Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on this bill, I want to bring to the attention of the House two or three things that I think are quite significant. First, I believe the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has not fulfilled his responsibility in the manner in which he could have and should have. Certainly there has been a real lack of imagination on his part. This is evidenced by the lack of programming that has taken place and the lack of interest that he has portrayed by not doing the things required in order to have a healthy agricultural community in Canada. You can have the most productive land in the world and you can have the best farmers in the world, Mr. Speaker, but unless the government sets the climate for continuing production, production which the world requires, then the agricultural industry and those involved in it will suffer as a consequence.

Over the last ten years I feel that the agricultural community in Canada has suffered great neglect as a result of the administration of the present Minister of Agriculture. I well remember when he first took office. He said that he was going to be a minister of agriculture who answered the phone. I think that about all he has done over the years is answer the phone. Unfortunately, no one else has filled the vacancy created by the minister while he answers the phone. While I recognize the importance of this bill, which will supply more funding to the farmers all across Canada, nevertheless that is not the answer to the agricultural problems in Canada today.

We have a government which seems to be ever incessant in its tax demands. It places the burden on those people who are producing and who are working, but fewer and fewer people are carrying the load. My first question, then, to the minister and to members opposite is this: is anyone listening? Does anyone actually know what has happened? The warning flags are out and Members of Parliament better realize that. Farmers and those in the agricultural industry are slipping further and further into debt. Sure, we get extra financing for a short time, but this financing is at an ever-increasing rate of interest. High interest costs are causing the problems facing the farming community. Those of us who have many farmers in our constituencies recognize that last summer the crunch started to come when interest rates escalated to an all-time Canadian high. It was at that time that farmers got into trouble. Farmers were prepared to carry a reasonable rate of interest, say 10 per cent or 11 per cent, but once interest rates got up into the high teens and low twenties, that is when their serious problems commenced. Farmers had to start selling off parts of their farming operations. That is why the situation is so serious, and that is why I say that the warning flags are out.

I would venture to say that this year the net income of agricultural producers will be down 25 per cent. That is a 25 per cent drop simply because the input costs of those involved in the agricultural industry will rise somewhere between 10 per cent and 15 per cent.

I will explain and give one example to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the House, of where the government is responsible for some of the cost. I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) yesterday whether he would consider abolishing the excise tax on home heating fuels, natural gas and home heating oil. Farmers also have to heat their homes just like all other consumers in Canada.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says we have to bring prices down to control inflation. We agree with him about that. We agree with the Prime Minister that inflation has to be controlled. But you have to recognize it was the same Prime Minister who told us some seven years ago that inflation was wrestled to the ground. Where is inflation today compared to seven years ago? Inflation is running rampant. The government does not know how to handle a situation like this. Yet the government is adding to inflation by levying an extra excise tax on fuel for home heating, such as natural gas and oil.

There are farmers in our area whose costs to heat their poultry houses, their hog barns and their homes are $1,000 a month. Almost one third of that cost is going into the federal coffers through excise tax. It would seem to me that if the Minister of Agriculture had any clout or if there was any desire on the part of those in the cabinet to improve the situation, one of the things they would want to do would be to refrain from placing an extra burden on those in the productive end of agriculture. Why can the government not bring costs down? Why do we have to have extra burdens placed on those people who are trying to produce and who are working longer hours perhaps than any other sector of our community? Yet the government will not see fit to cut back on that tax.

I want to tell you something else, Mr. Speaker. Many rural communities have natural gas supplied by co-ops which they have set up and are running themselves. These co-ops have to collect this tax. At the present time the government will not wait a reasonable length of time, say 90 days, for that tax. We have discussed this 90-day collection time before in the House. I am sure that if you had your way, Mr. Speaker, the message would get through to the cabinet and they would wait at least 90 days before requiring money from the co-operatives. But no, the Minister of Finance said yesterday he is not prepared to change that tax at the present time. To me that is totally unacceptable. It is not realistic to require co-operatives to pay money over before they collect it. Because of that requirement, the co-operatives have a continuous loan in the vicinity of $100,000. I do not think that is just, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you do not either.

Mr. Smith: You are out of order.

Mr. Towers: It is not out of order.

Mr. Smith: You cannot drag the Speaker into the debate.

Mr. Towers: I am speaking to you through the Speaker, if you would only listen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that remarks should be addressed to the Chair. The Chair takes a broad view of the remarks addressed through him to the House.

Mr. Towers: The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that members opposite cannot face the truth. I said earlier that the farming community is going to have a drop of approximately 25 per cent in their net income this year. This is really serious because it is going to put an extra strain on their finances. At the present time the price of beef and pork is down 10 per cent to 15 per cent. Barley is down about $1 a bushel, and wheat is down about $2. So how can we expect the farming community to cope with this 10 per cent or 15 per cent increase in the cost of production? Because that is what it is. They are caught in the squeeze and we have a government which will not move even a little to help them.

Why should we bring in legislation to increase production costs, which is what is happening with the increase in the gasoline tax? We have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that our producers have to compete with the United States, and at the present time the price of gasoline there is approximately 10 per cent or 15 per cent less than here. We are putting producers in a strait-jacket, and it is totally unacceptable.

I do not like statistics, Mr. Speaker, but I am going to put some on record to show the current situation in the agricultural industry. I am glad to see the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell), the former premier of one of our great provinces, is here listening to this debate because I know his province's economy depends a great deal on agriculture. Repayment arrears to the Farm Credit Corporation are increasing in all provinces with the exception of British Columbia. Compared to 1980, the arrears for 1981 in Alberta increased from 8.7 per cent to 9.7 per cent; in Saskatchewan, 6.1 per cent to 7.3 per cent; Manitoba, 5.5 per cent to 9.1 per cent; Ontario, 5.9 per cent to 7.6 per cent; Quebec, 6.1 per cent to 9 per cent; New Brunswick, 8.9 per cent to 11.2 per cent;

Nova Scotia, 9.6 per cent to 12.8 per cent; Prince Edward Island, 8.9 per cent to 10.7 per cent; Newfoundland, 30.6 per cent to 35.9 per cent. The over-all average increase was from 6.7 per cent to 8.3 per cent.

That is the trend, Mr. Speaker. Farmers are delaying their repayments with the result that there is not as much money to lend out as there should be. Therefore, we have to recognize there is a problem out there, it is increasing, and these changes to the FCC will not really have that much effect on the over-all operation of the corporation or the farming community.

One of the fears I have concerning this bill is the suggestion made by the Minister of Agriculture in committee when he said that perhaps the corporation could go to Switzerland to borrow cheap money. Mr. Speaker, I want to warn the government and the farmer that what may be cheap money today may not be so cheap down the road. If rumours of depreciation of the dollar ever materialize, those loans will no longer be cheap. I would far rather have the Minister of Agriculture accept the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and allow the FCC to borrow money within our own economic community. The money might come from farmers selling their farms, or they might have had a good year with extra money available which they could put into the FCC and not have to pay tax on until such time as they are ready. There might be other groups or individuals who are prepared to do the same thing. It is a great way to Canadianize the system. Far better to do that than to try and Canadianize some of those Swiss banks.

The attempt by this government to Canadianize the industry is one of the reasons we now have higher energy costs than the United States. A great portion of the funding for this program comes out of the agricultural community because farmers use a lot of energy. A lot of their tax dollars are being siphoned off to buy oil companies which are not going to find or produce another barrel of oil, and I do not think they are going to make oil any cheaper. In fact, if we recognize what some Crown corporations have done to Canada, they will in fact increase the cost to the consumer.

I think the minister is on the wrong track by not accepting the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. The only excuse the Minister of Agriculture could give us last night for not accepting this amendment was that his advisers were against it. Well, for goodness sakes! I would like to ask hon. members opposite, who is running the Department of Agriculture? It is certainly not the Minister of Agriculture, if he is relying on his advisers. He is the man who should be running that department. He should be running it instead of answering the phone, as I said earlier.

We must recognize that there are problems on the horizon and that unless something is done very quickly, there will be continuing problems. I recognize that while the Minister of Agriculture, I believe in all honesty, is trying to do something, he still does not seem to have the desire or the ability to accomplish anything which will be of significant benefit. He will not be able to do this unless he changes his ways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill today. I come from a riding which is a very rich agricultural area, especially in the southern and western parts. When I read the history of my area, the riding of Victoria-Haliburton, I could understand why the early settlers came there. They arrived by water and by land, and they undertook to clear this very fertile soil and to make homes for their families for generations to come. We do have some industry. We have a mixed riding. Today I want to discuss the agricultural industry. There are a number of farmers in my riding who are in milk and grain production, and in every other segment of the agricultural industry.

There are a number of features in this bill with which I agree. I might even say that some of them are long overdue. However, considering the state of the agricultural industry in Canada, I would have to ask if this bill is too late to be truly effective in revitalizing the agricultural industry. This bill would have to be implemented in tandem with a policy of low interest rates. All hon. members in this House are aware, even those who are not directly involved in agriculture, that high interest rates are killing off the farms at a rate not seen in our country since the great depression.

I am encouraged by the provisions of this bill which would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to advance loans to non-farmers who can provide a plan indicating they would become viable within five years. However, unless we can provide some assurance that they will remain on their farms for five years or more, Bill C-88 will be just another exercise in futility. What chance will they have to survive if farmers of long experience and of proven good management are selling out, some for small profits and others just to cut their losses? There were more than 8,000 farm failures in 1981, a large percentage of which were bankruptcies. A vast majority involved experienced farmers.

I want to see more people, especially young people, getting started in farming. For some people it is the only way of life they want. However, almost every day people tell me that they simply cannot afford the large down payment required today, mostly due to the provisions in the November 1981 budget concerning capital gains reserves and income averaging annuity contracts. After a lifetime of hard work, looking forward to the day when he can retire in comfort, the farmer of today must get a large down payment on the sale of his farm just to pay the capital gains tax, a tax on money he hoped to collect in the future.

There are some aspects of this bill which farmers can applaud, although not too loudly. There is no indication in Bill C-88 that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are on the same wavelength. One giveth and the other taketh away. The Minister of Agriculture has been reported as saying that the Farm Credit Corporation will have $1 billion to lend out by June of this year. I notice that this bill will authorize the corporation to obtain a total of $350 million from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This is based on a formula whereby the corporation would be able to obtain from the government 25 times its capitalization of $14 million.

Let us assume that the Farm Credit Corporation fund will be swollen by an additional $150 million this year through payments by mortgage holders. This would make a total of $500 million available to the Farm Credit Corporation to make new loans. What would be the source of the other $500 million? It would presumably be through the provisions of Clause 8 of this bill which revises Section 13 of the Farm Credit Act. This revised section would authorize the Farm Credit Corporation, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, to borrow money by any means, including the issuing and selling of bonds, debentures, notes and other evidence of the indebtedness of the corporation.

Under subsection (2) we find that the Minister of Finance may lend the Farm Credit Corporation money out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. So far, so good. But we then come to subsection (3), which states that the aggregate amount outstanding pursuant to subsections (1) and (2) shall not at any time exceed 25 times the capital of the corporation. By my calculations, this brings us back to the $500 million, not the $1 billion trotted out by the Minister of Agriculture.

I would like some assurance from the minister that this is not some more of the razzle-dazzle practised so skilfully by the Minister of Finance. I would like to have some assurance from the Minister of Agriculture that the $350 million from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, plus the $150 million payment from mortgage holders, will be separate and distinct from the corporation's authorization to borrow money on the market.

There is also the question of what rates of interest will apply where funds other than those from the Consolidated Revenue Fund are loaned by the Farm Credit Corporation. Funds raised through bonds and debentures will command a higher rate of interest than the rate presently charged by the Farm Credit Corporation. There is nothing in this bill to indicate whether these higher rates of interest will be subsidized by the federal government.

I am not too pleased with Clause 14 of this bill. It authorizes the Farm Credit Corporation to keep its funds and accounts in the Bank of Canada and other financial institutions in and out of Canada. I think it should state "any financial institution in Canada", period.

I would like to go back for a moment to the question of the presumed authorization of the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow money on the open market. I think that some clarification of this section is called for. However, let us assume that the corporation does float bonds and debentures on the money market. I would like to see some provision in this bill whereby the Farm Credit Corporation would be able to issue bonds such as the Small Business Development Bond and that the interest be made tax deductible. If it works for business it should work for the farmer.

I certainly go along with the phrase of the Minister of Agriculture quoted yesterday by the member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), when the minister stated that the future of agriculture is ahead of us. I believe that, Mr. Speaker, and I also believe in the interest of the Minister of Agriculture. I think he tries. Probably he is not getting the support he should. I have found in my dealings with the Minister of Agriculture that I always get along very well with him. He has been very receptive. We meet and we chat quite often. But I think the government has a responsibility to our agricultural industry, the oldest industry that has a future in Canada, if it is managed properly by the department and encouraged.

The interest rate the farmer has to pay today to obtain conventional loans from the bank makes it absolutely impossible for him to borrow money and carry on. This is what is hurting our farming community probably more than anything else. It is also hurting every other industry. It leaves the farmer very uncompetitive in a market that fluctuates up and down.

Another point is that the return the farmer receives on his product is going down. The attitude of the banking industry toward the farmer and the agricultural industry is such that over 8,000 farmers last year had to declare bankruptcy. There probably will be many more. This is something our country cannot afford.

Our farmers are faced on practically every product with a decrease in their returns. This is something they may have to take for granted. When they go to the bank to arrange a loan—which is practically a necessity with every farmer today, not all but the vast majority of them—and when they go to sell their product, they are not sure what they will get for it on the market.

Many farmers come to me with their problems, and I can recall a few of them. In one case I might mention, the farm was handed down from father to son for generations. As the method of farming changed, the son who inherited the farm was forced to buy new machinery. He was forced to go, as some people would say, "mod" if he wanted to stay in existence. He goes to the Farm Credit Corporation; he goes to his bank; he borrows money. He has no idea that there will be an increase in interest rates three years down the road. Probably he was underfinanced by the Farm Credit Corporation. They gave him all kinds of advice, that he had to buy a certain type of machinery to be successful or he would not get a loan, or he had to increase his production of whatever the commodity may have been or he would not qualify for a loan. He would not have the cash flow. Today, not only have the returns and the cash flow gone down, but his interest rate has gone up. It leaves him in a very tight position.

When he goes back to the Farm Credit Corporation, he is told, "You are doing things all in the wrong way; your cash flow is not high enough". What is this man to do? He can get no more money from his bank. The Farm Credit Corporation should, to my mind, give him more money. I know there are exceptions; I will not stand here and say there are not. There are exceptions. But there also should be consideration. The Farm Credit Corporation should be acting to promote the agricultural industry. Its goal is the betterment of the agricultural industry, but it is letting this farmer down. He is going to lose the family farm; he has teenage daughters going to school; he has a small family; he is going to go through the embarrassment of asking, "How many lives is this going to ruin?"

How many people that make that decision in respect of this gentleman have to worry about their pay cheque? I think some of our people representing probably every segment of our government, those who have to deal with the real world of people, are not understanding enough. They are too inconsiderate; they go out with a blank piece of paper and forms and regulations. There is no end to it.

Also the farmer, if he is successful, probably has to wait. I had a phone call this morning. A young farmer who had over $70,000 collateral to put up and who wanted to borrow $40,000 to increase his farm machinery for custom work—I will deal with that in a moment—goes to the Farm Credit Corporation and is told he has to wait six weeks before they would even look at his case. That is what he had to do. Imagine waiting six weeks in the spring of the year before he can have his case even considered! This man is a proven farmer and a very aggressive farmer. We should have a more positive approach and a more understandable approach by all our representatives—and I do not stop just at the Farm Credit Corporation. After all is said and done, they are civil servants, they are there to serve their fellow men as well as being representatives of the government. Of late, I have had too many complaints about the standoffish attitude of some who are filling these positions. They are not a credit to the department.

I certainly go along with the remarks of the member from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain who moved this motion. He is a positive thinker. There are many suggestions he offered, not only this amendment but in his speech last night, that the minister should take into consideration. I think the minister will take these into consideration.

I wish to stress again, my friends, that the farmer is finding himself in dire straits. We have to look on the farmer today as a businessman. He is a businessman. When we see that the Japanese farmer can borrow money at 3.5 per cent interest, how does this stack up with our Canadian farmer who is paying anywhere from 17 per cent to 20 per cent interest, of the preferred rate which I think is now 16.25 per cent from the Farm Credit Corporation?

We are neglecting our farmers. We have a commodity here, my friends, that we will not have to worry about on the world markets. We should be catering to a hungry world, for we find hunger in many parts of the world. This is an industry the products of which will always be in demand.

So I appeal to the minister to take into consideration the lending practices of the Farm Credit Corporation and to ensure there is a little bit of understanding on the part of those people who represent him throughout the country.

I heard the minister say yesterday in respect of farm credit corporations that if they were given too much range with respect to the principle of the Small Business Development Bond the money supply for other industry would dry up. I need only think back to last November when the Government of Canada borrowed bond money from Canadians at 19½ per cent interest. That dried up a lot of money for businesses. Yesterday the minister talked of the money that was available to him and the Farm Credit Corporation. I would encourage the minister to secure as much of that money as possible and make it available to our farmers in Canada so that they can eke out an existence in a healthy agricultural community.

• (1600)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak on this bill amending the Farm Credit Act. Probably no area of the economy is more affected by the vagaries of the marketplace than farming. Only in agriculture is the market system still expected to work. Only the farmer is expected to put his product on the shelf and accept what is offered. The idea that supply and demand, the open market, will dictate how much a farmer will make is as outmoded as the walking plough. However, some still believe it is the panacea for the industry.

Bill C-88 before us is concerned with the survival of the farmer. I state it that way because it is important that we emphasize the end result of not providing the farm community with the kinds of programs which allow it to survive in a more natural way. I could spend a considerable amount of time developing a scenario about the need for credit to survive. Unfortunately, the Farm Credit Corporation has become an agency which controls to some extent the hope of survival for many farmers.

It is a pretty good indication of the ineffectiveness of our agricultural policy when we must recognize that the Farm Credit Corporation, which was originally set up to assist farmers to develop and grow, has become an agency of survival, and it is not doing too well at that. When you look at the bankruptcy rates and the number of liquidations, you can see that the corporation is not doing particularly well in helping farmers to survive. We now have a situation where the corporation which was set up for development has become the corporation to which farmers look to survive.

During the last week a group of Ontario farmers visited Ottawa. I am sure many members here met with them. They call themselves the Canadian Farmers' Survival Association. That group indicated that thousands of farmers will not survive the next couple of months.

Yesterday my colleague from Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) read into the record the recommendations which that group made when they were here. Ideally, if farmers generally are given the kind of policy and security they should have, we would not have to be looking at amendments to the Farm Credit Act. There would be no increase in debt. As it is, their indebtedness is steadily increasing. I again refer to my colleague's speech where he indicated the level in the change of debt over the past ten years.

In considering the need for farm credit, we should examine the capacity of the farm community to borrow. Canadian farmers have been a very good bet for the lending agencies. The repayment rates under various federal programs are invariably outstanding. The records of the Farm Credit Corporation and the Canadian Wheat Board will attest to that. Further, Canadian farmers are not over their heads as far as the total debt carried is concerned.

A 1981 farm survey conducted by the Farm Credit Corporation showed that Canadian farmers had 85 per cent equity on average net assets of something over $400,000. This indicates that farmers have the capacity to carry farm credit if it is available for long terms and at interest rates that are less than usurious.

Until a few years ago, any rate over 6 per cent was considered usury. It then went to 12 per cent and more recently operating loans for farmers have been at 23 per cent. As interest rates tripled between 1977 and 1981, one need hardly ask why a credit-intensive industry such as farming has got into so much difficulty. Clearly the difficulty in the farming community is related not to the ability to produce but to borrowing capacity.

Since the Government of Canada is supposed to be the lender of last resort, when talking about the problems of lending we must talk about the problems of the Government of Canada. In many discussions on farm credit, myths have been propounded by people who should know better. One myth has been the criticism of the banks which say that a shortage of money is not the problem but rather poor farming practices. That criticism of farmers by the lending institutions is a myth.

Every Member of Parliament who lives in an agricultural riding knows it is not correct. Case after case is brought to our attention by sound applicants who have been turned down by the banks or discouraged from applying for small business bonds. They have been turned down for a limited amount of farm credit by the Farm Credit Corporation emergency fund. They are seeking any kind of financing just to be able to keep on farming.

The actual number of farm bankruptcies filed in the bankruptcy branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in 1979 was 125. That number is fairly small, given that there are more than 300,000 farmers in Canada. Yet the year to year increase in bankruptcies is significant, and the percentage increases are staggering. In 1979 there were 125. In 1980 there were 222, an increase of 77.6 per cent. In 1981 there were 261, an increase of 17.6 per cent. We recently received a report on the first two months of 1982, and according to that report the total for those two months was 63, an increase of 54 per cent over the same two months in 1981. Clearly the increase in farm bankruptcies has not stopped, regardless of what the bankers of Canada say or what little the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) does.

The second myth about farmers is that they are all rich and do not need increased farm credit. A recent study by George L. Brinkman for the Economic Council of Canada entitled "Farm Income in Canada" tried to show the profitability of Canadian farms. The study pointed out that if capital appreciation is taken into account, farms have profitability similar to businesses of a similar size. Yet farmers know, as do most hon. members here this afternoon—it is too bad the economists do not know—that capital gain does not produce cash for expenses and credit for investment. Assets can be liquidated, but liquidation also means the viability of a farm is likely to be in question. Further, fixed assets on a farm are only valuable if someone wants to buy them, and that is not always the case in areas where agriculture may be a depressed industry.

The group which visited us last week, the Canadian Farmers' Survival Association, pointed out to us that in some areas of Ontario the price of land, which was running at $1,000 an acre last year or the year before, has dropped to $250 an acre, so even fixed assets become a liability.

Most of us who have examined Bill C-88 have come away with the feeling that it does not meet the major test for long-term credit legislation and that it does not provide reasonable amounts of money at reasonable cost repayable over a ten-year term or longer. Farm Credit Corporation money currently costs 16.75 per cent, and that level might be increased if what the Minister of Agriculture suggests should be the basis for borrowing is in effect. Yet within this bill there does not seem to be any guarantee that the Farm Credit Corporation will be able to borrow at the same rate as government bonds which, at the moment, is 1.25 per cent lower than the 16.75 per cent the Farm Credit Corporation is charging.

Historically the Farm Credit Corporation has always trailed the prime rate offered by the chartered banks. In the 1977-1981 period the gap was about 1.65 per cent. There does not appear to be any guarantee in this bill which would maintain the historical difference between Farm Credit Corporation and bank prime rates. Perhaps the minister should consider giving a guarantee that Farm Credit Corporation rates will continue to track below the prime rates charged by the banks or, because his policies have been so inadequate in the funding of farms in the past and in keeping the level of income high enough to survive, perhaps the minister should guarantee a level much lower than that. Perhaps he should guarantee a level of 3.5 per cent, which would be somewhat of a service rate in the lending of money to farmers who are having problems. In his speech yesterday the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) suggested that it might be possible to have a rate of one-half prime. Any of these proposals would be much better than what is in the bill now; the bill makes it possible for Farm Credit Corporation loans to cost more than bank loans in the future.

A second criticism many of us have raised concerns long-term credit in general. Is credit truly long term if the bank has the option of converting a loan into a demand note with a floating rate? That does not seem to me to fill the requirement of long-term credit at a fixed rate.

I note in this Farm Credit Corporation bill that there is a bit of wandering about in relation to trying to establish ten years as a possible term for a fixed rate. It is striking to note that the government is considering getting out of the business of long-term loans to farmers. The Farm Credit Corporation was the traditional supplier of more than 70 per cent of long-term credit; now it supplies 20 per cent. The gap in the marketplace has been filled, of course, by the banks, but banks—particularly the Canadian chartered banks—do not enter the lending field without throwing their weight around.

We saw that most recently when the Canadian Farmers' Survival Association visited our caucus. In its five-point plan the association wanted the reinstatement of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act of 1934. That request was a serious request. That legislation served the purpose of giving farmers economic security in return for the socially and economically desirable activity of providing food for Canadians. However, what was the response of the Minister of Agriculture? He said we cannot bring that law back because if we brought it back, that would frighten the banks out of agricultural lending. It is not good enough that farmers have shown outstanding ability to repay their loans; the banks still had to be able to foreclose, if they wished, before they would consider lending to farmers.

I am pleased that the survival association continues to help the farmers. I may not agree with its methods in every case but at least it is attempting to help. I commend its motto, "Never negotiate out of fear but never fear to negotiate," to the Minister of Agriculture.

In many ways it appears that partial privatization through the Farm Credit Corporation is the way the government wants agriculture to go today. The Farm Credit Corporation has been a rather underworked agency in recent years. In the peak lending years, 1965 to 1968, between 10,000 and 12,000 loans were granted, but in 1981 under 5,000 loans were granted. If the government can convince me that privatization will come close to meeting the demand and that it may have a case for taking this step—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the House for its agreement. I have just another paragraph that I should like to put on the record.

The government does not claim that the privatization of the Farm Credit Corporation will solve the problem; rather, it claims that in time, as the mechanisms for borrowing are put in place and the corporation establishes itself in the financial markets, a progressively larger portion of its funds could be obtained directly from that source. The government is suggesting that it is going to get out of this entirely and that this action will therefore force the corporation to become a private organization lending money at the going rate. This kind of luxury would be a disaster for many Canadian farmers. It does them little good, as they are going under, to be told "hold your breath". The great fault of this bill is that it tells too many people to wait.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Emergency Measures—Query respecting introduction of legislation. (b) Request that order in council be rescinded; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Emergency Measures—Criteria for release of criminals; the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant)—Canadian Armed Forces—Provisions for single parent members. (b) Request that pay be increased.

FARM CREDIT ACT
FARM LOANS INTEREST REBATE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-88, respecting loans to farmers, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Hamilton, Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I think a number of different things should be dealt with as we debate the bill, which will be discussed further on third reading, and that a little bit of background would help put the whole bill, and specifically the amendment, in context. The amendment is the key to the whole bill. I will try to expand upon some of the points that have already been dealt with by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain in his remarks.

The first point I would raise is the terrific interest that the government shows in this legislation. I know it is not the decent thing to criticize the government, but I would like to honour those members of the opposition parties who have participated in the debate. They have brought forward important points and issues that affect agriculture today. I regret that those members of the government who represent rural ridings have not participated more actively.

People who are facing the loss of their jobs in the auto industry or those involved in business or some economic activity may be wondering whether farming deserves all the attention it gets and whether farmers are worse off than many other segments of the economy. It is important to point out, however, that this is a primary industry. Whatever happens in farming, as in forestry and mining, for instance, has significant repercussions throughout the economy. The multiplier effect—whether that would be seven or any other figure—generates wealth in the economy. It has been a traditional base in Canada. We are in danger of losing a significant portion of that base, Mr. Speaker.

We have learned that Canadians are paying more in taxes than they are for food or shelter. At the very least, that raises the question of the level of taxation, whether on oil, gas or fuels, that is required for agricultural production and whether the return to the farmer at the farm gate is adequate. Interest rates are a significant factor in the cost of production today. This view is supported by many farm groups.

The question of interest rates has traditionally been dealt with by the Farm Credit Corporation. In the last ten years the interest portion of agricultural production has increased by approximately 645 per cent. That is a fantastic increase, Mr. Speaker. If the farmer or the consumer compares the actual return on a pound of beef or a bushel of corn at the farm gate ten years ago with the price received today, it is evident that there has not been a six times increase in price. The increase in the interest cost is the most important single issue and the one that we have to deal with effectively and quickly if we are to maintain that base in agriculture.

