs with the business community.

As the hon. member knows, two parliamentary committees, one on the handicapped and one on the labour market, recommended that we attempt to develop affirmative action programs in co-operation with the major participants, the labour unions and the business community. That is exactly what I have been doing for the past several months, meeting with these organizations to discuss with them what the most effective means would be of assuring equality of access in the workplace. We are continuing those discussions because we happen to believe that the most effective way of introducing such plans is not through confrontation with these groups, as the hon. member's party advocates, but through co-operation with those groups. That is what we intend to do.

REQUEST FOR COMPULSORY ACTION PROGRAM

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it concerns the constitutional rights of women. The Minister of Labour, the Minister of State for Mines, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have now publicly stated that the government's voluntary program on affirmative action for women in the workplace has failed, yet the cabinet has refused to implement a policy of compulsory compliance even for the civil service and companies that have contracts with the federal government.

Since the new Constitution endorses affirmative action as a means for women achieving equal rights, will the Prime Minister, as the leader of this country, stop being such a bloody hypocrite—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: —and will he tell the women of Canada that he now will require—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: —will he tell the women of Canada that he now will require a policy—

An hon. Member: Withdraw!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I cannot quite recall if that expression is parliamentary or not. I do not have the list before me.

An hon. Member: It is not.

Madam Speaker: Since it is creating such a ruckus, perhaps the hon. member would like to rephrase her sentence.

Mrs. Mitchell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Would the Prime Minister stop being such a hypocrite, and will he now require a policy of mandatory affirmative action in the public service, and for all companies that do business—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am told that that expression really cannot be used, and I would ask the hon. member to withdraw it or rephrase the sentence.

An hon. Member: Withdraw!

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I would be very pleased—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the House allow the hon. member to respond.

Mrs. Mitchell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would be pleased to withdraw. I know the sensitivities of the Prime Minister. On behalf of Canadian women would he please introduce compulsory compliance affirmative action programs in the federal jurisdiction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am in no way as sensitive about this matter as the NDP apparently is. The hon. member should remember that she is a member of a party which has elected a government in Saskatchewan which opposed the insertion of women's rights in the charter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Trudeau: Surely the hon. lady—if I can call her that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Withdraw!

Mr. Trudeau: —should not forget that when members on all sides of this House were trying to insert a guarantee into the Charter of Rights that women would be treated equally, the last holdout when the Minister of Justice was trying to get the province to come aboard was Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONTROL OF BAND EXPENDITURES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who, on many occasions, has claimed to support the principle of increased Indian responsibility over their moneys and affairs. Now his department has issued a new directive which takes away much of that authority and will be instituting centrally-run computer programs, involving hundreds of man-years, to look after the expenditures of the three-month expenditure programs. As well, the department is asking for a referendum on behalf of the chief and council, and that is undermining the chief and council and his bands.

Does the minister believe that the reimposition of this type of program is undermining the whole area of more band control over funds and moneys and is really going back to the old type philosophy of Indian agents?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I wish the hon. member would be good enough to advise me if he is talking about a particular group of bands. Does he mean the bands from Alberta, for instance? He nods his head indicating that indeed he is. May I say that there have been discussions with the chief and some of the band's lawyers with respect to what they were doing. They were in my office about three weeks ago.

You may recall, and the opposition, I think, raised questions about it, that the Auditor General raised some questions about proper procedures to be used by the department with reference to about $15 million to $18 million expended by the band, and indicated that the department was not adhering to the proper accounting procedures with respect to how that matter was to be handled by the band. He implied that we were negligent and that I was negligent in discharging my duties as a trustee on behalf of the Indian people with respect to the handling of these particular moneys of this particular band.

This matter was discussed with them. I indicated that, according to legal opinions I had received from independent legal officers of the Crown, certain procedures would be required that had not been adhered to in the past. As a result, certain controls remain.

I am sorry to go on so long, Madam Speaker, but may I also say that individual Indian members of the band had complained about the way some distributions were made per capita amongst all band members, and had questioned the procedures resorted to by the chief and the band. I informed the chief and the council that a referendum would be preferable in one particular instance, so that the chief and the band council would know that their distribution had the full approval of the band.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE INQUIRY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. This new directive affects far more than one band in Alberta; it will affect in the neighbourhood of 40 or 50 bands across Canada. I would ask the minister whether he would be prepared to back off on the directive for at least six months until proper consultation can be had with all the bands that are affected. In the meantime, would he be willing to appoint a parliamentary task force to look into the whole area of the relationship between the government and Indian bands as far as their funding is concerned?

• (1440)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to do that and to discuss it with members of the standing committee next week. If we could have some type of all-party agreement to look into the regulations to see whether some flexibility could be injected into them—and incidentally I told the chief and his advisers that we would be prepared to discuss it with them and take a more flexible approach if we could work out a satisfactory system—I would be pleased to do that. I might indicate at the same time that if some opposition members who are so zealous in seeing that the government responds to the criticisms of the Auditor General would show some patience, perhaps we would not have issued such stringent guidelines in the first place.

INDIAN TRUST FUND

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, one of the criticisms of the Auditor General was in connection with the Indian trust fund, moneys which belong to Indian people over which the minister has a trust responsibility. The criticism was that it is very difficult to audit the trust fund because we don't know where the money is. Of course our major criticism has always been that the government is cheating Indian people in terms of the interest paid on the trust fund. The trust fund is roughly $600 or $700 million that the minister keeps for Indian people, on which he pays something like 4 per cent or 5 per cent less interest than they could obtain from a private institution. What does the minister have to say about this? Will he allow Indian people in the future to spend their own money and invest it in ways other people do, or will he continue this colonial attitude toward Indian responsibility?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member is well aware, we have been endeavouring to inject a good deal more flexibility so that Indian people can govern themselves without interference from bureaucracy. All too often it is criticisms emanating from opposition members who wish to take political advantage of a given situation which winds up in the headlines that results in a burdensome bureaucracy protecting itself from that very criticism. To a degree I think

hon. members would like far too much to have it both ways in this particular case.

If the hon. member would check his facts with reference to the bands in question which prompted some of these guidelines, he would find that we have, to avoid the accusation of paternalism, paid out millions of dollars to the bands and gave them the discretion as to how they would handle it. This was subject to the very same criticism. These bands had the money and could earn their own interest on it. It was not residing in any particular government account at the time. I wish the hon. member would check into his facts before he makes allegations.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

LACK OF EQUIPMENT ON DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT HELICOPTER BASED AT PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, and it is on a question of life and death. The minister is aware that Transport Canada has based a Sikorski 61 helicopter in Prince Rupert which is used, among other things, for the replenishment of supplies to lighthouses on the west coast and the maintenance of other navigational aids. Also the minister is aware that there is no hoist on this aircraft and that its crew has not received any search and rescue training. In the case of a marine disaster this means that the helicopter and its crew would not be able to provide adequate assistance in search and rescue operations. Why has the Department of Transport not equipped this helicopter with a hoist? Why has the department not undertaken formal search and rescue training of the helicopter's crew, considering the task it performs?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not think I am expected to know about these circumstances. I will find out immediately, but first I will find out whether the helicopter belongs to the Department of National Defence or the Department of Transport. As my hon. friend knows this often happens. I will find out immediately and report in the next couple of hours to my hon. friend.

HELICOPTERS BASED AT VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the minister was informed of the questions I am asking today. His office had the information on March 10 when it came to my attention. That was 15 days ago. I would suggest that the minister check with his staff to find out what kind of mail involving life and death he is not being shown.

The minister should be aware that the Department of Transport has up to five helicopters based in Victoria. One of them is a Bell 212 nine-passenger helicopter. There are no hoists available on these helicopters, and their crews have not received any training in search and rescue work. There is a one-hour delay in search and rescue response from the base in Comox to reach Juan de Fuca Strait. These helicopters, if they were equipped and had trained crews, would be able to come to the aid of a marine disaster there within ten to 15 minutes. This situation involves the life and death of west coast seamen.

Will the minister undertake to determine why these helicopters have not been outfitted with proper search and rescue equipment, and why their personnel have not been adequately trained in search and rescue procedures? It is important to the life of seamen on the west coast that every helicopter and every piece of equipment out there be ready—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member gave notice of the question I can understand his anger, but unfortunately I did not get it and I did not get an answer to his question. I will do so immediately. I have answers here to about 100 possible questions. It just happens that this one is not one of them. I can only repeat that I will attend to it immediately.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the tens of thousands of Canadians who are losing their homes, their farms and their businesses because of the government's policy of maintaining high interest rates. This policy is causing intense mental anguish for thousands of people, and every time a farm or a business goes offstream our economy is being further eroded. Would the minister assure the House that the government is seriously considering measures to ease the burden on those people most affected by this high interest rate policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I suppose it is a tactic to describe the high interest rate policy as a policy which is pursued by the government for some sinister purpose. The high interest rates which exist are the result of the inflation we experience in the country. As I have stated often, there is no possibility of substantially reducing interest rates unless we succeed in getting our inflation rates down. That is a very complex subject in itself.

The hon. member referred to the impact of high interest rates on particular groups in the country. We have attempted to come to their rescue by various methods, one being the application of the small business bond to unincorporated businesses and farmers. The hon. member specifically mentioned farmers. I should like to advise the House that the four banks which were able to break out their loans for small business bonds directed to farmers provided $473 million to the agricultural sector through the small business bond, most of which has flowed to that sector since the budget.

PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS RENEWING MORTGAGES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, the minister described to us what he has done for farmers in respect of the small business bond. There is very lilttle evidence of that in most parts of the country. What will the minister do for hard-pressed home owners who are facing eviction because they cannot afford to renew their mortgages?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member is not aware that there is presently before the House a bill in the name of the minister of housing which is intended to do the very thing the hon. member requested. I wish he would get his party to get that bill out of committee and passed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAX CONVENTIONS

NEGOTIATION OF TREATIES BETWEEN CANADA AND LATIN AMERICAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. The negotiation of international agreements aimed at encouraging fair tax treatment and avoiding double taxation represents a real concern to those in Canada's private sector carrying on business in Latin America. While the negotiation of such tax treaties is difficult, would the minister report on the status of such negotiations with Latin America in general, and in particular with Mexico and Brazil?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that very few tax treaty negotiations have been initiated with Latin American countries. I believe the reason is differences in our respective tax systems.

With specific reference to Brazil, a number of meetings have been held over the past several years, but because of policy differences between Brazil and Canada it has not been possible to reach a mutually satisfactory agreement. Exploratory talks with Mexico have been held on the possibility of concluding a bilateral tax treaty, but their position of not concluding such treaties with other countries has not changed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

FUNDS FOR JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration today made another one of his biweekly announcements on job creation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Wait for it. He spoke of spending some $200 million of unemployment insurance funds for job creation. Coincidentally, the new UIC legislation will reduce the cost to the federal government for unemployment insurance by some $220 million. The minister is asking the unemployed to pay for his biweekly job-creation announcements. Can the minister tell this House whether this announcement means that the unemployment insurance legislation will definitely be introduced to the House this spring?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the hon. member is stumbling over his own fabrications. There was no announcement by this government to introduce changes in the unemployment insurance program at this time. All we have are recommendations from the task force, which are being considered by cabinet. When they are ready to be presented to the House, they will be presented. I suggest, Madam Speaker, it is very unfortunate that the hon. member is distorting these programs by issuing those kinds of false statements.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PREMIUMS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the expert on fabrication. The minister spoke today of taking from the unemployment insurance fund some $400 million for job creation and training, indicating he will take up to some $500 million, at the same time as he is asking Canadian workers to pay increased unemployment insurance premiums. He could take funds from the federal government's reserve of $1.73 billion for real job creation.

Can the minister justify to this House how he can ask the few people who continue to work in this country to pay increased premiums in order to pay for his weekly job announcements?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, once again the hon. member is in very serious error because the fact of the matter is that in the November budget we substantially reduced unemployment insurance premiums. If the hon. member were paying more attention in this House, he would realize the programs we are bringing in under the unemployment insurance fund are receiving broad-scale support. As of today, we have signed 417 work-sharing agreements covering over 24,000 workers, and averting 10,000 lay-offs.

So, Madam Speaker, we are using the unemployment insurance fund for its intended purpose—to help the workers of this country, not to fuel the rhetoric of the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMERGENCY MEASURES

PROTECTION AFFORDED BY CHARTER OF RIGHTS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon West with respect to the effect of the emergency planning order of May, 1981, the Prime Minister stated yesterday that the Charter of Rights affords protection to anyone whose rights are abused under the War Measures Act, the emergency planning order or anything else. The Prime Minister will be aware that the first paragraph of the constitutional resolution provides that the rights and freedoms are subject to such reasonable limits prescribed by law which can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

I ask the Prime Minister whether the War Measures Act is within the prescribed limits of Section 1 of the new Constitution, and can it in fact still operate so as to deprive Canadians of their rights under the Charter? If not, will the Prime Minister be introducing a bill in this House to repeal the provisions of the War Measures Act on the grounds that they will become unconstitutional under the new Constitution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam speaker, I honestly do not know if that is a rhetorical question. The hon. member should reflect on the fact that this kind of question will ultimately be decided by the courts. The preamble to the Charter was introduced, I seem to recall, with the support of all sides of this House precisely in order to assure that the War Measures Act or any other emergency order would not be used in a way contrary to democratic procedures in this country. Therefore I have no hesitation—well, now we have the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland wanting to get into the act.

Madam Speaker, the law speaks for itself. If the hon. member is suggesting we should delete the preamble to the Charter then I suggest he would have—his seatmate is shaking his head; he does not want that to happen. Therefore, the hon. member should realize that there is this protection in the Charter; it was put in there precisely to answer the kind of doubts the hon. member is entertaining.

DEFINITION OF WAR

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, it is that type of response which creates the confusion. Yesterday the Prime Minister led the Canadian people to believe very specifically that this Charter, and paragraph 1 thereof, would override the provisions of the emergency planning order. He now says it should be left up to the courts, which of course is the case. My submission, Madam Speaker, is that he should not delude the Canadian people.

One of the other great problems with the emergency planning order is the references to "in case of war", including the incarceration of Canadians in civilian concentration camps. While "emergency" is defined under the provisions of the planning order, "war" is not. Will the Prime Minister agree to amend that order, offensive as it is, to provide that when "war" is referred to under this order it is real war between Canada and some foreign nation, and not apprehended war?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Does the hon. member want me to say something about the cold war, too? I await his suggestions.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—POSITION OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister has to do with the uranium cartel and its prosecution. As the Prime Minister is aware, the Crown, through the Attorney General of Canada, commenced conspiracy proceedings alleging that two Crown corporations are guilty of conspiracy. Perhaps the Prime Minister is not aware of this, but presumably on the instructions of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources counsel for these two Crown corporations are making statements to the Ontario courts such as this, "The people making decisions were the Crown, and the Crown is immune." So we have the unholy spectacle on the one hand of the Attorney General launching a prosecution on behalf of the Crown, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources saying on the other hand that Crown corporations are immune. Will the Prime Minister please square the circle? Is the Crown divisible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I submit with respect that the question is prohibited under the Standing Orders of the House. This matter is now before the courts and it would be as improper for me to answer the question as it is for the hon. member to ask it. If the hon. member persists, I ask that the question be ruled out of order.

• (1500)

INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO COUNSEL

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is giving instructions to counsel representing these two Crown corporations to take the position that they are immune from prosecution.

An hon. Member: No answer.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member for Yukon have a question on House business?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes; I was waiting for the Prime Minister to reply to that last question, Madam Speaker.

I have a question for the government House leader. Could he indicate the business of the House for tomorrow and for as much of next week as he can and, if possible, even take us further?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, tomorrow we will resume debate on Bill C-97, at second reading stage of the fiscal arrangements legislation.

[Translation]

As far as next week is concerned, Monday afternoon, we shall proceed with Bill C-97 on fiscal arrangements. Following our discussions with the House leaders, it seems reasonable to set the following agenda for the remainder of next week. Monday evening, we could deal with the report stage of Bill C-88 on loans to farmers. Tuesday, we could complete third reading of Bill C-88. Wednesday, assuming that the committee report on the National Housing Act will be available, we could deal with the report stage and third reading of Bill C-89. Thursday, again assuming that the committee report on Bill C-97 on fiscal arrangements will be available, we could debate and complete the report stage of Bill C-97. Next Friday will be an opposition day, unless otherwise indicated, and on Monday of the following week, we could dispose of the third reading of Bill C-97 on fiscal arrangements.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, some time later today we will move to an allotted day. We have a motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre. I would like to ask for unanimous consent of the House to change that motion from standing in the name of the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre to standing in the name of the hon. member for Regina West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Does the House give consent to the proposal of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

MR. GREENAWAY—CHINOOK SALMON FISHERY

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by the anglers and friends of anglers of the interior of British Columbia. The purpose of the petition is to alert the Parliament of Canada to the gross injustice of the present chinook salmon fishery regulations as they apply to interior anglers, as well as the mismanagement of that fishery by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

The nature of the petition is to demand an immediate inquiry into the chinook salmon fishery management on the Fraser River and to encourage a dialogue between the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and anglers of the Lillooet area, who have long advocated better regulations in order to enhance the chinook fishery.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition, Madam Speaker, you will find it in order and that you will use the discretionary powers vested in the office of the Speaker to allow discussion and referral to the appropriate committee at the earliest possible time in order that this injustice and mismanagement be righted most expeditiously.

RECEPTIONS HELD IN MONTREAL

1. Did the government hold receptions of any kind in Montreal on November 17, 1981 up to and including November 22, 1981 and, if so (a) what department was the host (b) was the Hyatt Regency Hotel involved (c)what establishments were involved, if any (d) what was the complete cost of any function including food and alcoholic beverages and what was the breakdown under each heading?

2. (a) What was the guest list of those invited to any such receptions and what was the reason each person was invited (b) were invitations sent by special delivery and, if so, what was the total cost to the taxpayer of printing and sending out such invitations?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): 1. The Government of Canada held a reception in Montreal on November 17, 1981

(a) Fitness and Amateur Sport hosted the reception.

(b) The reception was held at the Hyatt Regency Hotel.

(c) No other establishments were involved.

(d) Food including tax and service	$5,500.00
Beverages including tax and service	$2,407.05
Decorations	$ 172.80
Staffing	$ 871.0 0
Total	$8,950.85

2. (a) The guest list included:

(i) Accredited reporters (300)

(ii) Senior members of the Canadian Football League Executive

(iii) Senior members of the Grey Cup Festival Committee

(iv) Major sponsors of the CFL, the Festival Committee of the pre-game and half-time shows

(v) Senior members of the Canadian Football teams

(vi) Politicians and select federal, provincial and municipal civil servants

Guests were invited to promote and encourage support for Canadian amateur athletes and their teams, as did the municipal and provincial governments by hosting receptions as well.

(b) Some out-of-town invitations were sent by Canada Post special delivery.

Material and printing of all invitations and envelopes	$950
200 invitations at $1.17 special delivery	$234
Total	$1,184

KU KLUX KLAN

Question No. 3,497—Mr. Cossitt:

Is it the policy of the government to be concerned with the operation in Canada of organizations preaching hate such as the Ku Klux Klan and, if so, what steps will it consider taking immediately to curb the activities of such groups that seek to promote racism and other matters not consistent with the Canadian democratic process?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): As far as the Minister of Justice is concerned, yes. The government, like the overwhelming majority of Canadians, is fundamentally opposed to the philosophy and activities of the Ku Klux Klan. Should this organization or any of its members contravene any provision of the Criminal Code, in particular those pertaining to hate propaganda (sections 281.1 to 281.3), I have asked my provincial counterparts to initiate prosecutions and I have obtained assurances to that effect.

DIAND CAPITAL FUNDING FOR EDUCATION

Question No. 3,591—Mr. Manly:

1. For the fiscal year 1981-82, were funds shifted by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development from the capital funding for education to operating and maintenance funding for education in each province and territory and, if so (a) what were the funds (b) for what reason were they transferred?

2. Were steps taken to involve Indian representatives in each province in this transfer of funding priorities and, if so, what were they?

3. What amount of the $1 million recently approved in vote 5c of the estimates for the Indian and Inuit affairs program, Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, will go to programs in the province of Alberta and what projects and activities are planned in Alberta with the funds?

4. Were steps taken to involve the Indian leadership in Alberta in these decisions and, if so, what were they?

5. Were there any requests by Indians in Alberta for supplemental education funds?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) In British Columbia, $1,470,000 was transferred from capital funding for education to operating and maintenance funding for education. These funds were for the Taché School ($810,000) and the Klappan School ($660,000).

(b) In British Columbia, construction starts were delayed pending Treasury Board approval to proceed with the projects. These delayed construction starts resulted in funds being transferred to offset operating and maintenance deficits in the education activity.

2. Both Indian bands are aware of the reasons for the delays in the construction starts and it was through consultation with Indian representatives that it was decided to shift funds from capital funding for education to operating and maintenance funding for education.

3. Of the $1.2 million recently approved in vote 5c of the estimates for the Indian and Inuit affairs program, $25,000 was for technical housing training in Alberta. The training is to provide the necessary managerial or technical skills to enable bands to successfully implement major new housing or renovation projects on reserves.

4. For concerns of this nature, the Alberta region relies on the Indian Band's policy and negotiating committee. This item was not brought before the committee by either the bands or the department as neither party thought it sufficiently important to be placed on the agenda.

5. Yes, there were requests by Indians in Alberta for supplemental education funds. These requests fall into the following categories:

Requests by Indian parents for financial assistance to meet the educational needs of their child(ren) who were enrolled in regular school from grades kindergarten to twelve;

Requests by Indian students who were under departmental sponsorship in high school, occupational skill training and university/professional educational courses;

Requests by Indian bands which administered education programs under contribution agreements, and which due to circumstances unforseen at the time the agreement was signed, required supplementary funding for an existing contribution program.

Requests by Indian bands and organizations to initiate new educational projects or new educational programs under contribution agreements which were not identified as a requirement at the commencement of the fiscal year.

Order Paper Questions

IMMIGRATION APPLICATIONS FROM POLAND

Question No. 3,676—Mr. Cossitt:

In each of the past three years, how many (a) applications (b) inquiries for immigration to Canada were received by the Canadian Embassy in Warsaw, Poland and how many visas were granted for (i) landed immigrant status (ii) visits to Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) Tabulated below is the immigration statistical information requested from the Canadian Embassy in Warsaw:

		1979	1980	1981
(i)	Immigration applications received cases/(persons)	548/(992)	532/(1,023)	819/(1,752)
	Immigration visas issued	474	477	1,249
(ii)	Visitor visa applications received	10,675	11,576	13,913
	Visitor visas issued	7,592	7,928	9,852
	Visitor visas refused	701	417	483

The apparent discrepancy between the total for visitor visa applications received and the total for visa decisions rendered is based on the large number of withdrawals or cancellations of applications due largely to applicants' change in plans and/or difficulty in securing travel documents.

(b) The Canadian Embassy in Warsaw does not record inquiries by subject matter. For statistical purposes applications received are treated as immigration inquiries.

PUBLIC SERVICE SALARIES

Question No. 3,683—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of total public service salaries is paid for (a) pensions (b) paid vacations and holidays (c) paid rest periods (d) unemployment insurance (e) sick leave (f) life and health insurance and payments in lieu of (g) workers compensation (h) productivity and other bonuses (i) other benefits?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): The table below shows the cost of the benefits listed as a percentage of Public Service salaries:

		Per cent
(a)	pensions (including Canada/Quebec pension plans)	12.20
(b)	paid vacations and holidays	10.80[1]
(c)	paid rest periods	5.14[1]
(d)	unemployment insurance	1.79
(e)	sick leave	3.40[1]
(f)	life and health insurance and payments in lieu of	1.62
(g)	workers compensation	0.55
(h)	productivity and other bonuses[2]	0.01
(i)	other benefits[3]	7.33

[1] These benefits do not involve cash disbursement above the employee's basic salary.
[2] Include suggestion, merit and long service awards.
[3] Include such benefits as overtime, severance pay.

CANADA-SOVIET UNION PROTOCOL ON CONSULTATIONS

Question No. 3,752—Mr. MacKay:

1. Is the Canada-U.S.S.R. Protocol on Consultations signed in Moscow on May 19, 1971 by the Prime Minister and the Chairman of the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers still in force?

2. Were there periodic meetings between Canada and the U.S.S.R. provided for in article 1 of the protocol and, if so, in each case (a) what was the (i) time of the meetings (ii) level of participants (iii) topic on the agenda (b) what were any agreements reached?

3. Did the government make contact with the government of the U.S.S.R. in accordance with the provisions of article 2 of the protocol, in relation to the situation arising out of the invasion of Afghanistan by Soviet troops and in relation to the imposition of martial law in Poland, and (a) if so, in each case, what were the details (b) if not, what was the reason for inaction?

4. Were there consultations between the government and the U.S.S.R. provided for in article 5 of the protocol and, if so, in each case (a) what was the (i) time of the consultations (ii) level of Canadian representation (iii) topic of the consultations (b) what were any agreements reached?

5. Did the government consider renouncing the protocol at any time after the invasion of Afghanistan by Soviet troops and/or after the declaration of martial law in Poland?

6. Is it government policy to inform its allies in NATO about consultations, negotiations and representations by the parties to the protocol?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. Meetings between Canada and the U.S.S.R. undertaken in the spirit of the Protocol on Consultations have occurred on a number of occasions. These meetings however are not invoked under the direct authority of the protocol nor was this intended. The purpose of the protocol is to provide a framework for the development of a dialogue with the U.S.S.R. on issues of mutual interest or international importance. A list is provided of those occasions when consultations were held within the context of the protocol.

Date	Level	Topic	Agreements Reached
October, 1971	Prime Ministers	Bilateral and International Relations	Canada/U.S.S.R. General Exchanges Agreement
September, 1973	Foreign Ministers	"	None
November, 1973	Foreign Ministers	"	None
September, 1974	Foreign Ministers	"	None
September, 1975	Foreign Ministers	"	None
July, 1976	Senior Officials	"	None
March, 1977	Senior Officials	"	None
April, 1979	Senior Officials	"	None
September, 1979	Foreign Ministers	"	None
November, 1979	Senior Officials	"	None
September, 1981	Foreign Ministers	"	None

3. Following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the government raised its deep concerns on this issue directly with the Soviet government on several occasions, the latest of which was last September when the Secretary of State for External Affairs met Foreign Minister Gromyko in New York. Canadian views on Poland were also discussed at that time. The two governments, however, have not invoked article 2 of the protocol at any time.

4. Article 5 of the protocol refers to consultations in general and therefore the response to question 2 applies.

5. The government did not consider renouncing the protocol either after the invasion of Afghanistan nor in connection with recent events in Poland. The government believes that in times of crisis it is better to preserve the existing mechanisms for dialogue rather than creating additional barriers to the important process of East-West communication.

6. Regular consultations and exchanges of information with Canada's allies are routine and ongoing. Therefore, when appropriate, we do not hesitate to exchange information on negotiations or consultations we have undertaken with the U.S.S.R. if the information is of importance and relevance to our allies.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 3,278 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 3,278 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SOLAR HEATING

Question No. 3,278—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With regard to the answer to question No. 2,754 which stated in part that "over 5,000 systems" for solar heating of hot water for washing purposes would be installed in the next four years by 14 government departments and 15 Crown corporations, what is a list of the locations of all the installations and how is the expense of $125 million justified to provide alternative methods of heating water to wash hands?

2. (a) Did the government ever make a study as to what the savings in energy would be (b) how long will it take to recover the program costs of $125 million?

3. Does the government anticipate the cost will rise above $125 million and has it made any allowances in this regard?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

Madam Speaker: Today is the final allotted day. The House will go through the usual procedures this evening to consider and dispose of the supply bills. However, in view of the recent practices, would the House agree that the bills should be distributed now?

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I did not hear your remarks at the beginning of your statement. Would Your Honour repeat them?

Madam Speaker: This being the final allotted day, the House will go through the usual procedures tonight. However, what I ask hon. members is whether they agree, according to the usual practice, that the bills be distributed right now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House agrees. It is so ordered.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

That this House condemns the government for

a) proceeding to abandon the Crowsnest Pass freight rate;

b) failing to implement the recommendations of the Hall Royal Commission; and

c) failing to nationalize CP Limited and build a modern, integrated transportation system to create jobs, develop the economy, and enhance national unity.

He said: Madam Speaker, throughout the entire history of our country, the people of Canada have carried on an exercise in co-operative federalism in sharing the costs of running our economy, and particularly transportation, in all regions of the country. One can start in the Atlantic provinces, where we shared—with the people there—the costs of moving the agricultural, processed and manufactured goods within the Atlantic provinces to central Canada. We willingly agreed to tariffs to protect the manufacturing industries in central Canada, and those costs have been shared by all Canadians. We agreed to share in the costs of construction of massive infrastructure for the aircraft industry and the St. Lawrence Seaway. We also agreed to share in the costs of transporting some agricultural production out of western Canada to export position. I call it co-operative federalism. In our terms, it is a foundation of a co-operative commonwealth.

A number of myths have been perpetrated and emphasized by those who would like to do away with the Crowsnest Pass or statutory grain rates. I would like to spend a few minutes in dissolving those myths. The first one is that the railways lose money hauling grain. They have never lost money hauling grain. They have received full payment, both directly and indirectly, since the first railway was built.

I want to illustrate by using the figures for the year 1980 in which, at most, the railways lost $10 million hauling grain. If one uses the formula devised by Mr. Snavely in his third report, under the terms of reference ordered by the minister, the railways' costs for hauling grain for 1980 amounted to $671 million. That included a 25 per cent return on investment; it included $123 million of add-on profit; the revenues received by the railroads using the Snavely commission, Transport Canada estimates and publics accounts, amounted to $538 million. Mr. Speaker, they got $132 million from the grain producers; they got $193 million from branch line subsidies; they got $70 million from branch line rehabilitation; they got $4 million in boxcar repairs; and $9 million in hopper car lease; and $116 million saved them in interest charges on the hopper cars purchased by the various governments from the Canadian Wheat Board. Mr. Speaker, they have been fully compensated. That is the case in almost every year you want to look at. Certainly it is the case in every year that I have looked at.

The minister complains that the grain producers pay only 20 per cent of the cost of hauling grain. Why is he picking just on the grain producers? Using the same Snavely formula, cost recovery on hauling grain would be 46 per cent. On the St. Lawrence Seaway cost recovery is only 20 per cent, using the Snavely formula. On the National Harbours Board the cost recovery is 43 per cent, using the Snavely formula. On our highways and roads system, using the Snavely formula, cost recovery is 32 per cent. For Mirabel airport, the cost recovery is 14 per cent; and for Pickering it is only 2 per cent.

Why the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) chooses to pick on the grain producers, when everyone else gets subsidies as large or larger, is beyond me. It has been said that the Crow rate is an unfair transportation subsidy. Well, of the $2.4 billion in transportation subsidies, $277 million went to grain movement; $971 million went for air subsidies; $335 million for marine; and over $500 million for VIA Rail.

Mr. Pepin: Wrong figures for air.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the minister picks on the grain producers. May I also remind the House that one of the main items of logic towards keeping the Crowsnest grain rate for grain producers is that it allows the grain producer to compete in the international market. The United States grain producers have access to massive inland water systems, entirely built, paid for and operated by the public of that country. That allows them the cheapest form of transportation for most of the grain near the Missouri, Ohio and Mississippi River systems and in some of their canal systems. It allows them to put the grain into export position at a lower cost.

The Argentine raises almost all its grain within 300 or 400 miles of salt water and for the longer distances of their grain haul the Argentine government pays all of the transportation costs. Australia produces most of its grain within 200 or 300 miles of export position. Since this country as a whole, all of Canada, benefits to the tune of four billion or five billion a year in a foreign exchange benefit, surely it is only fair that the nation as a whole share in the cost of getting that grain to export position, just as we share in the cost of transporting goods out of Atlantic Canada or in Atlantic Canada, just as we share in the cost of building airports, seaways and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, this is myth No. 2: grain is a main roadblock to increased western grain capacity. Everyone agrees that rail capacity in western Canada has to be increased and will require a massive investment of many billions of dollars. To lay the blame for that lack of capacity on grain producers is both unfair and unreasonable. Mr. Speaker, "It ain't wheat, it's coal". The department's own figures show that by 1986 or 1987 only about 14 per cent of that capacity will be required for grain; the rest will be for coal, potash, sulphur and other products like that.

An hon. Member: Canadian Pacific coal.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a strange feeling, a suspicion, that there are some companies and bureaucrats slobbering outside the door of the Minister of Transport, waiting to get some action going on the coal blocks held by the Government of Canada. Canadian Pacific was required to cede 50,000 acres to the federal government by 1904. Several federal departments and the government of British Columbia have been bickering about it. The reserve on those lands was 7.8 billion tons, and if you multiply that by $60 to $100 a ton, you have enough revenue to goldplate the rails all the way to the Pacific Coast. The government holds rights under the Crowsnest Pass Agreement Act for 50,000 acres of coal-bearing land in southern British Columbia. The development of those coal blocks is not possible without revocation of the Crowsnest Pass Agreement Act, the legislation which limits prices for the sale of this coal to $2 per ton. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is why the minister and his cohorts say that Crow must go—"It ain't just wheat, it's coal."

Mr. Speaker, myth No. 3: raising grain freight rates will result in increased livestock production and processing in western Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, does anyone really believe, is anyone under the delusion, that the massive livestock and dairy industry in Ontario, in southern British Columbia, the hog and dairy and livestock industry in Quebec and Atlantic Canada, are going to hold still for something like a $20-a-ton increase in their cost for feed grain? I doubt very much that Quebec or Ontario would hold still for that. I am pretty certain that the federal government will be the first in line to pay some subsidies to recover the increased cost of feed grains for the benefit of those feeders, livestock producers and dairy producers in eastern Canada and in British Columbia.

Mr. Pepin: Give the westerners a chance.

Mr. Benjamin: It is a delusion suffered by the cattlemen, by what I call the Texas cowboy syndrome, that they have been suffering in southern Alberta and Saskatchewan for many years. If they were so right, I cannot understand why most of the packing industry pulled out of western Canada; if they had such a good advantage, why didn't they stay?

• (1520)

The statutory grain rates are so fundamental to our history, our economy, the strengthening of confederation and national unity that even the slightest consideration to requiring grain producers in western Canada to pay more can be called nothing less than a betrayal and traitorous. Those who want to destroy the statutory grain rates for our grain producers are the ones who started the row in the first place. It was not the grain producers who raised the issue. I think the first occasion it was raised was in Winnipeg in the mid-seventies by a former minister of transport.

With them are the railroads naturally, although I do not think they particularly care where the money comes from as long as they get it. Who else supported the destruction of the statutory grain rates for western grain producers? This minister and his two predecessors wanted them changed. Naturally the cattlemen's association, the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange, some of the specialty crop raisers whose grain does not come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board—

Mr. Pepin: What about the Government of Alberta?

Mr. Benjamin: The minister raises the Government of Alberta. I am glad he did. We will be able to use that in the coming weeks. We can also use some quotes from Conservative Members of Parliament, but I will not belabour the House with that today. There are two provincial governments, the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities, the cow-calf operators of western Canada, the National Farmers' Union and, no question about it, the majority of the membership of the Saskatchewan wheat pool want the Crowsnest rates kept for our grain producers.

Why the government would even consider flying in the face of what was said by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall is beyond me. It is the most definitive study ever done on the principle of statutory rates, particularly those that apply to grain. I remind the House that if the statutory rates for grain can be tampered with and increased, it will automatically lead to raising, if not cancelling, the maritime freight rate subsidies.

If our prairie grain producers have to pay by 1987 what Mr. Snavely calls for, 5.1 times the Crow, that means a cut in net farm income of 36 per cent. Farmers will have less income to spend on the purchase of trucks, tractors, fertilizer, sprays and other supplies. It could mean the loss of another 51,000 jobs for Canadians, many of them in the industrial heartland of this country.

The government should make these investments in increased western rail line capacity, but in return for those investments it should obtain equity. How much more do we have to give the railroads in order for them to carry out or have the capability of carrying out their responsibilities? Canadian National has had over $2 billion of its bonded indebtedness taken off its books and transferred to the books of Canada, making the people of Canada the only shareholders in that corporation. As a result, Canadian National has been relieved of paying anywhere from $30 million to $100 million a year in interest charges on that debt. Our shares in Canadian National are an investment which have returned great benefits to this country.

Canadian Pacific is a similar case. It is not only just the millions of acres of land given to them along with the mineral rights from 1881 on, it is also the cash they were given. As a result of those benefits, the investments they made to develop subsidiary companies have returned to them billions of dollars. This has more than compensated for any alleged loss in moving western grain.

Since 1881 we have provided Canadian Pacific with billions of dollars in annual subsidies. In fact, during most of the decade of the sixties, had it not been for federal government subsidies, Canadian Pacific would have shown net losses. This was at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada.

We in this party say that if you are going to provide capital and put it into either Canadian National or Canadian Pacific, it is not unreasonable to get equity in return for that investment. I agree it would only be a paper entry in terms of any funds given to Canadian National. It would just increase the shares we own. In the case of Canadian Pacific, it is money the minister suggests will have to be spent over the next four or five years. If we obtained equity in return for that capital, the people of Canada would own 20 per cent of the shares of Canadian Pacific Limited, which means control of Canadian Pacific.

I do not know of any private enterpriser who would agree to put capital into a company without getting equity in return. I have never heard of such a thing, but that has been perpetuated by successive national governments since 1881. To compound the felony, when you look at Snavely's third report, he not only wants them guaranteed a 25 per cent return on investment plus another 22½ per cent add-on profit, but he includes in that investment the CPR mainline track from Port Moody to Kamloops, which was built entirely by the taxpayers of Canada, to be turned over to Canadian Pacific at no cost. Mr. Snavely says that Canadian Pacific should get a 25 per cent return on that investment. That is not equitable, it is robbery.

I do not understand why the minister would resist taking equity in Canadian Pacific Limited. There has certainly never been any objection to taking equity in other corporations in this country. Having equity gives you some say as well as control in the operation of that system. In conclusion, I remind the House that this issue is so basic to confederation that anyone who tries to tamper with it does so at their peril.

We also welcome what I believe to be the unanimous support of the members of the official opposition, albeit reluctantly by some who had to be dragged, kicking and screaming, into it. We welcome the support of the Saskatchewan Progressive Conservatives, albeit reluctantly on the part of their leader, who said that two thirds of the grain producing farmers must go. Of course, we welcome the support of the Saskatchewan Liberal Party, which is led by a former member of this House. I hope that the minister will add that name to the list of those who want to keep the Crowsnest Pass rate for the producers.

If it is proven through whatever formula is chosen that the railways are losing money hauling grain, we would not object to the railroads being paid the difference between the compensatory rate and the Crow rate. We would insist that it go directly to the railroads and that the money must be invested in the railway plants. The rates would continue on the basis of maintaining the statutory rates for the grain producers, equal rates for equal distance and no variable rates. We also say that if there are any proven losses, that is a separate matter. If the government and the Parliament of Canada decides that those proven losses should be made up to the railroads, then let us do so by all means.

It is not necessary to change the statutory grain rates. It is only a matter of making a decision in the public interest to make up that difference directly to the railroads as is done in so many other areas. If user-pay was applied, no one could afford to fly, drive a car, ride the bus or put a boat in the Seaway. If you are to have full cost recovery, it would be necessary to double and triple current air fares as well as raise the marine rates so high that no shipping concerns would wish to enter our ports, let alone the Seaway.

To return to my opening remarks, this is how we share the costs of our nationhood. Surely that is fair and civilized and demonstrates how we can treat one another decently and civilly. It shows how we can keep a united country. It is not just a question of whether the farmer is paying 18 cents or 20 cents a bushel to ship his grain; it is whether or not Canadians are paying for the cost of keeping the nation united through co-operation, trust and fairness.

I believe that the single issue of statutory grain rates has much greater ramifications. The consequences not only concern grain producers in the three prairie provinces; it means much more to the whole country. I hope that the minister will decide to keep the statutory grain rates in place and that any additional funds required, for the two railways in particular, for capital investment in western transportation in return for equity and any operating subsidy required will be continued, but that money given to the railways for branch lines, branch line rehabilitation and interest charges saved on hopper cars and other equipment will be counted in those subsidies. Only then can additional moneys be expended for the full recovery of operating costs.

I do not know what else I can say in order to persuade the minister and the government that this is the wrong course of action and will cause irreparable damage to our nation, particularly western Canada. Although this issue may not be significant enough to contribute to the destruction of Canada, it merits the necessity for Canadians to work together again in sharing the cost of what is a fundamental necessity for Canada.

I hope members who speak after me during this debate will delve into other aspects of the argument. I also hope that members opposite will study the issue from the different aspects which I have mentioned, namely, the sharing of the cost of running the country and keeping our western grain producers in particular in a competitive position with other producers in the international grain trade. This area is so crucial to our entire economy that I submit it cannot be ignored.

Although we cannot have a vote on this resolution, it is my hope that the House will agree that the motion is valid. With that agreement I think we could go a long way to accomplish much more during this session of Parliament.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who preceded me indicated that this is a debate about a view of the nation. I agree with him on that. There is no question that what we are debating here today are two very different perspectives of where Canada should be heading. On the one hand, we hear a plea from the NDP to keep the status quo. We hear a plea for the past, a plea for retrenchment, a plea for reaction and regression. The NDP want us to hold the line. They do not want us to make any changes or to have any vision. They want to hunker down in their corner and protect the old traditions of the past.

Mr. Benjamin: You did not listen, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: We are prepared to put forward a vision of the future, one that sees opportunity and progress in the prairies.

Mr. Blaikie: Visions of the CPR is not a vision of the future.

Mr. Axworthy: I will get to the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) very soon because I want to address remarks to his constituents, especially in view of the stand he has taken. We want to have a vision which provides an opportunity for the prairies to divesify. We are talking about a new industrial strategy and vision for western Canada where there will be the opportunity to diversify the economy, redress the grievances of the past and bring about a stability and growth in that economy which will place the western region at the forefront of economic growth in Canada. We are not prepared to buy the argument proposed by the NDP and their counterparts is Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nystrom: And Ralph Goodale.

Mr. Axworthy: Their argument is based upon fabrication. We saw what trouble they had in question period when they were fumbling with the facts. We know how loose and goosey they are with the facts—anything to get 15 seconds on the evening news. What we have over in the corner opposite is Canada's great fog machine. All they can produce is a great cloud which completely shrouds the truth. They are not capable of understanding the reality of the situation.

I am afraid that the New Democratic Party caucus has been too busy reading the fiction produced by the NDP in Saskatchewan. Mr. MacMurchy, the great ad man, is travelling around the country from town to town and meeting to meeting, taking his shoe off and banging on the desk, claiming all sorts of wild and totally unbelievable claims about the proposal that we made for the Crow rate. The claim is that we are going to get rid of the Crow and that that will cost western farmers 13 times the present cost.

It seems that members of the New Democratic Party are not very good at arithmetic. We have known that for many years, but they seem to have come to a mental block when it comes to dealing with the Crow affair. What we are talking about is a commitment by this government to an additional $600 million per year in perpetuity in terms of the statutory grain rate. I did not hear the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) talk about that. He conveniently forgot that fact, just as Mr. MacMurchy seems to forget about it. We are not talking about doing away with the Crow; we are talking about a major commitment by the federal government to establish a new statutory rate to which we will contribute six hundred million additional dollars per year.

It seems incredible that in a debate which is so serious and important to the growth and development of our region in western Canada and to the prospects of this country, members of the New Democratic Party are not prepared to deal with what is real, what is true and what is fact. They seem to have blocked their vision, and we know why. They have a certain base and constituency, and what we are seeing is the evolution of the NDP into the real reactionaries of the west. They are the people who are incapable of thinking in progressive terms. They are not swimming with the stream of the new generation of westerners who are trying to develop a new basis for enterprise and entrepreneurship in the west, who want to develop industry and new processing plants, create new work for the railroads and develop new centres of research. Members of the New Democratic Party are not interested in that. They are interested in harking back to the brave old days of the 1920s and the Regina manifesto. Those were the halcyon days when they were going to create a magical crusade, the children's crusade of Canada. It is unfortunate because this debate is too important for Canadians to be ground into the prairie dust with that kind of fiction.

The fact is we are debating something which could be one of the most important investments this country could make in its future. We are talking about one of the largest megaprojects. We are talking about $13 billion of investment in a brand new and modern transportation system which not only will provide for a substantial increase in capacity to move goods to market but also increase the agricultural output of the west by $2 billion in 1990. It will also provide for a wide variety of new jobs and employment in western Canada.

I sit here with some interest watching members of the New Democratic Party from Manitoba and the city ridings of Winnipeg. They seem to ignore, for example, the study which was put forward by the city council of Winnipeg. That is not a one-sided body. On that council are members of all parties.

Mr. Blaikie: The council is run by the ICEC, and you know it.

Mr. Axworthy: The Winnipeg city council pointed out that one of the most serious drawbacks to the development of manufacturing in the city of Winnipeg has been the existing Crow rate. The council also talked about the closings of the Swift plants in St. Boniface, Edmonton and Regina being the direct result of existing grain rates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Hon. members say that is not true. I have the study here; I will be glad to table it for hon. members. Perhaps members of the New Democratic Party are not interested in listening to facts or listening to the Winnipeg city council.

Mr. Blaikie: We are.

Mr. Axworthy: All they want to do is yell. They have very loud voices, and I suppose they enjoy listening to the echoes in the echo chambers between their ears. They are not prepared to accept the facts. I want the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill to go back to his riding and tell his railway workers that he is prepared to give up 2,000 additional jobs for railway workers in Manitoba because of his stand on the Crow rate.

Mr. Blaikie: Nothing to do with it.

Mr. Axworthy: I want the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—

Mr. Blaikie: Come up and run against me. You run in Winnipeg-Birds Hill and we will see.

Mr. Axworthy: We will be glad to run a good candidate against the hon. member. We want him to tell his railway workers—

Mr. Blaikie: Any time you want.

Mr. Axworthy: Aren't they getting excited, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Blaikie: Resign and we will have a by-election.

Mr. Axworthy: We have obviously plunged the needle into their veins because they certainly are spouting a lot of blood on the floor of the House of Commons. We can always tell when members of the New Democratic Party hurt because they bleat. They are bleating very loud and long this afternoon.

The fact is that what we are talking about is an opportunity to develop major new manufacturing in western Canada, to develop employment for tens of thousands of westerners, and to provide the opportunity to increase substantially and enhance our agricultural products, livestock, grain processing and grain production itself.

We are talking about a vision of the future. We are talking about the willingness of this government to take a stand and to open a debate in western Canada and across Canada on one of the most important items which will lead to the development of the economy of this country and the economy of the west.

Mr. Blaikie: Let's have public hearings.

Mr. Axworthy: We are very pleased and proud that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been prepared to take that stand. He has received the endorsements of a wide variety of western groups for his stand.

It seems that the members of the New Democratic Party are afraid of dialogue. That is the great party of democracy. In the House hon. members are always asking that we get into debate.

Mr. Blaikie: Public hearings.

Mr. Axworthy: They are afraid to get into an honest consultation whereby farm groups have the opportunity to sit down and put their points of view on the table and look at what they can produce in our economy. No one is going to cook the books for them. They can come to Dr. Gilson, present their facts and figures and talk about what is really taking place. Out of that will come a report and recommendation which will then be debated in the House of Commons. What could be a clearer, more open process of policy making than that?

But members of the New Democratic Party are afraid of that process, and I know why. They are afraid of what it will show. It will show that the kind of conventional shibboleth on which they have been hanging their hats for years will be proved false and wrong. It will show that they are simply captives of the past and that their stand is not one which will promote the progress in which we in western Canada are interested.

Over the past year the western affairs cabinet committee has spent many months meeting with a wide variety of western groups. That committee met with literally hundreds of westerners who spoke to ministers on the committee. The committee met with these people in private and in the open to discuss the economic future of western Canada. One message came through loud and clear, and that is that we must modernize the transportation system. We must have a transportation system which can move our grain and our commodities. We must have a system of rates which allows for proper manufacturing and processing in the west. We must have a transportation system which guarantees the future of western Canada.

That is the basis upon which all our history is founded. There was no disagreement about that. There was certainly disagreement about the different methods which might be used and the different formulae which could be proposed.

It is for that reason that we have recommended—and our cabinet colleagues accepted it—that the next step in that process should be dialogue and consultation to arrive at what the proper formula should be. No one was prepared to take the first step, so one of the major commitments this government made was to put $1.3 billion on the table as our commitment to western Canada and to the modernization of the transportation system. We realized we were not going to move this debate off dead centre, where it had been for years, unless someone was prepared to put hard money on the line and was prepared to make a major investment, a major commitment of large amounts of money to the improvement, expansion and modernization of our transportation system. That is what we did through the western fund. That is the kind of commitment this government has now made, and that has broken the log jam. We are now in a position where the parties are prepared to talk. The result of consultations right across the west is that people are prepared to come to the table to present their cases and offer their different formulae.

The NFU and the NDP, those two brothers of blindness, are not prepared to enter into that kind of debate and discussion.

Mr. Nystrom: What about Ralph Goodale?

Mr. Blaikie: What about the Liberals in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Axworthy: The NFU and the NDP are not prepared to enter into that discussion. By the very fact that they are entering into that consultation westerners are showing that they are interested in the future and that they are not listening to the siren calls of the NDP federal caucus, which is simply out of step, out of tune and out of time.

The whole point of this debate is to talk about a different kind of future. It is important that we clear up much of the mythology the NDP is trying to conjure up with respect to this matter. Mr. MacMurchy is running around Saskatchewan, as are his colleagues in his caucus, saying that the federal government is going to introduce variable rates, and everyone gets all excited about that. The Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have said very clearly in Saskatchewan that if westerners do not want variable rates, they will not have them. It is up to them to go to Dr. Gilson and present their case for or against this. If it is the decision of westerners not to have variable rates, they do not have to have them.

We hear the NDP claim that this will ruin rural life in western Canada, that it will have the effect of a wrecking crew in small towns. The authority cited by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) was Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, who pointed out in his study that the primary reason that small towns are being ruined in western Canada is because of the actions of the provincial governments—the new road systems, electrification and all the other programs such as the centralization of the school system. If one examines the reasons for change in the small towns and rural life in the west, it will be seen that they have little to do with changing the Crow rate. The provincial governments are responsible because they brought about the changes. That is the basis of Judge Emmett Hall's report, and he is the man who is quoted as the great authority on railway rates. He should be an equal authority on the impact of those rates on the small towns and rural life of western Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, would the minister accept a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the minister want to accept a question?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to accept a question if I have time at the end of my presentation. I could ask the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill how he can justify to his constituents the loss of several thousands—

Mr. Blaikie: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Axworthy: There are a lot of important questions, and for answers to some of them we must look to those ostriches of the past who dug their heads in the prairie gumbo, unwilling and uncaring about the future. Talk about gophers and groundhogs, Mr. Speaker! Members of that party opposite have not seen the light of day for years.

What we are talking about is the necessity to deal with this question in western Canada on the basis of facts and realism. We are not talking about getting rid of variable rates. We are not talking about ruining small town life either. What we are talking about is the kind of investment that the producers of western Canada have been requesting for years. We are talking about the kind of investment that will restore the urban centres of western Canada to their pre-eminence as transportation centres. We are talking about the creation of employment across Canada, from the steel mills in Sydney to the locomotive shops in Quebec and Ontario and the major urban centres of western Canada. The change in the Crow rate will have multiple benefits for every community across Canada. It will create employment.

The NDP hawk their wares daily. They say, "Create more employment, create more jobs and invest in the country". What we are doing is changing the Crow rate to provide for one of the most important and critical investments that will create employment for tens of thousands of Canadians. Members of that party cannot be so hypocritical as to argue out of both sides of their mouths at the same time and expect Canadians to believe them. They will be found out after a while. They tell their constituents in Saskatchewan that they defend the Crow, and then they come down here and tell eastern workers that they are trying to create more employment for them. Why do they not go to the workers in Sydney, London, parts of Quebec, Winnipeg and Regina and say that they are trying to create more employment by standing against any change in the Crow rate, which would bring about a substantial investment of $13 billion in western Canada in the next few years and thus provide countless man-hours of employment in a variety of industries?

How can they try to get away with such duplicity? Their attitude is beyond belief. It is one of the greatest acts of piracy that we have ever seen in this House. They are trying to conjure up in the minds of westerners the idea that this is something that will deprive them of their birthright. Westerners have been asking for a fully developed, diversified economy as part of their birthright, one that is not based only upon raw materials but one that involves a variety of industrial enterprises and thus will not be subject to the cycles of resource markets but, rather, will provide a stable pattern of employment.

We offer an opportunity to put that in place in western Canada. We offer a system that will have enormous impact upon our export markets. It will not only provide an almost $2 billion increase in the export market for raw grain producers, but will provide a wide variety of new markets for processed materials such as oil seeds. Why are the canola crushers so anxious for this change? Why are the commodity producers so anxious for it? It is because they realize that for years they have been deprived of the opportunity of making their case and establishing a firm investment pattern in all regions of the country.

I return the plea of the hon. member for Regina East. If he is prepared to deal with this issue with a sense of honesty, a sense of realism and a sense of the progress which his party says it believes in, then I would ask him to change his position on the Crow rate. He should be prepared to help westerners enter into consultation, to engage in the kind of co-operative approach and participation that we offer so that we can reach a solution that is fully reflective of all issues. We want the inner few at that table. We want all the farm groups there and all interests to be represented. We would ask the NDP to use their good offices with the Saskatchewan government, with the pools and with the inner few to get them to participate and find the best answers for the west and for our transportation system. Rather than raising the flags of negativism and opposition, let them recognize this as a real opportunity for the west to develop fully its economic position.

We return the plea, Mr. Speaker. We have opened up the debate and dialogue and we are prepared to make a major investment in western Canada. We are prepared to enter into wide-based consultation with all groups and all kinds of interests. It is up to members of this House from every party to see that this takes place and it is particularly up to western members of the opposition to use their good offices to ensure that the debate is founded on facts, on figures that are real and not fabricated, on premises that are true, not fiction. They have a responsibility and an obligation to their constituents in western Canada to ensure that such negotiation takes place. If they persist in simply trying to distort, twist, hide and cover the necessity for the modernization of our transportation system, they are doing a serious disservice to all Canadians.

We return the plea to the NDP and ask that they get on the right track and begin thinking of progress in the country. We ask them to help develop a proper, new statutory rate that will benefit producers and westerners alike.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on a point of order.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, is there some time left in the minister's allotment and, if so, would he permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the minister accept a question?

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, when the minister was speaking of the NFU and the NDP being blind brothers together in this struggle to preserve the statutory rate, I wonder why he left out the Liberal Party of Saskatchewan? Given his supposed interest in the facts, why was this particular fact not brought to the attention of the House in his speech?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to correct the record for the hon. member. The Liberal Party in Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia endorsed the Crow rate resolution. We met last Friday with the leader of the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan to discuss it and cleared up many of his concerns. He was also buying some of the propaganda put out by Mr. MacMurchy in Saskatchewan about the variable rates.

In western Canada two governments support the change as well as the western Liberal Party. We hope that if the NDP go back and talk to their own brethren in Saskatchewan they will come on board as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my time is limited but I want to open my remarks by observing that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) does not know what a service he has done Mr. Goodale and his political pursuits in Saskatchewan. He knows not what he has done! I think he demonstrated one thing during this debate, and that is that while he may have obtained a new pair of glasses, he still cannot see what the issues in western Canada are and he is doing a disservice to western Canadians in promoting this particular policy.

A lot of people are watching this debate today and a lot of people will read about it. They may be a little mystified by some of the antics that have taken place today. There has been a lot of yelling back and forth between the Liberals and the NDP. People may be a little surprised about that because, as the Canadian public knows, the philosophy of the two parties is very similar. They support very much the same issues and on many important issues they stand together, like Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

• (1600)

There is a story which I think is probably true about Noah's ark. The story is similar to the relationship we see between the NDP and the Liberal party. The New Democratic Party supported the Liberal government on 19 different confidence motions. It supported the government through thick and thin on every important issue. We remember when the leader of the New Democratic Party said that the constitutional document is a very civilized one. He stood four-square behind the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on this particular issue. On important economic issues, such as defeating our government on its budget which would have resulted in progress for the country, the NDP and the Liberal party were together. They are together on every issue. By the time I finish my comments today, I hope to demonstrate precisely what is happening with respect to this issue.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I only have 20 minutes. If I have time remaining at the end of my remarks, I would be glad to do so.

In any event, at the time of the flood there were two animals of every species on Noah's ark. Noah was somewhat concerned with respect to the cats. In order to ensure that there was no hanky-panky between the cats, he decided to put two animals to watch. He chose the two giraffes because they had long necks. He said to the giraffes, "Now, you watch to make sure that nothing happens here which might increase the number of passengers, because we have a full load". Well, after 40 days, the platform came down and off came the animals two-by-two, except for the kittens. There were 19 of them following the two cats. Noah said to one of the giraffes, "I thought I put you in charge of this; you were supposed to watch what was happening". He said, "I am sorry, Noah, I thought they were just fighting"!

That is exactly what we have on the floor of the House of Commons—the NDP and the Liberal Party pretend to fight, but they are together on so many issues.

Canadians will understand, particularly with respect to this item, that statements have been made by spokesmen on behalf of the New Democratic Party which indicate that it was prepared to negotiate an end to statutory Crow rate. On the basis of statements made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, we now know that the Crow rate will be axed. It is not worthy of being axed, but it will be axed to the detriment of western Canadians. If this is allowed to go through, I fear it will be the end of a way of life for our farmers. I submit it will mean the end of the family farm.

In 1977 the Hall commission made two significant and fundamental recommendations. The first was the retention of the Crowsnest statutory rate, and the second was that the difference between the statutory rate and the cost of transporting grain would be paid directly to the railways. To ask western Canadian producers to pay commercial rates for hauling grain is to ignore an historical and statutory right, to ignore the competitive realities of the marketplace and to ignore the natural and artificial advantages of competing countries.

I am glad to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) present in the House because I should like to give him some advice. I ask him to change his advisers who set up the place of meeting to discuss the Crow rate in Saskatchewan. He went to the town of Delisle which is a great town in my constituency. Whoever was the Liberal adviser who told the minister to go to Delisle, Saskatchewan, should receive the golden finger award. The minister was sent to the hotbed of people who were very much opposed to his position. Last fall I attended a barbecue with 1,000 other people. The minister went there to meet with 1,000 farmers and he was barbecued.

Mr. Pepin: I was on ice!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is right, the minister was put on ice. I am very serious about this issue. I am sorry that the western representative in cabinet has taken such a position on this very important issue. As I say, Canadian grain producers must meet the competition of the international marketplace. They purchase their inputs in a Canadian marketplace which is protected to some extent. Any increase in freight costs will result in an automatic reduction of their earnings. Any reduction will impact upon the industry as a whole and particularly upon those who are dependent upon it.

On a more basic level, this situation for westerners, particularly those in my province of Saskatchewan, is very much like the situation in respect of the language rights of residents of the province of Quebec. It was part of the confederation package between Canada and the prairie provinces; it is the prairie Magna Carta. I ask hon. members from all parts of Canada to remember this in the months and weeks to come. We came to the bargaining table with different needs and aspirations. We have a collective duty to protect the rights won by the respective partners to this great pact. This plan sounds the death knell for untold numbers of rural communities and, in general, for the rural way of life.

Many hon. members in the House will not understand the social and cultural fabric of the west and how important it is to westerners. Many will not understand how vulnerable it is to destruction from economic forces at work at this time. Western Canadian producers cannot afford any increase in the Crow rate. Next year farm income will drop by 15 per cent. Farm costs will rise by 25 per cent in 1982, after a 63 per cent increase over the last two years and 89 per cent over just one three-year period. Where does that massive increase go? Well, 55 per cent to 60 per cent of that money goes into the hands of the federal government. Massive amounts of money, possibly $51 billion, will flow out of the west in the next five years. Aside from those figures, the cost of maintaining the Crow to the federal government is paltry.

I am appalled at the lack of respect the federal government has shown the producers of western Canada in moving to change the Crow when there is substantial and fundamental opposition. I cannot understand the Prime Minister coming to the city of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, and saying that the people protesting against a change in the Crow rate are uninformed. I represent those supposedly uninformed people and I will take their attitude over that of the Prime Minister any time. What did he say when he arrived in Saskatoon? He was asked a question about the statutory rate. In his response he said that the government cannot please all the people all the time, everywhere on everything. He said that he had yet to go to an open rally in a province where someone has not said, "Why should we pay the shot?" Here it happens to be prairie farmers and "big deal", says the Prime Minister. What kind of attitude is this for the Prime Minister of the country with respect to the legitimately held views of a very significant and important part of our population, the western grain producers? It is no wonder that every time the Prime Minister goes to western Canada he increases the votes of hon. members of the opposition by 2,000 to 3,000. It is because of his attitude, his arrogance and his insensitivity to western problems.

The people of western Canada see this situation as a lack of faith in western Canada. The Minister of Transport indicated that a decision will be imposed if no consensus is reached out of the Gilson hearings. I say to the minister who is sitting here now that this is unacceptable. The people of western Canada understand the game. They feel that the Liberal government says, "What do we have to lose in western Canada—nothing political". The government has shown its concern for the farming community in its budget; it can just as easily give the west a shaft over the Crow rate. There is nothing in the budget and it is getting even worse treatment in terms of this particular issue.

I have warned before, and it has now come to pass, that the so-called western development fund will be the vehicle by which Liberals will make up the Crow gap in 1982. This fund, the $4 billion elusive dream of the October 28, 1980, budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), is now the $1.3 billion nightmare for westerners. Is it any wonder westerners have so little faith in the Liberal party and its policies? First of all, the federal government announced in 1980 a $4 billion fund to promote the modernization of the grain handling and transportation sector, as well as to promote western industrial diversification. Then in the 1981 budget the government slashed it by 60 per cent. In February, 1982, the federal government used that money as a handout to the railways without tangible guarantees as to how it is to be used. If the government can slash that fund once, they can slash it again. I thought The Globe and Mail in a recent editorial stated the case very well when it said this:

• (1610)

The fact is that the prairies do not trust the federal government. They have no faith in any promises Mr. Pepin may make, no faith in any promises the government may make. They have the Crow. They will stick to the Crow.

Will the federal government ever, Mr. Speaker, grasp the idea that it takes action, not promises, to win back a totally disillusioned electorate?

My specific concerns about the proposal are innumerable, but I want to outline a few. First of all, the entire process is taking place outside of Parliament. Once again it is not Parliament that will examine a major change proposed by the government. It has apparently forgotten that Parliament exists. The whole process is to take place behind closed doors. It is remarkable that discussions on a proposed change which can be so devastating in impact will not be open to scrutiny, particularly by the producers affected. The proposal places a ceiling on further government contributions beyond the 1981-82 shortfall at a time when massive funds are about to flow into federal tax coffers. The proposal opens the door to variable rates, which is absolutely and profoundly unacceptable. Western farmers have not fought for 80 years to maintain the statutory rate only to see it tossed to the wind.

Even if we have a statutory rate as part of the package, the proposed open-ended escalator to be paid for by the producer spells variable rates, and that is wrong. One harks back to the words of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall who gallantly fought against the Crow rate desecration. I quote him:

> If once tampering with the statutory rate is accepted or condoned as an item on the bargaining table, all will be lost.

Mr. Justice Hall is a distinguished constituent of mine and I subscribe to his position absolutely. Once the subject is on the bargaining table, Mr. Speaker, it will only be a matter of time until it is lost. There is no position to take except to adhere through thick and thin. The Crow is not bargainable. That is also a statement by Mr. Justice Hall, a perceptive man who has given leadership on so many issues of importance to this country.

After the rates go up, Mr. Speaker, and when the smaller farms and towns start to die, how will the service be any better? There is nothing in this proposal to guarantee that service. Those guarantees must be there before we even think about giving more money to the railways from whatever source. We also want to know how the proposed subsidy will be distributed. The government has given absolutely no indication of that. They have told Dr. Gilson basically this: "We want to dump the Crow. We want to hit all those westerners who dare to refuse to vote Liberal. We do not care what impact it has in the west; you figure out the fine print and do it quickly and quietly."

Mr. Pepin: Why would we do that?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The minister knows that is what the Liberal government is saying to Dr. Gilson. We from western Canada do not accept that way of dealing. We do not stand for the status quo either. We recognize the problems in the present system of moving grain. Under the present branch line subsidy system it is well known that the railways are subsidized to be inefficient, as they clearly have been in many areas. The railways should receive adequate compensation for hauling grain, but the existing statutory freight rates should remain. We have said the shortfalls should be met by the federal treasury, and adequate guarantees must be provided to ensure adequate capacity and performance. As well, the anomalies in freight rates between processed and unprocessed products must be resolved in some fashion.

Above and beyond the yearly payment of the 1981-82 shortfall, the federal government has an ongoing responsibility. However, the railways must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the producers that they can deliver grain on time in a reliable and effective fashion before additional payments should be made. With deference I say to the minister who has responded on behalf of the government that he has the thing all wrong. You do not go to the farmers and say: "Now, you pay for some—

Mr. Pepin: You are talking about billions of dollars.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —imprecise commitments to improve service and we will see that things happen to the benefit of farmers down the line." He should be saying to the railways: "Get the system in order and then we will come back to the farmers and see whether there is any room to talk at that time." The problem with the minister is that he has it reversed.

The fact, Mr. Speaker, that this proposal is going forward without the fullest consultation really dismays me.

Mr. Pepin: Lots of people know more than you do about it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I can hardly believe there has not been consultation, not only with the agricultural organizations and associations but with the producers themselves. We know that in Saskatchewan there is serious questioning, not only in the pools but in all organizations, with respect to the position being taken and the whole process which is going on.

I would like to close my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I am interested to see that the NDP has finally brought this motion forward. I would not want to suggest they were more interested in its political effect than in the issue itself. I would be the last to accuse them of any sort of devious frame of mind such as that. However, it is rather interesting that this matter has been on the Order Paper and we were obliged to bring it forward immediately following the announcement while they have let the matter lie until this week. Has it anything to do with the calling of the provincial election in Saskatchewan? I ask that question rhetorically because I know the NDP, all of whom have to take a course in sanctimony before they come into this House, will answer that one—

An hon. Member: Before they run as candidates.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is it, before they run as candidates, says my colleague, the spokesman on a leadership review of the Liberal Party. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that when they take such a position I wish they would get together with Premier Blakeney, because he has been equivocating. I am sorry to say that, notwithstanding all the material I get in my home, the letters and so on telling me what they are going to stand for. Premier Blakeney has been quoted as recently as

January of this year as saying that he was quite prepared to negotiate a change in the Crow rate. In an interview on the CBC he acknowledged that fact. This is the same Premier Blakeney who is going to the people of Saskatchewan, arm in arm, I take it, with—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Keeper: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the House opened last October the Tories have voted with the Liberals 26 times, whereas the NDP did so only 13 times.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Very shoddy business.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is my first debate as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. It is perhaps very appropriate that I take part in this debate on Crow rate change. I was a little disappointed that the original mover, the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), withdrew his support and had his colleague, the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), move the motion. I do not know why, whether he was afraid to defend his own motion—

Mr. Pepin: He is campaigning in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Flis: —because I come from that part of Saskatchewan. I was born and raised in his riding. I was born and raised in the riding of Humboldt-Lake Centre, where that hon. member, the original mover of this motion, comes from. I am sure that this motion does not represent the wishes of the farmers in his riding. As a matter of fact, my family left Saskatchewan 30 years ago because of the CCF government at that time under Tommy Douglas. My father, along with four sons and two daughters, saw no future in that province because of the lack of foresight of the government at that time. Unfortunately, it is the same lack of foresight of the federal New Democratic Party which will force many farmers out of that province again.

• (1620)

Mr. Blaikie: You like the Tories in Ontario?

Mr. Flis: I am sad that I must say that that is a fact and the truth.

Mr. Blaikie: What about interest rates?

Mr. Flis: I can understand the concern of the farmers for the Crow, as it gave an element of security in a changing world for 85 years. However, change must come. It is happening everywhere. Even the Saskatchewan Power Corporation, owned by the provincial NDP government, increased its electricity rates by 8 per cent in 1980 and by 12 per cent in 1981. The provincial government says that it is okay to increase electricity rates, but that it is not okay to increase shipping and grain rates. I do not know how Premier Blakeney explains this double standard that he is practising within his own province.

I want to show that the changes to the Crow proposed by the government are for the better, not for the worse. The attitude of the NDP, federally and provincially, of opposing any change whatsoever is simply irresponsible. Provincially, it might be excusable because of the Saskatchewan pre-election fever obviously getting in the way of rational debate. It is surprising, however, as in the past Premier Blakeney has taken a much more realistic position.

I would like to quote what Premier Blakeney said when he appeared on a CBC show on May 20, 1977. I would like my colleagues from the NDP and the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to listen very carefully to what Premier Blakeney said at that time. He said:

> Now I don't want to be quoted as saying that I'm happy to see Crow increase, that's not so, but I'm realistic enough to know that time goes on and costs go on and I think farmers are realistic enough to say that at some time they would look at increasing Crow, provided they receive the same legislated statutory protection they now have for the Crow rate.

There are three aspects to Premier Blakeney's statement. First, as time goes on costs will increase. That is a fact. Second, farmers are realistic enough to realize that at some time in the future they would look at an increased Crow rate. That is a fact. Third, farmers would want legislated statutory proection. That is a fact. That is what the premier stated on May 20, 1977. On February 8, 1982, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) realized Blakeney's forecast of 1977. Why the change of heart in Mr. Blakeney? I do not know why.

Mr. Keeper: Because your family left Saskatchewan.

Mr. Flis: I do not know why. Even with the imminent election, the scare tactics and misrepresentations are not justifiable. The provincial government produced a beautiful little booklet which I believe is entitled "The Pepin Plan"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: —paid for by the provincial taxpayers and which led the Saskatchewan people astray. They pulled the same tactic with the Constitution and it did not work. It is pulling the same tactic on the Crow rate and it will not work. There have been further misrepresentations. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy)—

Mr. Keeper: That is a misrepresentation.