The most important part of the bill appears on page 4 in Clause 13(1) which reads as follows:

> The corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means, including issuing and selling bonds, debentures, notes and other evidences of indebtedness of the corporation.

The key word and the one that the amendment makes reference to is "bond". The amendment offered by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain reads as follows:

> That Bill C-88, an act respecting loans to farmers, be amended in Clause 8 by adding immediately after line 31 at page 4 the following:
> "(1.1) For greater certainty, the expression 'bonds' referred to in subsection (1) includes 'small business development bond'."

Members of the New Democratic Party have suggested that this measure could be more appropriately dealt with by the taxation department, and perhaps that is so. But the point is that the concept be understood and accepted by the lawyers acting for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on this amendment—and he had a little trouble with that yesterday—and that the concept of the bond be understood, de facto, to be a part of the new legislation as it affects farm credit.

When we consider that different people look at the question in different ways, we must remember the bottom line. Whether it is individual lenders to the Farm Credit Corporation or lending institutions that lend money to individual farmers, they use the principle where, through taxation devices, there is an opportunity for borrowers to have effective rates of interest which are considerably lower than those prevailing through the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada, as described and in fact dictated by government policy.

The situation now, whether interest rates are 10 per cent or 25 per cent, as they have been, is that we cannot afford at the agricultural level to continue paying those costs and expect agriculture to survive. If we look at Japan and a number of other countries, we see that they are able with a number of devices to take advantage of significantly lower rates. We are forced in world markets, and even in domestic ones, to compete with those different producers. Perhaps the United States is the best example of a country which is able to produce with the advantage of low interest rates as part of its cost of production.

Other amendments have been proposed. The one proposed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is in part the same idea as the amendment about which we are talking now. I should like to quote from the presentation of Mr. Kirk on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, wherein he said that the federation would like an amendment to change the title of the act from:

> —an act to provide for the extension of long-term mortgages to farmers to an act to extend short-intermediate and long-term credit services to the farmers.

The bond principle can be applied in a number of ways. It could be a short-term bond. In fact, the legislation could be drafted in many ways. Recently I talked with representatives of the Bank of Montreal who indicated that they have bonds which they are turning into ten-year time frames because they know producers cannot carry repayments on principal and interest over normal five-year periods. The bond principle can be adjusted to any number of periods of time, but the bottom line is lower interest rates if we are to achieve the goals which in fact are necessary at this time.

The key point made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture was that indeed the situation was very difficult because long-term capital had not been provided at reasonable interest rates. There is an immediate problem today, not tomorrow. Over the past several months a problem has been brought into sharper focus, and perhaps will be brought to an unfortunate climax within the next several months, and that is that farmers need more capital, particularly operating capital, for planting. Spring planting is coming and there are a number of farmers who are now technically bankrupt. There are farmers who will not be able to borrow enough money to provide seed and fertilizer to work the land. This will have repercussions—if they do not plant, they cannot harvest. The only cash flow to which some producers can look now is from cash crop. The short-term problem must be addressed immediately.

There has been the extraordinary appearance on the farm scene of different groups. Some are concerned farm women who are trying to address the problem and have met with both provincial and federal ministers of agriculture in Ontario. Also the Canadian Farmers' Survival Association met with Members of Parliament from all parties to bring forward its specific suggestions and concerns. No matter what is the mechanism, there is a general consensus among all farm organizations and all actively participating farmers that there must be a short-term solution with lower interest rates.

I should like to follow my specific comments with a problem which I have experienced in the past two or three months with the Minister of Agriculture concerning the bill. This specifically refers to the amendment so I think it is quite appropriate. The minister has made a number of comments. Last Friday I looked through some of the commentaries which have been made on the agricultural scene. "Phooey on Bouey" is one quote of the Minister of Agriculture. This quotation appeared in an article by Roy MacGregor in Today. The article went on:

—"MacEachen said he was going to make the banks bleed. Hell, he gave them a transfusion".

Those comments of the Minister of Agriculture are very appealing to people who are in distress in the agricultural community, people who are facing foreclosures or receiverships, people who see interest rates continuing to climb because there is no resolution of the problem. But indeed they create confusion and should raise some serious question, if not a question of privilege in so far as the Minister of Agriculture is concerned. The minister talked about raising additional funds through private borrowing. He went so far as to say in February of this year that he would have an extra $1 billion for farmers to borrow through the Farm Credit Corporation. He commented upon this in such a manner that we should question what kind of a game he is playing with the agricultural community.

We have awaited this legislation for several years. We heard about it all last summer as the minister talked with different farm groups that were facing difficult problems. Now we have this promise finally coming off with new legislation, and we have the Minister of Agriculture talking about providing an extra $1 billion from private funding. The situation is that he is out in the country saying "Phooey on Bouey" and "MacEachen has given the banks a transfusion", which are in direct contradiction to stated cabinet policy.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested that he should have resignations from people within cabinet if they do not support or choose to criticize cabinet solidarity and cabinet policy. Yet the Minister of Agriculture is out in the country doing precisely that, I hope honestly to tell the farm community what he thinks. I would be more concerned that he is doing it to placate or hoodwink them a little at the same time, because he stands up in the House and votes for the budget and the principles involved in the budget. We must take it that at least in the House he is supporting the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the high interest rate policies of the government. He cannot have it both ways. He is a pretty capable fellow at speaking out of both sides of his mouth at the same time. This is something which should be seriously questioned by the House, because I think there is a serious question of conflict. I do not know what is his ultimate purpose in doing that, but I think it does not serve any good purpose for the agricultural community or the country to be getting a number of mixed signals. I really question how honest it was for him to do it.

My final point in speaking to the amendment concerns optimism. We all know what agriculture in Canada can do. We all know that it can produce more and that there will be world markets for agricultural products. We all know that there will be large numbers of people who will have to be fed. But this optimism and indeed the hope for economic recovery and the required renewal, if we are to achieve our potential not only in agriculture but in other areas, are seriously questioned by the whole country.

I think the specific point we come down to is whether or not the Minister of Agriculture can come up with $1 billion in the short term, whether the interest rate will be satisfactory, so that farmers and capable producers will be able to survive in the long term. It is a question of whether the Minister of Agriculture will be able to get from Treasury Board the additional $26 million on top of the $14 million that has already been asked for, making the capital base sufficient to allow him to borrow that extra $1 billion. That is a serious question. From all indications we now have a situation where the Minister of Agriculture has demonstrated that he is really impotent in being able to bring forward agricultural problems to cabinet productively.

The total contribution which the federal government has made to those segments of the agricultural community that are in distress now is $5 million, and that is for the whole country. The rest is money borrowed from the Consolidated Revenue Fund which provided a program for about 135 farmers. That program finished three months ago, but that money has to be repaid. The only contribution that has been made is $5 million. The minister has said publicly that there is no way there can be any kind of stabilization for the year 1981. He is now coming up with a supply management program which may or may not be what agriculture wants. But he has been unable to bring forward the kind of support that agriculture needs at this time from cabinet.

I look forward to speaking on third reading of this bill if I have the opportunity.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly at report stage. I will speak specifically to the amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton).

In my opinion, this amendment is very straightforward and very worth while. For the life of me I cannot understand why the government does not accept it and be proud that we have someone in the House who can move an amendment which makes as much sense as this one.

What the amendment seeks to do is to make it easier for the Farm Credit Corporation to make use of the small business bond principle. That is a very simple and straightforward principle. It would aid farmers in terms of making financing available to them at a lower rate of interest. We know that interest rates are the biggest problem that faces our farmers this spring as they go to the fields to put crops in the ground enabling them to harvest this fall.

The hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) who just spoke pointed out that if you do not seed, you do not harvest. That should be obvious even to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Yet if farmers are not able to get enough financing to seed, there will be no harvest. Among other things this amendment seeks to make it easier for farmers to finance their spring operations.

What does the Minister of Agriculture tell us in response to the amendment? Last night, as reported in Hansard at page 15930, the Minister of Agriculture said:

> However, because Section 13(1) does not exclude what the hon. member is suggesting, the amendment as suggested is not necessary, again according to my legal advisers. In either case, the concept of the small business bond would require complementary amendments, I am told, of the Income Tax Act,—

My response to that is, so what? If it requires an amendment to the Income Tax Act, let us amend it. Let us not give the income tax people a chance to say that they cannot bring forward that kind of an incentive to farmers because we did not do it on this side of the House, because we did not do it with the bill in front of us. That is absolute nonsense. I think it is totally irresponsible for the Minister of Agriculture to put up that kind of what I call stupid argument against the amendment, because that is exactly what it is.

Just to emphasize what the hon. member for Bruce-Grey said, I revert to what the Minister of Agriculture said before Christmas. He said farmers are gutless, they are not doing anything. If there is ever an example of a gutless farm leader, it is the Minister of Agriculture. We have a very simple, straightforward amendment to put through but he does not even have the guts to stand up to his department. If that is the case, why have a minister of agriculture? All he has to do is say, "I am sorry, don't bother driving me around in my car, it will save the taxpayers some expense; I will just do what the department tells me to do." Why have a minister of agriculture? I think a lot of farmers are beginning to ask that question.

The minister talked about the banks. I do not know whether I can quote him exactly, but I can paraphrase him. The minister referred to the banks and some of their lending practices as being scandalous and fraudulent. You would think from that statement that if the minister had a chance to do something in terms of lowering interest rates paid to banks he would do something about it. That is what the amendment is designed to do. Specifically, Section 13(1) will read:

> The corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means,—

And the amendment is there to make sure that "by any means" specifically includes the small business development bond concept. Again, you would think that a minister who would want to accuse the banking system in this country of being fraudulent and scandalous in some of their lending practices would have enough courage himself to follow through on some of the things he is saying. This goes back to what went on during the period when the bells rang some two weeks ago. We talked about Parliament and the way it was supposed to work. If it is going to work, then it seems to me that the government should be willing to accept amendments that are not all-encompassing. This amendment does not change the intention of the act. The Speaker did not rule this amendment out of order. It is simply there to define further how the act is supposed to work. If we are to have a parliamentary system, it seems to me that there should be no reason why this kind of amendment is not accepted and accepted gladly by the government.

The Minister of Finance says that the banks should bleed a little bit. One of the ways to make the banks bleed a little bit is to have things set up so that we pay a little less interest when borrowing money. When I say "we", I am talking about the farmers. I am a farmer. But what does the government do? It does not want to accept the amendment because it has some hot shot advisers in the department of whom the minister is afraid. We pay their salaries and the minister is responsible for them, but he is afraid to go against their advice. That is some minister of agriculture.

Again, the ultimate in hypocrisy is when the Minister of Finance supports the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Obviously the Minister of Agriculture supports that. But what does he do when it comes time to do something about things? It is easy to say "Phooey on Bouey." Instead of making the banks bleed, we give them a transfusion. But when it comes time to accept a very simple, straightforward amendment in terms of clarifying how a particular section of the act should work, we do not do so.

Very briefly, I find it most unfortunate that I have to rise and use my time this afternoon to point out how inadequate and foolish are some of the statements which the Minister of Agriculture made yesterday when he talked about this very important bill. It is a very important bill, at least it can be in the way farmers are able to finance their operations.

I hope that at third reading I will be able to outline why I think this bill can be very significant in terms of agricultural finance. Let me close simply by saying that I think it most unfortunate that the government did not see fit to accept this simple, straightforward and very helpful amendment. It would have improved the act. If it were an improved act, it would better serve the farming community, and if the community is better served then everyone in this country is better served.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion (Mr. Hamilton, Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain) negatived.

• (1650)

Miss Bégin (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Miss Bégin moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill with respect to agricultural finance. Perhaps I should qualify that and say it has the potential to become a very important bill. Without being too facetious and without being too disrespectful of the minister, I wonder if he really understands how significant this bill can be. Farmers make up a very small percentage of the population and do not account for very much in terms of political significance or importance. However, they are very important because they produce the most basic commodity of all: food. They have done a very good job of producing high quality food for the Canadian consumer. Not only that, but they have increased production to the extent that agricultural exports account for a significant part of our total exports.

Even though we import a lot of off-season fruits and vegetables, peanuts and other things we cannot grow because of our climate, we still have a significant trade surplus in food. By that I mean that when you add up all of our food exports and subtract our food imports, we still have a significant surplus. The larger the surplus, the easier it is for our dollar and interest rates; the easier it is for interest rates, the better it is for everyone in the country. A lot of people like to buy Japanese cars, and we have a problem in that we have too many of them here. We know that is causing problems for jobs in the automotive industry. However, we are a lot better off trading grain for Japanese cars or cameras than we are simply sending them our dollars. So the production and export of food is very important to this country.

It is also important—I have said this before many times and I like to say it every time I get the chance—because the less money the consumer spends on food, the more he has left over to spend on other things, which by and large means a higher standard of living for the country.

Probably the main reason why agriculture has been so productive is that we have made use of more capital. We now have to invest a tremendous amount of dollars to create a job in agriculture. Recent figures indicate that it takes more dollars to create a job in agriculture than it does in most manufacturing industries. That gives an idea of how capital-intensive farmers have become. The more that is so, the more problems we have when interest rates fluctuate. As interest rates go up, the farmer operating on borrowed money has to pay more interest. That causes problems, and that is why this bill is important.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the main reason I think this bill has the potential to be very significant to Canadian agriculture, one which could be used in the small business community because the same principle applies, is because of Section 13, which provides:

> The corporation may, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, borrow money by any means, including issuing and selling bonds, debentures, notes and other evidences of indebtedness of the corporation.

Let me tell the House why that is important. I grew up in the middle of Saskatchewan. I see everyone in the House is overjoyed at that, really sitting on the edge of their chairs!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: At any rate, there are some things which need to be said from a western perspective, and I sometimes think we do not say them often enough. We should say them more often, is perhaps a better way of phrasing it. In the early days of western agriculture we had a branch banking system, which still exists. That sytem works in such a way that there is a central bank with several small branches throughout the country. In the early days in Saskatchewan, at least where I grew up, many of those branches were net deposit banks in the fall of the year. By that I mean that when a farmer sold his grain, he put his money in the bank in the fall and the head office of the bank decided where the money would be invested. In almost all cases the money was taken out of the small community and sent to the larger centres to be used to develop areas away from where it was generated.

I can remember my father telling me a story, and I hope he is watching this afternoon. He went into a sub-branch of a branch bank, if you can follow that, Mr. Speaker, and they refused to cash a grain cheque for him. That is how short of cash some of those banks were many years ago. That did nothing to help the immediate area, and that is what has happened in many cases now.

The farmer's pension plan is his land. Economists call this forced savings. Farmers do not have any choice, they do not have a lot of spare cash to spend on recreational activities; they try to pay for their land. They do that because land is very important to people who earn their living from it, and also because it is, in effect, their pension fund. So they are forced to pay for the land. However, when they sell out they take the proceeds and in many cases deposit it in trust accounts, in banks or invest it in stocks and bonds. The situation is still the same in most cases; the money leaves the immediate area of where it was generated. So it is then unavailable to farmers for use in agriculture. This act, however, could mean that they would be able to tap that source of funds. In other words, the money generated from agriculture can stay in the industry to assist younger farmers in becoming established.

There is another reason why I think this bill can be very important. Any small business, including a farm, a machinery dealership or any other business run by one man or a family, will try to generate the capital to pay for that business within the lifetime of the operator. In other words, if the farmer wants to own his land, he has to do it in his lifetime. He borrows the money; he pays it back.

That is not the case in terms of larger corporations which can go to the market and issue equity shares. If one buys a share from General Motors, General Motors is not obligated to pay back the value of the share. It is obligated to pay back some kind of dividend on that investment. That simply means that a large corporation is able to obtain equity financing. General Motors, or any of the companies listed on the stock market, is not obligated to repay the value of the share. All it is obligated to pay is some kind of dividend on the share. That is not the case with most small businesses. Any small business must regenerate its capital every time there is a new generation of owners. This is also true with regard to farms. That is why it is once again important that we try to establish some means of keeping the money generated in agriculture working in agriculture.

This bill is very significant, it seems to me, because of Clause 13. If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) can make the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) understand my two areas of concern, I am sure the Minister of Finance will agree to go along with some of the suggestions which have been made concerning Clause 13 of this bill.

As I said, this bill is also very important in terms of assisting farmers to finance their operations because of the increased capital farmers need. My guess is that as recently as 20 years ago, a farmer could have taken somewhere between $50,000 and $75,000, and set himself up in a mixed farming operation. Right now, a farmer could easily spend that kind of money on one ordinary tractor, and could spend considerably more than that to purchase a larger four-wheel-drive tractor. Twenty years ago a farm could be completely equipped with the money that one spends today on one tractor. A farmer could have purchased a section of land, livestock and machinery and still have had operating capital left over. That is an indication of the amount of money farmers need today to operate their farms on a yearly basis. It is increasingly important that we recognize the demands farmers are placing on the capital market in order to continue operations.

However, even though all of my dreams would come true in terms of how Clause 13 would work, that is not the total answer as far as farm financing is concerned. Surely the government has an obligation to see that farm incomes at least keep pace with inflation. I believe it was the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who accurately pointed out that prices of all commodities have drastically dropped over the last couple of years while input costs have risen. Fuel prices have risen largely because of taxation by the federal government. The costs of fertilizer, repairs and machinery have risen. Interest rates have risen, as have taxes. Virtually every farm operating cost is up, yet the prices of most farm commodities are down. I do not expect there will be any increases in the prices of farm commodities this coming year. The government has a role to play in attempting to see that prices are adequate, because if they are adequate there is less demand for financing. Farmers who earn an adequate income can get by with borrowing less.

There are areas that this government could pursue in connection with the Americans in order to increase prices of feed and cereal grains in world markets. I am not so sure that it is doing enough in that respect. There has been a great deal of comment recently to the effect that the federal government has been reneging on its responsibility toward a nationally coordinated and at least partially funded stabilization program for both beef and hogs, yet we see nothing on the horizon in this context. I wish there were some evidence of leadership, genuine interest and care. I am sure there are some avenues that the federal government and the Minister of Agriculture could pursue to ensure that the members of the farming community receive better incomes, and then the necessity for borrowing would be less.

The capital gains issue is another problem for farmers. If there were a different system of capital gains where a farmer paid less in capital gains when he disposed of his farm after working for many years to pay for it, the need for farm financing would also be less. Some people simply ask, "Well, why would that be?" That is because a farmer considers his piece of land to be his retirement fund. He pays for it over his productive lifetime. He decides how much money he will need to live on for the rest of his life. That is one of the determining factors in the price he asks for his land. However, if he must deduct a big chunk of capital gains tax from that price, then he must ask for more money for his land. That drives up the price of land, and that is what is happening. Therefore, if we had a more sensible approach to capital gains, the need for farm financing would considerably decrease.

I do not think I need relate the problems the last budget has caused by the removal of the IAAC provisions and their replacement with forward averaging. That is really a system whereby the federal government has a bigger tax grab on income farmers and businessmen derive from the sale of capital assets upon retirement or at any other time when capital assets are sold.

Again referring back to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), it is clearly evident that the small business bond concept introduced in the November 12 budget is just not working. In fact, I do not know of one small business bond which has been granted since November 12. I do not understand why the government does not admit that this type of bond is not working. We must at least give the government credit for caring or seeing the situation clearly enough to realize that there is a need, and for attempting to address it with a small business bond. However, it should now be evident to the government, approximately four months after the introduction of the budget, that the small business bond concept is not working and that prior to the budget the Small Business Development Bond concept was working. I believe many people who are knowledgeable in this area would agree that if the government is serious about meeting that need, it should return to the provisions of the Small Business Development Bond. That would make a lot of sense to a lot of people.

I do not believe farm financing should be considered to be the total solution to any of the problems. In fact, the real solution is to do something about farm income so that farmers will be in a position to generate as much of their capital requirements as possible from their own operations without having to go to the government or to the banks. I hope this bill will allow the Farm Credit Corporation to begin expanding its loans so that it can meet the needs of a higher percentage of farmers who have come to rely upon it.

The first loan I ever took out was a Farm Credit Corporation loan. I remember it well. In fact, I still have the piece of equipment I bought with that original loan. Your Honour is nodding. You must think I am pretty old and that it must have been a good piece of equipment. It was a good piece of equipment. It just goes to show that the Farm Credit Corporation has well served many people in this country. However, in the last number of years it has been unable to meet the need because it has been strapped for funds. Therefore, if this bill allows, the Farm Credit Corporation to go to the market to obtain additional funds, the corporation will be back in the position where it can once again meet the needs of the farming community.

I would like to stress that it would be helpful if farmers were given an opportunity to lend money through a small business bond, an agribond or some other concept which could come into play as a result of this bill. If farmers were given a chance to lend money to the Farm Credit Corporation, I believe many would choose to do so, even at a lower interest rate. I believe many farmers would be willing to accept somewhat less of a return on their money if they knew that it was staying in their own communities to help young farmers. Presently they are not getting that opportunity. We really will not know whether my thinking and my suggestion on this matter is correct until it is tried.

Let me give an example. Many people who grow up in a community have a sense of identity with that community. They have lived there for 30, 40 or 50 years, they choose to retire and they feel that they have been well served by their community. They would like to put something back into that area. If they are given an opportunity, through some kind of an agribond concept that would bear less interest, they would be willing to accept that if they knew that the money they were lending to the Farm Credit Corporation was going to help their community.

I could give many examples showing how that system has worked across the United States, where they have a unit banking system. Banks there are owned, by and large, in small communities in the same way as a grocery store. The first line of thinking of any of those local banks is that their community should survive, since that in itself means the survival of the community. We could make use some of the pride that individuals have in their communities, in agriculture, in small towns, if we would offer agribonds at a lower rate of interest, provided the people offering that money to the Farm Credit Corporation know where that money is going.

I could touch on many other areas of farm financing. As I have said, this can be a significant bill. The Minister of Agriculture will get my support and the support of my colleagues if he attempts to get the Minister of Finance to let the Farm Credit Corporation borrow money, by any means, in order that that corporation may be in a better position to fulfil its mandate of providing adequate financing for the farmers. If we can do that we will be serving the farming community, we will serve the consumers and also serve the whole country.

Again, I have to congratulate the minister for this bill, or at least for this one clause, because it can be a very significant bill as a result of the inclusion of Section 13.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): When I spoke on this bill at second reading, Mr. Speaker, I noted that there were a couple of difficulties which would need to be addressed at the committee stage. For example, I was told a year ago by Farm Credit Corporation officials that they would like to see a clear legislative guideline allowing them to treat a farmer's spouse as an equal partner, so that in a case where both the husband and the wife run and operate a farm, each would qualify for farm credit funding.

The present bill contains no such spelled-out provision, so I raised the matter in committee again. The matter has been discussed and the Farm Credit Corporation was given a clear indication that both spouses actively engaged in farming could receive farm credit funding.

I suppose they will run into the difficulty of a farm wife who has a job as a schoolteacher or who works in the nursing profession or is doing some office work, but we would certainly expect to see her taking her place beside her spouse operating that farm actively and helping in its operation, and that should be recognized as a partnership and should qualify for that type of funding.

I accept these assurances from the Farm Credit Corporation, but I know that other members also will want to monitor the situation as time passes to ensure that the policy works in practice. Otherwise we shall know that we need to give legislative expression to the equality between men and women which we on all sides of the House recognize as essential to the Constitution of our country.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) appears to believe that no legislative mechanism needs to be provided to ensure fair treatment for partners who happen also to be married. I for one am going to give the minister the opportunity to prove himself right, now that his officials have indicated the intention to deal equitably with spouses in this regard.

On second reading also I noted that while we were increasing the potential of farm credit lending by $1.875 billion, we were not automatically ensuring that the corporation would have access to the funds, allowing the lending of anything like that amount. Each year the corporation receives only a fraction of its authorized capital and is accordingly enabled to borrow 25 times that capital addition. We in this party have been arguing that the Farm Credit Corporation has been given too little funding for some years back to allow it to meet the needs of agriculture.

The present bill giving the Farm Credit Corporation access to privately borrowed funds should provide the flexibility to permit the annual authorization of capital to match the perceived need for funding for land acquisition. Treasury Board should no longer need to keep its eyes so much on the need to lend the Farm Credit Corporation 25 times the amount of capital it authorizes each year, since a part of what the corporation borrows can now come from sources other than the Consolidated Revenue Fund. For this reason, the bill is an improvement on the present situation. Yet it is worth noting that during the period since the present minister first took charge of the agriculture portfolio, the percentage of long-term credit provided to agriculture by the Farm Credit Corporation has fallen from some 70 per cent to a mere 25 per cent. In other words, there has been a very significant erosion of the Farm Credit Corporation's role.

It is no use blaming the banks for the failure to keep the corporation supplied with funds. This legislation is overdue as a means of ensuring that the farmers are not forced into the hands of the banks for land purchases. We will have to ensure that the corporation is enabled by this bill to move back in the direction of a greater rate of participation in farm financing.

Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that farmers are not to blame for the high cost of land or for the ridiculously high cost of financing high-cost land. This is the fault of a high-spending government with too little concern for the role of investment in creating wealth, one that is responsible for putting us as a country in the position of having to pay unsupportable costs for investment in land or in any other kind of capital business plant. This bill helps to repair the damage caused farmers by government policies over some years that have made land very high in price and land financing next to impossible.

This leads me to a point I wish to emphasize strongly, Mr. Speaker. In my part of Ontario we have reached the point where the high cost of land and land financing is leading to a steady erosion of Canadian ownership of Canada's farm land. Among those who have stayed on the land, while many of their fellows have moved into our cities, there is a very strong commitment to retain the tradition of family-owned and operated farms. Canadians as a whole benefit enormously from the commitment of these people to a life of hard work, to tremendous productivity, and to producing very high quality and inexpensive food.

The measure of the success of our farmers is that Canadians take their farming industry almost for granted. Indeed, Canadian farming is so efficient and productive that it could almost be taken for granted, if it were not for the tremendous burdens imposed on farmers in financing their operations.

It is so much in the interests of Canada to ensure that family farms survive, and that this pool of dedicated and productive talent is not dissipated, that we should make every effort possible to ensure that public policy does not undermine the family farm. And yet, that is what the policy of high interest rates is doing. In the past two years, when even the best and most well-established farmers have lost a good deal of the equity they had built up in their operations over a lifetime, our farmers have, in effect, been subsidizing the consumer.

It could be argued that farmers have to compete for a market like other businessmen, and most farmers do not object to the principle of a competitive market for many of their products. My point is that farmers are willing to compete to sell their product to the Canadian consumer, but the high cost of financing their operations reduces their capacity to compete.

It is not inefficiency in their production but inefficiency in this government's policy that has pushed farmers into the position of seeing their investment erode. For many of them, this erosion to date has simply meant that they own less of their operation than they did two years ago. For an increasing number, however, it means that they no longer own anything. The alarming bankruptcy figures are only the tip of the iceberg. Many who have not gone bankrupt have been forced to sell out just short of bankruptcy; otherwise, the bankruptcy figures would be far worse. Even as they are, the bankruptcy figures are a national shame and disgrace. They are evidence of a bankruptcy of policy, a bankruptcy that is made doubly evident by the attempt of last November's budget to take away the retirement funds which many of our farmers have been building toward, throughout their working careers, by scrimping, saving, making do with small disposable incomes so that they would have capital with which to retire. They do not have indexed pensions. Most of them do not even own a home when they leave the farm. All their retirement needs must be supplied from the sale of their farming operation. The government has shown its insensitivity toward this fact by regarding farmers as though they were profiteers.