Mr. Flis: —referred to the ad man, and he is correct. The Saskatchewan minister of agriculture, Gordon MacMurchy, put out a press release on March 8, 1982, which stated:

> Ottawa has only committed itself to a contribution of $612 million for four years—to 1985—no more.

This is totally incorrect. The Government of Canada has committed itself to paying the Crow benefit, estimated at about $600 million, indefinitely, and the commitment will be enshrined in law. This is what Premier Blakeney wanted and still wants, and this is what the farmers want.

Based on an erroneous premise, Mr. MacMurchy went on to calculate alleged losses to farmers in the province of Saskatchewan. However, he completely ignored the concept of sharing future cost increases to be developed by the federal representatives on Crow. He completely ignored the benefits which could flow from increased grain production and grain prices. He completely ignored the benefits of improved railway performance and a better delivery system. He also completely ignored the potential for savings by producers—

Mr. Blaikie: Are you still reading?

Mr. Flis: —in reduced on-farm storage costs. I do not think this kind of misrepresentation will get the provincial government anywhere.

Federally, the NDP has clearly missed an opportunity to show some leadership. The major farm groups recognize the need for change. They have agreed to participate in the process and get the best possible deal for farmers. The NDP are saying, "Ho, ho, ho". Well, it is not Christmas time. I will refer them to the list of farmers and farm groups supporting the change in Crow. First of all, there are the prairie farm commodity associations, such as the Western Barley Growers Association with a member membership of 1,000, the Flax Growers Western Canada, the Palliser, the Manitoba and Saskatchewan rapeseed producers, the Alberta rapeseed producers, the Alberta hog producers and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. That is a total membership of over 97,000. The Western Agricultural Conference has lent its support to changing the Crow. Under that group are Unifarm, with 63,000 members; the Alberta Cattle Commission with 13,000 members; the Alberta pool with 55,000 members; the Saskatchewan wheat pool with 70,000 members; the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities with over 2,000 members—

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, no, that is not true.

Mr. Flis: —the United Grain Growers with 60,000; the Saskatchewan milk producers, the Saskatchewan Chicken Marketing Board, the Saskatchewan Turkey Produce Marketing Board and the Saskatchewan Egg Marketing Board. As well, under that group, there is support from the Co-op Hail Association, the Saskatchewan hog producers, the dairy producers co-op and the Manitoba pool. The number of members supporting this amounts to over 300,000. Taking those two groups alone, we have over 400,000 members saying, "Yes, it is time we do discuss a change in the Crow". So much for the "ho, ho, ho" of the NDP. Instead of supporting the farmers they claim to represent, the NDP take the position of the renegade National Farmers Union—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: —an organization which was almost moribund until it found this last vestige of the past to cling to.

Almost everyone recognizes that changes come. I might refer the NDP to some of the editorials which are supporting these changes.

Mr. Keeper: Talk to the people.

Mr. Flis: I refer the NDP to an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press entitled "Unnecessary Issue", which states:

> There should be no mistake that those who oppose a change in the Crow are outside the mainstream of western agriculture.

I suggest that the NDP are outside the mainstream of western agriculture. The editorial of March 22, 1982 in the Winnipeg Free Press further states:

> In Saskatchewan, it would appear that short-term political advantage is more important.

There is no political advantage for this government to change the Crow rate, as suggested by the hon. member for Saskatoon West. However, this government, and I think all hon. members in this House—

An hon. Member: There are no Liberals left to defeat. You are right about that.

Mr. Flis: —when we are elected, must set goals for the future. We are not building a country—

Mr. Keeper: That's for sure.

Mr. Flis: —for ourselves. We are building a better Canada for generations to come, for our children, our great grandchildren and so on.

An hon. Member: Certainly not for today.

Mr. Flis: I wish the NDP would take that responsibility. Its members should just ask themselves what will be the benefits of the change in Crow for future generations.

The NDP is failing to represent the best interests of the farmers. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said in this House, it would be a betrayal not to do anything about the Crow. Members can read in Hansard of February 8, 1982, at page 14748, what the Minister of Agriculture said. He said this:

• (1630)

> I think that it would be a betrayal not to do anything about the Crowsnest Pass rate, to accept and go along with the old program, the old agreement of 1897 and not move ahead. If we did all things like that in our country we would not be the envy of the world for our agricultural industry.

I am proud to be a member of a party that shows it is not afraid to take that stand.

Let us be clear on what the federal government is proposing under this change. First, grain will always have a special status. The process set up by the Minister of Transport will guarantee that this special status will be enshrined in legislation, to give the farmer the security that he or she needs.

Secondly, the government will provide an annual payment—not just for four years—of the Crow benefit, calculated for 1981-82 at some $600 million. This commitment will also be in legislation, as requested by the Premier of Saskatchewan.

The sharing of future costs increases, as suggested by my friend for Regina West, is a matter for negotiation. It is a major part of the Gilson exercise. What could be more democratic than direct negotiations with those affected? This government has always believed in and practised the consultative process. It will always believe in obtaining ideas, suggestions and recommendations from the grassroots of this country. That is what the process will be. There will be requirements of railway performance, service, investments and adjustments in other rates to promote certain agriculture, and a monitoring system to make sure that they do what they are supposed to do.

Also in legislation there will be a mechanism or framework to determine what the rate should be. The railways will not be able to charge what they want—again, as falsely promoted in some of the western provinces.

In the past, the farmer has a guaranteed rate but no guaranteed service. That did not do him or her a lot of good. The Wheat Board said it lost $1 billion in sales in the late 1970s because of transportation problems. The Secretary of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) said recently he knew of six countries which had turned to other markets because Canada could not guarantee delivery through its present rail system. What the government is proposing is that the guaranteed rate be replaced by guaranteed service—I wish to emphasize that, Mr. Speaker—along with a perpetual financial commitment from the government. That is leadership, and I wish the NDP would adopt some of it.

Mr. Speaker, the result will be that the railways will be compensated. Even Premier Blakeney concedes that this is necessary. The farmer will be protected and will have the assurance that he or she will be able to move his or her grain. To me, that is a better deal than the west has had in the past, and I think the NDP should go for it. The governments of British Columbia and Alberta, and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, are going for this deal, so surely the federal NDP members who were elected to make decisions on what is best for the whole country—not what is best for one region but what is best for the entire country, what is best for future Canadians—will support us in this process to come up with what is an equitable rate for farm producers.

I want to thank the NDP for bringing this topic to the floor of this House on one of the opposition days, because it has given the government an opportunity to set the facts straight, and to correct some of the false statements that the government of the province of Saskatchewan is repeating to its people. They will be able to read what has been said in this House and they will be able to get the truth.

I would like to congratulate the Minister of Transport, not because I am his parliamentary secretary—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: —but because here is a minister who took the bull by the horns, as we used to say out west—

An hon. Member: Take the bull by the tail.

Mr. Flis: —who has shown leadership, who saw what is best for the future of the country, saw what is best for future agricultural producers. I want to congratulate him in this House. He knows what is good for the future of this country and he was not afraid to get up and say so. It is very easy, Mr. Speaker, to refrain from taking any decision, as the NDP continually do. No decision is very easy to take, but it is very tough to take unpopular decisions. Our minister, the Minister of Transport, did take an unpopular decision, but it is a decision that will benefit future Canadians; and that is what we are elected for, to build a country that will be the best in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting that the member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) should say such nice things about his minister. He said his minister took the bull by the horns; he may very well end up with the tail by the time this whole process is through.

Mr. Flis: You don't know which end of the bull is which.

Mr. Schellenberger: Well, I think I raise a few more bulls on my ranch than you do in your little lot in Toronto, when it comes to knowing which end of the bull is which.

I find it passing strange that while farmers are facing some of the worst dilemmas they ever faced since the Depression in regard to costs versus the price they are getting for their grain, we as a national government, under the leadership that the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park is talking about, are discussing making that farmer look forward to paying more for transportation of his grain to the west coast and east coast.

The Minister of Agriculture has been saying some very interesting things. In a speech in Winnipeg he said that between 1975 and 1981 the ratio of farmers' net income to farm cash receipts dropped from 39 per cent to 21 per cent. He went on to say that it might be even worse in the coming year and that the net farm income is expected to drop 15 to 20 per cent in 1982. He was in such a depressed mood at the time, Mr. Speaker, that he went on to say that perhaps he should revise the old Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to try to bring farmers through this period.

The minister responsible for the Wheat Board announced the initial prices yesterday or the day before. The farmers in my constituency are facing a decrease in the initial price that they will receive for grain in 1981-82. For barley it is down 30 cents a bushel; for oats it is down some 31 cents a bushel. All other prices remain the same, no change. Farmers are facing increased costs of production, as was mentioned by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). We get from the Canadian Wheat Board a lowering of the initial price system. They are not prepared to take their responsibility in the face of this type of income figures. They use the act that they have, the section that is there, where they can borrow money if need be to maintain a price, and they feel that that price is justified and what better time to do that than today as we face these terrible income pictures.

The deputy minister of transport stated, as he was discussing the new proposal on the Crow rate—and this is in the Western Producer of February, 1982, an article by Mr. Adrian Irwins—that the range of increase looks as though it might be doubled, or maybe tripled, over a period of four or five years. He says that is kind of ballpark. That is the type of statement we get from the deputy minister of transport, Mr. Kroeger, as farmers are looking at the kinds of cost they may face in the future. He says they are not sure whether they will double or triple, and that is why we have the study. Farmers putting in a crop this year do not know whether they will have enough money at the end of the year to pay their costs, let alone enough to live on, yet they are being asked to accept a change in the Crow rate.

• (1640)

No wonder the motion before us today and the motion which the Progressive Conservative Party put before the House on Febuary 26 state that we should be very cautious about the proposals being made by the minister and look for leadership when we are dealing with transportation costs in western Canada. We made a very responsible suggestion. If the railways have been capable of delivering grain for the last 85 years at half a cent a ton mile, perhaps in the next 20 years they will be capable of delivering grain for the $612 million being proposed. If they show that the capacity is there, maybe farmers could then look at whether or not they should pay some increased costs. That is a very responsible suggestion which would take us to the year 2000.

I will be making suggestions which I hope will be looked at. Some excellent suggestions were made by the hon. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall as well as by Mr. Hugh Horner in his study "A review of the red meat industry". Some excellent suggestions could be proposed to help farmers with their income problem. The railways should be given an opportunity to show they mean business in the prairies and are going to take the incentive, the Crow gap, the money being provided by the government, and move the grain.

I want to discuss two suggestions made by people who have studied this area in the last number of years as well as put forward my own suggestion. Hon. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall put forward an excellent suggestion. Another suggestion that should be looked at is in Mr. Hugh Horner's study. The railways have stated this many times. They feel that their branch lines inhibit them. Over the years we have provided subsidies for branch lines. We have never actually seen that money go to grain branch lines; it has always gone into the general operating fund.

There is some difficulty in moving grain across the branch lines. In many cases the hopper cars are too heavy. They cannot be loaded to full capacity. Some $200 million a year go into branch line subsidies, but this is not being used to upgrade them.

In the 1977 Hall report, some suggestions were made that have never been discussed. In chapter V regarding branch lines, four alternatives were outlined. One suggested we should study a mini-train alternative, an independently owned and operated power unit delivering modified grain cars from the elevator to the loading facilities on the main line where the grain would be transferred to hopper cars. Another alternative was a short line, independently owned and operated loading unit delivering grain from the elevator to the main line train assemblies. He went on to discuss the trucking alternatives. The other was a do-nothing alternative which is a continuation of the present system.

The second proposal, the short line alternative, makes eminently good sense to me. The railroads have never done anything but ask that branch lines be abandoned. Perhaps it is time for us in western Canada to put forward another alternative. The branch lines should be turned over to the provinces as part of the rural rail bed and allowed to be operated by independent owners or co-operatives. That suggestion was made by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall and outlined by Hugh Horner in his study for the Alberta government, his review of the red meat industry. He suggested that grain independent branch lines be transferred to the provinces at a nominal fee and operated by the provinces as part of the rural road system. He discussed the $200 million a year in branch line subsidies and $80 million a year for branch line rehabilitation. These subsidies do not necessarily go to the upkeep of the branch lines. The railways use the money wherever they feel they can get the greatest economic return.

Our motion in February proposed that this issue be directed to the parliamentary committee, for intensive study and the turning over of branch lines to the provinces to be operated as part of their rural rail bed could be part of that study.

These branch lines are analagous to the rural road system. They are an essential part of the infrastructure for rural western Canada and they should not be allowed to deteriorate. The farmers and businessmen of those areas should be allowed to form co-operatives and run them in a fashion that would keep them as an integral part of western rural Canada.

There are many advantages to this system which are outlined in this review. Often when we get excellent reports such as the one by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall and Mr. Hugh Horner they are allowed to gather dust. We go on with what members opposite call leadership, which is just doing away with a program that has been part of western Canada for the past 80 years.

The minister should accept our suggestion of providing the Crow gap, some $600 million, to the railroads and ask for a guarantee of service. In the meantime, we should be allowed to put forward these kinds of suggestions.

If the federal government were to pay that $600 million and set up a task force or royal commission to study the feasibility of turning over the 8,000 miles of branch lines to the prairie provinces at a nominal fee to be run as part of their rural road system, we could establish rural regional rail co-operatives to operate these short-haul lines as part of the rural system of road beds. They could purchase through an incentive plan some smaller locomotives. Huge locomotives would not be required for the operation. The grain cars could be transferred to the main line, picked up at regional terminals and pulled to the ports as part of a unit train.

The grain could be cleaned at the inland terminals and the screenings used as feed for livestock. We could establish a provincial rail authority to oversee the operation of the system and disperse the revenues and costs to the rural co-operatives. The GTA could still be in charge of rail car allocation. We could very easily put in place the same kinds of tax credits as in the oil industry and movie industry to allow these co-operatives to buy the extra grain cars and locomotives needed to operate the system.

This whole area makes eminent sense to me and is one that should be proposed to western Canada. It is one that the leaders in western Canada should be allowed to discuss so that we do not just have to accept the position being put before western Canada by the Minister of Transport and his one-man committee, who is holding negotiations behind closed doors so that we do not know exactly what is happening.

These ideas, along with those which have been proposed to the Wheat Board during the last few years to assist western farmers, must be considered. Such ideas included an assured market plan which the Wheat Board called MAP. Farmers are now saying that we should take a second look at this program in order to make some changes.

Mr. Jarvis, head of the Wheat Board, has recently been discussing a proposal for a cartel, which is something I have some difficulty with. It is just another name for something that members from all parties in the House have started with the United States, namely bilateral arrangements whereby we would set floor prices so that our two countries, which move approximately 70 per cent of all export grains in the entire world, would not be in such a competitive position that we are actually selling to countries who can afford to pay at below the farmers' cost of production.

If these ideas were being proposed at this time, along with fuel rebates, proper extensions of the small business development bond, plans to assist farmers who face extremely high interest rates and energy expenses during the next five years, then perhaps we could ask western farmers to look at some changes in the Crow rate in the next 20 years.

There is another anomaly which has not been addressed by the Minister of Transport in his Crow rate proposal. It concerns the British Columbia railroad and the farmers who deliver grain from the Peace River region. They have never been included in the Crow rate proposal. The British Columbia government has been paying the Crow difference out of the grain which is coming from the Peace River area for many years now. Until the last couple of years, the Wheat Board had not even been allocating some of the grain cars which were purchased by the government and the Wheat Board to farmers in that area. This situation has been rectified due to the strenuous arguments made by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle).

I believe the Minister should accept this proposal and ensure that the farmers in the Peace River area of British Columbia have their problems placed before the committee which he established so that disbursement of moneys may also be made to the British columbia area. I believe that this is a very important consideration.

I would like to speak for a moment about some of the situations which can happen when an aggressive group is put into a system which, although it has been functioning for 85 years, has not been functioning very well and even deteriorating. When we were the government in 1979 the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who was the Minister of Transport at that time, decided that some emergency plans had to be put in place in order to deliver grain until a system could be worked out to alleviate the many problems in the western grain transportation and gathering system. He convened an emergency grain movement task force of which I was glad to be a part. In a matter of two months we were able to set up the Grain Transportation Authority. We were able to make some 16 recommendations.

Even though nothing changed in the system at that time, the amount of grain which moved from the prairies to the ports increased substantially. To us this indicated that by aggressively addressing the problems in the system it could be made to work at a greater capacity than in the past. This was proven by the task force which was working in the prairies at the time.

We discovered some very interesting things which should have been happening for a long time and were not. We found that we should reduce segregation in the grain terminals and pursue the pooling of oil seeds. The system which had been operating for years was one whereby each grain company demanded that the car which they loaded in the prairies be delivered to their terminal when it came to port, even though the rapeseed was exactly the same in all cars. When a train pulled into Vancouver with some 100 cars, we often had to have 60 to 70 switches in order to get the right cars to the right terminal.

After the task force found that these things were happening, the Grain Transportation Authority went to work and discussed the whole matter. We now find that there is a pooling of oil seed cars, with the result that the turn around in those cars has increased dramatically.

We should employ supplementary quotas to attract grain to our interior cleaning facilities. At a time when there is a shortage of cars and there are cars which go to port with 5 per cent to 15 per cent of weeds in them, just imagine how much more grain we could move if those cars were cleaned in the prairies. There is a need for those screenings to remain in the feed industry of Alberta and Saskatchewan. We can relax some of the cleaning standards for our high grade wheats because they are really not needed.

We can pursue the possibility of making some effort to provide incentives instead of constantly imposing penalties to get our grain moved by the railways and the companies in a more efficient manner. Therefore, there are ways of making the system work more efficiently if Members of Parliament and task forces are allowed to look at new ideas and methods. There is much to be found out.

We are facing some very astonishing statistics concerning the movement of products from the west to our ports.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, when one is discussing the grain industry in the west, one is discussing a topic which probably gets spoken about more in the House of Commons than any other. I think when one speaks about the grain industry in the west, one is also talking about a subject which has great emotional attachment and we are dealing with a mythology that is very important to a great many people. In debating this subject today we are also debating a subject which is in the very middle of a raging debate in western Canada. We are dealing with something which is alive and well.

I believe we are also debating a subject which I think the House of Commons has very seldom debated. In the eight or nine years since the Hon. Otto Lang first raised the question of the Crow rate, I cannot recall when the subject was debated in the House of Commons so often. One of the reasons some members are unfamiliar with the debate and what has been happening to the railways and to the wheat farmer vis-à-vis the transportation system is that we in the House of Commons have been afraid to touch the subject. This is because we understand the emotional impact that discussion of this subject has back west. We have therefore tended not to deal with this question in the House in an adequate way.

Now that the government has finally made a decision to move and attempt to deal with some of the problems which have been caused by the Crow rate, it is somewhat of a shock and surprise to us all to discover that when we go back to review our own records of our committee hearings there is almost nothing in the file. We are all beginning to learn the facts anew.

In my judgment, having been an advocate of studies of the Crow rate back in the middle 1960s when I came to the House of Commons and joined the Standing Committee on National Transportation, and after spending a year travelling the railways of Canada with the committee which rewrote the National Transportation Act, I can recall what a terrible day it was to those of us who wanted to see the Crow examined when the House turned down the clause in that bill which would have allowed to take place the study as to what the costs and the benefits of the Crow were.

I think that decision of the House in 1967 set us all back in terms of being able to deal with this particular question. Therefore, it becomes much more difficult for us to do it now at a time when the economy is slowing down and at a time when everyone is being forced to tighten their belts.

Why are we doing it now? It is for the same reason that everyone is cutting back in every field. We have discovered that our ambition to spend in the private, corporate and governmental sense is exceeded by the revenue we have to spend. We have now reached the point in the Government of Canada accounts where 25 per cent of every dollar we collect as revenue goes to pay the national debt. There is just not much money in the bucket any more, and the consequence of that is that the government is examining all its expenditures.

We know when it comes to the railways that there must be massive investments over the next ten years. That money has to come from somewhere, and it is going to come from the Canadian taxpayer, it is going to come from the railways, it is going to come from the consumer of the goods that are moved on the railways, and a greater share will have to be paid by the producer of the goods which move by those railways.

The question we are discussing is: What are the fair shares and what are the amounts each group will pay? I think it is an absurdity to say that the amount paid by the producer of grain is going to disappear. The projections we have—and nobody has challenged them—are that by the year 1990 the grain producer will be paying 2.5 per cent of the cost of moving his grain, yet if we go back 25 years to the middle fifties, we find that the grain producer was paying 75 per cent of the cost of moving his grain. I find nothing written anywhere in the statutes of man or in the word of God that says this is the condition that has to go on forever.

Who is paying the cost? Part of the NDP motion today says we should nationalize the CPR.

Mr. Nystrom: Right on.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Will that save anybody one cent? My God, when I look at the profits of CP Rail, I see one person who is subsidizing the grain producer, and that is whoever owns shares of CP Rail, because CP is not making any money. The people who subsidize are the railway workers. Every railway worker takes less pay than he would otherwise get because of the subsidy which goes into the system. Everyone who moves freight in and out of western Canada—or almost anywhere in Canada—pays a part of the Crow subsidy, and that subsidy is going up as the amount paid by the grain producer goes down.

The farmer has paid a heavy cost too. We do not have diversification of western Canadian agriculture because of this. One of the things I have taken an interest in is the question of triticale. It is a very interesting subject for those who want to understand the problems the Crow has caused to the agricultural industry. Here we have a new grain. It is probably the only new grain discovered in the last 500 or 600 years. We are not growing very much of it, even thought it was put together at the University of Manitoba. It is grown in Mexico. It is grown in Russia. It is grown in Poland. Only now is it beginning to be grown in western Canada. Why is it not growing in western Canada in substantial amounts? Because it cannot be shipped out of the country, or anywhere, because it has to pay the full rate, and the full rate discriminates against any grain crop produced in western Canada unless it happens to be on the short list which comes under the Crow. What does that mean for farmers in western Canada? It means they are locked into a one-crop economy. That is not very sensible because any economist and any farmer will tell us that what they really want to do is rotate crops and make sure they are able to protect themselves against being wiped out totally by whatever disease or pest might come along.

Let me refer to a story which appeared in the Star-Phoenix of Saskatoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A great paper.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): "Topsoil drift said fault of Crow rate" is the headline of a story by Nancy Russell on March 18. The story points out that because there is only one crop and not enough variety in what is being planted in western Canada, topsoil is moving on. There has to be a greater range of crops planted, but the Crow works against that. The Crow locks farmers into a very limited number of crops they can grow on an economic basis because they cannot move those crops out. If farmers cannot move them out, it does not make any sense to grow them. If they cannot grow them at a profit, it does not make any sense to grow them.

When we look at the subsidies which are in our system, there are two points we have to remember. The subsidy which goes into the Crow is paid by all Canadians. Who gets the benefit of that subsidy, Canadians or our foreign customers? I put it to hon. members that in point of fact the person who receives the benefit of the subsidies we have built into our system is not a Canadian at all but a foreign customer. This applies not only to grain but also to many other minerals I know we export, and even to some of the manufactured goods we export. I do not mind paying subsidies, but I really would like to see their major benefits reside here in Canada.

The other point I want to make about subsidization or any kind of system is that if we do not put into the system the money that is needed to make the system work, it will not work. In the last 25 years we have systematically deprived Canadian railways of the revenue they need to make their systems work. That is why branch lines are down. That is why there has not been the kind of investment the railways should have been making in hopper cars. That is why the Government of Canada and the provincial governments have had to go to the rescue. They have had to buy hopper cars for the railways because the railways are not generating enough profits to be able to buy the cars. This applies not just to cars but to the whole range of things the railways do. We have starved the system, and nationalizing the CPR would not change that one little bit. What has to happen is that more money has to go into the system so that we can bring it up to date. The difficulty is that not having invested enough money in the system in the last 20 years, the investment in the eighties will have to be massive indeed.

The second point about subsidies is that they tend to protect those people who were there first. In the case of the Crow rate, that was the farmer. It is important to recognize that when the Crow rate was developed it did provide enough money to cover the cost. It did provide a little margin of profit. Probably until the end of the Second World War and perhaps into the early fifties there still was not much of a burden, but what has happened since then? The basic understanding of governments and the railways about the Crow rate was that instead of costs going down, as had been the assumption, costs went up, and the costs are now escalating at a rate which simply cannot be sustained by the system unless there is a new source of revenue. The question we are debating is where that revenue for capital improvements will come from. Where is that revenue for operating expenses to come from, who is going to pay and how much?

Mr. Nystrom: Not the farmers, John.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Why should the farmer be in the position where 25 years ago he was prepared to pay 75 per cent of the cost of moving his grain and in 1990 he insists on paying only 2.5 per cent of that cost? Is there a God-given right to that? Everyone else has to play in the international market. There are very few people who are exempt from playing in the international market. I recall the deals we made in the GATT, and I know the way tariffs are coming down in the next five years. If anyone has any illusions that the old concept of a high tariff country is going to be there for very long, he just has not been paying any attention to what has been going on, and he has not been paying any attention to the inability of our tariff barriers to keep foreigners out. My goodness, the automobile industry is now taking full-page ads in the newspapers of Canada to say that they have no tariff protection. The New Democratic Party has said, "We want 85 per cent tariff protection for the automobile industry". I do not think that is an appropriate way to go, but the NDP has said, "We are no longer a free-trade party from the west; we are now a high-tariff party from Ontario." The New Democratic Party wants 85 per cent Canadian content in any portion of cars coming in. That is crazy, but that is the NDP position. That is certainly what members of the NDP are promoting in the province of Ontario, and that, I take it, is coupled with the NDP position that the manufacturers of Canada should be protected and the farmers should be protected. There is not enough money in Canada to do that.

The dilemma we have in trying to deal with the Crow, in my judgment, is a very simple one. We have a system which has been in place for 85 years. We have a system which, all things being equal, probably would not need to be changed. But all things are not equal. Inflation and increased transportation costs have conspired to put an intolerable burden on the whole railway system. The question we have to ask ourselves is how we can restore the railways so that they will be able to provide us with the kind of service we require to keep our foreign clients on whom the western grain producer is totally dependent.

Nationalization of the CPR would not bring a single additional penny into the system; the money must come from outside. Where will it come from, Mr. Speaker? What are the economic effects of the kind of cross-subsidization that we have? I think there have been two main victims of that form of cross-subsidization and one has been the west. It has hindered the development of alternative economic opportunities in the west and it has blocked the diversification of agriculture. It means we have been locked into a pattern set in the west in 1896.

Another group of people has had to pay for that subsidy as a result of the total distortion that has taken place in freight rates in Canada, in two ways. The first has been the kind of distortion that in the Canadian rate structure has always put a premium on moving natural resources as opposed to moving manufactured goods. In other words, the way the freight structure was established, largely as a result of the Crow, was that it tended to take resources from the natural resource areas and move them to the cities to be manufactured and then move the manufactured goods back. If we look at the freight rate structure for any natural resource, we will find a bias in favour of the movement of resources to the city. That structure developed as a result of the Crow.

The second bias in the system is that a good portion of the deficit that the railways occur in the movement of grain is covered by the freight shipper on other commodities. That means that potash, iron ore, lumber and all bulk goods pay a higher cost for transportation as a result of the subsidization cost. We in the rural areas pay a higher cost for freight than would be the case if the subsidy did not exist.

While I have a great deal of difficulty with the process developed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in stripping frunds from VIA Rail, I have to say that I think it was a healthy thing to take the cost of subsidization of passenger rail service away from the freight shipper. That was a sound move. I think we should put our subsidies on the table; that is, pay them directly and not try to incorporate them by passing the burden to other people who use the system.

We have to decide where the subsidy is to go. The question is whether it should go to the farmer directly or to the railroad. I have a strong feeling that, regardless of the administrative difficulties, the subsidy should go to the farmer. I believe that for the simple reason that the farmer takes the risk. He decides what to plant and what market to approach. If the subsidy were paid to the farmer, then he would be in control and could do what he thinks is best.

I recognize that there is an institutional argument for the subsidy to be turned over to the railways, but I do not believe that the railways can necessarily decide what is best for me. I believe that the subsidy should be paid directly to the farmer so that he can make his decisions and, of course, he will make decisions in his best interests. I think my main point is clear, Mr. Speaker. There is the choice of subsidizing an institution, the railways, or putting the subsidy in the hands of the farmers. I believe it would be better not to put it in the hands of the railways but to put it in the hands of the person who can make the best use of it.

I have gone over the minister's proposals in some detail. By and large I have been surprised that this is but a modest step forward. It is not an elimination of the subsidies built into the Crow; basically what we are saying is that the subsidy is going to be kept at a particular level and that increased costs after that level will be shared in some proportion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate on the Crow rate because of its importance to the western grain farmer. I do not suppose any other subject is more important to the Saskatchewan grain farmer than retention of the statutory Crow rate. It is important at this time when farmers are faced with the highest cost of production ever.

We can draw a couple of parallels that are very important to Saskatchewan and to western Canada regarding the statutory Crow rate. One is the national energy policy. What we are engaged in is an east-west battle of a very, very serious nature. It is just coming into play particularly in the province of Saskatchewan because the New Democratic Party in that province has chosen to make it a political football. I do not suggest that that is exactly a good thing, but all of a sudden it seems that the NDP in Saskatchewan has become the great defender of the farmer.

I should like to set the record straight, Mr. Speaker. Members of the Conservative Party in this House who come from western Canada have again and again defended the western grain farmer, and that includes the Saskatchewan farmer. That is specifically so in regard to a number of items, but particularly on the statutory Crow rate. The NDP-Liberal coalition defeated the former Conservative government when the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) was minister of transport. In the short period that we formed the government, advances were made in the movement of grain. This was of importance to the Saskatchewan and western grain farmer. Again I caution hon. members of the NDP that they should not use the statutory Crow rate as a political football; it will backfire on them.

What is our position on the statutory Crow rate? First we say very emphatically that the statutory Crow rate must remain and that the government must make up the difference or the Crow gap. Why is this so important? I mentioned earlier that farmers find themselves in a price squeeze situation such as they have never experienced before. The main reason for this is rising fuel costs. For example, in my area right now fuel costs have risen $1 per gallon. It just hit the $1 mark. It used to be $1 per gallon and now it is $2 for gasoline, again thanks to the NDP-Liberal coalition. The cost of diesel fuel has risen 70 cents per gallon, the cost of repairs to farm machinery has increased three times or 300 per cent in the last five years, and machine costs have tripled. Farmers are faced with a very serious situation. Yet at this time the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) chooses to drop a time bomb on the farmers of Saskatchewan and of western Canada. This will put another load on their shoulders which they will not be able to bear.

What is the importance of the situation? Agriculture or the production of food in Canada is in a foremost position. As long as it remains number one, Canada will remain strong. We must be very careful not to take steps to undermine agriculture. Wheat is one of the major bases of agriculture, particularly in western Canada, as is the movement of wheat. We in the Progressive Conservative Party stand for upgrading branch lines because there are too many of them which cannot carry hopper cars or are only carrying hopper cars with half loads. This does not make sense. A contribution has been made by the government to upgrading these branch lines and, in many cases, the work is being done. But I could point to rail lines and branch lines in my own area where culverts were moved in and then moved out without any work being done. It is most important to see work done in these areas.

What will the outcome be for farmers? First it will be very dependent upon the attitude of government in the House and the attitude of hon. members regarding this very important issue. We have a commission to study the issue which is conducting hearings at the present time. I should like to say something about this study because there has been a great deal of talk concerning what is really being said by grassroot farmers. I represent grassroot farmers in my riding. I have talked to them and they have said that they want the retention of the statutory Crow rate. It is most important that it be retained.

What about production and its importance to farmers? I should like to indicate a few facts in this regard. In 1905, 90 per cent of all people were engaged in agriculture. They produced enough food to feed the people of North America. Today we have a little over 4 per cent of Canadians who are engaged in agriculture and are producing enough food to feed the people of North America and a good deal of the world. It is important to keep agriculture strong.

What will it do for Canadian consumers? We all know that Canadian consumers purchase the cheapest possible food compared with many other countries of the world. This is an important factor. Perhaps we could argue today that farmers have received an advantage which others have not received. In many cases farmers have purchased under a tariff and have sold on open markets. In many other cases they have purchased in areas where they have paid a third more, and perhaps even 50 per cent more, because of a protected market. I remember years when a good truck was selling for $2,000 or $3,000 less in Crosby, North Dakota, than a similar one was selling for in Estevan, Saskatchewan. Why was this? It was because of a protective tariff.

Such things have existed throughout the history of Canada. I am not suggesting that it was wrong in all cases, but I am suggesting today that farmers cannot afford to pay an additional $1 per bushel. I raised this matter with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in the House on the basis of having personally gone to Alexander, North Dakota, and checked on the price of moving grain from that city to Seattle. The price at that time, which was approximately two years ago, was $1.35 per bushel. Under the statutory Crow rate, wheat is moving out of Weyburn, Saskatchewan, at 19 cents per bushel. I am suggesting to the House that the increased cost in the movement of grain could amount to as much as $1 per bushel in the next four, five or six years. This is a very serious threat to the economy of western grain farmers and of Saskatchewan in particular. This is why I take a strong stand that the statutory Crow rate must remain and that the Government of Canada must make up the Crow gap.

What is our responsibility in this situation? Today we have a very, very irritated western Canada. It is irritated because of the insensitivity of a government which did not understand the western Canadian energy policy. For example, I have spoken with people who are involved in the service and supply industry in Weyburn, Estevan and Swift Current. They indicated that they are only selling 20 per cent of production in southwestern Saskatchewan. On April 1 a new quota will be set for south Saskatchewan which will also restrict production. The people of that area will only be permitted to move 35 per cent of production. They do not understand this severe measure. They do not understand why hundreds of people should be out of work. They do not understand why service and supply companies should be going broke, be forced into bankruptcy and be forced to sell their equipment when Canada needs oil but purchases offshore oil from Mexico at a cost to Canadian taxpayers of $16 per barrel higher, with about $9.06 in incentive grants to refineries, when the same grade of oil is available in Saskatchewan. I want to suggest that people do not understand that. When they do not have jobs you cannot explain why they should have to go through this. If the government and Members of Parliament are as insensitive to the Crow rate as they are on the national energy policy, you are going to have a very serious situation in western Canada. I would like that to go on record here as giving a warning of the existence of a very serious situation, and it is most important that the government and the Minister of Transport be sensitive to it.

I do not feel, Mr. Speaker, that I should belabour the subject. I have made my point. We face a very serious issue, probably the most serious in the history of western Canada. Therefore, I advise Members of Parliament, the government and government backbenchers, to weigh very seriously the issue of the statutory Crow rate and make their decision taking into consideration the future of this nation and the importance of the agricultural industry to this great country of ours, Canada. I thank you.

Mr. Laverne Lewicky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to be able to speak to this whole issue of the Crow rate. I would like to preface my remarks with a comment about a term we use in sociology, one that I have probably used in one of my first lectures in teaching sociology, namely, ethnocentrism. The idea behind that is that so often we judge other cultures—in this case other regions of Canada—based on our own limited experience, background and academic training. When I think about the fact that the Canada bill has just been passed in the English House of Lords, and specifically about the clause dealing with multiculturalism, I realize it took a little while for us in Canada to realize that there are ethnic groups in Canada with a different background from those with an English or French heritage. It is of interest to me that reports such as that of the task force on Canadian unity, the Pepin-Robarts report, recognized this diversity. I urge the minister to go back to his own report because it also dealt with the question of regional diversity. There are differences in regions from one coast of Canada to the other. The report asks this question:

> What of regionalism, which we have identified as the second line of cleavage in Canadian society which needs attention in the present crisis?

In looking at this report it seems to me we had an intelligent co-author who recognized that there are regional differences.

Mr. Pepin: Indeed.

Mr. Lewycky: Looking at some of the specific recommendations on page 125 we see a plea that we:

> —recognize the diversity among Canada's regions and the need to permit all regional communities to flourish.

With the knowledge that the current Minister of Transport was involved in that kind of study, I am utterly baffled, dismayed and disappointed that he now fails to recognize the academic rhetoric which is now being used. I think it is important that we look at this whole issue as one which gives us an idea of the nature of Canada; how we are different from region to region, how these historic developments have occurred, and how we can make sure they do not continue to work to the detriment of a specific region of Canada.

I would, therefore, like to focus for a moment on what I might call an historical argument for the retention of the Crow rate, for the importance of painting, as it were, an economic picture of Canada and taking a look at our history. In sociology we would say that as Canada developed, there was a kind of axis, a metropolis called central Canada, and a hinterland in the prairie provinces. We developed a national policy on transportation in such a way that there was resource extraction from the west, much of which for a long period of time was in the form of wheat. At the same time we saw the development of manufacturing at the centre, the metropolis. This policy was developed to some extent at the expense of the west. As this developed, and as tariffs were given to the east to protect the manufacturing industry—

Mr. Pepin: And taken away.

Mr. Lewycky: —we found in the process that we were paying more in the west. The one concession that we in the west had was that we could depend on a statutory and stable rate for the movement of grain. But we now have a minister—who, I thought, having been involved in this commission, would understand the regions the best—working to the detriment of the prairie provinces.

Mr. Benjamin: He undermines his own report.

Mr. Lewycky: As the hon. member says, he is undermining his own report. We in the west, especially in Manitoba, have a particular problem with these proposals because Manitobans do not really stand to benefit from the development of the Rogers Pass and other things because most of our grain is shipped through Thunder Bay and through Churchill.

An hon. Member: Not enough of it.

Mr. Lewycky: As the hon. member says, not enough of it. More should be shipped through Churchill.

I would now like to look at the Manitoba scene, especially the Tyrchniewicz Report of March, 1980. We should take a look at this report to see what the negative economic impact would be on Manitoba. This study was not done under a New Democratic Party administration in Manitoba; it was done under a Conservative administration. The Conservatives did not reveal the results of this study because, of course, they were afraid that their position might be untenable. Any educated person who looks at the report could see what the negative impacts would be on the Manitoba farmers if we had a removal of the Crow rate.

• (1740)

This study was done for the Government of Manitoba by three faculty members of the Department of Agricultural Economics at the University of Manitoba. One of their principle conclusions was that if the Crow rate were removed, on the hypothesis that the increase in freight rates would be 3.4 times the present amount times Crow, there would be a $50 million drop in farm output in Manitoba. It would cut the net farm income by an average $1,056 per farm. An area such as mine, the Parkland region, could not take such a loss. It is an undeveloped region and it is economically deprived. Many people do not have a net income of $7,000, never mind some of the higher incomes of people in urban centres. Many people live at the poverty level. In my constituency alone, there are seven Indian reserves with an average unemployment rate of 80 per cent to 85 per cent. Such a change would mean a terrible loss in these kinds of areas. This can be seen if one adds all the other increased costs of moving grain, let us say, by trucks, and the increased cost on roads. We would face a terrible loss in Manitoba. It is a real laugh to hear all the statements suggesting that a change in the Crow rate bring benefits to Manitoba.

Mr. Benjamin: Manitoba does not get a nickel.

Mr. Lewycky: In no way will we will see increased opportunities for the processing industries in Manitoba and other provinces because there are tariff barriers and restrictions which will not allow for the easy growth of these industries. In no way will eastern provinces support programs for their own industries when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is promising that the easterners will not suffer anything as a result of the change in Crow. There will be no opportunity for further development of processing industries in the west.

The other fear I have is that if the Crow rate is removed, we can expect the death knell to sound in places like the Port of Churchill and other ports which might otherwise be developed.

As far as Manitoba is concerned, there is no way that the removal of the Crow rate would provide any kind of economic benefit. I was quite troubled this afternoon while listening to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy).

An hon. Member: Propaganda.

Mr. Lewycky: He is the minister who supposedly represents western Canada. I was amazed at his lack of understanding of some of the problems that we face there. An article in the Winnipeg Free Press, dated March 13, 1982, quoted him as saying that the Crow is one of the icons of western ideology. He has a complete lack of understanding. Actually, the Liberal Party is one of the icons in the west. One can find there only a few old pictures of Liberals.

Mr. Benjamin: It's an endangered species.

Mr. Lewycky: There was a meeting which took place in Fort Garry which, I believe, was called a two-day think tank, but it produced nothing but tanked thinking, as far as I can gather from the impact that it had on the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is really detrimental to the west to have the Minister of Employment and Immigration as minister, because he does not seem to understand some of the historic problems that we have faced in the west. Perhaps he should read some of the speeches made by Senator Hazen Argue in the other place. Even as late as November 27, 1981, the senator said that it is unlikely that changing the Crow rate would do much to stimulate the livestock and the processing industries on the prairies. That was his candid assessment of what would happen on the prairies. I think we ought to take cognizance of what the senator said in the other place. In fact, he said:

> I don't intend to let the wool be pulled over my eyes and I don't believe that farmers can afford to have it pulled over theirs, either.

Mr. Benjamin: He is just a sheep, anyway.

Mr. Lewycky: I think Senator Argue was correct in stating that. He is a cabinet minister. The other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated where cabinet ministers should go if they disagreed with government policy. Senator Argue said further that the report prepared by Transport Canada earlier this year concluded that the impact of freight rates on the location of livestock and processing industries is exaggerated. I wish that the other members of cabinet would take cognizance of what some of their own members have said. They should take note of some of the wisdom in their own wisdom bank, rather than in their think tank, in terms of a fair and equitable policy with regard to the movement of grain in the west.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewycky: Let us take a look at some of the specific reasons for arguing that the Crow rate should be retained. The distance over which we must move grain in western Canada to get to port is much greater than in any other competing country. However, in terms of our balance of payments, our grain exports are quite sizeable. It is in our own national interest to ensure that our agricultural economy is properly supported. Other countries do that. The hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) mentioned earlier what competing countries, such as Australia, Argentina and the United States, do in terms of export of their grain. Our situation in western Canada is regionally different. As the Minister of Transport stated in his former report, there are regional diversities. I wish he would recognize these regional diversities and see that they are taken care of.

We should take a look at the whole question of tariffs, at the benefits they have brought to central Canada and how much they have cost other regions of Canada. I said earlier that the manufacturing sector in central Canada was able to develop because of tariffs. There is no manufacturing sector in western Canada to speak of. As a result of these policies and tariffs which enabled the central Canadians to develop their industrial sector, the prairies, with 16 per cent of the population, have been able to develop only 8.1 per cent of the manufacturing jobs.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Lewycky: In anyone's books, this is inequality. This is an illustration of what I mean when I say we should take into consideration some of these other aspects. Certainly, many reports have recommended the retention of the Crow. I simply want to underline the following statement of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall in 1975:

> If once tempering with the statutory (Crow) rate is accepted on condoned or is an item on the bargaining table, all will be lost. For once the subject is on the bargaining table, it will be only a matter of time until it is lost step by step.

In other words, what he said is that the economic forces would inevitably shift the total cost of grain transportation to the farmers. That is not the problem that producers of other commodities face. The coal producer can pass on his transportation costs, and Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan recognizes this. The potash producers can pass on the costs, but the farmers are not able to pass on their costs. They have no control over the price they receive for their grain. The farmers have no control over their input costs, no control over the costs of fertilizer, no control over the costs of energy. Their economy is squeezed; it is a cost-price squeeze. Farmers are always being forced into this vice.

• (1750)

The one item that they have had throughout the years has been the statutory Crow rate. Now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) wants to destroy this and with it destroy the agricultural economy of western Canada.

Arguments have been made about this, such as that if you give the railways more money the railways will do a better job in transportation, that is if you give up the Crow rate. Yet, when you take a look at the facts, you see that the railways have not been doing their job, they have not been living up to their standards. The removal of the Crow rate will not solve this problem.

Mr. Pepin: How do you know?

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I have a quotation here from George McGovern, the former United States senator from South Dakota. Speaking of the situation there, he said "We have a line here in South Dakota so bad that a boxcar fell off the track the other day and the train was standing still." They have variable rates there. Is that the type of transportation system we are trying to model ourselves after?

Mr. Benjamin: They have commercial rates.

Mr. Lewycky: They have commercial rates, as the hon. member says. Changing the Crow rate will only add to the railway's profits, not to improve the transportation of the prairie wheat. We have to keep this in mind when we look at this whole subject.

Some arguments have been made about the increase in grain traffic and the way grain is clogging up the railways. It is said that because of this you have to have railway expansion. Yet if we take a look at some of the statistics, we find that by 1990 the grain that will be marketed out through the west will be only 14 per cent of the traffic. Coal and potash will be the greater commodities marketed there. So, if the percentage of the grain commodity being exported there is going to be reduced, why should we place all the burden of transportation on the backs of the farmers, who already have been hit by this government's policies in so many ways? It is important for us to make sure that we see that our agricultural economy remains healthy, that our agricultural economy continues to thrive and flourish, because that is the only way that we in Canada as an entire country can ensure that we do meet all of our food needs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): May I remind the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, the farmers out west—

Mr. Benjamin: What does a bushel of wheat look like, have you any idea?

Mr. Ferguson: Perhaps I should start off, Mr. Speaker, by advising the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) that I am a farmer, too, from southwestern Ontario. We have produced corn, soybeans, wheat, barley, beef cattle, laying hens. I say that just to have it on the record. I worked on a farm all my life. As a matter of fact, during the years of World War II, I helped my father on many occasions to unload western barley out of the boxcars to take it back to our farm to feed it to livestock, ultimately to assist in the war effort to feed our troops in England and the troops of our allies.

I am delighted to take part in this debate today on a topic of vital interest to many Canadians. It has been an issue of extreme importance for so many years. Like all pieces of legislation that are in constant use, this particular matter should be updated to keep abreast of the modern facilities required to fill the world markets and use fully the productive capabilities of western Canada.

We know the Canadian Constitution was passed today in the British House of Lords. The old British North America Act was amended many times over the years, as required. So, too, must the Crow rate be re-examined to ensure that the farmers of Canada have access to world markets.

I would like to point out that the agri-food strategy report, presented by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in September last, points out that we in Canada can increase our production by a tremendous volume. But what good is this increased production if we do not have an efficient transportation system capable of delivering that product to the port of export or to the Lakehead?

Looking back, it is interesting to note that in 1908 and 1909 the rate from central Saskatchewan to Thunder Bay was about 18 per cent of the price of a bushel of wheat. Then, as wheat prices increased, that rate dipped to about 5 per cent in 1920. The same cost of transportation climbed to about 40 per cent during the 1930s, when the world wheat prices bottomed out. At the present time the price has dropped to about 3 per cent or 4 per cent of the cost of a bushel of wheat.

Surely the time has come when we must ensure that we do have the modern and updated facilities for the increased traffic, to benefit not only the farmers but the total agricultural industry and all the allied services that have an effect on our total economy.

Mr. Benjamin: Agreed.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, we in Canada compete against the farmers in the nation to the south of us, who have a great inland waterway extending into the heartland of the production areas. We have to compete against the unit trains with modern non-stop unloading at some of the Gulf ports. We must also ensure that we provide the incentives here in Canada to modernize the system in a way that will allow us to compete aginst our neighbours to the south of us.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Daudlin): When the House rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) had the floor.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was pointing out that if we as Canadians are to compete against the farmers of the nation to the south of us who have a great inland waterway extending into the heartland of their crop production areas, or if we are to compete against the unit trains with non-stop unloading, then we must ensure that we provide incentives and the modernized systems that allow us in Canada to compete, particularly those people in the prairie provinces.

We are no longer just referring to huge volumes of grain moving on these lines. We are referring to huge volumes of coal, sulphur and other goods and products for export. If we expect to have the services that are required for competition with other goods, I respectfully suggest that an adjustment is required now. I refer to the fact that grain shipments account for about 20 per cent of the traffic to the coast at the present time.

The government's total contribution to grain transportation since 1970 has been $1.7 billion. We have spent over a billion dollars in branch line subsidies in the last decade. We purchased 8,000 hopper cars in 1973, and in 1980-81 we leased another 2,000 hopper cars at an annual cost of about $12 million.

In 1974 we shared half the cost to the railways of $44.8 million for rehabilitating 7,200 boxcars. From 1977 to 1984, we spent or committed $495 million to upgrading and rehabilitating dependent rail lines in the prairie network. Between 1968 and 1982 we spent $23 million for port improvements at Churchill, Manitoba.

We are committed to $30 million for site development for the grain terminal at Prince Rupert, British Columbia. Since 1971 we paid $184 million to subsidize the movement of export flour and grain to Atlantic ports, mostly from elevators in the Georgian Bay area. Certainly the Government of Canada is prepared to commit additional funding over the next several years to assist in the movement of grain.

As a member of this Thirty-second Parliament from the province of Ontario, there is one point I want to make abundantly clear. Many people from western Canada feel that the Crow rate is of tremendous benefit to Ontario. This is no longer the case. In the last few years Ontario has been a net exporter of feed grains and is no longer a beneficiary of the rate. Other areas of eastern Canada do benefit to some extent, and also from the livestock feed freight subsidy that applies to eastern Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

I hope we do not begrudge that assistance to those areas whose potential productivity or diversity of production is limited due to climatic and geographic locations and other conditions. It is also the areas that supplied scores of men from eastern Canada, not only Ontario but other provinces, who travelled west on the old harvest excursions to help with harvest there after the eastern harvest was completed. These were all forms of assistance that were provided to ensure that the harvest was completed in those days when there was not as much competition from other goods moving on the rail lines. We were able to market the grain in a better form than we are today.

The question as to whether or not the Crow rate should be changed was not really an issue until the early 1960s. In 1961, the MacPherson Royal Commission on Transportation acknowledged an emerging railway revenue problem and recommended that subsidies be paid to the railway for losses incurred by reason of continuing utilization of light density lines and the Crow rate. As well, in the 1960s, the branch line rationalization process got under way.

The railways could neither maintain nor reinvest in the large branch line network, with the result that by the early 1970s the system began to deteriorate. In response to this situation, the federal government began to spend large sums of money, as I mentioned earlier, to purchase rolling stock and repair branch lines.

It was in 1975 that the then minister of transport, the Hon. Otto Lang, called for a change to the Crow rate by articulating his "bold approach" concept. The bold approach introduced the notion of Crow benefit which would result in a producer not having to pay the full cost of moving grain by rail in one increase. At that time his initiative faced severe opposition.

In 1975, the American consultant, Mr. Snavely, headed a one man commission to look into the cost of moving grain by rail. His report was released in 1976 and showed that the railways lost $103 million in 1974 for moving grain. His results were generally accepted by the west but no concensus as to who should pay the railways for lost revenue emerged at that time. In 1979, an updated report produced figures for 1977 losses of $160.5 million and a further update produced figures for 1980 which showed losses of $244.4 million.

In 1978, primarily because of transportation difficulties, the Canadian Wheat Board announced that it had to forgo or defer grain sales of approximately $1 billion. As a result, in January, 1979, the board ordered 2,000 hopper cars to be paid for out of producer funds at a cost of $87 million. At the same time, producers were forced to store grain on farms for longer periods and, certainly, interest rates were higher as well.

The result was a realization by many that the existence of the Crow rate was no longer in the producers' best interest. During the fall of 1979 the Crow rate became the major topic of discussion at many of the farm meetings.

Eventually, these discussions emerged mainly between two umbrella organizations; the Western Agricultural Conference and the Prairie Farm Commodity Coalition. These two groups each put forth a position requesting the federal government to address its responsibilities in the area of rail transportation.

Simultaneously, the matter of capacity constraints to the rail system through the mountains placed additional emphasis on the necessity of the railways to earn more money for moving a commodity which represents 20 per cent of the railways' workload but provides only 3.5 per cent of the revenues.

Obviously, something had to change. One year ago, I was pleased to be invited to a meeting here in Ottawa which was called by some of Canada's farm leaders to hear their presentations on this issue. Their opinion was that by talking with each other and with us, as members, as well as with those directly affected, a workable solution could be found. I commend the minister for the action that he has taken in this response and I will be waiting for the recommendations from Professor Gilson which I believe will lay the foundation to enable us to update and modernize a system which will be a credit to this nation.

One point that I cannot agree with, however, is a suggestion by the NDP that we nationalize the CPR. I cannot accept such a far-fetched proposal because when I look at the CPR in my particular area—in fact, the Montreal to Windsor corridor—I find that the lines run parallel in most places and throughout most of that area, while the CNR lines are double tracked. This is a heavily travelled area for both rail lines. Is the NDP suggesting that we close one of these lines which are so heavily used and create a bottleneck which would be as critical to that area as that which we are trying to eliminate through the Rockies in the next few years? Are they suggesting that we nationalize a huge company which provides the only competition to our nationally run railway? Are they suggesting a move which would not improve the service but would most certainly place many people out of work? I strongly disagree with them.

I do agree, however, that the time has come, by any measure of comparison, to re-evaluate a program that has served us reasonably well for the last 85 years. But due to changing times and values, a broader scope of users and a need to compete in world markets, we simply cannot stand still. The Crow rate has served this nation well in the past but if we are to let our system rest on its laurels, we will end up with a system that has rusted on its laurels. Neither the prairie farmers nor Canadians will benefit.

The Government of Canada is taking these initiatives in dealing with the capacity problem in the interest of all Canadians. The whole economy will benefit from the opportunities which will be fulfilled as a result of these initiatives. The people of the three prairie provinces in particular will benefit because they have the capacity to feed a hungry world. They will be supplying those markets. However, as Canadians, we must ensure that the transportation system is capable of handling the volumes of grain and food which is produced to feed those hungry nations. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity to speak tonight on this motion. I would like to congratulate the members of the New Democratic Party for introducing this motion. I think that it is most opportune and that the discussion at this stage is very proper.

I find the process set out by the hon. minister is good and I would like to review it for a moment. I like the proposal, that is provided it works out in the way in which I believe it can. Since I am not a prophet I am not saying that it will, but it is capable of working to the advantage of Canada and western farmers—Canadian farmers for that matter.

The process as set out by the minister in a report from a Ministry of Transport release simply says that the consulation process will lead to a new statutory framework. I think that is axiomatic. If the Crow rate is to be replaced, I say that it certainly has to be replaced with something equally beneficial for those whom it now serves. It should be made statutory not simply a measure which can be changed at will or at the whim of any president of the CPR, or even at the whim of any government, without careful consultation.

The process involves $3.2 billion over the next four years—not $3.2 billion per year, but $3.2 billion over the next four years. This is assumed to be the shortfall between the Crow and the actual cost.

The next step in the process makes the assumption that the money will be paid to the railways. I am sorry to see that because I think that all avenues should be considered in deciding how this will be handled. However the proposal says that the railways will guarantee performance and service related to grain transportation in return for an improved level of financial compensation. I will deal with that point in a few minutes.

The railways will begin extensive investment programs and implement rate adjustments to encourage agricultural processing in western Canada. There will be intensive consultations with the affected parties in the west, which will be completed sometime this spring. Then during the summer, I understand the governments of the four western provinces will have an opportunity to consider those recommendations and to make representations of their own to the federal government and to the people. Finally, the matter will be brought to Parliament in the fall of this year.

It appears the process could work to advantage. There are one or two things I do not like too much about it. I do not like closed-door consultations. I think it would have been far better to admit the press as well as members of various organizations which are interested. However, I have faith in our agricultural leaders, and possibly this will work out. If secrecy is required after representatives of the various grain organizations leave the consultation table, I do not think that would be right at all. These people should have the right to come back and talk to their people and make further representations if that is necessary.

We are putting great faith in the railways, and the CPR in particular. I want to review briefly some of the things which have happened in the past and examine whether there is reason for putting such tremendous faith in the railways carrying out their obligations, whether they are set out in statute or otherwise. Let us go back to the beginning of the railways and when the CPR was offered $25 million and 25 million acres of land, including all its mineral resources, to build a railway across this country. Twenty-five million dollars of about 100 years ago would have a value today of close to $1 billion when we take into account inflation and so forth. The railway received a very large sum of money. In addition to that large sum of money the railway received 25 million acres of land plus all its minerals. That was quite a gift. I do not think we can forget that today, because for that money the CPR promised to build a railway. This is what the agreement says: "perpetual and efficient operation of a railway." That means forever. How has that worked out? The CPR has reneged on passenger service. It ignored passengers for a very long time and finally got rid of them altogether. The CPR treated passengers very shabbily for a number of years and did not want to provide passenger service at all, but it was under an obligation under its agreement to carry passengers. The railway was paid for carrying passengers and, in my view, the Government of Canada had no right to let the CPR out from under that obligation simply by saying, "All right, we will forget about it." The railroad received millions and millions of dollars through mineral resources, and in return it was to operate an efficient railway perpetually. Now the railway has cast off half of that service. I do not think the people can forget that, and I do not think the government should forget it either. Governments have been guilty of not making sure the CPR lived up to that arrangement.

In about 1897 or 1898 the CPR was anxious to secure the rich coalfields of British Columbia. Again it presented a proposition to the government, and that led to the Crow rate. I want to read from the actual bill which was assented to on June 29, 1897. I will not read the whole bill. Although the whole bill is worth reading, I will read just two of its clauses. They read as follows:

> Subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned, the governor in council may grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a subsidy toward the construction of a railway from Lethbridge, in the district of Alberta, through the Crow's Nest Pass to Nelson, in the province of British Columbia (which railway is hereinafter called "the Crow's Nest Line") to the extent of eleven thousand dollars per mile thereof, and not exceeding in the whole the sum of three million six hundred and thirty thousand dollars—

There was another three and a half million dollars paid to the railway to permit it to go into the rich coalfields of British Columbia. For that what did the railway promise to do? It said:

> That the company will construct or cause to be constructed, the said railway upon such route and according to such descriptions and specifications and within such time or times as are provided for in the said agreement—

Mr. Pepin: And it did.

Mr. Taylor: Listen.

—and, when completed, will operate the said railway for ever;

Forever.

Mr. Pepin: It doesn't say with subsidies.

Mr. Taylor: The bill went on to deal with the particular rates that were to be charged. Here is what the railway promised the rate would be: a special rail freight rate was to be applied to the transportation of export grains and flour from shipping points in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to Thunder Bay, Churchill and ports in British Columbia. The Canadian Pacific Railway entered into the Crow's Nest Pass Agreement with the federal agreement in 1897. As part of the agreement, the CPR agreed to maintain the Crow rate in perpetuity. Does that not mean forever? It did not mean just until 1982. It said forever, in perpetuity. The CPR received $3.6 million plus a number of other benefits in return for its promise to build a line into the rich coalfields of British Columbia. When I was a boy I used to wonder why everyone would laugh around the coalmines and say of the government, "Well, that is the CPR, isn't it?" They thought the CPR was the Government of Canada. I am beginning to think that too. The CPR apparently tells the government what to do, not the other way around.

Mr. Blaikie: It always has.

Mr. Taylor: The CPR got out of passenger service after it was paid for getting into it. Now it wants to gets out of the Crowsnest Pass rate which it promised to keep in operation forever. I think that is something of which we should be mindful when we start looking at the proposition today.

I want to deal for a moment with the actual condition of the CPR. Perhaps it is poor. Perhaps it has had tough luck. Perhaps it has been beaten by inflation.

Mr. Nystrom: No, no.

Mr. Taylor: Perhaps it will go on welfare. If it applied, I think it would probably get welfare from the federal government.

An hon. Member: It is about time it went off welfare.

Mr. Taylor: Let us look at the CPR's record. I have here its 1980 record. The CPR got its starts, as I said, with a gift of $25 million and 25 million acres of land, including mineral rights. In addition, it got another $3.6 million to build the line from Lethbridge to the mineral-rich Kootenay Valley in southern British Columbia. From this start it has expanded into a giant corporation, with current assets in 1980 amounting to $4.362 billion. That is only part of it. The company has properties valued at cost totalling $8 billion plus an investment portfolio exceeding $379 million.

Mr. Pepin: That must be a sin.

Mr. Taylor: It has other assets worth over $289 million.

Mr. Pepin: Shame.

Mr. Taylor: According to CP's actual 1980 report on its current accounts, it is making profits on almost everything. It is down a little with respect to truck transportation and one other enterprise, but on everything else profits are way up. The total profit for the year was very good—so much so that the company was able to provide a dividend of $3.89, I believe to the millions of people who invested in it. The only branch that earned less in 1980 than in 1979 was CP Telecommunications and perhaps CP Air. CP Air is going through a bad period and could not be expected to provide much, but it still came up with $2.8 billion. In 1980 the only ones to lose money were CP trucks, CP Rail, CP Telecommunications, CP Air, CP Ships Navigation, miscellaneous hotels, and what have you. Every branch made a profit in 1980 except for CP trucks. They apparently know how to run a railway but they do not know how to run a truck line. They would have been wiser to stay out of the trucking business. They tried to eliminate the competition, but the truckers were too smart. CP is not a poor corporation; it has done exceptionally well. I do not say that it should have lost money. I am a free enterpriser and I like to see people make money. But I also like to see people live up to their agreements and not make their whole purpose in life the pursuit of money.

CP Rail could very well continue operating with the freight rate it agreed to guarantee forever. The profit record shows that it could still operate this way and come out ahead. I think the government has to be very careful about letting the corporation renege again on one of its obligations that it undertook for perpetuity.

I want to deal with some other points now, Mr. Speaker. There is a suggestion, which apparently arises from the annual report, and some farm organizations agree with it, that the shortfall of $3.8 billion should be paid to the railways. I have some misgivings about that. The railways have a pretty bad record of living up to their obligations. If we let them renege on their obligations, as we have done to date, it will be a poor deal and the western farmer in particular will be affected.

In his statement the minister said that there would be a guarantee, but what kind of guarantee, Mr. Speaker? Will it be a guarantee that the railways will not haul coal or sulphur or other minerals and let the wheat wait? I live in a coalmining area and I have seen carload after carload of coal and minerals go by while the wheat already loaded in the cars is not picked up. What kind of guarantee is there that the railways will haul the grain and give the farmers the service that they need?

Agriculture is a big industry in this country, Mr. Speaker. The farmers who raise barley and oats are important; they feed the world. I remember one time being at a meeting where a lawyer got up and said, "I plead for all". Then a minister got up and said, "I pray for all". A farmer got up and he said, "I pay for all." There is a lot of truth in that, Mr. Speaker. The farmer may be a livestock farmer, a beef farmer, a hog farmer, a horse farmer, a barley farmer, a potato or fruit farmer—there are all kinds of agricultural products.

I think the minister and the government should take a long look at agriculture when they are reviewing this plan. It is important that every phase of agriculture receive service. The minister spoke of getting a guarantee from the railway. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has referred to an ironclad guarantee. Well, this guarantee should be double ironclad. Like hundreds of farmers in the west, I do not have faith in the CPR. It has not been fair to the western farmer and it has not lived up to its obligations. Simply paying over the shortfall to the company will not guarantee anything.

Perhaps we should examine the possibility of making the payment to farmers. A payment on an acreage or some other basis would have some merit and should be considered. The farmer could sell his grain wherever he wanted. He could haul it in his truck. He could feed it to his hogs or to his cows. He could send it by truck and compete with the railways. That would make the railways cut the lard out of their operations, if there is any. It would rationalize the whole thing. A lot of things could be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Daudlin): Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I regret it too.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I almost regret that the time of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has expired because I always enjoy listening to him. He has such a colourful way of putting across his views. I should like to make some comment about the approach he has taken to this issue, and, more important, about the approach taken by the member of the New Democratic Party who set down the motion.

What is at issue is whether we are going to make the hard decisions that are necessary in order to ensure that we have a rail transportation system in this country for the 1980s, the 1990s, the year 2000 and beyond that will provide the service required by western Canadian producers, to move their products from the point of production to the point of export or consumption. Are we going to worry about the future of this country, or are we going to continually squabble about the past? I for one opt for the future of this country and not the past, as does the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

A similar and related issue is whether we are going to deal with Canadian problems in a way that will maximize our opportunities, or are we going to squabble amongst ourselves about trying to preserve the status quo? The status quo in western Canada is simply not good enough. There is great potential in western Canada and we must maximize the opportunities there and not squabble about how to preserve the present. Canada has always been a land of opportunity and we must maximize that opportunity.

Those are the issues involved in the Crow rate, the VIA Rail argument and so many other aspects of the discussions that we have had in the House over the last few months. I refer to the issues related to the budget, about whether we are going to get inflation under control or let it get out of control, about whether we are going to take the hard decisions that are necessary if we are going to have a prosperous future. Are we going to do these things or continue squabbling about things past until we find ourselves in a position where we cannot take advantage of the opportunities that we have and cannot compete with the rest of the world? There is no reason whatsoever why Canadians cannot be at the top of the pile rather than half way down it.

Let us look at the Crow rate. What was it originally designed to do? Was it originally designed to be a subsidy? I suggest that it was not meant to be a subsidy. It was meant to be a stabilizing factor, so that farmers could count on a stable rate for the transportation of their product to markets across time. They could count on the rate because it would not fluctuate wildly. Were farmers from 1897 to 1925 to 1940 receiving subsidies from the railroads or from taxpayers? The answer to that is no, they were not. During the period from 1897 to 1925, the rates for handling grain were in fact somewhat below the statutory Crow rate. Farmers paid the full shot for moving grain. This was the same from 1925 and through the 1930s when costs and prices declined dramatically. Farmers were not receiving a subsidy from anyone, and they did not ask for a subsidy from anyone. They were paying the full shot up to 1940. In 1950 the situation was the same. Farmers paid the full shot of moving grain, and they were not asking for a subsidy or a handout.

In 1940 wheat was selling for $28 per metric ton. If we look at the cost of moving grain at that time, which was $4.28 per tonne, the relationship was approximately 17 per cent—the cost to farmers of moving their grain was about 17 per cent of the price of the tonne of grain which was being moved. In 1950, because of the inflationary period during the Second World War and shortly thereafter, the cost as a result of the statutory Crow dropped to 7.2 per cent. From 1950 to 1970 the relationship held constant; the relationship between the price of grain and the statutory Crow stayed at about 7.2 per cent. The cost to farmers relative to the price they were receiving for wheat stayed at about 7 per cent, which was down from 17 per cent during an earlier time. In 1980, when economic conditions changed dramatically in all western countries, the percentage of the cost of moving grain dropped from 7.2 per cent to 2.2 per cent. In the period from 1940 to 1980, the percentage of the total grain price, which in 1980 was $219 per tonne as opposed to $28 per tonne in 1940, dropped from 17.2 per cent to 2.2 per cent. Especially during the period from 1970 to 1980, a very real subsidy was obtained, whether it was a subsidy from the railroads or from Canadian taxpayers, as a result of the purchase of grain hopper cars and other infrastructure, branch line subsidies or whatever.

If we look at the problem of subsidies, we find that, in the absence of remedial action, it is forecast at present the cost to farmers of transporting grain under the statutory rate, which was 20 per cent of actual cost in previous years, will fall to 12 per cent in 1985 and 7 per cent in 1990. I think that is important and relevant.

I have heard the arguments of hon. members opposite, which I think are false, that one reason for the Crow rate was to offset eastern tariffs which protected eastern manufacturers, that the protective tariff was absorbed by western farmers or westerners generally, even by people in British Columbia, and that if eastern manufacturing was to be subsidized by Canadians, then western agriculture should be equally subsidized. Times are changing. We have now entered into a general agreement on tariffs and trade which will substantially reduce tariffs from 1981 to 1985; indeed on some products they will be gone altogether. Is it a valid argument that the justification for the Crow is the existence of tariffs to protect eastern manufacturers? If protective eastern manufacturer tariffs are being eliminated, should there not be an adjustment to the Crow?

I am not a lawyer, but when conditions change dramatically in the area of contract law, is it not true—and I am sure the lawyers in the House will correct me if I am wrong—that it can be raised as grounds for reopening the contract? If conditions change dramatically enough, such that one party is put at an extreme disadvantage with regard to another in a contract, is it not grounds for reconsidering the contract? In some cases I understand that it has been the case.

I would suggest that conditions have changed dramatically. What has changed dramatically? We went from very low rates of inflation and very low increases in the costs of doing business during the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s, to very high rates of inflation during the 1970s, which raised the cost to farmers of moving grain and in all other areas, such as the costs of fuel, seed grain, heating and labour. The costs of all these items rose, but the cost of rail transportation did not. If companies are expected to provide reliable transportation to move products to market, it seems only fair that they should be allowed to earn a fair rate of return, as the hon. member for Bow River indicated earlier. He believed that a fair rate of return should be available. He asked whether he could rely on CPR to move grain. What would happen, for example, if we in the House of Commons in our wisdom decided to tell Ottawa taxi-drivers that for some reason they had to transport Members of Parliament from the House of Commons to their residences at a rate which was only 20 per cent of the cost they could charge anyone else in Ottawa? How long would Mr. Speaker wait if he called for a taxicab from the House of Commons and said that it was for a Member of Parliament?

Mr. Blaikie: What would happen if they were given half of Ottawa?

Mr. Kempling: What would happen if we paid for their cars and for their gasoline?

Mr. Evans: It would be an extremely long time, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Bow River was concerned about moving grain, and I am concerned about moving grain. I want to see western agriculture and manufacturing being given the greatest possible opportunity. If the railways are able to obtain full tariff for moving potash, coal or other products, if the rail transportation system is already overloaded or running close to capacity and they had a free choice, what kinds of products would they move? They would move the ones on which they get full tariff, and in the case of taxi drivers, they would take passengers other than Members of Parliament.

• (2050)

The grain is going to sit on the siding, and that is not acceptable. We have to find a way to ensure there is an economic benefit to the transporters to move that grain, and clearly right now there is none. The railroads lose money year after year moving grain when they can be making money moving something else. That is a not a situation difficult to understand for anyone who thinks about economic problems. If we do not allow a fair rate of return on every aspect of a company's business, it will take those areas where it does not make money and shove them aside. Western grain farmers are going to become second-class citizens, and we cannot allow that because we have a great potential in the grain growing regions of western Canada. The grain has to be moved.

In the last two or three years, Mr. Speaker, I have heard it said that because we could not guarantee the movement of grain we have lost as much as $1 billion to $1.5 billion worth of foreign sales.

Mr. Blaikie: If the railways had not been on strike.

Mr. Evans: Whether it be potash from Saskatchewan government mills, which is competing with grain growers in Saskatchewan and paying the full tariff, by the way—

Mr. Friesen: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member can ask his question at the end of my remarks. There is another point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member for Bow River said, it is important that those who come to an agreement live up to the agreement; there is more than just money involved, there is honour involved, the obligation to live up to an agreement. I ask all members to consider the following. Last September an agreement was reached between two parties, the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta. One of those parties is now saying that the agreement is no longer valid. I am not saying it is wrong, but why are they saying that? They are saying it because economic conditions have changed dramatically; the world price of oil has dropped. So, after nine months one party to the agreement says it is no longer valid, we have to renegotiate. And they are taking unilateral steps to force the other party to renegotiate.

I am not condemning that, Mr. Speaker. There might be good and valid reasons for it. However, I am saying that we have one nine-month-old agreement on which it is all right to renegotiate, but we have another agreement which is 84 years old which it is not all right to renegotiate. If economic conditions change, then certainly we are big enough in this country to open our eyes and see the consequences involved if we do not look realistically at the problem and renegotiate agreements which are totally and hopelessly out of date and out of touch with reality.

Were we to stay with the Crow rate as it is now, Mr. Speaker—the total transportation system is going to cover its costs, no two ways about that—what is going to happen is that because grain farmers are not paying the full cost of moving their grain, the loss the railroads incur is going to be passed on to someone else. That will be the people who move potash, coal and other products. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it fair to ask the people moving those other products to absorb that additional cost which in turn may make them uncompetitive in world markets, and which may cost the jobs of people who work in the potash mines, coal fields and in the production of agricultural products not covered by the Crow? Is it fair to Canadian taxpayers generally to ask them to pick up part of that cost? These are questions which have to be asked, and the Minister of Transport has asked the questions.

When I was at the University of British Columbia my colleagues in the transport centre there were telling me the Crow rate has to be examined. No transport minister has had the courage to stand up and take that bull by the horns except for this one, and I applaud him for it. I think the process he has established is a fair one, and we will come up with a fair resolution of this problem. We will have the basis for developing an efficient and effective transportation system to increase and enhance the prosperity which is there to be had in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Daudlin): I regret to advise the House that the hon. member, having used up all of his allotted time, can only be asked a question with the unanimous consent of the House.

An hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Daudlin): There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) said the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) should be applauded for his actions. I think he is probably the only person doing so because if the minister were to come to western Canada today I am sure he could not beat Al Capone in an election. That is about how popular the minister is, Mr. Speaker. It strikes me as rather curious to hear four or five Ontario members such as the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield) and the member who has just spoken, get up and tell us how they are going to solve all the problems in western Canada. If the Liberal Party is so wise or, as the member says, the best in the west, why are there only two Liberals remaining in western Canada? I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if my constituents are any indication, those two members will not be here come 1983 or 1984.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: As my friend says, it could not happen to a nicer guy if it happens to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy).

In addition, Mr. Speaker, it strikes me as rather odd hearing the hon. member for Ottawa Centre speak about the west as if we were back in the caveman's age and hauling our grain to market on this rickety old transportation system which has not changed since 1897 or 1891. That is the impression he tries to leave with the House, that we have not modernized, we have not improved the branchlines or kept up the main line. I am not sure if he is aware, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of western Canada, the governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada have supplied some 14,000 hopper cars to move western Canadian grain. We indeed have modernized the system on the prairies. The Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, for example, has 1,400 cars moving potash out of our province right now. The reason they have done this is that the railways went on strike many, many years ago in regard to moving grain from the prairies. The last time the CNR bought a boxcar to move grain was about 1947. For the CPR it was way back in 1951. Despite these facts, Mr. Speaker, we have a government across the way which stands up and defends the railways. We heard an excellent speech in the House tonight from the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). He spoke about the CPR, concerning all the money it had received, and the promises and agreements it had made to move the farmers' grain forever at a rate known as the Crow rate in this country.

I think, because of the speeches that I have heard here today and the incredible ignorance one sees exhibited on the government side of the House, that it might be very useful to spend a few minutes going over the Crow rate and presenting to the House, in a very positive way, what my constituents are saying to me and what the feelings of western Canadians are. I do this because the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Flis) rose in the House this afternoon and admitted that what the government was doing was a very unpopular decision, to use his words. I also remember the Speech from the Throne in April of 1980, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said to the country that despite the fact that the government did not have any elected members from the three western provinces, it would listen to western MPs in the House of Commons. I have gone through two years in this Parliament, and I wonder where the listening is evident, for the government is surely not hearing, if it is trying to listen. No matter where I go in my constituency, whether I speak to farmers or urban dwellers, people in my riding want the Crow rate kept. They see it as a part of the confederation bargain. They see it as a part of our nationhood. Ontario got the tariff protection. Ontario got freight rates which benefited the province. We got the Crow rate in the prairies.

Perhaps it might be useful to spend just a few minutes reviewing briefly the history of the Crow. Transportation has always been a part of national policy in this country, and it should be a part of public policy in Canada. If one looks back to 1881, at that time Canada needed a national railway to link central Canada with the west coast in British Columbia. A deal was struck with the railway companies, back in 1881. In return for building a railway to the west coast, the government gave the railways $25 million at that time, which would be worth a lot more now, of course, because the value of the dollar has really diminished in the one hundred and some odd years. As well, the government gave the CPR 25 million acres of land with mineral rights. It gave the CPR many tax exemptions in addition. However, that was the deal and, in return for all the gifts and concessions, the railway was built to open this country and tie the west coast with central Canada.

Some 16 years later, in 1897, the federal government once again wanted to build a railroad. This time, it wanted to build a railway in the southeastern British Columbia end of the Crowsnest Pass. Therefore, once again, the government of the day said, "We will have to strike a deal. We will give you something if you will build a railway."

An hon. Member: And they gave.

Mr. Nystrom: The government of the day decided to give the CPR 43.6 million and $3.7 million worth of land. In return, the CPR would do two things. First of all, it would build a railway into southeastern British Columbia. It would also guarantee that the rates on grain moving out of the prairies would be guaranteed for the settlers in the prairies of the day and that rates and settlers' effects moving from central Canada into the west would be regulated for the settlers who were opening up western Canada. That was the deal in 1897.

The hon. member for Bow River has spoken in detail concerning benefits granted to the CPR. One can now look at the CPR and see how it has benefited from this massive deal over the years. The CPR is probably the biggest welfare bum that we have in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: If we had done the wise thing over the years, which any investment person or businessman would have done, we would have taken equity in that railway and the CPR would have become a public utility many years ago and could served the Canadian people.

I would like to continue the history of the Crow, and I hope the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will listen to this. During World War I, the agreement was suspended. By 1925 the CPR, to the surprise of no one, had persuaded the Liberal prime minister of the day, Mackenzie King, to get rid of the agreement, to cancel the agreement, to throw it out, because the CPR was saying, "We will lose money". That was way back in 1925.

An hon. Member: Same old song.

Mr. Nystrom: But what happened in 1925 is something that I hope will happen today, 57 years later, in 1982. From the west, back in 1925, Members of Parliament representing farming and labour got up and debated, arguing to save the Crow. Because Mackenzie King needed political support in western Canada in order to maintain his government, he decided to relent, to call an agreement an agreement, and to save the Crow rate.

At that time, a couple of amendments were made which were very important. The first amendment was that the railways could not tamper with the rates. In other words, there was a fixed rate for the movement of the farmers' grain on all lines moving the grain out to the ports. The other principle was that there should be equal rates for equal distance. In other words, a farmer in a little town in northern Saskatchewan, like Porcupine Plain in the riding of McKenzie, could ship grain to market for the same price as a person a couple of hundred miles south of the city of Weyburn because they were the same distance from the seaport. That was a very important principle. It meant that the railways could not set social policy by playing off one community against the other.

The other important result from the Crowsnest agreement back in 1925 was that the farmers were given a delivery system and elevators were built. An entire social and economic structure began to flower and flourish across the prairie provinces because there was a fixed rate for the movement of grain. There were no variable rates, so the railways could not play any games. A farmer could pick up the law books of Canada and he would know that he would be charged 18, 19 or 21 cents per bushel for the movement of his grain to the seaport.

What will result from the plan of the Liberal Party which sits across the way? First of all, the Crow will go. So said the Minister of Transport, when one has stripped away all the rhetoric, the flowery wording, the prose and the poetry in his announcement back in February. The minister will do three things. First of all, he will fix a rate for the railways in the statutes. He assures us that the railways of this country will receive guaranteed rates for moving the grain in this country. The railways instead of the farmers will have a statutory rate in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Nystrom: The second principle in the Liberal plan is that the producer should pay more. The farmer will pay more to move grain to market. The third principle in the Liberal plan is that there should be no fixed rate for the farmers of Canada. What will be missing, first of all, will be fixed rates under the Crow and, second, there will be no guarantee of equal charges for transporting grain equal distances.

What will be the consequences? The consequences will be very simple. In a few years' time, the effective rate for a farmer moving grain might be doubled or tripled. It will eventually go up maybe 10 or 20 times the present price a farmer pays to move his grain. This will mean that small farmers will be forced off the land. The minister may call that efficient. He may call it economy of scale. However, whatever he calls it, ordinary farmers in my riding will suffer. They will be pushed off the land because they will not be able to afford to farm.

The second consequence, when one considers variable rates, will be that the railway, the CPR, will determine social policy in this country because it will have the right to decide the rate from a certain town to a certain branch line compared to another town on a secondary main line, compared to a third town on a main line. If the rate will be, say, 10 cents or 20 cents a bushel higher on a branch line, farmers will obviously start hauling their grain to a secondary line or a main line, to a different town, to a different community. Eventually, the elevator will close and the town will fold. The CPR will be making social and economic policy in this country. I say to Your Honour that that is not good enough and it is not right.

I want to mention two other points. The hon. member for Ottawa Centre went on at great length about the importance of being competitive and the importance of being efficient. I agree with him. It is very important that we be competitive and efficient, that we modernize the grain transportation system in western Canada. But I want to say to the member for Ottawa Centre that when we look at the Crow rate we must compare that in terms of a benefit to our farmers with what American farmers, Australian farmers and Argentinian farmers and European and other farmers are getting in other parts of the world. We are in tremendous competition with those countries.

If we look south of the border, for example, we find the Americans have subsidized the grain farmers massively—the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) knows this—in the program they have in the Missouri and Mississippi barge river systems. I think it was about $8 billion or $9 billion that was put into it by the government of the United States of America. They have done that, not only in the building of those systems but in their maintenance, to the tune of over half a billion dollars a year. Judge Emmett Hall said it was about $1 billion a year in terms of payments from the American government to maintain the transport system in the United States of America. From what I hear, in talking with senators and Congress members in the United States, it is not the intention of the American government to diminish those subsidies or to remove them. In other words, if we diminish what we pay in terms of an operating grant or a subsidy to our farmers in terms of the Crow rate and if the Americans do not, then we will be all that less competitive in the world scene, and we will probably sell less grain in the world.

Mr. Speaker, about five weeks ago I had a chance to go to Brussels and speak with the people in the European Common Market. I found that the Europeans give massive subsidies to their farmers. Once again, if they continue to subsidize their farmers and if we reduce the subsidy to our farmers, our farmers will be less productive and will probably sell less grain on the world market. That is important, that is important to all of us in this country, not just to farmers but to people in the cities—in Winnipeg, in Halifax, in Montreal, in Toronto or in Brantford or elsewhere—because the export of grain is a major benefit to all of us. In fact, in the first 11 months of 1981 our exports of grain were some $5 billion. That has a tremendous impact on the over-all wellbeing of all of us as Canadians. Lo and behold, we find the Government of Canada has not done any major studies whatsoever to assess the impact of reducing the Crow rate benefits to western Canada, on the over-all economy, or on the Canadian dollar, on the balance of payments, or on unemployment, or on any of these issues.

Mr. Speaker, if you look at it just from a competitive point of view, it is very important to all of Canada that we keep the Crow rate and keep it firm in law when other countries around the world give other subsidies to their grain producers. If you look at it from a bureaucratic point of view, the Crow rate system is probably the least costly and the most efficient way to help the grain farmer of any country in the world. We do not need hundreds of bureaucrats sending out cheques to farmers or assessing the income of farmers or assessing the income of the railways. All we need to do is to fix by statute the rate which we have had now for many years, and have that as our way of helping the grain farmers in western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, more and more people are becoming more and more concerned about the lack of real democracy. Once again we see the ugly head of hypocricy rearing itself in this Crow debate. We find a minister wanting to give to his cabinet, through order in council powers, the right to negotiate future increases in what the farmers will have to pay for the sale of grain. So in the future farmers will not have any direct input through their Members of Parliament from western Canada. Farmers will have to rely on the generosity of the sensibility of a federal government to set a reasonable rate for the shipment of this grain.

Mr. Speaker, that is like sending a skunk into the henhouse to collect your eggs. It is no wonder that more and more western Canadians are becoming alienated from the federal institutions that all of us in the House would like to keep, improve and democratize in the years that lie ahead. It is very dangerous that this government wants, once again, to take away from us our rights as Members of Parliament, representing our people, to get up and represent them in the House.

Mr. Blaikie: Thank God it is a statutory right and they cannot take it away, like VIA, without debate.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that means that through the waving of a magic wand the Minister of Transport can decide to double the Crow rate, to triple the Crow rate, to put it up by ten times. Look at what they did with VIA Rail. They decided to get rid of all kinds of rail lines for passenger service. We did not have the right to have a committee look at it or study it. Members elected from western Canada did not have the right to get up in the House of Commons and vote—to vote on a bill to reduce the service to this country by VIA Rail.

I think that is dangerous, Mr. Speaker. It is giving awesome powers to government, awesome powers to bureaucrats and regulatory agencies, powers that are dangerous in a democratic society.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport was in Delisle very recently and got a little preview of the feelings on the prairies. If he is serious about holding this country together, perhaps he will change the bill that he is going to bring into this Parliament next fall and guarantee the Crow for western Canadian farmers.

Mr. Speaker, the government has been talking about all the grants to railways. We have given hundreds of millions of dollars to the CPR. We have the CNR, which is supposed to be a publicly owned people's railway. I suggest, in closing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I would remind him that his allotted time has expired.

May I give some information to the House. There seems to be an agreement to recognize the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) for eight minutes; the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) for seven minutes; and then conclude with the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the eight minutes allotted to me I can say all that is necessary. First of all, I have heard the word "subsidy" in this so-called Crow debate too many times to sit silent. Let me say once again that there is no such thing as subsidy in the Crow rates. They are maximum rates. During most of the history of the railways in the whole of Canada, the freight rates paid by the farmers under the Crow agreement were the main profit source of the railways. For decades, 90 per cent of the profits came from the shipping of grain to foreign markets. We carried the people of Ontario and of southern Quebec; we carried the people of British Columbia on our backs, when they were losing money in those areas because of the competition of ships, or trucks that carried goods across the prairies, and when most had a losing operation by taking a profit out of the farmers.

I would prefer the word "subsidy" not used, because it is not a subsidy—and the record shows it.

In 1967, after ten years of intensive study by a royal commission, it was admitted to the House by the then minister of transport that there need be no more mention of the Crow in the House because we had proved for ten years that there were no losses on the Crow rates. These are the facts. No more should "subsidy" be talked about.

Mr. Speaker, a month ago I tried to steer this debate to what I thought was the crux of the situation. I think it has occurred several times today. Rightly or wrongly, the Crow rate in the minds of westerners is part of our Magna Carta, protecting our rights for what we did in opening up the west. No one is going to change that. It is just as sacred as is a constitution that lasts a thousand years. That does not mean it cannot be discussed; but do not try to push it across us that because the railways said they are losing money on the Crow we have to change a solemn agreement made long ago.

I am not going to go into any serious discussion about the Crow. Enough has been said. In my remarks a month ago I made very clear the minimum that would have to be done before there could be discussion. Before the minimum is done, it will be at least 20 years from now. Therefore, the discussion led off by the minister's announcement a few months ago is really irrelevant.

What we are doing here today is curious. When the debate was led off by the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), I thought he was making an effort, which was unusual for him, to be constructive and to try to get people to sit down and discuss this rationally. All of a sudden the minister from Winnipeg, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) suddenly launched a direct frontal attack on the NDP.

I was watching the debate and wondered what was going on. The next speaker was from Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). He smelled something irregular. When you find a minister of the Crown attacking the NDP, knowing how much they owe to the NDP for these last 15 years, you wonder. That member got up and told the story about two cats in Noah's Ark. Members know the story. It is as old as the hills. How are you going to keep the population down in a cramped little ark? Noah appointed a couple of giraffes to look into all the corners and make sure there was no funny business. When they ended the long trip and were going ashore, all the animals left the ark two by two. They were thanked for their consideration for each other. At the end of the row two cats came out.

An hon. Member: We told that story earlier.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I am repeating the story to freshen your minds and to make clear what is going on here. When you have a situation where two cats appear to be fighting in the spring, common sense and experience tells you that they are not always fighting.

When the fight developed this afternoon, I thought it was funny that these two cats should be fighting. When I heard the story being told by the hon. member for Saskatoon West, I thought his intuition was right. It is spring.

All this talk today is only for one purpose. There is a Saskatchewan election in the offing. We wait minute by minute to see when it is going to be announced. It was obvious what the Liberals were doing. How could they help their allies in Saskatchewan? They could not help them by attacking the Conservatives. The only thing they could do was to crucify one of their loyal members. At one time he was the member for Assiniboia. He was the cat who tried to tell the farmers 15 years ago they had to believe in user-pay. He saw his boss, the former minister of transport, go down the drain. He went out and became the Liberal leader. He said he had changed his mind and was now for retention of the Crow. You can imagine Liberal cabinet ministers going out in public and crucifying this Liberal leader in Saskatchewan, saying he was not for retention of the Crow, he was a good loyal Liberal, and what Otto says he follows.

An hon. Member: Otto, is he still around?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): He is still around. He is vice-president of a grain company. I am saying that something funny is going on here. When you see two cats fighting, do not always believe what you see. We are simply going through the preliminary ritual rhumba of an election in Saskatchewan. It is absolutely necessary that the Liberals appear to be opposed to the NDP. If they are not, how are the Liberals out there to know what to do? Now you see the situation, and I leave the answer to the public.

Why is this going on? It is simple to explain. There will be an election in Saskatchewan. What you hear and what you see ain't necessarily so.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important debate we are having on this, an NDP opposition day. It is important for many reasons. After having listened to the debate, I find it unfortunate that there should be so much rhetoric and so little light shed on the problem. In many ways it is the responsibility of the government to shed light on this problem.

We all know there is a problem. The railways are not receiving enough money from the movement of grain to adequately compensate them and, as they tell us, ensure that they have enough capacity to move the raw materials that western Canada is capable of producing. Everyone realizes that, including the provinces.

The three prairie provinces have been involved. They have either bought or leased hopper cars. The federal government, to its credit, has recognized the problem. It has been involved in purchasing hopper cars and in a boxcar rehabilitation program. The producers have recognized the problem and, through the Canadian Wheat Board, have bought hopper cars to assist with capacity.

The lead speaker for the government was the minister from western Canada, the only elected member of the cabinet from western Canada, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). I found it unfortunate that he did not set a little higher tone for the debate. He talked about enormous export increases for western Canada as a result of changing the Crow.

A lot of producers and members of this House would have been very interested to hear him tell us where these enormous increases will come from. He could have explained to us and the producers why a change in the Crow will have the effect of increasing exports. If it is going to increase exports, everyone would be in favour, but they would like to know why. We would also like to have been told that when we have the increased capacity to move grain and raw materials to export position, the government will be willing to follow through and look after Canadians in terms of the way we trade with other countries. We all know we had serious problems in the last series of GATT negotiations and how they ended up. It is true that many tariff barriers were lowered. For a period of eight years we are going to move to lower tariffs. We also know there are many non-tariff barriers which prevent Canadians from competing in markets such as the European Common Community and Japan.

If our government had seen fit to see that agriculture was better represented at those negotiations, it would be a lot easier for producers and members from western Canada to have some faith and have trust in what the government is doing.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) pointed out that in many ways it is interesting that when we have this debate on a purely western issue the government does not really have any western members to stand up and talk about what it is intends to do in terms of western Canada. Today we heard from a parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) who was born in Saskatchewan but has lived in eastern Canada for a long time. A lot of western people watching this debate on TV and subsequently looking at Hansard will find it curious that that kind of member has to stand up on behalf of the government and tell us why in western Canada we have to do things differently.

In many ways I find it unfortunate that we should have the rancour, bickering and politicking going back and forth that we had today. That does not shed any light or give guidance to people genuinely concerned about the issue from a factual point of view.

That obligation does not end at the federal level. If we set a proper tone for the discussion and discussed it in terms of the issues and facts, it will be reflected back to the people we represent. On the same basis, the provincial governments have a responsibility. I find what the Premier of Saskatchewan said, as long ago as 1977, unfortunate. I will quote from an interview broadcast on CBC telelvision on Friday, May 20, 1977, close to five years ago. He said:

• (2130)

Because we believe that farmers are entitled to the Crow rate but we think that under certain circumstances, at some future time, the case might be made for increasing the level for Crow, provided that it was given the same statutory protection.

Clearly, as long as five years ago, the Premier of Saskatchewan was suggesting that there could be changes in the Crow. We all know that in the last four or five months he has continued to say that he is prepared to look at changing the level of the Crow. Yet when it comes time to review that, he takes an entirely opposite position.

I think it is unfortunate in many ways because, as I said, it does not shed a lot of light or provide much insight into the problem. It only confuses the issue.

This is a very serious matter for western Canada. It will have a profound effect on us for many years to come. I think it is the obligation of everyone, particularly the government since it is responsible for governing the country, to see that this decision is made with as much diligence as we can provide in Parliament.

I feel it is important to repeat that it is unfortunate today that we could not have had a discussion at a different level with respect to these problems and provided some solutions which would increase our productivity and our ability to contribute to Canada, instead of the politicking and rhetoric which we have witnessed.

I would like to close by simply saying that we all agree that there is a problem. I believe that it is up to us all to see that this problem is solved in a fashion which will benefit western Canadians with the best possible results. If this is achieved, it will result in a great benefit to all of Canada.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will try to maintain the high degree of debate which the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) longs for.

This is chapter two in our series on western rail transportation and the Crow rate. I am sure that there will be many other chapters before we come to the end of this debate—

An hon. Member: You can be sure of that.

Mr. Pepin: —hopefully, by the fall, when we will be in a position to give westerners a much better statute for transportation of their grain than they have now.

At present, they have a statute which obliges them to pay only half a cent per ton mile but there is no equivalent obligation on the part of the railways to transport the grain. This is the root of the problem which we are faced with now. This is why the federal government had to take action in the recent past and buy hopper cars and proceed to branch line rehabilitation along with the other events which have taken place in recent years. I read recently that the Crow rate was dead from the moment the federal government had to begin buying hopper cars.

An hon. Member: I think so.

Mr. Pepin: During the debate on February 26 I tried to explain why we have to enhance the condition of the main line in the west and why we believe that the farmers will have to make a greater contribution to the transportation of their grain than they do now. I tried to answer the questions as to what guarantees the railways would have to give, which would be immensely greater than they give now.

Of course, I emphasized the great contribution that the federal government would be making through adding $1.3 billion to the $1.8 billion for four years already committed by it to grain transportation.

What has happened since our announcement on February 8 in Winnipeg? A moment ago, one of the members of the Conservative Party complained that they were not given much attention. The reason for that is quite obvious. We are sympathetic to their position because they are totally divided and, being charitable people, we do not want to exploit that situation. That is why we pick on our friends in the NDP, because at least they are offering a target which the Conservatives, unfortunately, are not.

I am just pointing out to the hon. member for Portage-Marquette that it is the NDP which have provided the opposition to us on this matter. It is not particularly the federal NDP either; opposition has come primarily from the Saskatchewan provincial NDP partly because of a certain election—as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) indicated—which may take place in that particular province in the near future.

I have found what they have been saying to be rather interesting and I have been following what has been said in all the papers. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am of the class of '63 in the House—I recognize I have been on holidays for nearly seven years—but for the past 20 years I have seen my party subjected to the daily moral reprimands of those political monks and nuns who form the New Democratic parliamentary wing. Well, I have news for you. They are not beyond temptation and they are not beyond sin. We have had an illustration of that today. They have a way of occasionally powdering figures and powdering concepts, which is really their trademark. We saw evidence of that today. They have found a way to distort the 1880 and 1897 agreements, the Canadian Pacific and Government of Canada railway construction agreement of 1880 and the Crowsnest agreement of 1897. I do not need to display my intellectual capacity because these distortions have been proven in many books and articles. There is a recent one on Sifton which corrects all the interpretations made by the member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), who looks like a Rhodes scholar and probably was one. What the NDP are repeating today are perceptions which have been found to be incorrect in history and which a number of authors have debunked.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the shares in Power Corporation.

Mr. Pepin: You see, that is a very intelligent argument. It has been used in Saskatchewan. Somebody said that it was because I served on the board of Power that I was supporting CP in this matter since Power has shares in CP. This is nasty, brutish, short and particularly immoral because when I was on the board of Power it did not have a share in CP. These are the kinds of arguments that are made by those saintly people over there who take pride in being superior to everyone else and in this particular instance, as in many, really lie. I find that remark particularly disagreeable and nasty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Tell us about Ottawa Pioneer Grain. Tell us that has nothing to do with this.

Mr. Pepin: We have heard again this afternoon certain interpretation of the meaning of the Hall Commission. Hall has suddenly become a great expert on the Crow. When you read the book, you find he has hardly four or five pages on the subject, and some of it is contradictory. Nevertheless, this is the rewriting of history that the members from the NDP resort to. There is a quote which I will have to refer to next time, a feuilleton, which says that this government will introduce the variable rates in Saskatchewan. This is being repeated every day. The Prime Minister was in Saskatchewan recently and said that if western farmers do not want variable rates, there will be no variable rates. They keep repeating that, and I have it here. It reads:

> The Pepin plan eliminates a fixed rate in law for the movement of grain and it eliminates equal rates for equal distance.

That is not true. I hope that it is parliamentary, when it is true, to say, and there is no other way to say it, that it is a lie.

Mr. Nielsen: Like double tracking.

Mr. Pepin: That is true. It is being done now.

To continue with this statement, it said:

> In doing so, it threatens the social and economic fabric of rural Saskatchewan.

So the introduction of the variable rates which most probably will not be introduced—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Most probably?

Mr. Pepin: We have not done it. The point I want to make is that that concentration or consolidation is a phenomenon which has already taken place in Saskatchewan. Perhaps a few figures will illustrate that. The number of permits in the west has gone done from 200,000 to 140,000. The sizes of farms have grown. There has been a reduction in the number of country elevators from 5,200 in 1970 to 3,090 now. The number of delivery points has also been reduced, from 1,835 in 1970 to 1,245 now. There has been a reduction in the number of grain companies. That consolidation which hon. members opposite fear we might bring about already exists in the west. This is not something that the "dirty" Liberals or "nasty" Liberals or "immoral" Liberals are going to create. This is something which already exists. Why does it exist? It exists for a number of reasons. The economics of primary elevators is one of those reasons. As elevators have become obsolete in the west they have been replaced by bigger ones with better health standards, better working conditions and what not. Indeed, some smaller elevators have disappeared and a number of social entities have been downgraded because of their disappearance. That is a fact of life. This was not created by variable rates or a reduction of the Crow rate, which has not yet taken place.

• (2140)

I love to read at night, and I have been reading some material from Mr. Justice Hall. He said this:

> Rural electrification has no doubt had the most significant positive social impact on rural life ... Due to the ability to keep bread, fresh vegetables and fruits for a longer period, these commodities were purchased in greater quantity, farther from home leading to the closing of local bakeries and stores.

The phenomenon of consolidation has been studied by Mr. Justice Hall. I repeat, it did not take place today. It will not take place in the future. It has already taken place. It is due to a number of factors, some of them economic and some of them social. For example, some consolidation has taken place by virtue of action taken by the province of Saskatchewan. It is the Saskatchewan government which has presided over the concentration of schools and the elimination of schools where there were not enough students. It is the Government of Saskatchewan which has contributed to the concentration of social services, hospital services and the like. I have all the figures here for those who would care to have them.

Mr. Blais: They don't care.

Mr. Pepin: This consolidation has also been the will of the people of Saskatchewan. It was not imposed on them. This afternoon we were told we presided over the destruction of rural life in Saskatchewan—for something we have not done yet, by the way—because of something which took place when the Crow was still in existence. Hon. members opposite should think a little bit.

Mr. Blais: Impossible.

Mr. Pepin: Hon. members should listen to what Mr. Justice Hall said on this particular point because it is beautiful. This concentration of rural life in Saskatchewan, as he said:

—took place, not as a part of a planned development—

Not because of nasty politicians.

Mr. Nystrom: Liberal politicians.

Mr. Pepin: Listen to that scholar.

—but as a result of many people making individual decisions on where they wished to shop, do business and socialize.

It was because they wanted to do it.

It is the people and the spirit of the people which gives the community viability, not the railways nor the elevators.

Consolidation is a decision of the people in Saskatchewan. They made these decisions before there was any possibility of reducing the Crowsnest rate or of having variable rates. And again, that decision has not yet been taken. I cannot judge all the things members of the New Democratic Party do, but in this matter they are really misinforming the public when they say that increasing the Crow rate will destroy rural life in Saskatchewan.

There are many things I would like to say. One argument to which I took exception is that part of the resolution which says that the government is failing to enhance national unity. I take exception to that. Why? The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) accused us of working "to the detriment of the west". He accused the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) of being a bad westerner.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Pepin: I have some quotes here. Who was the man who said—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of supplementary estimates (E) and interim supply and to adopt all stages of any bills based thereon.

SUPPLY

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (E)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Supplementary Estimates (E), 1981-82, laid upon the Table Thursday, March 18, 1982, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blaikie: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Johnston thereupon moved that Bill C-99, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1982, be read the first time and printed.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would provide the usual assurances that there is nothing contained in the bill which exceeds the requests which are contained in the estimates.

While he is doing that, would he please indicate the size of the aggregate contingency fund that is now available to the government?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing contained herein that exceeds the amount provided for in the estimates. I am not clear what point the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is making with respect to the government's contingency fund.

Mr. Nielsen: Well—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This discussion can be carried out only with the unanimous consent of the House. There cannot be debate or questions at this time. If there is unanimous consent, I can recognize the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) again.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, this is a customary question which is always put at this stage of the proceedings.

An hon. Member: During Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Nielsen: I was simply interested in having the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) indicate to hon. members what is the total amount available to the government by way of the aggregate contingency fund at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adpopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Johnston thereupon moved that Bill C-99, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1982, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Ethier in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

On Clause 1—short title

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board could answer my question now. What is the total aggregate of the contingency fund now available to the government?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I am still not altogether clear. I presume the hon. member for Yukon is referring to Treasury Board Vote 5 with respect to the contingency that exists in the Treasury Board vote which is ultimately required for salary shortfalls. I do not recall this question having been asked before and I do not know why it should be pertinent at this particular time.

• (2150)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, it certainly is pertinent because the schedules speak of a contingency fund in net terms. I am simply asking the President of the Treasury Board, who should have the information at his fingertips, what the total aggregate of the contingency fund is which is available to the government at this time. He should have this information if he is up on his job.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, there is no cause for debate. The first question was customary, the second is not. I suggest that the hon. member have his question put on the Order Paper and that we proceed in accordance with Standing Order 58(10).

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for the Yukon probably knows if he has examined Treasury Board Vote 5, he will see that the amount of the main estimates provided for was $220 million and that $60 million additional was provided for in Supplementary Estimates C, if that is the question he has asked.

Mr. Nielsen: No, it is not the question I asked, but I will not hold up matters. Indeed, I cannot. It surprises me that the President of the Treasury Board would not be able to come forward with a global figure as to what the contingency fund is. I am sure the taxpayers of the nation would be very interested to learn what is in the sock for the government, that it does not have to bring before parliament in order to meet its obligations from time to time.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I hate to delay proceedings on this point but it is well known to members of the House that Treasury Board Vote 5 is specifically there to cover salary costs in particular. A certain amount is placed in the main estimates each year with respect to anticipated salary cost movements across government. The contingency fund to which the hon. member refers is contained in Treasury Board Vote 5 and is allocated specifically to meet costs in excess of the amounts provided for in the estimates. That has to do with the entire collective bargaining process, and that has been the situation for many years.

I mentioned a moment ago that the amount provided for in the main estimates was $220 million, which was supplemented in Supplementary Estimates (C) by an additional $60 million, so the total amount of Treasury Board Vote 5 for the year 1981-82 was $280 million.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, it is wrong for the President of the Treasury Board to misconstrue my comments in that fashion. In my question I was referring to the total contingency fund available to government. If he is not prepared to give me that answer now, that is his option. I certainly do not intend to hold up proceedings tonight and I certainly do not intend to put the question on the Order Paper because it would never be answered.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to hold up proceedings either. It is not clear to me that the hon. member knows what he is talking about. In any event, he will have ample opportunity to speak to me either privately or to question me in the House or when I appear before the committee. I will be very pleased to answer any questions in that regard. I must say, however, that the only contingency fund with which I am familiar as President of the Treasury Board is Treasury Board Vote 5, with which I expect the hon. member for Yukon is also familiar.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read for the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Johnston moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the House concur in Interim Supply as follows:

That a sum not exceeding $8,786,438,129.08 being the aggregate of:

(a) three-twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, laid before the House of Commons on February 23, 1982, $7,667,738,200.25;

(b) an additional six-twelfths of the total amount of Economic Development Item 1, Transport Item L40 and Treasury Board Items 5 and 10 (Schedule A) of the said Estimates, $217,930,900.00;

(c) an additional four-twelfths of the total amount of Environment Item 15 and Labour Item 5 (Schedule B) of the said Estimates, $19,107,733.33;

(d) an additional three-twelfths of the total amount of Transport Items 20, 35, 65 and 80 (Schedule C) of the said Estimates, $189,073,750.00;

(e) an additional two-twelfths of the total amount of Communications Items 5, 15 and 45, External Affairs Item 25, Indian Affairs and Northern Development Items 15 and 35, National Health and Welfare Item 40, Public Works Item 55, Secretary of State Items 30 and 40, Transport Item 25 (Schedule D) of the said Estimates, $144,821,666.67;

(f) an additional one-twelfth of the total amount of Agriculture Item 15, Communications Items 1 and 75, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Item 1, Employment and Immigration Item 20, Energy, Mines and Resources Items 1 and 15, External Affairs Items 1 and 35, Governor General Item 1, Indian Affairs and Northern Development Items 40, 45 and L50, Industry, Trade and Commerce Items 5, 10 and L30, Secretary of State Item 1, Supply and Services Item 1, Transport Item 45 and Veterans Affairs Item 25 (Schedule E) of the said Estimates, $547,765,878.83; be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Johnston thereupon moved that Bill C-100, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1980, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, yesterday the central bank lending rate rose again, increasing to intolerable levels the financial pressure on the ordinary citizens of our country. In view of the fact that high interest rates have made construction of new apartment buildings and homes an unviable proposition, and that my city of Edmonton presently has a vacancy rate of only 1.1 per cent, with many people there facing mortgage renewals, rental increases and loss of income through increasing lay-offs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Minister of Finance take immediate steps to reduce present high interest rates, which are severely damaging not only the economy, but the lives of hard-working Canadians desperately worried about their own future.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, the initial payments for Canadian Wheat Board grain announced on Monday are totally inadequate. Canadians cannot honestly expect farmers to continue to produce grain at prices lower than last year when the farm input price index in western Canada skyrocketed by 11.2 per cent during that time. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House calls upon the minister responsible for the Wheat Board to show the courage and leadership which his office demands and immediately raise the initial prices to a realistic level which will allow farmers to cover the payments on their input costs which will come due this fall.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

AWARDING OF MEGAPROJECT CONTRACTS TO FOREIGN FIRMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on the matter of jobs from energy megaprojects. First we had the stacker reclaimer case in Prince Rupert and now we have a similar situation in the coal project at Sparwood, British Columbia. I have just been informed by letter from the regional manager of Westeel-Rosco Limited in Vancouver that a $20 million contract for conveyor covers was awarded to Continental Conveyor and Equipment of Alabama Inc., U.S.A. The American company gave assurances that almost all the components would be made in Canada. Continental then promptly awarded the work to a Chicago-based company and Canada lost another 20,000 man-hours of work. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That in order that the highly touted spin-off effect of Canadian energy megaprojects does not rapidly turn into a tailspin, the Government of Canada take immediate concrete steps so that Canadian resources can be used to help Canadian business and governments to provide jobs for Canadians and not allow them to go out of the country.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CALL FOR MEASURES TO STIMULATE SALES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, the government, having made a complete shambles of our economy, is obviously unwilling or unable to resolve the problem. The resulting tragedies seem endless. We now have word that up to another 1,750 employees of General Motors of Canada will be laid off indefinitely next month, a depression-sized lay-off that will undoubtedly have a serious ripple impact throughout the country. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That this government take immediate steps to stimulate sales of Canadian-made vehicles, expand their efforts by bringing forward new programs to promote economic growth or, failing this, that this government call an election so that Canadians suffering from this indifference and inability of government will have the opportunity to turn the job over to others willing and able to achieve economic recovery.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CALL FOR RELEASE OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to seek the unanimous consent of the House. Soviet Jewish dissident Anatoly Shcharansky has been unjustly held for over six months in solitary confinement and on low rations by the Soviet authorities, in direct contravention of basic human rights and of Soviet obligations under the Helsinki Accord to respect the fundamental freedoms of conscience and religion. In view of this injustice and the plea of Mr. Shcharansky's wife that politicians in the west take up her husband's cause, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith):

That this House call on the Soviet Union to live up to its obligation under the Helsinki Accord and immediately release Anatoly Shcharansky from detention.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

TAXES ON GASOLINE AND DIESEL FUEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, Canadians are paying more in taxes than they do for food and shelter. Many of these taxes are hidden in consumer goods such as gasoline where, in spite of falling world prices, Canadians pay an increasing amount of hidden taxes which are justified by such things as the need to raise prices to world levels and the need to pay for oil imports even while available Canadian oil is not being used. As an example, Ontario farmers who use gasoline are relieved from federal excise and sales tax of 20 cents a gallon while they are still paying 40 cents a gallon for other federal taxes. Ontario motorists now pay over 60 cents a gallon combined federal tax, and the federal government claims the largest single bite on a gallon of gas, 34.5 per cent. If the federal government is serious about fighting inflation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

• (1110)

That the federal government immediately reduce the crushing burden of gasoline and diesel fuel taxation to consumers, and implement a rebate program on gasoline and diesel fuel to agricultural producers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

TAXATION OF INCOME AT SOURCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) told this House on February 26, 1982, that fishermen in Atlantic Canada support the plan to have fishermen's income taxed at source, and whereas fishermen in Prince Edward Island have now joined with fishermen in British Columbia in making known their discontent with a measure that will severely restrict their available cash and force them to borrow at exorbitant interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That the Minister of National Revenue be instructed to withdraw his plan to tax fishermen's income at source and replace it with an arrangement more acceptable to the fishermen and fishing communities.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TRIAL OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE OFFICERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I rise on an issue which involves the fundamental rights of several Canadians now being tried in Montreal criminal courts. They happen to be officers and former officers of the RCMP, and this fact alone should not deny them a modicum of natural justice. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That the government reverse its refusal to release certain documents as requested by defence counsel of the accused, documents which allegedly confirm that the officers in question had acted with the full knowledge and indeed at the request of certain ministers of the Crown, and that the Minister of Justice undertake that no documents involving any allegedly illegal acts by the security service of the RCMP are destroyed and that they be transferred to the safekeeping of the National Archives of Canada, and that cabinet ministers who were found by the McDonald commission as knowing certain illegal acts had been committed by the RCMP resign immediately as it befits our parliamentary tradition of ministerial responsibility.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

LEVEL OF TAXATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the Fraser Institute has calculated that the average Canadian now pays more for taxes than for food, clothing and housing combined, and that taxes are the most rapidly increasing area of expense, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House deplores the socialist policies of ever-increasing taxes and insists that the government take its greedy hands out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

DEBATE ON LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, this House has been recently put in the difficult and unfair position of having to debate equalization legislation which has an expiry date, and established program financing legislation which does not. Given that the EPF proposals which pose great risks to health care and post-secondary education need to be debated as fully as possible, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to separate the two aspects of the fiscal arrangements legislation so that equalization can be dealt with now and EPF later, and that the equalization proposals be amended to offset the inevitable disadvantage to which the province of Manitoba is put by the new formula, in order to make that new formula acceptable.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, given that the Liberal government has now abandoned the hypothesis that Crown corporations, senior government bureaucrats, and cabinet ministers are above the law, as witnessed by the argument by government lawyers that officials of Uranium Canada and Eldorado Nuclear Ltd. cannot be prosecuted for their involvement in the uranium cartel because they were acting in the name of the Crown, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Prime Minister and his cabinet be soundly condemned for establishing a totalitarian standard in Canadian society where he and his officials can operate in blatant disregard of the laws of Canada while other Canadians are required to obey the same laws.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS ANNOUNCED BY GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, in view of the absence of the majority of the government, I will address my question to the Minister of State for International Trade. General Motors has announced a further 1,750 lay-offs in addition to the 7,444 during the past year, which has severely eroded the economies of Whitby, Oshawa and the surrounding area in southern Ontario. This situation is totally unacceptable. What is the government going to do about it?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, there are a substantial number of things the government is trying to do with respect to the Canadian automobile industry, and specifically with respect to General Motors in Oshawa. For the first time in Canada's history we obtained a major export contract for cars from General Motors in Oshawa to Iraq. That sale amounted to over $100 million. Unfortunately, the second order of that sale has not been forthcoming to date because the cars which were sent over did not work. The Government of Canada does not produce those cars; however, we are trying to finalize the second phase of that order as well as trying to obtain orders from other countries.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, the minister has totally failed the auto industry, the auto workers of this country, and the automotive parts manufacturers. One out of every six jobs in Canada is in the auto industry. The bottom line is that we cannot afford to sit back and watch the auto industry go down the drain. What is the government going to do?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, even if I were not hoarse I would not holler like the hon. member across the aisle.

Mr. Clark: That is part of the problem.

Mr. Lumley: We are very conscious of the seriousness of the situation in the automobile industry, as we are with respect to the situation in other industries. That is one of the reasons we have made unprecedented representations to the Japanese government asking for voluntary restraint. A country such as Canada depends, for about one third of its total gross national product, on its export markets. We are also very conscious of the fact that we could precipitate action on the part of other countries, and that might not be in the best long-term interests of Canadians.

TRADE POLICY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, voluntary restraint does not work within our own country; how could we make it work with our trading partners? Sixty thousand jobs in the auto industry, many of them in my riding, have already vanished. They are gone. We are not looking for a patchwork solution but a serious economic and trade policy which will bring jobs back to Canadians and get auto workers back on the job. What is the minister going to do about it?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, with respect to trade policy the hon. member has failed to take notice of the fact that in the past two years we have had the two largest trade surpluses in Canada's history. One half of the trade surplus in the export market last year was in the finished goods area, which is labour intensive. Obviously the hon. member has not been reading the statistics.

JUSTIFICATION FOR TRADE AND ECONOMIC POLICIES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. Last year Canadians purchased 903,531 cars and light trucks. That is a very significant market, in case the minister does not know that. The Japanese took 23 per cent of that market, or 207,639 vehicles. If the justification for the continuation of the auto pact for 18 years is that it created 60,000 jobs or more, how does the minister justify the trade policies of his government and the disastrous economic policies which are now eroding jobs away permanently? After all, we have a very significant automotive market. How does the minister justify them?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, surely the hon. member is not advocating that we renegotiate the auto pact with the United States at the present time when the automobile situation in the United States is worse than it is here in Canada. We have had negotiations and discussions with the United States government and with the automobile manufacturing companies in the United States and Canada with respect to their sourcing more parts in Canada during this very difficult time.

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, I would have expected a stumbling and mumbling answer like that from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but I expect more from the Minister of State for International Trade.

CANADA-JAPAN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I take it from the minister's replies in press reports I have read that the Japanese minister of international trade and industry told the minister that, regardless, the Japanese are going to ship large numbers of vehicles into Canada and that the minister has neither the muscle nor the mandate to do anything about it. To get a little bit more basic, I want the minister to tell me what Liberal economic logic we are to convey to workers laid off at Ford and other plants who have lost their homes due to the high interest rate policy of the government, and who may now permanently lose their jobs because the government has neither the mandate nor the muscle to deal with Japanese imported vehicles.

• (1120)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, knowing the hon. member I am sure that he is aware that Canada, being one of the world's largest traders, depends on its export markets for one third of its GNP. Last year we exported $84 billion worth of goods and services. This obviously created a substantial number of jobs in this country. International negotiations, particularly when considering taking unilateral action, can produce harmful effects in the long term. Consequently we give very serious consideration to any action that might be taken by the government.

THE ECONOMY

MONETARY POLICY

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. We all know that the chartered banks raised their prime lending rate to 17 per cent yesterday. We expect this to be a trend going into the spring and summer months. It seems that our high interest rate policy will be with us for a while. Mr. Bouey says that there will not be any change in the monetary policy. We have had this type of policy since 1975, and in terms of fighting inflation it has not worked. It obviously has not worked because our inflation rate is much higher now than it was in 1975.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister how much longer he expects we will have to wait for this to take effect? At what point will he change the monetary policy that we have now, as it obviously is not working?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the question. This is my first opportunity to stand up and answer a question as parliamentary secretary.

The hon. member has hit on a very crucial point. I suggest to him the answer that was given by Governor Bouey to the finance committee yesterday, that the real cure to the interest rate problems we are facing is a severe and sustained attack on inflation. By bringing down our inflation rate we will undoubtedly bring down our interest rates.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, we obviously are not bringing down inflation. some of the backbench Liberals were saying on "The National" last night that the interest rate policy is not working.

In a recent magazine article the Minister of Agriculture is quoted as follows:

> "Who is this man Bouey?" Whelan asks. "I wonder if he wants every farmer to go bankrupt so he could then say he was successful with his high interest rates?"

Faced with the large number of high interest rate bankruptcies for farmers across Canada, from Prince Edward Island in the maritimes out to the other coast, I should like to know what the Prime Minister intends to do, or what the government intends to do. If he is not going to change the high interest rate policy will he do something at least to help one sector of our economy, that being the agricultural sector, the farmers who are going bankrupt? The small business bond is not the asnwer. I cannot think of one farmer who has received assistance under the small business bond program. What is the Prime Minister willing to do to help?

An hon. Member: Change the government.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Again, Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comments from the hon. member. We did indeed hear some comments from government MPs yesterday which, to my mind, indicates the very great concern that members on this side have for their constituents and their effectiveness in bringing that message to the government.

Mr. Clark: Where is Bob Kaplan when we need him?

Mr. Fisher: We appreciate hearing from them. We do not, under any circumstances, want them to stop prepresenting their constituents in this effective fashion.

The hon. member referred to the small business bond, and I should like to tell him that $2.5 billion has been lent under this program, of which $473 million has gone to farmers from four of the seven chartered banks involved in the program.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT BANKS INCREASE MORTGAGE FUNDS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, the Liberal Party is obviously in even more trouble than it thinks it is.

I should like to address a question to the minister in charge of CMHC. With interest rates expected to go up during the spring and summer, I wonder if the minister would encourage the government to have the chartered banks set aside part of their loan portfolios so that mortgage holders could renew their mortgages at a lower and locked-in interest rate, and I would suggest with no rollover for five years. Would the minister be willing to talk to his colleagues about that possibility?

• (1125)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would be very pleased to take representations from the hon. member, or indeed from any member of the House, on how we might approach the problem to improve circumstances for Canadians facing roll-over situations and higher mortgages. I must admit that I do not share the pessimism of hon. members that rates will not be lower. Indeed I admit, too, that I have been preoccupied with the response of government in an attempt to speed passage of Bill C-89 before the House that will provide 60,000 jobs in the construction industry, which we know is in a downturn. In addition, there is the objective of providing 30,000 rental units of affordable accommodation, and there is the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan which provides assistance equivalent to a 4 per cent or 5 per cent reduction in interest rates to those Canadians who find it most difficult to meet new higher interest rates.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Get on with it?

Oral Questions

CRIMINAL CODE

OFF-TRACK BETTING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, you will remember that yesterday afternoon in the House I asked a very specific question of the Prime Minister relating to any drastic change in government policy respecting gambling or off-track betting. The Prime Minister left the very distinct impression—and I would suggest that he intended to leave that very distinct impression with the House—that he knew nothing about any change in policy, that no change in policy would be effected by order in council, regulation or in any such way and, furthermore, if there was a change in policy forthcoming that it would be by legislative amendment to the Criminal Code, with all of which I agreed.

At approximately 5.30 last night, three hours after that exchange in the House, a press release was received in the press gallery, in the name of the absentee Minister of Agriculture, indicating that indeed by some form of ministerial regulation or departmental regulation a drastic change in regard to government policy on such a controversial issue as off-track betting had taken place. Was the Prime Minister attempting to evade, in his usual manner, a direct question with an indirect answer in the House yesterday, or did he honestly really not know about a drastic change in government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will recall that when he asked me the question my first answer was to say that I would take notice of it, that I was not aware of any impending change of the nature about which the hon. member asked, to wit, a change by order in council. In effect I found out that there had been no change by order in council. There has been a change by governmental regulation, by departmental regulation, which is something authorized under the law to which the hon. member referred.

That particular change is one which had been announced twice in 1980 and once in 1981, in the sense that it was said that these were the policies of government which were being discussed with the provinces and with the racetrack industry. In that sense there was no impending change of unknown proportions. There was a regulation carried out under the minister's authority. I honestly did not know that it would be announced yesterday afternoon, but of course I remember that the matter was discussed and authorized in cabinet a couple of years ago. No order in council was issued yesterday.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENTAL REGULATION BE REVOKED

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I am even more appalled than I was last night.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: On top of metric, on top of emergency planning orders, and on top of 101 other things on which the government is evading Parliament, no wonder there is such contempt for this place. It is falling down around our ears. Now we even have the Prime Minister being evaded by his own ministers.

Mr. Fox: Question.

Mr. Lawrence: My question to the Prime Minister is on a matter affecting moral issues, organized crime, law enforcement, tax policy and federal-provincial issues. Surely this should be debated in an open manner in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1130)

Mr. Lawrence: Will the Prime Minister chastise his bull-headed Minister of Agriculture, revoke that measure, that regulation he should have known about anyway, and would he please bring forward a measure to this House which can be openly, freely and frankly debated in this House so that the people of Canada will know what is going on?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I do not know if that particular expression which the hon. member used to describe a minister is unparliamentary or not, but I would urge hon. members not to use these types of expressions. I do not think it is necessary in order to elicit information.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I find it somewhat astonishing that the hon. member accuses the minister of evading Parliament, particularly if he refers to my previous answer. The orders issued by regulation by the minister were issued on the authority of the law passed by this Parliament. They were issued after two announcements had been made in 1980, and one in 1981.

Mr. Lawrence: Not in this House.

Mr. Trudeau: The announcements were made, Madam Speaker, because the minister was consulting with the industry, and with the provinces.

Mr. Siddon: Why don't you respect Parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: If it is not respecting Parliament to do one's duty as a minister as provided for under the law, then I have a different conception of what respect for Parliament is than the hon. member does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

SERVICE STATION COST OF GASOLINE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that in the hearings of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts this week we discovered that we have a national energy policy and a petroleum compensation charge which make imported oil cheaper to the refiner than comparable Canadian oil.

Most of the Mexican crude oil coming into Canada today is at a price to the refiner, because of the subsidy, which is 40 per cent less than the equivalent Canadian crude. This policy of importing oil throws Canadians out of work when we could be producing it, and it makes oil more expensive. If I were to drive to Montreal this afternoon where that Mexican crude is sold in the service stations, and if I were to drive up to a Petro-Canada service station, because Petro-Canada is an importer of Mexican crude, would I find my price at the pump to be 40 per cent less than I would find it at other service stations? If not, why not? Where is the money going?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think one could attempt in the question period to explain all the energy policy of the government.

Mr. Clark: And the energy taxes?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member perhaps needs to study the policy a little bit and then he would understand what is happening.

Mr. Clark: It is called the OPEC subsidy.

Mr. Trudeau: I recall that his party last year was arguing that we were paying too much for Mexican oil, and now he is complaining that it is being sold too cheaply. I do not understand the concept.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT PRICE BE REDUCED

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, Mexican oil costs Canadians $32 a barrel. Comparable Saskatchewan oil is about $24 a barrel. It is the 18-cent a gallon subsidy, which all of us pay and which is given to Petro-Canada, amounting to $17.30 a barrel that saves Petro-Canada $17.30 a barrel. It produces a price that is $9.60 cheaper for Mexican crude than it does for equivalent Canadian oil from Saskatchewan. That is why the jobs are gone. Perhaps the minister might want to read the transcript of the hearings of the committee.

Yesterday we also discovered in the hearings of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that by a change in policy—

Madam Speaker: The hon. member must come to the question immediately.

Mr. Hawkes: —we could reduce the price at the pump 11.5 cents per gallon tomorrow. Will the Prime Minister instruct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to read the transcript and, within a week or two, reduce the price at the pump by 11.5 cents a gallon as the evidence from the committee hearing suggests?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I know you will recognize that commenting on the proceedings of a committee is not in order, nor is a question based on those proceedings in order. But nonetheless—

Mr. Clark: Put them in an internment camp.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Did you hear that, Madam Speaker? I was attempting to answer a question of one of his own members and the Leader of the Opposition interrupts by saying that I should put his member in an internment camp.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: He did.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Trudeau: He said that, Madam Speaker. I am sure that the record will show that the Leader of the Opposition said "Put him in an internment camp". That is the Leader of the Opposition's answer to rational dialogue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Who are you putting in the camps, Pierre?

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

DEFICIT IN TRADE WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. It has to do with the automobile industry following today's lay-offs in Oshawa. You will recall in the 1980 election campaign that the Prime Minister promised to negotiate a fair deal under the auto pact with the United States. He then sent the minister of industry to Washington to negotiate a fair deal, and he failed. He then sent the minister of trade to Tokyo to negotiate a deal that he thought he would get, and he failed. Will the Minister of State for International Trade tell us what specific plans and programs does the federal government have to reduce the $1.7 billion deficit we now have in automobiles and parts trade with the United States of America?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as I said in answer to a question previously asked by the opposition, surely the hon. member is not advocating the renegotiation of the auto pact at this particular time when the United States automobile industry is in far worse shape than the Canadian automobile industry. I cannot believe, knowing the hon. member's qualifications, he would think that we would be able to negotiate a better deal for Canadians at this time.

Oral Questions

1980 ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I am concerned, as I am sure you are, with the cynicism that people have toward this institution. I specifically asked the minister what the government is going to do about the 1980 election promise when it promised to negotiate a fair deal with the United States, for Canada and for the auto workers. Specifically I want to know what the minister is going to do to fulfil the promise his leader made in 1980 when he said that we can expect a fair deal in the auto trade with the United States.

Mr. Kempling: You can forget about it.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the government has kept the promise made during the campaign. We entered into consultations with the Americans immediately following the election. I think we have had about six or seven meetings specifically with cabinet members in the United States to discuss the automobile situation. One of our major concerns is how we can create a greater share for the North American automobile industry in the world. That is one reason why we have been working together, for example, in trying to obtain export markets for North American automobiles.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF UNITED STATES WEAPONRY IN CANADA

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. It has to do with the U.S. military testing at Cold Lake. Canadian embassy officials have been quoted as saying that negotiations are for "an umbrella deal" that could extend beyond the testing of Cruise missiles. Could the minister give this House an idea, some advice, or clarify some of the following points: first, the limits or parameters of what is being negotiated; second, the extent and permanency of the U.S. facilities to be built at Cold Lake; third, the maximum number of U.S. military personnel who are to be stationed at Cold Lake, and fourth, the time-frame of such an agreement?

Some hon. Members: That is for the order paper.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think all the details asked for by the hon. member should be placed on the Order Paper, but maybe I should elaborate on the question asked by him. First, the testing is not to be done at Cold Lake only. I should explain that about two years ago under the Carter administration discussions started on the possibility that the United States might test some of its weaponry in Canada.

An hon. Member: Why not?

• (1140)

Mr. Lamontagne: Yes, why not. In any case, discussions carried on. Then the Reagan administration came into office and at that time we thought that it would be better in terms of Canadian security if we could negotiate with the United States an umbrella agreement under which we would have full control of any testing done in Canada, so that we would know exactly what they want to do. This is what we are negotiating at the moment, so there is no question at the moment of testing weaponry now in Cold Lake or anywhere else in Canada. The negotiations are proceeding under the very strict surveillance of the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and nothing will be done which is detrimental to Canadians.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LAND EROSION IN CHILLIWACK DISTRICT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, it had been my intention to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment, but in his absence, and because of its importance and urgency I would like to direct it to the Prime Minister. It has to do with an extremely serious situation developing in my constituency which, unless arrested, could result in untold havoc in the Fraser Valley and possibly spill over into the state of Washington. I refer to the erosion which threatens the loss of 400 acres of prime land, including farm buildings, and in the near future could seriously threaten the dikes in the region of Carey Point, in the district of Chilliwack, B.C.

As the minister is aware of the problem, as well as the Minister of Agriculture, will he personally or through his officials respond to the rapidly increasing plea for assistance, and support the council of Chilliwack and district, which has already spent $80,000 on the project, by announcing his willingness to support their efforts, by matching any provincial grant up to $100,000 to complete the project currently under way?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I apologize that I am not on top of this particular question. I will have to take notice of it on behalf of the Minister of the Environment.

DANGER OF SPRING FLOODING

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister could take this under consideration. Will the minister confer with his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, who has seen the problem on site—a problem which has been headlined in valley papers over the past several weeks—and consider ways in which the federal government could co-operate in meeting this threat which, in the event of a quick spring runoff, could have disastrous consequences?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will convey that part of the question to the minister.

MINES AND MINING

TAX EXEMPTION FOR EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT EXPENSES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. Speaking in Toronto on March 8 the minister made the following statement:

> Investors taking shares in exchange for providing junior mining companies with risk capital to undertake exploration can write off exploration and development expenditures against other income—

I ask the minister whether this provision applies to income earned in the 1981 tax year, and can shares taken up after the year end, December 31, 1981, to shelter income earned in 1981, qualify for this tax benefit during the 1981 tax year? If Canadians invested 1981 income in junior mining companies before April 30, 1982, can they or can they not write that investment off against 1981 income?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, that is a rather complex question. On the surface I would say yes, but I would prefer to give the hon. member a firmer answer if he were to spell it out to me in a letter.

NATIONAL MINERAL POLICY PAPER

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the minister's speech gave the clear impression that income earned in 1981 could be sheltered from tax if it was reinvested in shares of junior mining companies. Yet the Minister of National Revenue and his officials have totally contradicted the applicability of that rule after December 31, 1981, which makes a pure charade of the announcement by the Minister of Finance and its confirmation by the Minister of State for Mines.

My supplementary relates to a press conference held by the minister on March 8 when she released her national mineral policy paper. Will that paper be referred to the appropriate standing committee as a white paper for review by Parliament?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, it was released as a discussion paper, and other documents will flow from it. It is meant for discussion with industry, labour and the provinces. Many of those discussions have already taken place.

Mr. Siddon: Not by Parliament.

CRIMINAL CODE

OFF-TRACK BETTING—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATIVE DISCUSSION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to the questions asked by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland. A lot of us are concerned about the proliferation of lotteries, gambling and gaming laws. The Prime Minister will recall that the Olympics lottery was a one-shot effort in order to raise money for a specific purpose. Some of us raised questions about it at the time it was brought into the House. There are provinces now investigating the whole question of lotteries, for example their effect on those below the poverty line and the inordinate amount of money they use to buy their once in a lifetime chance for success.

In view of the statetement made by the Prime Minister today in the House, and yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture, can the Prime Minister give members some direction as to how we might be able to address this question in a legislative forum, or in some other way, because I believe it is a question bothering a lot of Canadians. I think if this place is to be relevant, we would like to discuss that matter openly and fairly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have a great deal of sympathy for the points of view put forward by the hon. member, and I share some of them personally. He asks when the matter can be debated. If he refers to the various announcements made by the Minister of Agriculture he will see that some of the proposed changes would have to be made by way of amendment to the criminal code. Amendments have been discussed with the industry and, I repeat, the provinces.

The minister seems to believe there is a consensus for change but I, like the hon. member, would welcome a debate in this House on those matters, and I refer him once again to the intention of the minister to bring in those amendments to the Criminal Code, at which time it would be appropriate to debate the subject.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister has just indicated this is a matter which he believes should be subject to debate in the House of Commons or its committees. He has indicated there might be amendments to the Criminal Code which might come at some time in the future. We already have had, apparently without the Prime Minister's knowledge, a regulation passed which raises the question of morality referred to by my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher, and which may have the effect—may—of a regulation amending the Criminal Code of Canada. The Prime Minister gives the legal opinion that that is not the case. I suggest to him it is not all that clear.

In order that it might be clear, and having regard to the statement just given by the Prime Minister, would he now agree to authorize a reference of this question to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs immediately? I can say for this side of the House we would allow that to occur without debate. Will the Prime Minister make such a reference immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there are several mistakes in the preamble to the question posed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, one of which is that in some sense this regulation is or might be illegal. It was issued, Madam Speaker, under the authority of the ministerial powers under the code and the ministerial act. It was discussed; it was made public, I repeat, on at least three previous occasions, and the House has had any number of occasions to debate it in the many, many opposition days they have had if they find it to be a serious question. If they do, I suggest they use one of the opposition days between now and the end of June, of which there are some ten or 12 if my memory is correct.

In so far as the legislation itself is concerned, I would be happy to discuss with the House leader and the Minister of Agriculture whether we can propose some early introduction of that legislation. If the hon. members see fit to do so, the House leader can discuss the matter with his counterparts.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE REFERRAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister agree today to make an immediate reference of the subject matter of the regulation to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs? If not, will he tell us why he is depriving that standing committee of the immediate opportunity to look into this question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, will the right hon. Leader of the Opposition use one of his 13 opposition days to discuss this matter of high morality which he finds of such great importance to this House?

INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL IN URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I have another question, relating to the government's insistence on secrecy and its refusal to tell the House of Commons information the House of Commons and the public of Canada have a right to know. Yesterday the Prime Minister received a question from my colleague from Cambridge to which he declined to give an answer.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, or any other minister, is instructing counsel representing Uranium Canada or Eldorado Nuclear, or both, to argue that those Crown corporations are immune from prosecution? The question is not sub judice; the question relates to this government's habit of secrecy. I would like to know whether such instructions have been given to those Crown corporations by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, or by any other minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the only way in which that question could be considered a supplementary is that both the previous one and this one referred to government secrecy. I put it to him, Madam Speaker, as I did to the hon. member from Northumberland, that this particular regulation has been announced three times—twice in 1980 and once in 1981—and it is hardly plausible to call something secret which has been discussed ad nauseam with the industry, with the provinces, and which has been discussed publicly for the past ten years that I have been listening to this.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEPARTMENTAL REGULATION ON OFF-TRACK BETTING—INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL IN URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the other way in which those questions are related is that the Prime Minister refuses to answer either of them. They do have to do with the rights of this Parliament and of the Canadian public to know what is going on. Let me ask the Prime Minister two simple questions, both relating to the right of Parliament to know and the secrecy of this government. First, will the Prime Minister make an immediate reference of the subject matter considering the regulation that has been passed, to the appropriate standing committee? Second, will he tell us whether there has been an instruction by a minister to the two named Crown corporations to plead Crown immunity?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the second question I would have to take notice of it and would have to ask the minister what instructions were given in this particular case. It is not a matter of denying Parliament its right to know; it is a matter of giving me notice of a question to which I do not have the answer.

Mr. Clark: It was asked yesterday.

Mr. Trudeau: As to the first question, about the right to know, I think this Parliament has a right to know what the view of the opposition is on off-track betting. It would be nice to have them use one of their opposition days to take a party stand on this.

An hon. Member: You said that before.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, and the Leader of the Opposition put that question before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, would you please let these backbenchers get into the act? They seem to feel that their leader needs some support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

PROVINCIAL OBJECTIONS TO LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Since last December the minister has refused to allow the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to pass the freedom of information legislation which is before it, using the phony excuse that he wants to hear the views of the provincial attorneys general—some of whom are making an eleventh-hour attempt to kill this bill.

In view of the fact that the minister has received many representations from important national organizations, and recently a strong representation from the attorney general of Manitoba, urging him not to allow this important bill, improved by committee, to die, will the minister bring the House up to date on his negotiations with the provinces, and assure the House that this bill will be dealt with before this session of Parliament prorogues? Or is he going to cave in to the pressure of the bureaucrats and continue to deny all Canadians this fundamental democratic right?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, in reply to the hon. member who raised this question, I am sure his colleague, the hon. member from Nepean-Carleton, could tell the House how helpful the hon. member has been in facilitating the passage of this legislation through committee, particularly last July.

As the hon. member knows, part of the support for the request to go the uniform bill route has come from a colleague from his own party, the attorney general of Saskatchewan, who has strongly supported the attorney general of Ontario, in making representations to us. I am not willing to dismiss out of hand the strong representations made by the eminent attorney general for Saskatchewan who shares the hon. member's philosophy.

As I indicated in private conversations with the hon. member as recently as last night, there are obviously three options open to the government at this stage. One option is to continue with Bill C-43. Another is to go back to committee with a number of amendments. The ultimate option before us is to accede to the requests which have been articulated by both the attorneys general of Ontario and Saskatchewan, to go the uniform bill approach as has been done by the attorneys general in other areas. I am in the process of continuing consultations with the attorney general of the province of Ontario and I will be reporting to my cabinet colleagues in the near future, analysing the recommendations made by these two attorneys general on behalf of most of the attorneys general of the country. I trust we will be in a position to announce the way we intend to go, in the not too distant future.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, this kind of phony hypocrisy is guaranteed to kill freedom of information legislation in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw! Withdraw!

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): It is phony hypocrisy, Madam Speaker. My supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister during the last election campaign promised Canadians that strong freedom of information legislation would be a high priority for a Liberal government. Will the Prime Minister now tell the House whether he and his advisers have gotten cold feet on this important promise, or whether he still believes that this legislation—including the fundamental principle of judicial review—is a high priority for his government in this session? Or is this going to be yet another broken Liberal promise?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have little to add to what was said by the Minister of Communications. I think the hon. member himself will concede that it would be better if we could have the provincial governments and the federal government at the same time make progress in the area of freedom of information. That is obviously the objective of us all. It depends on the premiers.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

HEALTH AND SAFETY OF WORKERS UNDER FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the continuing concern with worker health and safety programs and legislation, and their co-ordination among the federal government departments, is the government planning to centralize all these federal government activities and legislation within the Canada Department of Labour, in order to improve the health and safety provisions for workers under federal jurisdiction, such as has already been done by a number of provincial governments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is the preferred option, but it is not yet a matter for announcement because the discussions do involve various departments, and they are proceeding. I will keep in mind the representations of the hon. member, and I repeat that it is still our preferred option.

Petitions

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED IN COMMITTEE BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, this is a supplementary to the Minister of Communications, with respect to freedom of information. When he is considering the options of the government will he consider very carefully and fully and completely the option of ignoring the foot dragging of Messrs. McMurtry and Romanow with respect to freedom of information? Also, would he remind himself and his colleagues in government that we are dealing with a federal bill and that provinces have every right to come before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs with respect to the matter?

In order to contribute to openness in government and to allow the public to know the processes that have gone on in the committee, and the nitpicking amendments that have been put by the member for Burnaby, who has just suddenly become an advocate for openness in government, would the minister please table in the House of Commons a document which would indicate the number of nitpicking amendments brought by the NDP representatives to the committee dealing with freedom of information?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I want to acknowledge that the member for Nepean-Carleton has always been one of the most supportive members in the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for quick passage of the access to information bill. He has on many occasions bent over backwards to be helpful and to improve upon what is a very good bill and that he himself introduced in a previous stage. Unfortunately, we have not been able to proceed as quickly as we would have liked.

I think it is a matter of public record at the moment the type of amendments that he has referred to, and which have been tabled on the floor of that committee by the hon. member representing the New Democratic Party in that committee. As far as the representations made to me by the attorney general of the province of Ontario are concerned, I believe that I must give them all the due consideration that I am willing to give to the representations made to me by the attorney general of Saskatchewan.

COMPUTER SYSTEM USED AT PORTS OF ENTRY

Question No. 3,517—Mr. Fretz:

Is the computer system known as CPX used to expedite the clearing of incoming goods through ports of entry and, if so (a) how many ports initiated the system and on what dates (b) what is the cost of installing the system in each port (c) for each port using the system, what is the annual cost of maintenance and updating?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): CPX—CEPACS (Cargo, Entry Processing and Collection System). CEPACS is a computer system which provides control over imported goods, processes entry information to ensure various legislative requirements are met and ensures that revenues assessed are properly accounted for.

CEPACS provides for more accurate and equitable revenue collection and for greater responsiveness to the needs of the importing public.

Benefits will accrue in the primary processing and examination and inspection subactivities and greater control over importation will be possible. Implementation of the system is expected to be completed in 1983-84.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, March 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I wish to continue the debate on Bill C-97, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces. This bill has caused considerable controversy across the country. It has become one of the most important bills to be debated so far this session.

I wish to refer to a Conservative task force which travelled across the country earlier this year dealing with the budget and transfer payments. The document is entitled "They didn't ask us!". This seems to be a main problem with this government; it is acting unilaterally and not properly consulting the provinces, individuals, businesses or whatever.

I wish to comment on a few of the statements by individuals and organizations which the Conservative committee met while travelling across the country. Some of these statements regarding federal programs were made by the City of Saint John, which stated:

> The elimination of federal programs which were designed to help municipal governments was a very serious blow to the kinds of services which citizens require at local levels.