As for young farmers, those who must supply the next generation of food producers, the government's policy has made it more and more difficult for the young to enter a farming career. Land costs are very high. I do not for a moment suggest that this government is solely responsible for the increase in the value of land during the past decade or more, but if land costs reflect the value of land directly, they are high because there is a high market value for land.

Given the demonstrated capacity of our farmers to use land efficiently, young or beginning farmers do not so much regret the high value of the land they wish to purchase, but they regret the high financing costs. Farm credit helps in many cases to make the difference between allowing a young farmer to make a career in farming or not. That is why this bill is a valuable piece of legislation in so far as it will make that difference, I hope, to a great many young farmers.

As I say, for two years there has been a growing apprehension in my part of Canada that our farm financing policy is not working well enough. Foreign ownership of our land has become more than a threat. It is an alarming and growing reality. In the community I represent, and very close to my own home, there are numbers of farms that have been bought by numbered companies. Certainly we are very suspicious that those numbered companies have been established for the sole purpose of buying agricultural land, particularly in the area that I represent. We know that is a fact that we can substantiate. It is becoming more evident all the time.

The reasons are not hard to see. Our young potential farmers have to borrow to buy land. They have to borrow at upwards of 16 per cent and often at a great deal more than that. Foreign capital looking for a safe haven is attracted to Canada's farm land for two reasons. One is that investment in land in a country with a peaceful constitutional history is a safe place to store wealth. Another is that our farm land is still a relatively good value compared to land in many European countries where urban sprawl has eaten up a good deal of the available land and where the demand for food by consumers is high because of the dense urban population.

What makes the purchase of our farm land particularly attractive to foreigners is that the high cost of farm financing here inevitably has a depressive effect upon the demand for land by Canadian purchasers. In Germany, for example, mortgage rates for house purchases are low, presently no more than about 10 per cent. Since there are no exchange controls preventing a German house owner from mortgaging his house and investing the proceeds here, it is clear that a German investor of ordinary means can compete for Canadian farm land at a rate of interest well below anything a young Canadian farmer could hope to get. I say this not by any means to criticize the German policy by which such low interest rates are maintained, but rather to point out at what a disadvantage our high interest rates place Canadians who wish to buy and farm our land.

What is true in the case of Germany is true in the case of other European countries as well. Perhaps the only thing that has kept back an even greater flood of foreign investment capital to buy our available land is that many foreigners have too little confidence in the ability of this government to maintain the value of our currency, to feel secure in investing here.

Paradoxically, then, we are vulnerable to foreign speculation in our land, but protected from even greater vulnerability by the perceived economic incompetence of this government. This is poor comfort to our young farmers.

To put this problem of increasing foreign purchases of our land in perspective, let me mention the situation in a township which I know very well. In that township during the past year, foreign land ownership, according to reliable figures prepared by the Federation of Agriculture, have increased from 320 acres to more than 2,300 acres. In the adjoining township it has gone from zero to 1,100 acres. I think the latest statistics would even show an increase from that.

A little farther north in Bruce County, near the growing community that surrounds the Bruce nuclear power development, recent figures have shown that 2,000 acres in a single part of one township have recently been purchased by foreign investors. No one can blame farmers who sell to foreign investors. They are the customers who are able to meet the costs of the purchase. No one can blame young Canadian farmers either for not meeting the price; they are caught by the high interest rate policy of the government.

The vast majority of those who have land to sell would like to see their land pass into the hands of owners who live on the land and farm it. They do not care whether the owner is Canadian-born or a recent immigrant who intends to farm it and live on it; what they do care about is seeing the family farm survive. Heaven knows, we are all immigrants if we go back just a few generations. What farmers in this part of Canada, and I suspect elsewhere throughout Canada, do not want to see is absentee ownership. Neither do the municipal governments in the rural areas want to see an erosion of the social character of their township.

We found many townships and communities that had greater amounts of foreign ownership dominating those areas. Often the new buyers come in and remove the existing buildings, which results in a lower assessment value. There is not as good a tax structure base. There is also a problem when putting in field tile in municipal ditches, which we have to do in that part of Ontario. It is often difficult to find the proper owner to get permission. Co-operation has always existed in the communities throughout Ontario, and I am sure throughout Canada where the farmers have worked together. All of a sudden there are new problems to face. Everyone worked on line fences or property fences. This is something that is disappearing. We have had many families living on the farms helping to shape the local society ever since the land was settled. We hate to see that disappear as well.

Because this problem of foreign ownership has sprung up only within the past two or three years, it is apparent that the policy of high interest rates and inadequate funding for the Farm Credit Corporation is involved. It may well be that we should be looking now, not when the dikes have burst, at the radically harmful social and economic effects to Canada of a policy that allows our excellent and highly developed farm land to pass into foreign hands while the generation of Canadians who would become our food producers and would maintain a competitive efficiency we have come to take for granted are driven away from agriculture.

I should also mention that in some of our deliberations in committee I raised the matter of transferring existing farm credit mortgages. Section 16(f) of the act states that the mortgage given to secure the loan shall contain a covenant by the borrower that he will not use the proceeds for any purposes except those approved by the act, and that he will not dispose of the property without the consent of the corporation.

Clause 11(4) of Bill C-88 states that if the borrower sells the land without FCC permission, the loan becomes due immediately. This clause may make it easier for the Farm Credit Corporation to refuse to allow farm takeovers by foreigners, but it does not prohibit them from allowing foreigners to take over the existing Farm Credit Corporation mortgages. That is solely at the discretion of the Farm Credit Corporation. I would have felt more comfortable if it had been written into the act that the legislation would disallow the transfer of that mortgage. It is something we have to watch closely and give support to Farm Credit Corporation officials in cases of transfers of mortgages such as that. We in Parliament should labour to ensure that it never becomes the norm of Canadian agriculture, because if it does, our days of cheap, domestically-produced food are gone forever.

In saying that, I support this present bill. I want to note that the bill arrives on a scene that is rapidly changing. We can be glad that the Farm Credit Corporation is able to do the job it does, and we hope it will recover some of the ground it has lost through the underfunding to which I referred earlier.

But already, as we pass this bill into law, it is apparent that we have not solved the embarrassing problem of farm financing. A warning is being sounded daily by our farmers that we are not doing enough to ensure the continuance of the family farm in Canada and that we are permitting this most vital of all sectors to fall into the hands of those who do not have the same vital interest in feeding Canadians efficiently and cheaply as do those Canadians living on the land. It is not just young farmers who want to buy land who are sounding this warning. It is also being sounded by retiring farmers who are ready to sell their land, as well as municipal councillors who are watchful of the social character of the communities they serve. In accepting the present bill we should listen to the warning they are giving and recognize that the bill has not made us secure in the agricultural sector, but has merely made us less insecure.

The means of producing our food should never pass from the hands of Canadians into the hands of foreigners, or even of absentee owners. If this happened, there could come a day when it would be more expedient for foreign owners to withdraw our land from production than to keep it in production. Erosion of the family farm is an invitation to further land exchanges which lead to corporate farming. These are matters Parliament should address.

In welcoming this bill, as far as it goes, I look forward to seeing legislation along the lines we have suggested earlier, which even the Minister of Agriculture seemed to regard with approval when he said, earlier in debate, that in the future consideration could be given to providing special tax concessions on bonds sold by the Farm Credit Corporation or on registered retirement saving funds placed with the corporation by retiring farmers.

We are in agreement, then, that what we have here is welcome legislation, but it is not enough. Let us hope that while the Farm Credit Corporation makes good use of the provisions in this bill, for the sake of Canadian agriculture the minister will concern himself with preparing further measures to ensure that agriculture for which he has responsibility remains Canadian agriculture.

In conclusion, I would just like to add that this bill is something long overdue. Agriculture needs this measure very badly. I have said before that agriculture needs the proper tools with which to work. Financing is one of those tools. Financing is like farm equipment. It does not matter what part of the country; we know that if machinery is not kept up to date, crops cannot be grown. I strongly believe that farm credit can and will be an important tool. We look forward to seeing this legislation in place very quickly and working for farmers.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to take part in the debate today and to associate myself with the comments of my colleagues who have spoken earlier in the debate. Clearly, the legislation we are dealing with today will be of benefit to Canadian farmers. It is not our intention to delay passage of the bill, but I think it is important that we put some remarks on the record with regard to the crisis in Canadian agriculture today, and with regard to the fact that this bill and other measures which have been proposed by the government will not do enough to deal with the urgent situation confronting Canadian farmers.

As someone keenly interested in the problems of Canadian farmers, Mr. Speaker, I know you will appreciate the fact that a story that is told in my neck of the woods perhaps describes the situation of Canadian farmers today as graphically as anything else I could tell the House. They tell a story about two farmers in my constituency who live near each other. They bought tickets on a lottery and were hoping that one of them would have the good fortune to win a million dollars. One farmer turned to his neighbour and asked: "If you win the million dollars on the lottery, how do you intend to spend it? What will you do with it?" His neighbour's comment was: "Well, what I would do is sell my farm and move to Florida. I would put all the money in the bank and simply live on the interest and have happy days for the rest of my life." He turned to his friend and said, "Now, if you win the million dollars, what would you do?" His friend said: "Well, I kind of like farming. I think I would stay in farming until the million was gone." I do not think there is any more accurate way of describing the plight of Canadian farmers today than to repeat that story because notwithstanding repeated commitments by the government, and particularly by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), record numbers of Canadian farmers are being driven off the land.

Bill C-88 before us today will be helpful in terms of increasing the amount of capital available to Canadian farmers.

There is no opposition on this side of the House to the bill. It is a bill that we believe is necessary and should have been passed long ago. Indeed, the bill was in the works during the time of the Clark government, and the real question is why it has taken the Minister of Agriculture so long. He was restored to his office as Minister of Agriculture over two years ago, and the question Canadian farmers should be asking him is why he has been so slow in taking the step he is taking in the House today.

The most important element of the bill is that it would enable the Farm Credit Corporation to go outside the Consolidated Revenue Fund—outside the government—and seek funds in the private market in the hope of raising enough capital to enable it to lend money to a larger number of Canadian farmers.

No doubt the most critical issue facing Canadian agriculture today is the question of low returns for farmers and ever-escalating prices as they attempt to do their job. Certainly the most important component of those ever-increasing costs is the cost of financing. I do not think anyone who has attended a meeting of his local federation of agriculture or of any commodity group would be unaware of the fact that farmers in all parts of the country find themselves in a very serious cash bind. They find that even if they are capable of getting loans from their local banks or from some government agency, it is very difficult, no matter what commodity a farmer is in today, to even be able to pay the carrying charges on loans. This is why it is essential that instead of simply applying band aids to the problems facing Canadian farmers, the Minister of Agriculture should be interceding with his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), to address the critical problem of interest rates in Canada.

What has been done by this government since the election in 1980 to bring down interest rates? What we have seen, what Canadian farmers have seen, what business people have seen and what home owners have seen is successive increases in interest rates and very little action taken by the government to insulate the weakest and poorest members of our society from the tremendous burden which has been inflicted on them by the government. This is why it is essential that the Minister of Agriculture, if he is to do his duty on behalf of Canadian farmers from one coast to the other, stops simply talking about the banks, trying to shift the blame on them and trying to blame other people for the government's high interest rate policy and, instead, deals directly with the Minister of Finance and insists that the Minister of Finance change policies which have been disastrous for Canadian farmers, just as they have been disastrous for home owners and small business people in this country. Until the government is prepared to come to grips with the consequences of its economic scorched-earth policies which are putting such an unfair burden on ordinary Canadians, there is no way this measure or other measures currently before the House will ensure that Canadian agriculture remains viable for the future.

The simple fact is that the true minister of agriculture in Canada is not the gentleman who often wears a green hat and who attends meetings of federations of agriculture around the country. The true minister of agriculture in Canada today is the Minister of Finance. He is the one who decides what the policies are which will directly affect Canadian farmers. He is the one who decides how much money will be allocated to the Farm Credit Corporation as authorized lending capital. He is the one who is responsible for interest rates in Canada. He is the one who makes decisions which affect the day to day lives of Canadian farmers, just as he is the one whose decisions affect the day to day lives of other Canadians in other sectors. I think Canadian farmers are beginning to weary of hearing the Minister of Agriculture attempt to shift the blame. The fact is that he is part of a cabinet which has consciously adopted a policy of high interest rates and is consciously attempting, by putting a burden on ordinary Canadians, to squeeze them very seriously.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is complaining about interest rates. Can he give us a solution? He is blaming the government for interest rates. What can he offer?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I noticed you did not rule on whether that is a point of order. Clearly it is not, but I am delighted to respond to my colleague's question because there is a number of things which could be done by the government. No effort has been made by the government, particularly during the big-spending sixties and seventies, to control the federal deficit. A major component in the inflation we have today is a direct result of this government's high spending programs. If, as the Minister of Finance says, the reason for high interest rates today is that inflation is running at a record level—and it is, as a result of the minister's policies—then the most significant thing the government could have done was to get some control of its spending and bring the deficit under control. Instead, it has moved consistently in the other direction.

It was the Progressive Conservative government that proposed the concept of the small business development bond which was designed to give some relief to Canadian farmers and small business people so they would have a buffer to ease the burden of high interest rates. In the budget of the Minister of Finance, brought down the day after Remembrance Day last November, we find that he is actually counting on the fact that the Small Business Development Bond will cost the Canadian government less money this year than last year. In other words, the terms for lending are more restrictive this year than they were last year. An applicant will have to demonstrate that he is virtually insolvent before he is eligible for financing under the program. I will admit that the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance and their Liberal colleagues are doing everything they can to ensure that small business people and farmers are virtually insolvent. But that is not the way to deal with their problems, Mr. Speaker.

I have illustrated two ways in which the government could have acted, Mr. Speaker. Unless it is prepared to come to grips with the whole question of the government deficit and inflation, which is caused by federal government spending, there is no way that adequate relief will be found for farmers, particularly with the palliatives that have been put before parliament today. Bill C-88 will not provide the required relief. I suggest that no member on the government side could in honesty claim that this bill will bring an end to farm bankruptcies.

Last year alone there were 261 farm bankruptcies in the country, 140 of them in the province of Ontario. Anyone who has had the opportunity of meeting with farmers in any part of the country knows that under the tenure of the government, since the last election, the problems facing them have become more and more acute. The threats of bankruptcies have increased dramatically. The problems that young farmers face who are trying to get into farming and continue with the family farm, become more and more insurmountable as each day passes.

For the government to try to shift the blame to someone else by saying that it is held hostage to international events and that it has nothing to do with the inflation rate in Canada which is higher than that in the United States, or that it has nothing to do with the interest rates it is directly responsible for, is doing a disservice to Canadians.

If we are to attack the economic problems facing farmers or any other Canadian, the first thing we must do is deal honestly with the situation and admit that the federal government's policies have been wrong-headed. A policy designed to reduce inflation by jacking up interest rates, is contradictory.

When the cost of inventory for a business increases, do we seriously, expect that business to sell its goods for less this year than it did last year? Naturally, whenever possible, it will attempt to increase the selling price in order to cover cost. And if the costs to working people increase, do we expect unions to settle for less money next year than they do this year? Clearly the incentive will be for them to increase their demands.

Far from being a cure for inflation in Canada today, high interest rates are a serious contributing factor and are a tremendous burden on ordinary Canadians.

On February 23, 1982, the Kitchener-Waterloo Record ran an article on the front page with the heading "Whelan vows $1 billion in aid—" This occurred at the closed meeting with Canadian farmers. The second paragraph of the article reads as follows:

> But Whelan reportedly also told the farm leaders that if they quoted him to the press, he will deny it.

Indeed he has, Mr. Speaker. It is not good enough for the Minister of Agriculture to go around the country saying one thing to farmers and then come back here and support the government's high interest rate policies. It is not good enough for him to continue to tell one story to Canadian farmers and support policies which have been very damaging to farmers and which affect their ability to stay in business.

When my friend across the way bootlegged in a question under the guise of a point of order he asked me what could be done by the government or if anything could be done to provide relief to Canadian farmers. I have mentioned one thing, Mr. Speaker. We have to get inflation under control. Interest rates must be brought down. The government washes its hands of responsibility but it is directly reponsible, Mr. Speaker, and must be held accountable for the consequences of its policies.

There is the matter of the small business bond. The government policies in this respect are far too restrictive. Each member can ask how many farmers he knows who have been able to qualify for the bond or how many small businessmen have been able to qualify for it this year. The government is tightening up on eligibility. People now have to carry a much heavier burden and they are doing so without the assistance they so desperately need.

Another element of the budget which is obviously affecting farmers is the IAAC, the Income Averaging Annuity Contract. For the family farmer, his pension is in the land. But the Minister of Finance abolished the IAAC provision for some unspecified income-averaging provision which has still to be spelled out. There are serious doubts about the tax treatment of the farmer who is forced to sell the family farm.

There is the matter of capital gains tax on the family farm. In its budget the Progressive Conservative government provided for capital gains tax relief for family farmers. What happened to that since the 1980 election? Have members of the Liberal caucus tried to stress to the Minister of Finance—the real minister of agriculture today—that it is time some relief was given to bona fide family farmers?

All Canadians are desperately affected by the health and vitality of Canadian agriculture, Mr. Speaker. I cannot walk through any community in my constituency without recognizing that when farmers are doing well, people in the towns are also doing well. If we are serious about redressing our trade imbalance, if we are serious about ensuring that we are not held hostage in the future with food the way we have been with oil in the past, then it is essential that the family farm be kept alive. To do that we must ensure fair prices for the farmer. We must ensure that the price he has to pay for goods and services needed to conduct his business, is fair. We have to ensure that interest rates do not become a crushing burden which makes it impossible for him to carry on. We must provide incentives to the Canadian family farmer to keep him on the land and for young farmers to come back to the business and remain in it.

There seems to be a philosophy within the Department of Finance that all they need to do in times of high inflation is to turn the screws on ordinary Canadians—to slow down the economy, put a few thousand people out of jobs, and that as time improves they can turn the screw the other way. People will then be happy, businesses will be open, productivity will increase and we will be back where we were before. That simply is not the case, Mr. Speaker.

If a family farmer of 45 years of age who has experience in farming, knows his business and is at the peak of his productivity, is forced off the land today and into the city to seek a job, does the government really seriously believe that even if the economy recovers within two or three years, he is going to move back to the farm and start all over again? Surely anyone concerned with the problems facing agriculture today must admit that the philosophy that seems to be present in the Department of Finance is not very sound in reality. It would be helpful if the bureaucrats who devise the policies that farmers have to live with could spend some time in rural Canada and have the opportunity to talk to people there about the effect of those policies. Ordinary Canadians are suffering at the hands of people who simply do not understand their problems or are indifferent to the consequences of the policies they promote.

We support this measure, Mr. Speaker, because any relief for Canadian farmers and anything that can be done to increase the amount of capital available from the Farm Credit Corporation, is a positive move. But let us not kid ourselves. This measure is only a first step. It will help to relieve some of the burden created by government policy, but it does not address the root cause of the problems. Until the Minister of Finance is prepared to recognize that the policies he has been following have been dangerous to ordinary Canadians, until he is prepared to change those policies and to provide some relief for ordinary people who are carrying a burden too heavy for many of them to bear, these problems will continue for farmers and for people in other areas.

I call upon the Minister of Agriculture to do his duty on behalf of Canadian farmers by going to the Minister of Finance and saying that it is time for those policies to be changed. If he would do that, the Minister of Agriculture would serve Canadian farmers better than anything else he has done to date.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about this bill. The government has put some good things and some bad things in the bill. I want to compare it with a road. Let us assume that the government is trying to build a good road. We will call it the "agricultural road", a road which will encourage farmers to produce, to invest their moneys, to remain on farms, to expand and to pass on the assets to their children. This would be an excellent agricultural road.

I would like to deal with some of the good things in the bill and then deal with some of the government roadblocks which are hurting the farmers of the country and undoing many of the good things it is trying to do. When we talk about checks and balances, we must remember that in any particular way of life they are important, but if they do not give something that is equal or good, if one is far heavier than the other, we end up with a very bad picture. I see in front of us a road which is badly filled with roadblocks.

An hon. Member: What about potholes?

Mr. Taylor: "Potholes" is not a strong enough word. Some of them are almost wells. Vehicles will almost disappear if they are driven on this road. It is similar to removing a bridge with the vehicles going right into the ravine.

One good thing in the bill is that the government is providing the Farm Credit Corporation with the ability to borrow money. The FCC has built up a very credible group of men and women. I do not know any of the women, but I know the men are very credible, and if there are women working in the FCC I assume they are credible as well. They have built up experience and are highly respected in the communities in which they are working. The move in the bill to give the corporation authority to borrow from other sources, not simply depend upon taxation or government grants to do its job, is a real advance. A similar board in the United States has had such authority for quite a long time. It has built up expertise and has been able to borrow and lend at very reasonable rates. This is one good thing about the bill, but there is a little roadblock.

Just when one starts to become enthusiastic about the borrowing, one finds that it must be approved by the minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Will the operations of these credible people, who find that they are able to borrow, be nullified by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)? The Minister of Agriculture is in one place, boards are all over the country. I question this roadblock; that any borrowing is subject to the approval of the minister. It may well be that this will undo all the good the borrowing will do.

A five-member board to work out FCC policy is reasonable. It will now be increased in size to seven members. Why must all boards in the country be enlarged? No wonder people talk about bureaucrats. Is there any reason that a five-member board could not carry out the same work as would a seven-member board? This is simply another method of providing more jobs and less work, and this is what many people on the land think. Farmers who work the land are not able to hire people whenever they feel like it. They must look at their income and expenditures. They have to do a lot of extra work themselves.

How different it is when we talk about boards, particularly those of the federal government. We see this in almost every department—enlarging boards all the time with more bureaucrats. There is no increase in the amount of work which is ongoing. The board is not doing any more work today than it did last year, and tomorrow it will not do any more than today. Even if it is, its members should be able to expand and increase their capacity to do more work, rather than simply hiring more people every time a little more work comes along. The increase in the membership of the board is another roadblock.

There are other severe roadblocks the government is putting in the way of farmers. The hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) mentioned some of them. For example, he mentioned capital gains. A few weeks ago there was a debate in the House during which we requested the government to give consideration to eliminating capital gains on cultivated land to keep down the price of food, but the government refused. Rather than eliminating capital gains tax on farm land, it increased this tax and made it more burdensome.

The first appearance of the budget indicated that if a farmer sold land on an instalment basis for $200,000 and he only collected $25,000, he would pay capital gains on the whole $200,000. How ridiculous can this be! How could the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Agriculture bring in a proposition which means farmers must pay capital gains on money they have not even received or may never receive? They are expected to go out and borrow money at today's rate of interest to pay capital gains on land, because they are selling it, yet only collecting part of the capital. I want to expand further on this matter at eight o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. When the House rose at six o'clock the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) had the floor.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, at the six o'clock adjournment I had just started to speak about capital gains taxes as they affect our farmers. In my view, capital gains tax is very unfair. A farmer or a businessman whose only pension is his land or his business, pays taxes on his land or his business all his life. When a farmer or a businessman reaches retirement age and wants to use his pension—his land or business which is his nest egg—what does the government do? It takes another chunk of it in capital gains tax. This form of taxation is one of the grievances that many farmers have. Farmers are not in favour of capital gains taxes. The capital gains taxes that are levied now by government are more unfair than they have been for a number of years. When a farmer comes to receive his pension—his land—often he is only able to sell it on the instalment plan no matter whether he sells his farm to a son, to a daughter, or to someone outside the family. Seldom can a farmer sell a family farm to a large corporation, and farmers do not want to do this because they want to retain their family farms. Consequently, most often a farmer has to sell his farm on the instalment plan.

Take for instance a farm that has been brought up to a value of $200,000. Selling that farm on an instalment plan means that the farmer accepts a very small amount of that sum over a period of years. Perhaps he is given a down payment of $10,000 but the original budget said he would have to pay capital gains tax on the full $200,000. That is a most unfair proposition. After some discussion and representations against this proposition, the minister told us in December that if the farm was being sold to the farmer's family the payments could be spread over ten years, but if the farm was sold to an outsider, the payments would be spread over five years. But the plan is still most unfair. It takes the pension right out of the farmer's pocket. That was the pension he built up in order to have a decent standard of living for the rest of his life and to have enough money to look after his family. Instead, what we are doing is saying to the farmer, "You have been working building up a nest egg but now the government will grab up a chunk of it." That means that many of our farmers have been unable to complete the deal they started prior to November 12. They cannot live on the balance that would be left. Would any hon. member here upon retirement like it if the government suddenly were to tax a big chunk of his or her pension? If that were done it would put many people in this House in a precarious financial position.

But how much more does this measure affect our farmers and our businessmen whose only pension and only hope of retirement is his land or business? I suggest that we do unto others as we would like others do unto us. We are not doing that in this bill. Our farmers are agonizing over this situation and are being aggravated by it. I have received letters expressing this agony and letters that would make you cry. Farmers are saying that this budget has ruined their hopes. The things they have worked for for 50 years have now gone down the drain. Their wives and family are going to suffer as well as themselves. Others have said: now I cannot sell my land, or expand my business, because of these capital gains taxes. But this government still clings to capital gains tax. Not only that, it has even done away with the once in a lifetime exemption. The government wants every cent it can get, regardless of whether that drives our farmers and businessmen to the poorhouse. It is not fair, and I tell the people it is not fair. The people across this country will support the fact that the farmer's pension is his land. We are now digging into those pensions and interfering with their retirement.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) asked the minister before the adjournment how he would lower interest rates. Well, I do not think it is so difficult. We now have an interest rate of 16.75 per cent. That is better than 24 per cent or 25 per cent, certainly, but it is still too high. I want to suggest that the practice of the Farm Credit Corporation making money on farm loans is not fair. When you make a loan to a business, it adds the cost to its product and the consumer pays. When you make a loan to a farmer, the farmer cannot add the cost to his product. It has to come out of his margin of profit and that margin is sometimes pretty low or non-existent. That is why there has been so many farm bankruptcies. We keep taking and taking from the farmer and it is getting to the point where there is just nothing left. He cannot pass these costs on like other people and for that reason the government would be justified in having a different policy on loans to farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: It could very well say it does not have to make money in this way. This money belongs to the taxpayer, and certainly the taxpayer will get the benefit if we keep the rate reasonably low so that the cost of food will remain stable.

The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) urged the government a few months ago not to apply capital gains tax to cultivated land, but the government said there was no difference. There is a difference and it should be recognized. The Alberta government recognized it. It cut the rate for farm loans to 12 per cent, and 6 per cent for new farmers. If the Alberta government can do it, why can the federal government not do it? If the federal government can make low interest or no-interest loans to countries all over the world; if it can write off millions of dollars in such loans, surely it can help Canadian farmers produce food at a reasonable price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: That is something members opposite better take cognizance of, because farmers are getting angry and they are not going to stand for this kind of thing very much longer.

This government has heaped abuse and abuse on farmers. Most farmers require their guns to protect their livestock, their chickens, their turkeys. Some of them have guns for enjoyment; they work long hours and need some relaxation. But our gun laws today are aggravating farmers. No one objects to gun laws if they are going to stop criminals, but our gun laws are not doing that. A lot of murders today are commited with the use of knives, hatchets and clubs. We do not put up any laws against them, but we say you cannot have guns, or you have to register them. If you have a revolver you cannot take it in your vehicle to go to target practice without written permission from the RCMP.