The elimination of this type of grant to the provinces and cities will cause more lay-offs. If there was proper funding, there would be more hiring. The municipalities would do a lot of their local work. The Students' Union of Nova Scotia in Halifax stated:

> —post-secondary education in Nova Scotia will suffer as a result of the budget.

The government did not communicate with these groups prior to the cutbacks. Dr. Howard Dixon, Professor of Anatomy, Dalhousie University, Halifax, stated:

> Clinical research faces the prospect of receiving a doubly severe blow from Mr. MacEachen's budget—not only will it be hampered by university cuts, but also by the increased financial burdens placed on hospitals as well.

Nobody has escaped the budget, the fiscal arrangements with the provinces and the cutbacks. The Saint John Construction Association in Saint John, New Brunswick, stated to our Conservative committee:

> Mobility taxes will encourage workers to stay where they are and collect UIC.

That could cause another very serious problem. Dalhousie Bio-medical Research in Halifax stated:

The removal of billions will surely grease the skids for an accelerated decline of the university system as we know it.

We made a number of recommendations. I just want to name some of them. We found out from our communications and meeting with universities, individuals and businesses that what we need in this country is to, and I quote:

Restore individual and investor confidence by establishing a climate for growth, development and expansion.

Most of the witnesses who appeared before the committee said the government should, and I quote:

Withdraw the November 12 budget and replace it with an economic plan that will promote job-creation and economic development through private investment.

One of the highlights of the committee's conclusions and recommendations was that we should:

Restore harmonious federal-provincial relationships and ensure adequate federal funding of provincial health, education and other important ... programs.

I am going to go into that subject in a little more detail.

Newspapers, individuals and the provinces have all been expressing opinions on these transfer payments. We get a different story from each individual and each newspaper. One matter that will have to be gone into very thoroughly when it gets to the standing committee is who was right and who was wrong with regard to the amounts being cut back and the amounts going to the different provinces.

Earlier this week the Montreal Gazette's Ottawa bureau expressed its opinion on the budget in an article headlined "Ottawa to transfer $1.4 billion more to Quebec". I do not know the reason one province will receive an additional $1.4 billion to that which was first announced in November. According to the Montreal Gazette, four months later we find that an additional $1.4 billion will be paid to the province of Quebec. I quote from the article:

During the same five years, 1982 to 1987, yesterday's bill would cut by $405 million the equalization handouts to Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

The contents of this news article will have to be studied in detail by the committee. I again quote from the article:

In Halifax, Nova Scotia finance minister Joe Matheson said he hadn't expected the new bill to do so much for Quebec, but reserved further comment until he sees the Ottawa legislation.

I hope that matter can be cleared up. If an additional $1.4 billion is going to the province of Quebec, other provinces in Canada deserve a detailed explanation why. Also, an assessment by the Toronto Star states:

• (1210)

Ontario, for example, stands to see $1.9 billion cut from federal contributions to health care and university funding over the next five years. As Ontario's deputy treasurer, Mr. Campbell, points out, the reductions will cut deeply into programs that the federal government itself encouraged the provinces to establish and build up over the past decade.

So we see reports of $1.4 billion more for one province and $1.9 billion less for another province.

We have also seen statements from the Manitoba government about how federal cutbacks will hurt that province the most. I do not know why Manitoba has been singled out to be hurt the most but apparently this has been decided by the Liberal government.

As a result of the new federal proposals to cut back on transfer payments, Manitoba stands to lose significantly more per capita than any other province. It was pointed out in the recent federal-provincial finance ministers' meeting in Ottawa that planned changes in the federal equalization payments and shared cost programs for health, medicare and post-secondary education should not be made until the full implementation of the proposals are known and a general consensus reached with the provinces. There are considerably detailed reports from Manitoba which indicate exactly where we will be hurt.

We want to know why the province of Quebec will receive an additional $1.4 billion, especially considering the way it runs its financial affairs. I suggest that there should be a moratorium on federal funding to Quebec until we find out exactly what its debt is, since there are rumours that it will reach $9 billion.

We have received many figures from the Department of Finance on transfer payments and other related items. Since these figures are not entirely clear, the committee will have to do a great deal of work in order to prepare detailed explanations to each province, as well as the House, with regard to these transfer payments.

The cutback in health care payments to provinces is of major concern to Canadians and we must attempt to maintain the standards which were established by the Conservative Party with regard to health care which date back to 1938. The Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker pointed out at that time that free hospitalization and medicare for the people of Saskatchewan was a number one priority for the Conservative Party. Mr Diefenbaker pointed out that the Progressive Conservative Party believed that the removal of deterrent fees for prescription drugs would increase the number of drugs provided under the plan. This position which was taken in 1938 at a Conservative convention in the province of Saskatchewan was the beginning of major health care programs in Canada.

During the last two federal elections there have been problems caused by Liberal and New Democratic Party candidates misinforming the electorate with regard to what was happening with health care payments provided to the provinces by the federal government. I have to combat these problems extensively when the Liberals and New Democrats misled and misinformed the people at every turn during the last two campaigns by stating that the province of Manitoba, which had a Conservative government at that time, was using federally provided health care funds to build roads. Of course, that statement was completely false. The Liberals have commenced their last two compaigns in Manitoba with this blatant lie. Of course, they had the full support of their NDP cohorts.

In 1979, the Conservative government commissioned Mr. Emmett Hall to do a study called "Canada's National-Provincial Program for the 1980s". After conducting a thorough investigation into how the funds were distributed for health care in Manitoba, Mr. Hall stated:

I conclude therefore that the first part of the allegation, namely that "federal health dollars are being diverted", is not established.

He found absolutely no proof that the funds were being diverted to build highways and the NDP and the Liberals had absolutely no evidence of this. They were completely misleading and misinforming the public. No doubt they were using the same tactics in other provinces.

I can illustrate what a commendable job the Lyon government did for health care in Manitoba by referring to the 1977-78 budget which was brought in by the NDP government at that time. The NDP government was only increasing funding for health care by 0.1 per cent and consequently the percentage allocated to health care under the Lyon government which followed them rose from 34 per cent to 36 per cent. This placed Manitoba second only to British Columbia in the proportion of funds allocated to health care. This was accomplished by the Lyon Conservative government during their tenure. They had a much more commendable record for increasing health care funding than the previous NDP government.

There still has to be some investigation into the allocation of funds in health care, particularly in the province of Saskatchewan where there is a continual problem with regard to the amount being spent in that area. Before I deal with those figures, I will read some comments made by the former leader of the NDP, Mr. Tommy Douglas, when he wrote an article about medicare. He stated:

There are two of his—

He was referring to Mr. Diefenbaker's accomplishments.

—accomplishments which I shall always remember with gratitude and for which Canada owed him a great deal. When he became Prime Minister he amended the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to provide that Ottawa would pay approximately half the cost of hospital care in any province willing to provide such service. And he set up a royal commission under the Chairmanship of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall on comprehensive health insurance which was implemented in 1968 and constituted a major step towards comprehensive health insurance for all Canadians.

We want to maintain these standards which were originally established by Conservative governments. We do not want to see them deteriorate, as they are in the province of Saskatchewan. Due to the refusal of the Government of Saskatchewan to increase doctors' fees to a reasonable level, some patients must now pay for medical services received. After forwarding bills to the medicare commission, Saskatchewan citizens may discover that they are eligible for only a partial reimbursement, in some cases as little as 50 per cent.

Statistics from British Columbia to Quebec illustrate the position of the Saskatchewan government in relation to other provincial governments on per capita medical expenditures. These statistics show that Saskatchewan has the lowest expenditure. These figures speak for themselves. The per capita expenditure in British Columbia is $555; in Alberta $548; in Saskatchewan $534; in Manitoba $639, which is much higher than what is being spent in the NDP province of Saskatchewan; Ontario spends $547 per capita and Quebec spends $647.

There have been other problems with health care in Saskatchewan as well. The minister of health of that province has stated to doctors in the past that he wants to discourage return visits. We have to be very careful about health ministers getting into the medical business and telling practitioners when patients should come for second or third visits. The Saskatchewan health minister stated physicians should be:

• (1220)

—telling patients who are in the office frequently, say every two or three weeks, that their problem "might not be medical";—

That is not a decision for anybody in the NDP government in Saskatchewan to make. That is entirely up to physicians. I suggest the Saskatchewan health minister keep his nose out of the medical practitioner business and let medical practitioners judge when patients should come to their offices.

I have recognized this problem in Saskatchewan for some time. In 1979 I introduced a motion in the House regarding a reduction of contributions to health care in the province of Saskatchewan. I said:

In view of the fact that since the time medicare was instituted in Saskatchewan, many doctors traditionally have not participated in the medicare plan, that 30 per cent of doctors in that province now are billing patients directly, that less than 5 per cent of doctors in Manitoba are operating outside the plan, and that there is a significant decrease in the budget for hospital insurance and medicare programs in Saskatchewan, I move . . .

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare advise the recently appointed Hall commission to study immediately the reasons for the deteriorating budgetary contributions by the Saskatchewan NDP government for medicare, as well as the significant increase of extra billing by doctors in Saskatchewan.

I received support from my colleagues in the Conservative Party. I received support at that time from the members of the Liberal Party. The "Noes" came from the New Democratic Party. Hon. members in the New Democratic Party were frightened to death to have an investigation into deteriorating health services in the province of Saskatchewan.

In closing, I would like to talk about how we could increase funding to the provinces. I recommend that the Liberal government stop making special low-interest loans to Communist countries. The Liberal Party has lined up a special deal for the Russian communist government. A loan of $637 million has been arranged. The money is being borrowed in Canada at 16 per cent and lent over a repayment period of 12 years at an interest rate of 10 per cent to the Communists. The result would be a Canadian subsidy of $198.5 million in terms of future dollars or $139 million in present dollars. That money could be put to better use in Canada. It could provide low-interest loans to the provinces or individuals for housing. We should not be looking after communist countries. Let them look after themselves.

Another flagrant example of misuse of Canadian funds is the fact that we are helping to build a monument in Algiers. In that country the EDC portion of a $97.8 million loan is part of a $1.2 billion line of credit negotiated between Canada and Algeria in 1978 and expiring at the end of 1982. The Algerians get the EDC funds at somewhat less than 11 per cent interest, the rates prevailing in 1978, yet the Crown body must borrow at between 16 per cent and 17 per cent today. Someone—the Canadian taxpayer—is making up the difference for this. I think it is time the Liberal government took a serious look at these types of subsidized loans to other countries. The information I have is that we receive very few benefits from these huge subsidized loans.

As I said earlier, the standing committee will have its work cut out for it in dealing with transfer payments. There should be an explanation especially as to why Manitoba's funding has been reduced so much and why we are getting reports of an additional $1.4 billion going to the province of Quebec. I will be calling on members of the committee not only from the government side but also from our side to make sure we get a detailed explanation of which provinces are getting what. This confusion should be cleared up once and for all.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate because of the importance of the subject. Difficulties will be created for our health care system and our post-secondary education as a result of the proposals brought forward by the government in this bill. I also enter the debate because I am one of the members who was here in 1972 and in 1977 when this same Liberal government brought forward proposals which began the process of cutting back. The process will eventually destroy the health care system and the post-secondary education system we have had since the end of World War II.

What we are being asked to do if we pass this bill is to take another step in the direction set in 1972 and accelerated in 1977 toward the destruction of a health care system and a post-secondary education system which has been national in scope and has provided services in the fields of hospital care, medical care and university education. We have a fairly equitable system serving all Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific at a certain basic standard.

This was not always the case. Many Canadians and many Members of Parliament cannot remember the time, because they are fairly young, when they or their neighbours could not see a doctor or enter a hospital because they simply could not afford to pay for those services. There was no universal government insurance which paid the bills incurred for hospital or medical services until the mid-1940s. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) quoted a former leader of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Douglas, who paid tribute to the contribution made by a former Conservative prime minister, Mr. Diefenbaker. It was a CCF government headed by Mr. Douglas which, in the 1940s, first inaugurated a non-profit hospital insurance plan which paid the hospital bills of all the residents of Saskatchewan who entered hospital. It was a federal Conservative government headed by Mr. Diefenbaker which passed legislation requiring the federal government to pay half the cost of a similar plan in any province in the country. That brought the other provinces into hospital insurance and eliminated the fear of bankruptcy many Canadians faced before hospital insurance was brought in. This prospect still faces many citizens of the United States if they have prolonged illnesses, because they have no hospital insurance plan such as ours.

It was the same Conservative government headed by Mr. Diefenbaker which appointed Mr. Justice Hall to head a royal commission to study medical care. The report of that commission headed by Mr. Hall was brought down at a time when we had a Liberal government headed by Mr. Pearson, and that report led to the proposal by the then Liberal government offering the provinces financial inducements which led them to follow the example of the Saskatchewan CCF government respecting a universal medical insurance plan in each province which pays the fees for medical services provided by doctors. That plan came to fruition because the Liberal government agreed to pay 50 per cent of the cost of medical insurance plans. The Conservative province of Ontario was the last one to join in the medical insurance plan. It was brought in kicking and screaming because it did not like the plan. It still believed that the earlier non-profit, voluntary plans were better even though they excluded about 30 per cent of the people who could not afford to pay the premiums. But it could not stay out of the new plan because the people of Ontario, like those of every other province, recognized the benefits which would accrue to them.

There were some variations in the methods of financing. Some provinces finance the cost of medical insurance out of general revenue and some, like Ontario and British Columbia, require citizens to pay premiums. With these variations in the method of financing, the plans have worked quite well. They could be improved, of course, but until recently they met the basic needs of Canadian citizens.

In recent years costs have gone up for both federal and provincial governments. While that is true, the percentage of the GNP which the provinces and the federal government pay for health care has not gone up. Both the federal and provincial governments are finding it difficult to finance all the services they provide. This is partly due to the fact that the economy is not working at anything like full capacity. Revenues of the federal and provincial governments have decreased and they have begun to argue that they cannot afford the plans that are in place. They have taken steps which will result in destroying the universality and availability of the basic medical and hospital services provided for all Canadians.

Some provinces have instituted deterrent fees for hospital stays and doctor visits. This makes things difficult for senior citizens, the one million unemployed and the working poor. There is more and more extra billing by doctors because the provinces claim that they simply cannot afford to give doctors the high incomes they desire.

Canadians are fairly critical of doctors, Mr. Speaker. According to Statistics Canada they have the highest income of any group. We must face the fact, however, that their incomes have not increased in recent years as much as the cost of living has, so in effect they have suffered a reduction in real income.

In 1977 the Liberal government began to whittle at the system of health care which it had played a major role in establishing. In that year it replaced the 50-50 cost-sharing arrangement with a block grant system under which the provinces were not required to match federal grants for health care, hospital insurance or post-secondary education, as had been the case until then. They put the cap on the federal contribution to those programs.

The hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, who spoke ahead of me in this debate, tried to indicate that the provinces had not cut back on their expenditures on health care and hospital insurance. Of course they had, Mr. Speaker. They did so because once they were not required to pay 50 per cent of the cost of hospital insurance, health care or post-secondary education, they used the block fund grant from the federal government for other purposes. They were entitled to do that under the new agreement made with the Liberal government in 1977.

At that time members of the New Democratic Party in this House warned that this would lead to a fragmentation of the system and that the have-not provinces would not be able to match the programs offered by the wealthy provinces. That is what has happened. Provinces such as New Brunswick have imposed deterrent fees because they simply cannot afford to carry the cost of the services. Most of us did not foresee that the provinces, particularly some of the Conservative provinces, would use the block funding as an excuse for not continuing to match federal grants. The provincial cost of these programs has fallen.

We should not be surprised at that. The revenues of seven of the ten provinces are in bad shape because we are in a period of economic recession which has been brought about to a large extent by the mistaken policies of the Liberal government, aided and abetted by the mistaken high interest rate policy of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. He seems to be determined to continue those policies even though, in the six or seven years they have been followed, unemployment has increased drastically, as has the rate of inflation.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have been dead wrong but they seem determined to continue the mistaken policies they began six or seven years ago. The provinces are just doing what comes naturally to them; they are cutting back on funding of hospitals, medical insurance and post-secondary education. This is at a time when the federal government, in the bill we are now discussing, proposes to cut back on the agreement it forced on the provinces in 1977.

Let us keep the record clear, Mr. Speaker. It is not the established programs financing part of the 1977 fiscal arrangements act which is being changed. What we are changing with this bill is the equalization portion of the 1977 agreement, the purpose of which was to enable all the provinces to provide reasonable levels of public service.

The provinces used the block funding agreement to claim that the money received with the revenue guarantee was unconditional and that they were not required to match the federal grants for hospital, medical and post-secondary education.

The hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine said, quite properly, that New Democratic Members of Parliament and members all across the country criticized the Conservative provincial governments for doing that. He said we were wrong. He should also have put on the record the criticisms of those governments by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) who has been attacking them for reduced spending on these programs and has threatened to take action. She has said, quite correctly, that that kind of reduction will lead to the destruction of the medical insurance program. She ought to make those arguments not to the provincial governments, and not out on the hustings, but to the Minister of Finance.

In his November budget the Minister of Finance argued, as the provinces had, that the money associated with the revenue guarantee "was never intended to finance health care and post-secondary education programs", even though in the cheques from the federal government to the provinces this money was always included.

Now, as a logical extension of the November budget, we have Bill C-97. It will put in place the mechanism to remove the revenue guarantee and will reduce federal contributions to the provinces in the next five years by $5.7 billion. This proposal has been attacked and criticized, naturally, by the provinces because they simply do not know how they will make up very drastic reductions in the moneys they were obtaining from the federal government. Also it was criticized very severely by the Economic Council of Canada. The Council warned that the cuts would inevitably lead to higher provincial taxes, to more user fees in health care and education, or to a reduction in services.

We have not had an explanation from the Minister of Finance or any other Liberal government spokesman as to how the provinces could avoid increasing their taxes to meet the shortfall which the federal government is forcing upon them, cutting services, or increasing fees for services which people in the provinces will have to pay if the services are not to be cut. It is not surprising that the provinces, especially the have-not ones, have come to the conclusion that the provisions of this bill, when implemented, will have a very detrimental effect upon them when, in the case of seven provinces, they are already facing very serious budgetary deficits.

Let me illustrate the problem faced by some provinces. In the province of Manitoba the government was left a deficit by the former Conservative government of close to $300 million when it took office. The new arrangement being forced upon the province by the Liberal government will mean a reduction in what it would have obtained under the 1977 agreement of over $60 million in 1982-83, $122 million in 1983-84, $172 million in 1984-85, $223 million in 1985-86, and $246 million in 1986-87. That is a five-year total of $828 million. There were some last minute negotiations between the province of Manitoba and the federal government, and that amount has been reduced to $719 million, which is still a very substantial amount.

Let us look at another have-not province, the province of Nova Scotia. In the first year under the new agreement it will lose $28 million; in the second year, $32 million; in the third year, $36 million; in the fourth year, $41 million; in the fifth year, $46 million; for a total of over $183 million in five years. This is in a province which faces a budgetary deficit this year of close to $500 million.

If I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine correctly, he seemed to imply that under the new agreement the province of Quebec will receive more money than it would have under the old agreement. In fact, in the next five years the province of Quebec will receive $1,363 million less under the new plan than it would have under the agreement which was reached in 1977. If we total the reduction in federal contributions under the new bill for all provinces and the territories, we see a reduction in the next five years of $5.7 billion. That is a scenario for disaster.

We are already seeing the results of restraint programs. There have been increases in user fees in British Columbia and Ontario, a reduction in ward bed numbers, increases in fees for semi-private rooms, and the opening up of commercial space in Ontario hospitals. If Ontario hospitals are permitted some free enterprise, and if they have big deficits, they will concentrate their efforts on semi-private and private rooms on which they will be able to charge whatever they can obtain. Of course, this will reduce the kind of service and the number of beds available to ordinary citizens of Ontario who cannot afford to pay for semi-private or private rooms.

Also we are seeing a substantial increase in the number of doctors who are extra billing. We are seeing threats, actual strikes, slowdowns or work to rule by doctors in different provinces. The universal equitable health care system, which we brought into being over a period of many years after World War II, is in danger of being broken, if not destroyed.

In rejecting the government's decision to cut back funding for existing programs, am I arguing that the present system is meeting all our needs? Not at all. We need to re-examine what we have accomplished. Changes are needed, improvements can be made. Some improvements might even save money by providing alternatives to the present expensive system which would cost less than present methods and provide better service.

Before making suggestions regarding some of the items at which we should be looking, I want to spend a few minutes discussing the problems of Canadian universities. I should like to give an historical perspective. Until the end of World War II we, in Canada, probably had only three or four universities which were of a standard achieved in other countries such as the United States, Great Britain and other western European countries. In 1946-47, the then Liberal government began to fund university education, partly because there were many veterans of World War II who wanted to attend university. In 1951, the then Liberal government began to give grants to the provinces for university education on a regular basis. By 1966, these grants had grown to almost $100 million for the year. In 1967, the then Liberal prime minister, Mr. Pearson, argued that there was a broad national interest in maintaining a minimum level of services across the country in universities. He proposed a program under which the federal government would pay 50 per cent of the operating costs of Canadian universities in all parts of the country.

In 1972 the Liberal government put a cap on federal funding for post-secondary education, so that the annual increase of federal funds could not be more than 15 per cent in any one year. Under the 1972 act costs increased very rapidly. For education, federal funding rose from $1 billion in 1972-73 to $1.7 billion in 1976-77; it almost doubled. Hospital insurance funding by the federal government went to $2.6 billion in 1976-77, and medical insurance went to almost $1 billion, or $961 million, that year.

Let us give credit where credit is due. Without massive increases by the federal government in funding to Canadian universities and health care systems, we would have been in real difficulty by the late 1970s. They would have been very different from what in fact they are. In 1977 the legislation freed the federal government from having its expenditures tied directly to the cost of provincially-administered programs for health care and post-secondary education. The present proposal continues changes which began in 1977.

I have already indicated the serious effects that the proposal will have on the health care system, but what about universities? One hears stories or suggestions that universities are being too extravagant, that they are too rich, that we cannot afford them, and that they are not doing the job they ought to be doing. There is no truth to those suggestions, whether they come from federal government sources or from provincial governments. Let us look at the facts. In Manitoba this year the new NDP government has given the universities an increase of over 16 per cent. That is more than the increase in the cost of living. This will just begin to overcome the disastrous underfunding of four years of Conservative government in Manitoba. The reduction of funding in this bill will deal a body blow to Manitoban universities.

Let me put on the record the situation of the universities in Manitoba, and I will do it quite briefly. Brandon University is a small university located in the western part of our province. In the last four years, the library acquisition budget has increased by only $5,000. That is an example of the difficulties it is experiencing.

The University of Winnipeg, at which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) taught before he came to this House, suffers one of the worst staff-student ratios in Canada, and faculty salaries which were edging up toward the national median have now crashed to the near bottom level. Research funds have scarcely increased in recent years. Library acquisitions have fallen sharply in recent years. According to library projections they will be cut in half in the next five years.

At the University of Manitoba, which is the largest and most successful university in our province, students are using 40-year-old microscopes and 80-year-old rock samples. Money is lacking to buy new books and to hire teaching assistants. That is the situation in Manitoba. The proposal contained in this bill which will cut funding from the federal government substantially will have a disastrous effect on our universities.

What about the province of Ontario? In a study done for the provincial government, it was pointed out that the funding pattern that government has used has resulted in university operating grants falling almost 17 per cent in real dollars over the last ten years. A special committee appointed by the provincial government reported that without funding to match inflation, without additional funds to provide for faculty and staff advancement and without special funds to replace equipment and furniture, there would have to be an immediate move to restructure the system. Over four years government spending in Ontario has declined in real dollars adjusted for inflation by almost 5 per cent. University operating grants have declined by almost 13 per cent.

What will happen when the federal grants are cut as substantially as I have indicated, and as proposed in this legislation? Our universities and community colleges need more support from both levels of government, not less, if these universities and colleges are going to give us the trained, educated people to meet the challenges of the 1980s and 1990s in Canada. Almost every industrialized country in the western world spends more in terms of supporting universities and community colleges.

It is whispered by some in the federal government that our universities have been doing a poor job, that they have been training the wrong people for the wrong jobs. It has been suggested that Ottawa can do it better. This is a year in which we have well over one million unemployed and in which we are spending about $800 million on manpower training. This is a year when just a few days ago the Minister of Employment and Immigration made it clear that he would have to permit 20,000 to 25,000 skilled workers from offshore to enter Canada in order to meet our manpower shortage. How can a government which has failed so miserably to meet the need for skilled manpower, a field in which the government has almost complete control, suggest for a moment that it can do a better job of directing the universities to do what is needed than the universities have done up until now?

What we need is a co-operative effort by the federal government and the provinces, the educational institutions and the communities to rethink what we have accomplished, what our mistakes have been, what our needs are and what new programs we should implement. What we do not need but what we seem to be getting in this bill is the kind of unilateral action on the part of the federal government which has been such a disaster in the past.

Let me indicate a few of the problems which I think should be examined and make some tentative suggestions to deal with them. What the federal government is proposing in this bill is a quick, surgical cut which fails to deal with real needs in the fields of education or health. The government does not deal with alternative methods of delivery which might very well do a better job and be cheaper. The federal government does not deal with preventive medicine. Both things are necessary. Alternatives in delivery would attempt to deal with relative ineffectiveness and escalating costs of searching for ways in which to improve performance at the same time as it would seek to lower costs. Preventive medicine is frequently talked about. Those in the field know how little has been done and how limited the provision of funds has been. They know they cannot do the job. We see evidence of that every day in reports of deaths and illness caused by not having cleaned up our environment and not providing for the kinds of safety measures required in our mines and factories.

Let me deal with some specific suggestions as to what we ought to do. Many people in Canada do not get the kind of health care they need. They do not get the kind of advice they need. They turn to the people they see every day, the people with whom they live, their peers, instead of turning to professional counsellors. They do that because they know these people but they do not understand them. Therefore, they cannot get the information they need.

We need to develop a training program for peers to deal with the disadvantaged group so that people can communicate. We have the beginnings of that kind of a training program right here in Ottawa at Algonquin College. We need to explore the possibility of developing a system for providing physicians' assistants. This kind of occupational group could bridge the gap between a medical doctor and a nurse. This is a very useful profession. It would be particularly useful in isolated communities in which it is difficult to get doctors to locate. This kind of program has begun already in Alaska.

We need to train more natives as nurses. This would encourage the natives to bring health services to their communities which are so often—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: When we adjourned for lunch, Mr. Speaker, I was going over a short list of alternative approaches to the delivery of health care and post-secondary education which I think would extend the services and might even save money. I was at the point of suggesting that a major effort should be made to encourage more native people to become nurses. It is unlikely in the foreseeable future that we can persuade enough of the people who have traditionally gone into the health care field, either as doctors or nurses, to work in isolated areas near the reserves where so many of our native people live.

I believe real benefits would accrue if we could encourage more native people to become nurses. They could provide these services not only in a technical way, but they would have the knowledge and be able to communicate in the language and in light of the customs of the native people. Programs like these have been very successful in the city of Winnipeg and I would urge the minister to give consideration to beginning to expand those programs.

Mr. Speaker, we need to expand our communications networks so that we might deliver post-secondary education to individuals who live too far from present college campuses. These courses can now be packaged in many ways. For example, the instructor and student can be in contact by telephone as well as by television. This is being done now, I understand, on a very small scale in the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia. Some of the other provinces may find it too expensive to develop on their own and it may be that the federal government can help.

We have seen an increasing incidence of racial prejudice and racial discrimination, as we have seen an increasing number of native people moving into our cities and an ever-increasing number of immigrants coming from non-English or non-French speaking countries to the cities of Canada. These people often find it difficult, if not impossible, to deal with those who work in our educational institutions and in our social services institutions to which they frequently used to call for help. We need to train people who can work with both our new and our old Canadians. This is a field where programs would pay dividends both financially and in meeting the needs of all people.

We have seen new problems arising in the field of mental health. With the development of the tranquillizer drugs, many people who earlier spent years, if not their whole lives, in mental hospitals have been and are being released. The idea was that they would be serviced outside in the community which would help them in the transition years. It has been reported a number of times in the last couple of weeks that even in a city like Toronto there are very few services for these people, so they are going back to the hospitals again. That problem needs to be dealt with.

We also need to deal with the increasing number of teenage pregnancies, child abuse and juvenile delinquency. We do not know enough about how to deal with these things, but we need to find new methods because the cost of not dealing with these problems is escalating very sharply. We have a whole host of disadvantaged people whose education stopped too soon and who do not fit into our increasingly technological, complicated society.

Our post-secondary education needs to make real strides. It has made real strides in the past decade, but now that these people can receive regular service, they often require extra help in reading or in family support to compensate for earlier neglect. Unfortunately, in this time of fiscal stress the minimum servicing we have provided up to now is being threatened.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I know there are others who want to speak, so I will take but a minute or two to conclude.

Let me summarize the position of our party with regard to this bill. We are completely opposed to the revenue guarantee money being eliminated. It demonstrates an abdication of federal support for health care and post-secondary education programs which we think is not warranted. We oppose the unilateral imposition of the new equalization formula. By this action the government is signalling the beginning of the end to the real co-operative federalism which we think is a must if this country is to survive and prosper.

We oppose the time pressure imposed by this bill. We oppose the mixing of changes in established programs financing with changes to the equalization formula. We urge the government to pay attention to the task force findings. That task force was set up by the government and it brought in unanimous findings opposing the kinds of things which the government intends to do in this bill. We suggest the government pay attention to the judgment of the Economic Council of Canada and the arguments of the provinces and go back to the bargaining table in a spirit of co-operation, rather than with the big stick which they have been using.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the bill concerning fiscal transfers and established programs financing introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I believe this debate is important because it concerns a very important aspect of our federal system of government.

Mr. Speaker, we must realize that fiscal arrangements constitute a truly unique system. There is probably no other country in the world that has a system through which it can influence events occurring within the jurisdiction of another level of government. When there is a national program or national aspiration and the Parliament of Canada, even if the matter is not within its jurisdiction, decides to act in the interests of all Canadians and in the interest of fairness, a system such as fiscal arrangements provides a mechanism for making use of the entire country's resources, without changing the constitutional order—and I would say that this last is extremely important. Both levels of government agree on an automatic payment system, and although at the present time there is some disagreement as to the conditions of the arrangements, they agree that certain basic conditions will be met, as mentioned or defined in federal legislation, in this case.

For about one year, I have been involved in this area, together with other members of this House. I notice that the member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) is here this afternoon. I happen to know that the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) will be speaking later on, and other members of the committee have already taken the floor, including the member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), the member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I know that the member for Verchères (Mr. Loiselle) is to speak Monday.

Mr. Speaker, our experience on this committee has been, once again I must use the word unique, because I believe that for the first time, we have succeeded in making this very complex matter of federal-provincial relations understandable to the public. Hearings were held across the country, in all provincial and territorial capitals and in Ottawa, and Canadians came forward to discuss federal-provincial relations as these concerned them directly. I feel this was a healthy process, and I know that it was a very satisfying experience for all members who took part. We have learned a great deal about this great and diverse country of ours.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I have carefully read and listened to the debate on this bill and I think it has been an interesting one. It has been informative and I believe that most of the members who spoke on it have a better knowledge of fiscal arrangements and probably the best knowledge and information on this question than they ever had before, when these very complex negotiations took place and we were confronted with a bill in the House of Commons without having had any ventilation of the issue at all.

• (1420)

The way in which Parliament was used, the way Members of Parliament were given the opportunity, adequate staff and resources to study the question and hold hearings has been of help to the government and to Parliament in debating this issue. It has been a great help to the country in that we have shown it is possible to provide a forum where the public can speak to both levels of government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The practice should be expanded.

Mr. Breau: Yes, it should be expanded. I recognize the sincerity the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had when he was government House leader for a short period in his attempts to find ways to make these smaller committees work. I am happy the government borrowed that page from the short-lived government of which the hon. member was a part. I hope, as the hon. member suggests, that it will be expanded in future, as I believe it is helpful to the government.

We should not conclude that the government has to accept in detail every recommendation of a committee for it to be a success. That is a falsehood. The government maintains its decision-making influence. All the government does is delay its decision-making. In the meantime, we can have a better debate because we have more information and perhaps more controversy. Then the government decides.

The public and this House should not judge the value of a parliamentary task force on the basis of how many recommendations the government accepts from its report. The government may have valid reasons for not accepting some recommendations. What the report of a parliamentary committee does is force the government to answer why it does not accept certain recommendations. In that sense, a debate is better and the public is better served.

I want to deal with a matter raised by my friend with whom I spent some very interesting months last summer, the hon. member for Mississauga South. He wondered how the Liberals are going to vote on this bill. In particular, he wanted to know how I was going to vote because, in his view, the proposal of the government is very far from the report of the parliamentary task force.

I disagree with the hon. member that there is a wide gap between the report, the position of the government and the outcome of the negotiations, when you consider the overall aspect not only of the established programs financing, but the elimination of the revenue guarantee and the equalization program. Those are the payments by the federal government to the provincial treasuries.

I recognize that in the case of EPF some tax points were transferred to the provinces in 1977. It was part of a deal at that time. While those tax points are provincial revenues, they must continue to be included when measuring the federal government's contribution. The government is not misleading anyone when it counts them. It is not denying that they are provincial revenues. Nevertheless, they have to be counted as a measure of the federal contribution.

There is another element that should be considered. The budget changes proposed by the government on November 12 will have the effect of increasing the federal tax base by approximately $2.5 billion to $3 billion. This will automatically increase revenues to those provinces which are part of the tax collection agreement and use the federal tax base as their base and a percentage of that base to collect their tax revenues. Quebec has its own tax collection system and must be measured in another way.

In eliminating the revenue guarantee, the government is maintaining the financing of the programs as they were defined before 1977. I will not get into that disagreement now. When you consider the payments from the federal EPF and equalization, they are not far from a value that could be imputed to the recommendations in our report. There is a difference, but they are not that far apart.

In political terms, while the increase in provincial revenues resulting from the increase in the federal tax base is not a federal transfer, it is more income tax moneys which the provincial governments will collect merely because of a political decision of this Parliament. We must take the flak for increasing the federal tax base. It is to the credit or debit of the Parliament of Canada, and the provinces will benefit.

In terms of political morality, it is not so bad as to say that, while we are eliminating the revenue guarantee, we are provoking additional revenues of $685 million to provincial treasuries in the next fiscal year, which begins next week.

In judging the total government response, while I admit it is not to the last number the same value as in our report, it is close enough for me to accept it. What makes me accept it even more is that, apart from the fact the government did follow many of our recommendations, a very important one of which gives a single entitlement, as well as others that the government accepted, the equalization program is being made much more generous than it was by the inclusion of local taxes for municipal services.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that the fiscal equalization system is going to be far more generous to the Atlantic provinces, because of the computation formula that will be included in the act, and the basis on which payments will be calculated. Now, the representative average will be the average per capita yield of five provinces, namely, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. When the representative average of these provinces is calculated, and since the per capita yield includes municipal taxes and local charges for municipal services, the four Atlantic provinces are going to be much better off, because traditionally, their property taxes, which are raised by the municipalities, have been very low. In Ontario, for instance, and British Columbia, which I know better, and I believe the same applies to Quebec, municipal taxes have always been very high. Because taxes are high in the five provinces and lower in the four Atlantic provinces, it means that in the long run, the equalization program will be far more advantageous for us, because on the whole—I am of course speaking generally—towns in Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, in fact any small community, will have lower municipal taxes than the City of Ottawa, for instance. In Ottawa, I believe that property taxes, which include school taxes, for a house worth about $100,000, would be around $1,200 or $1,500 per year.

Mr. Corbin: Or even more.

Mr. Breau: Or even more, as my colleague for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) just said. In my own province, in New Brunswick, for instance, we would probably pay $500 or $600 in municipal taxes. So that under the equalization system, an average figure is calculated for the five provinces I mentioned earlier, and the federal treasury then pays the province of New Brunswick the difference between, for instance, its own municipal taxes and the average calculated for the five provinces. Clearly, by broadening the base for equalization purposes, the four Atlantic provinces stand to benefit considerably in the long run.

With respect to how I would vote on the bill, I would vote for it because it is close enough to the task force report that I am satisfied that, first, we have influenced the government during the negotiations, and second, because the report must be seen as a consensus. I read carefully what the member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill said in his interpretation of the report. Again, one should not be too surprised to find that when politicians from different parties and different regions of the country have arrived at a consensus on a document after negotiations which must take place in order to agree to any coherent political statement, they have slightly varying interpretations of what the consensus is. That is what consensus is all about.

The day that you try to have another form of consensus, that system of trying to arrive at a consensus will break down. I do not believe the hon. member was fair when he stated that, in his view, the government ignored the recommendations of the task force. He said that the report rejected the government's claim that there was a fiscal imbalance. I would refer him and the House to page 33 of our report. He is entitled to his opinion and, being a politician, and one from the New Democratic Party, I knew he would put his own interpretation to the consensus, even if he agreed with the report. I have not been fooled because I expected that. However, the explanation of the task force is much broader on the question of fiscal imbalance than the selective words that the member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill decided to quote. Page 33 of the report says:

> The federal deficits registered in recent years can, however, be explained partly in terms of discretionary counter-cyclical fiscal policy—a deliberate attempt to maintain employment at a time of world recession. In addition, the various tax expenditure measures introduced since the 1972 implementation of tax reform, as well as the indexation of the personal income tax system, have deprived the federal treasury—as well as provincial treasuries—of substantial amounts of money, and unusually high debt service charges have compounded the difficulty.

That is another interpretation of the consensus of the task force from that which the member had. The report goes on to say:

> What is undeniable is that the federal government faces a major budgetary problem in the size of the public debt and corresponding debt service charges.

Members can read further if they wish, but I will move on to page 34 in order to make my point more succinctly. It says:

> The federal government is at an interesting intermediate point on the spectrum between these two extremes, a point where a prolonged cyclical budget deficit begins to lead to some aspects of a persistent structural imbalance. The structural problem emerges because the size of the debt accumulated to date begins to constrain to an unacceptable degree the margin of manoeuvre in federal government decisions on fiscal policy.

The hon. member and some in the press have said that we categorically rejected the interpretation of the Minister of Finance of some fiscal imbalance is wrong. In the first place, the minister never said there was a fiscal imbalance. He said there had been a shift in the balance between the amount of money that the federal government was collecting some 20 years ago and what it is collecting now in terms of the percentage of the fiscal pie, how much the federal government is spending and how much the provincial and local governments are spending. That is what the Minister of Finance said.

What we did was to study the two different kinds of imbalances, one of which was structural. We tried to determine what "structural" would have meant. That is what we said did not exist. What we meant was that no level of government in Canada has the taxation resources within the Constitution to deliver or discharge its constitutional responsibilities. That does not exist in Canada and the government has never said it did. The Minister of Finance never said it existed. What we have is an imbalance which has occurred over the years because of what I mentioned earlier, the discretionary countercyclical fiscal policy. We mention the tax expenditure measures. The government is taking steps to attempt to close the tax expenditure accounts.

I recognize that the Conservative members on the task force would not agree with these measures for too long, even if these tax expenditures were probably more acceptable to their philosophies than they were to the hon. member from the NDP. But now he says that the government is moving to close some of the "loopholes", as he calls them. The hon. member says that he would have closed other loopholes. That is a matter of political choice, but to suggest that the government did not take steps to deal with its deficit problem by closing the tax expenditure accounts is not true. The hon. member can disagree if he wishes, and I respect him for that. Obviously, whenever the government proposes to close the tax expenditure account in one area, he will say, "You should not touch that one, you should touch the other one". That is the political game. But generally, we came to an agreement and that is the first point that I want to make about the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

I was sorry to hear the member for Mississauga South use examples such as spending on CIDA, the budget of the CBC, the budget of the Commissioner of Official Languages, as well as other budgets, to make his point that we could have cut back in those areas and not reduce transfers to the provinces. He is entitled to make his own political judgments as to where cuts can take place. However, there is one point which is undeniable, and it is that over the years, due to cyclical reasons—he said that because he agreed to the statement on page 34—the structural problem emerges because the size of the debt accumulated to date begins to constrain to an unacceptable degree the margin of manoeuvre in federal government decisions on fiscal policy.

This next fiscal year, approximately 22 per cent of the federal government's budget will be allocated to service the national debt, and over 20 per cent of the budget will be automatically transferred to the provinces. That is a total of 42 per cent which is entirely undiscretionary on the part of the government—that is, unless the government decides to come to Parliament and change the fiscal arrangements, which could not be done when you consider the political reality of this country.

When you take into consideration the other payments that are made directly to individuals, there is not too much money left for Parliament to deal with. I say "Parliament", because let us not give the people the impression that only the Liberals can make decisions on this. The Liberal government of the day can and should be influenced by the opposition as to what should be spent and where. It is often the case that it is influenced.

Mr. Roche: When?

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) asks when. Last year he and I were part of another very good political experience when we were on the parliamentary task force on North-South relations. It was as a result of this vigorous efforts in that experience, and partly because of his political support which he obtained from his party, that provoked additional appropriations on the part of the government. Backbenchers on the government side with the help of the opposition pushed the government into changing the trend of a decreasing appropriation to development assistance as a percentage of our GNP, recommended to the government that this trend be changed, and it was. Last year there was a 19 per cent increase in the development assistance budget. This year there is something in the area of 14 per cent or 15 per cent.

Why I say that there is not much room left to manoeuvre, even if opposition members disagree on the appropriations of the government, as they must, is that they should consider that it is the Parliament of Canada which will be strapped and stifled and incapable of carrying out its responsibilities in the international field, in the field of communications such as the CBC, in the fields of official bilingualism, national defence, and energy. So it is not the federal government of the day; it is the Parliament of Canada. What happens the day the Parliament of Canada has no more funds to appropriate when it must appropriate 42 per cent to the service of the debt and to transfers to the provinces? I do not know exactly what the percentage will be in 1982-83 with regard to payments to individuals for old age pensions, family allowances and so forth, but I venture to say it will be about 25 per cent. So there is not that much money left for there to be discretion on the part of the federal government in its spending. That has to be recognized.

I will prove in a minute that the only provinces the elimination of the revenue guarantee will affect to any important degree, if at all, will be the provinces of Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. With the improvements to the equalization program, the other provinces will gain. What must be considered here is the increase in total equalization, and the increase in EPF which will continue to be indexed to the gross national expenditure. Over all, with the exception of those four provinces, there will be no effect to any important degree. When we consider the offsets from the increases in the federal tax base, in some cases the transfers will be much more generous.

I will provide figures to prove what I am talking about. Let us begin with the province of Newfoundland. The entitlement of the province of Newfoundland in 1981-82 to equalization is $431 million. The entitlement for 1982-83 is $522 million. It will increase from $431 million in 1981-82 to $799 million in 1986-87. EPF cash transfers to Newfoundland will be reduced by $5 million because of the elimination of the revenue guarantee, but the tax transfer will go up by $9 million, and the offsets from increases in provincial revenues, because of the increase in the federal tax base, will be $6 million. So for Newfoundland in 1982-83 the total increase in its revenues because of budget changes and because of fiscal arrangements changes will be from a base of $652 million in 1981-82 to $753 million in 1982-83. That is how generous this program will be. That is a $101 million increase.

Even if hon. members want to disagree politically—and we can have different philosophical perspectives as to how we should deal with the economy in a period of fiscal restraint—all hon. members who are responsible must admit that there has to be some restraint, and if the federal government must restrain its own expenditures on the things it has to do under the Constitution, as it is doing, surely the provincial governments should be able to accept—particularly the four richest ones I mentioned—some degree of adjustment. However, the equalization recipient provinces should not have to, and that is why the program is acceptable to me as a Liberal.

In the case of the four Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Manitoba there will not be reductions when we consider the matter over all. There will be very generous increases. I want to state emphatically to students and administrators in post-secondary education institutions in the four Atlantic provinces—I have looked at the numbers more carefully for those provinces—that there is no justification at all to say there are federal cutbacks because there are no cutbacks in those provinces to squeeze the students and administrators of those institutions. I say this also to health boards and health commissions in Atlantic communities. There is no justification for saying there are federal cutbacks in relation to these services, including hospitals, because in the province of Newfoundland there will be an increase in one year of $101 million. In the province of Prince Edward Island there is a $23 million increase, from $150 million in 1981-82 to $173 million. Someone else can work out the percentages. In Nova Scotia the increase in 1982-83 will be from $863 million to $986 million. That is a $123 million increase when considered over all, and that is how this must be considered.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What about Ontario? Do you have figures for Ontario?

Mr. Breau: I have figures for Ontario, but let me put the figures for my province on the record first. With respect to New Brunswick, when we consider the equalization entitlement for this year and next year we see that there will be an increase from $415 million to $490 million. When we consider equalization, EPF cash and tax, even after the elimination of the revenue guarantee, and when we consider the increases in provincial revenues because of increases in the federal tax base, we see that the total increases are from $695 million to $786 million. However, we do not even have to consider the provincial revenues because of the federal tax base. Some hon. members say we have no business counting those revenues because they are provincial taxes. Let us say I agree with that. Even without that, for Newfoundland the total in 1981-82 is $652 million. In 1982-83 it is $747 million, and it increases and increases by an average of between 12 per cent and 13 per cent a year for the next five years.

Let us consider my own province. In 1981-82 the total is $695 million, and I do not include in that the increases because of the federal tax base. In 1982-83 it is $778 million. There are increases; the numbers are there. There is no justification at all for the provinces of New Brunswick, Newfoundland, P.E.I. or Nova Scotia—I say this emphatically, and I am ready to defend it anywhere—to allege there are federal cutbacks because of the fact that we are eliminating the revenue guarantee. That was only one little part of the fiscal transfer. When we consider this overall, we find they are all getting very generous increases.

Let me refer to Ontario. The hon. member asked about Ontario. The EPF cash transfer was $2.367 billion in 1981-82. That will be reduced to $2.297 billion in 1982-83 because of the elimination of the revenue guarantee. The EPF tax transfer will go up from $1.703 billion to $1.989 billion. That continues to go up. Let us consider the net revenue increase due to the budget tax changes. That has to be considered because Ontario, without taking any political flak and without changing the tax laws in its provincial House, will collect more provincial income tax, $171 million. The total in Ontario goes up from $4.071 billion—and Ontario is not exactly a poor province—to $4.457 billion. Where is the justification for saying we have to cut back funds for the universities of Ontario and we have to cut back on health care because the federal government is cutting back?

Mr. Corbin: That is for the birds.

Mr. Breau: My colleague says that is for the birds. That is for the Blue Jays.

Mr. Fennell: They are doing pretty well this year.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Now tell us about the Alouettes.

Mr. Breau: The revenues to Ontario go up from $4.071 billion to $4.457 billion. That is hardly a reduction. I admit that I included in that the offsets from the increases in the federal tax base. I do not say that they are federal I agree they are income taxes which are collected by the Government of Ontario, but the Government of Ontario does not have to go to its legislature at all to change its taxes. That comes automatically, and it is the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and I who take the flak for that because it is done by the Parliament of Canada.

I want to come back to my own province for a minute because again in terms of political responsibility or political morality is it so bad for the federal government, even if there was an effective reduction from one year to the next, which there is not, to be concerned about the fact that for some provinces the federal contribution as a percentage of what the provinces spend—and I use my words carefully here; it is the percentage of what the provinces spend or what the post-secondary institutions, for example, spend—has gone up? The federal contribution has gone up as a percentage since the advent of block funding in 1977.

• (1450)

Of course, Mr. Justice Hall and others have said that that is not breaking the law. The question is not one of breaking the law, Mr. Speaker. It may very well be legally and technically correct for the provinces to allocate that money as they wish because that was the spirit of the 1977 agreement; what is not correct is that when those provincial governments appropriated the funds they never told the public or the users of the institutions that more money was coming from the federal government. Surely in terms of parliamentary accountability, which is basic, one does not have to be so overly legalistic. That should have been told to the public.

Members of this House are responsible for taxing Canadians and appropriating their funds, so that when we vote—even if there is a division—on behalf of all Canadians to allocate certain moneys for post-secondary education, I do not think it is morally correct, even if it is legal, for a provincial government to allocate the money elsewhere without telling the public about it. The public should be told if the provinces have received more money under the federal-provincial transfer system and if it is being put in a trust fund or elsewhere.

The moral question is important, Mr. Speaker. My own province of New Brunswick is an example but we could take any province, the trend is the same in all. In New Brunswick the federal contribution as a share of provincial expenditures for post-secondary education through EPF—and I include in that, minority and second-language training—has gone from 78.1 per cent in 1976-77 to 107 per cent in this fiscal year. That is legally correct. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker. In 1976-77 the federal government paid 67.7 per cent of what the post-secondary institutions spent. When I say post-secondary institutions, I do not mean only universities but include everything after high school—community colleges and technical schools. What credit does this federal Parliament get for that? Is the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton ever recognized as a federal member when something goes on at a technical school in Ottawa?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member pointing to me when he said that. I would remind him that it was the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker who began the system.

Mr. Breau: I do not quarrel with that, Mr. Speaker. That is correct. There was a succession of governments, from the St. Laurent government to the Pearson government, involved. I recognize that the program under which the first technical schools were built came about under the Diefenbaker government, but that does not make it any less good, Mr. Speaker? It is just as good!

In 1981-82 the federal government paid 99 per cent of moneys spent by post-secondary educational institutions in New Brunswick. That means that the government of New Brunswick allocated 1 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education in technical schools, universities and community colleges in New Brunswick. I do not say that is wrong and I have supported it. There is no way that the government of New Brunswick could afford the kind of education it provides if things were not that way. Newfoundland probably would not have its Memorial University. Prince Edward Island probably would not have the University of P.E.I. Nova Scotia would not have St. Francis Xavier University, and St. Mary's University probably would not exist. In my province—

[Translation]

—the University of Moncton would probably not exist otherwise. However, we have to realize what the situation was. I find it abnormal that federal payments to New Brunswick should have amounted to 107 per cent of the share paid by the New Brunswick government itself during the 1981-82 fiscal year. The people in New Brunswick should at least know this. During the last five years, federal contributions to New Brunswick have increased by 18.4 per cent on average. The provincial government has allotted to its universities, community colleges and technical schools only 11.2 per cent of this average increase of 18.4 per cent in federal contributions. The Government of New Brunswick paid out only 11.2 per cent. I am not saying this is not enough. It is quite possible that these appropriations were adequate. I cannot pass judgment on that. All I say is that the people in New Brunswick are entitled to know.

Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that the equalization entitlement of New Brunswick of $415 million in 1981-82 would increase to $490 million. This represents an increase of 18 per cent in one year. If all the amounts resulting from the additional provincial revenues derived from the increase in the basic federal tax are included, provincial revenues in New Brunswick will go up by $92 million in 1982-83 because of federal contributions. Therefore the governments of the four Atlantic provinces are not justified in saying that the federal government has cut back its contributions and that they must in return reduce their grants to the institutions. Mr. Speaker, if they want to do that, that is a political judgment they will have to make. But if they do go ahead, let them say clearly to the people of New Brunswick and to the people of the other Atlantic provinces why they want to make cuts. In the case of New Brunswick, for instance, there is a $92 million increase—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired and he may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Breau: —if we take equalization into account, if we include the higher provincial revenues derived from the increase in the basic federal tax and if we consider that, with respect to the established programs financing, only the cash share is lower and the tax increase has not been reduced. For New Brunswick, all that adds up to an increase of roughly $92 million. For all the Atlantic provinces, the percentage is about the same. In the case of Newfoundland, I gave the figures a moment ago.

Mr. Speaker, I for one can support this bill because, first of all, if we look at the total figures and keep in mind the generous new equalization program, it all comes out pretty close to what we would get if we were to implement the recommendations of our report. I am convinced that if the provinces are so inclined, they will be able to continue to finance health and post-secondary education programs which will be of great benefit to Canada, and I am glad that the federal Parliament will continue to finance them.

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on Bill C-97 today, amending the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977. I am sure that most Canadians do not realize the extent to which the federal and provincial governments have had historically, and will have in the future, a fiscal relationship that affects the day to day lives of every one of us as citizens.

Bill C-97 will effect very major changes to that transfer program. In 1981-82, under the equalization program federal tax dollars were transferred to the provinces to the extent of $3.6 billion; hospital insurance, approximately $2.8 billion; medicare, approximately $1 billion; extended health care, $700 million; post-secondary education, $1.8 billion; and Canada Assistance Plan, some $2 billion.

The taxpayers of the nation pay part of their money to the federal government and part of their money to the provincial governments, for which they receive services and the benefit of equalization payments made directly to provincial governments. For example, they receive hospital insurance, medicare, post-secondary education, welfare and social assistance. We should never forget that the taxpayers of Canada pay for these services. This was driven home to me more than anything else when I sat as one of the two Progressive Conservative members on the federal task force which looked into transfers. The last speaker, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), was the chairman of the committee. He did a first-class job.

I should like to talk about the results of the work of the task force. It was a fascinating process. Naturally we in the House are in an adversarial system, because Liberals have a vision as to what they want for the country and we have a vision as to what we would do for the country. Those visions are different with regard to the role of individuals and that of the state. We also know that committees tend to be rather adversarial, but Parliament has come up with the mechanism of a task force. We have had seven task forces. In the case of the one to which I referred, there were four Liberal members, two Conservatives and a member of the NDP. The members of the task force were all backbenchers. The purpose of the task force was for us to direct our minds to the problem. Rather than from the perspective of politics, we approached the problem with the idea of seeing if we could, from the evidence we gathered, come up with some solutions to recommend to our fellow members of Parliament. This is exactly what we did. Over the course of four months we travelled across the entire country. We talked to people who were actually delivering medicare, such as doctors and nurses. Also we talked to university administrators, students, people administering welfare programs and to members of provincial governments, including members of the cabinets and of the legislatures. A large number of common sense recommendations resulted from the work of the task force. If the government felt obliged to adopt them, I am sure the country would be much stronger.

I should like to make a few comments about the fiscal history of the country. As in the case of everything else, we are not addressing this problem in a vacuum. We have had a long history of federal-provincial relations which started with confederation. Section 91 of the BNA Act gave certain powers to the federal government, and Section 92 gave certain powers to the provincial governments. Prior to the 1930s or prior to the Second World War, some 70 per cent of public government moneys were spent by the provinces and some 30 per cent were spent through Parliament. As a result of the outbreak of World War II, the provinces gave up their taxing powers to the federal government because we wanted to finance the war. In that national effort, provinces gave up their taxing powers over their citizens to the federal government, pursuant to Section 92 of the BNA Act. At that time some 70 per cent of revenues were spent by the federal government and some 30 per cent through the provincial governments. We can see that it was a total reversal of what existed before the Second World War. Since that war there has been a gradual transfer of additional cash and tax points from the federal government back to the provinces, so that by about 1980 it was back to where it was before World War II, that is, some 70 per cent of the money was spent through the provinces and some 30 per cent through Parliament.

When citizens hear the government say that it is losing its fiscal capacity, that it is being weakened and that it must be strengthened, perhaps it is a legitimate political point of view, but if we look at the history of it we are back to where we were before. This is consistent with the country being a federation. We are so broad and diverse, with such differing provincial interests, that most people want their provinces to be significant in their lives. Most people feel that provinces are more responsive to them than we are in the House of Commons. This is understandable. When we superimpose Canada upon Europe, we realize that it goes from the west coast of Ireland, across Ireland, across England, across the Netherlands and Germany, through Poland and beyond the Ural Mountains in Russia. If we look at the various countries in Europe that operate in areas much smaller than that of Canada and compare them with what we have done in Canada with one federal government and ten provincial governments, I think we should be incredibly proud.

We shall always have federal-provincial conflicts, but the government should not say that the nation will fall because the sharing of tax and public revenue has now returned to what it was before the Second World War, no more than it did during the war when 70 per cent of the money was collected in Ottawa in the national interest.

We require fiscal flexibility so that during times of national crises or war financial power and decision making can flow to the centre and we can act as a nation. During peacetime there will be a natural filtering out and flowing of taxing authority and spending power to the provinces as a reflection of our huge country and its very diverse regions. As the task force travelled across the country, I did not find any objection to a mechanism which would be flexible enough so power and cash could flow to the federal government in an emergency. As I said, during the war the federal government took the taxing power from the provinces by way of a tax rental agreement. Since that time we have entered into a period of five-year agreements which are commonly called "tax collection agreements". The last one was negotitated in 1976-77. In the past, negotitions at each of those five-year periods were carried out between governments. Then a bill was presented in the House and in the provincial legislatures. This was felt by some of us in Parliament to be entirely not satisfactory from the perspective of representing our constituents. Therefore, the government agreed to the opposition request to set up this task force to travel across the country and come up with a large number of recommendations.

The process is correct now; Members of Parliament should have input. I hope the government agrees to this in the future. The real question is whether, compared with the 1977 agreement, the government would be cutting back the amount of cash it would transfer to the provinces, if it were extended for the next five-year period? The answer in terms of cash is absolutely undisputed—there is a cutback in cash transfers to the provinces. The amount of that cash cutback is what the federal government now refers to as the revenue guarantee.

I want to show that the government is cutting back, and that it should not be hiding it by trying to say that it is doing away with something which existed in 1971. The government should come out and say that it is cutting back money because of the deficit, because the provinces have been unreasonable, because it wants to decide how to spend more cash, or any number of other reasons. Why should the government not be honest and straightforward? It should not come up with the fraudulent excuse of the revenue guarantee. The fact of the matter is that in 1971, there was a new tax regime which was brought in by Edgar Benson. As the five-year agreement was negotiated, there was a great deal of uncertainty as to whether the provinces, under the new taxing mechanism, would have the same cash flow. Therefore, the federal government said that it would give them a guarantee, and that took place. Then in 1976 the parties got together again to negotiate the new five-year contract from 1977 to 1982. Both the federal and the provincial governments had a position. Under the 1971 agreement there was a cost-sharing agreement, dollar for dollar, but the actual costs of operating health care and post-secondary education were going up enormously. Both levels of government agreed there had to be a cutback. They agreed there would be a base amount of funding by the federal government and between 1977 and 1982 that base would go up by a delayed three-year average of the gross national product. That was part of the negotiated settlement.

The question of the revenue guarantee was discussed. Health care and post-secondary education agreements were not coming up until 1980. Because the federal government would have been forced to continue paying dollar for dollar, it offered $7.60 per capita plus one tax point provided the provinces would give up extending those two agreements to 1980. That was the negotiated settlement. It is like you and I meeting and each of us making an offer and negotiating back and forth. We would then come to an agreement. That was it. The federal govenment then put in a base amount to be escalated by the three-year delayed average of the GNP.

The revenue guarantee effectively died. It no longer was a part of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements agreement. That is why I say that it is really perverse for the federal government in 1982 to refer back to 1971 and forget entirely about the agreement of 1976. I would rather see the government be straight and honest and say "We are going to cut back the money, folks, because of one, two, three and four reasons." Let us not hear any of these silly reasons because that causes a breakdown in trust and relationships between levels of government and here in the House. I do not want to be part of any sort of fraudulent deal. Why do we not just face the situation? If we feel that Parliament needs to have more money here and less money for the provinces, let us face that directly.

Proof of that lies in a speech made by Donald Macdonald, as reported in Hansard, when he said that it was a deal and we gave them $7.60 and a tax point, and that ended the revenue guarantee.

I want to speak about equalization for a minute. There is no doubt that it is a program which is found in virtually every federation. But here in Canada we have come up with our own method. We have bounced around from national averages to a two-province proposal. The last agreement was back to a national average. Now we are basing our calculations on the average GNP of some of the more wealthy provinces, excluding the Atlantic provinces. I do not see any problem with that. A five province average GNP is a good standard upon which to base equalization payments. I did not agree with the original suggestion that they should be based upon the average GNP in Ontario alone, because Ontario is in the process again, as a result of federal government unilateral actions, of effectively de-industrializing. Let me tell you why that is so.

Some ten years ago, the federal government decided that if the price of energy went up Canadians were going to be insulated from that. In other words, we were not going to be blackmailed by any of the Arab states. Therefore, the federal government made a unilateral decision to keep down the price of oil. But that sent out signals to the car manufacturers to continue producing big cars. It sent signals to Canadians to continue buying them. That is exactly what we did. But meanwhile Japan and Germany had no choice but to go to world price for oil. The top brains and engineers in Japan and Germany immediately directed their minds toward producing more efficient cars and engines. As a result, now, ten years later, we cannot compete with them. They beat us at every turn. Most Canadians losing jobs in the Windsor corridor do not realize that it was as a result of a government decision ten years ago to somehow deny reality. That is what happens when governments get involved. It does not matter of which political stripe they are. It is the function of a government that is too big and tries to protect people, for political purposes, which it is unable to do.

If you give a 10 per cent subsidy to an industry, Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee you that within two or three years that industry will be 10 per cent inefficient. Meanwhile, other countries that do not have the benefit of subsidies face reality. They produce within reality and they can beat the country with a subsidized industry.

Equalization is a good program. It is uniquely Canadian and it is now entrenched in our Constitution. Each area in turn over the course of Canadian history has been wealthy. Before confederation, for a while, the Atlantic provinces were wealthy compared to Ontario and Quebec. After confederation, Ontario became a wealthy province and contributed net benefits. We in the west were recipients. In the east they were contributors. Now we in the west are net contributors to the national good. That is the way it should be. We are proud to make those contributions. It may be that in 25 years from now the fish off the Atlantic coast, the oil in Hibernia or the oil in the north will bring more money into the central coffers. We may once again in Alberta be a have-not province. We can all operate with the east being strong for a few decades and then the west. Perhaps the pendulum will swing again depending upon the ebb and flow of world affairs and whatever is "hot" at the time. Clearly, we want to protect that equalization policy.

The other major program, commonly defined as the established programs financing, covers health insurance, medicare and post-secondary education. As I say, there is no doubt that these programs are being cut because of the revenue guarantee. There will be less cash transferred to the provinces. That is a situation we should be facing head on. The real problem comes again because provinces are like people; some have more wealth than others. Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan will not be hurt that much by the cutbacks because they are wealthy provinces at this time. But the seven provinces east of Saskatchewan all have substantial deficits. To take a cut in cash transfers will have a great impact on them.

The real questions are, first, what is the fiscal capacity of government and second, which level of government has the strongest fiscal capacity to handle the deficit? Obviously the answer is the federal government. The federal government can tax all the people of this country. It can tax all of the northern lands and the oil and gas flowing from there. It can tax the oil and gas flowing offshore, both on the east and on the west coasts. But compare that kind of taxation with what can happen in Prince Edward Island. Prince Edward Island has 125,000 people and a few more potatoes than that. Its tax base is restricted basically to an agricultural type of economy, whereas Alberta can tax the oil production industry, the oil service industry, the oil refining industry and a very rich agricultural industry because of irrigation.

The federal government can tax by any means and mode. The real question Canadians should ask is which level of government can best handle the deficit. Clearly, it has to be the federal government. For the Liberal government now to transfer some of its deficit to the backs of the seven provinces east of Saskatchewan strikes me as being wrong. I would rather see the government face this problem directly. If Canadians need to have a tax increase to counter that, so be it. For years and years the federal Liberal government has been offering all sorts of attractive programs to Canadians, preserving for them that low capitalistic tax. The difference was made up by borrowing under the table. You can get away with that for a while. The national debt was $5 billion, then $10 billion and then $20 billion. But now the national debt is something like $100 billion. The interest alone to service that debt costs $17 billion. Some 20 per cent plus of every tax dollar just services the debt. So now we see the government having to apply socialist taxes to meet socialist programs.

• (1520)

Mr. Nystrom: Socialist! These guys are not socialists.

Mr. Thacker: In the meantime, Canadians went out and bought bigger houses than they really needed, took on larger mortgages, and paid too much for land. Now we are getting the taxes to match the program, and business is dropping away. We are going to lose one third to one half of the small industry in this country, again because of government decisions to offer programs along with low taxes.

I certainly believe, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a higher level of debate in the House over the last few days as a result of this fiscal task force which the hon. member for Gloucester chaired. He did a first-class job and, if I may say so, I think the rest of us did also, including the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead). We found that Canadians have no problem in wearing both a federal and a provincial hat. They recognize that their money goes to both the federal and provincial governments. The overriding recommendation and advice they gave to us was: "Listen, you crazy politicians, make the system work. You have a duty to make the system work". They told us that again and again. Then we came back to our colleagues in the House and told them that Canadians want it to work. Co-operative federalism is the reality of this nation, and as elected representatives we have an obligation to make it work. We also found that the task force process was a good one, and we hope our colleagues will buy it in the future when the next agreement comes up, I suppose in 1987.

In dealing with the established programs financing we found it necessary to separate the programs, so we recommended that health insurance be separate from other programs and that it receive 67.9 per cent of the 1981-82 contributions. Post-secondary education, which we found to be a very unique area, should receive 32.1 per cent. It is unique simply because of our unique confederation. In 1867, because of its critical importance to the people of Quebec with regard to language and culture, education was left to the provinces under Section 92 of the BNA Act. Consequently, technically the federal government should have no say in it. But during the 1950s and 1960s when education became an important priority to Canadians, the federal government became involved because it had this massive taxing and spending power I mentioned earlier. This resulted in money being transferred to the provinces.

In spite of the fact the federal government puts a lot of money into education, we found, because of the Constitution and because of the very deep feelings of the people of Quebec, which go beyond all provincial parties, that the federal government basically had to be restricted to being not much more than a source of money. However, there is no doubt that the provinces over the past five years have not honoured their 1976 commitment to let the federal government share in the decision making, at least with respect to identifying national goals. I have no hesitation in speaking against the provincial Conservative governments. They were too protective of their jurisdiction and should not now be seen to be whining and snivelling when the federal government says, "We wants to have more say in the matter, and either you give us a role or we will cut back". The provinces were too aggressive. Had they shared a little more, they could have helped the situation and we probably would not be in this position today. I have no hesitation in directing that toward all provincial governments, sir.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government has to get its own house in order with respect to education. We recommended the creation of a focal point so that federal government contributions can be co-ordinated and synchronized. I did not hear the hon. member for Gloucester refer to that and I am not sure whether the government has accepted the recommendation in our task force study for the appointment of a central co-ordinator for federal programs. I hope the hon. member will follow that up because I do believe it to be a sound recommendation.

Then there were recommendations dealing with students. As a result of federal cutbacks even in the revenue guarantee portion there is no doubt some provinces will have to increase tuition fees. That will have a serious effect because the one thing we achieved during the 1950s, starting with John Diefenbaker and carrying through the Pearson era, was that thousands of children from modest income families were able, through low tuition and the accessibility of universities, to go to university. Having done so, they were then able to go out in the world and build fascinating careers for themselves. Now, to the extent the revenue guarantee is cut back, the provinces, particularly those east of Saskatchewan, will have to increase tuition fees. There is no doubt that this will affect accessibility, which in turn will affect the capacity of this nation to build its future and become the most powerful and popular nation in the entire world.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, when the government cuts back on the revenue guarantee it should at least couple that with a solid commitment of funds to the Canadian student loan program so that those who wish to take on that burden will have it interest free until they are working and making a living. Most students would be prepared to take on that burden if they could have some help during the early years, such as this interest-free provision. We could also have a creative combination of grants and loans perhaps to cover the first year of university. Students would decide whether or not they like university, and if they do then they could have an additional loan and a smaller grant for the second year. The same would apply to the third and fourth years and on into graduate school. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is not to be because the government has not announced an increase of funding to the loan program, and I very much fear that many students in the eastern provinces will lose the opportunity of attending university. To that extent the cutbacks are truly a tragedy in their lives.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is shameful.

Mr. Thacker: I think that is an honest criticism of the government. It seems to be drawing back from the commitment and idealism of the 1950s and 1960s when we wanted to have a place where young people could get an education and then go out into the world and help co-operative federalism and social justice.

It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that we in the task force found the federal deficit to be discretionary. We have this deficit because of conscious and deliberate decisions of Liberal governments since the coming to power of our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In 1968 we had balanced budgets, a very low national debt, a very strong feeling of national unity, particularly after Expo 67, and sound health care and pension systems. We also had a good post-secondary education system, and Canadians were paying moderate taxes. As a result of these decisions made by Liberal governments we now find ourselves in this deficit position, which is affecting our flexibility. The $17 billion interest cost is concentrating in the hands of people with real wealth, both in and outside Canada.

I wonder how many members realize there are some 12 million plus Canadians who have bank accounts. An interest rate of 19.5 per cent is just great for them. Those who have a million dollars have the choice of investing it in industry or business, where they have all the risk and might lose it all, or they can lend it to their own government and come away with $195,000 over a period of 12 months with no risk. It is guaranteed. What are they going to do? Of course they are going to lend it to their own government. But that is concentrating wealth. So we will have a class of people who are incredibly wealthy and a huge number of the very, very poor. That is exactly what happened in India and in some other countries that cannot break out of their cycle. That is what happens when governments get into deficit. At the same time, because of the inflation which is settling on land, within a decade we will have a class of landlords and a class of serfs, tenant farmers, and that is a step 900 years back into history.

• (1530)

Miss Bégin: Vraiment?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Écoutez.

Mr. Thacker: That is a step back to feudalism. The federal government has to take that swing right on the chin.

Mr. Speaker, the next topic is really medicare. That program has some very real problems attaching to it because it relates to a matter that affects us all dramatically, particularly as we come into our old age and start to lose our health. We want to have access not only to doctors but to good hospitals, to medical treatment, to drugs; it deals with doctors' incomes, and with extra billing and with service to people and to user fees.

We should recognize at the start that we are attempting to balance the very legitimate interests of the users, the doctors, the hospital support staffs and of the taxpayers of the country. There is no doubt as to the reality of the fact that the incomes of general practitioners are down. I think that is not so with respect to specialists, but it certainly is so with respect to family care doctors. To the extent that we injure our doctors and we affect their status and their belief in themselves, we are going to be hurting ourselves as citizens.

We all know the history, that prior to medicare doctors were self-employed individuals, they set up their own offices, they provided their own staff, they provided for their own pensions, out of the fee for service. A person went to a doctor and paid a fee. That fee was variable, depending on what the doctor felt. Oftentimes it was nothing, sometimes it was a great deal, depending upon the wealth of the recipient. It was a fee for service. Doctors had a real status in our community, and for that status and the ability to be self-employed they were prepared to hire the staff, to provide their own pensions and to work very, very hard. I do not think there is a person in this building who would deny the reality of the contribution that doctors made in those early days, with their horse and buggy and in their cars, going out at all hours of the night. That is a tribute which certainly is deserved in the community where I come from being a farm boy from the prairies.

They also had at that time a very special relationship which they described as the doctor-patient relationship. Then we got medicare, and again there was a feeling across the country that not everybody had access to doctors, that somehow it was demeaning for some to take medical services and not to be paid. Therefore, again the government became involved and it said: "We will step in, folks, we will guarantee you service" and they imposed a system upon the provinces. So the new factor was no longer a patient-doctor relationship, in terms of a health relationship or a fee relationship; there was now a doctor, a patient and a third party, government, and the government was setting the fee schedule. As a result, over a period of time, the charts show clearly that the incomes of general practitioners have dropped vis-a-vis other status people in the community.

Personally I feel we are in the process of destroying our health care. I feel badly about it because I think it is a product of government with its bureaucracy and its indirect lack of understanding by politicians of the true relationship and what happens out in the field.

Mr. Speaker, you will note that the task force recommended that extra billings be banned. I stand with the doctors 100 per cent in their opposition to the banning of extra billing, because that will genuinely fix in place a dishonest system. We should be, more than anything else, honest. If Canadians want to have their doctors as civil servants, let us turn to the doctors, let us say: "Look, that is what they want; therefore we will pay you a salary equal to that of Members of Parliament, that is $65,000." Really, I suppose we would have to pay them $75,000 because we get $16,600 tax free. Let us offer the doctors $75,000 as a salary, let us provide their staff for them, as the people do for us and as we do for staff doctors and for lawyers who work for us. Let us provide them with their offices, let us provide them with a pension plan as generous as ours. If that were done, you would have virtually 100 per cent of the doctors under the plan. Now they have the worst of all worlds. They have the so-called image of being self-employed and all the decoction of it, but they are not because their fees are set, and yet they are expected to provide their offices and their staff. So why do we not offer to take over all of their offices? It would cost the Canadian people several billions of dollars, but at least it would be honest and the doctors would be working 37 hours a week.

Some people say there are too many doctors in this country. The only reason there are too many doctors is that they are all working 60 and 70 hours a week. If the doctors were working the hours that our civil service work or the hours that are worked in most industries, 37 hours a week, there would not be too many doctors. If they can make $75,000 a year, have their pension provided for as we do, we would have no trouble.

So my plea to you, as fellow members, is this. We should face it directly. Either we want doctors as civil servants and we will make the necessary adjustment, or we are prepared to leave them as self-employed, independent people. We have to give them more freedom on their billing or we have to set up a mechanism where by they would truly know that they have power to get what they feel they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians must decide, because there is no doubt that the medicare system is failing. We have examples from other countries. Britain adopted a system which has tried to create the illusion of self-dependent doctors but with the government setting the fees. As a result, the system has deteriorated to the point where patients are assigned now to a doctor. In Britain you do not have the freedom to go to the doctor you choose, particularly if you are poor. You are directed to doctor A, and if you do not like him that is tough luck for you, you have a terribly difficult time shifting. At the same time, the doctor has his patient load assigned to him, and as a result there is opting out.

If there is anyone who thinks doctors can be prevented from opting out, they will find it cannot be done, because they will operate in their own homes if they want to. Then you get a two-tier system.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, because I find his speech excellent, but I would like the opportunity to ask him a question while he is on the subject of medical training and doctors, if he would permit it.

Mr. Thacker: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have a question.

Mr. Rose: The hon. member was saying that we had a couple of choices in dealing with the doctors—three choices—half civil servants, half free enterprise. He did not mention that their education is paid for by the public almost up to 90 per cent. Would he also agree that if we are going to move them into civil service status, then since there are so many young people who try to get into medical schools and fail, we should also increase the size of medical schools so that we could take in larger and larger numbers and thereby, by competition, which I am sure his party is all in favour of, reduce the value of a doctor's income, or at the least the wages that he can command, simply by competition?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no doubt that if doctors were on staff as our civil servants are—many of whom are doctors, too, as we do employ many doctors—and if we provided for their pensions, and if they were working 37 hours a week, there would not be a surplus and we would therefore need to have a great expansion of our medical schools. I have no objection to that.

The one thing that we found on the task force, from the evidence that came forth, is his second contention that having more doctors would mean more competition and that their incomes would drop. It just does not happen that way. Medicare and medicine are the type of thing where the number of doctors really determines the amount of medical service available. There is really in effect an unlimited demand. The more doctors you have, the more people go to them and go more often, and there are people who stay away now who would then go. This was borne out by the evidence that came before us. It was brought to our attention by some of the nursing groups. Some of the nursing groups would like to become a point of entry to the medicare system. Right now it is only doctors who have a point of entry. The nurses wanted to become a point of entry, on the basis that they could do a lot of the things that are of lesser significance medically. The hard evidence is that if there were an additional point of entry, the cost of medicare would just balloon enormously. It is not a question of supply and demand, like cars and trucks are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I will summarize. Clearly there is no doubt that the federal government is cutting back cash transfers. The cutback is the amount of the revenue guarantee. I wish it would do it straight up and honestly rather than skip the 1976 agreement as though it never occurred and go back to 1971.

There is no doubt that the effect on the seven provinces east of Saskatchewan will be very dramatic. We are putting on to their shoulders a fiscal burden they cannot cope with. They do not have the fiscal capacity to do it. We in the central government have access to taxation by any means and mode. We have the fiscal capacity to handle it. We should face that problem here.

The reason for the cutback is that the federal government prevails when it wants more money in its hand. That may be legitimate with respect to certain provinces which have taken money from Parliament and given it to the people, taking full credit and giving no credit to the Parliament of Canada. However, when dealing with matters of health care and post-secondary education, I do not think Parliament should take the taxing power, spend money and get credit for it when it will cause harm to the provinces. I will be opposing this bill unless there is an amendment or two. If she has not already done so, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) will be proposing an amendment that will substantially improve this bill. If it is accepted by the government, many members on this side will support this bill. As it is now, we cannot support it.

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to begin speaking this afternoon on Bill C-97. I am pleased to follow my two colleagues on the task force, the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), and the chairman of the task force, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). It was a seven-man all-party parliamentary committee. As the previous speaker said, we worked very hard and intensively from March to July of last year, and finally published the report in August. The report, which has been mentioned in the House on different occasions, is the first report of its kind dealing with fiscal federalism in Canada. It will be very useful in the days and years ahead.

In the second part of my remarks, which I will perhaps complete on Monday, I would like to speak more about the task force experience and something of the recommendations of the task force, particularly in the health care and post-secondary education fields.

The government has proposed that national standards for health care be clarified and that an effective mechanism for their maintenance be developed, in consultation with the provinces, for incorporation in new federal legislation by March of next year. The government has also proposed that there should be two full years, until March, 1984, for consultations and discussions of ways of implementing the national objectives with respect to post-secondary education.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in his speech to the House on March 22 of this week at page 15681 of Hansard stated that the parliamentary task force had a good deal to say about the program aspects of EPF and that it made some rather helpful proposals in support of the directions in which the government is now moving. I therefore will get back to discussing some of these proposals in a few minutes. However, first it might be useful to summarize some of the main aspects of Bill C-97.

The bill when passed will transfer $105 billion to the provinces in cash and tax points over the next five years under the two major programs of fiscal equalization and established programs financing. Over the past five years $61 billion was contributed to these two programs, and we will be spending on these programs some $44 billion more during the next five years than we have in the past five years. The bill will also provide a new equalization formula.

It is not generally realized that the provinces now spend the largest share of public moneys raised in Canada. Between 1961 and 1981 the federal share of total government revenues declined from 57 per cent to 49 per cent and the provincial and municipal share increased from 43 per cent to 51 per cent. If you deduct federal transfers to provinces from federal revenues and consider them as provincial revenues, the federal share of the total revenue pie has decreased since 1961 from 50 per cent to only 38 per cent today. These numbers indicate that Canada is one of the most fiscally decentralized countries in the western world.

The fiscal equalization program is a cornerstone of the Canadian federation. It seeks to make possible for all provinces to provide reasonable standards of basic public services to their residents without having to resort to unduly high levels of taxation. About $29.3 billion of equalization will be paid to the four Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Manitoba during the next five years, compared to $16.5 billion paid to them during the last five years under the equalization program.

The equalization program has two fundamental components. The first is the measure of provincial fiscal capacity. That is the capacity or potential of a province to raise revenues through taxes of various kinds relative to the capacity of other provinces. The bill proposes to broaden the measure of fiscal capacity to include, among other items, municipal taxes and the sale of goods and services by local government. The second basic element is the equalization standard.

Originally the government had proposed to shift to the Ontario standard so that those provinces which did not have the capacity or potential to raise revenues equal to the capacity of Ontario would continue to receive equalization payments.

However, because many of the other provinces were concerned about the economic future of Ontario, the Government of Canada in this bill now proposes a more broadly based standard which will take into account the average taxation capacity of Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

The bill contains a transitional arrangement protecting provinces against too abrupt changes in the level of their equalization and it also contains a ceiling provision under which the growth of total equalization payments to all provinces will not exceed the rate of growth of the Canadian gross national product.

Equalization payments to the six have-not provinces will increase by 13.6 per cent in 1982-83 and by 11.2 per cent on average over the next five years. The transfers made under the Established Programs Financing Act have, since 1977, funded provincial health care and post-secondary education programs. They have also compensated provinces for termination of the 1972 tax reform revenue guarantee.

Under the present system of transferring cash and tax points, the wealthier provinces like Alberta and British Columbia obtained more benefit from their tax points than did the poorer provinces. As recommended by our parliamentary task force, this bill modifies the cash transfers so that the per capita value of total federal contribution to all provinces will be equal. The bill will also end the EPF transfer that compensated the provinces for the 1972 tax reform revenue guarantee. This equalled one personal income tax point and the cash equivalent of a second tax point.

The provinces have argued and are arguing that by ending the revenue guarantee moneys the Canadian government is undermining our support for post-secondary education and health. However, this is definitely not the case. When the premiers met last summer they explicitly declined to include the revenue guarantee as a portion of the federal contribution toward health care and post-secondary education. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall in his 1980 report on health programs also stated that the federal contribution to health programs does not include the two tax points attributable to the revenue guarantee. The government of Canada contribution to these two vital programs will continue to grow over the next five years in line with the increase in the gross national product. The tax measures announced in the November 12 budget for 1982-83 alone will increase provincial revenues by another $685 million.

I wish to re-emphasize that the government's contribution to health care and post-secondary education will increase on an average of 11 per cent per year over the next five years, and so it is ridiculous to say that federal contributions are being cut back. The revenue guarantee program was designed to protect provinces against unforeseen reductions in their revenues which might have resulted from the 1972 tax reforms. It was supposed to end in 1977 but was extended for a further five years. The provinces have had ten years to adjust their taxes to the 1972 tax reforms, and there is no longer any justification to continue the revenue guarantee. In any event, the revenue guarantee in question may make up about 5 per cent of the total amount of moneys that are otherwise being paid to the provinces.

The bill contains certain other items, including allowing the government to transfer to oil producing provinces their share of the federal oil export charge for oil exported from November, 1980, to January, 1982, and to compensate certain provinces with respect to changes in population brought out in the 1981 census.

This bill will enable the federal government to contribute $105 billion for equalization, health care and post-secondary education over the next five years, which emphasizes the strong role that the Government of Canada will continue to play in providing Canadians with the services they need and deserve.

The task force was established last spring as a result of a proposal by the opposition parties which was readily accepted by the government. It included four Liberals: the chairman, the hon. member for Gloucester and hon. members for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), Verchères (Mr. Loiselle) and myself; two Conservatives, the vice chairman, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker); and one NDP, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). The task force was empowered to retain the services of a professional staff, and Peter Dobell of the Parliamentary Centre for Foreign Affairs and Foreign Trade was able to recruit a group of able, knowledgeable and hard-working advisers under Dr. Rodney Dobell of the University of Victoria.

The research branch of the Library of Parliament also provided helpful support, and the research staffs of the three political parties also contributed greatly. The task force produced a set of guidelines and principles—a framework—within which we believe representatives of federal and provincial governments can best negotiate, whatever changes appear appropriate in light of the social goals of these programs and the economic circumstances that prevail as negotiations proceed over the next year or two. The thread that runs through the task force report is not budgetary calculations but accountability in Parliament for federal spending. We concentrated not on the government's expenditure plan but on the institutional changes designed to ensure that Parliament itself can deal more effectively with and be held more fully accountable for federal revenues going directly to provincial governments. We were willing to endorse this report collectively, not because we all compromised to the point of reaching total consensus on the document, not because we erased all the philosophical differences that separate our positions, but because the report makes clear what some of the differences are. We sincerely believed that what was most important for us as a task force and what is important for us as a country was to work together to arrive at action that was mutually acceptable in light of our different values; not to separate and go our own ways because we cannot agree.

As mentioned, on page six of our report, as we crossed the country, one message was clear—Canadian citizens are more sensitive to what unites them than to what separates them. They are more concerned with a workable federal system than with fine points of jurisdiction. Despite the strains and controversy associated with energy policy, the Constitution, RCMP costs and other inter-governmental frictions, we found that individual Canadians still seem to have little difficulty wearing two hats; as federal taxpayers and voters and as provincial taxpayers and voters. We are heartened to be able to confirm that Canadians remain willing to share their good fortune through interprovincial redistribution and through inter-regional transfers. They look to the federal government to assure appropriate national standards of access and equity in the programs through which equality of opportunity can be achieved for all Canadians. We encountered few who quarrelled with the need for strong federal leadership in setting out these national standards. Particularly encouraging was the view of many provincial officials and ministers that in co-operative negotiations with their federal counterparts, there would emerge few serious differences on basic national objectives. In short, Canadians are more united than their governments sometimes seem to be—the links that bind them are in reality much stronger than the relations between their governments might suggest.

We held hearings in Ottawa, including evidence from the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the then Secretary of State, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox). We then travelled to the capitals of each of the 12 provinces and territories and met with each of the provincial treasurers or finance ministers, as well as with representatives of the various interest groups, and members of the public at large who are involved with and concerned for our health care system, our post-secondary education system, the funding of our welfare and social services, and our equalization program for the have-not provinces. In addition, we heard views of academic experts, six former premiers of provinces, the Economic Council of Canada, our native peoples and many others.

The members of our task force are very conscious that this was the first occasion on which public consultation and active parliamentary involvement had been possible with respect to reviewing fiscal federalism in Canada, and we therefore recommended that prior to future intergovernmental negotiations on fiscal arrangements, members of Parliament again have a similar opportunity for consultation with the public.

Mr. Speaker, I have some more remarks which might be held over to Monday with respect to some of the recommendations regarding health care and post-secondary education. I wonder if I might call it four o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

EXPENSES INCURRED BY TAXPAYERS

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of the Department of National Revenue assuming responsibility for the expenses incurred by a taxpayer whom the Department causes to be investigated, when such investigation by the Department's officials does not result in a suit or claim.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have been very anxious to see this motion tabled in the House of Commons and I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this subject. The purpose of the motion is to correct a situation in which many Canadians find themselves. Most members of this House know of similar cases in their ridings. The scenario is always the same. Your secretary puts through an urgent call from one of your constituents, usually a contractor, a businessman or perhaps a pensioner. Then, at the other end a voice says, panic-stricken: They are here. In a flash, you understand that your constituent has just had a visit from the Revenue Canada taxation officers. I am not blaming all the department's officers. After all, it is not much fun collecting taxes and income tax. On the other hand, there has been a certain amount of abuse, and I feel that Parliament should be informed.

I shall briefly summarize, if I may, the role of Revenue Canada, Taxation. As all Canadians probably know, personal income tax was introduced in Canada in 1917. When the legislation was passed, Canadians were given the assurance that it was only a temporary measure that would be abolished as soon as the First World War ended. The rest is history, Mr. Speaker. There is a vast store of witty remarks made by taxpayers regarding this temporary measure, which is not expected to disappear very soon. Perhaps this is one example where a government program has been too successful. A Revenue Canada publication called "Inside Taxation", 1981 edition, tells us that the department took more than $50 billion out of our pockets in 1980-81. That is plenty of money and it explains why we are not about to witness the extinction of our income tax system. The Department of National Revenue is such a profitable business, Mr. Speaker! You can learn a lot by reading the publication "Inside Taxation". You learn that the first function of the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, is the collecting of taxes and other fiscal contributions while deterring fraud and tax evasion. Its second function is maintaining public confidence in the integrity of the taxation system by administering tax legislation fairly, uniformly and courteously. I am emphasizing the word "courteously".

Let me say a few words about courtesy. Of course, for most taxpayers, the payroll deduction system, also called fiscal anesthesia, avoids the need for direct contact with the tax collector. Once a year, every Canadian taxpayer completes a return in which he admits having obtained a certain income and enters as having been deducted from his paychecks, an amount of money which he never had in his pocket, and often is entitled to a small refund. On the other hand, self-employed workers and employers may have closer contacts with the officials of Revenue Canada, Taxation.

Finally, there are taxpayers whose returns are audited and who are provided with revised assessments. How many are there? According to departmental sources, 91,367 returns were checked in 1980-81, which resulted in 70,057 new assessments, and it is with this specific group of Canadian taxpayers that I am concerned. What is the pattern that fits this taxpayer? This constituent who gets in touch with us after having been visited by a taxation officer is often a contractor, a businessman or even a retired person. He has developed a business or a company and employs three, four, five people, often between 20 and 40 people and sometimes more. He pays all his income and other taxes. Most often, he has hired a professional, namely an accountant, to do his bookkeeping, to complete his various tax returns and to provide all the required forms to Revenue Canada, Taxation. One day, he is audited and can then see for himself how the Department of National Revenue goes about enforcing the Canadian tax legislation courteously.

It is unfortunate, but in the cases referred to me, I have found that the Department of National Revenue treats these Canadian citizens literally as though they were criminals. A taxpayer will find that if he is prosecuted by Revenue Canada, Taxation, the burden of proof does not rest on the plaintiff, namely the Department of Revenue, but on the taxpayer himself. It is therefore up to him to prove that he is innocent, hence that Revenue Canada, Taxation is wrong. In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to see that the department has all the advantage while the taxpayer must spend a lot of money to prove his innocence. When he succeeds, he is simply told: "Sorry, we made a mistake."

Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention an article published in Saturday Night magazine in April, 1981. The author quotes Mr. Alan Zener, a lawyer who worked with the Department of Justice and represented Revenue Canada in court. Mr. Zener said, and I quote:

> Very often Revenue Canada comes before the courts with very little evidence, but they win their case because the accused, the taxpayer, cannot prove that the assessment notice was incorrect.

This should fly in the face of our sense of justice. However, there is something more serious. Despite the rules that hamper the taxpayers, some of them manage to prove that the assessment notice is incorrect. They win their case. But in order to do so, they have had to spend thousands of dollars in professional fees for lawyers, accountants or tax experts. And this they have to pay. It is in order that this injustice be redressed that I put forward my motion, and I take pleasure in reading it once more, Mr. Speaker, because I find it important:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of the Department of National Revenue assuming responsibility for the expenses incurred by a taxpayer whom the department causes to be investigated, when such investigation by the department's officials does not result in a suit or claim.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the audit branch at Revenue Canada, in addition to not having the burden of proof, has free access to an army of experts within the departments of Finance, Justice and National Revenue. The taxpayer is all by himself, and to get any help he must pay the price. If he happens to win his case, all he is entitled to is a few words of excuse. I am shocked by this. Where the taxpayer can establish that his position was clear and had to incur costs to do so, the Department of National Revenue should compensate for his costs. This in my view might reduce the number of charges against taxpayers, and perhaps even lead Revenue Canada to play a much more significant social role in other terms to humanize Taxation Canada.

The error made by the taxpayers who are investigated by the department of National Revenue is that they do not realize that the litigation, or rather the lawsuit, starts the moment the auditor knocks at his door. The auditor has the right to check everywhere, to require the production of all kinds of documents. This is where the taxpayer needs professional help. Why? The answer is quite simple: If the department goes before the courts, the answers given to the auditor in the course of an investigation may be held as evidence against the taxpayer. So, from the very start, he needs professional help. Sometimes after an investigation the department will close a file and matters will not go before the courts because they would lose their case. However, the taxpayer has proved his innocence at the investigation stage, if I may say so, and to do that he has had to incur costs. My motion is aimed at creating a mechanism which the Department of National Revenue would use to reimburse the taxpayer's costs.

Mr. Speaker, several methods used by the investigators are unacceptable and border on indecency.

It often happens following some well-defined and specified transactions included in a contract that at the minister's discretion, such a transaction is denounced or cancelled, the burden of the proof always resting with the taxpayer but in most cases nothing is changed. Several tricks are also used and I will take the liberty of mentioning a few. I know many taxpayers who, following the sale of a building or some assets, finally set a price but once again after a visit, the tax assessors, whose specific task is to reassess those transactions, often maintain that the assessment is inflated or excessive.

Mr. Tousignant: The assessor receives a commission.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Well, it often happens my dear colleagues. In any case, I am under the strong impression that he is. He has been asked to perform a specific task and whether he is right or wrong, he sends out a bill which is disputed because the assessment is excessive. Then the whole procedure is undertaken, the taxpayer must provide some evidence and in most cases, the results are the same. However, what is more exasperating also is that a great number of taxpayers lead a modest life making every sacrifice while other taxpayers who may be next door neighbours have a high style of living, and are deemed to be exceedingly rich or very well-to-do. On the strength of anonymous information, their home is searched with the assistance of the RCMP and inspectors; everybody is threatened and once again Mr. Speaker, once the investigation is completed in most cases, it is realized that the taxpayer was right. However all kinds of threats are made to intimidate. A great number of taxpayers have been resentful and worried as a result of those procedures.

Mr. Speaker, I will go as far as to say that Revenue Canada officials have almost lost their sense of fair play. The fact is that during many years, thanks to accountants or tax experts, a lot of transactions were accepted from the start, but often, after a visit from a taxpayer, they forget all about fair play and reject what used to be accepted in the past. You always have to start all over again.

Mr. Tousignant: Gestapo-like tactics!

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): I have other examples to make my point, Mr. Speaker. I know company owners who have 15, 20 or 30 employees with a weekly payroll between $19,000 and $20,000 and, as everyone knows, they have to send advance payments to the Department of National Revenue on the thirtieth of each month. They have until the fifteenth of the following month to send in that money. Well, believe it or not, some people mail their advance payments on the thirteenth, the fourteenth or the fifteenth of the month. Some officials are now going after many taxpayers to collect all kinds of penalties—and I am not talking about 10 per cent penalties either—which, in my opinion, are unfair and should not even exist. This sort of thing happens regularly although we know full well that our Post Office Department has been on strike in the past. A lot of contractors had mailed their payments, but that did not prevent two federal government departments from fighting each other and slapping fines on taxpayers who were forced to pay for the mistakes made by other departments.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it will be agreed that this type of tactic is no longer acceptable nowadays. I could go on with this list until five o'clock, but I understand that some of my colleagues are seeking the floor and, in any event, they are entitled to speak against my notice of motion—

Mr. Corbin: For the motion.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): But I must say that many more would speak in favour of my motion if they had an opportunity today.

Mr. Tousignant: A good many members silently agree with what the hon. member is saying out loud.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I could go on describing still more similar cases. It is a safe bet that some members will rise in a few minutes to talk about social conscience and a more humane system. They could talk about that and I share that viewpoint as well. But let us not forget either that through its officials the department must work in close co-operation, and I mean close co-operation, with the taxpayers to develop that social conscience. We expect taxpayers in this country to have a social conscience, but we also expect people who enforce legislation to develop their own social awareness in order to harmonize various measures and humanize their enforcement. It is true that some credit should go to the taxation officers who have to enforce a very difficult body of legislation, but even so, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that it is possible to humanize the enforcement of that law. I am convinced that these measures would be far more manageable if most tax auditors were given a more specific mandate before knocking on our doors, and if necessary, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that courses be given to some auditors to teach them how to deal with the public and what is involved in dealing with people who are confused and upset and who, by some mistake or through their own ignorance, stand to pay large sums of money. In many cases, the truth is that they do not owe these sums of money after all. This is what is getting many citizens' backs up, when they get assessments for amounts they do not owe, and the department, because the taxpayer is unable to provide any evidence to the contrary, keeps after him, and often when the individual takes them to court, they just drop the whole thing and say: Sorry, we made a mistake. I think it is high time something were done about this, and I want to ask the ministers, deputy ministers and other officers concerned to work together on harmonizing the system, which is in a very sorry state.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak in support of this motion that the government should consider the advisability of the Department of National Revenue assuming responsibility for the expenses incurred by a taxpayer whom the department causes to be investigated, when such investigation by the department's officials does not result in a suit or claim.

I think this should be extended to cover all federal government departments, as was done in the United States. The problem that the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) will probably run into this afternoon is that one of his Liberal colleagues will talk this excellent motion out. It is one which certainly should be passed because it has much merit.

• (1620)

There is legislation in effect in the United States which covers all federal government departments. A United States senator by the name of Dennis DeConcini introduced a bill which was passed in 1980. After much legislative manoeuvring, the Senate and the House of Representatives passed a final version of Senator DeConcini's equal access to justice act. It was a bill to make federal government more accountable in the enforcement of its regulations. Basically, the bill which became Title II of H. R. 5612, the minority small business contracting bill, will force a government agency to pay legal costs incurred by individuals and small businesses, either in federal court or in an agency-level proceeding, if the agency loses the case and cannot substantially justify its action.

Individuals with a net worth of less than $1 million, businesses with a net worth of less than $5 million and less than 500 employees, and all non-profit organizations and agricultural co-operatives are covered under the legislation. Senator DeConcini claimed that the message was quite simple. He said:

> Justice has simply become too expensive for the average American and small businesses, particularly when they are faced with a legal battle against the practically unlimited resources and expertise of the federal government. Many citizens have no recourse; because of the legal costs, they simply knuckle under to the government's demands whether they seem to be justified or not.
> This bill not only will make the government more accountable for its actions, it will also provide Congress with a means of finding out how responsible the agencies are being in enforcing their regulations.

In another report of Dennis DeConcini respecting his equal access to justice act, he pointed out:

> The law covers only individuals with a net worth of $1 million or less, businesses with a net worth of $5 million or less, and all non-profit organizations and agricultural co-operatives.
> It is not, as some opponents have argued, "a threat to the very foundations of the American legal system".

I do not think it would be any threat to the Canadian legal system. He went on to point out:

> Lawyers will point out, somewhat accurately, that the principles of equal access run counter to the general legal doctrine that requires each party in a court case to pay his own way. However, that doctrine was formed when the federal government was not a great deal bigger than a modern small business, and before the creation of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration . . . , the Social Security Administration, the Federal Trade Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency—indeed, even before the Internal Revenue Service. Fighting the federal government today means fighting a $650-billion-a-year Goliath; the government, its bureaucracy and its regulations are threatening to overwhelm us. Indeed, the equal access law, by balancing Americans' ability to use our system of justice, will strengthen that system.

I am in the process of preparing a private member's bill which will be similar to this motion. I want to cover all federal government departments. If the hon. member for Chicoutimi wants to speed things up, I am sure he could put pressure on the government House leader to bring in legislation to cover all federal government departments. Certainly there would be no difficulty from this side of the House in supporting legislation for ordinary citizens to fight the huge federal government Goliath of today. As other hon. members on this side want to speak on this motion, I will end my remarks, now.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words on the motion before us. I have had some experience, as have my constituents, dealing with some officers from the Department of National Revenue. It has not always been very pleasant, so I thank the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) for bringing this matter forward.

The first time I had a problem brought to my attention as a member of Parliament, it related to the problems of re-assessing. It did not concern reassessment of businesses. In this case it concerned reassessments of people who had hobby farms. These people lived on farms. They wanted to get out of the stinking city for the same reasons as I did, ultimately. They wanted to raise their children in rural settings for all the so-called benefits. They wanted a little more room in which to operate. They wanted to have animals and all that goes with semi-rural life. Since they had small farms, they were encouraged by the government in the form of exemptions and income tax breaks accorded to them. They set up small enterprises on their farms. They were involved in raising bees, cattle, chickens or whatever. In the early years they were able to write off part of their costs, such as those for fencing, development, buildings, telephones and sometimes even special licences for their trucks. However their main income was not from farming, and probably never would be, because their small farms did not have the capacity, certainly in the Fraser Valley, to produce sizeable incomes unless they were accompanied by marketing quotas. Most of these people operated under marketing quotas which allowed them to produce a certain number of eggs, turkeys, milk or whatever.

However, a pattern was established in certain parts of the country wherein such people began receiving visits from very amiable people. These visitors would knock on their doors. They were always very nice, friendly and outgoing. They would introduce themselves, sit down and ask a few questions. Nothing very important would occur and no one would become upset about the visits because they were fine people. Usually the visitors were offered tea, cookies and such. After asking a few rather penetrating questions, they would depart. A few weeks later the people who had had such visits would receive a nice-looking official envelope from the Department of National Revenue. Lo and behold, they were reassessments. Sometimes the reassessments went back as far as three to five years.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Unless there was fraud, no further than four years.

Mr. Rose: I think the law allowed them to go back five years at that time. Certainly I would be guided by the advice of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) since he is steeped and learned in the law. Nevertheless, sizeable re-assessment demands were placed upon these people.

Perhaps someone could say that I am not necessarily speaking to the business of paying for an investigation or for the legal defence thereof when a re-assessment is lost. I am not speaking to that directly, but I am talking about the manner in which these inspectors operated. I am not only referring to the inspectors in this branch of government but in other branches as well. I will deal with that later.

Suddenly, after they thought their income tax returns had been accepted, going back three or four years, they would receive bills anywhere from $2,500 to $5,000. Many people could not afford to pay such bills. It put them practically into receivership on their farms. They never believed they were cheaters; however the assumption of the Department of National Revenue was that they were. I think they operated in a sneaky manner.

• (1630)

I am old enough to remember a lot of the James Cagney and Edward G. Robinson gangster movies. Even in the shoot-em-ups of the westerns we all used to love; when the crook was finally apprehended and hustled into headquarters to make a statement, the detective or the arresting officer always gave this warning, "Anything that you say can be held against you." That is part of American law. That is one of the disadvantages, I guess, of being so close to our friend, the United States of America. We begin to assume that we have certain rights under Canadian or British law, or under common law, even judges rules, that we do not have. These traditional words of caution were never given to any of the people I have mentioned. I think they should have been warned of their legal rights if they were being investigated by an officer from National Revenue.

This situation goes back almost ten years. I guess it is not the turn of the hobby farmers now, perhaps it is the dentists, but I know whom they are bothering. They are bothering the people who are away from home who receive benefits for working away from home. A CPR trainman asked me what to do about his situation a little while ago.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And the northern miners.

Mr. Rose: Yes, perhaps the northern miners.

But sizeable retroactive assessments cause severe problems to many of these people who are not tax dodgers, who are basically not tax cheaters but are operating under the assumptions that the income tax law allows them to make certain kinds of deductions. If they are not hauled into court, they are fooled into making statements which are later held against them.

When the inspectors come to them without any warning at all they ask for detailed advice. The average person does not have that kind of detailed accounting advice at his fingertips. I have never heard of these income tax officers or sleuths notifying people in advance that they are coming or what the nature of their visit is to be or that it would be a good idea, since the person is being investigated, to have his or her accountant or lawyer present. I have never heard of that happening yet, whether it is the small hobby farmer who is my constituent, a person who works away from home or whatever group that happens to be investigated at the moment in the spot check.

But I will say this much, that when the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) was minister of national revenue, I went to him about this problem. He made certain that the assessments did not go back more than one year. That was of great help. I do not know whether that continues to be policy, because I have not had the problem brought to me recently. But I can brag that through a combination of my efforts, the courtesy and willingness of the then minister of national revenue, we had some of the big sting taken out of the system.

Certainly the National Revenue Department should be looking for tax cheaters. I do not say that National Revenue should allow people to tip toe through the loopholes forever. I think if people are operating fraudulently, they should be nailed, and nailed as hard as they can be.

I mentioned other arms of government earlier that have resorted to what I consider to be sneaky practices as well. Working people who have had a long or a lengthy sickness or a jobless claim are frequently invited into the UIC offices for friendly chats, perhaps a little consultation and counselling. This cosy little arrangement purports to assist the claimant in finding new employment. There are no written questions. No one is invited to have his lawyer, his accountant, or his mother there to assist him. The person goes by himself and frequently condemns himself. We could be much more upright, honest, forthright and humane as a government department in dealing with people of whom 99 per cent are not crooks, cheaters or trying to get away with anything.

In the case of the UIC, once the interview is concluded the claimant is given a written document. He is expected then to sign it, and because he has signed certain things with certain words, he is probably, like many people before officialdom, frightened and embarrassed. He may even be degraded because he is idle. But the statement that is written up, not by the individual but by the counselling officer, is pretty close to what he thinks the story is, and he signs it just to get the hell out of there. He, too, like my friends the hobby farmer or the CPR trainman, get a nice letter a few weeks later saying they are cut off or he owes this or that or something or other.

I suggest a lot can be done to improve the situation. We hear that people are cynical about government. They are certainly cynical about officialdom, bureaucrats and probably politicians too. But this practice only adds to that cynicism if this attitude prevails or is allowed to prevail.

My advice to people, and I have given it recently, in writing—I write it in my newspaper column—is that if they are visited by a bureaucrat who wants to know anything they should first insist on their rights. Before answering any questions they should make sure those questions are written questions. Demand your own professional assistance or have a witness with you. Request that you be allowed to take the questions home while you think about them, or get some advice about them, whether it is from UIC, National Revenue or some other department. Do not be hurried, pressured or intimidated into saying anything that does not reflect your case precisely and accurately.

What I say to people is: demand your own rights; do not be pushed around; do not be intimidated by any form of officialdom, no matter how heavy-handed it might be. If we can get people to learn to stand up for their own rights, they will feel better about themselves too. They will think a lot more of government and its agencies. It will teach government agencies to be less careless about the rights and feelings of individuals, for which the department was constructed to deal.

I am pleased that this topic has come forward. It has allowed me as a Member of Parliament to raise in a particular way some of my concerns that go back a decade. I am sure if they occurred then, they are continuing to occur, but until this point in time I have not had an opportunity to speak on them.

The hon. member for Chicoutimi said there was something like 91,000 reassessments last year. All I know is that when the hobby farmers were being investigated, I could not get the numbers being investigated. I was told that they were doing a number in British Columbia and a number in southern Ontario, but when I asked how many were being investigated in Quebec—because I am certain that many people live on small holdings and work in the woods part of the year, then there are those who work in town if they live on a small farm in New Brunswick—I was told that I could not have that information. I put the question on the Order Paper and I was told the information was not available. Therefore, if the hon. member for Chicoutimi was able to ferret out this information—he has it at least in total, perhaps not geographically—it would be very helpful, especially if a member feels that his constituents are being discriminated against while other people's constituents are allowed to go free in these spot checks.

That is about all I have to say. I congratulate the hon. member for Chicoutimi for bringing this matter forward. I hope that we will be able to discuss it further. If the resolution does not pass, I hope at least that the subject matter will be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to thank my hon. friend for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) for his motion. Though he overdid it somewhat and went too far in his remarks, I can reassure him and tell him that they did include useful indications that should be checked if Canadians taxpayers are to be protected as much as possible. Still, I shall have to challenge them because there are two sides to the coin.

My colleague for Chicoutimi chose to dwell on the dark side of the issue. For my part, I shall now attempt to throw light on the matter, and show him that the exception is not the rule, even with Revenue Canada. I therefore take note of the representations of the hon. member and we shall make positive use of them. Still, I will not accept that a few isolated cases be taken as the rule of conduct in the Department of National Revenue. The role of civil servants does not in any way prevent hon. members from acting as ombudsmen when the need arises. However, the act is not negotiable nor does it lend itself to unwarranted representations especially when they are without basis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne) on a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I ask my hon. colleague if he would allow me a question at this time?

Mr. Tessier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to accept his question.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like my hon. colleague to specify whether or not we are dealing with a few isolated cases when Revenue Canada decides to carry out a survey of all the loggers in a given area and decides unilaterally that the use of the panel truck to get to the bush gives them an entitlement of only 25 per cent to 30 per cent instead of 50 per cent to 75 per cent? Does my hon. colleague suggest that there are only a few isolated cases, involved when we are dealing with Canada at large? In the forest industry, and I could mention many other industries, there is going to be an inquiry.

Mr. Tessier: After I have concluded my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will reply to my hon. colleague. I suggest that it should be seen from the right perspective, failing which we would run the risk of setting a general rule on the basis of exceptions.

Mr. Speaker, as all hon. members are surely aware, the word "tax" is one which makes a great many shudder, but the reality of it is a necessity which affects nearly all Canadians. We must deal with it, therefore, in a co-operative spirit. The summary on auditing, I came across these last words: "One demonstrates co-operative spirit when one does with a smile what one must do anyway." I think that my hon. colleague possesses already this co-operative spirit, because he has made remarks which contain elements of truth but which must be reconciled with the national revenue system.

Although by far the vast majority of Canadians are law-abiding citizens who are anxious to co-operate, a self-contributing tax system can exist only if there exists also a close scrutiny of income tax returns. The main purpose of tax-auditing is to control the effectiveness of the self-contributing tax system. As such, it plays an important role in the realization of departmental objectives which are to collect taxes as prescribed by the act by encouraging compliance, and to ensure that Canadians have confidence in the integrity of the fiscal system.

Even in our most recent budget, we indicated that it was of paramount importance for our people to be convinced that we have an equitable tax system. And I suggest that through all the policies of the Department of National Revenue, we are doing our utmost to carry out this mandate. In the various taxation centres, tax returns are checked at the first stage of the process. District offices have set up programs to determine whether all applications for deductions are valid, to make sure that all revenues have been declared, and to identify the taxpayers who have not submitted an income tax return.

Let us consider now the Income Tax Act and the base system. The Canadian Income Tax system is a self-assessed tax system. Under this system, all corporations and persons, estates or taxable trusts must submit every year an income tax return on prescribed forms and determine the amounts which are payable for that year. After the initial processing and correction of obvious mistakes in filling out returns, and after the necessary cross-checking with returns from other people and information received from other sources, the return is selected for auditing and complete reviewing. Mr. Speaker, the examination is carried out under Section 231 of the Income Tax Act which compels all taxpayers to keep records and books necessary to determine the amount of income tax payable. Section 231 of the Act authorizes the Department to carry out this examination for any purposes related to the administration or enforcement of the act. In this regard, the act also authorizes the Department to seek and receive from any person information, records and accounts within such reasonable time as may be prescribed in the act. While the prospect of being subject to a tax audit is a strong motivation to voluntary compliance with the law, because, among other reasons, of the penalties applied in cases of obvious negligence or voluntary non-compliance, it still remains that the personal contact brought about by an audit is an ideal means of bringing home to the taxpayers the fact that each one of them only bears his legitimate part of the tax burden. It also helps, Mr. Speaker, to humanize a necessary tax-assessment system.

The type of audit made by taxation officers depends on the complexity of tax returns. There are two types: the office audit and the field audit. The office auditor usually works in the district office where he is responsible for clarifying certain details about incomes, expenses and transactions reported by taxpayers. The auditor usually solves any problem through letters, telephone calls and personal interviews, while the field audit involves a detailed examination of the taxpayer's records. It usually occurs at his place of business and may take anywhere from a few days to several weeks to complete. Field auditors are professional accountants who are assigned the task of examining the complex records of large companies as well as the records of smaller companies made up of professional workers, such as farmers. These fields audits can take various other forms, including audits of a single industry and auditing teams. Audits of a whole industry involve the co-ordination of the audits carried out in a number of companies within one industry. The auditing teams include various specialists so that the records of large companies can be examined as thoroughly as possible. For instance, a data processing expert, a senior auditor and an economist on loan from another department may use their joint knowledge to audit a multinational which makes purchases outside Canada. This enables the department to make a more complete and more comprehensive audit. Since most large companies have computerized records, most major district offices now include computer science specialists.

• (1650)

The department also hires in its district offices corporate stock evaluators and real property assessors who determine the value of private company shares and of real estate. This evaluation is essential to determine capital gains. When the department makes an assessment and collects taxes, it ensures first of all that every taxpayer is treated fairly and impartially. That is why audits are reviewed in district offices. The main office co-ordinates and controls this review to guarantee that the tax legislation is applied consistently throughout the country. I have talked about the Income Tax Act and the system. I shall now deal, Mr. Speaker, with the audit philosophy and policy. I am well aware that this subject matter has an esoteric aspect, which means that it is incomprehensible to the layman. I would therefore like to explain the basic philosophy of the Department of National Revenue to the House.

Out of the 14.7 million taxpayers who filed income tax returns in 1979, a little under 10.5 million were employees and over 2.5 million were businessmen, salesmen on commission, farmers, self-employed fishermen, professionals or people who have an investment income. In addition, 550,000 companies file income tax returns. Most taxpayers receive wages or a salary from which taxes are deducted at the source. It is therefore relatively easy to check most tax returns with the information provided on salaries by the employers. We can therefore conclude that employees cause relatively few problems as far as complying with the law is concerned. Generally speaking, their taxes are collected through payroll deductions and their incomes are readily verified by reference to information supplied by their employers. The obligation to keep books and records hardly applies to this group, and with the exception of certain cases where, for instance, expenses may be deducted from wages or salaries, audits are usually unnecessary. The department's audit program focuses mainly on the two and a half million self-employed workers and 550,000 corporations. The audit program is essentially based on seven broad guidelines used in preparing the program and in determining objectives for measuring compliance and estimating non-compliance. According to the guidelines, first of all, perfect compliance with the law is not and will never be attainable. Second, the most effective and least costly form of compliance is voluntary compliance. Third, tax recovery encourages voluntary compliance with the law. Fourth, recovery of taxes is theoretically feasible by doing a complete audit every four years. Here I should explain that in some cases the size and complexity of the taxpayer's business may, for reasons of practicality and maintaining good relations with such taxpayers, require more frequent audits covering periods of less than four years. Fifth, audit quality should be such that audit costs are in direct proportion to the resulting tax recovery. Sixth, each group of taxpayers should receive a minimum amount of auditing. Finally, establishing of categories of taxpayers for auditing purposes should be done in a rational and impartial manner.

The taxpayer has the assurance that the law will be enforced equally in all cases because of a spontaneous observance of the principle that taxpayers who pay what they owe should not be obliged to pay for the tax evasion perpetrated by others. In all fairness, the department has a responsibility to detect dishonest dealings and to take action against them. All groups of taxpayers must understand that the audit program is based on fair and impartial criteria. To do its job, our staff must be very ingenious and do a great deal of investigating.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the audit program is changed every year based on the resources allocated each district office. For reasons of optimum use of such limited resources, much care is taken in identifying groups of taxpayers or bodies that have to be looked at in priority and the choice of audit procedures which could lead to an improvement in tax compliance. Often a survey is made to assess the degree of compliance of a group of taxpayers that are not considered a category for programs purposes. Homogeneous groups are targeted, with the aim of eliminating practices that are gross violations of our tax acts. Homegeneity here is that of the tax base selected for audit purposes. For instance, some projects have dealt with matters as different as enumeration of surpluses, shareholder pension schemes, management fees, non-resident operations and the reuse of waste. If results of a project point to a special compliance problem, the scope of the project is widened to apply as need be throughout Canada. However, what exactly is an audit and what are the costs incurred? Quite often rumours spread concerning those being audited. This is akin to a visit to the dentist. Although we know we are dealing with professionals there is anxiety in having a tooth pulled out, with all the accompanying pain. This is what happens in the actual case. The audit program is essentially based on the approximate number of returns filled by each group of taxpayers and the number of returns that can be audited by the available staff. Variations in the scope of an audit are influenced by the degree of non-compliance or the tax gap among various groups of taxpayers, as established as a result of former audit programs.

By auditing a random sample of returns in a particular group, and examining the tax collections from that sample, it is possible to project within certain parameters the probable tax collections for the whole group. This is one way of determining the monetary size and the scope of non-compliance that is often termed tax gap. Through periodical monitoring of the tax gap in a particular group of taxpayers based on audit procedures for that group, it is possible to assess the impact of an audit on tax compliance. There is an increase or a decrease in audit procedures depending on whether the tax gap has increased or decreased within this group. Additional data collected through these sample audits are processed by computer in order to find out trends that could be useful to the future retrieval of files for audit purposes.

As audits are done in 28 district offices, the department wishes to ensure that the act is interpreted and administered in a consistent manner. That is the main purpose of the audit review system which includes district offices and the Head Office. Every district office has a review unit which is responsible for achieving this goal within the district boundaries, whereas the operational audit division of the head office is responsible for ensuring consistency throughout the country. Since the main purpose of a tax audit is to control and maintain the self-assessment system, let me elaborate on it a little. As I mentioned at the outset, there are two kinds of audit, the office audit and the field audit, the latter being the main tool available to the department to administer the act. A field audit can take anywhere from a few days to several weeks depending on the nature of the operations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EMPLOYMENT

MOBILITY OF LABOUR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, whereas the task force on employment opportunities for the eighties revealed that lack of standardization among provincial trade apprenticeship programs is a serious barrier to mobility, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration encourage the standardization of trade certification so that workers will have the mobility to travel from province to province in order to correct the serious labour imbalances that currently exist.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LEGAL FUNDING FOR ANGLOPHONE STOREKEEPER IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the federal government provided $73,000 to a Manitoba resident to fight for a bilingual traffic ticket, yet it refuses to give any more than a measly $5,000 to a group of three in Quebec—including Allan Singer, who dared to have a sign over his door in English—in their complicated legal battles with Bill 101. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House call on the Liberal government to drop its double standards and give equivalent and adequate funding to Allan Singer for his new legal battles in the Supreme Court, and that the Prime Minister live up to his promise of 1977 that he would provide funding to English-speaking Quebecers in conflict with the discriminatory Bill 101.

EMPLOYMENT

RECRUITMENT OF SKILLED WORKERS FROM ABROAD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, there are more than one million Canadians out of work, and the number of unemployed is rapidly rising. Hundreds of thousands of these jobless Canadians are apparently turning in desperation to welfare as their unemployment insurance benefits cease. In spite of this alarming situation the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has announced plans to recruit up to 25,000 skilled workers from other countries for jobs in Canada. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the government abandon its plan to import non-Canadian workers for Canadian jobs and devise another, obviously more sensible plan which would give unemployed Canadians opportunities to fill these vacancies.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CROWSNEST PASS RATE PUBLIC OPINION POLL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It has come to my attention that the government has commissioned a survey by the Goldfarb organization concerning public opinion on the Crow issue as perceived in both rural and urban centres in western Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That the full results of this poll be tabled in the House so that the information may be made available to all members of the House of Commons.

TRIBUTE TO KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to move the following motion which already has the approval of the three House leaders. Whereas the Order of the Knights of Columbus, a Catholic fraternal and family society pledged to serve the community, was founded 100 years ago today in New Haven, Connecticut, for the wellbeing of its members and the community; whereas this society was established in Canada in 1897 through the foresight and initiative of Dr. J. J. Guérin, former mayor of Montreal, and has spread to many countries with over 1,350,000 members in more than 7,000 councils; in recognition of the patriotic idealism of its members and their service in war and peace, their contribution to Canadian society and their commitment to the family as the basic foundation of that society, I move, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House of Commons pay tribute to all Knights of Columbus on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the Order of the Knights of Columbus.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I will put this motion to the House because it has been suggested by representatives of all parties, but I ask hon. members not to suggest motions under Standing Order 43 which are simply congratulatory. This is not really the intention of motions under Standing Order 43; however, I will make an exception today.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON NATURAL GAS AND HOME HEATING FUEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the federal government's national energy program, coupled with the burden of the excise tax on natural gas, is denying millions of Canadian home owners the comfort of adequately heated homes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Finance immediately remove this iniquitous tax on natural gas and home heating fuel, thereby relieving approximately 30 per cent of the burden placed on consumers to heat their homes. Even though this government is cruel and unfeeling, surely someone in the cabinet will see to it that Canadians can at least heat their homes.

STANDARDS FOR WOMEN'S HEALTH AND HYGIENE PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, a Toronto task force report released today by The Globe and Mail indicates that women are not adequately protected from, or informed about, potential health hazards related to female hygiene products and contraceptives. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare take immediate action to establish and enforce safe and effective federal standards that must apply to all women's health and hygiene products before they can be marketed, including stricter federal testing and approval of drugs, medical devices and health products; mandatory labelling of medical devices and guidelines covering drugs used during pregnancy and estrogen replacement therapy.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

USE OF SURPLUS FUNDS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas in the Northwest Territories employees and employers annually pay $6.5 million more in unemployment insurance premiums than is paid out in claims, and whereas the territories have one of the highest unemployment rates in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook):

That the surplus unemployment funds in the territories be used to establish training programs and to create permanent new jobs therein.

IMMIGRATION

DELAY IN PROCESSING REFUGEE APPLICATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the Department of Employment and Immigration recently conducted a symposium on refugee status determination. At that conference, the minister announced changes to the structure of the refugee status advisory committee to help deal with the backlog of 1,000 cases. At the same conference, it was learned that the Immigration Appeal Board is over one year behind in its cases. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately introduce legislation allowing for an extra vice-chairman to be appointed to the Immigration appeal board, together with extra members, so that the backlog causing procedural unfairness to those awaiting determinations can be expeditiously dealt with.

That the federal government immediately begin hiring more safety inspectors in order to enforce legislation which is supposed to protect the health and life of Canadian workers.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the oil import compensation program. In April Canadian consumers will be paying over $7 million per day in unnecessary subsidies for imported crude oil, while as much as 300,000 to 400,000 barrels of domestic oil per day are shut in. This means consumers are paying at least 15 cents per gallon more than necessary, governments are collecting fewer royalties and taxes, producers already devastated by the National Energy Program are further hurt, service companies that have already laid off 20 per cent of their employees will be laying off more, and the country's already serious balance of payments deficit is exacerbated by $16 million per day. Given that the minister has known about this problem since at least October of last year, when will he do something about it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): This week, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nowlan: Are you going to resign?

Mr. Nielsen: Are you leaving the country?

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR MODIFICATIONS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, encouraged by that answer, I would ask the minister whether he could be further encouraging about press speculation last week which indicated that he finally recognized the obvious—

Mr. Trudeau: Order!

Mr. Andre: —namely, that the national energy policy has caused a great deal of harm to the Canadian economy. Can the minister tell the House whether the stories are true and whether in fact he will be making some modifications to this program to restore at least a little vitality to this important sector of the Canadian economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we have a number of adjustments to the program in co-operation with the Government of Alberta over the last few months. The Government of Alberta announced that it was reviewing the royalties in operation in that province. I hope it will come up with a favourable announcement in a short while.

As far as the speculation to which the hon. member referred is concerned I have already indicated that it is without foundation and that the Minister of Finance is reviewing taxation in all sectors at the time of the budget. Obviously it is a matter which would be examined when the time for a budget comes.

FUTURE OF ALSANDS PROJECT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I hope the minister will reconsider that position because adjustments are needed from the federal level as well. Adjustments from the Alberta government and from the federal government are welcome.

Another important energy project is reaching a critical stage. Existing members of the Alsands consortium indicated that March 31 was the deadline to decide whether the project would go ahead or become another casualty of the National Energy Program. Does the minister have any encouraging statements to make regarding this project, or will we see those tens of thousands of jobs and billions of dollars of investment join the heap with the rest?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I expect to have an answer tomorrow, Madam Speaker.

EMPLOYMENT

RECRUITMENT OF SKILLED WORKERS FROM ABROAD

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, in the absence of the Minister of State for External Relations who takes his place, and in the absence of the Minister of Labour who takes his place, I will direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Recently the Minister of Employment and Immigration made a statement telling us that 20,000 to 25,000 skilled workers will be hired abroad this year and will be brought into Canada because, according to him, there is a shortage of skilled labour in the Canadian labour market. Could the Prime Minister please inform the House how he arrived at those figures?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, this is a question of a statistical nature, and I will have to take notice of it.

BASIS FOR RECRUITMENT FIGURES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I would assume that when a minister makes a statement about importing 20,000 to 25,000 skilled labourers when there are over one million unemployed, the Prime Minister would take some interest in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Perhaps the parliamentary secretary would know more about it than the Prime Minister. Would he perhaps answer the question and tell us from where he got those figures, and on what they were based? Where are Canadians, such as Len Prevost who just graduated from a skilled course in computer programming and cannot find employment, to find the jobs about which the minister is talking?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I pointed out that it was the statistical character of the answer which caused me difficulty, not the substance of it. As the minister has explained before—and I have talked about it—the educational system in Canada is not geared to jobs of the future. I believe the minister gave a few examples which I have in mind. One was that Ontario Hydro is looking for—and I forget the number of engineers—a great number of engineers. They have to be brought in from abroad because our schools in Canada, our universities, have not produced sufficient numbers of engineers. Another example I remember him giving was in the case of the province of Alberta where literally hundreds of engineers are needed. Application is made to the Department of Immigration so that we can bring in these engineers from abroad, because our technical schools have not produced a sufficient number of them.

REQUEST FOR STIMULATION THROUGH LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I think it is well known that in almost every single industrial sector unemployment is rising dramatically, whether it be the steel industry, the farm implement industry, the footwear industry, the auto industry, the appliance industry, or for that matter general construction, and housing in particular, and that there are fewer and fewer job opportunities for Canadians. In every single instance the main reason cited for the downturn is the high interest rate policy of the government.

In the interest of this country is there no measure that can be taken by this government to reduce the interest rates chargeable on those products that Canadians should be purchasing but are not purchasing because they cannot afford them? Is there no measure that can be taken by this government to enable those Canadians to get work who should be working and who are not working because there are no people to purchase what they would be making? Is there no way we can bring down interest rates in Canada and thereby stimulate our economy and provide Canadians with some hope?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, there is a way. The Minister of Finance has referred to it many times. I have referred to it many times. The way would be to bring down inflation, to bring down costs, and when the cost of money is lower, the cost of borrowing money will be lower.

RATIONALE FOR REDUCING COST OF BORROWING MONEY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that the cost of money is one of the main contributing factors to the end cost of the product and that carrying charges, both for industry and for the retailer, are a major contributing factor to the final price in the retail store? Surely by reducing interest rates we will reduce the price of a product and thereby increase the purchasing power of Canadians. Does that rationale not make sense?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes it does, Madam Speaker. That is why we are attempting to put downward pressure on inflation, thereby reducing the cost of money, thereby reducing interest rates, and thereby giving stimulus to the economy. That makes sense, Madam Speaker. But the hon. member has to realize that to bring down inflation it takes more than asking questions about the rate of interest. We have to make sure that inflation is lower and that inflationary expectations are lower. In that case we will have lower interest rates.

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE REDUCED BY LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Prime Minister. If it is true that Canadians with the wages they are presently earning cannot afford to buy the products they manufacture because carrying charges are so high, which results in a decrease at the manufacturing end, then surely it makes sense, at least on a trial basis—which will be no different than the experiment being conducted now by the Bank of Canada—to reduce interest rates by way of a legislative proposal put forward by the government? Surely it makes sense to try that measure, rather than to continue with what is now affecting so many hundreds of thousands of Canadians so detrimentally, that is, the inability to find jobs because people cannot afford to buy the products being made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member talks about reducing interest rates by legislative measure. Supposing we introduced a law saying that interest rates henceforth will be 10 per cent, would the hon. member lend money at 10 per cent—

Mr. Deans: Yes.

Mr. Trudeau: —would Canadians lend money at 10 per cent—

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Trudeau: —when they can get 15 per cent in the United States or 15 per cent from the private sector?

Mr. Blackburn: What about exchange controls?

Mr. Trudeau: Now we are getting into exchange controls, Madam Speaker. That would be the next supplementary question. But I am telling the hon. member that if we want to legislate an interest rate below the marketplace, people will not lend their money. They will lend it some other place where they can get a higher interest rate, the United States, for example.

CANADIAN UNITY

POLL CONDUCTED ON ATTITUDES IN QUEBEC

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Last week the Canadian Unity Office leaked the results of a poll which it had commissioned into the popularity of political parties in Quebec. Would the minister tell the House in how many other jurisdictions the government has commissioned publicly funded polls on the popularity of its opponents? Will the minister table in the House today the full results of that poll?

• (1425)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, we have conducted several polls of this kind since the referendum was held in Quebec to find out how the situation is developing with respect to Canadian unity. The government's policy has been to use the polls in developing policy, and when the polls are no longer useful in preparing new policies, they are made public, and we intend to do the same thing in this case. They are not national polls on the government's opponents. We have not conducted polls on the Progressive Conservatives or the New Democratic Party. We conducted a poll on people who favour the separation of Quebec from Canada.

[English]

INQUIRY RESPECTING PROVINCES IN WHICH POLLS ARE CONDUCTED

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the question was: in how many other jurisdictions has the Canadian Unity Information Office taken surveys of the government's political opponents' popularity? Did it do it in Alberta? Did it do it in British Columbia, in Ontario, in Newfoundland, or in other jurisdictions? And on what basis, Madam Speaker, does the Minister of Justice, using tax dollars to finance public opinion surveys, withhold that information from the people and Parliament of Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think the Canadian public will not blame me at all for making sure that we do everything possible to see that the separatist party in Quebec does not win its cause. We have fought in the last two years to make progress in that field. For example, today, when Royal Assent is being given in England to the new Canadian Constitution, the hon. member should know that we are fighting a very worth-while battle in Canada.

RATIONALE FOR SECRECY ON POLLS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. The evidence given by the executive director of the Canadian Unity Information Office before the standing committee indicated quite clearly that polling was conducted on the instructions of the minister. May I ask him on what basis or rationale is the fact that polls are even taken being held secret—not the result of the polls, but what polls are being taken, where they are being taken, and the nature of the polls? If we are not entitled to the results, can he not at least be sufficiently open to say what polls are being taken, and where?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I am doing exactly what the hon. member was doing when he was the minister in charge of the Canadian Unity Information Office.

Mr. Jarvis: Yes, make them public.

Mr. Chrétien: He himself had conducted some polls and eventually we made them public. The policy is that when these polls are no longer useful in the elaboration of new policy we make them public, and the same thing will happen to this one.

EFFECT ON FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): The minister knows the very great difference is that I indicated in standing committee exactly what polls were being taken; there was no secret about it.

The Unity Office's executive director has indicated one of the reasons for keeping the results secret is that if they were released it would adversely affect federal-provincial relations. Is that the minister's view, that keeping the results secret enhances federal-provincial relations?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, there were many questions in that poll, covering a lot of subjects, and this is one of them. I said this poll was being used for elaboration of government policies and when it is not needed for that purpose it will be made public. As to publishing the poll at this time, as the executive director said, some of the questions would not be useful in terms of federal-provincial relations.

JURISDICTIONS IN WHICH POLLS ARE CONDUCTED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): The minister did not answer the question of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, nor that of the hon. member for Perth. I put it to him simply: in what jurisdiction other than the province of Quebec are such polls being conducted by the government?

An hon. Member: Yukon.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): I said we have asked a question concerning the popularity of the separatist cause in Quebec. I think it is my duty to make sure we know its evolution—

Mr. Clark: Answer the question.

Mr. Chrétien: —if we are concerned at all about the survival of our country.

Mr. Clark: Answer the question.

Mr. Chrétien: I did.

INQUIRY RESPECTING JURISDICTIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Let me put it in another form. Are polls such as the one conducted in the province of Quebec being conducted in any other jurisdiction in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): It is not very hard to understand in English, but I shall repeat it in French. I said that the question was put with respect to Quebec.

EMERGENCY MEASURES

INQUIRY ON TIMETABLE FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council. Last May the government passed, with no parliamentary scrutiny whatsoever, the Draconian emergency planning order. Since then, the minister has promised to bring before Parliament new emergency legislation authorizing the sweeping powers granted in that order, including the power to establish civilian internment camps.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): When have I heard that before?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): In view of the fact that the scope of the War Measures Act violates not only the International Convenant on Civil and Political Rights, but also the new Charter of Rights, will the minister assure the House that any new legislation will, in fact, repeal the provisions of the War Measures Act? Will he tell the House his timetable for bringing in this new legislation?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows perfectly well that the order in council to which he is referring was made public last May and put before a federal-provincial conference of ministers responsible for emergency measures planning. The order in council was merely an update of another order in council dating back to 1965, which also contained provisions for civilian internment. In fact, the provisions were in effect in 1979, under the Progressive Conservative government, who did not see fit to modify them. As a result, we see no reason to change what we see as a bare minimum of provisions for the sound planning of emergency measures in this country. As for future legislation, officials of Privy Council are now looking into the matter. I also intend to carry out a thorough consultation of provincial authorities to avoid overstepping any jurisdictional boundaries, and when everything is ready, the hon. member will be notified, but it is not going to be ready next week!

[English]

APPLICATION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister invoked the War Measures Act in 1970, he trampled on and overrode the fundamental rights protected by the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: It was Parliament.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): He now proclaims that the Charter of Rights will protect Canadians from abuses under the emergency planning order which, among other things, will allow him to impose sweeping censorship and to commandeer all media for an unlimited period of time.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to assure the House that under no circumstances will his government make use of the "notwithstanding" clause in the Charter of Rights to deny, during times of emergency, the fundamental rights of all Canadians, or is the Charter of Rights to become as useless during times of emergency as was the Canadian Bill of Rights when the Prime Minister said, "Just watch me", in 1970?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would first point out to the hon. member that the War Measures Act was adopted in 1970 with the concurrence of hon. members on both sides of this House.

Mr. Clark: With information withheld.

Mr. Trudeau: Second, the "notwithstanding" clause was brought into the Charter, as the hon. member knows, at the insistence of the provinces. The federal government had a Charter which did not have a "notwithstanding" clause. I am sorry that the hon. member, personally, if my recollection is correct, did not support it. However, I do know that one of the leading forces in introducing a "notwithstanding" clause was Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan. I would hope that that hon. member would use his influence to get Premier Blakeney, along with other premiers, to revert to the original bill that we had.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FUTURE OF GIBRALTAR WITHIN NATO

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the British government has decided, for reasons of economic restraint, to close the Gibraltar dockyards by 1983, thus having a serious impact upon the fiscal integrity of Gibraltar, and in view of the fact that the Spanish government will open its border to Gibraltar on April 20, creating further pressures, could the minister inform the House whether Canada has discussed this matter with our NATO colleagues in the context of Gibraltar's strategic position as part of the western alliance? If not, would the minister undertake to do so at the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, Canada has not discussed this matter with our NATO colleagues, and I believe it would be inappropriate for us to do so since it is an internal British matter. At the same time, I would say that the fact that the relations between Britain and Spain concerning this question appear to have somewhat improved, and the fact that Spain is now entering the NATO Alliance, should help to set the stage for more useful future discussions. Therefore, although there should not be discussions in NATO itself, the joint membership of both countries in NATO should be a disposing factor toward a settlement.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HIS EXCELLENCY FRANÇOIS OWONO-NGUEMA, SECRETARY-GENERAL OF THE GABON CULTURAL AND TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION AGENCY

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EXCISE TAX ON NATURAL GAS AND HOME HEATING FUEL

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, about 16 months ago the Minister of Finance introduced an iniquitous bill into this House under the guise of a budget. That was the National Energy Program. Now, 16 months later, we find that program is having a devastating effect on Canadian home owners in that it is increasing their costs of heating their homes by approximately 30 per cent. I am wondering what justification the Minister of Finance can give to this House and to the Canadian people for leaving this program in place, especially the excise tax on home heating oil and natural gas.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think it is well known to the hon. member that the increases Canadian consumers must face in the field of energy are the result of energy agreements which have been reached with the producing provinces. As I recollect, he would have been one of the hon. members supporting Premier Lougheed in getting the maximum possible price for his natural resource.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance is misleading the House—

Miss MacDonald: It would not be the first time.

Mr. Towers: —because at the present time one third of the cost of natural gas to the consumers in western Canada is in the form of an excise tax going strictly to the federal coffers. The minister cannot get around that.

The Prime Minister has made the statement that we must keep costs down. This tax is increasing costs because the producers all over Canada can turn down the thermostats in their homes, but they cannot turn them down in their poultry or hog barns. Therefore it is costing thousands of dollars in some of these operations, adding to the cost of production, and is thereby inflationary. What is the Minister of Finance going to do about it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will not announce a tax change today.

Mr. Nielsen: Next week.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON EMPLOYEES OF HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING COMPANY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Finance. As a result of his budgetary pronouncements and restrictive policies to curtail business activities throughout the country, companies such as Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting, which operated uninterrupted for over half a century until this Minister of Finance came along, are now finding themselves in the position where they must provide extended holidays for their employees, with the result that these unemployed people might not be able to qualify for unemployment insurance. What hope is the minister offering to these potentially unemployed and their companies that they will be able to continue their operations without interruption?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the policy of the government is to re-establish the conditions for resumed economic growth and greater job creation—

Some hon. Members: When?

Mr. MacEachen: —in the country as a result of bringing down inflation, which is the foremost problem facing the country.

EFFECT ON SUPPORTERS OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, since it was the New Democratic Party which drafted the motion helping to put the minister in the position where he is sitting in government, and since it was NDP miners, in many instances, who supported the NDP cause in some of those areas, is this the way the minister will pay back those NDP voters, by turning them out on the streets as unemployed?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Come on, Allan.

Mr. Epp: He did not answer the question.

FINANCE

LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT SALES TAX CHANGES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister will know that uncertainty is one of the major causes which prevent businesses from expanding and hiring people. The minister will know that his budget is now well over four months old or stale.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Very uncertain, too.

• (1440)

Mr. Blenkarn: He promised on February 23, in reply to a question from me, that he would be tabling material concerning the sales tax, "shortly" he said, or "soon" he said. It is now March 29, and well over a month has passed. We have not heard a thing from the minister. I was wondering if the minister today could tell us what are going to be the rules with respect to the sales tax. When is the implementation date, and when can businesses find out what is intended with respect to changes in the sales tax?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am glad to tell the hon. member that it is my intention to make public not only the draft legislation that would bring into effect the changes in the sales tax, but also to provide the narrative explanation of all the changes, so that it will be possible for all those affected to make their views known before permanent or final legislation is brought into effect. I have already cleared the material, and as soon as it can be translated and printed it will be made available to the House of Commons.

REQUEST THAT SPECIAL COMMITTEE BE APPOINTED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Is it the minister's intention to have a special House of Commons committee to study the sales tax implications, so that witnesses can be heard by that special committee of the House before the final terms of the changes to the sales tax are determined and presented to the House in legislation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is a suggestion that could be considered. The hon. member knows that when the legislation is put in final form, following representations, it will come before Parliament. He is now suggesting that it go before a committee twice, in the form of draft legislation and later in final form. That is something we could consider if, indeed, it would facilitate the passage of the legislation.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF CONSOLIDATED COMPUTERS INC.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Recent news of the federal justice investigation into the Consolidated Computers debacle, which cost the Canadian taxpayers over $100 million, prompts me to ask the minister for further information about the nature of this investigation. Is it a departmental inquiry under the Inquiries Act? Could the minister give the House some information about the terms of reference and other details of this matter?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to reply to that question today. I will inquire about the matter and expect to reply to the question tomorrow.

Mr. Clark: It did not come up in the House of Lords.

ROLE OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I would tell the minister that there was the so-called Anderson report from the Treasury Board which alleged conflict of interest, a cover-up by government officials, which, I believe, prompted the department to announce the investigation. I wonder if he could tell me tomorrow as well whether the fraud squad of the RCMP has been briefed on this matter and whether their assistance is being requested as well.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): I will look into the matter and try to give full information tomorrow.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADA-JAPAN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. Given that the Canadian automobile industry is just as efficient as the United States automobile industry, will the minister inform the House what efforts he made on his recent trip to Japan to encourage the Japanese to purchase more Canadian auto parts and, just as important, to solicit the Japanese to locate one of their newly-proposed auto plants in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, one of the most important elements of our trip to Japan was to meet with the Japanese Automobile Manufacturers' Association, to express our displeasure with the fact that they have not purchased enough Canadian auto parts or made arrangements to have Canadian content included. We talked to the President of Nissan and to the President of Toyota, with respect to those plants which they are planning to open in North America, to have them in Canada rather than in the United States. This week we have a mission of 35 to 40 Japanese businessmen and government officials coming to Canada, talking to persons in the provinces and to the industry with respect to the broad spectrum of investment opportunities for Japanese businessmen here in Canada.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PROVISIONS FOR SINGLE PARENT MEMBERS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He will likely know that last week in Canadian Forces Base, Winnipeg, Rhonda Gordon, an Armed Forces private for one year, and a single mother, felt compelled to leave the Forces because she was unable to live and keep her five-year-old daughter on take home pay of only $180 twice a month. The best advice a base career officer could give her was to apply for welfare. Would the minister please tell us if the Armed Forces have any special provision for such single parents, or is it standard practice to recommend welfare for underpaid soldiers?

An hon. Member: Shame!

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, we try to take care of all these particular cases like the one mentioned by the hon. member. One has to understand that when you enlist in the Armed Forces you are well aware beforehand of the current conditions, and of the conditions you can expect following enlistment. In this unfortunate case the lady concerned knew very well the conditions of enlistment and the current pay levels, and whatever we could do for her child would be done through welfare. There is nothing I can do more than that, beyond telling her that she should have known all this before she enlisted in the Armed Forces.

With regard to the hon. member's point about the pay of the Armed Forces, I think that as a rule they are the best paid armed forces in the world, when compared to any other country. They will be even better paid in the next few weeks because there will be another pay increase soon.