The administration of these gun laws has become a millstone around the necks of the RCMP and those who want to use guns for recreation purposes. It is time the government started to look at the use of guns. The bill introduced by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-De-Grace-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is a bad bill. Even though it is not as bad as some articles have said, it is still bad when you start putting more and more restrictions on the proper use of firearms. That is another grievance hanging around the necks of farmers, and they are getting fed up with it.

Another grievance relates to metrication. We have made our farmers foreigners in their own country. The hon. members can smile if they like; go out and visit some farm homes and find out for yourselves. There was no need to apply metrication to farm produce. For years the Canadian Wheat Board did the conversion when necessary right at the port. There was no difficulty. The farmers knew what they were selling, how much of it and what they should get for it. Then we introduced a new language, which they do not understand, and which made them, as one farmer said to me, foreigners in their own country. He was born here, lived here all his life, and now he is a foreigner. He cannot understand the weights and measures, the temperatures, and does not know whether he is being paid properly or not.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Even the cows are confused.

Mr. Taylor: This government, without the consent of Parliament, has gone ahead and imposed metric on the people of Canada. This is another totalitarian act which the farmers and a lot of other people do not appreciate. The government would be very wise to abolish metric and say to people, you can use metric if you want to, or you can use the imperial measurement. It should not tell them what they have to do. The government is spending thousands, perhaps millions, to tell people what is good for them, why they should use metric. Every time people see that on television they feel like kicking the TV out of the house. They are so angry with this government—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Even the cows are angry.

Mr. Taylor: You are building up anger across the country item by item. When you do that, you will eventually reach the boiling point, and this government had better be watching for that boiling point.

With regard to language, why must we have packages marked in two languages in western Canada? There is no reason at all. The people from Quebec will understand how the people of Alsace-Lorraine felt when the Germans marched in. I remember as a young boy reading that story over and over and almost weeping for those people because they were having their last lesson in their own language. Well, we better watch that in this country, too. Let us have freedom of choice. Let us encourage the use of both languages, but let us stop imposing it on people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the Chair wishes to be clear. Are we discussing Bill C-88, an act respecting loans to farmers? That is what I thought was before the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He was just clearing his throat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I would like the hon. member to tell me how his remarks relate to the matter under discussion.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on this bill, and if you would visit some farms you would know how close this is to the hearts of farmers. One of the reasons they have to pay more taxes and borrow more money is because of these other programs this government imposes on them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: The farmers are reaching a point where they are getting pretty fed up with the things this government is doing. Just consider the IAACs. For years farmers were able to sell their land on the instalment plan, and then invest the money in IACCs and live off the interest. The purchaser was happy because he paid by instalments. The farmer and his wife were happy because they could live decently on the pension they had built up over the years, and then this government says, do away with IAACs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his alloted time has expired.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I started at 5.50 p.m.; that is only 30 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I can recognize the hon. member on a point on order, but if it is to debate the time allotted to him, his allotted time has expired according to the rules. The hon. member for Brant.

• (2020)

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say that I started at ten minutes to six, and have only spoken for 30 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member was entitled to 20 minutes. He spoke for ten minutes before the supper break and ten minutes after the supper break, which is a total of 20 minutes. As a matter of fact, the Chair gave the hon. member an extra two minutes. The hon. member for Brant.

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order. Look up your rules.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. At the request of the hon. member, I will read Standing Order 75(9), which states:

When debate is permitted, no member shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes during proceedings on any amendment at that stage, except that the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, a minister of the Crown or other member sponsoring a bill and the member proposing an amendment, may speak for not more than 40 minutes.

I did not hear the hon. member proposing an amendment. The hon. member is not the Prime Minister, is not the Leader of the Opposition and is not a minister of the Crown. The hon. member was allotted 20 minutes.

The hon. member for Brant.

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You are reading the Standing Order concerning the report stage. We are at third reading of this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Taylor: Ask the Table officer. Forty minutes are allotted on third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. We are at third reading, and there is no debate on this here. I think the hon. member is again debating. I have just read. Standing Order 75(9), which very clearly states that hon. members are allotted 20 minutes to participate in debate with the exception of those I have mentioned.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether we could consult with the Table. I did, and I believe I heard correctly that we are at third reading. I believe the clerk at the table did indicate that. If that is the case, then the hon. member's time has not expired.

Mr. Taylor: We are on third reading of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): We always stand to be corrected and I have been corrected at this time. I sought information before, I received information and we were referring to Standing Order 75(9). However, we are on third reading and the hon. member is allowed 40 minutes. I hope he will pardon me for interrupting and I would confirm he has eight minutes left.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the elimination of IAACs, something which the farmers used for many years. They would sell their land, which they had built up over many years, by the instalment plan and live off the interest of the IAACs. What did this government do? It eliminated the IAACs. The farmers cannot use this benefit any longer. This is another grievance they have.

Why is this government so deliberately trying to hurt the farmers of this country, not only the western farmers, but also the Ontario, maritime and Quebec farmers? They are all being hurt by this type of legislation. The farmers want to put their investments into RRSPs, but the government even cuts that down and tells them to put their investments into forward averaging. Forward averaging is not at all satisfactory. In the first place, the farmers must put in the whole sum. Second, they may never get it back. They may live long enough, but they may not. The government offers them something as if it were something, but it is not a substitute for the IAACs and RRSPs.

The government has made a mess of the Small Business Development Bond. By the way, when it first came out it was a help to people. It enabled people to get financing at a reasonable rate. However, farmers and businessmen were doing too well on that, so what did the government do? It said they could not have it unless they were down and out, completely broke, and then they could apply for the Small Business Development Bond.

We could go on and on concerning the burdens the government has built up and heaped upon the shoulders of the farmers and businessmen. It is certainly a burden on the farmers who work the land. We should look at capital cost allowance, recognized for years as an expense of business. What did the government do? It said, no, they may only claim half the first year. Has any hon. member opposite ever had to buy a combine? One does not buy a combine in January, February or May of any year. One buys a combine in the fall when it is needed to cut the wheat. The government cuts the allowance in half and says the farmer has only had it for three months that year. Where is the ordinary common sense of this government? One buys a combine in the fall because it is used in the fall. Then it sits there for several months. The government has said that the farmers and businessmen may only have half the capital cost allowance. Let me tell hon. members that this not only hurts the farmers, it also hurts the industries in Ontario and Quebec. I can name—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And New Brunswick.

Mr. Taylor: —a number of dealers who cancelled their orders for farm equipment this last fall after the budget came down. The farmers are not going to buy this plan. They will put up with the old equipment. It will be more costly, perhaps, and they will not be able to do as much work. The government is imposing that penalty on them because it cuts the capital cost allowance in half.

The government is so money-hungry it is taking money out of the pockets of the farmers, the businessmen and the old age pensioners. The government tells the pensioners that it will give them extra money through the supplementary allowance, but it takes three times as much away in the cost of fuel and energy.

This government is making a complete mess of this country. It is affecting not only the farmers but also the businessmen. The government has no common sense about what is good. It is not trying to reflect the thinking of the people. All it is doing is governing, governing, governing, and grabbing, grabbing, grabbing! The government wants every cent it can get. It does not matter how much it hurts the people who are paying the money. It will have its pound of flesh. The government might learn, as Shakespeare mentioned, that when one takes that pound of flesh, one may also be taking the blood of the country. That is exactly what the government is doing today. It is time it awakened and started to use some common sense in some of these programs. The farmers are becoming more and more angry. I tell hon. members that it will reach the boiling point if this government does not wake up pretty soon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I usually say it is a pleasure for me to speak on any particular bill in this House. However, when it comes to a bill such as Bill C-88, which deals with loans to farmers, I cannot honestly say it is a pleasure, because what we are really referring to in this bill is a pretty sad story right across our country. It refers to a virtually neglected group within our society. I am not saying that in any cheap way to gain sympathy outside this chamber or among the farmers in my constituency.

I can recall when I first moved to Brant county in 1959 that there were approximately 2,300 farmers. Today we have about 800. Admittedly, back in the 1960s there were some farmers who either did not have the gumption or the intelligence, perhaps, or the will, or the money, or the inclination to hang in, hold on, expand, modernize and so on in order to keep up with changing conditions. Therefore, it was natural that some would fall by the wayside. It was natural that some would give up in the early sixties and the mid-sixties. It was natural that some farmers' sons and daughters would move off the farms. When there is such a reduction in the total number of farmers in one relatively small but very rich farming area of southern Ontario, a reduction from 2,300 to approximately 800 farmers, it obviously must mean something other than just a lack of will or determination.

When we speak about Bill C-88, we are speaking about the plight of many farmers today. In effect, the only problem facing them today is the problem of financing their operation because of the lack of sufficient cash flow.

There is an even worse situation or even worse problem today when it is virtually impossible for many farmers to get credit at all. They simply cannot afford to borrow any more. The cash flow, in other words, has become virtually a trickle and in many cases has dried up.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation in which their operating costs are soaring, due to increased energy costs, such as gasoline and diesel fuel, heating costs, drying costs, the cost of fertilizer, and the rising cost of farm machinery. They cannot borrow money; they cannot afford the carrying charges.

Because they cannot afford farm machinery, this is having a very serious adverse effect on the agricultural implement industry, whose Canadian centre, one might say, is also in my constituency in the city of Brantford. Massey-Ferguson and White Farm are both experiencing difficulty in selling their products. The reason they cannot sell combines, at $120,000 or $130,000, is that farmers cannot afford to buy on borrowed money. That is another major problem.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, beef producers, hog producers, and cash croppers specifically, are all in trouble. Commodity prices are lower than they were two years ago. All of this is adding to their woes. Then we have Bill C-88 which is a bill to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to seek funding from sources in addition to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. I would not care, if this bill gave the Farm Credit Corporation the right to allow the corporation to use funds from every financial institution in the country—$100 million, $500 million, $1 billion, it makes no difference—the problem is that farmers cannot afford 16.75 per cent interest. Many farmers have had to borrow from banks at higher interest rates than that.

So we get back to the budget, we get back to the No. 1 problem of this country, high interest rates. You can put $100 million, $500 million or $1 billion into the fund, but as long as you are artificially forcing these rates higher and higher—16.75 per cent is about as high as farm credit has been, I believe, and it may go even higher—it is not going to help the farmer who is carrying charges or a debt load on an annual basis in my constituency that may go as high as $50,000 or $60,000 just to pay interest on money borrowed.

Last summer I visited several farmers, most of them young farmers, who back in the 1970s had been encouraged by both government and the banks to go out and borrow, borrow, borrow in order to expand and modernize. I suppose it makes sense. In order to keep up with technological change in the farming industry, farmers had to spend more money and to spend more money they had to borrow. The banks were throwing it at them. Banks managers never went near the farm, never did profit appraisals. They said: "Here is the money at 8 per cent or 9 per cent, take $200,000, take $300,000." Now, of course, with the interest rates the banks are charging, from 17 per cent to 19 per cent, the farmers, most of whom are young, ambitious and aggressive, are being forced out of business or forced into a nervous breakdown or a severe depression because they cannot see their way out of this tunnel.

One farmer not far from my city of Brantford told me that the Farm Credit Corporation officer told him: "Look, you have two farms, put the two together and sell them, they are worth about $1.2 million." The farmer said: "Fine, you get me a buyer and I will sell tomorrow." Who can buy a $1.2 million farm operation if, in addition to the amount of the market value of the farm, you are borrowing money at 16 per cent to 18 per cent interest?

Here we are, Mr. Speaker, in a very real dilemma. It does not matter how much money the Farm Credit Corporation can provide, if the interest rates are maintained at a very high level, farmers will not derive any benefit at all. They may keep the wolf from the door for a few more months, they may keep the bailiff away for a few more months, but in the long run the farmers are going deeper and deeper into debt.

Let us look at some of these statistics, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the financial crunch that farmers find themselves in. One could argue that most small businesses today are in trouble; but let us face it, the farmer cannot pass on those added costs as can most other businesses. Most farmers today operate under marketing boards and marketing agencies where prices are pretty well set well ahead, and it is pretty difficult to tack on the added costs of either a mortgage or simply a bank loan for machinery.

Let us look at some of the farm net incomes. In 1973 net farm income was $3.3 billion. In 1980 it was $3.25 billion but in 1973 dollars that was approximately $1.74 billion. In 1981 it was $4 billion net farm income. In 1982 the estimated farm income is going to drop to $3.4 billion. If we read that figure in terms of 1973 dollars the net farm income will be $3.3 billion. We had net farm income, taking into consideration the inflationary figure, of $1.45 billion in 1981. That is a pretty bad picture for the farm industry. The average farm income in 1973 was $12,692 per farm. In 1980, if we look at it in terms of 1973 figures, we get an average or net income per farm of $5,576 in 1973 dollars.

I do not know of any other industry in this country, Mr. Speaker, that is getting so far behind. On the one hand you have very high interest rates; then in the centre you have falling prices in beef, in hogs, in commodities, in most grains, and on the other hand, you have inflation eating away at what income a farmer can get. So, in an inflationary sense, you had an average farm income in 1980 of $5,576 per farm in terms of 1973 dollars.

I do not know how much longer the good farmers of this country, the aggressive farmers, the productive farmers, can tolerate this kind of adversity on a day to day basis. Farmers generally, by nature, are optimists. If they have a bad year as a result of the weather, they always say that the next year will be better, and they are always hoping. Governments successively have taken farmers for granted because they know farmers like the rural way of life, enjoy their work, hard as it is, with long hours, and, nonetheless, still prefer it to working in a factory, running a business in a city, being a professional or living in a large metropolis. Successive governments have assumed that no matter how bad conditions were on the back concession, the people would stay. You cannot live on love. You cannot live in the past. You cannot remain a farmer simply because you like the fresh air on the back concession. We have reached the point where it is financially impossible for a growing number of farmers to remain on the farm. The banks are either foreclosing or putting such pressure on the farmers as to make their lives miserable. Many are going bankrupt.

Ontario, for example, has been hard hit. Last year in the province of Ontario there were 27 farmers who went out of business. That may not sound like a lot when looking at the total number, but 27 farms going belly-up represents millions of dollars. More than that, it represents back-breaking years of hard work and sweat, all for a dream, an ideal; not a rich life but a comfortable one. Those hopes and dreams are down the tube, not because the farmers were lazy or inefficient, it is not because there is not a market out there. It is because the government has deliberately, through the Governor of the Bank of Canada, set interest rates at such a high level they cannot borrow. There are no further extensions on their line of credit and their cash flow is drying up. This is indeed a very serious matter.

Farm incomes in 1982 are projected to decline by 21 per cent over 1981. Interest charges have tripled since 1977. In 1981, farmers paid out more in interest charges than their projected income for 1982. Credit is now almost as big an item of overhead as feed. The feed goes for a useful purpose. The credit goes for two-legged hogs—the bankers.

My party does not see this bill as something to pin our hopes on. The private money market is very high at present. The minister has not brought in any changes to the Bank Act or Income Tax Act that would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer a tax break to people investing in FCC/agri-bonds. However, I would urge him to press the cabinet for such a change because agriculture desperately needs more low-cost credit.

This government doled out a paltry $45 million in low-interest loans through the Farm Credit Corporation. Part of this bill is to authorize those loans. It was a good idea, but much more money is needed if we are to rescue the many deserving young farmers who invested money in good faith and now see those investments going down the drain. We need these farmers desperately. The workers in my riding who produce farm machinery need these farmers. The many hungry people around the world need these farmers.

It has always bothered me when we discuss major farm problems that one third of the world population goes to bed hungry. Indeed, one third of the world population is starving.

This country has fantastic resources. Farming is certainly one of them. We have the expertise, the know-how and the land. We know how to look after that land and make it produce. We have a farm force in this country second to none in the world in intelligence, integrity, education, skills, know-how and determination. We can manufacture all the farm implements we need right here, yet last year we had a net imbalance in agricultural products to the tune of $1.34 billion. That is another mess which the Liberal government has thrown at us.

We have a small population. We can produce far more than we do. We could export far more. We could even give away a great deal of our farm produce if the government paid the farmers a decent price for their investment, hard work and expertise.

What is the government doing? It is doing everything it can to dissuade young people from farming. The government is doing everything it can to depress not only economically, but emotionally those farmers who are struggling to keep their heads above water. Through its high interest rate policy, the government is doing everything it can to make farming almost an impossibility.

What young person today 18 or 19 years of age who was born on a farm would think of buying out his father for half a million or a million dollars when he knows he can work his whole lifetime and never own that property, unlike his father and grandfather who had that sense of accomplishment after years of hard work? Then we have the problem of farmers who at the end of their working life, because of the changes in the budget with respect to the IAACs, are not able to retire as comfortably as they would like.

Farmers do not want charity. They do not want any special treatment. What they want from this government is some consideration for the very severe economic squeeze in which they now find themselves. They are asking for decent prices and interest rates. In fact, the entire country is in trouble as a result of the high interest rate policy which is driving farmers off the land.

At the present time, beef and pork producers are in the most trouble with cash crop farmers not far behind. We have heard a lot of talk from the minister about having a new hog stabilization plan in place by April 1. What do we see? We see nothing, and April 1 is just 48 hours away.

We have heard a lot of talk from the minister about a new plan for beef producers and maybe a new marketing board system. What are the results so far—nothing. We are watching an entire industry in deep trouble and here we are debating a bill that will help just a little when a lot of help is required. The over-all interest rate policy of the government must be changed, but the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) must do more to provide the tools to agriculture so that farmers can help themselves.

I would like to quote a few more statistics. Let us look at the return on labour, management and equity as a percentage of equity. We have to look at farms today as a small business or industry. In 1971, the percentage was 6.5 per cent. It rose to an all-time high of 10.9 per cent in 1974. In 1980 it had fallen to 4 per cent. This is one of the few, if not the major industry in this country that is going down successively year by year. It is not even holding its own.

Let us look at realized net income as a percentage of total cash receipts. In 1971 it was 28 per cent. In 1974 it rose to 40 per cent. In 1981 it was down to 22 per cent, and the projection for 1982 is 18 per cent. We can see that the battle farmers are fighting is downhill all the way.

Is it any wonder that many are voluntarily giving up farming? Is it any wonder that there are more and more bankruptcies every year? Is it any wonder that farmers' young sons and daughters do not want anything to do with farming? They would rather go to the city where hopefully they can find steady jobs. What will happen to our rural way of life? Just because the banks, thanks to this government, want to gouge farmers and take the last pound of flesh and the last drop of blood from them, will we lose a whole way of life? Will we lose half of those 250,000 farmers?

I started my speech by saying that when I moved to Brant county in southern Ontario in 1959, there were 2,300 farmers. That is not bush country. That is some of the finest farming country in Canada. Today there are 800 farmers. How much longer will this continue? Will it continue until there are only 100,000 farmers in the entire country. What is the bottom line of Governor Bouey and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen)? Is the bottom line a thousand farm bankruptcies a year— two thousand? What is the bottom line when it comes to broken dreams and lost hope? Those are the questions the governor of the Bank of Canada, in his so-called valiant effort to fight inflation, should keep in mind.

Many economists love to juggle figures, percentages and decimal points, but every time we look at these figures we should remember that they represent human beings, most of whom are part of a long tradition of a rural way of life and farming. They are proud to be farmers. They are proud to be producing products the country and the world desperately need, yet they are being kicked around on almost every side. They are being kicked around by banks, the Farm Credit Corporation itself, the government and the Bank of Canada. I do not know how much longer they can take it.

I have sent several appeals to the Minister of Agriculture from farmers in my riding who are financially on their last legs. Most of them were turned down at the agency level of the Farm Credit Corporation. One or two got as far as the appeal board. I appealed to the minister on their behalf, and to the best of my knowledge tonight not one of them was given a break. The old argument was that the FCC cannot be overruled and that the appeal board cannot be overruled. These are not fly-by-night farmers, they are well-established farmers who are lacking in only one thing. They are not lacking in determination, ambition or desire to work, but in cash flow. Surely to God the Minister of Agriculture can come up with something better than another $45 million in loans and an interest rate of 16.75 per cent, which is three times what it was five years ago.

I have spoken about farmers in my own county, but in so doing I hope it will be understood that I have spoken on behalf of farmers across Canada who find themselves in dire straits. I sincerely hope the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance, the cabinet and the Governor of the Bank of Canada will finally concede that their tight monetary policy which they first introduced in 1975 is not working in this country. I do not care about the United States, I do not care about England—it is not working here.

One of the main reasons it is not working here—and this relates to this bill and the farm industry—is that we have such a tremendous outflow of money as a result of our net deficit in trade in manufactured goods. It was $21 billion in 1980. If it were not for our raw materials and our farm exports, the overall net imbalance or deficit in trade would be horrendous. Why are we punishing primary producers who sell wheat around the world to help with our balance of payments? Why are we penalizing them? Why are we hurting them? Why are we making it almost impossible for them to go on or even to keep their heads above water? This is one of the most crucial sectors in our entire economy.

It seems to me that the Minister of Agriculture has lost his clout in the cabinet. About a year ago he had many brave words to say to farm groups about the banks. He said he would do what he could. He said he would tell the bankers to smarten up and to put some heart into their transactions. I do not think he has done much. If he has tried, I do not think he has succeeded. Otherwise, why would he bring in a piece of legislation in which he demands 16.75 per cent on these government-guaranteed FCC loans?

There is something else that makes me angry. The banks are damned careful about lending other people's money. That is really what it amounts to. Every cent they lend through the FCC to a farmer is guaranteed by the government. The banks will not lose. Mr. Speaker, you know and I know that the banks never lose, but in this case many farmers will. They will lose their livelihood, unless the Minister of Agriculture improves upon Bill C-88.

I hope in the next year or so I will not have to stand here and tell this House that the number of farmers in Brant country has shrunk from 800 to only 600. I do not know what will happen to the farm economy, the rural way of life and the farm industry itself if we do not get things turned around, if we do not put a little humanity back into our planning and our legislation and if we do not let farmers get on with the job they like most. They do not do it just to make money, but they want to keep their heads above water. They want to work and produce and have a reasonable return on their investment and hard work.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, normally I am able to say it is a pleasure to rise and speak about a bill, but such is not the case tonight. We are at the third reading stage of this bill. It was given first reading and we had a full debate at second reading on the principle of the bill. Hon. members on this side of the House and, indeed, some government backbenchers, speaking about the principle of the bill generally, agreed that farmers need more assistance. Hon. members on all sides of the House then suggested in committee a large number of improvements to the bill in an effort to demonstrate that bills emanating from this House genuinely reflect the work, skills, efforts and knowledge of individual members. Unfortunately, those ideas were not accepted by the government and the minister responsible, and now we find that the bill is back in its original form, as it came to us from the bureaucracy through the cabinet. To my mind that is regrettable because this has often been the case. This indicates to me that this Parliament is not playing the role it should. Our collective wisdom should be brought to bear on problems or situations in such a way as to improve our country.

Perhaps you were in the chair this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, when an amendment from this side was rejected. It was a perfectly sound and logical amendment which would have improved the bill and the condition of farmers in this country, yet it was rejected. I really wonder why it has to be that way. Why is it that a government in power does not accept good amendments or suggestions from members of the House of whatever party? I believe hon. members in the back benches opposite have to take more individual responsibility for representing the genuine interest of their constituencies.

I doubt that this FCC bill even qualifies as a band-aid measure because the amounts of money involved are so small. The FCC has done a lot of good things for the farmers of this country and could do much more if it had the financial wherewithal; and it could have the financial wherewithal, Mr. Speaker.

Government expenses this year will increase by 22 per cent but its revenue sources have also increased enormously. Revenues from oil are coming in by the trainload and buildings to store the money cannot be put up fast enough. The government is taking all the new sources of sales tax but nothing is available for the farm community. Being of a socialist turn of mind the government wants to get into all sorts of new ventures rather than keeping the existing areas strong. This can be seen in the estimates as they relate to established programs financing, health care and post-secondary education. The blue book shows a cut of some $469 million in these areas. After the government had expanded into these programs and got the provinces involved it decided to pull out, leaving the burden on the provinces. Some of them cannot pick up the difference, Mr. Speaker. Seven provinces east of Sasksatchewan have enormous deficits and for the federal government to unload this extra burden on them is unfair.

When you contrast the band-aid measure this bill offers with the incredible harm the government has wreaked on the farm community with its budget measures, its energy security bill, the economic policy including high interest rates and deficits, you will see just how shameful it is, Mr. Speaker. If I were a government backbencher I would be ashamed to go into my riding and tell people that this is what we are doing for farmers. The farmers I represent would not tolerate it, Mr. Speaker. They would probably beat me up and kick me out of the riding and, quite properly so. That does not seem to happen to government backbenchers. They seem to be able to go into their ridings and get away with this. That is just amazing, because it is clear that they are not representing their constituents' interests.

I believe we should always start out with the thought of what Canada would be and remember what Canada was in 1968. We were a unified nation then, with Expo 67 just behind us. We had an incredible sense of what it was to be Canadian. We had a new, fresh Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and a new, fresh government. People were expecting great things. We had balanced budgets and the national debt was almost non-existent. We had a first rate health insurance plan, a medicare plan and post-secondary education. Because of low tuition fees tens of thousands of students from modest-income families had the benefit of university education and were able to go out and develop exciting careers for themselves. Farmers were healthy and wealthy; they were prosperous. As a nation we were growing. There was a sense that the country was charging ahead and starting to fulfil its real role in the world as a peace-keeper and supplier of food.

Where are we today? There is a separatist government in the province of Quebec. There is incredible disunity between Anglophone Canadians and Francophone Canadians. There is incredible disunity between rural Canadians and urban Canadians. The first separatist member has been elected to a legislature in the west. We have a national deficit of over $14 billion per year and the accumulated national deficit is over $100 billion. The cost of interest to service that debt amounts to some $17 billion. That $17 billion is not spread evenly over the population, Mr. Speaker, but is concentrated in the hands of people with wealth. This means we are developing a class society.

If you had possessed $1 million at the beginning of the year what would you have done with it, Mr. Speaker? Would you have put it in a business to develop jobs and a future for young people? Of course not, because the risks are just enormous. You would have loaned it to your government at 19.5 per cent interest and at the end of the year you would have had $195,000 in your pocket, having taken no risk at all.

This government is creating a class society of very, very rich and very, very poor. That is exactly what is happening in many Third World countries today as a result of totalitarian government where there is a concentration of power in a monarch, a dictator or, in a socialist nation, where all decisions are made by a small group of men and women in a cabinet and in a bureaucracy. No country that has permitted power to be concentrated in a small group has been successful.

The only way to success is when the capital of a nation is divided into millions and millions of decisions—farmers making decisions with respect to their small amount of capital, for instance. An hon. member who spoke earlier told us that at one time there had been 2,300 farmers in his riding and that now there are only 800. That was 2,300 people making decisions on their portion of the national income, Mr. Speaker.

What is happening at the federal level. There are now over 400 Crown corporations, and all of them have special taxing provisions and therefore are not carrying their fair share of the tax load. The tax base is being eroded and as a result the rest of us pay more taxes but we do not have a proportionate say in the decisions made about the income of this nation. That is being drained into the central government where 36 men and women in the cabinet and a bureaucracy make the decision about how our wealth should be spent.

The hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) has often said that we all know what a slave is; it is simply someone whose human rights have been taken away completely and all decisions with respect to that person are made by the master. The slave in an economic sense is someone who is taxed 100 per cent and all the economic rent from that person and all the decisions respecting that rent are made by other people.