REQUEST THAT PAY BE INCREASED

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, this young woman apparently joined the forces because she believed the advertisement which said "There Is No Life Like It."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sargeant: Unfortunately it is not an isolated case. Could the minister tell us why, after hearing for some years now of soldiers at bases in Calgary, Lahr, and now in Winnipeg, who cannot make ends meet, he has done virtually nothing to help them? Will the minister make a commitment to do better than the minuscule 3 per cent raise of last November, especially in light of the 19 per cent raise to his budget for next year? If he would do that, maybe there really would be "no life like it."

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, in reply to that question, the great majority of the members of the Armed Forces will agree that there is no life like it in the world. We train them, and we provide them with a lot of advantages that they would not have in private life. At this present moment, with the economic situation in the country, all members of the armed services are very happy to have the security that they do have in the Armed Forces. Last year we gave them approximately a 12 per cent to 13 per cent increase in pay, and this year I do hope that we will be able to do the same thing, so I think they are very lucky to be in the Armed Forces.

COMMUNICATIONS

INCREASE IN LICENCE FEES FOR AIRCRAFT RADIO

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who recently increased the annual licence for aircraft radio from $20 to $40, without the courtesy that is usually provided of consulting with the industry. Will the minister tell us why he chose this particular time to put that increase into effect and what, if any, services he intends to provide for the extra fee?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the fees for most radio licences in the country are extremely low. As a matter of fact they are far below the cost that is incurred in administering the licence fees. The Department of Communications, under my direction, will be going toward a cost recovery mechanism in the whole field of the management of the radio sector, which is used to great advantage in many cases by private entrepreneurs for their own profit. It is only fair that such people would pay part of the cost involved in managing this sector.

REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH RADIO USERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my brief supplementary question is to the Minister of Transport, who wears many hats. I ask him today, in his role as a friend of the general aviation industry, to intervene with the Minister of Communications. I know that if this increase were put in by the Department of Transport there would have been consultation. The minister also knows there may well be a safety hazard here because these pilots may not use radio because of the increased fee. I wonder if the minister can do anything about this $20 increase?

Mr. Fox: These are $20,000 aircraft.

Mr. Ellis: Madam Speaker, we are not talking about $20,000 aircraft; we are talking about little fellows who fly ordinary aircraft off a farmer's field. I wonder if the Minister of Transport would intervene here, have the usual courtesy shown that is applied to all matters with regard to general aviation, and have some consultation before this is put into place.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I must apologize. I was not listening to that question. I was recovering from the shock of not being the object of the first question. If the hon. gentleman would like to repeat his question, I will try to answer.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Provencher.

POLITICAL PARTIES

FORMER AFFILIATION OF MANITOBA ATTORNEY GENERAL

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice in his role as the Attorney General. It is on a sensitive matter which has had pulic airing and I believe it should be asked of the minister now that he is back. It is the question of the attorney general's past membership in the Communist Party of Canada. It has been publicly confirmed by him.

I would like to ask the minister whether there has been any security checks performed, or whether there is a regular exahange of classified information with that minister?

An hon. Member: The Attorney General of Manitoba, you mean.

Mr. Epp: That is right, the Attorney General of Manitoba.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Not you, Jean.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, with a name like mine, it would be difficult. I do not know this information. It is completely new to me, but I will check. I can assure the hon. member that I have never been a member of the Communist Party.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—CROWN IMMUNITY

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Attorney General of Canada and it concerns the uranium cartel and the prosecution which has been initiated by him as Attorney General of Canada. As the minister understands, Uranium Canada has moved in the Supreme Court of Ontario for a writ of prohibition, and the assertion of Uranium Canada is that it is, for operational and practical purposes, and I quote from its brief, "the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and furthermore, that all acts performed were done at the specific direction of the Crown."

I will not ask anything with respect to the litigation which has been initiated, but I want to ask the Attorney General of Canada whether or not prior to the initiation of the prosecution he was made aware by his law officers that Crown immunity would be invoked in this particular case by the Crown corporation saying they were acting within the scope of their agency?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the problem, so that answers the hon. member's question. In any case, the matter is before the courts and it is up to them to decide. To the question whether I was personally informed of this defence, the answer is: no.

[English]

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, I am not asking the Attorney General whether or not he would involve himself in anything before the courts. I am asking him a question as to what his instructions are, but I give him notice with respect to my initial question.

INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL FOR URANIUM CANADA

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In this litigation which I have just mentioned, who is giving directions to Uranium Canada? Who is the person instructing counsel to make the submissions being made in the Supreme Court of Ontario today?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, Uranium Canada is in court at the present time. Uranium Canada is represented by counsel, who are defending the corporation as is their duty. To my knowledge, no one is instructing counsel except Uranium Canada, in its capacity of Crown corporation. I can assure the hon. member that I have given no instructions in this respect and that I am letting the judicial process take its course.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR INSUANCE OF ROWING CENTENNIAL COMMEMORATION STAMP

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. It is a non-partisan question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): For 100 years rowing clubs and related organizations have been bringing credit to Canada for the sport of rowing. In St. Catharines this year they will come together for the 100th regatta of the Royal Canadian Henley. Will the minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation recognize this outstanding example of sportsmanship in Canada with the issuance of a commemorative stamp?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I cannot give a definite reply to this question today. I would like to remind the House that a number of members on this side have already made representations to the Canada Post Corporation, urging it to issue a stamp on that occasion. The president of the national Liberal caucus has been bringing up the subject each week, and I hope to be in a position to reply within the next few days.

[English]

REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question relates to, "I cannot give an answer today." As the minister has pointed out, he has received representations from rowing clubs all across the country, as well as from a great many other sources. This has been going on for some time. The regatta is in the last week of July and the beginning of August this year. If it is to be of any use, a decision must be made by tomorrow.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I expect to be able to satisfy the hon. member as well as the hon. member for Welland with a statement by the beginning of next week.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RENEGOTIATE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister must recognize that the National Energy Program and the agreement with Alberta assumed a rising world oil price. It now seems clear that world oil prices are falling. The whole program may be going out the window. The Minister is in the sad position where he is hosing the Canadian consumer. Will the minister renegotiate the agreements with Alberta and the other provinces so that the Canadian consumer will not get hosed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I regret to say that the hon. member, in spite of all his honest efforts, does not understand the energy situation any more now than he understood it two years ago. The energy agreements with the province of Alberta, the province of Saskatchewan, which he knows pretty well politically, and the province of British Columbia, which I suspect he knows very well politically, indicate quite clearly that Canadians will never have to pay for the old conventional oil discovered before 1981—will never have to pay more than 75 per cent of the international price.

If our prices are going up at the present time, it just shows that our prices are still very much below international prices, and in some cases you have the situation where provincial taxes have been increased significantly—in the province of Quebec, for instance—over the last while, which has added to the cost. But in terms of a barrel of oil, Canadians today are still paying a lot less for their oil—

Mr. Andre: How about the taxes?

Mr. Lalonde: —than if they were to buy that oil on the international market.

Mr. Andre: At least blush.

Mr. Lalonde: The best evidence is that it costs approximately $23.50 or $26 to buy conventional oil discovered before 1981, and it costs about $43 to import oil into Montreal. We are still getting oil in Canada at a much cheaper price than if we were to be paying the international price.

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish.

Mr. Lalonde: As I indicated, the ceiling is 75 per cent of the international price.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO URANIUM CANADA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the matter raised by my colleague from Cambridge. It relates to the uranium cartel and the statement by Uranium Canada, that "the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the governor in council have the directing mind and will of Uranium Canada." The minister has just said that he did not give any instruction himself to Uranium Canada. Will the minister tell us who in the government did give instructions to Uranium Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as far as I know there were no instructions given to Uranium Canada. Uranium Canada has been prosecuted with other companies and is defending itself through the best counsel it can recruit, I suppose. Those lawyers are arguing the case for Uranium Canada as they would for any clients they would represent; that is, using all the arguments they can to defend their case. As far as I know, no instructions were given to Uranium Canada.

CLAIM OF CROWN PRIVILEGE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, would the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the House of Commons on whose advice Uranium Canada is claiming Crown privilege?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, most probably on the advice of its lawyers. It is so obvious that I cannot understand why the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not understand that.

INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the House of Commons who is instructing the lawyers for Uranium Canada to claim Crown immunity in this case?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has asked me to speculate.

An hon. Member: You are responsible for that.

Mr. Lalonde: I would say that most likely the lawyers for Uranium Canada are giving advice to the board of directors of Uranium Canada, and the directors of Uranium Canada are acting on the advice of their lawyers. That is the way these things operate in any trial. I regret my right hon. friend never finished his law course.

INQUIRY RESPECTING DIRECTION OF URANIUM CANADA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, are the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the governor in council—the Prime Minister and his friends—acting as the directing mind and will of Uranium Canada as Uranium Canada has claimed in its submission before the Supreme Court of Ontario?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, Uranium Canada is a Crown corporation. It is acting independently as a Crown corporation. My right hon. friend is referring to the legal status of Uranium Canada, and the legal status is the same for Uranium Canada as it is for any Crown corporation.

I will be very happy to give free advice to my right hon. friend after Question Period if he raises some legal issues.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,570, 3,675, 4,043, 4,047, 4,050 and 4,080.

[Text]

UTILIZATION OF WINNIPEG INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 3,570—Mr. McKenzie:

Did the government enter into negotiations with other nations and their major airlines regarding the utilization of the Winnipeg International Airport as either a stopover point or a major departure centre on the so-called "polar route" to Europe and, if so, at what location and on what date were the meetings held and were any agreements reached?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Yes. In the revised bilateral air agreement concluded between Canada and the United Kingdom in April, 1981, following agreement reached at meetings held in Ottawa, September, 1980, Winnipeg is named both as a point of departure for Canadian airline service to Britain and as a point of destination for British Airways service to Canada.

Also, in Canada's bilateral air agreement with Mexico, as amended in 1971, following agreement reached at meetings held in Mexico City, November, 1970, Winnipeg is included in the route schedule as a point of departure for Canadian airline service to Guadalajara, Mexico City and Acapulco. Winnipeg International Airport was used as a refuelling stop on the "polar route" in the 1950s when some trans-atlantic carriers flew between Los Angeles and Europe over Canada with turboprop aircraft.

IMMIGRATION FROM U.S.S.R.

Question No. 3,675—Mr. Cossitt:

In each of the past three years, how many (a) applications (b) inquiries for immigration to Canada were received by the Canadian Embassy in Moscow and how many visas were granted for (i) landed immigrant status (ii) visits to Canada?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) Tabulated below is the immigration statistical information requested from the Canadian Embassy in Moscow:

	1979	1980	1981
(i) Immigration applications received cases/(persons)	213/(478)	236/(469)	171/(400)
Immigration visa authorizations (visas & promise of visas)	473	109	58
Departures approved by U.S.S.R.	162	121	61
Departures refused by U.S.S.R.	129	99	30
(ii) Visitor visa applications received	7,548	5,418	6,614
Visitor visas issued (total)	4,874	3,365	4,284
Visitor visas issued for private visits—personal (included in (total)).	1,682	1,085	1,004

(b) The Canadian Embassy in Moscow does not record inquiries by subject matter. For statistical purposes, applications received are treated as immigration inquiries.

CONTRACT WITH LOUIS FISCHL GLOVE CO. LTD.

Question No. 4,043—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,546, concerning the number of contracts for gloves given by the government to the Louis Fischl Glove Company Limited of Prescott, Ontario, what percentage of the gloves were actually purchased from countries in eastern Europe, brought to Canada and relabelled with the company's label?

2. Is it government policy to "buy Canadian" and, if so, what are all the reasons justifying the purchase of gloves manufactured in communist countries rather than gloves made by Canadian working people?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): None of the gloves listed in response to question No. 3,546 were manufactured in eastern Europe.

It is the government policy to "buy Canadian". As a result of this policy, over 80 per cent by value of DSS contracts are awarded to Canadian-based firms. This is consistent with Canada's international obligation such as the GATT government procurement agreement. In addition, the government has decided that certain products such as textiles, clothing and ships should be bought only in Canada.

OVERSEAS SERVICES OF DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Question No. 4,047—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the placing of the overseas services of the Department of Employment and Immigration under the jurisdiction of the Department of External Affairs now in effect and are there any other reorganization plans contemplated by the government for the Department of Employment and Immigration and, if so, what are they?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The immigration foreign service of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission was transferred to the Department of External Affairs on April 1, 1981. The organization of government, including the internal organization of individual departments, is regularly reviewed with a view to increasing the effectiveness of government policy-making and administration; however, there are at present no plans to transfer additional units from the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission to another part of the government.

VEHICLES LEASED FOR CMHC EMPLOYEES

Question No. 4,050—Mr. MacKay:

1. Were vehicles leased for the benefit of management or other employees of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and, if so, how many?

2. How many employees, including middle and upper management, received benefits directly or indirectly pursuant to the leasing or other arrangements regarding automobiles and, in each case, what was his/her name and what were all the details?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. Yes, eight.

2. Nine R. V. Hession, president
R. J. Boivin, senior vice-president—program operations
R. T. Adamson, vice-president—policy development and research
D. W. Knight, vice-president—finance
P. S. Crombie, vice-president—insurance operations
E. A. Flichel, vice-president—management information systems
N. E. Hallendy, vice-president—organization development
G. D. Anderson, vice-president—field operations
L. I. Birtz, general counsel

One vehicle for the president is CMHC owned. Vehicles for the senior vice-president, vice-presidents and general counsel are on a three-year lease arrangement.

The provision of vehicles to senior CMHC management is treated as a benefit taxable to the employee under the terms and conditions of the Income Tax Act and Revenue Canada regulations.

WESTERN CANADA DEVELOPMENT FUND

Question No. 4,080—Mr. Anguish:

1. Who is the minister or who are the ministers responsible for the Western Canada Development Fund?

2. (a) When the fund was first announced, was it in the amount of $4 billion (b) what amount is allocated to the fund at this time?

3. Were the allocations under the fund reflected in the (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83 estimates?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. No single minister is responsible for the Western Development Fund. The fund is split between the economic development envelope and the social affairs envelope, and the ministers on the cabinet committees responsible for these envelopes are responsible for expenditures from the fund.

2. (a) The Western Development Fund was first announced in the budget of October 28, 1980 in the amount of $4 billion; $2 billion was allocated to the period through fiscal year 1983-84.

(b) As stated in the November 12, 1981, "Budget in More Detail" (page 20), a review of the programs proposed in the October, 1980 budget and the larger sums now expected to flow directly to producing provinces as a result of new federal-provincial energy agreements have led to a re-profiling and reallocation of the Western Development Fund. At the present time, $1,865 million is allocated to the fund to the end of 1985-86. Many of the programs represented by this allocation will no doubt continue beyond 1985-86. No change has been made in the original total allocation.

3. (a) The allocation under the fund was not explicitly identified by program in the 1981-82 main estimates. However, it was included as part of the envelope reserves category in Table 4.1 of Part I of the 1981-82 estimates.

(b) Similarly, the 1982-83 main estimates do not explicitly identify the Western Development Fund by program. Again, it is included as part of the envelope reserves category in Table 4.1 of Part I of the 1982-83 estimates.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Friday, March 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, in my remarks on Bill C-97, last Friday I discussed some of the highlights of the bill itself and also the role of the operation of the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements which sat last spring and summer studying this very important issue. In the next few minutes I would like to discuss some of the recommendations of the task force regarding health care and post-secondary education.

As previously mentioned, in his speech on this bill in the House on March 22, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stated that negotiations with respect to clarification of national standards for health care and efficient mechanisms for their maintenance should be worked out with the provinces by March 31, 1983, and that ways of implementing national objectives with respect to post-secondary education should be worked out with the provinces by March of 1984.

With respect to the health care system the task force believes that the achievement of comprehensive, publicly-funded hospital, medical and extended health care is a major accomplishment of Canadian society which represents the end of a long struggle for the realization of an ideal. It concluded that there is an overriding national interest in the operation of health insurance plans and in the effectiveness of health care delivery and that the proper role for the federal government is the formulation, monitoring and enforcement of conditions on its financial support of provincial programs.

The task force also concluded that in aggregate and in present circumstances federal government funding for health care services in Canada appears to be generally adequate. It recommended that after consultation with the provincial governments the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) should undertake a consolidation of the existing legislation in order to establish clear program conditions supported by explicit criteria against which satisfaction of those program conditions can be monitored. Thus, in case federal-provincial negotiations fail to achieve agreement on program conditions, the task force would expect provisions for some withholding of federal financial support to provincial plans which do not meet fully those conditions as interpreted in the report.

The task force also concluded that retention of the present block funding arrangement, with stricter conditions, monitoring and enforcement mechanisms, would provide an effective mechanism to ensure compliance with national program conditions. We recommend for this purpose the establishment of operational program criteria, perhaps monitored by a parliamentary committee or a national health council, with federal payments on condition that there be compliance with program criteria—but conditional in a flexible manner, that is, with a graduated holdback of federal transfers related to the effect of program conditions.

In addition, we concluded that hospital and medical care premiums constitute a regressive form of taxation and that their use for financing a service as basic as health care is regrettable. We recommended that a clear definition and measurement of universality of coverage be developed to ensure that the principle of universality is respected. While recognizing the right of provincial governments to levy premiums, the task force agreed that prior payment of premiums should not be a precondition of entitlement to treatment. We agreed that for reasons of both principle and practicality user fees for hospitals should be discouraged.

All the above recommendations, agreements and conclusions with respect to our health care system were the unanimous opinion of our seven-man task force. The remaining recommendations were the opinion of the majority of the task force and were not unanimous. The majority recommended that doctors who bill a provincial medical plan directly or whose patients are reimbursed by the plan not be allowed to charge fees in excess of those permitted under the plan's approved fee schedule. The majority concurred in the recommendations of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall that the Medical Care Act should be revised to provide that extra billing by physicians inhibits reasonable access to services and is contrary to the intents and purposes of the act and that the provinces should develop mechanisms to ensure reasonable compensation to physicians.

The majority also agreed with Mr. Justice Hall's proposal that if negotiations between a province and physicians fail, then the issues should be decided by binding arbitration with a board of three persons: an independent chairperson to be named by the chief justice of the province, one nominee from the medical profession and one from the provincial government. The majority also recommended that following federal-provincial negotiations any plan which does not meet fully all the above criteria should be ineligible for full federal financial support under EPF.

There are other important recommendations of the task force with respect to the health care system, including emphasis on the broad health field concept and the community-based health care philosophy, which are also set out in our report.

With respect to the transfer of Government of Canada funds for post-secondary education, the task force was unanimous in its recommendations. We recognized the need for general base funding for the post-secondary sector to permit adults of all ages—not just those in the traditional 18 to 24 age group—to pursue spiritual and intellectual goals, to polish their critical faculties and to expand their general base of knowledge on which more specific skills may be built. Appreciating that education is under provincial jurisdiction, the task force believed that there should be an effective consultation mechanism to ensure concerted effort by all concerned to establish and obtain goals that are of mutual interest to both orders of government. It recommended that, in line with the 1976 first ministers' commitment, the responsible federal minister or ministers proceed on an urgent basis to conduct with the council of ministers of education on matters of concern to both orders of government in the field of higher education.

• (1510)

The task force suggested that early attention be given to the definition of "purposes in post-secondary education" and that priority consideration be given to the need for more highly qualified manpower in the 1980s, and for the confirmation of existing commitments to student mobility and equality of access to post-secondary education for Canadians. We recommended that the current block-funded basis be continued, at least for the time being, but that the post-secondary education program be separate from the future support of health programs.

We recommended that there should be federal-provincial discussions for improving assistance to needy students, described in the report of the task force on student assistance, and we agreed that there should be more public information made available on general federal government support to the provinces for post-secondary education.

The task force also unanimously recommended that the federal minister responsible report annually to Parliament with respect to federal transfers to each province for higher education, other federal support to post-secondary education, the effectiveness of these programs in moving toward the country's economic and other goals, the results of consultations with the council of provincial ministers of education about the definition of "national purposes to be served by higher education", and the means by which these objectives will be achieved. Additional recommendations can be found in our report with respect to post-secondary education.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I strongly support Bill C-97 for the reasons mentioned in the first part of my comments last Friday afternoon. I am pleased that the more disadvantaged parts of our great country will continue to be dealt with very fairly by greatly increased equalization payments being made to them, and that the federal government's commitment to health care and post-secondary education also continues to be strongly shown. As mentioned before, these Government of Canada payments for equalization, health care and post-secondary education will amount to about $105 billion in cash and tax points to the provinces over the next five years and, as also mentioned, our task force wanted to make sure that there was full accountability to the people of Canada for this $105 billion that will be flowing directly to the provinces.

Our proposals and recommendations with respect to our health care and post-secondary education systems, some of which I have enumerated above, were developed to try to ensure this greater accountability. I therefore hope and trust that, during federal-provincial negotiations with respect to health care and post-secondary education over the next one and two years, our comments in our report and our recommendations with respect to these two most important fields will be carefully considered. I also hope and trust that the result will be stronger and more effective health care and post-secondary education systems that will be much more accountable than now to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have looked forward to speaking very briefly on this important subject of federal-provincial fiscal transfers. Other speakers have said that it is this type of system which holds confederation together in Canada. I am sure there are many elements of truth in that statement. Without this type of system, each province would be on its own. Fiscally, there would be very little to bring us all together as one country. It is only right that the more wealthy parts of the nation should in some way help to subsidize those parts that are not as well off and that find themselves in conditions below the average. It is an integral part of the Canadian system as we know it.

I have one comment to make about this, however. I do not think that fiscal transfers should have been entrenched in the Constitution. It makes sense to me to have them but surely we can achieve them under ordinary acts of Parliament. I do not think it was necessary to entrench in the Constitution of Canada the provisions for federal-provincial fiscal transfers. However, Mr. Speaker, that argument is over now, and when the new Constitution arrives we will find this provision entrenched in it.

In the long run it will probably work to our disadvantage as it will be maintained that the system we have today should remain forever. I hope that at some point we will find that it is not necessary to maintain this system. It has worked reasonably well for us, but because we have put it in the Constitution we will find it difficult to change. These administrative arrangements can best be dealt with by ordinary statute and legislation, in my opinion.

I should like to compliment the parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements which was put together at the request of Parliament. Certain changes were proposed by the federal government but it was Parliament that decided they should not be enacted until they had been carefully considered. Good work was done by members of all parties on that task force. In particular, I think of the work done by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), which was exemplary. Of course, good work was also done by all members of the task force.

One of the good things that came out of the task force study, in an area in which I took a great deal of interest, was that the task force took the time to visit not only the provinces but also the two territories. The fiscal relationships of the territories with the federal government are just as important as those with the provinces. In fact, in a way they are more so, because the territories are in the process of development and change.

Some time ago the Hon. C. M. Drury devoted two years of study and attention to the fiscal relationships that exist between the Northwest Territories and the Government of Canada. He was the Prime Minister's special representative on constitutional development in the Northwest Territories and a lot of his study was devoted to the financial relationships that exist between the territorial and the federal governments. I should like to quote from Mr. Drury's report on this subject. He came to the following conclusion in paragraph 6.6, at page 124 of his report:

> New arrangements should provide for the calculation of an annual general purpose grant at a non-discretionary level, as an alternative to the general federal subsidies for operating and capital costs. Except in extraordinary circumstances, the onus should be on the territorial government to raise any additional funds required through taxation or borrowing. These arrangements should also be effective for longer than the present one-year duration of federal-territorial financial agreements. To support any necessary borrowings or unexpected year-to-year volatility in territorial tax revenues, the revenue stabilization program should be extended to the NWT—

I think that is an important observation. Most provinces can take part in the revenue stabilization program. From time to time when provincial revenues fluctuate widely, the program would allow the ministers of finance of all provinces to plan carefully knowing that there will not be wide variations in the amount of money that accrues to the Consolidated Revenue Fund in their particular province. It is a good program that is operated by the federal government. In my opinion and in the opinion of Mr. Drury, it should be extended to the territories and I hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) will see fit to do so at some time.

• (1520)

Mr. Drury also went on to say:

> —and the governor in council should initially retain the power to approve proposed GNWT borrowings. However, this latter power should rarely be exercised as a veto. Its purpose would be to increase the credit rating of the GNWT as a preferred borrower.

I think that is a step in the right direction. Most provinces use their capacity to borrow on financial markets, both in Canada and abroad, for good provincial purposes. For instance, we can look at provincial hydro authorities, one of the largest borrowers. It would be a step toward normal provincial-type responsibility in the territories if they were allowed to exercise their authority under the Northwest Territories Act to borrow funds on the open market, instead of always from the Government of Canada. They would have to exercise their responsibilities well and in a manner which would enable them over a period of time to obtain the credit rating to which the special representative of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) referred. It is a process of learning how to manage their fiscal affairs.

Mr. Drury went on to say:

> A more predictable level of general purpose grant would permit the executive member to anticipate additional revenue needs more effectively and to take the steps necessary to raise those revenues in a timely and responsible way. The level of federal financial support would become a "given" revenue item in the GNWT budget calculations rather than a residual supplementary item to balance the budget.

This is important. At the present time one must find out how much taxation one will receive from income tax, corporate taxes, the sale of licences, liquor profits and everything else. Then one must figure out the necessary expenditures, for example, how much it will cost to operate schools and hospitals, fill in potholes in the roads and everything else. Then the federal is asked to make up the difference. In my opinion it is unfair to both territorial authorities and to the federal government for the federal government to be always in the position of being asked to give as much as possible, and then a little finagling goes on. It would be better if some kind of formula arrangement could be made, as is the case with the provinces, wherein the territories could anticipate in advance the funding which will come to them. At the same time the federal government would know how much money it would have to spend. We would get rid of the dog fights which occur every year when budgets are drawn up.

Mr. Drury continued:

An important measure of autonomy would be permitted that is not now available to the executive and the council, since it would be their responsibility to meet residual GNWT revenue needs.

This is important. It would make the territories act in a responsible manner because they could not overspend and then expect the federal government to make up the deficit. They would have to keep their affairs in order. He went on to say:

Future federal financial support should reflect not only federal responsibilities for an evolving territorial government but also the genuine fiscal need of the GNWT, consistent with the principles underlying the federal equalization program. The aim should be for equitable treatment of all Canadians, regardless of whether they are under provincial or territorial jurisdiction.

This is another important point. In that area of Canada we want the same type of treatment as people who make the provinces their home. If there is an equalization formula or program which operates for the provinces of Canada, why cannot this be extended to the territories? I admit that at this time, because of limited revenues in the territories, there would be need for additional financial assistance from the Government of Canada. All we need is one or two medium-scaled resource developments and then the financial picture would be reversed. This would be to the advantage of the federal government for having partaken of a program such as this.

The final quotation from the Drury report is as follows:

Federal-GNWT agreements for transfers of federal responsibilities should be negotiated that provide predictable GNWT funding levels. Funding should be in accordance with general guidelines agreed to between the two governments, taking into account the reduced claim on federal finances as a consequence of the responsibility transferred.

Then the important part read:

Any federal financial saving earmarked for the GNWT should be transferred to the inner cabinet budgetary envelope for fiscal transfers to the provinces and be included in the estimates of the Department of Finance.

The great problem of the territories now is the subvention of the Government of Canada. It does not come out of the envelope to which the special representative of the Prime Minister referred. It comes out of the budget and is carried in the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Anyone who has had anything to do with that department knows it is not a desirable situation. Transfers from the senior government to territorial governments should be carried in the same cabinet envelope as transfers to the provinces. It should be the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, not the responsibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro).

These things have been said many times in the past. Financial officials at the political level have come down from the Northwest Territories several times to make their case before committees of Parliament. The Minister of Finance came down about a year ago to speak on this very matter. When the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements visited the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, it was told very much the same thing. I am pleased that members of the task force listened carefully to what the two governments had to say. Members went out of their way to discuss some of the problems in the report they prepared for Parliament.

I should like to read one quotation from the report entitled "Fiscal federalism in Canada" to illustrate that these people listened to the special concerns of this important part of the nation:

The task force believes that although federal territorial government fiscal arrangements based on a longer-term formula approach might appear to lessen accountability to Parliament in the short run, in fact, it could be increased in the longer term by coupling the periodic renegotiation of the new arrangements with a requirement for a specific report to Parliament on their effectiveness. Accountability would be further enhanced if there were to be a requirement for this report to be referred to a parliamentary committee for review and assessment.

In some ways I wish the parliamentary task force might have gone further and looked carefully at some of the recommendations of Mr. Drury, but in general it listened and seemed to have come to the same conclusions as Mr. Drury. I am sure anyone who looked carefully over a period of time at the problems relating to territorial-federal financing would also come to very much the same conclusions.

As we develop these fiscal arrangements, we should keep in mind that at some point in time the territories will attain provincial status. When that happens, we would want to have the same system there as in the rest of Canada. We must continually work toward that goal. It is interesting to note that the Yukon and that part of the Northwest Territories I have the privilege to represent, which is basically below the tree line or the District of Mackenzie, at the present time are as financially self-sufficient as some of the Atlantic provinces. When you take into account the public revenue generated and the public expense, they balance as well there as they do, for instance, in the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island. We would hold though that the resources of the territories are such that if you develop only a limited amount of the potential, the revenue situation would be entirely reversed. The federal government would get back all of its investment in the north plus very much more.

So much for that which might have been taken as something of a digression, but it is an important subject. I have spoken on it before and I will continue to do so in the future. It is an evolving situation. We cannot deal with it once and then lay it aside. It will evolve over a period of many years and I look forwarding to addressing the House and giving updates on the accomplishments that we have made from time to time.

I will now return to Bill C-97. I know that the Minister of Finance has come under severe criticism for presenting this bill in its present form. My personal view of the bill before us is that it may not be that bad. I hate to have to say that, being a member of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, but certainly the bill has some things to recommend it. Some provisions are not as good as they might have been, but in general I think we can understand why the government has to take something of a tough stance with respect to transfers to the provinces.

The government is in very bad financial shape. This situation goes back over many years. Because of the economic policies followed years ago, we are now caught up in a situation where we have to pay for past excesses. We have lived beyond our means for some time and now we have to face up to the consequences of that. The government has to be very careful how it spends its rather limited resources. Therefore, there is some understanding, at least on my part, why the government has had to take a tack that some people regard as rather tough.

If I were to levy one criticism at the way the government has handled this affair, it is the way in which it has lacked a degree of honesty. Had the government explained the matter the way I have just done, the public might have had some sympathy, although I doubt whether it would be possible to have much sympathy for the mistakes of the past which have brought us to the present situation.

One of the ways the government has tried to get around the cutbacks that it is making is to issue press releases. I am referring specifically to a press release dated March 19 from "the office of the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, Minister of Finance". If you read the first page of this communiqué, Mr. Speaker, what do you think it does? It stresses that payments to the provinces over the next five years will be $105.5 billion compared to $61.3 billion in the previous five years.

That is true, but that increase is accounted for by inflation, inflation caused by the government itself. What we have to do is to look at the formula that was used to come up with these figures and see what would have happened had we applied the old formula to the next five-year period. If we do that, we find that what has taken place is a cutback amounting to some $5.7 billion. That is the difference between what will be paid under the new formula and what would have been paid under the old formula. If we read through the communiqué, it does not make any reference to the amount of cutback; for instance, how much less the provinces will receive than what they would have received before. The situation is presented in the most positive light. I guess I can understand why the government operates that way, but in all honesty, the government is not honest. This is not an honest way to present that information to the House or to the people of Canada.

If we look at some of the provisions of Bill C-97, and I will try to go through them fairly quickly one at a time in order to give you my impression of them, the first item is sources of revenue to be equalized. I understand within Bill C-97 that the packet of provincial revenue is taken into account when you calculate the revenue which is to be equalized. This has been expanded by the inclusion of five or six new categories of provincial revenue. In general, I would applaud this move, and I think that most people who have spoken on this bill would see the effect of that as being from beneficial to neutral. The inclusion of certain resource revenue leaves one in a position of sort of not knowing which way to go. When you take into account the wasting nature of assets, such as mineral and oil and gas deposits, there is a necessity to treat that type of revenue differently from revenue which accrues on a continuing basis. From an oil field you can produce great revenue—on occasion, but only for a limited period of years.

Most governments when drawing revenue from resources such as I have just described—and I am thinking of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta—have decided, and I agree with them, that a fair amount of that money has to be put into a fund, whether it is consolidated with a provincial consolidated revenue fund or set aside as a heritage fund, for reinvestment. It is capital rather than income. Therefore, when we start including resource-type revenue in provincial revenues used for the purpose of calculating payments to be made by the provinces—in other words, the equalization formula—we have to be very careful.

I would agree with the government that when it comes to the provincial component of the oil export charge, that is reasonable provincial revenue to use in the equalization formula. I do not think hon. members could argue that the oil export charge is a capital account item; it has to be treated as an income item. It is not a royalty as such but an export tax.

The five-province standard, which is to be used in place of the national average or the Ontario standard, would meet with my approval. It seems to make sense and I think it is one of the bill's provisions which has met with a reasonably wide degree of acceptance by members on all sides.

The payment floor and transitional guarantee also make sense and are non-controversial. The payment floor is not unlike the program which stabilizes provincial revenue. The provincial treasurer can forecast revenues and expenditures with a reasonable degree of accuracy. We would not want to see quantum leaps in the amount of moneys paid over because of the formula change, which would happen without some form of stabilization over the initial period. These things would also apply to the transitional guarantee and I am pleased to see provision for this in Bill C-97.

We then come to an item which may be a little bit more controversial, the payment ceiling. Everyone is agreed on the floor, but there is some difference of opinion with respect to the payment ceiling. The plan of the Minister of Finance is to tie maximum expenditures under Bill C-97 to increases in the GNP. As far as the minister is concerned, this is an effort to see that transfer payments do not escalate to ridiculously high levels. I know some of my colleagues might not agree with me, but in general I see the rationale for the payment ceiling. I think were I to be Minister of Finance, I would be inclined to do something similar. I know some provinces are going to squawk and scream over things like this, but because of the grave financial situation Canada finds itself in, it is in my opinion necessary to take some steps to see that expenditures just do not completely run away from us.

Federal government expenditures under C-97 will not be, by and large, blue book amounts. They will not come back to Parliament for approval; rather they will be statutory requirements for expenditures. It is therefore important that some cap be in place so that these matters do not get away from the control of government and Parliament. I think, therefore, it behooves Parliament to look seriously at the minister's proposals to put a lid on this type of expenditure.

I have something to say about the population adjustment recovery payments which might get me into hot water with, for instance, the Premier of Newfoundland. I understand it is the government's intention to forgive repayment of amounts paid because population estimates under the existing formula were in error. Although I can see the need for something to cushion the effect this repayment would have on the provinces, I do not think we should wipe them off the board completely. Instead, I would favour allowing them to repay these amounts over a period of, I suggest, ten years. In addition, payment would be either interest free or at a very low rate of interest. I do not like the idea that we should bail everyone out of the difficulties in which they find themselves, albeit through no fault of their own, as in the case of an error in population estimates agreed to by both levels of government.

This will get me into trouble with the Premier of Alberta, but I also disagree with what that province did with respect to the indebtedness of certain municipalities. They had run up a lot of debt and found themselves in difficulty as far as repayment was concerned, and the Alberta government stepped in and said: "Okay, we are going to get the municipalities off the hook and pay off their debts". If you continually do that with a government at any level, it is very much the same as doing it with an individual; there is no incentive to be responsible in the future. One province will say that its neighbour ran up all these debts, got themselves into trouble and the federal government bailed them out; why shouldn't they do the same? Why should they run their financial affairs in a responsible manner when someone is going to come along and bail them out if they do not? Therefore, I wish the government had taken a little tougher stand with respect to the population adjustment recovery payments.

I wonder who else I can alienate during the course of this debate!

An hon. Member: Keep going, you are doing fine!

Mr. Nickerson: We now come to another rather controversial item, Mr. Speaker, the termination of the revenue guarantee. This is probably the most controversial item in the proposal now before us. Most of the cutbacks, if you are supporting the provinces, or savings in expenditures if you look at it from the federal government's point of view, will come from the termination of the revenue guarantee. This will amount to many billions of dollars over the next five years, so it is certainly worthy of debate. In fact, most of the debate on C-97 has been on this very point, and we have had great speeches by members on all sides defending the health care system and pointing out that if you terminate the revenue guarantee you are going to do all kinds of terrible things to the health of Canadians. The same thing applies to education. I have listened carefully to some of these arguments, and I prefer to deal with the technical and non-controversial aspects; in that way I will not get myself into so much trouble.

Let us look for a moment at the history of the revenue guarantee provisions of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. I understand that this was introduced as a transitional measure in 1972. It was to expire in 1977. When 1977 came around, some of the old arguments were used again. In the enactments of that year, such as the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, they were again renewed. The underlying idea was good. Because the formula was to be changed, because of the transfer of tax points to the provinces and the reduction of certain federal government expenditures, provinces could not quite calculate the effect. They were afraid that there would be a decrease in the amount of available money for health care, post-secondary education and other worth-while purposes. It was something akin to the flow of payment and transitional guarantees included in the present bill. It was for that reason that the revenue guarantees were included in the legislation of 1972 and of 1977.

• (1550)

To put it briefly and succinctly, my own thinking on this matter is that a deal is a deal.

Miss MacDonald: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: If the tax point transfer or the rate at which the Government of Canada expends funds for the provinces is not satisfactory after ten years, and if there is still a need for a revenue guarantee, then there was something wrong with the deal. We should not need the revenue guarantee in perpetuity. It was a transitional method, a transitional step. Ten years should be long enough for it to have served its usefulness.

We should not now consider extending a transitional provision for another five-year period because 15 years in this game amounts to perpetuity. Five years is forever; fifteen years is three forevers. If this deal is not working, we should look at the deal itself to see whether we should amend it, or to see whether there should be additional tax point transfers, or whether something is wrong with the EPF formula. That is what we should be considering.

I made some points with respect to the Northwest Territories and their dealings with the federal government. At the present time, the system allows them to come back and put the blame on the federal government and say, "We want more money". Then, if they cannot get it, they can go around the country blaming the federal government. To a certain extent, this applies to the provinces. Provinces must remember that if they want autonomy in certain areas which are guaranteed to them under the BNA Act and which will soon be continuously guaranteed to them under the Canada Act, they must act financially responsible.

I see that my allotted time has just about expired, is that correct?

An hon. Member: Keep going.

Mr. Nickerson: Let me just say in conclusion that, like all hon. members of this House, we wish it had not been necessary to make some of these cutbacks. However, probably more than some of my colleagues, I understand the necessity for doing that. I just wish that in previous years the government had conducted its economic and financial affairs in a manner which would not have made these things necessary now.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the debate on this piece of legislation, Bill C-97, has reminded me of the parliamentary debate on a number of items over the last two years. However, in those debates and in the debates on this bill, we have not really demonstrated any attempt to come to grips with the realities of Canada today. Neither in legislation affecting the drastic economic situation Canada faces today, nor in legislation relating to federal-provincial relations, such as that which is before us right now, do we find any constructive leadership by this Liberal government.

In the economic field, the phrase "band-aid solution" has been often used, and appropriately, to describe every legislative measure or half-measure that the government has produced. The government's record in that very important field has been deplorable. However, that is not the subject of debate at this time. We are discussing a proposal by the government to alter, in a significant way, the federal government's financial assistance to the provinces. Both the equalization payments which are there to provide a basic level of services to all Canadians and the established programs financing legislation which assists provinces to maintain hospital and medicare services and university and community college programs are important to all Canadians. Indeed, equalization is so important that we have made it part of our new Constitution. Yet these legislative changes have been a result of inadequate discussion between the federal and provincial governments. If that were not bad enough, we in this House are being asked to pass, in all stages, the significant legislation which we saw for the first time on March 19.

I will deal with our role in this debate later on. However, for the next few minutes I would like to speak about the way the federal government continues to treat the provinces. Few will claim that the deteriorating relationship between our two senior levels of government can be entirely blamed on the federal government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau is correct in claiming that some provinces are always kicking the federal government in the teeth. I would add that some provincial officials, as well as some federal politicians, seem to take delight in that type of behaviour. This provincial attitude has been counterproductive; but the federal Liberal government has done little to create a better climate for federal-provincial relations.

The Prime Minister has too often displayed quick wit and quick temper rather than the reasoned remarks that his personal motto should call for. By issuing a death certificate for co-operative federalism, he is only adding further fuel to the fires of regional suspicion and hatred. The sticks of that fire have been piled higher with each act of this government. The way the Constitution was dealt with, the approach to oil and gas legislation, the unilateral method of handling the question of the Crow rate and the sudden demise of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, have all augmented negative provincial feelings. These acts have created animosity by themselves. However, the attitude, the methods and the process employed by the federal government have produced the worst animosity. Other speeches in this debate and in previous debates have referred to the growth of Quebec and western separatism during this government's terms of office. The hostile feelings of those residents in Canada, plus others in Atlantic Canada and even in Ontario, toward the federal government demonstrates that the federal-provincial relations disputes have gone beyond being a continuing war of words, of different wills or of different personalities. Neither side appears to be willing to work toward a united Canada.

The Prime Minister declares that co-operative federalism is dead because he feels that he has been kicked in the teeth once too often. Provincial politicians are always going to the polls to fight the numerous onslaughts of the federal government. The federal government feels it must set up direct federal liaison offices in each province to increase federal visibility and that each cost-shared program must have a huge sign, preferably with neon lights, proclaiming that federal participation. At the same time, the provinces feel that they are being bombarded with federal ultimatums which dictate not only in federal areas of jurisdiction but also in any matter in which the federal government finds some belated interest. The federal government has been harshly treated by some provinces, but it has certainly given the provinces similar treatment.

In the bill before us today, the federal government has not really attempted to negotiate with the provinces. I find it ironic that when the federal government does not wish to act, it feels it must consult with the provinces. On the matter of freedom of information, it not only feels this need to consult, but it now believes the provincial and federal legislation must be uniform throughout this nation.

• (1600)

If freedom of information needs thorough consultation between the provinces and the federal government, Mr. Speaker, then certainly legislation affecting the ability of provinces to provide a uniform basic level of health care, post-secondary education and other essential services must require that same level of consultation.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) spoke on this legislation last Monday. I was in the House to listen to him. I read his speech in Hansard after that and I read it again on Sunday morning. I am certain that the minister has forgotten how to speak in everyday, understandable English. I looked at the bill before us, I read the reactions of some of the provincial governments, then I read his speech again. He is not using the English language to convey an explanation of this legislation. Instead, he uses the language to lead us away from the truth.

The Minister of Finance gives the impression that negotiations on this bill have been ongoing since October of 1980, when in that budget he said that "significant savings in social transfer payments" would occur. Yet later, he admits that serious negotiations did not occur until after the November 12 budget of 1981. Even then he made major changes in February, 1982 and expected the provinces to agree within the same month.

Clearly, negotiations have not taken place in any real and substantial way. Some provinces have complained that the federal government's finance minister refused to meet with his provincial counterparts, from December 1980 to November 23, 1981, almost a full year, even though a meeting had been promised for as early as March, 1981. Clearly, if you do not meet you cannot discuss, and if you cannot discuss you cannot negotiate. This is not co-operative federalism in action; it is evasive federalism being acted out.

Negotiations are a sham when a proposal made to the provinces on February 4 for which documentation was not given to the provinces until February 19 is to be agreed to by the same provinces by the 22nd of that same month. They are given three days to respond to the federal government's position. It would take many more days for the provinces to be able to analyse the effect of the federal government's position.

The ultimatum negotiations of the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) where he demanded responses by March 3 with regard to funding proposals for post-secondary financing and, to a lesser degree, the fancy dancing of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) on the federal role in training programs also served to confuse the issue further.

There is no real need for this rushed and abortive attempt to negotiate with the provinces. As the hon. member from Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) mentioned last week, only the section of this bill dealing with equalization payments must be passed this month, even if only on an interim basis at this time. Those other sections where the majority of the dispute exists have no legislative deadline.

The effects of this legislation are not yet fully understood. Most provinces have not given their written reactions in the last couple of weeks. Most hon. members do not understand the legislation fully. We saw it for the first time on March 19 of this year. It would be irresponsible for us to pass this significant and important legislation without realizing all its implications.

I repeat that for established programs financing there is no legislative deadline. We are not forced to act on this section now. The federal government is giving itself a year to prepare for the start of new national guidelines for medical services and post-secondary educational services. Surely we and the provinces must have this information before we set limits on the federal level of funding for these important areas.

The minister in his speech last week spoke of a number of changes that are contained in this bill. He started by saying that there will be a "substantially changed fiscal equalization formula." Yet he wants to rush this bill through the House. The purpose of this section is to provide less money for the poorer provinces than they would receive if the present agreement were continued.

In addition, he spoke of moving to "modify established programs financing by eliminating compensation provided in exchange for the 1972 revenue guarantee." Those are his words, not mine. Again this is a major change which we should not rush into. This also will drastically reduce funds the provinces are entitled to under the existing legislation.

One change the minister proposes is to forgive provinces which received an overpayment based on estimated population figures. However, Saskatchewan is not to be forgiven, while each of the other five provinces who received an overpayment will be forgiven. This bill specifically denies Saskatchewan this refund. Can we rush into legislation that is unequal in its treatment, on a retroactive basis, without first discussing the rationale for this proposed action? The amount is $50 million, and despite tales of new-found wealth in that province the amount is significant for a province of only one million people.

I do not wish to imply that all within this legislation is suspect; indeed, that is not the case. A provision extending for an indefinite period a fiscal stabilization program which protects provinces from a sharp downturn in revenues caused by a major slump in the economy and facilitating provincial borrowing in those periods is a good measure. A similar provision providing a revenue guarantee if the federal government makes substantial tax changes is also welcome. A section protecting provinces by providing 85 per cent, 90 per cent or 95 per cent of the previous years amount, depending on the provinces' per capita fiscal capacity, is also good. It gives protection against a rapid increase in a province's revenue in a one-year or two-year period.

The concept of including local governments' potential tax capacity also has merit. It will apparently roll $16.5 billion into the equalization standards, and it will more adequately reflect the revenue capacity of a province.

The provision of a ceiling where total equalization payments will be restrained by the growth in the GNP should provide protection for the federal treasury. However, its effect on poorer provinces if costs should escalate is something we should be discussing further in this House.

A very interesting new provision guarantees recipient provinces will have transitional payments for the next three years, guaranteeing, for example, that the 1982-83 equalization payments will increase by the average rate of income from 1977-78 to 1981-82. The federal Minister of Finance pointed out that in the next three years this transitional payment would mean an extra $165 million to the province of Manitoba alone. It is an admission on his part that the new proposals in this bill will drastically reduce the amounts provinces will receive under the present arrangement. Yet the minister says there are no cutbacks. If there are no cutbacks, why does he need a transitional payment scheme for the next three years? Why does the province of Manitoba receive $165 million over three years if there is no cutback? He is admitting that this legislation is giving him less money than the provinces would receive under the existing legislation. The Minister of Finance said that he agreed to transitional payments on the suggestion of the provinces, and in particular because of the arguments of the new government of Manitoba. That fact, in itself, is good, but we must again ask ourselves why transitional payments are necessary if there are no cutbacks.

Under the present equalization formula, Manitoba should receive $452 million in 1982-83. Under the minister's new scheme, that province is entitled to $349 million, which represents a cutback of $113 million. With $82 million in transitional payments, Manitoba will receive $431 million, which is still $21 million less than they would have received under the present legislation. If we add the amount the province will lose under the new program for established programs financing to this $21 million figure, we find that the province will receive $62.9 million less next year than they would have received if the present legislation was continued.

Once the sugar coating provided by transitional payments is dissolved, it will be evident that the poorer provinces will be in a worse position. In 1986-87, the loss to Manitoba is estimated to be $248.6 million for one year alone. Yet Manitoba is not alone is this regard. The estimated cost for Newfoundland in 1986-87 is $30.3 million. For Nova Scotia it is $40.8 million. The figure for New Brunswick is $48.5 million. For Quebec, it is $1.22 billion. As I mentioned, the figure for Manitoba is $248.6 million.

Over the five-year term of this agreement the provinces will receive much less money than if the existing programs were allowed to continue. Again, I have figures relating to the same six provinces. The total federal cutback over the five-year term for Newfoundland is $90.3 million; $153.1 million for Nova Scotia; $172.7 million for New Brunswick; $3.960 billion for Quebec; and $828.3 million for Manitoba. Yet the Minister of Finance, in his unusual use of the English language, said last Monday; "I do not understand how the term 'cutback' can be applied to this particular program". We see billions of dollars in cutbacks yet he cannot understand how we on the opposition side, who are out there listening to people in the provinces, can use the term "cutback". The only argument the Liberals have used is that there is increased value in federal tax transfers, yet provincial tax increases will offset the shortfall in federal financing.

Let us review the true figures. Even after the federal tax transfers and the related increase in provincial taxes, the shortfall for some of these provinces is staggering. Again, I have figures for five provinces. For the next five-year term, Newfoundland, after removing the increased federal tax transfers and the provincial tax increases which are related to that, will lose $67 million. For the last year of the program it will lose $28.3 million. Nova Scotia, over the next five years, will lose $71.1 million and $27.8 million for the last year of the program. New Brunswick will lose $133.7 million over the five-year period and $42.5 million in the last year of the program. Quebec stands to lose $3.799 billion and in the last year alone, even after all the extra money which Liberal backbenchers have been talking about, it will lose $1.040 billion as a result of this new scheme. Over five years Manitoba will lose $719.3 million, and in the last year of the program it will lose $232.6 million. These figures are staggering but they must be put on the record because they represent the net loss faced by the provinces under this proposal.

The sugar coating effect of the transition payments may blunt the opposition to these measures. Already, some newspapers and politicians are looking only at the immediate result for 1982-83. However, the horrendous effects of this piece of legislation are only being delayed.

Those of us who are from the provinces concerned—Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Manitoba—as well as those who are concerned about what result this legislation will have on the ability of the provinces to maintain a decent basic level of services, cannot support this bill. Liberal members who vote for the bill had better hope that the next federal election occurs before the sugar coating completely dissolves and Canadians discover what is being rushed through Parliament at this time.

The real question which must be debated right now is how the provinces, especially our poorer provinces, will be able to maintain existing programs at their present level when the federal government is taking away over $5 billion in the next five years. I remind hon. members that most of that money is being taken away from those provinces which are already receiving equalization payments, those provinces which we have agreed need the money the most.

When the Liberals refer to the resource rich provinces as the ones which will suffer under these proposals, they are obviously not telling the whole story. When the government complains that including all resource revenue of the richer provinces in equalization programs would create financial problems for the federal government, it is ignoring reality because for each of the last number of years resource revenue has been treated differently, and will continue to be treated differently simply by keeping Alberta off the list of the five provinces used to establish the equalization standard.

As provinces not receiving equalization payments, the major resource provinces are not adversely affected by the equalization proposals. They are not suffering from the cutbacks. They are affected by changes in the established programs financing through the removal of compensation for the revenue guarantee and, while it may be arguable that those provinces do not need federal assistance for hospitalization, medicare and post-secondary education, how does the federal government expect to enforce the federal standards, once they finally establish them, if they do not have a "carrot"—some way of controlling the activities of the governments of Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia? As I said earlier, my main concern is for developing provinces. While arguments about British Columbia or Alberta may be valid, they take attention away from those provinces which need the funds the most.

By referring to letters from the governments of the Atlantic provinces, the Minister of Finance implied that they support his scheme. In fact, those letters only support this proposal for a five-province standard for equalization over an earlier suggestion which he also made to restrict Ontario as the only province used for that national standard. That is the only point those letters make and we should ensure that Canadians understand this. We should not let the Minister of Finance bamboozle us again. The Atlantic provinces do not support this scheme and he should not make that implication in his speeches.

• (1620)

I remind Parliament that over 70 per cent of the cutback—and surely we can call it that, no matter what the Minister of Finance wishes—will be borne by those provinces with 44 per cent of the population and only 36 per cent of the national economic output. To hear some hon. members speak, we would assume that this is another measure by the Liberals to soak the rich. It is strange that every time the Liberals go out to soak the rich it is the poorer sections of Canadian society which are drowned.

My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, mentioned that by a sleight-of-hand trick the Liberals have removed the compensation for the revenue guarantee and by doing so have made sure that the real increase in established programs financing is only 4.6 per cent instead of the 13 per cent the Liberals claim it is.

Parliament should be aware of what the all-party task force said about the level of federal funding. The task force stated on page 33 of its report:

—federal grants to provinces and municipalities expressed as a percentage of total federal spending have been fairly constant since 1970. There is, therefore, no ground to suggest that federal transfers have been getting out of control. In fact, they grew at a slower rate in the 1970s than they did in the 1960s.

What did the Economic Council of Canada say? It said that one should seriously doubt the wisdom and fairness of solving the federal deficit problem by merely transferring the problem to the provinces. The council went on to say that this is not a solution at all.

From where is the money for these programs to come? The federal government expects its own expenditures to increase by approximately 16 per cent this year. If the past is any tradition, they will probably increase by more. Are the provinces not expected to face similar increases, even without this drastic change in federal funding? Are the provinces going to tax their citizens more to maintain the level of services for medicare, hospitalization and post-secondary education? How are they supposed to know what they are supposed to finance? We have yet to see the guidelines for health care and post-secondary education. We are setting the funding limits now, and we are setting the guidelines for what should be a national standard one year down the road. Does that make sense?

Mr. Blenkarn: Of course not.

Mr. Keeper: The Tories support it.

Mr. Murphy: I think it is very likely that the standard of education and the standard of medical services in the less wealthy parts of this country will deteriorate. Why would the federal government propose a scheme whereby funding limits are established now and later we establish the federal standards and the federal guidelines?

For the last three years all parties in this House have expressed concern about the present level of services. By cutting the federal funding to which the provinces are entitled there can be no less pressure—and there certainly will be more pressure—on the level of services the provinces provide.

Did the all-party task force not state that money provided for the revenue guarantee should be treated as federal funding for health care and post-secondary education? If that is the case, why is the federal government, which had the majority on that all-party task force, eliminating this funding, and how could the so-called Breau report say one thing and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) say the opposite in this House last Friday? Has he forgotten what his report is all about? Has he forgotten what the essence of that report was?

These are questions which should be asked and answered before we rush this legislation through Parliament. Today the state of federal-provincial relations is so strained that even Premiers like Howard Pawley of Manitoba, who really believes we should make co-operative federalism work, find it difficult to succeed. They find it very difficult because of the attitude of some of the premiers. They also find it difficult because of the attitude of the Prime Minister and some of his colleagues who sit opposite. This country needs a more positive attitude on the part of the provincial governments and on the part of the federal government toward each other.

Before this legislation becomes another thorn in the side of confederation, let us as members of Parliament make sure we know what we are passing. Let us ensure that no province suffers unnecessarily because of this legislation. Let us ask that guidelines for the level of services for health care and post-secondary education be established prior to limiting federal funding for those essential areas. Let us ensure that equalization payments really mean something and meet the needs of our less wealthy provinces and do not become another empty promise in our new Constitution. Let us insist that the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Secretary of State really negotiate with their provincial counterparts and not just play at consultations. Let us make sure that co-operative federalism really works and lives in Canada. For us to act in any other manner would not benefit those programs which we all believe to be very important and would not create a Canada where we are working together toward a better future for Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, it is good to be speaking on this subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. May I correct the situation? Inadvertently I had not seen the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) rise. I did recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James. The names were given to me in co-operation with the party leaders. I usually work that way, but it would be customary for me to recognize the hon. member for Bow River, and I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James immediately after, if the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James grants his permission.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the error.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the co-operative attitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper).

I want to make only three comments about this bill. I am going to say a couple of things which have not been said before. First, I want to deal with the fund and join in the considerable discussion there has been about how much money goes into the fund and from where it comes. I want to make it abundantly clear that the governments of Alberta, past and present, have always stood very strongly and firmly for the principle of equalization. Albertans are part of Canada, and we agreed that social services such as health care and education should be provided at a reasonable minimum standard to all Canadians. As a matter of fact, it was strongly urged at the very beginning of the program by a former premier of Alberta that there should be equalization in Canada. Even though at that time Alberta was a have-not province, we felt it was necessary to make sure we shared anything we had. That has been typical of Albertans throughout the years. I remember that when I was a small boy during the depression years our family was as hungry as others. But that did not stop my mother, every time she baked, from sending a loaf of bread to another family who were also having a tough time.

Many times people are criticized for doing something good. I remember being in El Salvador in 1965 representing the Canadian government through the Canadian Good Roads Association at the opening of the Pan-American highway. I also witnessed the opening of a hospital in El Salvador for which the Americans had paid. I travelled over the Pan-American highway. The Americans had paid for 80 per cent of it, yet I did not hear one good word about the Americans from those people in El Salvador. All I heard was criticism, criticism, criticism. I asked the chap from Central America who was beside me, why? The Americans had built nearly the entire highway through Mexico to the United States; the Americans had built the hospital which was being opened, but they received no thanks for that. The chap beside me said that wherever there is a benefactor, there will be those who will hate that benefactor.

Sometimes I feel that way about the province of Alberta when I hear comments made in other parts of Canada. Albertans, the Alberta governments and previous Alberta governments have never asked for special concessions. They have shared with the rest of Canada in a number of ways. Mr. Speaker, I was hurt some time ago when I heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) say that Alberta did not want to share. I was even more hurt when I heard Senator Hays, a Liberal, say in a speech in Calgary that he was raised with oilmen and ranchers but now they do not want to share. I do not know where he has been living because sharing has been part and parcel of the every-day life of Albertans as, indeed, it has been of most Canadians. Who among us, from any province, would pass a youngster on the street who was hungry? Any of us would share our bread with him.

The equalization program which is now entrenched in the Constitution is a splendid thing. It ensures that all Canadians will have a minimum standard of social welfare, education and health. The higher we raise that minimum the greater the country will be. The weakest part of a chain is the weakest link and the weakest part of our confederation is the weakest province we have. We want to make sure that every province is strong and is given a chance to develop.

When I hear it said that Albertans do not share, I am upset because they have shared $18 billion in oil and gas revenues. I remember that when I was a member of the Alberta legislature I argued that we should have at least a two-price system for oil if not a three-price system. The first price would be the best one for the people who own the resource, the second would be the next lowest price for the people of Canada and the third would be the highest, or the world price for exported oil. Premier Lougheed replied that that is what the policy is, the fairest price possible, right across Canada and the highest price for people outside the country. By keeping the price lower than we needed to, we shared $18 billion with the people of Canada. I do not want any particular thanks for that, nor do the people of Alberta, but I think we should at least have recognition for it.

We also shared employment. I went to the tar sands plant at Fort McMurray when I was a member of the Alberta legislature where 2,000 people were employed separating the oil from the sand. A good half of them came from Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes and I was happy about that. I had dinner at a table where one person was from British Columbia, one was from Alberta, four were from Ontario, four from Quebec and two or three from the maritimes. Those people were helping develop the resource and that is the way it should be.

We also want to share in the fund. I want to be fair with the people of Alberta and I want the federal government to be fair with them when building the fund up. At one time we in Alberta argued—and the principle is sound—that revenue from non-renewable resources should not be part and parcel of the fund. A number of hon. members will probably disagree with me, and I respect that, but I argue that as we only have those non-renewable resources for a short period of time we should build for the day when they are not available. That is what the people of Alberta have been doing with the Alberta heritage trust fund; when the oil and gas is gone threre will be something there to lighten the load that the people will have to carry.

We argued that revenues from depleting resources should not form part of the fund, but we lost the argument. In the 1976 revision oil revenue was included and has formed part of the fund since. I still do not think the principle is sound, however. A non-renewable resource is a depleting resource and any province should have a chance to make use of the revenues which are only available for a short period.

My main reason for speaking today, Mr. Speaker, is the changes that have been made. Instead of "oil", there is now reference to "conventional new oil revenues", "conventional old oil revenues", "heavy oil revenues", "mined oil revenues", "domestically sold natural gas revenues" and "exported natural gas revenues". I think members of the committee should find out whether there is a fish hook in this which is designed to hurt Alberta. There are those who would like to do that. If there is a fish hook in this, it should be taken out. We will pay our share but let us not double the share simply because we have some non-renewable resources today.

Why did the minister change the provision from just oil and gas and make the various distinctions? The committee should examine this, as I shall at report stage, note the changes that have been made from what was contained in the old act. I want to know if there is a fish hook in this which is designed to hurt one province. I have seen that happen before, Mr. Speaker. I do not care whether it is little P.E.I. or big Ontario or big Alberta, no province should be discriminated against. Every province should be treated fairly and squarely. I make no apologies for that stand, Mr. Speaker.

There are three ways of sharing, namely, through the fund, and we are happy to do that, through employment and through a lower price for gas and oil for the people of Canada.

The third and last point I want to make concerns a reduction in services. When I was in the provincial legislature many programs were started by the federal government with a great blast of trumpets. Then suddenly the federal government dropped out and the province was left holding the bag. That is a very bad thing, no matter which party is in power in the federal government. If it is not going to maintain a program it should make it clear from the beginning.

I remember one program that was designed to help handicapped and retarded young people which was started in the Banff area. Many people worked very hard on it and volunteers gave their time to the project which was to enable retarded people who had previously drawn welfare to work and help maintain themselves. One learned to drive a car and started to earn a living, or at least part of his living, and others learned other things which would supplement their income and help them become self-sufficient. My heart thrilled at the happiness on their faces when they were able to say, "I am now making my own living." But after the third year when the program was going well, the federal government dropped out.

That is a bad policy and the same thing could happen with the established programs financing. The federal government will drop $5.7 billion over five years, or $1.14 billion every year if it is spread equally over the term. I cannot understand the mathematics of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and neither could the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I do not know whether he was figuring in metric or what. Even in metric I cannot understand them. When you take $5.7 billion away from the provinces, there must be a reduction some place.

The sad part is that established post-secondary educational programs will be affected; the quality of education will be reduced. I think hon. members opposite should realize that there will be less moneys for universities and colleges. This will either be made up by provincial governments or municipalities levying more taxes, or the fees of students will be increased. I read in a Montreal paper where one of its universities has now increased its fees for foreign students. Do we not want foreign students to come to Canada? Perhaps they should pay more than Canadians, but it is in our interest, if we are to share responsibility with the rest of the world, to raise the standard of education in Third World countries. It is very important for them to have educated people who can become leaders in their communities. Reducing the number who are coming to Canada does not work toward that objective.

One objective in terms of health was to have minimum health treatment for any Canadian who needed it. This is why Alberta gave up its medical program which was started by doctors. Alberta was doing fine under its doctors' program. It was an excellent program, but we were not helping other Canadians. Thus the government of Alberta said that it would drop out of its own plan and join the national program. Provinces that are not as well off as Alberta depend upon federal money. They will have to find money some place or lower the standard of health care. When provinces lower their standard of health care, it is more difficult for people to get into hospitals. It will even be more difficult for those who are poor. It will not affect those who are wealthy. As the hon. member for Churchill said, it is the poor who suffer, not the rich. The rich have enough money to attend universities, to have the best doctors or to do any of these things; there is no problem. The problem is with people who do not have money. This is why there is equalization. Any reduction hurts most in the provinces which need equalization. I plead with government backbenchers and cabinet ministers to ask themselves whether they want to be part and parcel of reducing the standards of the health and education systems in the country.

We should be raising the standard of education. The higher we raise it, the more we provide opportunity for young people to attend colleges, universities or various high schools. The better the country will be if opportunity is provided. Illiterate people in the Third World are having difficult times. Many people cannot read or write. They need opportunity. The same thing applies in our country where people are generally educated. That is not to say that we are well enough educated now. We should provide more opportunity for young people to attend colleges and universities and to learn trades so that they can contribute to the net worth of the country.

The effect of cutbacks on social services is an area which makes one's heart bleed. There are people who depend almost entirely on social services for their livelihood, for the education of their children, for the clothes on their backs. The provinces or the municipalities will either have to cut back or raise taxes. If not, children will attend school poorly clad or fed.

I do not like to make personal references but I remember, during tough years, boys and girls who came to school without any breakfast. I remember boys and girls who came to school without any winter underwear in 40 below weather. One of my students rode a horse for five miles to school and he had no winter underwear. I asked him, "Where is your winter underwear?" He said, "My dad is a drunkard, we are on welfare, and they will not give us any winter underwear." After riding to school in 40 below weather, his skin was blue. I was so angry that as soon as school was out that day I drove to Drumheller and phoned the then premier of the province, Mr. Brownlee. He told me to talk to the minister of welfare. I phoned the minister of welfare and he said, "That is the rule; if the father drinks up his money we cannot help". This was during the depression years. I said, "Are you going to make the kid suffer because his father is a drunkard?" He said, "That is the rule". Then I phoned Premier Brownlee again and I told him the story. He listened and said, "That kid will get winter underwear". Three days later winter underwear was provided to the boys and girls of that family. I wondered whether this was the way government worked, that someone must fight for winter underwear. This is one of the reasons I am in politics; it is not my idea of government.

Government should help those who need it. People need help through established programs. The government should not be cutting $5.7 billion and telling the people that it is not reducing the equalization fund.

The hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) mentioned that he did not like the idea of the Alberta government giving $1 million to its municipalities because this action might make people irresponsible. I can understand people saying this if they do not know the real facts behind the so-called gift to municipalities. The municipalities of Alberta had debts which were not the result of recklessness on the part of their councillors. At one time I think I knew every municipal councillor in the province of Alberta, and I did not know one who was reckless. People who are that close to municipal governments must be careful, or it is not safe to walk down the streets. Day by day councillors rub shoulders with the people. One municipality had debt because sewer and water systems were required; another municipality wanted to be rid of dust which was causing lung trouble, so it paved the roads; and another municipality required a bridge. Some municipalities had no debt, some had a little and some had a lot.

How did the government of Alberta deal with the situation? It gave a per capita grant to all municipalities. Those with no debt were able to build up capital assets. Some of those with debt were able to wipe it out. Those with a little debt were able to provide other services to their people. Those with the biggest debt used most of the money to pay it off. It is another example of sharing provincial revenue with the municipalities. Municipalities are the creation of the provinces; why should the provinces not share their revenues with them? I am proud of the fact that the Alberta government provided help to the municipalities to eliminate their debt.

Also I say to the hon. member for Western Arctic that he should have seen the faces of the people in those municipalities when they were told that the debt was paid. It was similar to how I would feel if my father came to me and said, "Well, you have been a half decent guy; I will pay off your $2,000 debt". It would be a wonderful load off my shoulders. Many fathers do it. I do not think that is wrong, I think it is good. The more sharing we have in that way, the better. But remember, this money belonged to all Albertans. The province is simply passing the money on to the municipalities because all of it does not belong to the provincial government. There are principles there that are important and the same principles are important in this bill.

• (1650)

By all means, let us keep equalization. But at the same time, let us make sure that we are fair with each province. Let us make sure that no province is discriminated against in the building of the fund. Let us be fair to all provinces that receive the fund so that social services, education, and health care particularly, will at least reach a reasonable level of which any Canadian need not be ashamed.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise and address this bill because of its fundamental importance to our country, not just in the abstract but for Canadians as individuals. This bill is crucial because it will affect the day to day lives of all Canadians.

Bill C-97 deals with established programs financing and with equalization. It is a mixed bill. In that sense it is similar to the oil bill which caused all the kerfuffle which motivated the Conservatives to stop all business in this House. That bill was split eventually, and it is right that it was.

I feel that the bill before us should be split. Why do I say that? Quite simply because the government is trying to say that Bill C-97 has to get through the House now, that there is no time to be wasted if payments are to continue to the provinces. Therefore, this bill must go through now. In fact, the only part of this legislation that has to be dealt with quickly is the equalization portion of it. We could deal with the EPF portion of it over a much longer period of time. This raises the question why the Liberal government of the day is pushing this bill through the House so quickly, as it attempted to push the oil bill through. I must conclude that the government is doing this because it really does not want a full examination of the implications of the changes in fiscal transfers to the provinces.

We have all been able to make the point with regard to the established programs financing portion of this legislation and how that will have a detrimental effect on the provinces and all of our citizens. But the equalization part deserves full examination as well. By rushing this matter through Parliament, we will not have the time to understand fully the implications of the changes in the equalization portion of this bill. The provinces will not fully understand the implications of the changes which the government is pushing through the House.

I am not surprised when the government of the day intends to push a legislative measure through the House quickly. But it does concern me when the official opposition, the Conservatives, who fought the oil bill vigorously and demonstrated their capacity to force the government to split a bill, is abandoning the fight when it comes to health and education. The official opposition has demonstrated its capacity to "stop Trudeau" from ramming an important measure through the House. Yet when it comes to fiscal transfer matters affecting health and education for all citizens, the official opposition does not exercise the same strength and power it has demonstrated it has. Why did the Tories not do that for this bill? Why do we not stop the government from rushing this bill through the House?

An hon. Member: Oil before people.

Mr. Keeper: My colleague says oil before people.

This bill is an example of unilateral action. It is the federal government moving without the co-operation of the provinces. It is a demonstration of the fact that the government has completely abandoned the notion of co-operative federalism. It is really acting with a heavy and an arbitrary hand. It is not surprising the Liberals are doing this, but why are the Tories not fighting to stop this from happening? The Tories made a big issue of this when it came to the Constitution. They demonstrated their capacity to stop the government in this House. Yet when it come to the substance of confederation, which is the bread and butter of the financing that will help every family in Canada with regard to its health and education, the Tories are not here to carry on a real battle.

In the final analysis, I am not surprised that the Liberals and the Tories take the same approach to fiscal transfers. Fundamentally, they have the same economic strategy. They have the same approach when it comes to high interest rates, which continue to hurt people.

Mr. McDermid: That is not true at all.

Mr. Keeper: They have the same fixation with regard to the federal deficit.

Mr. McDermid: Start telling the truth.

Mr. Keeper: They have the same approach to public expenditures. I will use an example given by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). He made it quite plain and was very candid with regard to the Tory approach to public expenditures on health and education. He said in effect that he could understand when governments have to take a tough stand regarding transfers to the provinces. That was a candid remark and it demonstrated the Tory approach to public expenditure.

Mr. McDermid: What would you do? Would you give it away? What kind of stance do you take?

Mr. Keeper: The public knows that fundamentally Liberal and Conservatives take the same position when it comes to economic matters and public expenditures. The recent Gallup poll on the economy demonstrated that. The question asked was: "Would there be any difference if the Tories were in office rather than the Liberals?" Over 60 per cent of Canadians said that there would be no difference if the Conservatives were in office rather than the Liberals.

Mr. McDermid: Prove it. Give us a chance.

Mr. Keeper: The Canadian people know that there is no difference between the Tories and Liberals in office.

Mr. Stewart: What a joke. Go across the floor.

Mr. Keeper: Why is this an important issue? Why is Bill C-97 an important matter for this Parliament? Why should we be fighting it tooth and nail? Why should we be "stopping Trudeau" with regard to this unilateral action? We should be doing all of those things because the government, through this legislation, is reducing transfers to provinces for health and education, much needed social services, by the amount of $5.7 billion.

The government has eliminated the revenue guarantee. Previously, this was a guarantee for which the government took great pleasure in taking credit as a contribution to health and education services. Now when the government wants to get rid of it, it is claiming the guarantee has nothing to do with health and education. This bill to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act is a very significant one because it affects services in a crucial area that are available to all Canadians.

This bill is really an attack on medicare. The federal government is pulling out of medicare funding. The federal government is pulling back on its share of medicare expenditures.

Mr. Evans: That is nonsense.

Mr. Keeper: At the same time the government is claiming that it wants strong national standards in health care. The government's action is to pull back on funding, yet its words are "Let's have high national standards".

I think most people will agree that actions speak louder than words and that this Liberal government, through the legislation before the House today, is attacking medicare. By cutting back on the funds available to the provinces for health care, the government is encouraging doctors to extra bill, thereby reducing accessibility to much needed health care in Canada. By this action the government is in fact promoting doctors' strikes because it is reducing the capacity of the provinces to pay for medical services at what doctors feel is a fair rate. It discourages investment and innovation in the health care system.

• (1700)

The preventive measure approach would mean lower costs in the long term, but it requires investment today in order to achieve those objectives. We need the financial wherewithal to establish community clinics. We must be able to experiment with salaries for physicians and not rely solely on the fee-for-service approach. We should be able to move into the area of prenatal and post-natal care. This would have long-term implications for the general health of the population and would reduce health care costs. We should have the funds to be able to experiment with new services for which there is a growing demand, such as home births, while keeping in mind that the infant death rate is much lower in those nations which combine supervised home-birth services along with hospital facilities for high-risk births, as compared with those countries which rely on hospitals only.

This legislation has very serious implications for us all and is a direct attack on medicare and health services. That, however, is not the only implication of this legislation. The Liberal government says it is not really cutting $5.7 billion in transfers. The minister said this was not really a cut. It is, he says, something more in the order of $1 billion because of the fact the government is transferring tax room to the provinces. In other words, the government is pulling out of a taxation field and the provinces will benefit thereby.

Well, let us examine that a little more closely. I ask the question, what tax room? Last November's budget did not lower taxes. It was in fact a real tax grab. Every Canadian knows that because everyone in this country has been hit and in some way hurt by the November budget.

There was a great hue and cry when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) stood up in this House and said he was bringing equity to the taxation system, when in fact experience showed he was attempting to raise revenues and hurting everyone in this country. He reminds me very much of Colbert, finance minister to Louis XIV. Colbert said that the art of raising revenue was to pluck as many feathers from the goose with as little squawking as possible.

The problem with this minister is that he could not pull it off. There was squawking, and deservedly so. Everyone knows that the November budget raised taxes and in no way freed up any real taxation room for the provinces. The Minister of Finance, when he attempted this trick of plucking feathers from the goose, should have kept in mind that this is the twentieth century, not the seventeenth. Perhaps he will do so the next time he plays Colbert to Louis XIV.

What are the implications of these cutbacks? First of all, they force the provinces to raise taxes. In my own province of Manitoba, where a newly elected government is seeking to maintain these services, they will be forced to raise taxes unless this Liberal government shows some heart and provides adequate funding to the provinces. The province of Ontario faces a similar situation and their response to it is to cut services and increase user fees. Taking community colleges here in Ottawa as an example, it is well known that the Ontario government is following a policy of raising tuition fees at the same time as educational programs are being cut. We also know that over the last little while the Ontario government has been moving to a market system in the area of health care. They want hospitals to act as free enterprise institutions, and they have been cutting beds and even closing hospitals. The provinces are doing this because they are forced to as a result of the cuts in transfer payments by this government.

Another area threatened by these cuts is that of post-secondary education. I am sure all members of Parliament have been lobbied very vigorously by members of the Canadian Association of University Teachers over the last little while, and quite legitimately so. They particularly targeted those MPs with universities in their ridings. I met with them and they gave us documentation regarding the implication of these cuts for universities. As an example, they referred to the Avro Arrow. They indicated that by cutting such a technologically sophisticated program the government of the day hurt the economy. That was a good example because it occurred under the Conservative government. This illustrates once again that the Liberals and Conservatives follow fundamentally the same economic strategies and policies with regard to expenditures.

What are the results of these cuts? As far as the universities are concerned, it means larger classes, more impersonal student-teacher relationships, inferior equipment and poor library support for students. Buildings and equipment decay, there is a reduced research capacity and the use of underpaid and part-time teachers. There are new entrance barriers to women and native peoples. Highly competent people are leaving the universities. As an example, a graduate with a B.Sc. in engineering can get a greater income in the private sector than he can as a lecturer or assistant professor at a university. Therefore, what motivation is there for him to work in the university and produce the technically trained people needed to keep the economy strong?

The University of Ottawa delegation which met with me indicated they are hiring at the assistant professor level only. Now, we are not all experts in how universities are run, but they indicated to me that there are four levels of teaching, consisting of a lecturer, assistant professor, associate professor and a full professor. That is the sort of ladder of qualification. The university had been forced to hire at the lower level of assistant professor only. This means that the most highly qualified people are no longer in a position to be hired by universities, and this also means a reduction in the quality of university education. Of course, this affects morale in the universities, which is falling.

These are some very concrete results of this legislation and these cutbacks in transfer payments to the provinces as they affect universities. This indicates a general decline in the quality of universities, particularly since the late sixties and the early seventies when we were investing quite heavily in universities.

Since about 1977, while the quality of our universities has been falling because of the lack of adequate funding from the federal government, the competitive strength of the Canadian economy has also been falling. The reason for this is quite obvious. Because we lose the capacity to produce highly trained technical people, we lose our competitive edge in the world market. These two trends, the decline in the standards of our universities and the decline in the competitive position of the Canadian economy, go side by side. It is time for the government to recognize the direction of this relationship and reverse it.

Another way in which post-secondary education in this country is threatened by these reductions in transfer payments is that for each and every one of us the costs of educating our children are going up. Not only are the costs of education going up, but we are buying cheapened education for our children. A friend of mine calculated what it will cost him to send his daughter to university next year. His four daughters go to university, and it will cost him $5,000 a year. I have three young children, and I must say that the cost of sending children to university deeply concerns me. These costs are rising because of the cutbacks in funding and rising tuition fees. There has been a cheapening of university education itself. How many families could really afford to send two or three children to university at today's price of $5,000 per child? Goodness knows what the price will be tomorrow or the day after.

As a result of these rising costs of education, universities will become less accessible. This will reinforce the inequalities in our society. It will mean that the gap between the poor and the affluent will continue to widen. Universities were once the symbol of hope of this nation for greater social and economic equality. They were once the symbol of hope of many young people who wanted to climb above poverty and become contributing members of society. By these kinds of cutbacks in transfer payments, we are making it less possible for universities to be a symbol of hope, both to the individual person and to society as a whole.

It is not just in the area of universities that we have a worsening condition. The federal government is certainly making public statements with regard to the pulling back of dollars for community colleges. The government indicates that it wants these dollars to go to the private sector instead, to the industries. I would note, quite frankly, that community colleges are provincially administered institutions. It seems to me that pulling money out of the community colleges and putting it directly into private sector firms shows that the real goal being pursued is not better training for people; rather, it is greater political visibility for the federal government of the day, with the clear objective of gaining more seats in this House for Liberal members.

Rather than playing this kind of partisan politics, playing with people's lives, the Liberal government, the government of the day, should begin a program of requiring industry to train people. Right now it simply uses what it calls incentives, but there is no program of mandatory training by industry itself. This could be done. We should remember that only a few days ago we became aware of the fact that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is deliberately seeking to hire some 20,000 to 25,000 skilled workers from abroad at a time when we have over one million unemployed.

Why is he seeking to hire these skilled workers from abroad? It must be because his training programs for skilled occupations in this country are a failure. One of the reasons they are a failure is that we do not make it mandatory for industry to train. We could do this by establishing a grant levy system. This would be a system that would require individual companies within an industry to pay into a fund. Those companies within industry which trained people for skilled occupations could draw from that fund in order to pay for that training. Therefore, rather than taking the approach of pulling money out of the community colleges to give to industry so that the government of the day could have greater political visibility, which is a partisan route, we should be dealing with the social reality. We should be seeking to establish training programs which really work. We could do that by making it mandatory for industry to train for skilled occupations. A system could be set up which would allow for that training to be financed industry-wide, not simply by each individual company.

In dealing with the threat that this bill represents for post-secondary education, I would like to come a little closer to home. I am thinking of my own community of Winnipeg or, if I may be so parochial, my riding of Winnipeg-St. James. I took the trouble to consult with two post-secondary educational institutions in my riding. I must say that I wished that the federal government had done the same thing. I have been asked by people from both institutions to put some of their concerns and views on the record. Perhaps if the federal government, before introducing this legislation to the House, had spoken to people in actual educational institutions, it would have come in with a different sort of legislation and with a different approach. I will specifically refer to the University of Winnipeg and then I will deal with the Red River Community College.

With regard to the University of Winnipeg, it is obvious that I cannot name the officials involved and I have no desire to do that. However, I want to state the feelings of the people involved in the administration and development of programs at the university, as they are key to the university. They quite clearly felt that the university had been underfunded by the previous provincial government, that previous provincial government being, of course, a Progressive Conservative government which was hardly progressive. They indicated that the present Manitoba government, under the cutbacks at the federal level, was offering very large grants to the university. I think it was in the order of a 16 per cent increase. This was being offered by a New Democratic government which was recently elected. The hopes of the people at the University of Winnipeg were that the federal government would cease this cutback approach and would take the route of offering adequate financial support to the provincial government so that the provincial government would be in a position to meet the full needs of the university community and, therefore, of the City of Winnipeg. I am speaking on this issue today in order to express those hopes, because they must find expression some place and they certainly have not found expression on that side of the House.

The people to whom we spoke at the Red River Community College indicated, first, that they really appreciated the opportunity to express their views with regard to this legislation. That once again indicates the lack of consultation by the federal government with people who will be directly affected by the cutting back of funds. The Red River Community College's chief concern was with regard to rumours and implications that have been spread in the press that the community colleges are not doing their job, that somehow the community colleges are not training people for jobs that really exist and are somehow off target.

• (1720)

The people from the universities and colleges can be concerned, but obviously the people who were spreading these notions in the press were political; in fact, they were Liberal political people, members of the present government and cabinet. They were spreading the notion that somehow community colleges were not on target when it came to training people.

The record is quite different. The record shows that despite the fact that we have a slow economic situation right now, the graduates of community colleges have been able to find jobs. A survey conducted last summer by the Manitoba department of labour and manpower shows that 85.9 per cent of the 1980 graduates of the province's three community colleges and of the community college division of St. Boniface College have found jobs. In a tight economy it is very important that community colleges remain responsive to the job market, and the survey with regard to the graduates of the community colleges indicates that those people had found jobs.

I would note specifically that 88.4 per cent of those with jobs had remained in the province. So they did not have to run half-way across the country to find jobs; they found those jobs at home right where they were trained. And 82.7 of those with jobs found jobs related to the field of training. They not only found jobs but jobs for which they were trained. Most of the graduates found their first jobs within five weeks. So they were not hanging around for six months or a year to find a job; they found a job very quickly.

The graduates of Red River College in Winnipeg represent only 2.5 per cent of the unemployment rate among community colleges in Manitoba. In Assiniboine Community College it is zero per cent. These rates are so much lower than the general rate within the community that it indicates how well the community colleges are doing in terms of training people for jobs that exist. They are doing a good job in that way. So that the notion that is being spread by the Minister of Employment and Immigration that the community colleges are not doing their jobs, or are off target and therefore the money should go into private industry, is false.

If we wanted to, we could improve the record of community colleges, in terms of their training of people, by implementing the system of predicting what jobs are going to be available. That is a system proposed by the Canadian Labour Congress. It is a system which will allow for the collection of information from industry about investment plans and resulting job opportunities on a confidential basis. If we want to improve further the capacity of community colleges to be on target with regard to their training, we can do that, rather than going the cheap political route of simply taking moneys from institutions that are provincially administered and putting it into private industry because of the political, visibility.

I wanted to get on record, Mr. Speaker, the concern that some of the local training institutions in my community have with regard to the real cutbacks in funding that are going on and are being promoted by this government.

I want to make another major point, on a more broad level, with regard to the transfers of money from the federal government to the provincial governments. Manitoba is hit very hard. In fact, the province of Manitoba is hit harder than any other province. This is illustrated both by statistics from federal government documents as well as by statistics put out by the provinces themselves. I will give an example.

Over a period of a number of years, five years, on the average the over-all funding for all provinces will go up by 69.8 per cent, whereas for Manitoba it will go up by only 37.2 per cent. So there is a real difference in the way that the provinces are affected. Manitoba, of all the provinces in the country, is hit hardest by these cutbacks. The Province stands out, and I wonder whether this was because, when there was a premier who simply engaged in fed-bashing, this was some attempt to punish that premier for his activity. If that is the reason, I hope the federal government would realize that that premier is no longer the premier of Manitoba.

Common justice would call for some rectification of the over-all impact among the provinces. Why should Manitoba be singled out to be hurt the most by these cutbacks? The federal government should not be brutal. New Democrats in Manitoba will not engage in fed-bashing; we will tell it like it is. Unless there are real changes in these transfers so that Manitoba is treated justly, we will speak out.

As well, this raises some curious questions. Why bother to have a Liberal in this Parliament? We have from Manitoba two Liberal members. We have a Liberal federal cabinet minister from Manitoba. Why does he have no clout in cabinet? How can they justify the fact that Manitoba can be so hard hit? Is it because we have a Liberal cabinet minister? No other province has been hit so hard. It is time to change this formula, to change this transfer payment in a way that will mean that Manitoba is treated fairly with regard to these over-all transfer payments.

Over all, Mr. Speaker, what seems to be happening, as I see it, is that the two provinces that are really getting hard hit are Quebec and Manitoba. By observing the figures I have come to this conclusion, that the federal government is really hurting the two have-not provinces that are in the middle. The provinces that are at the bottom, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, are being hurt; but those in the middle, that are closer to the national average in terms of wealth, are being hit harder. That is because the cutbacks in transfer payments are reducing the number of have-not provinces almost by fiat, in order to save federal government revenues.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this legislation should not go through this House, for some very simple and fundamental reasons. The legislation represents an attack on medicare as a universal system of health care. It is forcing provinces to raise taxes. It is hurting the have-not provinces, in particular Quebec and Manitoba. Certainly it is hurting Manitoba more than any other province. You do not have to seek my advice in regard to this matter, Mr. Speaker. The parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Relations said no to cutbacks in fiscal transfers in the sections of health, post-secondary education and social services. The Economic Council of Canada said no to cutbacks as they affect post-secondary education and health care.

So, Mr. Speaker, I wish that the government would come to its senses—although I hold out no hope of that happening—and stop the cutbacks, adopt a sensible economic strategy, create the wealth that we need to continue the services that we need in this country and bring some sanity back to policies in the federal-provincial relations arena.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, since it is getting late I shall be brief and keep the details for the debate on third reading. According to the members of the opposition, we on this side are talking about cutbacks, and the federal government is supposed to be reducing transfers to the provinces. I feel that they are leaving out part of this mental exercise, which is: how do we assess the federal transfers to the provinces over time?

First of all, how did the transfers start? In 1958, the federal government introduced the hospital insurance program and it was understood with the provinces that it would be a 50-50 shared-cost program. In 1957, a similar program was established for post-secondary education, and in 1968, the shared-cost format was extended to the health sector under a new program, commonly referred to as Medicare. The arrangements were renewed every five years, both for the three established programs and for fiscal equalization. In 1972, we renegotiated the arrangements for 1972-77, and at that time the concept of revenue guarantee was introduced, following the 1971 tax reform. Because the provinces, it was felt at the time, were suffering a loss of revenue as a result of the tax reform, the federal government agreed to compensate them for loss of revenue over the period from 1972 to 1977. In 1977, during negotiations for the period from 1977 to 1982, the federal government was being urged by the provinces to continue the process of decentralization that had been initiated, and it agreed to release the provinces from the obligation to have their accounts and expenditures audited, and approved so-called block funding or established programs financing. At the time, we decided that the federal government would finance 50 per cent of the real cost of expenditures incurred in the three programs during 1976 and that increases for subsequent years would be related to the average GNP growth over the last three years. Finally, we put another sum on the table, while maintaining this obsolete concept which had become totally meaningless, that is, revenue guarantee.

The fiscal arrangements committee did, in fact, make a thorough study of all these negotiations, and when I hear our colleagues on the opposite side, especially those belonging to the New Democratic Party, say that the committee did not recommend any cutbacks, I feel I should read two paragraphs where all committee members were in agreement. The paragraphs appear on page 36, and I quote:

> What is undeniable is that the federal government faces a major budgetary problem in the size of the public debt and corresponding debt service charges. In exercising its unique responsibility for stabilization policy in the post-OPEC period, the federal government—in common with most national governments in the western industralized world—took on massive deficits. Over the remainder of the 1970s, these deficits accumulated to the point where debt service charges now represent 20 per cent of the federal budget, and this share, which is a completely non-discretionary expenditure, is rising.

> Thus the task force considers that the concept of fiscal imbalance requires a careful distinction between a structural problem in the design of the arrangements of confederation, and a problem of budgetary imbalance reflecting political judgements on revenue and expenditure priorities. The federal government is at an interesting intermediate point on the spectrum between these two extremes, a point where a prolonged cyclical budget deficit begins to lead to some aspects of a persistent structural imbalance. The structural problem emerges because the size of the debt accumulated to date begins to constrain to an unacceptable degree the margin of manoeuvre in federal government decisions on fiscal policy.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that all members of the fiscal arrangements committee recognized the constraints on the federal government's margin of manoeuvre at the time, before the MacEachen budget was brought down in November. The seven committee members also clearly recognized that the amount transferred by the federal government to the provinces and referred to as revenue guarantee, as my colleague from Manitoba pointed out with a smile, that none of the provinces ever spent this money on the program, not even the socialist governments we met. None of the provinces applied these amounts to their health or post-secondary education programs, not one. They built roads, they paid for all sorts of things, including patronage, but they never spent the money on established programs, and our colleagues recognized the budgetary and financial constraints with which the federal government had to cope. And now, because we are making reductions—and this represents 6.2 per cent of the total transfers for the three programs—because we are making reductions in amounts that were not being spent on the programs anyway, they say we are cutting back and that we are going to bring about a reduction in essential services and cuts in post-secondary education programs. Mr. Speaker, that is not true, because first of all, since the report was tabled, we have had a budget that is giving the provinces $685 million more per year. So we can subtract $685 million from the cutbacks of $1.2 billion referred to by our friends opposite, and it is quite true that at least the provinces will be able to do what they like with this money.

And what is the situation today in 1982? The fact is, the federal government is paying about 60 per cent of total costs incurred for health and post-secondary education programs. So, Mr. Speaker, I think that members who have been seeing or listening to certain lobby groups should ask the same people who are pressuring us to spend more money on these programs, to put the pressure on the provinces instead of on us.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the concept of revenue guarantee is totally obsolete, because today, the provinces are receiving, not only as a result of the last MacEachen budget but also as a result of new Canadian tax measures, more than they would have if there had been no tax reforms in 1971. It is a little like someone who has a winning ticket and stands to get a certain sum of money for five years, and, when there is no money left at the beginning of the sixth year, starts complaining that society is treating him unfairly.

Mr. Speaker, our friends on the opposite side are talking about cubtacks, but the truth of the matter is that next year, federal transfers to the provinces under these programs will be increasing 6 per cent, rising to an average of 12 per cent during the following four years. That is all I have to say about established programs, since I shall be discussing this aspect in greater detail on third reading.

As far as fiscal equalization payments are concerned, from 1977 to 1982, the federal government paid $61 billion, and from 1982 to 1987, it will be transferring $104 billion. Here again, equalization payments will increase at a rate of 12 per cent annually, including the first year. I really do not know what kind of arithmetic or mathematical or metric or whatever system these people are using to calculate the figures I have here, Mr. Speaker, but in my book, when transfers are being increased at a rate of 12 per cent a year, how can you call this a reduction in the amounts being offered by the federal government?

As far as my own province, the province of Quebec, is concerned, it will continue to receive about one third of total transfers. In terms of equalization payments, in previous years, for instance last year, Quebec received $4.1 billion and this year it received $4.7. And then Mr. Parizeau comes and tells us that transfer payments to Quebec are being reduced. Mr. Speaker, that is a lot of hot air, and I feel provincial governments should first put their own administrative house in order and balance their own budgets before they criticize federal transfer payments, which are actually going up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Madam Speaker: It being past six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6.08 p.m., the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

FARM CREDIT ACT
FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain) moved:

That Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, be amended in Clause 8 by adding immediately after line 31 at page 4 the following:

"(1.1) For greater certainty, the expression 'bonds' referred to in subsection (1) includes 'small business development bond'."

He said: Mr. Speaker, Parliament has allowed these amendments to the Farm Credit Act to go through second reading. They have been through committee and now they are at the report stage. I do not intend to repeat tonight the great value this act has been to farmers in the last 20-odd years, as I think almost everyone in the House must be aware of that fact. I agree completely with the minister when he says that the future of agriculture is ahead of us, with the world demanding so much of what we can produce from our land, water and air. It is absolutely essential that we have enough capital and the borrowing power of the nation to push forward this winning type of industry, agriculture, to make certain that we do not fail, and that the expansion of this industry continues.

When I talk about the expansion of industry, I think the minister is aware that what I am talking about is not just agriculture as we have known it, but agriculture of an altogether new type; intensive agriculture whereby we produce so much more from the same amount of land and utilize it in many different ways. I do not intend to elaborate on that. I think it is new to many people, but it is not new to the people looking at the future of agriculture.

These amendments which we have already dealt with at second reading and in committee are mostly housekeeping. They are useful housekeeping amendments. However, there is one amendment I mentioned at second reading debate and I want to put it on the record again so that it is clear. In my experience, it is almost a miracle the minister was able to get this amendment into the legislation. I am saying this clearly and deliberately because it is very important for us in Parliament to fulfil our obligations to the agricultural industry. We have to make certain that the agricultural industry has access to sufficient capital at low enough interest rates to make development possible.

I shall read the section again so that the record of what I say now is complete. Hon. members have heard the amendment at report stage which I have just moved, through you, Mr. Speaker. I shall now read the section of the act I want to amend. This is Section 13(1) in the act, and is the eighth amendment in the bill. I hope every member and every person within the sound of my voice hears this amendment. What it says is revolutionary. It reads as follows:

> The corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means, including issuing and selling bonds, debentures, notes and other evidences of indebtedness of the corporation.

• (2010)

Why is that so revolutionary? Because for the first time the Farm Credit Corporation can be weaned of dependency on the Consolidated Revenue Fund. In the past, when we needed to put more money into the agricultural sector of the country through the FCC, we had to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) if we could increase the capital, and then borrow the money to lend to farmers. At the present stage of federal government finances, by any ordinary measurement, the government has to be considered bankrupt, if the ratio of debt to assets is considered, yet we have for the first time to my knowledge an agency of the Crown, the FCC, able to go out and borrow money by any means, and from any source in order to assist farmers to carry out their function. That part of the clause, "by any means" is the main subject of my remarks tonight.

I have congratulated the minister for being able to get that clause in. It bears out the statement he made last year after we on this side of the House made a series of proposals on how to get more money into the agricultural industry. The minister will remember that one proposal was to use the FCC as a type of bank and let all sources of capital lend money to it. Prior to this it was mainly the Consolidated Revenue Fund which provided the money. It could in theory borrow money, but now we have it laid down; it can borrow "by any means".

Tonight I have moved an amendment which says, in effect, that what I have just described as possible, "by any means", should be clarified by a simple amendment in the Queen's English so no one can misunderstand it. The amendment as it appears in the Order Paper says:

> For greater certainty, the expression "bonds" referred to in subsection (1) includes "Small Business Development Bond".

In the bill which amends the act it says:

> The corporation may—

It says "may" not "shall":

> —with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means—

It mentions bonds in general.

Why, then, do I put so much emphasis on this amendment? I want to describe my bitter experience, and I imagine most people in this House will have sympathy. I have mentioned already that we would like the principle of the small business development bond stated in clear English in this amendment so that those who draft regulations and get them approved cannot overlook that principle. Why is that so important? I, like others such as the hon. member for Moose Jaw(Mr. Neil), proposed some time ago that we use the FCC under this clause to provide income-averaging annuity contracts to individuals across Canada. If the Minister of Finance is going to throw that out of the budget, we will put it right back into the farm legislation, because it would attract capital to the FCC.

The bill has another important part which has a bearing on what I am going to talk about. The capital of the corporation has been raised from $150 million to $225 million. That is only important if you realize that under the Farm Credit Act for every dollar of capital you are allowed to lend $25. When this bill proposes to add $75 million to the corporation's capital, it really means that the FCC will now be able to lend roughly an additional $2 billion at any given time. That is a substantial amount of money, so the FCC must have access to the money in order to lend it out.

We all recognize that the Minister of Finance cannot even begin to provide $2 billion. He has enough trouble already with this huge deficit, and he has gone out on behalf of the government and borrowed money at 19.5 per cent. He is not going to dole that out in large amounts to farmers or to anyone else. The facts are very simple: since the government does not have the money, how fortunate it is that this bill will give the right to the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow money from other sources, by any means.

Here comes the crunch. Mr. Speaker, you and I are not lawyers. All my life when it comes to running government I have had to fight lawyers. These fellows are highly trained, ten times smarter than I am, and they come along and undo everything I want done. They are not going to distinguish between me—they had their crack at me 20 years ago—and the present minister. Their function in life is to put into words things that you think mean so and so, but in practice can mean something else.

I speak with great feeling on this subject. When I look back over all the mistakes I have made, both in administration and putting legislation into effect, in nearly every case they occurred because I allowed myself to be talked into something by a fast talking lawyer. When you look at this bill, Mr. Speaker, and you see that it says the corporation can borrow money "by any means", you will look then ask what that means? The lawyers will say it means anything you want it to mean. We are all lawyers here and "by any means" means "by any means"; that is plain English. However, the catch is the word "may". That word "may" is what undoes it all. Therefore, I would like to put on record things which have actually happened in the House over the last 25 years which will prove my point, that we should be careful whenever we see the word "may" in a section, when put there by legal draftsmen who say that "may" covers everything, including "by any means".

• (2020)

What are the facts? In 1959 I had something to do with drafting the new type of legislation dealing with the National Energy Board. Weeks and weeks of time were devoted by the legislative committee to dealing with just one of the sections. It stated that the board being set up "may" make recommendations, present new ideas and report to government. I said, "you may do it". I was a minister. I wanted the word "shall" put in: "The National Energy Board shall recommend and propose and warn the government". We had just gone through a disastrous ten years dealing with these large American companies coming in and taking over our energy industry. I did not want to repeat those mistakes. I wanted the best board we could get to keep the government informed of what was going on. I wanted that word "shall".

The beautiful and charming people who advised the ministers, with all of their law degrees and fast talk, said, "It is not necessary to put the word 'shall' in as 'may' will cover everything you could possibly wish or want". How could an ordinary minister or politician cope with this charm and elegance? It went through, and that was in 1959. I give this warning in all seriousness to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

In 1972, I asked the National Energy Board, through a committee of this House, why it had not carried out its function of recommending as laid down in the act. The board had two functions. One was its judicial and administrative function and the other was to recommend and keep the government informed. Its answer was that there did not seem to be too much approval from government colleagues. They did not want advice. I thought it was a great triumph when I got the new chairman of the board to agree, in committee, that he would do all he could to carry out this second function of the National Energy Board and tell the government what was going on. What was the result?

The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources which was formerly the department of mines and technical surveys, had its title changed a couple of times. The minister in charge of that department took the information put before him by his own department, information gathered from all the companies operating in North America and around the world, and he went out and said, "There is enough oil and gas in Canada to last us for hundreds of years, if not a thousand years". He was not a dishonest man. He was a normal, little, country lawyer from Arnprior who believed the information that was put before him.

Then you should have heard all the clowns laugh. They said, "The man does not know what he is talking about. We have no oil. We have no gas. We are going to run out." All the turkeys and the chickens were running in all directions and we had this fraudulent national energy crisis. They said: "Break the Constitution", and they did. We were in an emergency. The government wanted to smash through the Constitution and take away the power from the provinces. Sure, they covered it up with nice words: "We are going to share with these people in Alberta, B.C., and Saskatchewan." The politicians got so frightened, because they had nothing before them except this report which came from the oil companies, that they panicked. So we broke the Constitution. Then it became popular to say that we had no oil or gas and that we were in an emergency, a crisis. Even the Supreme Court judges ruled that there was an emergency. When the leaves were falling on the chickens' heads, they ran around and told the whole world the sky was falling, and even the Supreme Court believed it.

What is the truth concerning energy? This is the year 1982. All the people in the world have a surplus of gas, a surplus of oil, a surplus of every type of energy. We did not know the facts soon enough. The National Energy Board, a few competent people, systematically and carefully worked year after year to discover the real situation. The minister who gave the prognostication of the future is dead. The sad part of the matter is that he went to his death with everyone thinking he was a fool because he said there was energy in this country for a thousand years. The truth is that he was not a fool. The truth is that there is energy for a thousand years—much more energy in this country than we know about. We do not even have a group of people in Canada today who have enough confidence to tell us the energy future. All we know is that the supply is many times, thousands of times, greater than what we imagined 20 years, or even ten years ago. We have the expertise.

Governments all over the world are looking to the skies and the whole universe trying to find access to energy when the stuff is right here. Look at the work we are doing on fusion energy. We targeted fusion energy for the year 2020. We are ahead of schedule. It looks like we will be there ten years ahead of schedule. But these are expensive forms of energy. The ordinary stuff is all around. I am simply using that as an example.

No parliamentarian or minister in his right mind should ever let lawyers get away with that word "may" when Parliament means "shall". I am trying to clarify, for the protection of all politicians, that when we must deal with legislation, let us learn from our mistakes. I am not saying that this matter on farm credit is as vital to the health of the nation as knowing something about the energy situation. I am simply saying, now that we have learned from bitter experience, we should not prohibit a group of people from getting together to do the job they were supposed to do because we used the word "may".

To use another phrase, if I may say so, civil servants have learned from bitter experience that one must never make a mistake. The only way one can be sure of not making a mistake is to never do anything. They have a name for that. When one does make a mistake, they say, "CYA". Hon. members know that the first two words are "Cover your", and I will let hon. members decide what the "A" means. Let us not make the same mistake in this particular bill by inserting the word "may". Let us put in a few sharp definitions that even the lawyers and the people who draft the regulations cannot get around. We want to let them know, without any fooling around, what Parliament wants them to do. We are backing up the minister and making use of this legislation.

I do not know how many examples I will use here, but I can deal with this very quickly. Most hon. members in this House who have been here since 1972 or 1973 know that we passed a bill, supported by all parties, which stated that any child under the age of 16 could receive family allowance regardless of the financial circumstances of the parents. Whether the parents were millionaires or paupers, a child up to the age of 16 could receive family allowance. A child who went to school could receive family allowance up to the age of 18 without regard to the wealth of the parents.

That is what parliament did unanimously nearly ten years ago. Here we sit in 1982 and know, or some of us know, that orphans are not accepted, that teenage girls who get pregnant are not accepted. Parliament put nothing in there about discriminating against orphans; Parliament put nothing in there about discriminating against teenage girls who get pregnant. That is the time they need the help when they are going to school. Yet that crime is laid at our doorstep here in the House.

I feel sorry for a minister who has to stand, like that minister who said a few days ago that she should take it up with her colleagues on the Treasury Board, or whatever group she was in or in some committee, because that is where the discrimination against orphans exists, but they could not do anything about it as they did not have any money. As soon as they get the money she says they will do something about it. The blame for that does not lie with the ministers alone; it lies with us as Members of Parliament, knowing that this is happening over and over again, because experts on legal language draft our legislation, make these mistakes, and we cannot see through it. Things can be done over and over again through regulations that turn our ideas all around. Therefore, I make an appeal to all parliamentarians to be kind to ministers.

When we have a chance like this to propose an amendment that does have so much potential, let us make sure no one unpsets it in the drafting of regulations which are then put before Treasury Board, cleared there, and resulting in an order in council. We all know about the machinery and how difficult it is to look at everything carefully. How I would hate to see this very good piece of legislation reduced by the power to make regulations which interpret the words "borrow money" to mean "borrow at the market rate".

We have all sorts of devices for getting money below the market rate. What is the Small Business Development Bond? I do not mean the Small Business Development Bond as talked about in the budget, I mean the Small Business Development Bond principle, which says that if you lend money for a worthwhile purpose to such and such an agency, you are not to be taxed on your income from that loan.

If I lend $1,000 on the principle of the Small Business Development Bond to the Farm Credit Corporation, I know this will only give me 8 per cent on my money. That is just as good to me as lending it out on the market at 16 per cent, because I know I will not be taxed. We have had this principle in Canada since the First World War. It is used extensively and continuously in many states of the American union, and it has been used since 1979 through the Small Business Development Bond under the Income Tax Act.

Let us put in clear-cut English what this bond means, and that it includes any other type of bond. Then, if people want to lend their money on the principle of the Small Business Development Bond, they will know they will not have to pay tax on their income from that bond. They are then quite willing to accept half the dollar interest rate because they know they will not be taxed.

The Farm Credit Corporation will be able to act just like a bank, getting its money not only from farmers but from anyone who wants to lend at half interest rates. The corporation can then turn it over to farmers at roughly the same rate; a half per cent or one per cent more.

I cannot say that this measure will answer all the problems, but I almost guarantee that the minister will have access to millions of dollars in this way, making his life a lot happier; much happier than if he had to rely on a few million dollars from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I am not going to bother giving the other example I had, Mr. Speaker, because this matter was settled to my satisfaction some years ago. Parliament decreed that we should not tax other governments or municipalities which are spending money for worth-while purposes, like education, building roads, and so on: yet we have regulations in effect in Canada under which we tax municipalities who are spending money on vehicles for educational purposes. Parliament never meant that, but we went on, because we were slaphappy in the way we drafted the legislation, accepting the word of the lawyers that "may" will cover everything. That is not learning from our mistakes.

In conclusion, I made my case on second reading that the principle of the Small Business Development Bond should be used where the word "bonds" appears. Latterly, I sought legal advice from the House and from other sources as to what was necessary, and in every case I was told the language was clear enough; that the minister "may", or the corporation "may", borrow by any means—that you do not need any more clarification. I say I was fooled by that type of language before and I am not going to be fooled again. Draft me a regulation which will make it absolutely certain that they will consider the principle of the Small Business Development Bond.

The amendment you have before you does not quite say it like that. It says, "for greater certainty", and there are many precedents for that type of thing in our legislation, "the exression 'bond' referred to in subsection (1) includes Small Business Development Bond." What I mean there, and I want this to be written into the record so it will be just like the legislation, is that it refers to the principle of the Small Business Development Bond. I do not know any other way of writing it except the way I say it here.

The principle is clear. It is not the principle of the November 12 budget, which said that Small Business Development Bonds would only be given to persons in dire straits or in business difficulties. I want them available to any person on the simple principle that when you are investing your money in worth-while social purposes you will be glad to do it at half the interest rates as long as you know that the money is passed on at half interest rates.

This may be considered redundant by the lawyers, but I am asking Parliament to put its foot down and back up the minister. Give him his clauses as they are here. "For greater certainty" means just this. I wish some of my colleagues even on the government side would stand up and make an amendment that income-averaging annuity techniques qualify where it says "by any other means", its should say, "for greater certainty this means income averaging-annuity contracts."

Since we cannot now have IAAC under the present budget, let us have it under the Farm Credit Corporation. Let us say that of the millions of dollars invested in the Farm Credit Corporation, when some farmer sells off his cattle and wants to spread his income over five years or ten years, he can invest his money in the Farm Credit Corporation at half interest rates and pay his tax each year as he gets his income. Let the Farm Credit Corporation do its duty, get access to all the money it needs, through a principle under which no one suffers, and everyone benefits. Thus we will help the minister by putting this so-called redundant amendment of mine in the legislation. I do not think it will be ruled out of order, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of precedent. It can only be ruled out of order under the "con" arguments of a lawyer who tries to say it is already cleared up, when we know from the history of the last 20 years that it is not clear.

We have a committee called the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. It hears hundreds of cases like those I have enunciated here. It tries to put them on the Order Paper to get something done about them; but for every one mistake it finds, there are hundreds that never get action. Let us not add to the mistakes of this Parliament—and they are many—in this particular case. The minister does have a good bill, he does have a good organization here in the Farm Credit Corporation, but he lacks the money to do what he wants to do, with an interest rate under which it would be possible to make farming pay. I am sure the government will back him. All we are doing is putting a little crimp into those smart guys who draft the regulations and attempt to tell us that this was not necessarily directed by Parliament. That word "may" does not force them to do anything. Therefore, I am asking for co-operation from all members of the House in having this amendment accepted. The amendment is not expressing the view of just one political party or another, it is really speaking on behalf of all members, members who may some day be ministers and have the job of administering laws that Parliament has passed, only to be scuttled by an abuse which comes from the misuse of the word "may", and the particular language which we have to follow in the legislation. I hope other amendments of the same nature will come forward. I hope this amendment will be accepted.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, later on I will touch on the presentation made by the hon. member concerning this bill. As Minister of Agriculture I must admit that I agree with much of what he says. I also have the legal advisers which he talked about, and ministers who are not lawyers, but have to make decisions, still have to depend on them to some extent. I will touch on that point later.

It gives me great pleasure to address the House on this most important topic, the amendment to the Farm Credit Act. We have had occasion in the House and in the standing committee to thoroughly discuss and present our views as Members of Parliament on this subject. It gives me great satisfaction to note the general unanimity of support given to this bill and to the work of the Farm Credit Corporation, which is apparent if one reads the speeches in the House or the minutes of the committee. The interest and support expressed by Members of Parliament is a direct reflection of that expressed in the farming community. Credit has become the most critical issue to the survival of many producers today. Therefore, I see it as vital to agriculture that the Farm Credit Corporation be allowed to expand its access to funds.

Many related topics were put forward by members during our deliberations. These concerns cannot all be reflected in this piece of legislation, but I wish to assure members that I have taken note of them. Bill C-88 is an integral part of the total approach the government will be developing as part of the agri-food strategy.

I would now like to take a few moments to recapitulate the main points being proposed in Bill C-88. Clause 8 provides the Farm Credit Corporation with the authority to borrow from sources other than the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The hon. member who just spoke made reference to this step as being a giant step forward. The Farm Credit Corporation is currently funded entirely by loans from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This amendment would allow FCC to complement these borrowings with funds from the financial markets. In addition to bonds or debentures, special investment instruments could be offered which could be especially attractive to farmers, particularly retiring farmers who wish to retain their investments in agriculture.

Total long-term credit extended to farmers from all sources in Canada has risen by over 20 per cent annually from an estimated $655 million in 1975 to an estimated $1.9 billion in 1980. Until recently, the FCC supplied over 70 per cent of all long-term farm credit extended. In 1980, the Farm Credit Corporation extended 26 per cent of the total long-term credit and was expected to extend about 20 per cent in 1981. Budgetary restraints, rapidly increasing capital values and changing economic conditions haved placed additional pressures on the Farm Credit Corporation to meet the growing demand for long-term credit. The amendment to allow the corporation to borrow from the financial markets will help the corporation to meet this demand for increased funds. Through time, as the mechanisms for borrowing are put in place and the corporation establishes itself in the financial markets, a progressively larger proportion of its funds could be obtained directly from the financial markets.

Clause 7 would increase the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation from $150 million to $225 million. The corporation's borrowing authority is limited to 25 times the capital—that is in Section 13 of the act. The maximum borrowing authority will be reached early in 1982-83. This amendment would thus increase the corporation's borrowing authority from $3.75 billion to $5.625 billion.

Clause 2(2) relates to the expansion of the definition of farming to include any other husbandry activity prescribed by the corporation. As currently defined in the act, farming includes livestock raising, beekeeping, dairying, fruit growing and all tillage of the soil. In addition to the activities currently defined as farming, this amendment would authorize the corporation to prescribe in writing any other husbandry activity as farming for the purposes of the act.

The present definition is inclusive and creates some ambiguity. With agricultural practices changing and new and varied enterprises being introduced, the amendment would allow the corporation to designate husbandry activities as "farming," as required. Since these entreprises are often high risk, it is often difficult for farmers to obtain appropriate private sector financing. With the flexibility provided by the proposed definition, the Farm Credit Corporation can more adequately address the needs of those venturing into new and changing production practices.

Clauses 19 and 20 remove the present 35-year age limitation for loans to phase in farmers and remove the requirement for life insurance in the case of certain of these loans. The Farm Credit Act presently gives the FCC the authority to make loans to applicants under 35 years of age when farming is not their principal occupation, but intend to make farming their principal occupation within five years of receiving the loan. This restriction is considered to be incompatible with the spirit of the Canadian Human Rights Act. Removal of the restriction would allow applicants of any age to participate in the phase-in program.

Clause 11 provides the authority for the corporation to disperse up to 30 per cent of a loan on the basis of acceptable security until such time as the mortgage registration and other security requisites for the loan are completed. At present, the Farm Credit Corporation makes loans on the security of mortgages on farm lands or farm lands and chattels. Currently, no mortgage advance is made unless the mortgage registration is completed in accordance with provincial requirements. This amendment would help to meet the needs of more farmers since the corporation would be able to disperse up to 30 per cent of the loan before the long process of mortgage documentation is completed.

Again, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) said, many times it is lawyers who are putting it on the back burner and not really handling it as fast and efficiently as we would like to see. But there are circumstances which sometimes do not allow them to move as fast as they could.

The dispersement of a portion of a loan prior to mortgage registration would save farmers the cost and inconvenience of interim financing until the mortgage funds from the corporation are available. For example, this would assist farmers who must make a payment to initiate a land transaction or to make a cash payment to a building supplier to take advantage of a discount. There are other ways in which this could be an advantage, but I will not touch on them now.

Clause 9 provides that the corporation, with the approval of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), may maintain accounts in its own name in any bank or financial institution in or out of Canada. The corporation presently is limited to maintaining accounts in its own name in the Bank of Canada or in chartered banks designated by the Minister of Finance. This amendment would provide more banking flexibility which would improve the cash management opportunities of the corporation and its financial performance.

For example, should the Farm Credit Corporation at some time be able to borrow Canadian dollars at a lower rate of interest in the Eurobond market than in the Canadian financial markets, this banking flexibility would allow the FCC to make the necessary banking arrangements to accommodate the administration of such transactions.

A further amendment set forth in this bill provides that the maximum amount of a loan which may be oustanding to an applicant or applicants be prescribed by regulation rather than in the act. Currently, the limits specified in the act are $200,000 when there is one qualifying applicant in a farming enterprise, and $400,000 when there is more than one. It is no secret that financing of farming operations is getting more and more expensive all the time. Many people do not realize this. If the Farm Credit Corporation is to meet the needs of modern agriculture, it must have the flexibility to adjust the loan maximum upwards when necessary. Transferring the loan limits from the act to regulation will provide an opportunity for the corporation to respond more quickly to changing agricultural conditions. At this time we are proposing to increase these limits to $300,000 for one qualifying applicant, and $500,000 when there is more than one applicant.

Part II of the bill represents the authority needed by the Farm Credit Corporation to rebate five percentage points on loans made under the special farm financial assistance program. This authority will allow me to obtain the funds through the departmental estimates.

I would like to take this opportunity to report on this program which ends on Wednesday of this week, March 31. As of March 15 the Farm Credit Corporation had approved $44.7 million of the $45.4 million allocation to the program. That does not sound like a magnificent sum, but it represents tremendous importance to 368 borrowers.

The breakdown by region is as follows: British Columbia, 15 loans, $3,347,200; Alberta, 20 loans, $4 million; Saskatchewan, 48 loans, $5,610,290; Manitoba, 42 loans, $5,998,800; Ontario, 123 loans, $15,362,500; Quebec, 82 loans,$6,954,800; the Atlantic provinces, 38 loans, $3,240,700. The total is $44,514,290. We know that the balance of the program will be used up or has been spoken for already. This progrm reflects only a part of a special effort of the government to provide assistance to farmers in serious financial difficulty.

The small business bond has been extended to a great number of farmers who would not have had access to these lower interest rate loans from the banks prior to the budget announcement. In a number of cases the farmers' problems were solved by a combination of the two programs. We were successful in many instances where the Farm Credit Corporation, the farmer and the local bank manager worked out a very good program. Where the Farm Credit Corporation lent the maximum to the individual, the small business bond would be used by the banker in many cases. This happened in not nearly as many cases as we would have liked, but it did in many cases. I have only touched on the highlights of the bill to re-emphasize the impact of this legislation.

In response to the hon. member's motion to amend Section 13(1), I would like to point out—the hon. member will dispute this, as some other hon. members will—that this section presently allows the FCC to borrow by any means and does not exclude the concept of Small Business Development Bond. However, after listening to the hon. member, I can understand that his amendment is somewhat different from just Small Business Development Bond. As I understand this amendment, the hon. member would like to see the FCC borrow funds by issuing bonds—not necessarily small business bonds—to investors. Because the return to the investors would be given special tax consideration, the cost of funds to the FCC would be reduced. The benefit of the lower costs of funds could then be transferred to farmers who would borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation. My advisers say this would require amendments to the current—

Mr. Towers: Tell your advisers where to go.

Mr. Whelan: —small business bond, if we were to use that concept, for instance, which is limited to a maximum of $500,000. However, I know from what the hon. member has said already that it is quite different from using the small business bond. The concept of using a bond would not have any limitations on borrowing from the private sector and letting a farmer transfer the funds into the Farm Credit Corporation, for example, if he sold property, livestock or whatever.

We have already received one letter of objection from a lending institution in Canada saying we would probably dry up the money market. That objection was from the head of the credit unions in Canada. He was not saying that for sure, but he was expressing some doubt as to whether we would be attracting too much away from that operation. That is the only organization which has made that representation to me.

For the FCC to obtain substantial funds under such a program, individual investor limits would have to be increased substantially so that the FCC could obtain $250 million to $300 million annually under the program, in addition to approved CRF funding.

I think the proposal certainly has potential. I do not know how long we will be reviewing this, but it has been, and is being reviewed by officials. However, because Section 13(1) does not exclude what the hon. member is suggesting, the amendment as suggested is not necessary, again according to my legal advisers. In either case, the concept of the small business bond would require complementary amendments, I am told, of the Income Tax Act, to be operational.

Mr. Mayer: So do it anyway.

Mr. Whelan: Based on the positive comments I have heard from various members, and because of the urgency of this legislation, I urge hon. members to give consideration to speedy passage of Bill C-88.

I want to say something again about what the hon. member has proposed. He has dealt further tonight with what he wants to do with this. I do not think he and I disagree very much. My advisers tell me that I have the authority to move into the bond market and so forth, but moving in such a way would mean granting the corporation more authority than has ever before been granted any corporation. We want to make sure we are doing this right.

I had a meeting with the minister of agriculture of the province of Ontario today, and one of the things he is concerned about is where I am at, where the government is at or where Parliament is at with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation bill. The province of Ontario has a program to provide for immediate cash flow, but the provincial government sees a need for the national lending institution to move long-term credit. We had discussions about long-term credit, how much is being used in Canada today and who is making it possible. I think he agreed—although he might not have put it in such language as to say he was agreeing with me 100 per cent—that the private lending institutions have not understood rural Canada when it comes to long-term credit. A good many farmers in difficulty are farmers who, if they had been given really long-term credit at reasonable rates of interest, would not be in the difficulty they are in today.

Again I come back to the Farm Credit Corporation. That corporation probably has more ability, knowledge and experience in understanding agriculture and rural Canada than any other lending institution, because that has been its job since it was conceived and put together. We want more money. We want the corporation to move back into lending. We would like it to be lending not just 20 per cent of long-term money but perhaps 60 per cent in the next year or at least the next two years.

We would like the corporation to recoup its position as the main lender. We would like the corporation to lend not just to those in dire straits, and not just to be the lender of last resort, but to lend to farmers—I believe the hon. member said this—for any need in rural Canada. If we can raise this kind of money, then I am sure what the hon. member opposite has said and what I have said about the future of agriculture and the challenge that exists in agriculture is true. It is going to need the kind of lending program, the kind of institution that understands the situation so it can forge ahead and provide the kind of financial lending program necessary for farmers.

In Canada today there are 320,000 farmers and it is forecast that within the next 18 years 425,000 farmers will be needed to produce the food that is necessary, not only to look after our expanding population but also to take care of the needs of millions of people in other parts of the world. Canada is one of the few countries which can undertake to do that. We have the ability, the land, the technology and the scientific information that is necessary.

Many countries, big and small, developed and developing, are envious of our agricultural production. They are amazed at what we do in this land of ice and snow. They might be more amazed, Mr. Speaker, at what we could do if we pass this bill speedily. If we could do that, then we could provide the things that are necessary for agriculture, and by helping agriculture, help all of society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the hon. minister accept a question from the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton)?

Mr. Whelan: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is very short. The minister mentioned that there had been some protest from private enterprise, regarding credit unions. Apparently private enterprise feels that if we establish the Small Business Development Bond, that is, borrowing at half interest rates and lending at half interest rates, the tremendous amount of money this would generate could dry up the commercial market. As a politician, would the minister not agree that this really is what is necessary—to throw the fear of God into the financial institutions so that they could then provide some real competition in the provision of credit to agriculture.

I should like the minister's response to that suggestion. Why not put my suggestion into written form and scare the hell out of them and get some real competition going in lending money to farmers?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better to scare the hell out of them than anything else. The hon. member has expressed concern about the amount of money that would be attracted. I was amazed that he paid that much attention to what we said. I believe he referred to what we said in committee. I repeated the proposition of raising money by special concessions made to people who invest in the Farm Credit Corporation—giving them a tax break. They would receive a lower rate of interest but would not be taxed on it. Perhaps the hon. member was expressing a personal opinion when he said he thought this would attract too much money into one area. I do not think we ever had that idea, but if I could have as much money as is needed to take care of a national farm lending program, then I see nothing wrong with that.

Other countries are trying to make their inefficient agricultural industries better and Japan is an example of that. In that country money is lent to farmers at 3.5 per cent interest. Of course there are very few large farms in Japan; the average size of the farm there is about 2.5 hectares.

The principle appeals to me, Mr. Speaker, but I do not know if we would go as far as he suggests, although I think we could with this legislation. The hon. member disagrees with me and my advisers; he does not think we can go that far and scare the living hell out of them. I do not see too much wrong with that.

I have a long association with co-operatives, Mr. Speaker. When we started co-operative insurance in Ontario through the CIAG, the whole idea was to assist rural people. When the co-operatives got into the money market, however, they moved into the urban areas. I was an agent and a director of that company. It is one of the largest, all lines insurance companies in Ontario at the present time, if not the largest. It has some rural mortgages in Ontario but most of the company's money is invested in the same places that other insurance companies invest so that it can operate in competition with them. A co-operative insurance company is taxed in the same way as any other insurance company. It does not benefit from special taxing privileges as some people believe. It is taxed in the same way as any private insurance company. I do not know if I have answered the hon. member but we do not disagree too greatly.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to speak to the amendment to the Farm Credit Corporation Act offered by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) in which he attempts to clarify the language contained in the act. I think the minister has given the reaction of the legal profession to that amendment. I am not going to spend too much time arguing for or against the need for clarity in the language of the act. Generally speaking, I think bills such as the one before us should provide a fair amount of flexibility to the lending institution so it can meet the borrowing needs of farmers. Those needs change very drastically from time to time and I will come to that point later in my remarks.

I should like to comment on some of the argument which occurred in the past few minutes between the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) regarding the reaction of some of the financial institutions to the concept of the small business bond or the agribond or whatever name is attached to the credit instrument that is being proposed. I am aware that some of the credit unions are concerned about the use of the bond for the Farm Credit Corporation.

Most hon. members who are present this evening know that to a great extent credit unions get their financing from deposits by people in rural communities. A great many of the deposits in prairie Canada—and I am informed that this is so in Quebec and the maritimes—come from retired farmers. Because they are part of the community and because they believe in the credit union movement and the development of their community through co-operation, they put the proceeds of the sale of their farms back into the credit union. In many instances the credit union lends the funds to the next generation of farmers. This is what most of us have in mind for the agribond or the small business bond concept as it would apply to the Farm Credit Corporation. I think most of us see the financing of agriculture ideally as coming from the retiring generation of farmers who, to a large extent, help finance the new generation of farmers.

We think the problem is not whether the Farm Credit Corporation will receive the deposits that credit unions cannot receive. The problem should be more properly addressed at the level of the Income Tax Act. When this becomes possible, it will be of very little difference to farmers, who are investing or retiring, in which institution they decide to invest moneys from the sale of their businesses. We think that the Income Tax Act should be changed in such a way that it would benefit farmers, whether they use the Farm Credit Corporation or local credit unions. It would strictly become a choice as to which lending institutions they choose to invest money in. There would be no violent shifts in the lending patterns of rural Canadians. The coming generation would have an enlarged pool of capital from which to borrow money to set up business.

All of us in the House recognize the importance of increased amounts of money being made available to farmers, particularly beginning farmers or those who want to expand fairly small operations. We should spend a few moments this evening looking at the real problem in agriculture which developed over the last eight to ten years. I do not think it is strictly one of farmers being short of finances or borrowing power. Rather than strictly a shortage of funds, we in fact have a farm income crisis which is worsening at an ever-increasing rate. If legislators do not start to address the real problem, no amount of increase in funds to the Farm Credit Corporation or to any other lending institution will cure the problem. The disease is becoming rampant. Net farm incomes across the country have remained relatively the same since 1974. I do not think any other segment of our economy would have to admit to that, but realized net income in the case of Canadian agriculture in 1974 amounted to $3.5 billion. In 1980 it was $9.3 billion. In 1981 it rose to $4 billion, but in 1982 it is expected to drop to $3.4 billion, which is slightly lower than it was in 1974.

In intervening years incomes did not slide very much. In this era farm prices have not risen as fast as their costs. This is not new to agriculture, but it is catching up. Admittedly in that period of time there was rapid inflation in the value of farm assets. In 1974 there was approximately $40 billion in capital tied up in the Canadian agricultural industry. In 1980, according to the figures provided by the Department of Agriculture, those assets approached $100 billion. We see that the value of capital has increased about three times.

From a banking point of view agriculture has been a good bet. The value of assets continues to grow rapidly. Although the amount of money lent by banks and lending institutions has increased rapidly, they feel fairly secure because the market value of the collateral provided by farmers has risen faster. In 1974 there was almost $7 billion of farm debt. In 1980, the last year for which figures are available, it jumped to $16 billion. Approximately $1.8 billion to $2 billion per year of extra debt is accruing to the farm community because incomes do not cover all costs. This is not a healthy situation.

There are other ways to look at investment in agriculture. Turning to 1974 once again, and looking at returns on equity, the amount of income from the collective investment of farmers in agriculture was 10.9 per cent. We must understand what the return on equity figure covers. It does not cover any labour provided by farmers or their families. It does not provide any return for their management capabilities. It is simply a total return which they probably saw as return for labour and management. It is not the method of bookkeeping an average corporation would use, but it gives an idea of what has happened in the last eight years.

In 1974 the return on investment hovered around 10 per cent. In 1980 the return on investment, not counting labour or management abilities, was something under 4 per cent. The estimate for 1982 is not the return on investment Canadian Pacific expects. Unfortunately there are no economists in the Department of Agriculture to perform an analysis of the cost of agricultural production. I hope the government considers hiring a railway economist by the name of Snavely who did a very competent job for the CPR on behalf of the Department of Transport. He assumed that the return on equity before taxes should be 35 per cent and that on money borrowed by the railways it should be 25 per cent. Farmers would be pleased to have such an analysis of their business.

We have done some preliminary work which indicates that wheat farmers, for instance, would receive a return of about $13 per bushel instead of the current $4.30. It would make quite a difference if the same rules were applied to the agricultural community as the government is willing to apply to large corporations such as the railways.

Farm debts are increasing at a rapid rate. Payments for interest have risen from $473 million in 1974 to $1.6 billion in 1980 and by the end of 1981 it was estimated that they would be well in excess of $2 billion. The rate of increase in the cost of interest was approaching six times and the value of farm capital rose about three times. Realized net incomes remained the same, although 1982 dollars purchase less than half that of 1974 dollars. I hope we are beginning to understand just why many farmers are facing bankruptcy and why farmers are wanting to sell out, looking for buyers but often finding there is no one interested. This situation occurred because of a real decline in net incomes, together with the extra debt farmers had to accumulate at a time when interest rates more than doubled. I think that explains why the cost of maintaining the credit end of farming has increased more than six times since 1974.

What can we do about this? I think Bill C-88 is an attempt to get some money to help farmers who need to borrow even more in order to stay in business a few additional years. But that is only a temporary solution. A real solution has to be more long term. But if there are long-term solutions found, it does not mean we in the House of Commons and others across the country can sit down and do nothing.

Canada's agricultural producers require a decent level of stabilization immediately so they can begin to recover at least their cost of production. To prevent that from being too expensive for federal and provincial treasuries most farm commodities need a better marketing system. They need the kind of marketing system that will extract the maximum from the free market. Some commodities are covered under marketing boards which come close to doing that, but they cannot always extract the full cost of production from the market. Occasionally they will need assistance from the public purse by way of stabilization programs. Those two things go together so the public purse does not get ripped off. There has to be marketing organizations to do the best job possible in the free market.

Our party has been saying for years that we need adequate marketing boards for the various farm commodities, and as an adjunct there must be stabilization programs to see that farm incomes are adequate to continue to refinance agriculture from year to year. Various farm organizations have been telling us this same thing. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture presented a brief to us during our hearings. We heard similar statements for the National Farmers Union. Recently all Members of Parliament had calls from a group called the Canadian Farmers' Survival Association. That association told us there was a need for an immediate moratorium on receiverships and liquidations. They told us it was time to reinstate the old Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, to bring it up to date, put into effect from 1981 so that farmers would not be forced out of their homes and off their land. They told us it was time to reinstate some of the programs established in the 1930s under the ARDA program whereby the government could buy the farm from the farmer and allow him to lease it back, giving the farmer a home and a source of income for up to ten years, after which he could arrange to repurchase the farm.

To some extent this is reminiscent of the land bank program in the province of Saskatchewan which was introduced during hard times in 1971. Farmers having difficulty remaining in the business were given an opportunity to refinance by selling their land to the land bank, using the proceeds to pay off their debts, to increase their capitalization in buildings and equipment and to get on a sound financial base. They had full tenure on that land until the age of 65 or until such time as they wanted to buy it back, which could occur after a five-year period. Some parts of the country have initiated similar programs. It is time the federal government and federal institutions started to look at these approaches in order to solve what I consider to be the real problem.

Later on in this debate I would like to present an amendment. I hope the House will give its unanimous consent to at least discuss it. The idea of a proposed amendment is to provide the Farm Credit Corporation with more flexibility—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member, he cannot speak to a proposed amendment at this point. He can speak to the amendment before us.

Mr. Althouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of that. I was simply pointing out to the House and to government members that I have an amendment to propose, and I hope we can get to it whenever the time is appropriate.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the amendment proposed by one of the members on the other side. If I understand correctly, the purpose of the amendment is to have the corporation borrow money by issuing bonds of a type that are currently known as small business development bonds. Since in this case, the investor's income is subject to a special tax rate, it would reduce the corporation's financing costs. This reduction in costs could then be passed on to farmers borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation. Mr. Speaker, it is true that in present day agriculture, financing is extremely important, since family farms have expanded to the point that hundreds of thousands of dollars are invested in these enterprises. It is obvious that if we are to have viable farms, they must be mechanized and modernized. Especially today, the challenge to the Canadian farmer is increasing, because with the policies introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in recent years, there is increasing pressure on Canadian farmers to produce more food for developing countries.

Setting up all these mechanisms will cost money, and Canadian agriculture and Canadian farmers cannot afford to turn their backs on these developments if they want to maintain their outstanding record. To make agriculture a paying proposition, we shall also have to use our marketing boards and make an extra effort to give farm producers a reasonable level of income security. Our agriculture may be the best in the world and our productivity as well, but if we cannot provide farmers with the assurance of a steady income from agriculture, I feel that even if we give our farmers the best tools on the market, they will not be able to cope with the problems that may occur in this area, considering the seasonality of many crops. In fact, marketing boards and productivity and the rest is not enough. We need other tools such as, for instance, Canagrex, for which legislation has passed first reading, and we hope that this bill will prove to be a very useful mechanism for our farm producers. Since Canagrex, which is so fittingly seen as a corporation responsible for exporting Canadian farm products to world markets, will emerge as a go-between through which all levels of government will be able to enter into government-to-government dealings, many competing forces which might have been unpleasant from the beginning will be eliminated and will no longer exert pressures on the backs of the farm producers.

• (2130)

Still we have had some good news concerning Canadian pork producers since a very dangerous infectious disease has just struck the hog population in Denmark, and this has brought about an increase of about 10 cents a pound in the price of Canadian pork in the last few days, and it is forecast that Canadian pork prices will continue to increase on the Canadian market by perhaps 10 cents more. Such a disaster is unfortunate for hog producers in Denmark, but in view of the seriousness of this disease, we have been informed that Danish hogs may be quarantined for six months to five years depending on the extent of the disease. Of course, everyone will agree that the Japanese market, which was supplied mostly by the Danish producers, will have to turn to the Canadian market. The United States also was importing much of its pork from Denmark and will now have to turn to the Canadian producers. All I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is that after a disastrous period for Canadian hog producers, this will probably have good results for them.

As for our western beef producers, they have entered a cyclical production period and they are now facing many marketing problems. Of course, for some time now, they may have failed to develop the tools which we believe they should have, but as anyone will agree, it is not up to the Canadian government to tell Canadian farm producers which tools they should use to be more prosperous or improve their profitability. Of course, as he wanted himself, the Minister of Agriculture has wished sincerely—and I believe that this is also the wish of the Canadian government—that the Canadian beef industry would submit a program which would provide for better marketing and better research and perhaps enable them to offer their products under other forms which could increase Canadian consumption.

Once again, all this is related to marketing and it would perhaps be useful for our Canadian producers to promote the nutritional value of Canadian beef, which I believe to be among the best in the world. Mr. Speaker, we have spoken in the past about the productivity of our Canadian producers. This is, of course, a matter of comparison in the North American context. The United States, which produces all year round, have not succeeded in getting that much ahead of us. That is to say that if we compare the total production cost for farmers in the United States and in Canada, even with a climate which allows the Americans to produce twelve months a year, the difference in the cost of farm production is no more than 1 per cent. You must therefore agree, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian producers are at the forefront of progress and are constantly improving. And I will also make a comparison that may hint at a possible solution—we saw that Canadian milk producers during 1974 and 1975 had to cope with tremendous problems, survival problems because they were selling below cost.

It will be remembered that in 1976, on Parliament Hill, right here in Ottawa, thousands of Canadian milk producers demonstrated against the fact that the Canadian government had imposed a quota system. Possibly this was one of the first major products for which the government imposed some form of a quota system because all across Canada dairy farmers were producing without being aware of the needs of our domestic market, and in so doing helped create tremendous surpluses that were costing millions of dollars in storage costs. Therefore, the imposition of quotas may have been a somewhat difficult decision to make in 1976, but Quebec producers now enjoy what may be the best dairy policy in the world. So much so that recently the Americans came to Ottawa to look at that policy and see what benefits it could have in the United States.

The fact is that in the United States today it costs $250,000 an hour for storing surplus dairy products, and this amounts to approximatly $2 billion a year in storage charges and American surpluses are getting larger and larger. And this year we are told also that there will be further increases in the number of milch cows in the United States. Therefore, the free-wheeling type of marketing they have in the United States only tends to weaken the American industry. Again, the Canadian government must be commended for having had that courage, and as I said, it must be acknowledged that in 1976 fixing a quota on Canadian production was a difficult decision to make. Producers always had been in the habit of producing at whatever cost, so creating surpluses. Therefore, we might take a hint from that in our future farm policies, the marketing board approach that was then imposed but today is giving farmers an ever-increasing sense of security. Let us hope, Mr. Speaker, that the policy currently under negotiation will maintain that policy over the coming fiscal year to the benefit of our Canadian milk producers.

I would like to comment further on this amendment, because the proposal certainly deserves consideration and, of course, it is now under study. However, since clause 13 does not exclude the small business bonds, the amendment put forward by my hon. colleague may not be required, because somehow the Income Tax Act should be amended accordingly.

Currently, the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation seems to be more and more generous and I hope Canadians will use it in the best possible way because, as I said, Canadian farm financing is getting more and more complex by reason of our needs and of our high production levels. If we are to maintain that high productivity rate producers will obviously need additional financing. But, as we have seen so well in the bill before the House, and in the history of the Farm Credit Corporation, Canadian farm producers have at their disposal considerable sources of financing which take into account production costs, the cost of farm equipment and the cost of land.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, should we, together, feel that there is need for other sources of financing, then so much the better for the Canadian farmer, provided that money is well spent and also that the cost of borrowing it does not price our products out of the market, since other countries may offer those same products at lower prices. But I have confidence in our Canadian farmers who have always managed to produce at competitive prices in the past. So, it is to be hoped that every stage of this bill, which will be of benefit to all Canadian farmers, especially in these difficult times when they are increasingly in need of financing, will be passed by the House.

[English]

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, may I just begin by indicating that I would like to align myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), and the amendment he has placed before the House of Commons. In the period of time I have been here, I have noticed that the comments of the hon. member have always made great sense, and have also made great reading. I cannot say the same thing about the words of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). When we look back over the ten years he has held that portfolio, we find nothing that even he would be able to point back to as a lasting testimony to his role as Minister of Agriculture. In reality, the legacy of this minister is a ten-year agricultural decline in Canada.

Mr. Whelan: Not true.

Mr. Elzinga: When the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain put a question to him he could just as easily have asked the Minister of Agriculture when he last shingled his house, considering the answer that he received to his question. The minister indicates that this amendment will not meet with the consent of the various lending institutions. I am glad to see that the minister is a great advocate in support of the lending institutions. On so many occasions outside this House he has said exactly the opposite. In fact, he said that the habits of the lending institutions were scandalous.

Mr. Whelan: I said one. If you would just really be honest.

Mr. Elzinga: I am hoping you will respond to the comments I have made. On two occasions in this chamber you have voted against imposing an excess tax—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Elzinga: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. On two occasions in this chamber, the Minister of Agriculture has voted against imposing an excess profits tax on the banking industry. Yet, when he travels though the country he is willing to tell the farming population that he feels the behaviour of the banking institutions is scandalous and that something must be done. When he has the opportunity to do something, he votes precisely opposite to what he is saying throughout Canada.

Mr. Whelan: Not true at all.

Mr. Elzinga: In speaking to report stage, I would ask the minister to be honest because it is recorded in this chamber that his vote was in opposition to imposing an excise profits tax on the banking industry, yet the minister has no hesitation in publicly saying across Canada that he is in support of this tax.

I would like to deal more specifically with the report stage of Bill C-88. We basically support this legislation because it would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow supplemental funds from the private marketplace, it would increase the board of directors from five to seven members, it would remove the 35-year-old age limitation on Section 33 loans, and it would update some of the language used in the Farm Credit Corporation legislation. I earlier shared with the House the fact that we basically support this legislation, as do the majority of farm groups throughout Canada. We are delighted that the minister has given us the assurance that, because of this legislation, he does not intend to cut back on the financial commitment of his government to the Farm Credit Corporation.

Since I did have the opportunity to make a number of comments on this legislation during the second reading debate on February 1, I do not plan to be very lengthy this evening. I want to state that we on this side are very disappointed that this minister of agriculture has not given agriculture the priority it merits. In reality, the farmers of Canada have been neglected for the past ten years.

I was first elected in 1974 and I remember the election campaign. The farming population had a great deal of respect for our Minister of Agriculture, but that respect has turned sour and cynical simply because he has not lived up to the repeated commitment he has given to the farming population throughout Canada. The record will show that farm bankruptcies have increased by some 50 per cent this past year. The November 12 budget introduced by his government has been a disaster to the farming population in Canada. The many budget provisions, as they pertain to income-averaging annuities and capital gains provisions, are disastrous. This Minister of Agriculture promised he would do something about the capital gains provisions. Instead, they have worsened as they relate to the farming sector. In relation to the capital cost allowances which the farming population has traditionally enjoyed, this budget will increase the tax payable in the first year in which farm machinery is purchased.

I would like to return to the subject of capital gains because it is a pet peeve of many of us in this chamber. In at least one campaign, the Minister of Agriculture promised he would change the valuation date from 1971 to 1974. That was another commitment which has not been met. If I had my way, we would eliminate the capital gains provisions as they relate to bona fide farmers, because realistically, the farming population uses the income derived from the sale of property as a pension fund. Farmers do not have the opportunity to invest in so-called pension plans, as do many in the public service and in other areas.

I have already dealt with the hypocrisy of some of the minister's statements relating to the banking industry. I have indicated how the minister has spoken differently in this chamber on several occasions than he has spoken to farm groups throughout Canada. Because of the lack of action of this federal government relating to the farming sector in Canada, various provincial governments have had to introduce agricultural programs of their own. We do not have an over-all national agricultural policy. That is the real legacy of the ten year term this minister has had the opportunity to serve in that portfolio.