In this nation, when we add up the taxes paid to all levels of government, we find that 55 per cent of our individual economic rent goes to government. That means that somebody else makes the decisions about how it is spent, so we are 55 per cent slaves. And as the hon. member asks, how long do we permit this to go on—until we are 70 per cent, 80 per cent, or 100 per cent slaves, as is the case in so many other nations? We have to draw the line, Mr. Speaker. I believe that if the backbenchers opposite were to reflect the true interests of their constituents they would put a stop to this.

I have pointed out that in 1968 when the Liberal government came to power there was a tremendous feeling of national unity in the country and we were all climbing the mountain, so to speak, as a nation. As a result of $469 million coming out of the estimates for the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan), concerning post-secondary education, and for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), concerning our health system, these programs are now in disarray. Farmers are dropping like flies. The government has dissipated the trust that people put in it when it was first elected, and it has been elected continuously but it has not been honouring that trust. The Prime Minister has an obligation to think of all regions of the country and to make a genuine effort to ensure that they feel comfortable in the nation. He has failed in that fundamental trust, that fiduciary relationship.

Mackenzie King understood that and had members in all regions of the country. He had powerful members and ministers in every region. Prime Minister St. Laurent and Prime Minister Diefenbaker would never have done to the nation what this Prime Minister has done. As a result we have an elected separatist government in Quebec and an elected separatist member in the west. We also have an incredible alienation which saddens me as a Canadian. No longer are we charging up the mountain to conquer the world and be a powerful nation in support of peace, security and decency in the world. We cannot represent that to the world because we are not unified within ourselves. This goes back to the man at the top and the men and women around him.

Back in 1974-76 the government felt it could make decisions with a small cabinet and bureaucracy rather than take advantage of millions and millions of individual decisions. At that time there was a surplus of grain which could not be sold, and we were at the peak of our beef production cycle. What did the government do in its wisdom? It collected statistics and had people sitting at desks in Ottawa making decisions. Rather than trusting farmers, it establised the LIFT program and threw open the borders to the importation of more beef, with the result that we were swamped with beef. It destroyed the cattle market. We paid farmers to sow their land into pasture. As a result there was a dramatic increase in beef production and the bottom fell out of the beef market. We lost thousands and thousands of beef men in the country. At the same time grain had suddenly disappeared.

Had there been proper marketing there would not have been a grain surplus, and there was a crying need for food in the world. The previous speaker gave statistics as to the number of people who go to bed hungry every night. We should never cut back production in the farm community. We should be doing everything possible to enhance more production. I wanted to give another example of government believing it could do better, and I have more examples which I will give later. Every farmer who voted for the Liberal Party in 1980 has been betrayed; they have been genuinely stabbed in the back.

I should like now to deal with capital gains tax. Canada was developed by poor people who came from other lands because there was no chance in the social or economic structures of their countries to get ahead. This started in the early 1600s with French Canadian farmers along the St. Lawrence as well as those who settled in Nova Scotia. Then there were the United Empire Loyalists after the American war of independence. Next we developed the west. Millions of our ancestors came from every country in the world to obtain land. They knew that if they obtained a piece of this territory they could make decisions for themselves. They were prepared to work hard, to live and to die young, because it was tough on the western plains. As a result, we have all had a chance and are surely better off for it.

Not once was there a tax upon the capital of those farms. It was believed then that people had a right to work hard, to amass a bit of capital and to make decisions. Millions of those decisions led to a wise over-all result. The situation was different than it was in the socialist and totalitarian states from where they came where all decision-making on the capital and wealth of the nation was in the hands of a small group.

I recall a debate in the House some time ago when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that his family was on the same parcel of land in the province of Quebec for nine generations. That will never happen again. The Lalonde family will not be on that land nine generations from now. It will probably be there for one more generation, or perhaps two at the most. The capital gains tax is such that the land cannot be passed on to the next generation which usually has only one member who wants to be a farmer. The other members of the family usually leave the farm to become doctors, lawyers or teachers. Because of the enormous increase in the value of land due to inflation, land cannot be transferred to a member of the next generation. Farmers cannot do justice to the other members of the family because values have risen so much that they do not have adequate cash to leave land to one member of the family and cash to the others. It is impossible for the person taking over the farm to assume an equal burden and pay off the other sons and daughters. This has virtually become impossible, with the result that farmers are leaving.

As the last speaker indicated, farmers in his area have dropped from 2,300 to 800. Some of them were sold to existing farmers, often corporations. They will continue to concentrate and become bigger and bigger. Then we will find big industry becoming involved in farm production, which will want a rate of return of 20 per cent, like the oil industry. Canadians will be worse off and paying through the nose. Indeed, I expect Canadians will be lined up for food, as is the case in Poland, before they realize it.

It is a shame that the government never directs its attention to the fact that we are an enormous food importer. Despite the fact that we have a small population, some of the best farm land in the entire world, and a skilled and dedicated farming community which is determined to make the country work, we are enormous importers of food. We are not self-sufficient in many items but we could be; it is a shame.

The role of government has increased enormously. In the energy area we see a government which believes it can operate the entire oil industry with Crown corporations. It is in for the lesson of its life. Regretfully the people who pay for those lessons are the taxpayers of the nation. We poured $2 billion into Petro-Canada for the government to have a "window" on the oil industry. Now that it has a window on the oil industry, is the industry any better for it? Is there more oil in the country? Is the price of gasoline at the pump any cheaper? It is not one cent cheaper, and it will not be.

Before the government became involved, the oil industry was the most regulated industry in the country. The provinces decided whether leases would be granted and where. The provinces decided all environmental considerations and the costs. The provinces decided the rate of production from the well based upon conservation measures. The federal government decided the price of the oil and whether any would be exported. When governments control where they drill, how fast they produce, the price, and whether it is exported, what is the oil industry? It is a utility.

We were really paying multinational corporations a fee for the cost of their money. They had the front-end load to buy leases from the provinces, to pay the Canadian service industry, to conduct seismic studies, to drill wells, to do the mudding, the cementing, the steelwork and the production, to build pipelines, to do the refining, to build further pipelines and to pay truckers and retailers. All this part of the industry was Canadian-owned. We were just getting the capital to develop from multinationals, and the cost of the capital was between 3 per cent and 5 per cent.

The government came along, believing it needed a window on the industry, and converted equity, which was costing 3 per cent to 5 per cent, to debt. We borrowed $2 billion from people with money, and we are paying 19.5 per cent interest on it. We bought shares. We had to borrow that money in other countries, therefore the flow of money out of Canada today is 19.5 per cent as compared with 3 per cent to 5 per cent for equity.

This is totally absurd because we went through this during the 1920s and 1930s. The bulk of the capital in this country was then in the form of debt. Most of it came from Britain. In those bad years capital flowed out of the country because of the interest rate. All the bright intellectuals, the Liberal reformers, the CCFers at that time and the intellectuals who were speaking from the universities, all said, we have to stop that. We have to convert it to equity because then the flow of money out of the country will be in the form of dividends. If there is a good year, there is a dividend. If there is a bad year, no money leaves the country. The great debate occurred and the solution was to change that debt to equity which is precisely what happened. But this government comes along and reverses the policy, and it is costing Canadians very dearly.

No doubt you read a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, that some $10 billion has flowed out of this country as a result of the National Energy Program. This has dramatically affected our farmers, as I will point out to you in a moment. That money did not produce any new wells. It was used to buy back equity in the form of shares. Statistics Canada reported that an additional $8 billion has moved out of Canada. The government knows the money has gone but it does not know where it has gone. I can tell you where that money has gone. It came from the pockets of our own citizens, modest income citizens and our Canadian businesses, particularly those in the oil and gas industry and it has been invested in the United States.

If you visit Denver today, it is just like Calgary was before the National Energy Program came into being. In Denver there is a dynamic climate of expansion with people investing money to find oil. Some lose a lot, but they find a little. But they are finding almost enough now to make the United States oil self-sufficient.

At one time the United States was importing over eight million barrels of oil a day. Now the United States imports only four million barrels of oil a day. The United States will become oil self-sufficient. The irony of that is, the United States is achieving that goal with our money. In the meantime, Canada still imports 450,000 barrels of oil a day. The goal of self-sufficiency has been lost.

Some of our western oil wells are being shut down because the government has made a decision to continue importing oil. All that money, $3 billion or $4 billion a year, creates jobs in Saudi Arabia, Mexico, Nigeria and Venezuela. This defies rational understanding, and it makes me wonder what is going on over on the government side.

People are taking money out of Canada because of the business climate here. Our ancestors came here to get a chunk of capital, a chance to build a future for themselves, their children and their grandchildren. As a result of the government nationalizing everything, concentrating decision-making power in the cabinet and a small bureaucracy, people are losing confidence, which they should. People are taking their money elsewhere. These are the same people who built this country. They now feel jeopardized living here. I can give you the names and addresses and introduce you to several leading farmers and ranchers in my riding, Mr. Speaker. They have come to me in all honesty and sincerity. Already three or four of them have sold their Canadian assets, taken the money and moved to the United States.

The Liberal government is doing to this country what previous politicians have done to countries around the world, forcing their citizens to uproot themselves, go to a strange land where a strange language is spoken. Yet people who came here were prepared to endure that pain for a generation so their children, their grandchildren and their great-grandchildren would have the opportunity to succeed. People are leaving Canada now because of the uncertainty.

I have talked to many farmers about the Farm Credit Corporation bill and the budget. Farmers know what the problem is. We learned the lesson in the west in the last generation. It is a shame that we have to repeat it. The existing government is made up mostly of academics who have never met a payroll in their lives, have never operated a farm, and have no idea what it is like to produce something new. You can almost guess their past when you see them. They have been to the finest schools, the finest universities, often ending up at the London School of Economics. In the end they came out totally imbued with the idea that a small group of people can make decisions affecting this huge country of ours.

The government decided to get into deficit financing. This government took over at a time when there was a very low national debt. The budgets were balanced yearly. It decided it could offer people all sorts of programs with a low capital tax and borrow the difference. The first year everything was great. We went from 1969 right through to 1978. This government was able to buy people with their own money. But the interest to service the debt was rising. Members on this side were sounding the alarm, saying, look, folks, it cannot go on. We have been through this. But the government was able to buy people with their own money. The government got away with it.

But now the government must stop. Even the socialist Liberal government recognizes it has to stop. We are now seeing socialist taxes to match socialist programs. But what happened in the meantime? People had borrowed money for house mortgages, perhaps for houses which were too big. When we had all the programs and low tax, people had extra money. People paid too much for land, too much for businesses and too much for their homes. When there are deficits too much money chases too few goods, driving up the value of those goods. We call it inflation. The situation has to stop. It is to be stopped with high interest rates.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada said, as he has warned for years, "If you, the government, will not exercise fiscal responsibility, I will exercise my duty as the Governor of the Bank of Canada and I will put up the rates. That will hurt people. It will cause unemployment." The real fault does not lie with the Governor of the Bank of Canada, it lies at the feet of this government. During all of those years it got people to believe in deficit government financing. The government did not heed the calls from this side or the calls from responsible economists. Canadians are now having to pay for it. They are dropping like flies, particularly in the farming community.

Farmers cannot tolerate high interest rates. They have a front-end load. Farmers have to borrow money in the spring to buy seed, fertilizer and enormous quantities of fuel to get the crops seeded. They have to summerfallow. They have to spray chemicals to kill weeds. They have to spray to control pests. Then in the fall they harvest the crops. Farmers have an enormous front-end load, and high interest rates simply destroy them.

Other societies have learned this fact. The admonition in the Bible about usurious interest rates is not in the Bible because of some religious doctrine, it is there as a result of a society's practical experience, having endured high interest rates. It failed because of high interest rates. That is what is happening to Canada today. High interest rates so demoralize people that they drop like flies and then society turns to all sorts of radical political solutions. This happened in the west in earlier generations. That is why we had the Social Credit Party and the United Farmers' Party. The CCF grew out of those economic dislocations of governments taking people into deficit financing.

Farmers have the extra burden of high energy costs, for which this bill does nothing. When our government was in power there was a special tax credit for farmers to help them with their high energy costs. Farmers are enormous consumers of energy. The present Liberal government threw out that rebate. Instead, it imposed a series of taxes. I saw the figures for the province of Alberta. A litre of gasoline in Alberta is 33 cents. There are six individual taxes imposed by the federal government on that litre of gasoline. The Alberta government has one charge, the ownership royalty, which goes to the citizens as owners. When you get to the bottom of these figures you find the federal government collects 42 per cent of the value of that 33-cent litre. Just think about the fact that 42 per cent of the value goes to the federal government through six taxes. Twenty per cent of the value of a litre of gasoline goes to the people of Alberta as owners and the remaining percentage value goes to the industry for producing, refining and selling the gasoline to us.

The farmers bear a triple load. They not only pay on the fuel they use in their cars, but they have to buy chemicals, fertilizer and extra quantities of fuel to produce food. Why, as a wise Parliament, should we not give them special rebates? If we on this side formed the government we would, because the Progressive Conservative Party understand the special plight of farmers. Unfortunately, the Liberal government does not.

Another thing happening is that high inflation is leading us into a situation where we will soon become a society of landlords and serfs. According to statistics, the number of owner farmers is dropping dramatically while the number of tenant farmers is increasing. That is a quantum leap backwards some 900 years in history, Mr. Speaker, to feudal times. The government ridiculed Khomeini for taking Iran back some 1,300 years in terms of religious doctrine. This government is taking Canada back 900 years to feudal times. Serfs have no security of tenancy, so someone who wants to be a farmer has no guarantee that his children or grandchildren can be farmers. That is exactly what kings did in feudal times. They would give a farm to a man because he was a good soldier and had served the monarch well, but at the end of his life the land came back to the king and he gave it to someone else. That is exactly what is going to happen in Canada as a result of these deficits which are leading us to a class society.

The cheap food policy, Mr. Speaker, which even Liberal members now admit we have, was a concious policy of this government. In 1968 we were charging up the mountain, we were excited about being Canadians, we were unified and our governments were pulling together in a co-operative form of federalism. Canadians were enjoying a rising level of wealth, they had more cash in their pockets, and this was a great opportunity for the government to oversee a distribution of wealth to the farmer in order to sustain their farms and permit the same number of farmers to continue. Canadians spend some 17 per cent of their income on food, and this cheap food policy has been borne primarily by the farmer.

Seventy-five years ago, when the land was first broken, the soil was almost 100 per cent fertile. Now, a relatively short time later, we are down to nearly 50 per cent. At the present rate of decline the soil will be sterile in another 50 years time, and that is a perfect recipe for another dust bowl.

The Roman empire fell because it did not look after its agriculture. There were other reasons, such as getting into deficits and the concentration of power. What is now the Sahara desert in Northern Africa was once the world's most fertile area. Government's throughout the Middle East had enormously productive land. The Cedars of Lebanon were destroyed by governments which did not pay attention to their farmers, their forests and their land. Members opposite may think we will not one day have food lines, and I hope we do not, but, I believe, at the rate of progression of these things we will.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) should not be going across this land bragging that Canadians pay less for a basket of food than people in any other country in the world. He should be going into the cities and explaining to people why we need to spend more than 17 per cent of our income on food. It probably should be in the order of 23 per cent to 25 per cent so that farmers can remain on the land and improve productivity. Only then will we have a future for our children and grandchildren. I just do not understand why members opposite do not have this feeling for the future that we certainly have on this side. They should adopt the tradition of the Iroquois nation which required band leaders, before making any decision, to think about the effect of those decisions seven generations later. As a result of that policy the Iroquois survived for many generations until we came along with our guns and alcohol.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, where are the members opposite when we speak of capital gains? They seem to be in favour of them. Where are they with respect to energy costs? They rejected an energy rebate for farmers, and, indeed, have added six separate taxes which increases the cost of production enormously. They do not speak out against deficits, therefore we can assume they are in favour of them. They must also be in favour of the inflation which flows out of deficits, and they must be in favour of high interest rates which ultimately flow from inflation.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need for all of this. Let us never forget what Canada was like in 1968. Government's can and do hurt people, Mr. Speaker, and the Liberal Party is a prime example of that. The government will be cited in the textbooks of future generations as a classic example of how a socialist party, trying to concentrate wealth, can take the energetic and dynamic young people climbing a mountain and destroy them.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, as we near the end of this debate I would like to spend a few minutes recapping the arguments made in this discussion. First of all, the main thrust of the amendment is to increase the amount of capital which the Farm Credit Corporation has available to lend to farmers. The amendments will mean that the FCC is no longer restricted to the government as a source of funds. Possible sources of funds will be retiring farmers who have managed during good years to accumulate a bit of a surplus. We are also told that sources such as pension funds, foreign and domestic banks, and government bonds will also be available to the FCC. However, none of this is spelled out in the act and the minister was not very specific in committee as to just which source of funds the FCC would first be turning to.

It has been assumed, Mr. Speaker, that there would be some form of agribond or small business bond, call it what you will, the form of which would require changes in the Income Tax Act, and a definite policy from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Those changes have not been forthcoming. There has been no indication by the Minister that such changes will be made available so that these sources of funds can be utilized by the FCC.

I believe hon. members on all sides of this chamber have in mind a system of taxation which would defer tax on capital gains on the sale of farm properties, as long as the owner of the funds reinvested the money in an acceptable way so the money could be borrowed again by farmers who are continuing on in business. This would allow the Farm Credit Corporation or the credit unions out in the country to have access to this money. They would not have to pay the normal rate of interest because payment had not been made on the capital gains. Therefore, it is usually estimated that a compensatory rate would be approximately half of the current interest rate. The lending institution, whether the Farm Credit Corporation or the credit union, could relend that money to beginning or expanding farmers for about one per cent more than that. This would certainly maintain the refinancing of agriculture from one generation to the other at lower rates. This fits in with our concept in this party of attempting to make sectors of the economy more or less self-sufficient in terms of refinancing to ensure growth of that industry in future years.

There has also been some discussion during this debate about the farm income problem. Our party believes this is the main reason we have a shortage of farm credit. Our analysis is that the farm market prices have not been adequate. The government has not provided adequate marketing legislation and accompanying stabilization programs which would make it possible for farmers to recover their costs and a return on the efforts that they have put into their agricultural production. Because that has not occurred, farmers in this country have incurred an increasingly larger debt. We have outlined the magnitude of that debt, running from about $6 billion in 1974 to close to $22 billion at the present time. This debt has been incurred in the space of a mere eight years. Farmers are facing an annual shortfall of between $2 billion and $3 billion just to cover most of their costs. We have pointed out how the returns to agriculture have dropped to the point at which they are now approaching zero.

We have heard representations from various farm groups producing any number of commodities. They have told us a number of things about their particular sectors of agriculture. For instance, I note that grain producers in western Canada are now at the point at which most of them are no longer able to carry out continuous cropping. For those hon. members who have some doubt about my words, I would ask them to consult the latest issue of Grainews. An article by a producer of grain points out that for the size of farm he is operating, which is slightly larger than average, a very efficient-sized operation, the price of wheat at the farm must exceed $4.80 per bushel to enable him to continue buying the fertilizer and chemicals required to continuously crop his product. Instead, along with virtually 80 per cent of the grain farmers in western Canada, he will be taking another option starting this year. For some it will be the continuation of an option started years ago. He will be going back to a 50-50 summer fallow cropping practice.

For some hon. members who are not familiar with the prairies, let me say that about half the prairies do have enough rainfall to allow more concentrated cropping production. However, with the current price of wheat and barley, the most profitable option now is go back to a 50-50 summer fallow practice. Total production will be down, but the financial position on each of those farms will be better by switching back to that old practice.

We spoke to farmers from Ontario, some from Bruce and Grey counties. I understand that the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) will be speaking soon. I spoke to corn producers from eastern Ontario as well. They told us that even if they got their land for nothing, given the current cost of seeding and caring for an acre of corn, and given the current cost of fertilizer, chemicals, fuel and machinery, the return on that acre of corn will not pay its own way. We know that the same situation exists in the livestock industry. We hear many jokes around the auction markets. Farmers ask each other how things are going, and one will tell the other that things are going a little better this year as he will produce only 50 per cent or 25 per cent as many cattle as he did last year. Their objective is to lose less money.

I think, being realistic, we must recognize that this bill, granting a bit more capital to the Farm Credit Corporation, will do very little to solve the real problem in agriculture today. Another $45 million or $75 million is a drop in the bucket considering the $2 billion to $3 billion in losses that the farmers will have to put up with this year.

The government is not willing to infuse money into agriculture. It has not provided improvements to the marketing system, and it has not provided stabilization programs. We are one day away from a deadline imposed by the minister himself for a stabilization program for hogs. We will await with interest the coming of April 1. The amount of activity that has gone on between the provinces and the farm groups would indicate that the minister has not come up with an agreement on a stabilization program for hogs. There has been no talk of improved marketing and no serious talk of improved beef marketing. As a result, farmers are going out of business.

I recently attended the annual meeting of one of the major marketing boards. It was attended by the leaders of that industry, an industry which operates under a supply management system and a cost-of-production formula. A great many delegates are not too far from bankruptcy themselves, even with the cost-of-production formula. Of course, part of the reason is that the cost-of-production formula assumes that a good chunk of the money invested in those operations can be borrowed at a rate of 11 per cent. Of course, we cannot get money at 11 per cent interest. The difference between the interest rate of 18 per cent to 21 per cent, which money really costs, and the assumed rate of 11 per cent has created a deficit in most of these operations because they relied on the assumed rate.

We have heard about bankruptcies in this debate. However, for every bankruptcy there are probably five or six farmers who are voluntarily going out of business. In this country we know that for every farmer who goes out of business, three other workers in the economy lose jobs because the economy will no longer continue to support those jobs. At the moment, well in excess of one million workers are unemployed in this country. The fiscal and monetary policy of the government has been creating a lack of jobs for workers. It has been creating unemployment for workers and farmers. When a country has unemployment it does not have production.

I have outlined some of the things that those farmers who are still in existence will do to stay in business. They will cut back grain production. Lifestock producers are also going to cut back production because of bankruptcies and market conditions. Employers in other sectors are laying people off. We have this great country gradually winding down, producing less and less, and all of this, according to the Minister of Finance and the government, to fight inflation.

How can you fight inflation by reducing the amount of goods and services produced? The old economic axiom for inflation was too much money chasing too few goods, yet we are attempting to fight inflation by producing even fewer goods. It is a wrong-headed policy, and it went wrong with our agricultural policy. That is why this particular debate on agriculture and its importance to the economy in general has been an important one.

I regret that more funds were not made available to farmers, to agriculture in general, in an attempt to turn this situation around. However, I hope that some government members will at least have received the message, and they will take it to cabinet through the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and that current policy will be reversed very soon so that this country's farmers, workers and the economy can once again go forward progressively.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): I rise with very little time remaining, Mr. Speaker, at the end of this debate on Bill C-88. It is a discussion that may not interest many people, because there is such a small number of people directly involved in agricultural production. However, many consumers, many people in Canada should have a feeling for the importance of this type of legislation, albeit legislation that falls far short of the mark we would have hoped to achieve with the changes in this bill.

This Farm Credit Corporation legislation has been ongoing now for approximately 20 years. Originally as intended it would have provided the kind of stable, secure financing that agriculture needs if it is to continue to provide the cheap food that this country is able to produce. While many people may not relate to the Farm Credit Corporation, they can certainly relate to the price of food in their baskets each week as they go to the supermarket, and in the long run it is those people we have to be concerned about.

We see a government at this point in time whose policies over the past in dealing with inflation, with interest rates and taxation policies, have put a terrific amount of pressure on consumers as well as on agriculture. At this point in time we see the agriculture community threatened with its very survival; and this survival, from the point of view of this change to the Farm Credit Corporation legislation is still not secure.

It is not secure because the capital that we are considering for the expansion of farms across the country is not necessarily going to be provided on the basis that is required; that is to say, if we do get more capital we cannot be confident that this kind of legislation will provide interest rates that are affordable. That is the key factor, which has been pointed out by two county federations of agriculture we met with and talked with in the last few weeks. First on the list each time was the interest rate problem.

The government that was going to "wrestle inflation to the ground" now has been wrestling for long enough. They holler at Uncle Sam or they holler at somebody else when they get into trouble. It is really not the responsibility of anyone but this Liberal government to make sure that the productive sectors of the economy, whether it is agricultural or mineral areas or forestry, are able to survive and produce jobs for the country, because of the multiplier effects of this kind of production.

The changes we have in this bill are a start. They offer a potential for new sources of revenue apart from the Consolidated Revenue Fund so that the Farm Credit Corporation can expand from the limited amount of capital it has had available for agriculture.

The interest rate to be recommended we have yet to see, but the expansion of that capital will depend very much on the ability of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to convince his cabinet colleagues, and with Treasury Board in particular, of the need to provide an additional amount. This will amount to $26 million in addition to the $14 million he is asking for now, in order to bring himself into a position where he can fulfil his promise of $1 billion in additional funding for the Farm Credit Corporation.

I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, that most of the members opposite have an understanding of that problem. I suspect that the Minister of Agriculture knows his problem, but his influence with the cabinet and his impact has been so little lately, I would have very real concern that he will be successful in that endeavour.

As we approach the end of this debate, Mr. Speaker, the important thing I would like to add is, in addition to the difficulties that might present themselves for the resolution of these problems, there is the question of what is to be done in the short term. Even with these changes in the Farm Credit Corporation financing arrangement we still have a very real short-term problem. As mentioned before, the spring planting is going to bring this into sharper focus in the next several months, particularly if we are to allow farmers the ability to even maintain a cash flow for survival, in order that they can put their crops in the ground. We have a situation now where this ability is threatened for this large segment of the agricultural community.

We need to pay immediate attention to stabilization programs. The provinces have indicated their desire to co-operate with the federal government in stabilization programs in a number of commodity areas, particularly in beef and pork. We know, because of the number of representations we have had from the federation of agriculture nationally, and from different farm organizations, that we need a moratorium on any further bank foreclosures. We need to ensure that the Small Business Development Bond system will work effectively for agricultural producers. We know that we must have additional, significant discussions with the Minister of Agriculture federally, with a hopeful impact on the federal cabinet, so that there can be arrangements, through new legislation, the old Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, or through some new mechanism, so that some of these people, with interest mounting hour by hour, will be able to come to some better arrangements or terms with their creditors and continue in the actual farm practice.

The future we have in the agricultural community, Mr. Speaker, might reflect the future we have in all of Canada. I have real concern, and I think members from across the country have a feeling for the difficulties that we might face, if we are not able to address these difficulties effectively. We are facing the possibility of upheaval, not just in the agriculture community but in the entire social structure of the country. This is being felt most directly by agriculture; and certainly in areas where auto workers, and workers in a variety of industries are being severely impacted upon by the policy we have had in the last few years.

We have a real problem, and we are threatened with the lack of response from the government so far, and its inability to deal with these problems. We are threatened with changes in the social fabric that will threaten our future as a country. We have seen regional difficulties arise and a number of other problems. We have seen people lose interest in what the federal government is doing and in what political parties are doing. In the long run that is a very serious and very real threat that is destroying the kind of spirit, the kind of hope, the kind of future we would all love this country to enjoy. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

EMERGENCY MEASURES—QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION. (B) REQUEST THAT ORDER IN COUNCIL BE RESCINDED

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): I rise with respect to a question, Mr. Speaker, I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on March 24. It had to do with promulgation of the emergency planning order by cabinet in May, 1981.

• (2200)

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that I have been speaking out against this planning order for, I think, good and justifiable reasons. The planning order in question constitutes a very serious threat to the civil liberties of Canadians. It is one to which I have taken exception for a variety of reasons.

My question to the Prime Minister on March 24 was about the plans of the government to introduce emergencies legislation. I expressed concern at that time over the fact that the present War Measures Act, which is the only legislation we have on the books at the present time specifically dealing with emergency situations, does not embody Article 4 of the International Convenant on Civil and Political Rights.

I pointed out that the minister responsible for emergency planning, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), has publicly acknowledged that an emergency situation would override those freedoms enunciated in the Charter of Rights and the War Measures Act. It simply does not provide the comprehensive legislative foundation to meet the broad range of peacetime, international and wartime contingencies.

Mr. Smith: When?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The parliamentary secretary asks when the President of the Privy Council said this. It was in a speech he delivered to the conference on emergency planning and emergency arrangements. It was a federal-provincial conference reported in the July-September 1981 Digest. I will quote him specifically. The parliamentary secretary might take note of this. He said:

> First, I noted that Canadian emergencies legislation does not explicitly embody the human rights safeguards set out in Article 4 of the International Convenant on Civil and Political Rights—
> Like the International Convenant, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms recognizes that most human rights are not absolute and that certain limitations on them are inevitable.

He went on to say, relating to the inadequacy of the War Measures Act with respect to peacetime emergencies, as follows:

> But the events of October 1970 raised serious questions about relying on the War Measures Act for dealing with domestic and peacetime emergencies.

On March 24 I asked the Prime Minister when we might expect legislation with respect to peacetime emergencies and general emergencies legislation, and when we might expect the proposals to receive first reading. The Prime Minister neglected or refused to answer that question.

I subsequently received information, through a response to the President of the Privy Council to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, that there is no immediate intention of introducing any emergencies legislation. What this government has done is come in by the back door. It has circumvented Parliament by the enactment of a massive emergency planning order by order in council rather than introducing emergencies legislation so that Parliament, the elected representatives of the people, has the opportunity of assessing and analysing the powers which the government intends to give itself in an extraordinary situation. I say to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) that further in his response to the Senate and House of Commons Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments he said that the government will use the royal prerogative if a peacetime emergency arises and Parliament is dissolved or cannot otherwise be assembled. To quote him specifically, he said:

> If Parliament were dissolved, or if the pace of the crisis at hand did not allow the time to assemble Parliament, the government would be forced to act in reliance on the Crown prerogative—

What we have here is the worst of both worlds. We have the government enacting this massive planning which will allow mandarins, public servants of our country, to put into place the extraordinary powers in the hands of government ministers and of the cabinet of this country. What the President of the Privy Council tells us is that if an emergency now arises, the government will take its responsibility and move to deal with that emergency.

Having acted, as the President of the Privy Council said, extra-legally—which in simple terms means outside the law—the government would then conceivably come back to Parliament asking for indemnification for actions taken without proper legislative authority. That contravenes principles, which I thought existed in our country, of government under the rule of law. If the government has no immediate intentions of asking for enabling legislation, there will be an irresistible temptation on the part of the government at the time of any emergency to put into effect this massive—and expensive, I venture to say—planning order without any parliamentary approval whatsoever. Members of the House of Commons should have an opportunity to decide what kind of legislation we want to pass, if we should pass any at all, and whether we are prepared to deal by way of legislation with emergencies of an environmental or peacetime nature. These are very important questions.

The government acts outside Parliament to put in place a huge planning order which would have severe implications for the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens, including a national information service put forward by the Prime Minister, a food rationing program put forward by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) with the capacity of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to take control over all of the telecommunication facilities in our country. That is not the kind of democracy of which I can be very proud. This is not the attitude of a government which is sensitive to liberties in our country.

I ask the parliamentary secretary to tell us when the elected representatives of the people of Canada will have an opportunity to debate this matter and when we will hear the proposals of the government.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is very unfortunate that the opposition has tried to exploit this issue politically. The hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said that the government has attempted to circumvent Parliament by giving itself a number of powers and enacting a massive planning order. What has to be understood by the Canadian public is that what the government did was bring up to date an emergency planning order which has been on the books for many, many years. I have traced the order back into the forties. It was most recently brought up to date in 1965.

The responsibility for drawing up certain plans, about which the opposition has made the most noise, is that given to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), and the hon. member knows exactly what I am talking about. Yesterday I read the 1965 order, and that phrase was there virtually verbatim. What I am saying to the hon. member is that that particular item was in an emergency planning order which was on the books the entire time the Clark government was in office and the hon. member was a minister. If it offended him, why did his government not rescind it? Did that government rescind it? Of course it did not rescind it. Why did that government not rescind it? The reason it did not rescind it is that obviously it is incumbent upon any responsible government to have in place certain plans to deal with emergencies which may arise. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why an order?

Mr. Smith: That order was issued under the royal prerogative. I think the hon. member is fully aware of that. It does not grant unto itself any powers, and the hon. member knows that. It has repeatedly been characterized by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) as giving the government powers which it did not in fact previously have. That is not the case at all. What it does is allocate responsibility for preparing various plans.

The government does not have any plans to bring in legislative proposals in the immediate future. This is something the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) is considering quite seriously. He is discussing it with the provincial governments.

With respect to the point the hon. member raised, I have not had an opportunity to read that speech, but I can assure the hon. member that the President of the Privy Council has repeatedly said—I have heard him and discussed this with him, and I know the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has discussed it with him—that the Charter of Rights does apply. I will be happy to look at that speech and read it with an open mind, but there is certainly no doubt in my mind that the position of the President of the Privy Council is that the charter does apply. He and the Prime Minister are of the same mind on that issue.

EMERGENCY MEASURES—CRITERIA FOR RELEASE OF CRIMINALS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday I rose in the House to ask a question of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) about the provisions within orders in council that deal with emergency planning and the powers given to the Solicitor General to empty jails so that people who had not been convicted of a crime could be put in them and then they could be used as civilian internment camps. There are several things that disturb me about this whole issue of civilian internment camps and the so-called emergency planning orders, Mr. Speaker. What disturbs me most is the amount of deception in the ranks of government and the statements made by government members.

The first deception came when I first raised the question last October 29 in this House. At that time I put much the same kind of question to the Solicitor General. He replied, at page 12291 of Hansard, in part as follows:

> Madam Speaker, there are no such orders in council.

After that subject began to be ventilated properly he naturally admitted that there are such orders in council.

The other day, when I asked him about the efficacy of releasing people convicted of a criminal offence in order to make room for people who had not been charged with a criminal offence, he said, as reported at page 15766 of Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, the member can see from the question he has asked what difficult issues arise.

I think that qualifies as the greatest understatement of the year. Why bring in an order in council to deal with regulations in an emergency situation if there is no legislation in place that ought to limit those emergency powers? It seems to me that the correct approach is the customary one; bring in the legislation and then bring in the regulations.

I have heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say in the House several times in answer to questions that if there are people who are aggrieved by the process of emergency planning, if it should happen that people should be incarcerated without due process of law, as a result of the new Charter of Rights and Freedoms they will have recourse to the courts. I listened to that with interest, Mr. Speaker.

The Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) ought to be an authority on the subject. On December 17, 1980, he spoke in this House in a debate I initiated for the production of papers. At page 14183 of Hansard he said:

> —I would hope that the following brief description of the anticipated procedures would help to alleviate the concerns about possible internment requirements that have been expressed by hon. members.

As he was the lead-off speaker for the government I take it he was its spokesman. I believe he spoke from a prepared text so we have to assume that he was speaking on behalf of the government. He listed five different procedures that will be available to the citizens of Canada if they feel they have been aggrieved by the process initiated by the emergency planning orders. At page 14183 of Hansard he said:

First, it is and will continue to be a function of the security service—

We still do not know what was involved in the security service for Canada. He continued:

Second, as a safeguard against possible abuse, any intelligence to be used in support of this identification program must first be presented for examination to a review committee composed of senior officials of the security service—

Third, the review committee would examine the information presented to ensure that stringent guidelines protecting the rights and civil liberties of individuals are respected.

Fourth, only if the Parliament of Canada declared a national emergency in relation to war or public order and subject to the passage by this House of specific enabling legislation, could internment action actually be taken.—

• (2215)

Fifth, as a final safeguard against potential injustice, such legislation would guarantee a detainee the right to appeal his detention to an independent advisory committee appointed by the incumbent minister of justice—

It is important to point out that in those five steps which the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council gave in the House on December 17 there was no mention of the judicial process or appeal to the courts. It was simply an in-house system of review committees which the government will set up.

I wonder how many Japanese during World War II found the courts available to them when they aggrieved. I wonder how many of the 465 members of the Quebec society in 1970, when they were interned without questioning, without habeas corpus, had the courts available to them for appeal. The minister has never answered the question. He needs to justify before the bar of this House the wide-sweeping powers given to him which permit him to release people convicted of criminal offences in order to make room for people who have never been charged or convicted of any crime.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question asked on March 24, 1982, by the member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) concerning, and I quote:

[English]

—criteria to release convicted criminals in order to make room for people who have not been convicted of a crime.

Item 6 in column 1 of Part II of the schedule to order in council PC 1981-1305 of May 21, 1981, authorized the Solicitor General in the case of war to:

—facilitate the selective reduction and transfer of prison populations to provide for the establishment of civilian internment camps.

I should like to emphasize that the order makes clear that these proposed measures will only come into effect in the case of war. They are not available in the case of lesser emergencies. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has done a disservice to the cause of emergency planning by claiming falsely that the government has already established civilian internment camps. I should also like to point out that the present order in council provides for essentially the same measures which were contained in its predecessor, PC 1965-1041, published in The Canada Gazette, Part II, on June 23, 1965, assigning responsibility at the time to the Minister of Justice.

The tasks relating to internment in wartime, transferred from the Minister of Justice to the Solicitor General by order in council, have been public knowledge since 1965, and the opposition has nothing more to attack now than it had at any time since 1965.

[Translation]

As the minister indicated, Mr. Speaker, a responsible government should be prepared to protect Canadians in a wartime emergency, and that is the reason for this order in council, namely, to provide the authority for planning such measures. There is no question of their implementation.

[English]

I should also like to note that so far this matter has a low priority. I have not yet seen any options from my officials in this regard, and none are yet in preparation. Let me assure the hon. member, however, that any options developed, including an option reflecting Item 7 in Part II of the Schedule to PC 1981-1305, would be required to include all safeguards for civil liberties provided in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and to ensure that the safety of the public would have the fullest consideration. The only regulations now in existence in this area are those which were used in World War II to incarcerate civilians. These regulations were a serious infringement of civil rights at the time and should not be the sole basis available on the shelf to turn to in the urgent event of a war crisis.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—PROVISIONS FOR SINGLE PARENT MEMBERS. (B) REQUEST THAT PAY BE INCREASED

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome the new Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Henderson). This is the first opportunity I have had to deal with him in his new position as parliamentary secretary. I hope he proves to be more enlightened and enlightening than his predecessor and his minister in answering questions that I have put to them in this House.

I want to expand on my question of yesterday and address what the Department of National Defence refers to as "People and People Progress".

Yesterday, I directed a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) about the salaries of low-ranked Armed Forces personnel. What prompted me to raise that question was the sad case of Rhonda Gordon, a private at CFB Winnipeg, and a single parent. Right now a private's salary is $705 per month or an annual gross of $8,460. For comparison, the poverty line according to Statistics Canada for a family of two in a city the size of Winnipeg is $9,912. A private like Rhonda Gordon, struggling to raise her five-year-old daughter, falls almost $1,500 below the poverty line.

From her gross salary, deductions were taken for her quarters, which she shared with another woman in order to save money, and for her rations. That left her with a take-home pay of only $360 a month, which was not enough to feed her daughter and pay for daycare, which is not provided at the base. Instead she paid her parents living in Gimli, some 60 miles from CFB Winnipeg, $120 a month to care for her daughter.

I am sure members of this House can well understand that Rhonda Gordon wanted to be with her daughter. But when she approached one of her supervisors at CFB Winnipeg, he advised her to apply for welfare as a protest over the pay received by first-year privates. She was advised to apply for welfare. What kind of life is that? Our first-year privates live below the poverty line, and are then advised to apply for social assistance.

In the fall of 1979 the base social worker at CFB Calgary reported that 400 families there were eligible for welfare. You can be sure the slick recruitment ads for the Armed Forces do not mention anything about that. When I think of it, "There's no life like it" may be the safest and most accurate promise that can be made by our Armed Forces to new recruits.

What did Rhonda Gordon do? In her own words she pulled a "Klinger." Refusing to go on welfare and to live without her daughter, she feigned mental illness and was released. It should come as no surprise that Rhonda Gordon is not the first to leave the Armed Forces because the salaries at the bottom level are too low.

When rents at CFB Calgary began their 69 per cent increase in 1979, 57 service people left the forces because they could not afford to stay. The annual attrition rate at CFB Calgary is 25 per cent. One senior officer there complained that with the rent increases which bring base housing costs into line with regional Calgary costs, his troops were now among the working poor. That was in 1979. Now two and one half years later precious little has been done to remedy the situation.

What has been the response of the Department of National Defence? In 1980 when reports of military families being eligible for social assistance benefits were made public, an Armed Forces newsletter published in Ottawa attempted to minimize the importance of the problem. It claimed stories of military families being eligible for welfare were largely based on emotion and were supported only by hypothetical examples.

Let me refer to the Calgary cases, as reported in the Montreal Gazette on May 14, 1980. Let me quote briefly from the story, leaving out the names. Mrs. A.: —is four months pregnant. She can't afford maternity clothes, eats a lot of macaronni and cheese and has only $4 to see her family through next week.

Mrs. B.:

— was surprised to find a welfare hamper on her doorstep last Christmas shortly after her husband applied for welfare but then decided not to accept it.

Mrs. C.:

Shortly after . . . had her first baby, her husband had to take a part-time job to help pay for medical expenses.

But money problems are not the only things these women have in common. They are all married to soldiers at the Canadian Forces Base in Calgary.

Those cannot be called hypothetical, Mr. Speaker.

On November 27 the Minister took the magnanimous step of increasing armed forces salaries by 3 per cent. Even after that Rhonda Gordon is still $1500 beneath the poverty line and unable to bring her daughter to live with her.

To deal with hardships brought about by rent increases the minister announced a special case allowance where rents are 12.5 per cent higher than the national average. However, that will hardly address the basic problem here: low pay for the lowest ranked Armed Forces people.

One woman at CFB Uplands in Ottawa summed it up as well as anyone:

The complaints are really complaints about salaries. Between rent increases and salary increases, some people have actually lost money.

I was surprised and a bit alarmed at the minister's response when I asked him yesterday about what provisions existed for single parents like Rhonda Gordon who cannot afford to have their children with them. Did he show any compassion for her or any of the other working poor in the Armed Forces? Not at all. He said:

In this unfortunate case the lady concerned knew very well the conditions of enlistment and the current pay levels, and whatever we could do for her child would be done through welfare. There is nothing I can do more than that, beyond telling her that she should have known all this before she enlisted in the Armed Forces.

It is distressing, Mr. Speaker, that the minister should be so uncaring.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, am I not allowed seven minutes?

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) that the figures he quoted in his questions to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) in the House yesterday are grossly inaccurate. I would suggest that if he is to take up the cause of one of his constituents he does it with a background of solid knowledge rather than on the basis of what may have been erroneously reported in the newspapers. I would also suggest that he acquaint himself with what is commonly referred to, and understood by most people, as "take-home pay".

I do not believe the hon. member is doing anyone any good by misrepresenting the facts as he did yesterday. The hon. member will understand that in dealing with the matter he brought to the House yesterday, we are not at liberty to divulge the exact amount earned by any individual due to the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Association. However, the rates of pay for members of the military are on public record and can serve to indicate the general range of salary with which we must concern ourselves.

With respect to the particular case in question, let us examine the pay levels. On enrolment in March 1981 the pay for a private recruit was $608 monthly. On April 1, 1981, the forces were granted a pay increase of some 12.31 per cent for enlisted personnel, and then on October 1, 1981, a further adjustment of 3 per cent was made. Therefore, by anyone's calculations this would amount to an annual pay increase of just under 16 per cent—not 3 per cent as erroneously stated by the hon. member yesterday.

Thus, as of the first of October, 1981, the minimum pay that a private soldier would have received after basic training amounted to $746 per month. Then after one year of service private soldiers receive a further pay increase commonly referred to as the first level of incentive pay, which raises their earnings to $956 monthly.

By anyone's calculations these figures show that a private who enrolled in March 1981 has seen his or her salary increase by over 55 per cent over a one-year period. I challenge the hon. member to offer other examples in the economy where an individual's salary increase over a one-year period would be so great.

If one is to subtract standard deductions for income tax, unemployment insurance, pension contributions and so on, plus accommodation—including utilities, incidentally—at $106 per month, one finds a disposable monthly income of some $543, or $271.50 every two weeks. I stress that this is disposable income, not take-home pay, as indicated by the hon. member. There is a substantial difference in the two terms and the amount is substantially more than the $180 quoted by the hon. member.

INCOME TAX

INFORMATION NEEDED FOR FILING CLAIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, the deadline for the filing of income tax forms is only weeks away, yet this year taxpayers and officials in the Department of National Revenue are caught in a horrible muddle. Officials are advising taxpayers to complete their forms as if proposed tax measures contained in the budget of last November were law, or face retroactive charges with interest penalties. Taxpayers following these instructions are also being told that no tax returns filled out according to the budget will be processed by the department until the measures in the budget become law. People claiming refunds could be waiting for their money for a long time. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Finance immediately present his tax change measures to the House for debate; Canadian taxpayers must be able to file claims based on actual, not hypothetical legislation, and officials in the Department of National Revenue must have the authority to process these claims.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

COST OF GRADING LIVESTOCK PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the decision of the Department of Agriculture no longer to pay the cost of grading beef, pork, veal and lamb carcasses in abattoirs will have a spiralling effect upon the cost of meat to consumers because they will have to absorb these costs. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the government reconsider this decision which will take added millions of dollars from consumers' pockets in even higher food costs in these already difficult times of high unemployment, high inflation, and poor economic conditions.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

COURSE IN ECONOMICS SUGGESTED PRIOR TO PREPARATION OF BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, the word is out that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is contemplating a new budget. Since we have been advised that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has funds available for persons who need retraining, and since it is in the interest of Canadians to avoid another disastrous budget at all costs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook):

That this House instruct the Minister of Employment and Immigration to provide the Minister of Finance and his departmental bureaucrats with a short course in simple economics and the basics of the free enterprise system, to ensure that the new budget will assist and promote economic recovery in Canada rather than destroy it.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REGISTRATION OF MICMAC INDIANS IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the 1950s the Micmac Indians of Newfoundland, instead of being registered as Indians under the Indian Act, have been administered by the province through a federal-provincial agreement, which therefore denies these Indians the right to entitlements under the Indian Act. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly):

S.O. 43

That this House direct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to take immediate steps to finalize the registration of the Micmac Indians of Newfoundland under the Indian Act and to assume complete responsibility for funding as is done elsewhere in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BACK TO WORK LEGISLATION AFFECTING SASKATCHEWAN HOSPITAL WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The NDP government of Saskatchewan last week legislated striking hospital workers in the province back to their jobs, even though they were on a legal strike. I am sure the House will agree that this was a remarkable political somersault by a party which has claimed sole possession of labour support. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent):

That the House condemns the national leader of the NDP and the president of the CLC for their hypocrisy and double standards in not speaking out publicly against this trampling on the rights of Canadian workers by their political colleagues in Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN UNITY

THREAT OF SECESSION IN WESTERN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In western Canada the spectre of separation is a growing movement. One separatist was elected in Alberta, hundreds are turning out to meetings, and it appears the Western Canada Concept will run any number of candidates in the coming Saskatchewan provincial election. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

• (1410)

That this House, rather than condemn the separatists, to form a special parliamentary task force to study the anger and frustration of western Canadians in order that remedial action may be taken by the government to end the threat of secession and keep this country together.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

IMMUNITY FROM PROSECUTION—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Recent sworn allegations concerning admitted murderer Cecil Kirby raise important issues regarding the limits of acceptable conduct within our criminal justice system with respect to immunity from prosecution. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House recommends that the subject matter of immunity from prosecution be referred to our Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in future for a hearing of all points of view, including whether amendments should be made to the Criminal Code.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CALL FOR RELEASE OF UKRAINIAN PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE BY SOVIET UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since Canada is a respected member of the international community for her role in promoting human rights and social justice in the world, and in view of the fact that Canada supports the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and in view of the fact that the Government of the U.S.S.R. continues to persecute and imprison numerous Ukrainians for upholding their human rights, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski):

That this House urge the Government of the U.S.S.R. to take all the necessary steps to release from imprisonment and/or exile the following Ukrainian prisoners of conscience, all of whom were members of the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group: Yuriy Shukhevych, Lev Lukyanenko, Oksana Popovych, Mykola Rudenko, Ivan Hel, Ivan Kandyba and Rev. Vasyl Romanyuk.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE HONOURABLE MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

RETURN FOLLOWING ILLNESS

[Editor's Note: And the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) having entered the Chamber, the House rose and applauded.]

Madam Speaker: I believe the House has said it all. I do want to wish the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) our warmest welcome and to tell him how much we all love him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker and friends, I thank you indeed for your kindness and for welcoming me back here after these long six months. I am very grateful for this opportunity to say a few words of appreciation.

First, I want to say thanks to members of my family, to my friends from this House of Commons, and to others who have done so much for me during the past six months. Also, I want to say a word about the people in the hospitals where I spent considerable time. They are the most wonderful people. I refer to those at the hospital on Carling Avenue and to those at the hospital on Smyth Road. They have been just tremendous. The doctors, the nurses and the workers have been wonderful and they made me feel that there was a chance, despite my serious illness, that I might come back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I have here a piece of paper so I would be sure to get the right names. One of my problems, of course, with this illness is that I have a little trouble with my memory, but at any rate I am doing fine.

• (1415)

At the same time, Madam Speaker, having expressed my appreciation of so many people and so much help, and for the fact that what had seemed hopeless now seems to be coming along—at least I can get back here—there are two people in particular whom I would like to mention because of the special help they gave me. Those two people are Norman Smith of Ottawa and Jim Sinclair of Vancouver. About six years ago both of these friends of mine had an illness almost as serious as mine; not to the full extent, but it was the end of everything for them. Yet somehow the hospitals, doctors and other people helped them to try to make things better.

What did these two men do? One wrote me a letter from Vancouver, and the other came to see me in Ottawa. They did this because they wanted to encourage me to do my best to make it back. I have to say to my friends who know about it that that experience has meant a great deal to me, and I thank in particular Norman Smith and Jim Sinclair.

I thank everyone for the reception you have given me here today. I cannot be here every day because I have to go back to the hospital two days a week for therapy and so on, but I will get fully back as soon as I can. It means a great deal to me to have the kind of reception you have given me today. Thank you very much.

[Whereupon the House rose a second time and applauded.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I thought I might add a few words on behalf of members on this side to express our delight at seeing the hon. member back in his seat. The words he has just spoken are reassuring in many ways, but there are two questions which will remain unanswered until he deigns to answer them himself.

I remember as a young man I read a quotation from, I think it was Sir Thomas Browne, who was speculating on what song the Sirens sang, and what name Achilles assumed when he hid among women. There are now two further questions which historians will have to ask themselves: had the hon. member been here earlier this month—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —would it have happened, Madam Speaker? Or would some "Sermon from the Hill?" by the hon. member have prevented that from happening?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The second question which must remain unanswered is: in view of the fact that members of the Senate kept working whilst we here in this House had interrupted our labours, would those members of the Senate have the approval or the indignation of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: In the quotation from Sir Thomas Browne that I have in mind he went on to say that although these are puzzling questions, they are not beyond all conjecture. Well, I hope the hon. member, with his regained health and obviously very lively wit and mind, will be able to help historians on their way. In the meantime, we are happy to see him here. I personally am encouraged to see that a man of 73 can maintain that vigour. It is an encouragement to myself and many others.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I will direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. On August 4, 1977, in this House, the Minister of Finance, who was then the President of the Privy Council, told us that the Alaska natural gas pipeline would create, during its construction phase, 25,000 direct man-years of employment and 220,000 indirect man-years, mainly in the manufacturing sector in central Canada. These jobs were further confirmed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when he assured us that he had an ironclad guarantee that this pipeline would proceed.

In view of the continuing delay in the construction of the pipeline, I wonder if the Prime Minister can give this House and the jobless of Canada any ironclad guarantee that they will ultimately be the beneficiaries of the government's promises.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in so far as this government is concerned, I can give that guarantee. We have the evidence given by the government when it moved and permitted the pre-build, which was an indication of this government's commitment to that pipeline. In so far as being able to guarantee the performance of another government, we will do our best to ensure that the spirit with which that agreement was entered into by President Carter and myself will be respected by the present administration.

CONSTRUCTION OF ENERGY PROJECTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Through Your Honour, may I draw the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that every major energy project that his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has touched has been a disaster? Alsands and Cold Lake, the magaprojects, have been either delayed or cancelled. Two hundred and twenty-six conventional oil and gas drilling rigs have fled the country, and now the gas pipeline has been delayed yet another time. Can the Prime Minister name any significant energy-related project that will proceed? When will such project commence construction? As a result, how many jobless will be taken off the welfare and unemployment rolls and put to work where they belong and where they want to be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question seems somewhat rhetorical in character. I would point out to the hon. member that many energy-related projects have begun and are proceeding. The Q & M PipeLines is one example. The hon. member mentioned the tar sands. I think it is premature to say that that megaproject will not proceed. There was an agreement announced yesterday, I believe, between the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada indicating that they were still seeking a solution. However, I would point out to the hon. member that as he knows, in this House, for the past 18 months, the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been indicating government support and agreement to the terms requested by Alsands. He will recall that it was the Premier of Alberta who held up that project for the simple reason he gave, that he did not want the Alsands to proceed until the energy agreement was signed. I think, viewed with hindsight, that was a regrettable position taken by the Premier of Alberta.

Mr. Jarvis: Pass the buck.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INVOLVEMENT IN GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION DEAL WITH IRAQ

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. As the minister knows, the automotive quota agreement with Japan expires today with no renewal arrangements in sight. To add insult to injury, the GM-Iraq deal for 12,500 Malibus has fallen through, even after the minister has bragged about that deal for over a year. Now we hear that there was no formal contract, yet 80 million tax dollars are at stake with the Export Development Corporation. Normal procedure or not, I, for one, along with my party and, more important, the taxpayer, find this to be totally unacceptable. Therefore I would like to ask the minister to tell this House how he and his bumbling colleagues in cabinet could endorse the Export Development Corporation's involvement in a deal where there was no formal agreement on this last 12,500 cars—even after the minister's numerous trips to Baghdad.

• (1425)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked a multitude of questions in that one. First of all, it is normal international practice that the export supply agencies insure payment obligations by foreign customers to Canadian exporters, or exporters to a particular country.

In this particular case we have had no evidence that there is a bona fide contract, so at this point in time the Government of Canada and the people of Canada are not obligated for one single cent.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Although the EDC agrees that it is normal practice, it will be reponsible for $80 million of the taxpayers' money in this regard. I am wondering whether the minister is saying that he expects the taxpayer to foot the bill for $80 million for these blunders. Is that what he is saying?