When the hog stabilization plan was announced several months ago, Alberta was to be excluded. That is how much of a national policy we had, simply on the discretion of the minister himself. He was going to exclude one province from participating in this program. Quite frankly, we were delighted to see the minister's reversal. He finally indicated that he would allow the province to participate. The province of Alberta itself has had to introduce programs relating to the beef and sheep industries. I recently asked the Parliamentary Library to compile a very excellent paper on the various agricultural programs available under the provincial governments. I would simply like to commend the library for the super job it did concerning those programs. It is an extensive paper, simply because the provincial governments must involve themselves in what I consider to be a national area because this minister has let the Canadian people down.

Mr. Whelan: Shame on you. We proposed income security for—

• (2150)

Mr. Elzinga: The minister should be very ashamed. I am amazed at his response when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain asked if he would give serious consideration to his amendment. The minister did not reply. I think the minister is somewhat embarrassed. He indicated that he is somewhat warm but is afraid to support this for fear of getting into difficulty with his own officials. I think that says something about the Minister of Agriculture who says he is not going to support something he believes in himself because his officials indicate to him it is not worthy.

I would like to share with you, Mr. Speaker, a few thoughts on the farming sector in general. On the whole, the farming population is not a rich population. They enjoy an independent lifestyle and enjoy having a little dirt under their fingers and working hard for what they have achieved. It is a respected profession. The majority of them respect themselves, they enjoy the long hours and the work that is involved in an attempt to develop some wealth. All Canadians suffer when the farming population suffers. It breaks my heart when I travel through my constituency and see farmer after farmer facing bankruptcy simply because of the high interest rate situation.

Why can you not come forward with something that will be available for expansion, for operating purposes, for the farming population during this period of time in which bankruptcies are causing untold hardship for our farming population?

I would truly hope that the Minister of Agriculture would travel to the rural areas and participate at the grassroot level; find out from them exactly how they feel in regard to the policies he is bringing forward, or the lack of policy. The minister can go to his public meetings and express his wishes but how much feedback does he receive, or pay attention to?

I know from travelling through my constituency, Mr. Speaker, that farmers are not very happy with what my friends opposite are doing. That is evident too, from the recent provincial byelection in the province of Alberta in which we saw a separatist elected. He campaigned against the federal government.

Mr. Whelan: And against the provincial government.

Mr. Elzinga: In his election brochure he said, "Send a message to Ottawa"; that is what he indicated.

Mr. Whelan: And to Peter, too.

Mr. Elzinga: He campaigned on all the federal issues, issues such as metric, gun control and bilingualism, yet this government is not willing to react to any of those issues. I realize it is easy for us in opposition to complain, but what I wish to do for the minister and the House this evening is advocate some actions that are necessary to solve some of the difficulties facing our farmers.

First, I believe that the Small Business Development Bond, rather than being gutted the way it was in the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), should be expanded upon. It should be made available to the incorporated and unincorporated farmers, not only for expansion, but for operating capital. There should be substantial capital gains relief for the farmer. If you do not wish to accept my ideas, do away with it completely; support something such as we had in the budget we introduced, whereby one could roll capital gains over into a registered retirement savings plan and not have to pay any capital gains tax on some $200,000.

I am glad the government did accept the proposal we introduced in our budget with regard to working spouses, through which, if a wife works in the family enterprise, she can receive a salary.

We had attempted, Mr. Speaker, to develop programs with the provinces. It is necessary for the Minister of Agriculture to sit down with his provincial counterparts, to attempt to develop a national policy, so that we do not have these discriminatory practices of one province, to the detriment of another. We should immediately implement a moratorium on farm bankruptcies. We need an additional infusion of some $500 million in capital to the Farm Credit Corporation so that we can subsidize interest rates to the farming population and, in general, increase the total programs offered by the Farm Credit Corporation.

In the event that a farmer has to pay over 12 per cent for money he borrows, he cannot operate. I would seriously hope that our Minister of Agriculture, for once in his ten-year term, will be forward thinking and come forward with a policy or a program in relation to interest rates that will be beneficial to all farmers. I would suggest also that we have a substantial rebate on the price of fuel used in food production. Again, I hope we will have an elaboration of the national price stabilization plan for the beef and hog industries which is meaningful and which will not leave the opportunity for discrimination by the Minister of Agriculture, as was the case with the hog stabilization pay-out.

Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, by once again indicating our support for this legislation. We hope the minister does not sit back and and say: "Yes, I have introduced my one little piece of legislation and I will leave it at that." We would like to see some positive action from this minister, because the farming sector is the soul and the lifeblood of our nation and, unless some positive action is taken in this area, Mr. Speaker, that sector is going to die.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are hon. members ready for the question?

Mr. Towers: I rise, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

Mr. Towers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Whelan: I rise on a point of order, please.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture, on a point of order.

Mr. Whelan: Just on a comment the previous speaker made, that I discriminated against one province. We treated all provinces that had programs the same, in the first instance, and then we decided to allow the programs to go through. We treated every province the same. Alberta was not treated separately on any occasion. If the hon. member meant it that way in his statement—that is the way it sounded to me—it was not done that way at all.

Mr. Elzinga: In response to the hon. minister, I did mean that he discriminated, because it is obvious that he did discriminate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Elzinga: He referred to the decision he did make that there was not going to be a pay-out to Alberta. Some weeks later he reversed that decision and there was a pay-out to Alberta. He reversed himself. If he does not consider that discrimination, I do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is becoming a debate. These are obviously not points of order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NEW BRUNSWICK SEED POTATO STOCK

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that as usual at this time, the gallery is filled with newspapermen who have come to hear us and to report the facts as I will put them before my colleagues this evening. During the past seven or eight weeks, that is almost two months, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Jean Garon has taken pleasure in publicly making a series of serious but false accusations concerning New Brunswick seed potatoes.

Seed potatoes are used to eventually produce potatoes for human consumption, but it does not mean that seed potatoes are not fit for human consumption. On the contrary, they are top quality potatoes. However, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture is accusing, on the one hand, the federal Department of Agriculture and, on the other hand, the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island producers, of having sold and shipped contaminated seed potatoes to Quebec producers. Now, it often happens that Mr. Garon is mistaken, but this time he is utterly mistaken because he is talking through his hat.

We know that, historically, the potato production in the province of Quebec has been low compared with that of both New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, which alone produced for years almost 50 per cent of the total Canadian production. With time, of course, this rate of production has not decreased in terms of volume or total cultivated lands, but some western provinces as well as Ontario have become more competitive at the production level. But what is most serious about the accusation made my Mr. Garon is that he offhandedly condemns all seed potato stock originating from New Brunswick, without producing any irrefutable and sound supporting evidence. On the contrary, the Department of Agriculture and its food and vegetable certification division have an outstanding record throughout the world. This reputation has been acquired after decades of great sacrifices and hard work and Mr. Garon, the Quebec agriculture minister, would offhandedly ruin this outstanding reputation. Well, Mr. Garon, as I have just mentioned, has not been able to produce any sound evidence. On the contrary, the Department of Agriculture of the Government of Canada had to remind him that on several occasions it had to ask the Quebec government to implement a consumer potato production control program within its own territory because the seed potato stock were grown on the same lands on which uncontrolled consumer potato stock had been grown the preceding year.

On the other hand, in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, producers have been trying for many years to eradicate a number of diseases of which the most serious by far is the bacterial ring rot, which is perhaps the most tenacious and unpredictable, because it is very difficult to identify. As some Quebec producers had bought potatoes in New Brunswick and sold them again to Quebec growers whose crops where affected by bacterial ring rot, Mr. Garon automatically inferred that the origin of the disease is in New Brunswick. Which is simply not true, because inspectors of the federal Department of Agriculture returned to visit the operation of the New Brunswick producer, check a number of stocks which had been produced on his farm and distributed not only in Quebec, but throughout the Atlantic region, but failed to find any evidence of bacterial ring rot.

Therefore it appears that, according to this very strict control, the origin of the bacterial ring rot is unfortunate, and I say it is unfortunate because the bacterial ring rot is a very serious disease which exists quite often in a latent state practically everywhere in the world if people are not careful. This disease could very well be traced to the soil itself in Quebec, to warehouses in Quebec, to bags, trucks, tractors, who knows where it could be traced to, but it is a fact that it can be traced to any of those places. Given the lack of control in Quebec over the seed potato, Mr. Garon cannot state categorically that the disease could not already be found in the soil in Quebec, that it could not be found on certain farms which supplied the producers of the regions of Témiscouata, Rivière-du-Loup and Kamouraska, which border on New Brunswick. By making such sweeping accusations, Mr. Garon therefore hinders the entire potato industry in Canada and tarnishes our good reputation in foreign countries. I suggest that the federal government agriculture minister was right to ask Mr. Garon to refrain from making that type of public statements.

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, just as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) stated last week when answering a question about the bacterial ring rot, I must confess that the Quebec agriculture minister, Mr. Garon, created quite a deplorable situation. Mr. Garon's allegations caused great harm both to the reputation of New Brunswick potato producers and to the federal inspection service.

Following the allegations that Mr. Garon chose to make to the press instead of contacting him to try and find a solution to the problem, the Minister of Agriculture said that he would not be drawn into Mr. Garon's political games. He also indicated to his Quebec colleague that if he was really interested in solving this problem, he would certainly find the time to discuss it with him. The agriculture minister and Mr. Garon met last Monday, but unfortunately, they could not come to an agreement. However, Mr. Garon presented a file with compensation claims totalling more than $1 million from the Quebec potato producers affected by the bacterial ring rot. Agriculture Canada officials are now studying this file and the agriculture minister promised Mr. Garon an answer in a few days.

As far as the federal government is concerned I can say unequivocally that the Federal Potato Inspection Service is among the best in the world.

I can also guarantee that during the course of the very thorough investigation and chronological study conducted by the department about this contamination, all the facts have been checked. Mr. Garon indicated that the ring rot was caused by a shipment of seed potatoes from New Brunswick. After checking at the source, we have found that the producer has not had any problem with bacterial ring rot for approximately 20 years. We have checked other potatoes grown on the same farm which have been shipped all over Canada, without finding any trace of bacterial ring rot.

As usual, Mr. Garon had the urge to provoke an ideological debate between Agriculture Canada and the Quebec government. In my opinion, this is unfortunate since all Canadian potato producers have suffered serious prejudice as a result of this, and we hope, Mr. Speaker, that this problem will be solved as it should be, that is by experts.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—RESTRUCTURING OF FINANCING OF ASSOCIATION CANADIENNE FRANÇAISE DE L'ONTARIO

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, March 23, I directed a question to the Secretary of State (M. Regan) concerning the restructuring of financing of the ACFO announced on February 16 by the parliamentary secretary to the minister. I would like to go over the situation again, because I feel the decision taken by the Secretary of State may be harmful to Franco-Ontarians by depriving them of a provincial organization which has proved to be a much needed protector of their rights. It all started when the Department of the Secretary of State told the media of a new policy concerning the administration of the official languages branch.

As a result of that policy, the Secretary of State intends to redirect some of the funds to the regional councils of the ACFO, thus bypassing the provincial organization.

Still according to the Secretary of State, the purpose of those new policies was to thwart the tendency of overstructuring which afflicts organizations active in minority groups, the ACFO included, of course, in an attempt to get closer to the membership.

That is the purpose of those administrative changes. Let us examine the problems created by the Secretary of State's intervention. They are threefold: there is the legal problem, the interference problem and the methods problem. First, the judicial problem. The ACFO is a legal entity from which derive 19 regional councils that have no other status than that granted by the ACFO charter and amendable only with the consent of the general assembly of the organization. Moreover, the ACFO has 17 affiliates. The present proposal creates a problem since, in fact, it alters the ACFO's legal structure without the consent of the general assembly. Indeed in putting forward the dissatisfaction of some regional councils and the desire to decentralize the intent is to make them independent of the provincial organization by financing them directly. As those regional branches do not exist outside ACFO, it will be necessary to establish new structures and corporations, before any money can be provided for them.

This is where the Department of the Secretary of State's interference comes about. Six regional branches of an independent organization, as demonstrated by the consultation held during the first week of March, are dissatisfied with the present situation. They want to get more power, hence their interest in the department's proposal. All the same, 13 regional branches show their support for the provincial ACFO. Without any right to do so, the Department of the Secretary of State supports the six branches, and I can assure you that in the future they will come directly under the department for their funding. There we have interference pure and simple in the internal business of an independent organization. If the regions want more decentralization, it is incumbent on the provincial ACFO to respond to their request. Whether or not it is done in co-operation with the Department of the Secretary of State is not the problem. But the provincial ACFO must be involved as the only organization legally responsible for its regional councils. The Department of the Secretary of State's proposal is rather strange when considered more closely. Because a minority of dissenters refuse to play the game of democracy, and although 13 regional branches out of 19 support the provincial ACFO, the department decides to give the minority of six their own way. It is as if a dissatisfied province wanted to sever all ties with the federal structure and were granted autonomy without consultation with its federal partners.

Should we see in this new approach a step toward a new type of federation? The last problem, Mr. Speaker, is rather a moral one, and it concerns the offhand behaviour of the Secretary of State in this matter. As a matter of fact, allegedly to get nearer to the grass roots, the Secretary of State never held any consultations prior to announcing his decision. Everyone learned of that decision through the press. Furthermore, the present proposal is not supported by any document. I had to write twice to the minister and to phone him before I could meet him, and he announced only last week, in an answer he gave me in this House, that he was going to meet with officials of ACFO late last week. One can only note the department's reticent and unco-operative bureaucratic attitude in this matter. That is why I ask the minister today to table actual documents summing up the present proposal for restructuring ACFO.

It is to be hoped that the spirit of dialogue and co-operation, which was apparent, albeit slightly, at the meeting of March 25 will be conducive to a new protocol of agreement that will satisfy all parties. Although ACFO had every right to resent the actions of the Secretary of State, it nevertheless approached the minister at the March 25 meeting in the hope of finding common ground for an understanding. Through a written proposal, ACFO made a breakthrough on this issue. This proposal which, as I understand will be released in the near future, satisfies the requirements of all parties involved. The decentralization that everybody wishes for should provide the dissenting regions with a solution to their problems. On the other hand, the role of the ACFO would be maintained in that it would remain the provincial association of Franco-Ontarians, thus avoiding any legal issue. Furthermore, as decentralization was sought in the first place by the Department of the Secretary of State as well as the power to directly fund regional associations, I believe the minister should support such proposal which meets all his wishes. Mr. Speaker, any compromise involves a certain amount of give and take. But in its proposal the ACFO seems prepared to go all the way, having already made a more generous offer than the other party. I hope the department will react positively to this proposal and will show a similar desire to settle the matter to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the result of remarks made by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on March 25, the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) met with the officials of ACFO in the presence of the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier. At that time, ACFO made a proposal and with the co-operation of all concerned, we are now in consultation with the seven regional associations interested in dealing directly with the Department of the Secretary of State. During that meeting, the Secretary of State offered to review his position, perhaps very soon, after consultation with the seven regional associations; and if those associations agreed with the ACFO proposal we would give favourable consideration to that proposal. If the seven decide to use the provincial association as a banker or to stay within the provincial association and to deal directly with it, the Secretary of State has no objection to that either. But our responsibilities toward the taxpayers and those seven entities which have said democratically that they wanted to deal directly with the Secretary of State must be considered. I think that is strictly what is at stake, and the member for Ottawa-Vanier is well aware of the situation. He has complained of having nothing in writing. I think that more than anybody else he had access to inside information and had discussions on the subject with the present Secretary of State.

I am convinced that the inquiries and mediation attempts by the member for Ottawa-Vanier will lead us to the best solution. One thing is sure, the Secretary of State is bound to take his responsibilities toward taxpayers and to be receptive to the needs of minority groups across Canada. This is part of his mandate. The decision that was made was specifically designed to respond to the expectations of some communities across Ontario, and it was made simply to get closer to the grass roots.

My hon. colleague's three objections were strictly legal. I think a lawyer could always find a satisfactory solution, and I really do not know whether it is a major problem. As far as any interference is concerned, he who pays the piper usually calls the tune. We hope that this movement toward decentralization and toward working with communities will not be seen as interference but rather as an attempt to be more in tune with the taxpayers and to spend money where they would like to see it spent.

Finally, as far as the method is concerned, of course one can always consult ad nauseam, but my hon. colleague is probably aware that where difficult decisions of this kind are concerned, consultation takes place a few days beforehand, but in the final instance, the decision is made in consultation with local authorities and departmental officers in whom we have full confidence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his time is up.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION—PROPOSAL TO DELAY PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION. (B) CROWN PRIVILEGE AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the debate this evening arises out of a question I asked the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) on February 12. You will recall the Minister of Communications on the subject of freedom of information received a letter from the provincial attorney general of Ontario speaking on his own behalf and on behalf of other attorneys general. In essence, the provincial governments were asking the federal government to stop consideration in the committee or elsewhere of its freedom of information bill in order to deal with a freedom of information bill to be agreed upon by all 11 governments of Canada. Surely, no one has to tell this House of Commons how unlikely it is we would ever get agreement on a freedom of information bill of that scope.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that we worked 54 years to get agreement on the Constitution. I wager the parliamentary secretary would be greyer than he is today, and both he and I would be drawing the old age pension well before a bill would even see the light of day in draft form. I say to you that, following the tradition of federal-provincial agreements with respect to this matter, any freedom of information bill to result would pale in comparison to Bill C-43, the freedom of information bill which this government advanced. It would be useless. It would be without teeth. It would be blind. It would be full of so many notwithstanding clauses that no one interested in freedom of information could ever countenance that kind of delay. I do not countenance it.

If you scratch a little deeper, Messrs. McMurtry, Romanow and company are interested in much more than that. They do not want independent judicial review. They do not want to do away with Crown privilege. They are afraid of that. They want the governments of Canada—and I put government in the plural—to be the judge, the jury and the policemen with respect to what information will be released.

I do not think I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that without independent judicial review any freedom of information law would be next to useless, particularly if the decision as to what would be released were left to the people who held the information being asked for. It is as simple as that.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will tell the House tonight that his minister, the Minister of Communications, and his colleagues in the government will not fall for that line of baloney of 11 governments, because that is what it is. If they do, it will be an incredible about face on the part of this government.

In 1979, I introduced a freedom of information bill, imperfect in many respects, the first word, but not the last. In 1980, the present government introduced Bill C-43 which in some respects was not as good as the one of the Clark government, but in many respects was better. I would be astounded if the government should even consider stopping consideration, or choose not to appear before the committee to complete consideration of the bill. If the government does that, it will complete the breaking of another promise.

Both Bill C-15, my bill, and Bill C-43, the Minister of Communication's bill went to committee after one round of speeches. Gallup polls approve of freedom of information. All parties approve also. Yet after two years a freedom of information bill is still a mirage. I find it impossible to accept the opinions of the provincial attorneys general in this matter, and I find it unpalatable and distasteful to believe that a government which promised freedom of information should fall over in that round-heeled fashion, rather than forging ahead with a bill. The fact of the matter is, and I might as well say it here, the provinces do not want to make freedom of information better. As a result of their suggestion, they want freedom of information legislation dead and buried. I think it is high time the government came to the committee and stated its position. Does it favour that, will it allow the bill to go forward, and will it invite the provinces to appear before the committee like any other witness. Will it now make up the time lost to the cause of freedom of information by the fact that the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), while professing a great interest in freedom of information here, piled up page after page of useless questions in committee on a bill which has a provision calling for parliamentary review three years down the road?

• (2225)

I hope the parliamentary secretary will say to us tonight that the bill will go forward, the blandishments of the provincial attorneys general will be ignored, and the government will live up to the commitment it made in the throne speech. If it does not, then the Minister of Communications and his colleagues in government, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) down, stand on the same footing as the provincial attorneys general who have shown themselves to be dinosaurs on the subject of freedom of information. I look forward to hearing from the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am grateful for the opportunity provided by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) to discuss the subject of access to information. I think all of us know of his deep and abiding interest in and effectiveness on this subject.

As the House is aware, Bill C-43, which contains legislative proposals for both access to information and privacy, was introduced in the House in July, 1980 and received second reading in January, 1981. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs undertook its review of the bill in March of last year. A number of groups and experts came before the committee to give their views. This process took more than two months of the committee's time. Clause by clause examination got under way only in June. The committee has devoted a great number of sittings to the various clauses of the bill; some 45 provisions had been adopted before Christmas out of the more than 160 clauses in the bill.

During the course of the summer, and last fall, the provinces informed the government of their concerns in regard to Bill C-43. I refer in particular to the very specific objections raised by the attorney general for Ontario, Mr. McMurtry, in relation to the protection of law enforcement information and other important issues in a letter he sent last June to the minister. In November the minister was advised by the spokesman for the provinces that the Ontario letter had received the endorsement of all provinces. Since then discussions have taken place with the provinces at both the ministerial and official levels.

As indicated to the House by the Minister of Communications, representations from a common front made up of most of the provinces must be taken seriously, indeed. I think hon. members from across the aisle, given their fundamental and philosophical commitment to harmonious federal-provincial relations, will agree that the legitimate concerns of the provinces cannot be summarily dismissed. I say to the hon. member that, despite his feelings and our desire, it is in the interest of all concerned that the federal government and the provinces are given an opportunity to iron out outstanding issues in relation to access to information and privacy.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Bring the provinces to the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock p.m.

The House adjourned at 10.29 p.m., without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE JUDICIARY

SUPREME COURT APPOINTMENT PROCESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, today is an historic day in the judicial history of Canada marked by the swearing in of Madam Justice Bertha Wilson as a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. The appointment of this respected and accomplished jurist has been applauded by Canadians from coast to coast.

The appointment of the first woman to the Supreme Court of Canada was a result, in part, of strong representations by the official opposition and by widespread public input. In view of the imminent patriation of the Canadian Constitution, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which will substantially increase the role and power of the Supreme Court of Canada in the determination of the rights and liberties of Canadian citizens, it is incumbent upon legislators to reassess the process of appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada, now the sole prerogative of the Prime Minister. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That this House direct an immediate reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on the process of judicial appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada, including the involvement of the House of Commons in the review and confirmation of nominees to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

TRANSPORT

FUNDING FOR GRADE SEPARATION PROJECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, UTAP funding provided to the province of Ontario has been totally exhausted by the province using the moneys for grade separations in urban areas. Grade separations are worth-while construction work using totally Canadian labour and Canadian materials, and completed grade separations improve both the productivity of road transport and the railways. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Minister of Transport immediately embark on a program to make substantial funds available to municipalities and provinces to share-cost new grade separations.

EMPLOYMENT

TRAINING OF WOMEN IN NON-TRADITIONAL JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, it is of vital importance that great numbers of women be trained in non-traditional jobs, so that women in clerical and stenographic positions will not find themselves out of work in this age of high technology. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration consider, as a priority, training women in non-traditional jobs, particularly as the number of women currently participating in such government sponsored retraining programs has decreased from 22 per cent to 11 per cent in the past six months.

CALL FOR PROVISION OF ADEQUATE BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the recent proposal by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to provide homemakers with retirement incomes by splitting the spouse's Canada Pension Plan cheque down the middle, and giving half to the husband and half to the wife, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House direct the government to stop treating the problems of older women with sleight of hand approaches to pension reform, and that it be further directed to use the additional revenue it will receive from the recent budget and the energy agreements to provide decent and adequate pensions to all retired Canadians immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON NATURAL GAS AND HOME HEATING OIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to take exception to a reply given by the Prime Minister during question period yesterday. He said the way to bring down interest rates and thereby stimulate our economy is to "bring down inflation, to bring down costs", etc. Yet he says one thing and does another. His government has been the most profligate spender in our history and is doing literally nothing to check spending and cut outlays. He demonstrates daily that the situation is clearly beyond him, and he has no quotations from Chairman Mao to bail him out.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That, if he is to be credible, the Prime Minister should practice what he preaches. Bring down costs—as he says—and a good starting point would be the removal of the nearly 30 per cent excise tax on natural gas and oil for home heating purposes, thereby cutting home owners' heating costs by almost one third.

TAXATION OF NORTHERN ALLOWANCE BENEFITS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that members of the steelworkers' locals of northern Canada, Quebec and Labrador, have travelled to Ottawa today to plead with the government for an extension of the temporary remission order affecting isolated posts living allowances, and whereas the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue have rejected a meeting with this visiting delegation, but have passed the steelworkers off to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who has no authority over taxation policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue be severely censured by this House for refusing to meet with steelworkers' locals from across Canada, and for placing the entire mining industry of northern Canada in jeopardy by their failure to negotiate with all affected groups a fair and acceptable taxing policy for the north.

KINGSTON PRISON FOR WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, on Friday of last week the Solicitor General reneged on his commitment to close Kingston prison for women, the only federal prison for women in Canada. For over 50 years governments have been wavering on what to do with the Kingston prison, an institution that, as the director of the Elizabeth Fry Society has stated, "is not fit for bears". Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House direct the minister either to close the Kingston prison for women or immediately improve and upgrade the institution to create and ensure a humane environment for the women inmates.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF TAX MEASURES ON CAR RENTAL BUSINESSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, an all too often forgotten victim of the November 12 budget is the automobile dealer who is trying to sell cars at exorbitant interest rates and trying to operate a leasing business. Over 2,500 dealers, leasing upwards of 800,000 automobiles, will lose a full 15 per cent of their depreciation allowance on the cost of new cars due to the budget's halving of the capital cost allowance. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That, as this tax measure is expected to result in a surge of auto dealer bankruptcies and closures, the Minister of Finance should heed the warning signs and withdraw the proposal before it is too late to rescue 2,500 dealers.

ARREST OF DRILLING RIG GONE ADRIFT IN HALIFAX HARBOUR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, on March 5, 1982, the Zapata Scotian, an ocean-going drilling rig, broke away from its berth in the port of Halifax and floated free in the harbour, constituting a danger to harbour users and facilities. The Zapata Scotian was taken under tow, and damage was averted. The Government of Canada has made a claim exceeding $5 million for the few hours of assistance provided, and arrested the Zapata Scotian to secure this atrocious claim. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Justice direct their officers and agents to withdraw this ridiculous claim and obstruction and allow the Zapata Scotian to pursue the vital work of exploring our Atlantic coast resources.

That, if this government cannot increase the money available to farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation and the small business bond, it reinstate the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act which was originally passed in 1934 to avert a similar disaster to the industry in 1982.

TRADE

CONTRACT FOR SALE OF GENERAL MOTORS CARS TO IRAQ

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of State for International Trade with respect to the deal between General Motors and Iraq for the sale of cars. Has General Motors received formal notification from Iraq that it is not its intention to accept delivery and pay for the cars which are sitting on the Halifax docks?

• (1415)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I cannot honestly say whether General Motors has received formal notice. I have been told by the Iraqi ambassador, who has just returned from Baghdad, that the deal will not be consummated.

REASONS FOR NOT COMPLETING DEAL

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, can the minister tell us why the deal will not be consummated with the Iraqis? What are the grounds for cancelling or withdrawing from the contract?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, first, I do not think the Iraqi authorities acknowledge that there is a contract for the second fleet of cars. I am informed that this particular contract was still being negotiated. The reason given to me by the Iraqi authorities for not exercising the option on the second lot of 12,500 cars was the fact that they felt the mechanical problems with the first 13,000 cars were such that they did not want to take the second order.

DATE WHEN GOVERNMENT INFORMED

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I am informed by General Motors that they do have a contract which they consider binding. I would have thought the minister might know whether or not a contract exists. But let me put this question to him. When did the Canadian government first become aware that Iraq was not satisfied with the cars? Further, what steps did the government take to ensure that the Canadian taxpayer would not end up footing a bill for $80 million?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, if my memory serves me correctly, I was informed some time during last summer. I then arranged to go to Baghdad during the month of September. I think it was around the end of September or the beginning of October.

Mr. Crosby: Write that one down.

Mr. Lumley: We obviously had ongoing discussions with the Iraqi ambassador and the embassy even as late as six weeks ago prior to his departure for Baghdad. I also sent a note to my counterpart, the Minister of Trade for Iraq, to see if he could resolve this particular situation.

Obviously the Government of Canada does not produce cars, and I am not a mechanic myself. We had hoped that we would be successful because the Malibu, as the hon. member knows, is a very good car. It just so happened that this particular model has not worked to the customer's satisfaction.

FOOTWEAR—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT RECOMMENDED INCLUSION OF LEATHER FOOTWEAR IN GLOBAL QUOTA

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question will also be directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. Some time ago, I asked him a question about the survival of the footwear industry. The minister is well aware of the very difficult situation now facing this industry, and that the answer is to apply the over-all quota system to leather footwear as well. Has the minister since had an opportunity to discuss the matter with his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and if so, did the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce recommend that leather footwear should again be included in the over-all quota system?

[English]

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I have had meetings with representatives of the shoe manufacturing industry, with respresentatives of the shoe retailing industry, and with importers. There is some conflicting information as to whether the retail sales figures are down similar to what the shoe manufacturers have indicated is the case with respect to domestic orders. We are, however, discussing the whole sector at the present time.

INQUIRY WHETHER MEASURES WILL BE TAKEN TO AVOID JOB LOSSES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister knows perfectly well that the industry is in extreme difficulty. Since the matter was raised some time ago and a number of members on both sides of the House have given their support on this issue, the minister should be able to inform us today when he is finally going to give an answer to this major industry and prevent the loss of thousands of jobs. Would the minister also be able to inform us today whether, in view of the information he now has, he is willing to support the request made by the footwear industry and work together with his colleague to find a solution that will prevent the loss of jobs not only in Quebec but throughout the country?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, just said, we have had some very useful meetings with manufacturers, importers and retailers, and our colleagues have had some very useful discussions with spokesmen for the footwear industry. Their recommendations are now being reviewed at the cabinet level, and as soon as cabinet is ready to reach a decision, I shall certainly be able to make a statement on this important matter.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

VOLUME OF JAPANESE CAR SALES IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade concerning the automotive industry in general. Almost one job in seven in Canada is, directly or indirectly, connected with that industry. These involve workers in plastics, iron, and the fabrication of all kinds of finished products and all kinds of minerals. I ask the minister, since at this point 22 per cent of that market has been taken over by Japanese products, why does the government not have in place a requirement that Japanese firms either purchase parts or assemble vehicles here in Canada, which would put Canadians to work?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we are very cognizant of and concerned about the situation in the automobile industry in Canada. That is one of the reasons we undertook the recent trade mission to Japan and asked the Japanese government for three possible areas of voluntary restraint: one, with respect to importation of automobiles during the current fiscal year; second, a ceiling with respect to commercial vehicles; third, a commitment to negotiate a content proposal for the future.

The negotiations are still ongoing and, as the hon. member knows, the Japanese government announced yesterday they have come to a decision with respect to the United States, and hopefully our recommendations will now be their first priority.

DEFICIT IN AUTOMOTIVE TRADE WITH JAPAN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the countries of France, Mexico, Australia and the United States, as well as a number of others, have firm agreements with the Japanese respecting either quotas or production within their countries of parts for Japanese vehicles. Considering that we have an automotive trade deficit with Japan of $1.5 billion, representing a net loss of 15,000 Canadian jobs, why is it that, unlike other countries which have protected their automotive industries, the Government of Canada has been so gutless in its dealings with Japan?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member forgets for a second that we are one of the few countries in the world which has a trade surplus with Japan. While most of the countries the hon. member mentioned have a substantial trade deficit with Japan, we have a $400 million trade surplus. France, for example, has severe restrictions on Japanese automobiles; however it only sells the Japanese $1 billion worth of goods. We happen to sell them over $4 billion worth.

REQUEST THAT JAPANESE PLANT BE ESTABLISHED IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Japanese, like people in any other country, cannot expect to have a favorable trade balance with every nation in the world. I would tell the minister that they buy our resources not for our good but for their own.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: They are not doing us a favour in buying our raw materials; it is primarily for their benefit.

Is the minister prepared to get at least as tough as some of these other countries are in protecting their automotive industries, and will he within a matter of weeks get a specific commitment from the Japanese either to produce parts or vehicles here, which would be fair for the Canadian consumer as well as the auto worker, or, if not, will he have the courage to tell the Japanese he is going to put an emergency 15 per cent surcharge on all their automotive products coming into Canada?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where did you buy your shirt Ed?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I share with the hon. member the belief that the automotive trade deficit with Japan needs to be rectified. However, I am a bit surprised that the hon. member's party, with a number of seats in western Canada, would make so little of the fact that we sell a substantial amount of goods from western Canada to Japan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: I would have thought, Madam Speaker, that the jobs created by the export of coal, lumber, canola and wheat, etc.—

Mr. Deans: The export of jobs.

Mr. Lumley: —would be just as important to western Canadians as the export of automobiles is to central Canadians.

FINANCE

INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET LEGISLATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Revenue Canada is asking Canadians to pay their 1981 taxes based on the November, 1981, budget, as if that budget were law today. The department has issued a bulletin to that effect. The minister knows full well that his phantom budget is a subject of great uncertainty today because no legislation has been presented on the budget, and there has not even been a Ways and Means motion in connection with the many changes that he has announced with regard to the budget itself. Why is the minister asking Canadians to pay their taxes based on the budget when the legislation has not even been made public?

• (1425)

Mr. Jarvis: Disgrace!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Ways and Means motions have been made public, and it is on that basis that taxes have been collected in this country for ever and a day.

Mr. Andre: They have not been voted on.

DISCUSSION OF TAX CHANGES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, there has never been a budget in this country which has been the subject of so much uncertainty as this particular one. We have not seen the Ways and Means motion for the December 18 changes. I remind the minister of that fact. This particular request is in contempt of Parliament. The minister has limited the rights of Parliament to consider, debate and vote on the particular motions. The minister made a further withdrawal yesterday by stating that he would introduce draft legislation on the sales tax changes and allow many companies to present their views on those particular changes. Why is he allowing companies to make representations on the sales tax proposals when he has precluded and pre-empted Canadians and Parliament from discussion of the regular tax changes which were introduced in the budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there has been no effort to preclude discussion on the budgetary changes which were made on November 12. I believe that no budget has been subjected to such a large amount of discussion throughout the country. I know of no other budget in the history of Canada which has been brought before the House three times by the opposition in non-confidence motions and which has been approved three times. Therefore it has been extensively discussed. We will produce—

Mr. Wilson: We have not seen the legislation.

Mr. MacEachen: —draft legislation which will be discussed and considered by all hands. Then we will have the legislation before the House of Commons, and hon. members will have ample opportunity, as they have had in the past, to deal with this legislation. There is absolutely no difference in the treatment of this budget, in that characteristic, than that of any former budget in the history of the country. If the hon. member had consulted with the hon. member for St. John's West, he would have received that information without showing his lack of knowledge on the floor of the House.

Mr. Clark: That is a falsehood.

EFFECT OF TAX MEASURES

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The Canadian car rental industry has made the claim that the capital cost allowance item in the November 12 budget has caused the postponement of some 40,000 new cars. The 250 per cent tax increase in the taxable benefits item in the new budget has caused the further cancellation and postponement of many thousands of new cars and a loss of thousands of man-years of work. I am wondering if this minister can acquaint us with the negotiations, and with representations he has made to his colleague, the Minister of Finance, concerning the removal of these two job-destroying items in the November 12 budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, some months ago I did meet with a delegation representing the Canadian car rental industry. I certainly took steps to see that its concerns were brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance. It is my impression that the Minister of Finance has made announcements in response to the concerns of the car rental people, particularly with respect to an analysis of some of their major concerns about the capital cost allowance. They indicated that their concerns were certainly not as severe as they first feared.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, although this minister is on record as saying that he would resign from a government that allowed interest rates to increase, he is also on record as committing very large sums of money to protect jobs in troubled industries. But his best efforts to protect jobs have been wiped out by these two items in the budget. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion should normally be outraged at this contradictory economic policy. I am going to ask him in all seriousness if he will resign now in protest over this contradiction in government economic policy.

• (1430)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I think I am going to stay here to make sure that the contradictions in the Conservative Party policy, which was rejected by the people in the last election, do not have a chance of occurring again.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ACTION TAKEN AGAINST EMPLOYEE OF DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): I have a question, Madam Speaker, for the Minister of Employment and Immigration on the rules governing his department's employees. The minister must be aware of the unfortunate case of his departmental employee, Paul McNeill, who, like Neil Fraser, dared to express his opinion but who has a family to support and cannot risk loss of employment. He has spent $12,000 to remove urea formaldehyde foam insulation from his home in Halifax and believes the government has a responsibility, and I agree with him.

Would the minister explain why action was taken by his officials against Mr. McNeill for expressing the widely held view on government responsibility for UFFI? Would he tell the House whether he thinks the sweeping provisions of his department's Code of Conduct are justified in a free and democratic society?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As the hon. member knows, the code of conduct is a set of guidelines for the activity of public servants in a department. Those guidelines were simply drawn to the attention of the gentleman in question, reminding him that that is the code of conduct of which he was aware before he accepted his present position and employment. They were simply drawn to his attention, and he could then draw his own conclusions as to whether he wanted to proceed with his activities in the private organization he was sponsoring, or whether he would continue in terms of his own activities in that department. No coercion was applied to him.

Mr. Crosby: The minister can say that there was no coercion applied, but the fact is that the employee had to withdraw from activities that other Canadians are entitled to carry on.

APPLICATION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): I want to ask the Prime Minister, bearing in mind that there are over 500,000 federal public employees and over 300,000 provincial public employees, which means that almost one in ten of our work force is a public employee, will he stand now in this House and say with respect to the new Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that public servants have the same rights as every other Canadian to express their views provided they do not go beyond the rules that apply in a free and democratic society. Does this Charter of Rights have any meaning, or does it not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It has a lot of meaning, Madam Speaker, and I am glad that the opposition is beginning to realize its importance.

An hon. Member: Say that to Neil Fraser.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is not asking me to interpret any clause of that Charter, I take it. It will be interpreted by the courts. As I said earlier about any civil servant or any citizen who thinks that his freedom of speech is in some way curtailed, he has a right to appeal under the Charter.

IMMIGRATION

RECRUITMENT OF SKILLED WORKERS FROM ABROAD

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): My question, Madam Speaker, is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister stated in a recent interview that 20,000 to 25,000 skilled workers would be hired abroad because there is a shortage of skilled tradespeople and technicians in the Canadian labour market. Given the further fact of 1,119,000 unemployed, many of whom are skilled workers, Canadians are skeptical of the minister's claim. Will the minister therefore identify the 25,000 skilled jobs, so that Canadians can apply for them?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): It may be, Madam Speaker, that at this particular time this Member of Parliament does not allow himself to keep abreast of the past happenings in the House of Commons. If he did he would be aware that we tabled in this House last November a report on immigration levels, which were arrived at after close consultation with the private sector, with the provinces, and with all the groups interested in immigration. At that time the immigration level was set so that we would bring in 23,000 to 25,000 skilled workers. It should come as no surprise to the hon. member that that is so, because it was a report tabled in Parliament at that time. It was based on the labour demand, after consultation with all the key groups involved in making those decisions.

REQUEST THAT INDUSTRY TRAIN CANADIAN WORKERS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Obviously there is a policy of importing workers for skilled jobs, and the training policies which the minister has employed, based upon the incentives to industry, have failed. That is why he continues to have to import 25,000 workers a year. I ask him whether or not he would be prepared to approach the specific companies involved that are going to hire the 25,000 workers, and tell them that they must train Canadian workers for those jobs.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I would like to remind the hon. member, Madam Speaker, that basically we have been importing skilled workers into this country for over one hundred years. That is the basis upon which this country has been built, using the skills of a wide variety of people.

The kind of approach that the hon. member and his party seem to be recommending, that we would not draw upon the continuing strength of people coming to these shores, is a very serious statement. I would hope that the New Democratic Party would not associate itself with that kind of reactionary position. The fact of the matter is that we do have a system in this country that anybody making application to come to work as a skilled worker, is first tested as to whether there is a Canadian who is available for the job. If the hon. member knew more about the way the immigration department works and the employment department works, he would not ask such stupid questions.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROCESSING OF PENSION CLAIMS—McCRACKEN REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): My question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. As Mr. McCracken has completed his study into the lengthy delays in processing veterans' pensions, I would like to ask the minister if he or his department have implemented any of the recommendations of the McCracken report to speed up the processing period.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker. Since receiving the report a couple of weeks ago we have been actively reviewing all of the recommendations. Quite a number of them have been implemented so far and others will be implemented in the foreseeable future.

CASE OF NEW BRUNSWICK APPLICANT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Would the minister double check and report back to the House on whether all the recommendations or some of them have been implemented, because I have just received a letter from a veteran in Saint John, New Brunswick, that he has been informed by a Veterans Affairs' official that he will have to wait from two to four years to have his disability pension processed.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I would like to know the source of that advice, Madam Speaker, because that is not correct. We have been speeding up the process and we will continue to do so until it reaches a satisfactory level. I might also indicate that in the past number of months not only has the process been speeded up but we have also reduced the backlog substantially. In fact at the moment that backlog has been reduced by approximately 1,000.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS' RIGHTS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier as the chairman of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, with respect to the ongoing business of the committee. As the chairman knows, the President of the Treasury Board and the Chairman of the Public Service Commission have both indicated before the committee that they endorsed the proposal to give the parliamentary committee the job of trying to clarify the political rights of public servants. With respect to the ongoing business of the committee, would the chairman indicate to the House what his views are with respect to that, whether or not he has had any consultation with the President of the Treasury Board on how that would be accomplished, and generally his reflections on the propriety of that, so that this important matter can be publicly aired.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I do not think it would be in order for me to discuss the matter, but if the House were to decide, in its wisdom, to refer the matter to us, I am sure the committee would start considering the matter at once and report as necessary.

[English]

TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Again with regard to the further business of the committee, Madam Speaker, the chairman knows that the President of the Treasury Board is appearing before the committee next Monday with respect to his estimates. Would he please speak to the President of the Treasury Board and ask him to appear with draft terms of reference for a committee, and other suggestions he has with respect to the hearing of this matter, particularly in view of the fact that it is common knowledge in the country that it is improper to limit public servants' discussions to matters of philosophy, as has been suggested by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: No, no.

• (1440)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, the chairman of the committee, who is about three feet away from me, has understood the question. If he is willing to prepare referral orders for discussion with the House Leader, the other committee would be willing to consider the matter, as I said before.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DOCUMENTS REQUIRED FOR DEFENCE OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE OFFICERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has probably read in the Edmonton Journal the article by Paul Jackson on RCMP espionage activities, which subsequently appeared in yesterday's and today's Journal de Montréal. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether he intends to provide the 33 documents requested and necessary in order to adequately defend the RCMP officers on trial, who seem to have been manipulated for partisan ends?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not read the articles referred to by the hon. member which appeared in several Canadian newspapers, but I am glad he brought this to my attention. I shall check the allegations made in the articles and see whether they should be looked into.

[English]

ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. At one time the Prime Minister was a great advocate of a just society and of freedom of information. It is obvious he no longer believes in that. I am sure he is aware that the release of this documentation is essential for a fair trial for the RCMP officers who have been charged. It is alleged that these documents will shift the blame from the RCMP to Liberal politicians and bureaucrats. Will the Prime Minister respond to those allegations, plus the allegation that his government colleagues are investigating the possibility of destroying these documents? I would appreciate a response from the Prime Minister so that we can be assured that the RCMP will not be hung out to dry.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, these documents have been the subject of questions in the House before. I indicated that those which are being withheld are being withheld on the grounds of national security and cabinet confidentiality. They were not withheld from the McDonald commission. The McDonald commission had unprecedented access to all of the documents affecting Canada's national security and cabinet material relating to the subject of their inquiry. They were quite satisfied, as their report indicated, that the allegations which the hon. member made against members of this government and former members of this government cannot be substantiated by that material.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES FROM LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE IN HULL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Workers at Les Terrasses de la Chaudière in 1978 sent a complaint to the Department of National Health and Welfare about the working conditions in that area, and their health. Three years later we still do not have a full and comprehensive health-related study for the workers in that complex. Will the minister guarantee that those workers who are pregnant or who are ill and are working in that complex can seek transfers to other places of employment in the federal government, without any loss of pay?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, there has been an interdepartmental Treasury Board and PSAC committee working on this. I understand great progress has been made. A considerable amount of money has been spent trying to take remedial action in Les Terrasses. I assume that these matters have been taken into consideration.

APPLICATION OF CANADA LABOUR CODE TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the minister refuses to answer my question. I asked him a specific question. While the study for which we have been waiting three years takes place and before the government acts on the recommendations, can those workers who are pregnant or ill be transferred to other federal government jobs? Will he guarantee them that option? I have a supplementary question.

For the last two years we have been waiting for changes to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code which deals with occupational safety for workers. One of the questions that has to be asked, and hopefully the minister will answer it, is whether federal government workers will be included under Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. Will the minister guarantee that he will not oppose attempts to include federal workers under Part IV of the Canada Labour Code?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Churchill is looking for a lot of guarantees today. I have said in the past that the record of the federal government with respect to health and safety is almost without parallel in this country. We will continue to take whatever steps are appropriate to ensure that that continues.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS ON STATUS OF INDIAN WOMEN

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who last week, in response to questions from the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin, stated in the House that no Indian woman had lost her status since she had become a cabinet minister in 1976. Since that time the Minister of Indian Affairs has publicly refuted her claim by stating that 1,810 Indian women had lost their status between 1976 and 1980. I would have expected the Minister of National Health and Welfare to have come into the House and corrected her misleading statements, but she has not. I am asking her now, when is she going to correct those statements, and do so here in the House, so that they will not remain uncorrected on the records of Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Order. This question should be addressed to the minister responsible for Indian Affairs. I do not feel that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was acting in her administrative capacity when this incident occurred.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSITION OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I will try it this way, Madam Speaker. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare going to stand by the belligerent statements she made in the House that no Indian woman had lost her status since she became a minister, in spite of the fact that the Minister of Indian Affairs has publicly corrected her by stating that 1,810 Indian women lost their status between 1976 and 1980?

Madam Speaker: I am afraid I cannot allow a question that is not related to a minister's ministerial responsibility. The question may be asked of the minister responsible for Indian Affairs.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—CLAIM OF CROWN IMMUNITY FOR URANIUM CANADA

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns Uranium Canada. Counsel for Uranium Canada describes the corporation as follows: it has no employees, no separate place of business, no assets other than $9 and, I quote, "whose acts are directly and completely controlled by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources." In other words, this is nothing more than a shell corporation which is insulating senior energy officials from potential criminal conduct. The Attorney General of Canada alleges there is reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a conspiracy to fix uranium prices has occurred. In those circumstances, will the minister instruct counsel to withdraw the technical defence of Crown immunity and permit a trial to go on as the other defendants are having, or does he believe that Crown corporations are above the law?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): To begin with, Madam Speaker, I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that the matter is before the courts. It is improper to bring before the House of Commons quotes from arguments used by counsel before the courts. It is a long-established rule that parliamentarians abstain from commenting on a particular case. As far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, I indicated yesterday that I never gave any instruction to Uranium Canada or counsel for Uranium Canada in this regard, and I do not intend to start doing it now.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF BERTRAND REPORT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, this is just another example in a long history of cover-ups on this important matter. My supplementary question is to the Minister of Justice. The minister knows that in the province of Ontario it is the practice of the court that there be full disclosure made to all of the accused. What reason is there not to hand over the Bertrand report to the accused in this particular trial?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I was reading a document and did not hear the question. I am sorry. If the hon. member wants to repeat his question, I will answer it.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. As the minister knows, there is a long tradition in Ontario courts of full disclosure so that an accused can know exactly the case he has to meet. In this particular case the defence has asked that the Bertrand report be turned over to it so that the accused can defend themselves. Why is counsel acting on behalf of the minister refusing to give the accused the Bertrand report, and why does he not make it public for the people of Canada?

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, reports prepared by the office involved have always been handled in this way. In the present case I was not aware that there was a motion before the court. I will look into this and report to the hon. member. This is the first time the problem has been brought to my attention.

TRANSFER OF URANIUM CANADA SHARES TO MINISTER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the minister stated in the House in connection with the prosecution for price fixing against Uranium Canada that the Crown corporation was acting independently and that the board of directors of Uranium Canada, and not the minister, was instructing counsel.

On May 1, 1981, all of the qualifying shares of the directors were transferred to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and are now held by the minister. In other words, there is no board of directors. The Crown corporation is a shell. It operates only on the instructions of the minister and the cabinet under order in council. I want to ask the minister why he misled the House yesterday. What is he trying to cover up? What is he trying to hide? Can he not, for once, tell the truth in this House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I refer the hon. member to the answer I gave in the House yesterday. If he reads that answer, he will find that he is not quoting me appropriately, adequately or fairly.

The hon. member referred to a transfer of shares. Indeed, there is always a minister who is the shareholder of any Crown corporation. My hon. friend knows the difference between directors, officers and shareholders of a corporation. The shareholder in this case is the Government of Canada. Ministers are shareholders, on behalf of the government, of various Crown corporations.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ISSUE INSTRUCTIONS TO URANIUM CANADA

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the point is that under the authorizing act Uranium Canada could do nothing during this whole episode without specific direction from a minister and the cabinet by order in council. The minister insists on trying to avoid ministerial responsibility in this matter. He knows Uranium Canada was an instrument of the government and the ministry.

Will the minister not accept his responsibility and tell us whether he will instruct Uranium Canada to remove itself from the position it is adopting of taking itself out of this prosecution and giving itself a different class of protection which the ordinary citizen in Canada does not have?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I answered this question in the House yesterday, and I have answered it again today. I have not given any instructions to Uranium Canada or to counsel for Uranium Canada, and I do not intend to give any. Counsel for Uranium Canada is free to invoke any argument he, as counsel for that corporation, finds appropriate. I do not intend to interfere with the operation of the trial.

FINANCE

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He has removed himself to the back seats.

Mr. Wilson: Where he should be.

Mr. Kempling: Here he comes.

Mr. Oberle: The question is a follow-up to a series of questions which had been posed to him on earlier occasions, and it has to do with the small business bond.

The minister undertook in this House several weeks ago to review the bond procedure in order to examine whether private investors and other banking institutions should not be allowed to purchase and issue these bonds with a government guarantee. I wonder if the minister could report today whether this review is complete and whether a new position has been arrived at by the government.

I am particularly concerned about the fact the Federal Business Development Bank, which is a banking institution of last resort and the institution to which most people in dire straits would go, cannot issue these bonds. It is particularly difficult for people in rural areas, farmers and small businessmen in outlying regions where our banking institutions are more reluctant than they are in the cities to make venture capital loans.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will be aware that the reason the small business bond is attractive to the banks and the reason financial institutions can make available lower rates of interest to borrowers through the bond is because of the tax situation of the banking institutions. It is not appropriate in all cases even for the banks to participate in the bond because of their lack of tax room. In a sense that is the limiting factor in the proposal made by the hon. member, which otherwise could be considered.

AVAILABILITY OF PROGRAM

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, that is precisely the question. Why can the bond not be made available or why can it not be based on other criteria? Certainly a private investor could be offered the same advantage the banks are getting and, contrary to the minister's contention, the banks do not like the bond. They do not find it attractive. Credit unions, caisses populaires and the Federal Business Development Bank are not in a position to issue these bonds.

Since the bond is seen by the minister—according to his pronouncements—as a meaningful aid to businesses in dire straits, why can the concept not be broadened to include private investors and the institutions I have named, namely, credit unions, caisses populaires and, more important, the Federal Business Development Bank?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member himself has mentioned, because of the reasons I have given and because of the ability of banks to use their tax room, the bond has flowed a total of $2.597 billion into the private sector. That is a rather substantial sum of money. In the last month alone an additional more than $110 million has been made available through the bond.

What the hon. member is asking for is really a new instrument altogether, because this particular instrument, at least based upon what the hon. member has stated and my understanding of it, would not appear to be designed to handle those situations. Of course I would be glad to review again the suggestion the hon. member has included today in his question.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who will know that the—

Madam Speaker: Order please. I must apologize. Did I see the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition rising?

Mr. Clark: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I will recognize him.

CIRCULATION OF TAX FORMS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and it relates to the circulation of tax forms which ask Canadians to pay tax in relation to proposals Parliament has not seen. The minister has indicated that he is proposing flexibility—that is his word for it—in dealing with the budget proposals. By publishing these tax forms is the minister saying that there will be no changes in the budget proposals respecting IAACs, capital cost allowance, RRSPs and capital gains reserves?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all, it is the Minister of National Revenue who, in the normal course, distributes tax forms, not the Minister of Finance. That is the first error in the right hon. member's question. The second error is his suggestion that the tax forms are based on taxes Parliament has not seen. All the tax changes have been seen by Parliament. They are all included in the ways and means motions. That ought to be known to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Never in the history of the country has a minister of finance ever precluded the possibility of changes until the bills themselves were before the House; otherwise, it would be total contempt for the parliamentary process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

QUERY RESPECTING DRAFT LEGISLATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who has demonstrated more contempt for the parliamentary process than any minister of finance in history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1500)

Mr. Clark: The minister keeps defending his budget by promising to change it. That is what makes this situation so unique, Madam Speaker. I should like the minister, either directly or through the Minister of National Revenue, to indicate whether the deliberate publication of those tax forms, as a matter of government policy, indicates that no change will be contemplated or allowed by the minister in the matters I have specified.

Let me ask the minister another question, Madam Speaker. Will he tell the House whether he is considering publishing draft budget legislation before he introduces the budget bills relating to any aspect of the budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in reply to the first question, the practice that has been followed is the practice that has been followed following every budget that has ever been produced in the history of the House of Commons.

Mr. Nielsen: With 18 changes?

Mr. MacEachen: The answer to the second question is yes. The answer was given several days ago to the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre who asked the question.

Mr. Clark: Good Lord!

PRIVILEGE

MISS MACDONALD—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENTS OF MISS BÉGIN

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege regarding certain misleading statements made in the House by the Minister of Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) on March 22, 1982, as reported at page 15667 of Hansard.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has a question of privilege to raise in the House, she should give me notice of that with a brief statement so that I can consider whether it is a question of privilege. That is the only way I can hear the hon. member's question of privilege, unless it arises from the proceedings of today.

Miss MacDonald: That is right.

Madam Speaker: The hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has not spoken in the House today. That is why I immediately interrupted the hon. member because it can hardly arise from that.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I raise this question of privilege at the first opportunity that I have to raise it in the House following the questions which I put today to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This is the first day that, first, I could be recognized by the Speaker and could put that question since the minister made her misleading statement; and second, since she has been in the chamber. It could not have been put to her beforehand. I therefore raise it on the basis that this question was raised in the House of Commons today and these misleading statements remain on the record of Parliament. I know of no other way to get them corrected than to ask the minister to rise in her place and do so, through this question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: I think I can assist the hon. member by reminding her now that what she considers to be a misleading statement by a minister or by another member of the House does not necessarily constitute a question of privilege; it is often a matter of debate. If the hon. member has a question of privilege, even though she alleges she was not able to ask the question before today—although I think I recognized her some time last week—that does not mean I can waive the requirement for the hon. member to give me notice of her question of privilege and a brief statement of what constitutes that question of privilege.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): This becomes a little difficult, Madam Speaker. Since the recent changes, the rules have not precluded a question of privilege from being raised during question period. A practice has developed since the recent changes where questions of privilege and points of order have been deferred until after the question period is over. Had the incident been raised as a question of privilege when it happened, I am sure it would have been treated in a far different fashion. I see you are already nodding in the negative, Madam Speaker, even though I have not finished my submission. Perhaps by the time I have, I will have been able to convince you.

The question arises because of the intervention of the Chair in not permitting the minister to reply. The question that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was putting to the minister was based upon a statement made by the minister in this House. It is totally irrelevant, in my submission, that the statement made by the minister was made in an area which does not concern her jurisdiction.

I might cite as a precedent in that connection the incident that gave rise to the minister's statement in the first place. It was a question and a supplementary put by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) in connection with statements made by the minister in a speech. At that time the Chair permitted both questions and both answers.

That is where the difficulty started. The minister is now on the official record of the proceedings of this House as having made statements which the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands wishes to question. Indeed, she cites the intervention of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). We have two ministers of the Crown, both in this place, saying totally different things.

The question of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands would surely be a proper one, directed as it was to the minister and asking whether she was going to allow her misleading statement to stand. Is that a statement that exposes the government's position or is the correct statement the one made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

In terms of the question before the Chair, surely that has nothing to do with ministerial responsibility in the particular portfolio she or he holds; it has to do with the accuracy, indeed the validity, of statements made to members in this House. Not only has the questioner a right to put the question, but it would seem to me that the minister has an obligation to answer. The question can only be put to someone on the government benches and it can only be answered by the minister who made the statement. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development cannot answer for the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether something that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said is true or needs correction. Surely it is only the minister who made the statement who can make the necessary correction.

Indeed, in the past when the matter of a doubtful or misleading statement has been drawn to the attention of a minister, normally the minister has stood in the House and said, "What I said was correct and I stand by it," or "What I said was incorrect and it should be amended to such and such an extent." That was the opportunity that was being given to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, whose statement is in question, by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. I submit she should have been allowed to answer about the correctness or otherwise of the statement if for no other reason than to clear her own reputation.

If, based on the ruling of the Chair a moment ago, Your Honour feels that it is more appropriate—and I submit it is not—for us to raise a question of privilege based on what are alleged to be misleading statements by way of formal written notice, then of course we will do so. But there is an entirely different question here, in my submission, and that is the right of a member to question ministers with respect to statements made by them in the House and, perhaps even more important, the right of ministers to respond.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I just want to straighten out a number of facts. When the question was asked by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), I remember very well that I was not clear, from the way the question was formulated, whether I should allow the Minister of National Health and Welfare to answer, but I let it go. Things go very fast in the House. I let it go because I was not sure whether it was time for me to intervene. I really did not know whether or not the question was directed to her ministerial responsibilities, by the way the question was formulated. Subsequently, I believe it was the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) who answered further questions on this particular subject which I allowed, if my memory is correct.

• (1510)

Today it was quite clear to me, having heard of course the previous questions, that in my conception of what are the ministerial responsibilities of National Health and Welfare, this matter did not belong to her ministerial responsibilities. This is why I did not allow the minister to answer. It is certain that the proceedings wherein the Minister of National Health and Welfare made a statement arising out of the questions asked by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin took place at another sitting. Since it was at another sitting, I have no choice but to apply the rule whereby the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, whose right it is to raise a question of privilege, should give notice of the question of privilege, which I could hear subsequently.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder whether the Chair would please deal with my second submission, that is, the right of Members of Parliament to question ministers of the Crown on statements made in this place during its proceedings and on which members may wish to question their validity. That was my second submission. I maintain that we have the right as Members of Parliament to question ministers of the Crown with respect to the nature, misleading or otherwise, of statements they have made in this place. That is what was stopped today.

Madam Speaker: The particular statement to which the hon. member is referring was made in the House and normally hon. members are allowed to question ministers about statements made in the House; but as I explained a few minutes ago, there was a slight slip in that particular instance as to whether the minister ought to have been allowed to answer. I felt today that I should not allow it twice. The hon. member might contest it; I would think it is a fair point. I will look into it to see how I can remedy it. Of course hon. members are allowed to ask questions of ministers on statements they have made in the House. That is objectively right, but the context we are discussing is slightly different. I submit to the hon. member that, since in the first instance I let it go because I was not quite sure, perhaps he can accept my explanation today. I decided not to let it go because I was quite sure it was not within the hon. member's ministerial responsibilities.

Mr. Nielsen: There is one last point which I might leave with the Chair. I will not comment on the treatment of the Chair with respect to the original question of the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin. Perhaps it should have been stopped; perhaps the minister should not have been allowed to answer it. But the fact remains that the statement is on the record and the allegation is that it is misleading. This is what we were attempting to deal with today.

While the Chair has it under consideration, it might well wish to consider the fact that we should not be burdened with the difficulties now confronting the Chair, in terms of the Chair's original decision or lack of it, in trying to deal with the record in the way we did today. I do not think the matter would be worthy of pursuit as a question of privilege if we could be assured that the exchange, which the minister was denied from responding to today, would be allowed for instance tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: I will look at the rule to see exactly how it is worded. My impression now is that I could not allow the hon. minister to answer a question which does not relate to her administrative responsibility. That is my position now and, therefore, I would have to answer, without having checked further, that I do not think I would be able to allow it tomorrow.

To pursue what the hon. member just discussed, I do not believe I am burdening hon. members because of the slight slip which I will admit might have happened the other day. The proceedings took place on a day other than today. It is quite clear that under any circumstances the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, if she wishes to raise a question of privilege, may do it in the normal fashion. I refer her to Standing Order 17(2) whereby she may send me notice of her question of privilege, and I will hear her at another time.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise just very briefly on this matter. In considering whatever it is you will be considering tomorrow, you might want to pay heed to the fact that, in addition to allowing the question of the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), you at some considerable time later in the question period allowed me to direct a question on the same matter to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). If a slip were made in the first instance, Your Honour would want to consider whether or not the fact that that line of questioning was allowed to continue after some time for the Chair to reflect would have any bearing upon the judgment and the standards you would want the House to follow subsequently.

Madam Speaker: Yes, I would want to do that. Could I ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) whether the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare answered the question or whether it was answered by the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Mr. Clark: The question was answered by the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare, as reported on page 15671 of Hansard.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF CONSOLIDATED COMPUTERS INC.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker will recall that yesterday the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) indicated that he would be providing me with some information about the Consolidated Computer matter today. I want to thank the minister who I believe has remained in the chamber for that purpose. I wonder whether he might have the indulgence of the House to fulfil that commitment.

Madam Speaker: This can be done only with unanimous consent, because at this particular time we cannot continue question period. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I was willing to give the answer during question period, but I did not know how to do it because the occasion did not arise. I should like to inform the hon. member that the reference was made to the Department of Justice, according to Section 4 of the Department of Justice Act which requires the minister to see that the administration of the public sector is in accordance with the law. It is under this section of the Department of Justice Act that my department is conducting an inquiry into the matter at this time. If there are other proceedings, I will inform the House of Commons.

While I am on my feet, the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) asked me a question as well.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: I will try to do it tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: The hon. minister has had unanimous consent to answer one question, not a second one.

PETITION

MR. FRIESEN—PAYMENT MADE TO CONVICTED MURDERER CLIFFORD OLSON

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and the honour to present a petition containing something over 2,000 names. It was presented to me by Mr. David Shoesmith and Mr. Norman Carr of Sarnia. The subject of the petition has to do with their concern that $100,000 was paid to the family of Clifford Robert Olson. In part the petition indicates that the undersigned believe the pay-off of $100,000 to the convicted killer, Clifford Olson, is grossly unjust. It goes on to indicate that in any event the $100,000 should be immediately retrieved and given to the families of the victims.

I want to add that from what they have told me they gathered these names at their own expense. They paid their own air fares to come to Ottawa to present the petition to me. They were particularly concerned that so little attention was paid in the area of public sympathy for the families and that a lot of notoriety—

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not allowed to debate the petition. He should just announce the title, and then the petition is received by the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,544, 3,681, 3,715, 4,042 and 4,044.

PETRO-CANADA—SUPPLY AND SERVICE CONTRACTS

Question No. 3,544—Mr. Andre:

1. What official policy, if any, governs the awarding of contracts by Petro-Canada, or any of its subsidiary corporations, to Canadian-owned companies as distinct from American-owned companies involved in the supplying or servicing of the Canadian oil and gas industry?

2. Will the government table a copy of any written communication to Petro-Canada informing the corporation as to its obligations with respect to supply or service contracts?

3. In the case of the Petro-Canada drilling site (a) PEX Fina Berland 11-31-59-24 W5 (b) Bedford Dolphin off the coast of Nova Scotia, was the mud-supplying contract awarded to an American-owned company and, if so, in each case, was the contract awarded despite equally competitive bids made by Canadian companies?

4. As of January 1, 1979, what were the annual expenditures by Petro-Canada on oil and gas exploration and development and what amount was allocated to the purchase of supplies and services from other (a) companies (b) Canadian-owned companies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

2. As per act, Petro-Canada is an independent agent and it is the policy of the Government of Canada not to interfere in the administration of a proprietary corporation.

Petro-Canada reports as follows:

1. Petro-Canada has always believed that, wherever and whenever possible, contracts and business should be given to Canadians. It has been the corporation's goal since inception not only to seek Canadian partners in joint venture, but whenever possible to maximize the use of Canadian suppliers of goods and sevices.

3. (a) and (b) The particular instances of specific contracts signed by Petro-Canada are considered by the corporation to be of a managerial decision-making nature and of such a nature as to provide information which might give an undue advantage to competitors.

4. Information is not available in the form requested.

EPILEPSY

Question No. 3,681—Mr. Herbert:

1. How many Canadians are known to have epilepsy?

2. Does the government finance research in this area and, if so, what amount was made available in the last year for which figures are available?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned:

1. There are no accurate figures available. The best estimate indicates that there are between 200,000 and 240,000 people with epilepsy in Canada.

2. Yes, $27,079 in 1981-82.

In so far as the Medical Research Council is concerned:

1. To be answered elsewhere.

2. Yes, $774,846 in 1981-82.

Order Paper Questions

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED

Question No. 3,715—Mr. Herbert:

1. Since 1977, who was the (a) Chairman of the Board (b) President and Chief Executive Officer (c) Vice-President of Eldorado Nuclear Limited?

2. Since 1977, were the shares held in trust by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and were appointments to the Board of Directors made by the Minister?

3. (a) Does the shareholder approve all capital budget submissions (b) do the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board play a part in the approval process and, if so, what part?

4. Is the broad outline of any capital investment proposal of Eldorado Nuclear Limited included in the capital budget submission for shareholder approval?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Eldorado Nuclear Limited reports as follows:

1. (a) and (b) Mr. N. M. Ediger. (c) Jan. 1, 1977-Jan. 31, 1979, Mr. C. G. Baschenis. Since Nov. 19, 1979, Mr. M. J. Moreau.

2. Since 1977, all the shares of ENL have been held in trust by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources save for those shares held by directors as directors' qualifying shares. In 1981, these shares were no longer required by law and were thus returned to the minister of EM&R. Since 1977, appointments to the board of directors have been made by the minister acting as the sole shareholder of the corporation.

3. (a) and (b) Eldorado Nuclear Limited's annual capital budget is prepared internally for ENL's board of directors and is then reviewed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Finance and President of the Treasury Board, who recommend the capital budget to the governor in council for approval.

4. Capital investment proposals of a significant nature are described and included in the capital budget proposal.

INDOCHINA INTERNATIONAL COMMISSIONS FOR SUPERVISION AND CONTROL

Question No. 4,042—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. What is the current status of the financial accounts winding up the three Southeast Asian Tripartite Commissions for Supervision and Control (Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos)?

2. What was the total cost of the operations?

3. What contribution was made to the operations by each of the signatories to the Geneva agreements of 1954 and 1961?

4. Are any of the signatories still in default and, if so, which ones and in what amount?

5. Were efforts made to collect from those in default and, if so, what were such efforts?

6. On what date was the last attempt made to settle the account and in what manner was the démarche taken?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as the Department of External Affairs is concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. The financial accounts with respect to the operations of the ICSC are the responsibility of India as the designated administering power under the Geneva agreements. India presented a final statement of account, including recoverable costs incurred by Canada, to the co-chairmen of the 1954 Geneva Conference—the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R.—in 1973. An appeal was subsequently addressed to the contributors—the United Kingdom, France, the U.S.S.R., the People's Republic of China and the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam—to settle the outstanding debts of the commission, including those owed to the member powers, by financial contributions to the common fund. This appeal, as was the case with previous appeals dating back to commencement of the commission, was not responded to by all of the contributing powers. As a result, the accounts remain open until such time as the contributing powers meet their financial obligations.

2. The total cost of the operation for Canada was $10,509,000 of which $5,573,000 was non-recoverable and $4,936,000 was recoverable. The total cost of the operations for the three supervisory powers is not known as we do not have access to the complete records of expenditures for India and Poland.

3. The contributing powers to the common fund set up for the Viet Nam and Cambodia Commissions—the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R., France and the People's Republic of China—were responsible for 25 per cent each of the costs. The contributing powers to the commission for Laos and their respective financial responsibilities are: People's Republic of China, France, United Kingdom, U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. (17.6 per cent); Burma, Cambodia, Laos, North Viet Nam, South Viet Nam, Thailand (1.5 per cent); Canada, India, Poland (1 per cent). The precise contributions of countries other than Canada are not available from our records.

4. The common fund is considered the administrative debtor for funds owed to the participating countries in the ICSCs and the contributing powers have a collective responsibility to meet the financial obligations to the fund. Certain contributing powers have made no contributions to the fund (People's Republic of China, Democratic Republic of Viet Nam) and have never evinced any desire to meet their financial obligations.

5 and 6. Various efforts have been made to have the contributing powers meet their financial obligations to the common fund, but these have not been received with any enthusiasm. Canada has made various direct approaches to the Indian government, the governments of the contributing powers and the co-chairmen of the 1954 Geneva Conference regarding reimbursement of the outstanding amounts—$3,208,043—owed to Canada. Our last official démarches were made in 1978 but the subject has been brought up informally from time to time since then by our embassy in Moscow and our high commission in London. We are not optimistic that the amounts owing either to Canada or to the other participants will be recovered but the accounts remain open and further efforts will be made to obtain reimbursement.

AIR CANADA PILOTS

Question No. 4,044—Mr. Corbin:

1. How many pilots are employed by Air Canada and how many (a) speak (i) French (ii) English (iii) another language as their mother tongue (b) indicated (i) French (ii) English (iii) French and English as their language of work?

2. What percentage of all the pilots is represented by each group in Part 1?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

1 and 2. Available statistics relate to the employee's principal language. The latest figures compiled in November 1981 are:

English	1,638	86.5 per cent
French	226	12. per cent
Other	30	1.5 per cent

It has not been found necessary to record preferred language of work. As an indication of the interest among pilots in being able to work in French, 77 have requested and hold copies of the French-language version of the pilot manuals (4.1 per cent).