Surely he is irresponsible as an administrator for the government when he allows this deal to go through, patting himself on the back all the year round, without a formal ironclad contract being established. Therefore I want him to tell this House, first of all, was he aware that General Motors already filed a claim with the EDC on February 27 and secondly, what is he going to do to save the taxpayers from footing the bill for this $80 million for this funded program that he put together and that the minister has bragged about all the year. I suggest that he has no answers and, if he does not have the answers, could he bring the whole matter to the appropriate committee for proper consideration?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as I said earlier, at this point in time the people of Canada are not obligated for one single cent of this particular transaction. No bona fide contract has been put forward to the Export Development Corporation. Since 1944 the Export Development Corporation, and its predecessor, have insured contracts all around the world on behalf of Canadian exporters. Only once in one year during that whole period have they lost any money. As a matter of fact, 99.6 per cent of all contracts insured are paid for by the customers. The scare tactics used by the opposition, and by the hon. member, as usual are invalid.

FILING OF CLAIM BY GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I have one final supplementary. The minister did not respond to my question as to whether he is aware that General Motors in fact did put a claim in to the EDC on February 27. That is one question to which I wanted an answer. Second, if he is so sure of himself, can he guarantee to this House and the Canadian taxpayer that in fact the Canadian taxpayer through the EDC is not going to be responsible for one red cent for the blundering program that the minister introduced as far as this agreement or arrangement is concerned?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, first of all, if the hon. member checks the record, as he very seldom does, he would find that we made only one announcement, and that was with respect to the first 13,000 cars. No announcement has ever come forward from General Motors or from the Government of Canada, or from the Export Development Corporation, regarding the sale of the next 12,000 cars. I am aware that General Motors has put forth a claim but, as I said here on three previous occasions, I am advised that they have not forwarded any bona fide contracts and consequently, as far as the Government of Canada and the Export Development Corporation are concerned, at the present time there is no obligation on behalf of the people of Canada.

FUTURE OF ALSANDS PROJECT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I regret the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not in the House today. Perhaps I could direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has repeatedly told this House that there is a limit to how much of the taxpayers' money is to be thrown into the Alsands project. Yesterday the government threw another $8 million into this project, a gift to the corporate oil fraternity, to keep them interested in the project for another month. Oil representatives are saying that because of the drop in world oil prices there is little chance that the oil project can be saved, in spite of the $8 million. I would like to ask the Prime Minister when is the government going to admit what appears obvious to everybody else, that unless tremendous and massive tax concessions are granted to the companies participating in the Alsands project, it is not going to go ahead.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that that is the very subject which is, to the knowledge of the House, being discussed between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the persons involved in the Alsands project and the Government of Alberta.

The hon. member mentions the two governments putting money in to keep the project open for discussion one more month. He, of course, realizes that the two governments have a large equity position in Alsands. It is normal for them to want this matter to be resolved in the interests not only of the people of Alberta but of the people of Canada who, as the hon. member points out, include the consumers of energy. This also involves a very high number of jobs which would go with the proceeding of this project. That is the subject matter of the negotiations that are going on which have a deadline of less than a month from now, and which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will report on when he is in the House.

QUERY RESPECTING ALTERNATIVE PROJECTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I am certain that the public is particularly interested in the question of how much public funding, regardless of equity, the government is prepared to throw into this project, because Alsands looks risky both in terms of job creation and the per barrel price of oil. Has the government considered taking action on some alternative processes for the same money, such as enhanced recovery, which can produce oil at a lot cheaper per barrel price, and going further into the heavy oil instead of synthetic at Alsands?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the price of oil, I think the hon. member would have a good point if he were certain that the price of world oil would forever and a day remain low and not return to the kind of escalation we have known since 1973. That is the basic question on which everyone connected with the business will have to make up his mind. Do we want to become self-reliant in Canada with oil which might be higher priced than world oil, or will world oil go up higher than tar sands oil? Will we then be happy to have had even this high-priced oil produced in Canada? I repeat, the question is being debated now.

I find it a bit singular that the hon. member would suggest alternate uses for these funds. I remember I was making that argument about a year and a half ago before progress had been made with the Alsands, and pointing out that there were alternate sources, those that the hon. member mentions, the offshore oil around Hibernia, and the Beaufort Sea oil. There are many areas where we can go.

I point out to the hon. member that then it was his party, and more specifically the leader of his party, who was saying that if the private sector was not going ahead with Alsands, the people of Canada through the government should be financing and putting money into it. How can he reverse his position so easily with this kind of hindsight? He should consult with his leader who was telling us to put more money into Alsands. He is now telling us to put less.

Mr. Rose: As far as reversing positions is concerned, for the past 14 years I have been staring across at the Prime Minister. We have learned something about that. I do not agree that we have reversed our position at all.

REQUEST THAT ALSANDS BE MADE A PUBLIC UTILITY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, despite the business of whether Alsands goes ahead or not, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been running around lately saying that Alsands proceeding was not crucial to self-sufficiency for Canadians by 1990. It seems to be a question of whether it really is necessary to proceed with Alsands. Instead of blindly bailing out the private sector all the time at the taxpayers' expense, will the Prime Minister consider setting up a special small parliamentary task force to examine the alternatives to Alsands and give the commitment that, if it is absolutely necessary for Alsands to proceed and the private sector continues to go on strike, Alsands will proceed as a public utility?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Now, Madam Speaker, the hon. member is asking that Alsands proceed as a public utility. I once again suggest that the task force that the hon. member refers to should be set up within his own party so that they arrive at a position on this. When they have, we can perhaps begin rational debate.

TRADE

PROJECTS AFFECTING AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I want to address my question to the Minister of State for International Trade. The minister has failed this country miserably and has done damage to jobs in the auto industry due to the lack of positive action. The minister is now a two-time loser. Will he advise the House what project he is working on to strike out for the third time?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, it is rather ironic that a year ago when we won a $100 million contract for the first time in our history with respect to the export of Canadian automobiles, not only did no one in the opposition acknowledge any action by the Government of Canada, but nor would one find any mention in the back classified pages; however, as soon as the contract is lost, all of a sudden it is front and centre with misleading questions. I cannot think of anything that has hurt the Canadian automobile industry more than some of the questions by opposition members that have been asked about the quality of these Canadian products.

EXPORTS OF MANUFACTURED GOODS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, a year ago it was different than it is today. Now there are 1,100,000 unemployed. We are talking about taking action to create jobs in an industry which employs one out of every six Canadians. Has the minister ever considered, instead of trading our raw materials for other people's finished products, trading somebody else's raw materials for our finished products? I suggest to him that perhaps he go back to the Iraqis and save us $80 million by offering to purchase petroleum from them in exchange for the cars that are sitting on the docks at Halifax.

Mr. Nielsen: Go back to Baghdad.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is obviously not aware of the fact that over 70 per cent of the goods exported by Canadians are either fully manufactured or in semi-processed form, and not all are in the raw material stage as the hon. member suggests. As the hon. member should know, that is all labour-intensive. The hon. member has obviously not paid attention to some of the success stories which the Canadian manufacturing sector has had internationally during the past two years. Half of the trade surplus last year in goods was in the finished form. The hon. member should do a little more research before he makes his statements.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—THE LAPRADE AFFAIR—DESIRABILITY OF SETTLEMENT WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is directed to the minister responsible for Quebec affairs. The minister will probably remember what is now referred to as the Laprade affair. Since the federal government was committed to paying to the Quebec government the sum of $200 million, provided certain conditions were met, and since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! I think the hon. member should perhaps direct his question to a minister other than the minister responsible for Quebec affairs. I do not think the latter's function has been clearly defined as one on the basis of which questions may be asked in the House. The question itself is legitimate, but I think it should be directed to another minister.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, my question will be directed to the Prime Minister. Is Mr. Joyal the minister responsible for Quebec affairs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, he is as a matter of political convention but not according to the rules of the House, and I think that is what you must try to explain to hon. members.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REACH AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): It is important for Quebecers to know exactly what the responsibilities are of the minister or member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve.

In any case, the Prime Minister has heard my question about the Laprade affair and the $200 million the present government had promised to pay back to the Quebec government. Recently, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that he was prepared to settle the matter and it could, in fact, be settled in less than half a day. Would the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, be prepared to give instructions to the minister responsible so that the case can finally be settled and Quebec, provided certain conditions are met, can reach some kind of agreement with the federal government on the $200 million?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I should be glad to accept on behalf of the minister the question and the suggestion made by the member for Joliette. Actually, we need this kind of support and the support of the party to which he belongs. We are going to spend the $200 million in Quebec, as much as possible in that particular area and for energy purposes. We need the support of the member's party because for a long time now, the minister has been meeting with his provincial counterpart to identify projects that would be supported by both the Quebec government and the federal government, and we have failed to do so. Since the hon. member is now suggesting that we act unilaterally and that his party supports this position, I am pleased to give him the assurance that we are going to proceed.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE CHARGED WITH SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. First of all, I want to make it clear that I never asked the Prime Minister to act unilaterally—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor in order to ask a question.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, that being said, would the Prime Minister, who has shown that he wishes to settle this matter, inform the House whether and when he is going to instruct his minister to settle this matter with the government of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, he has a mandate to do so. I shall repeat for the hon. member, if he has not understood, that the minister has met several times with his Quebec counterpart, that attempts have been made to identify projects worth $200 million, preferably in the energy sector and preferably in the region in question. These attempts have not been successful, and that is an understatement. The hon. member is now asking me to instruct my minister to proceed—

Mr. La Salle: —to open the discussion.

Mr. Chrétien: It has been going on for four years!

Mr. Trudeau: The discussion has indeed been going on for four years, since 1978—

Mr. La Salle: It takes two to tango.

Mr. Trudeau: Exactly, like the Constitution where it takes 11—

Mr. La Salle: Ten or 11.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member will let me answer, I shall try to explain our position. From 1927 and up to 1981 we tried to get the support of the provinces, and we failed. Is the hon. member now asking us to do something with these $200 million or does he want us to wait a little longer until the PQ government—

Mr. La Salle: I am just asking you to negotiate with Quebec.

CRIMINAL CODE

QUERY RESPECTING GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the interest and concern generated by private member's Bill C-451 regarding gun control legislation, can the minister say if the government is planning any change to gun control legislation along the lines proposed in Bill C-451?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member noted, that bill is a private member's bill.

Mr. Epp: By a former Solicitor General.

Mr. Kaplan: It proposes to tighten firearms legislation. I read the bill. I do not agree with it. It is not government policy. I have no intention of proposing changes to the present legislation.

Mr. Clark: Are you writing any form letters?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT TASK FORCE STUDY TAXATION OF NORTHERN ALLOWANCES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It arises from last November's budget. I think that the minister recognizes that the changes which have already taken place mean take-home pay of about $300 less per month to thousands of workers. It will mean that to tens of thousands of workers next January. I think that the minister knows that this kind of policy will discourage families in permanent resource oriented communities, whether it is Cassiar or Faro, or any of the isolated communities in Canada. Before we go back to the dark ages of fly-in labour camps, could the minister tell the House whether he would support, as he did last December 1, putting in place a task force to go to a sample of those communities and come back to the House with an informed policy on which we could make a decision?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I take it the hon. member is referring to what we are going to do in terms of the moratorium that extends into December. The situation is that the Minister of Finance did extend the moratorium until December 1. That is the second or third time it has been extended. This has been a positive response to the needs of northerners who made representations to this government that they had to have some relief in terms of a moratorium on the taxation of these benefits, many of which they won under collective agreements. It was as a positive response to those concerns that the moratorium has been granted.

Rather than the very misleading premise of the hon. member's question, I think perhaps some credit should go to the government for responding in this very positive way to the real needs of northerners. That should be acknowledged.

Mr. Murphy: Bullshit.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The second thing I would indicate to the hon. member is that, yes, I have been delegated the task of bringing together some of the key ministers involved in the northern benefit package. I met with the leaders of the labour movement, yesterday, many of whom came from the north. I have heard their views and what they are asking is, in effect, would the government entertain an extension of the moratorium.

As far as those people who get no benefits are concerned—and they acknowledge that there is a real need there in terms of equity because many of them are in the small business community, employees who have no collective agreement—the moratorium means nothing.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): They would like us to develop a policy with respect to them. I indicated that we would look into it—

Mr. Lewis: Sit down.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —and we hope to have a policy in place by the end of the year.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I think that the hon. member over here put it in a nutshell, describing that as bovine excrement. I think the policy the minister put forward for north of sixty, that is going to apply to everyone and will be income related, is something that this House would want to examine. There are 550 communities, 450 of them south of sixty. What members of the House want to know, and what the workers in Cassiar and all kinds of communities want to know, is what policies will the minister be bringing forward himself, as well as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and will he have a task force of all parties of this House travel north of sixty and south of sixty to a sampling of those communities so that we can come back to the House and make an informed decision before the House of Commons.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I have always regarded the hon. member as rather an expert on excrement, in view of some of the exchanges we have had in the past. I do not think he listened very attentively, and I will tell him again that we have already received many representations from the union movement and we have received many representations from the mining community. We have received much in the way of well-thought-out documentation in terms of what should be done by members of the House. We are prepared to receive more. There is a task force which is now in place and we are considering having them visit interested parties in the north again prior to a decision being made at the end of the year.

FORESTRY

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Can the minister tell us whether the province of Saskatchewan has applied to his department for assistance in employment in the forest industry under the program recently announced whereby unemployment insurance funds will be used for employment?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I would have to say that we have not yet had a response from the province of Saskatchewan to our offer. However, our officials are meeting and discussing the matter on that particular level. We certainly would hope to enlist the assistance of the hon. member in trying to promote some action by the province of Saskatchewan and other provinces so that we can get people back to work in the forest industry.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, since MacMillan Bloedel shut down last fall and Simpson Timber has announced that it will lay off within a week or so about 400, in a community of only 2,400, and peoples pulp, or Saskatchewan Forest Products, are stockpiled until they no longer have any more room in the yard, can the minister assure the House that he will help Premier Blakeney, who loves to spend federal money, expedite any negotiations to help save employed people and avoid unemployment, as well as the embarrassment of Premier Blakeney having a Crown corporation laying off workers during the provincial election campaign.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As the hon. member pointed out, Premier Blakeney is otherwise occupied these days. He may not be applying his best efforts and talents to the question of how to employ people in the province of Saskatchewan. I would certainly be prepared to undertake these representations and see if we can get the Government of Saskatchewan to provide work under our new program. I hope that other provinces will also take up this offer. I think it is an important method of achieving something very valuable for Canadian workers.

EMERGENCY MEASURES

LIMITS OF CROWN PREROGATIVE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The heading on order in council No. 1305 indicates that it derives its authority from other than statutory authority, which must mean that it derives its authority from Crown prerogatives. I should like to ask the Prime Minister what the limits of Crown prerogatives are in this context. Does he have a legal opinion regarding the limits of this power under the new Constitution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would have to look at the particular order and the particular prerogative that is involved. Certainly I am on sound ground in saying that any prerogative, royal or otherwise, can be limited by statute. That would be the position I would take.

AVENUES OF REDRESS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): I have a supplementary question, Madam Speaker. As the Prime Minister must know, there is no statute in place for this particular order in council, and it is the cause of some grave concern across Canada that there are no limitations on the regulations because there are no statutes.

The Prime Minister has also said in this House that if anyone is aggrieved as a result of regulations that have imposed hardship on them, for example the internment camp issue, they will always have recourse to the courts. In this Chamber on December 17 the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council enumerated five ways in which citizens could find redress, not one of which indicates that there is judicial recourse. All of them come by way of internal committees within the government. I should like the Prime Minister to explain that particular contradiction.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker I do not see any contradiction. I do not have in mind the five recourses mentioned by the parliamentary secretary but I would easily admit that they do exist, and that there are internal recourses and ways of redress which exist within the administration. Certainly above all that rests the Canadian Charter of Rights and Fundamental Freedoms which offers redress, which I myself have heard the President of the Privy Council say, and I approve, either by writ of prerogative, whether it be injunction, mandamus, prohibition, or even habeas corpus—all these writs lie under the Charter of Rights. There is also a provision for financial compensation, so all these redresses exist and are supplementary to, I suppose, the ones mentioned by the parliamentary secretary.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE PROVISIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Yesterday the Minister of Finance advised the House that after five months of public debate he was proposing the extraordinary measure of introducing draft legislation on the budget prior to referring the budget to the House of Commons in the normal legislative process. This obviously compounds the uncertainty that many Canadians feel about the effect of the changes of the budget and of the subsequent changes on December 18, when they are filing their 1981 income tax return.

Because of the importance of the capital cost allowance to job creation, would the minister advise the House whether he has seen this draft legislation and, if so, would he advise the House whether there are any substantive changes in the legislation compared to the budget or the December 18 changes?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate to discuss communications between ministers in question period. I am surprised that my hon. friend seems to oppose the efforts the Minister of Finance is making to have a more open budget process and to have a better input from the community at large.

Mr. Kempling: You do not even know if there is a budget, Herb.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the whole point of the question is to try to open up this process so that people who are filling their income tax returns will know what they are dealing with. That is the whole point; people do not know what they are dealing with.

TAXATION OF HEALTH AND DENTAL BENEFITS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Many Canadians are now paying actual taxes on health and dental plan benefits, and many have expressed to me their uncertainty about whether they should continue in the plans because these plans will now be taxed. Would the minister advise the House whether she has seen this draft legislation and, if so, if there are any changes in the legislation that relate to the December 18 changes and the November budget?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I do not understand what the hon. member is talking about.

PREPARATION OF DRAFT BILLS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. We are now some five months down the line from the introduction of this rapidly disappearing budget. Yesterday the Minister of Finance indicated, for what I believe is the first time in Canadian history, that instead of introducing budget legislation now, four months after the event, he is going to introduce draft budget bills to be discussed before he brings the budget before the House of Commons. Will the Prime Minister tell us if those draft bills are ready yet? Has he seen them? Have they been prepared?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I understood the Minister of Finance to indicate the contrary yesterday—that he was proceeding under the Ways and Means motion and that when he would produce a bill in the House it would be for debate, as all bills are. I suppose, without playing on words, that I would indicate my view that every bill is a draft bill until it becomes law.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I hear some doubts expressed over there, Madam Speaker. Let us try to get to the bottom of this one.

If a bill is presented for first reading, the House is seized of it; if it goes to second reading, the debate begins and it can be changed. That is what I understood the Minister of Finance to say—that all budget bills in the past were subject to this particular rule and when they came before the House they could be amended. In that sense I suppose you can say they are draft bills.

DISCUSSION OF DRAFT LEGISLATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, this is becoming "Pierre and Allan in Wonderland". It is becoming more and more absurd as we go on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question to the Minister of Finance yesterday, as shown at page 15954 of Hansard, was as follows:

> Will he tell the House whether he is considering publishing draft budget legislation before he introduces the budget bills—

The reply given by the minister was that "the answer to the . . . question is yes." That is what he said yesterday.

Today the Prime Minister is saying exactly the opposite. Will he tell the House whether the government, for the first time in Canadian history, is preparing draft budget bills instead of introducing real budget legislation? If so, will the Prime Minister, as the presumed head of this government, if anybody is, tell us whether he has seen this draft legislation, whether it is ready, whether it has been discussed by cabinet, or whether Canadians who are filling out their income tax returns are simply going to have to wait and wait and wait to know what the law is?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not see why the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is getting excited about the question. He has some experience of sitting in the seat of the Prime Minister and I am sure he recalls how bills are put together by cabinet memorandum and by discussion in cabinet. I would be very surprised if he behaved differently from the way I do in this. The actual signature of the bills in bill form generally happens hours, or at most days, before the bills are given first reading. That is the way I have always proceeded and that is the way I am proceeding now. It does not mean that the subject matter of the bills and the precise intention of the minister or ministers are not known to cabinet before and are not debated as a result of memoranda being brought forward.

CABINET APPROVAL

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we have a wholly new practice here. Instead of proceeding with budget legislation the Minister of Finance, continuing his retreat, is introducing draft budget bills to Parliament. That must have been a government decision although the Prime Minister did not appear to know about it. It must have been a government decision.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons whether the cabinet of Canada has approved the policy announced yesterday by the Minister of Finance to present draft budget legislation rather than the real thing? If so, have those draft bills been prepared? First, did cabinet approve what the minister said yesterday and, second, have the draft bills been prepared?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in all honesty I can only give the same answer. I do not know if the bills have been physically printed out yet. Maybe the Queen's Printer does. I do not know, but I do know that the subject matter of the budget bills has been discussed repeatedly in cabinet between the Minister of Finance and myself. Naturally these discussions are privileged. I cannot say whether the bills are physically printed. I know that I will only see them for signature probably moments before they are tabled in the House.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a very simple question. Did the cabinet of Canada approve the new procedure of having draft budget bills prepared five months after the presentation of the budget, in place of the submission of real budget bills to the House of Commons? Was that policy decision taken and approved by cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, obviously the decisions of the Minister of Finance have the support of cabinet. As to what was discussed in cabinet and what particular subject matter came up and when, I should like to read to the hon. member, because he seems to forget the rules which prevail as to what goes on in cabinet. They are called—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I will read them, Madam Speaker:

—you will keep close and secret all such matters as shall be treated, debated and resolved on in Privy Council—

That is the oath of members of the Privy Council which all members of cabinet must take before assuming office. Therefore I do not see any way in which the Leader of the Opposition can expect me to say what goes on in cabinet.

RAILWAYS

PLACING OF ORDERS FOR LRC TRAIN SETS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I will not belabour the Chair by asking the same question three or four times in a row. My question is directed to the Minsiter of Transport. Last October 20 when I asked him about making an investment in 30 LRC train sets instead of ten, he said, "Agreed". When I asked when the order would be placed he said, "We will, in the fall". In view of the fact that there will be 300 indefinite lay-offs at the Bombardier plant in Quebec, will the minister arrange for the orders for these new LRC sets to be placed immediately? Is he aware of the fact that if they are not placed before April 8 the price of the train sets will increase?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am very much aware of that fact. In order to place the order I need two things. I need the money from Treasury Board—and this is before Treasury Board now in the capital budget of VIA—and I need a contract between VIA and Bombardier. As my hon. friend said, this is being negotiated now. I have excellent reason to believe that the two actions will come together rather soon.

PASSENGER EQUIPMENT AND HOPPER CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, last fall the Minister of Transport said that he would save $100 million by cancelling 21 VIA Rail routes, and VIA Rail is still being starved for cash. In agreeing that they should order 30 more LRC train sets, the minister said that they would be ordering new passenger equipment for transcontinental trains from Halifax to Vancouver. When does the minister intend to call for tenders for those orders to prevent further lay-offs at General Motors and Bombardier? Also, has he made up his mind yet as to when they will order those 1,300 hopper cars in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not think I ever said that I would order rolling stock for the transcontinental route; I do not think I did that. The present concentration, as is well known, is on intercity routes, and that is where our efforts will be made. On the subject of the purchase of hopper cars, the first purchase of 1,280 is a commitment of the government. We are working on it now in order to announce it as early as we can.

STATUS OF INDIAN RELEASED FROM PRISON IN NOVA SCOTIA

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the past incarceration of a native person in Nova Scotia who was recently released from prison and about which there now appears to be some question as to the guilt of the individual. Is the minister aware of the case and, if so, is he looking into the matter to see what assistance he may give to this individual?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, I am. It is a very serious situation. The possibility exists of an Indian being incarcerated for 11 years, and now there is some real doubt as to whether or not he was guilty. I spoke to his father and his lawyer when I was in Cape Breton on Saturday. His lawyer is coming down to Ottawa. He asked that I make arrangements with the Minister of Justice. I have done so, and the Minister of Justice will see him on his arrival. Also I talked with the Solicitor General, who is responsible for the RCMP, who indicated that he is prepared to be, and has been, as helpful as possible.

PETITION

MR. FRIESEN—PAYMENT MADE TO CONVICTED MURDERER CLIFFORD OLSON

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the one hundred and eighty-ninth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) on Tuesday, March 30, 1982, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DEFINITION OF THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF MINISTERS OF STATE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a very brief point of order while the government House leader is still in the House. A moment ago during question period Madam Speaker intervened in the questioning of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), having come to the conclusion that the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) was not responsible in his portfolio for the subject matter which was being raised by the hon. member.

I have had newspaper accounts brought in announcing the appointment of the Minister of State. A Canadian Press release of today reads:

> Joyal, who now will share constitutional repsonsibility with Justice Minister Jean Chrétien—has also been given unspecified duties as cabinet spokesman on Quebec affairs.

The question which was being put exclusively involved a Quebec matter. In order that we do not meet this problem in the future, I wonder whether the government House leader would be good enough to table, as he does now with names of ministers, acting ministers and second acting ministers, a specific definition of the responsibilities of ministers of state so that we, as members who have responsibility for framing and posing questions, might determine the proper minister to whom to direct our questions.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The ministers might like to know, too.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I will take into consideration the suggestion of the hon. member and see whether we can further explain the law to his party. Ministers of state are appointed according to an existing statute. If it needs clarification, I would be glad to try to find some lawyers who will give me an opinion, which I would transmit to my colleague.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am fully aware of how ministers of state are appointed; I need no instruction on that. What the government House leader may have missed, in my request for the sake of orderly conduct of our affairs here, was a request that a precise definition of the responsibilities of ministers of state be tabled. He knows as well as I that those duties and responsibilities are normally designated to ministers of state by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) merely by way of a letter; then we have second-hand information from news releases and news stories. It would certainly expedite our business if that definition were of a more formal nature and on the Table, in much the same fashion as he now tables information on ministers, acting ministers and second acting ministers.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I understood very well the question asked by the hon. member, and that is why I answered it as I did. I do not have much to change, except to remind him that it is not the practice to table an explanation of regional responsibilities of any minister because—

Mr. Nielsen: I was not referring to regional responsibilities.

Mr. Pinard: —they cannot be asked questions in regard to their responsibilities as regional ministers. If the hon. member is talking about ministers who are responsible for a region which is called the province of Quebec, that is something else.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Pinard: In any case, my first answer stands. If he needs clarification on the law, I will see that it is given to him.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, every time the government House leader rises he throws more sand about. I am not asking about regional ministers and their responsibilities. I am asking about responsibilities which are imposed upon ministers of state by the Prime Minister. In this case, according to news reports, the Minister of State under discussion has two responsibilities. One responsibility is that he will "share constitutional responsibility with Justice Minister Mr. Chrétien". The other responsibility is that he has "been given unspecified duties as cabinet spokesman on Quebec affairs". That is only a news report. Surely as members we are entitled to know what defined responsibilities the Prime Minister has seen fit to impose upon the Minister of State.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): If any responsibilities.

Mr. Nielsen: That is the information I am asking for.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I have nothing else to add to the answer that I have given to the hon. member. If he wants clarification, I will see if some clarification can be given to him. Once again, with respect to regional responsibilities—

Mr. Nielsen: It is not regional.

Mr. Pinard: —hon. members cannot ask questions of a minister on his regional responsibilities.

Mr. Nielsen: No, it is not.

Mr. Pinard: In so far as the responsibilities of ministers of state are concerned, they are provided for by the law and the practice in this place. If my hon. colleague needs clarification, I will see that he gets clarification.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, on this very important point, will the government House leader or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), whom we see in the House, tell us whether there are any duties performed by the Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) for which he is answerable to the House of Commons and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the minister to whom the hon. member refers has the same responsibility as any other minister of state appointed by the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I do not see why he asks this question. It seems to me that it is not the first time a minister of state has been appointed by the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Point of Order—Mr. Nielsen

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, perhaps if it were allowed, we might ask the Minister of State what it is he does, for which he can answer to the House. The government House leader has just said the Minister of State in this case is in the same position as, say, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, (Mr. Fleming) and, say, the minister responsible for the status of women. On those particular matters we know that we can direct questions relating to multiculturalism and relating to the status of women. But we have been precluded today from directing a question to the Minister of State responsible for Quebec affairs—I presume that is why he is there—on a matter that pertains exclusively to Quebec. The minister will not tell us what the duties of the Minister of State are. I repeat my question again, it is very simple: is there any duty possessed by the Minister of State, for which he is answerable to the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I apologize. I did not know that this point of order was on a question in which I was involved earlier. I have listened to the last answers given by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). I have very little to add except to point out, in answer to that last question posed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that there are cases where a minister of state is assigned specific duties under the Financial Administration Act or under order in council to assist a minister who has a portfolio under an act of Parliament. There are also ministers of state—they used to be called ministers without portfolio—who have no such responsibilities, Madam Speaker. They are there to assist from time to time in areas where the Prime Minister so designates them. These ministers without portfolio, under the rules, do not have to answer questions in the House.

The argument of the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that the minister of state responsible for Quebec would have to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) would lead to the ridiculous conclusion that the minister of state, so-called responsible for Quebec, would have to answer every question which concerns Quebec. I think the Speaker quite properly redirected the question posed by the hon. member for Joliette to myself. Obviously, I have to answer for all ministers, and I have to answer in cases where the minister is absent and he is not replaced by an acting minister or by a parliamentary secretary. What is a minister without portfolio?

Mr. Nielsen: What does he do?

Mr. Trudeau: They have existed from time out of mind. I am now asked by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) what he does. He has a regional responsibility, much as regional ministers do.

Mr. Nielsen: That is fine.

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) for instance, is a regional minister. He has the over-all responsibility for organizing the Quebec caucus of ministers, and so on. But he cannot be interrogated in that particular area. He can only be asked questions regarding his portfolio, the portfolio of energy. The minister without portfolio, the hon. member of whom we are talking, has no administrative responsibility under the law. He has a political responsibility, as is the case with ministers of portfolio named since the beginning of parliamentary times, both by Conservative and Liberal governments.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, before the Prime Minister leaves the House, could he clarify the situation in which we seem to have a minister who is not only without portfolio but without any responsibility? Will he tell us—and he must know—what duties he has assigned, as Leader of the Government, to the minister of state for Quebec? Would he tell us, either today or in a written submission tomorrow, if he has to consult records, on what questions the minister of state for Quebec is accountable to the House? In what areas can questions be properly directed to that minister, or is he simply a silent minister—

One of the silent ministers, with a title that is silent as well.

[English]

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition is deliberately trying not to understand. The hon. member is a minister without portfolio. As I understand the rules of the House—maybe, Madam Speaker, you should be called upon—but no, I understand this is not a question of order, it seems to be just a political debate. The Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) does not have any administrative responsibilities under the laws of this Parliament or this government; he has political responsibilities. That is quite simple. I understand the Leader of the Opposition has some political responsibilities too, a few, and so do I, Madam Speaker. These political responsibilities, as I understand it, cannot be subject to questions in the House. The hon. member cannot ask me a question about how I am organizing the party in the west.

Mr. Nielsen: What party?

Mr. Trudeau: The western Canada party. It seems to be harming the Conservative Party out there a great deal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: This is the answer, Madam Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

MISS MacDONALD—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENTS OF MISS BÉGIN

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, of which I have given you notice and which you indicated to me that you were prepared to hear under Standing Order 17(2). It concerns misleading statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) as reported in Hansard on March 22, 1982, on which day she was allowed to answer three questions. These questions appear in Hansard at pages 15666, 15667 and 15671 and they dealt with the status of Indian women. In her replies to those questions, the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that no Indian woman had lost her status during her time in cabinet. Subsequent to that, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) indicated through the press that the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare was incorrect. Indeed, 1,810 Indian women have lost their status between 1976 and 1980. In a press release, the minister commented that what Madam Bégin did was to equate enfranchisement—the right to vote—with status. I understand the minister was confused between enfranchisement—the right to vote—and the loss of status. That does indicate her confusion and the extent of it, because the loss of status is a much more serious question than the loss of the right to vote, serious as that right is. The loss of status means the loss of culture, the loss of identity and the loss of being as an Indian person. She indicated to the House that no such loss had occurred to any Indian woman during the time she had been a cabinet minister. I ask, Madam Speaker, that the minister rise in her place—and I quite understand her confusion—and correct her statements for the record in Hansard. She could have done that previously, but I would like her to do it now.

My question of privilege is that there has been a misleading statement made here in the House which we would like to see corrected. As long as it remains on the record of the House of Commons, it is indeed a question of privilege which concerns all Members of Parliament who have been misled by a minister of the Crown.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I support what the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has said. If you look at the remarks of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) as reported on page 15667 of Hansard, you will find seven instances of remarks which reflect upon the member asking the question, such as:

> The hon. member has made innuendoes that are not acceptable, beginning with a false quotation which I would like him to check and correct . . . the hon. member should state the complete situation . . . the hon. member's questions are among the most dangerous ones I have ever heard in the House—

We have waited, Madam Speaker, for the minister to come forward with the truth and set the record straight. If you do not allow this question to be put to the minister, then the record will stand as condemning members on this side with those words. The reason we ask that you allow this question to be put is to set the record straight. Hansard is the history of this House, and we do not want these remarks to remain on the record in their present form.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have had an opportunity to examine the statements made with regard to this matter, and I think it is unfortunate that the question went as far as it did. In looking at your comments I see that you were trying to be generous because you were not at first clear as to whether or not the question did in fact fall under the jurisdiction of the minister. Beauchesne's states in Citation 359(10):

A question ought not to refer to a statement made outside the House by a minister.

That is the first point on which we seem to have got off the track. Citation 359 also says in part:

A brief question seeking information about an important matter of some urgency which falls within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the specific minister to whom it is addressed—

And then Citation 359(6) says:

The minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his present ministry—

On page 329 of the nineteenth edition of Erskine May it says:

Questions to ministers must relate to matters for which those ministers are officially responsible.

I suggest, Madam Speaker, that that ends the matter. I think you have disposed of this matter according to Beauchesne's, Erskine May and according to precedent. I see no other solution, unless we are to break with all tradition and precedent of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, you will recall that what gave rise to this question was a speech by the minister made in Vancouver where she said it was her responsibility and that of other female members of cabinet to approve certain orders in council which affect the status and rights of native women. It was on the basis of her responsibility that this question was asked, because in her speech she said no Indian person had lost her status in the time that she, the minister, had been discharging this responsibility in cabinet.

The minister explained to the audience in her speech, quoted in the House, what her direct responsibilities were. Obviously she was confused, and she should have the opportunity to clear up this matter on her own behalf and on behalf of native people.

Madam Speaker: I think I made it quite clear in my intervention the other day that I was in doubt about whether or not the question should be allowed, but I let it go because things do happen very quickly in question period. I now know for sure that the question should not have been allowed to be directed to that particular minister. It might have been allowed to another minister, but not to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) because it was not within the realm of her administrative responsibilities. I let it go and the procedure did suffer a bit because it ought not to have been allowed. I do regret that and ask the indulgence of the House.

There was a question posed, not repeated today, that since I had allowed those questions then, should I not allow the questions that were asked yesterday. The fact that there was a slip in procedure on one day of course does not mean that the rules of the House should be altered. Therefore, since I was very sure that the questions yesterday did not relate to the administrative responsibilities of the minister, I did now allow them. I repeat, the questions might have been directed to another minister whose responsibility it is to answer them.

As to the question of privilege put forward by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), the fact that the statement might be judged to be misleading by a member of the House, of course, does not constitute the basis for a question of privilege. That is a matter of judgment. The hon. member might feel it is misleading, as is her right, but it is a matter of judgment and does not constitute the basis for a question of privilege. The only circumstances under which that might be considered to be the basis of a question of privilege is if the statement had been deliberately misleading, and that charge would have to be made.

The minister might want to make a statement—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: —somewhere, either in this House or somewhere else, to clarify the statement, if she feels she should do so. However, that is her choice, and I have no authority to force the minister to make that statement.

Therefore, on those grounds, I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege in the question raised by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, you have just ruled, and the House naturally accepts your ruling. However, we have had a rather difficult situation created here. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), in responding to questions—indeed, as you read Hansard you will see that she asked that questions be directed to her. On page 15671 of Hansard, where I was directing a question to the appropriate minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is reported as saying:

Ask me.

In other words, she invited the House of Commons to direct those questions to her. That is very clearly on the record. Indeed, some of us are particularly concerned about the aspersions cast by the minister, in her response, upon hon. members on this side of the House. Her response was an illegitimate response under a strict rendering and reading of the rules. It is, nonetheless, on the record. It is, nonetheless, an aspersion cast upon hon. members on this side of the House which the facts do not merit.

• (1530)

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has it within her power, if she acts gracefully, to rectify the situation. When we were putting questions, she said to me, "Ask me the question". As one hon. member of this House to another, I would now like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to accept her responsibilities, to follow the courtesies of this House and to extend an apology to those hon. members whose names, perhaps inadvertently, she called into question.

Mr. Paproski: There is your chance, Monique.

Madam Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) knows that this kind of language is constantly used in the House. It is not the first time, and it does not really constitute the basis of a question of privilege. This kind of language is used in debate, and as long as it does not go beyond what is considered to be parliamentary language, I cannot force the minister to withdraw any of those words. If the hon. minister feels that she should withdraw the words she may do so, but it is up to her. However, at this particular point I do not feel I can oblige the Leader of the Opposition. As a matter of fact, he did not ask me to do it. He was only addressing himself to the minister. However, I just want to correctly state for the record that there is no strict obligation for the minister to withdraw her remarks.

Mr. Clark: Perhaps this is a hypothetical question and, consequently, not one which can be dealt with. However, if the language used by the Minister of National Health and Welfare had been language which the House would normally hold to be unparliamentary, would the fact that she was answering in an illegitimate capacity preclude us from setting the record straight?

Madam Speaker: I would not think so, frankly. Unparliamentary language, as it is spoken, should be a matter for redress. Today, if the hon. minister has chosen to answer, for instance, some of the hon. members who intervened on a question of privilege, I could have allowed the hon. minister to reply. Now the problem has shifted to one of a question of privilege, and any hon. member of this House involved in a question of privilege is free to reply or not to reply.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, there is another dimension to this problem.

Madam Speaker: Is this a legitimate point of order or is the hon. member just continuing the debate on this particular question? I want the hon. member to really consider that before he rises again.

Mr. Oberle: It may be a new question of privilege. Madam Speaker, I really think there is a new dimension to this matter or another dimension which Your Honour has not considered.

Your Honour will recall that, following the exchange between the minister and my colleague, the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), I did address the same question to the appropriate minister. It is quite clear to everyone in the House that there is a requirement for an order in council before the status of an Indian person is denied or cancelled. I asked the minister responsible for native affairs in this country who it was that had signed the order in council to disenfranchise, to remove the status of 1,810 Indian women from 1976 to 1981. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said she did not sign the order although she had been responsible all those years. That question has not been answered, and we have a right to know the answer.

Madam Speaker: That is debate. That does not enter into the realm of a question of privilege. The hon. member might ask questions in subsequent days at the time of the question period concerning these matters on which he wants to elicit information. However, this is not a question of privilege.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,448, 3,622, 3,688, 4,051 and 4,124.

CANADIAN STUDIES BULLETIN

Question No. 3,448—Mr. Herbert:

Did the Department of the Secretary of State finance in whole or in part the publication of the November, 1981 "Canadian Studies Bulletin" and, if so (a) how many copies were printed and to whom were they distributed (b) what is the objective of the financing of this and similar publications?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): The November 1981 issue of the "Canadian Studies Bulletin" was financed by the Canadian Studies Office of the Association of Canadian Community Colleges. The office has received grants from the Secretary of State Department under the National Program of Support for Canadian Studies.

(a) Three thousand copies were printed and distributed, largely to faculty members in the colleges, institutes and CEGEP's of Canada. Each issue is also mailed to selected individuals in provincial ministries of education, universities, and to members of the federal Parliament. The publication is designed to address issues and areas of interest to educators in post-secondary non-degree-granting institutions.

(b) The department's objective in financing this kind of publication under its Canadian Studies Program is to disseminate and promote existing resources and information about Canadian materials, and to provide a pan-Canadian platform for the discussion of national issues which concern Canadian educators. More broadly, the program is designed to increase and disseminate knowleldge about Canada by supporting the efforts of organizations and individuals working with all levels of formal and continuing education.

Question No. 3,622—Mr. Herbert:

1. In the fiscal year 1980-81, what amount was paid under the student loan program to (a) lending institutions (b) collection agencies?

2. Do the lending institutions and collection agencies record the student loans by home, province or university location of the student at the time of the making of the loan?

3. Did the answer to question No. 2,474 state "it is not possible to separate these budgetary allocations by province" and, if so, does the government take any additional steps to ensure reasonably equal accessibility to student loans on a regional basis?

4. In the fiscal year 1980-81, what was the estimated value of the tax points transferred to Quebec in connection with the program and does the $17,452,507 transferred in 1980-81 contain any equalization of the tax points transferred?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State):

1. (a) $36,298,427.66
   (b) $ 3,224,927.70

2. Lending institutions record the home address of the borrower at the time of making the loan. Collection agencies record the address of the borrower at the time the debtor is contacted after defaulting on a loan.

3. Yes. Under the Canada Student Loans Act provinces are allocated a portion of the basic loan provision made under the act in the ratio that the 18-24-year-old population in the province concerned bears to the same population in Canada. In addition the act provides for supplementary allocation of 30 per cent of the basic loan provision from which allocations may be made to any province which may exceed its basic allocation due to regional factors and provided it has followed the agreed criteria for assessing applications. Financially needy students have, therefore, access to student loans.

4. The alternative payment to Quebec is calculated on the basis of the costs (interest charges, net loss claims, death claims, and amounts paid to lenders for collections) of operating the program in the preceding year. The actual payment is determined by applying the ratio of the 18-24-year-old population in Quebec to that age group in the rest of Canada. There is, therefore, no transfer of tax points to Quebec under this program.

PLANT CLOSING AT COTEAU-DU-LAC, QUEBEC

Question No. 3,688—Mr. Herbert:

Did the Department of (a) Employment and Immigration (b) Regional Economic Expansion (c) Industry, Trade and Commerce offer assistance to Du Pont of Canada Ltd. in an attempt to avoid the plant closing at Coteau-du-Lac, Quebec and, if so, what was the form of the assistance?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows:

(a) The commission has offered to establish a joint labour-management consultative committee under the sponsorship of the Manpower Consultative Service (MCS) to assist the workers affected by the closure of the plant at Coteau-du-Lac, Quebec. The MCS committee would attempt to find jobs for the workers and explore other labour adjustment measures, such as retraining and mobility assistance.

The company is presently considering this offer. In the meantime, counselling, job search assistance, training, mobility, unemployment insurance and other CEIC programs and services are available through the Canada Employment Centre (CEC) in Valleyfield, Quebec. The Valleyfield CEC is working closely with company representatives.

HOME SECURITY SURVEY

Question No. 4,051—Mr. Crosby:

1. Is there now or was there recently a Statistics Canada survey relating to home security in Halifax, Nova Scotia and, if so (a) what is or was its purpose (b) what questions are or were being asked?

2. Are or were questions involving salary and personal habits necessary for the survey and, if so, for what reason?

3. Who has or will have access to the information provided by the respondents?

4. How many persons in Halifax are being or will be asked the questions and how many persons responded to the questions?

5. Are or were the questions being asked in other cities or areas and, if so (a) which cities or areas (b) how many persons responded?

6. Are steps being taken or will steps be taken to ensure confidentiality of the responses and, if so, what are such steps?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. (a) Statistics Canada conducted a survey related to the effect of crime on the population (victimization) during the period January 14 to February 26, 1982. The survey included in its coverage Halifax and Dartmouth, Nova Scotia. It contained some questions concerning home security or crime prevention. The survey was conducted for the federal Department of the Solicitor General and its purpose was to obtain information on the frequency and distribution of certain crimes, their impact on victims' perceptions of their experience, their needs and concerns.

(b) The survey included questions about respondent characteristics (age, sex, marital status, income range, etc.) and questions on the respondents' perceptions of the prevalence of crime in their city and neighbourhood, on their attitudes toward the police, and on their use of crime prevention measures. If the respondent had been the victim of certain crimes during 1981, details were collected about each crime, including information on injuries, loss and damage.

2. The questions concerning personal habits, income and demographic information were necessary and important in identifying the risk of being the victim of a crime for various groups in the population. Previous research has shown that information on personal habits is closely related to the risk of crime.

3. Statistical information will be made available, in a form that guarantees the confidentiality of respondents, to the Department of the Solicitor General of Canada, to local police departments, and to any person or organization interested in the data.

4. In the Halifax-Dartmouth area approximately 10,000 households were contacted and although final information is not yet available the response rate is expected to be between 85 and 90 per cent.

5. (a) The survey was conducted in the greater Vancouver region, the cities of Edmonton and Winnipeg, metropolitan Toronto and Montreal, Halifax-Dartmouth and the city of St. John's.

(b) The number varies by city but in total approximately 70,000 households were contacted. Some 58,490 interviews were completed of which 8,800 approximately were from Halifax-Dartmouth.

6. The information is being collected under the authority of the Statistics Act which obliges Statistics Canada to safeguard the confidentiality of information provided by respondents. Survey data will be handled only by employees sworn to secrecy under the Statistics Act, and the data will be processed in such a manner that absolutely no information will be released which would allow individuals to be identified.

WHEAT FOR AFGHAN REFUGEES

Question No. 4,124—Mr. Neil:

Is $5 million in wheat being supplied through the Canadian International Development Agency to help feed Afghan refugees camped along the northwestern border of Pakistan and, if so, what was the price per bushel paid to the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes. The price per bushel paid to the Canadian Wheat Board was $7.

[English]

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion for the production of paper No. 49, standing in the name of the late hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt).

[Text]

COPIES OF ALL COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN MINISTER RESPONSIBLE FOR CBC AND SENIOR OFFICIALS OF CBC

Motion No. 49—Mr. Cossitt:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, memoranda, records of telephone conversations, etc., between the minister responsible to Parliament for CBC and any senior officials of CBC for the years 1977 to 1980 inclusive.

[English]

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): The present Minister of Communications has the responsibility to produce information with regard to transactions conducted only during his term of office which started on March 3, 1980. However, included in the requested material are papers which relate to responsibilities of the government and the minister pursuant to Sections 41 and 44 of the Broadcasting Act, concerning the corporation's acquisition of real property and the making of its bylaws. Release and publication of such material would be inconsistent with the responsibilities given by Parliament to Crown corporations, in particular the CBC. Since the CBC's creation in 1936, Parliament has maintained a custom of not requiring a response to questions which pertain to the details of the corporation's internal management and administration. I would therefore ask that this motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Nielsen: Transfer for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, if you will call all motions in my name Nos. 76, 86, 95, 96, 97 and 98, I will request that they be transferred for debate.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 97 in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) is acceptable to the government.

Mr. Paproski: What about the rest?

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the other notices of motion for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Paproski: I believe the hon. member for Vaudreuil mentioned three or four notices of motions for the production of papers, not just one. Does the government accept all of them?

Mr. Smith: Well, the hon. member for Vaudreuil is free to request that those motions be transferred for debate if he so desires. That is a decision that he must make.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, things have been going so fast here. Was the notice of motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil which has been accepted by the government one of those which the hon. member for Vaudreuil has requested be transferred for debate and which was the subject of the Chair's direction?

• (1540)

Mr. Herbert: As I understand it, Madam Speaker, after I requested this, the parliamentary secretary suggested that Motion No. 97 was acceptable to the government. I assume under those circumstances the motion will be accepted and that the other motions will be transferred.

Mr. Nielsen: I thought that was the state that we had reached, Madam Speaker. I am afraid the parliamentary secretary has hoisted the member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). The action had been taken by the House in transferring all the motions for debate. Then the parliamentary secretary comes along and wishes to produce. That is fine with us, but I think the appropriate time for it to happen would be when the motion comes up for debate. I suggested it cannot happen now. We would have no objection to the provision of the information to the member, but I do not think the precedent should be set at this time.

Mr. Smith: With respect to my hon. friend, the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I believe that he is making a mountain out of a molehill. I thought it was appropriate for the House to know that motion No. 97 in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) was acceptable to the government. If he prefers to have it transferred for debate, that is a decision which presumably he can make. He is capable of making that decision.

Madam Speaker: My understanding was that Motion No. 97 was accepted and that the other motions mentioned by the hon. member, namely, Nos. 76, 86, 95, 96, and 98 were transferred for debate. Is that correct?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works—the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove).

Madam Speaker: I have examined the motions in amendment to Bill C-89 and I would like to inform the House that Motions Nos. 1 and 2, standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), should be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out line 20 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"sisting of one or more houses or homes, one or".

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be amended in Clause 25 by striking out line 29 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"sition of his home, including floating homes, for a term that has".

She said: Madam Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to draw to the attention of members of this House a housing need they have probably overlooked when dealing with Bill C-89, that is, the need for floating homes. Most members of the House are spared the ecstacies of west coast living, flowering Japanese plum blossoms and daffodils already in full bloom.

An hon. Member: And crocuses?

Miss Carney: There is also the ability to use the coastline and the sea as your marine lot.

In moving this amendment, Mr. Speaker, I would like to identify the objective of Motion No. 1 which is to make financing more easily available to residents of floating homes.

The objective of Motion No. 2 is to ensure that the residents of floating homes are eligible for assistance from the federal government in times of soaring interest rates, under the same conditions that all other home owners are eligible for assistance under Bill C-89. This would make this program more equitable.

I would like to point out that floating homes are indigenous to the east coast and the west coast and they are part of our Canadian lifestyle.

Floating homes are becoming increasingly popular as land prices rise and the supply of land dwindles. There are close to 1,000 houseboats and live-aboard boats in the lower mainland area, many of them in my riding of Vancouver Centre.

The major obstacle to the development of floating home communities is the expense of financing. Conventional mortgages are not available. Most people must take out shorter term chattel mortgages or consumer loans at interest rates as high as 21 per cent. This causes great hardship to many people.

I would like to refer to a letter written to me by one of my constituents who lives on a live-aboard boat, who wrote: "From the mouth of high-ranking Liberals I have heard that no Canadians would be forced to leave their homes because of exorbitant interest rates. I am about to lose my home for precisely that reason." This person goes on to detail the increase in mortgage rates from 11.5 per cent to 21 per cent and how even though she and her husband are in the high income group—they are both teachers—they feel they cannot continue. She concludes by saying: "I am appealing to you to bring our case to the attention of anyone whom you can think of who could offer some relief and keep us from losing not only our home but the dream of a lifetime."

Private lending institutions have told me that one of the major reasons they do not arrange mortgages for floating homes is that no mortgage insurance is available for them. Therefore, I seek to amend Bill C-89 through Motion No. 1, to enable Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to provide mortgage insurance for floating home developments.

The purpose of Motion No. 2 is to extend the coverage of the interest deferment plan to include floating homes. Since this government has said that it does not wish to see Canadians lose their homes because of high interest rates, I believe that the owners of floating homes should be eligible for this new program along with other Canadian home owners.

Some members of the House may believe that these amendments are so limited in their application that they are not worthy of consideration, but I would argue that it is the purpose of our institutions, including the House of Commons and our banks, to be sensitive to our needs and to accommodate them wherever possible. In particular, Mr. Speaker, a country such as Canada that is bordered by three oceans needs to be aware of the issues which arise on its coasts. Also, a country such as Canada with a growing shortage of affordable housing should also be prepared to consider ideas that would help to meet housing demand.

I would like to list some of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why floating homes should be encouraged. One is the availability of serviced land for housing development, which is very limited in the lower mainland. According to the greater Vancouver regional district planners, Vancouver is land short, as members from Vancouver are well aware.

Second, land prices are very high and house prices have skyrocketed. In fact, housing prices in Vancouver are the highest in the country, with the average single family dwelling selling for $127,000 and the average condominium for about $92,000 in February, 1982, according to the Vancouver Real Estate Board.

A third reason why floating houses should be encouraged is that water is plentiful. The fourth reason is that house boats are cheaper to build than conventional houses, because, for instance, a two-bedroom 900 square foot house boat, including its water lease, could retail for as low as $85,000—which is at the bottom of the market for Vancouver housing.

Floating homes are good for starter homes or for older couples whose children have left. They would, therefore, help to satisfy part of the housing market.

To be realistic, Mr. Speaker, floating homes will never provide any great deal of housing but they are prime sources of satisfaction to people who choose to make their homes on the water. There have always been people who want to live on the water, ever since Vancouver began as Coal Harbour. In fact, in Vancouver in the early days there used to be quite a floating community, complete with a floating brothel and a whiskey factory. It is traditional for cities on the water, such as London and Amsterdam, to have people living on the water. Therefore, this should not be looked on as something strange and new.

In dealing with Vancouver, I would like to make some major points. The first is that this concept of floating homes is technically possible in Vancouver. We have developed sewage systems for house boats. Also, it is physically possible in Vancouver. It is estimated that between 10,000 and 15,000 units could be accommodated in the Vancouver-Victoria area. It is also administratively possible, for the greater Vancouver Regional District has devised construction standards and a model municipal bylaw. It is environmentally possible; there are health codes and fire codes to which house boat communities must conform.

However, the status of floating homes is very vague. Governments do not seem to know what to do with floating homes. For instance, the federal government seems to be in conflict. Revenue Canada treats floating homes like a house. In 1977 the federal government ruled that registered home ownership savings plans could be applied to floating homes; but Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will not insure mortgages for them or allow floating home residents to be eligible for mortgage assistance under the interest deferment plan. As the minister responsible is in the House, I would like him to note this point.

The provincial government will give the home owners a grant for floating homes that have a land lease. The provincial government also assesses them under the mobile home tax act, but Victoria will not allow them to be included under the mobile home registry act, which means that mortgages on floating homes cannot be registered. This is an important obstacle.

The city of Vancouver classifies marinas as "floating mobile homes covered with water" for the purposes of licences, a wording which is baffling in the extreme. Floating home communities are subject to inspection by a wide range of government officials. These include the fire department, the health department, tax assessors, marine surveyors and the coast guard. They are regulated by municipal bylaw, must comply with the provisions of the regional plan and also come under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, to name some examples.

Most of the obstacles faced by the floating home owners are institutional. First, governments must decide how to deal with floating homes. At present they are forced to conform to a wide range of strict standards, but they receive no consistent treatment under the law. Second, financing must be made more accessible.

I would like first to deal with some of the problems raised by the banks. The banks identify several difficulties with making conventional mortgages available. First, there is nowhere to register the mortgages. Second, since water and land leases are usually for a short term, the rate of depreciation makes amortization over more than ten years impractical. Further, the banks do not know enough about floating homes; they need more information. Finally, the banks say that another problem is that Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will not insure these homes under current legislation because of the definition of house, which I will speak to later.

None of these obstacles is insurmountable. Floating home mortgages could be registered under the mobile home registry act of British Columbia. If land leases were made available for longer periods, such as 20 years, amortization periods could be extended. More information could be supplied to the banks, and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation could be empowered to make mortgage insurance available, meeting the requirement of the banks.

Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation also cites several problems for floating home owners. I mentioned the first, that there is nowhere to register floating homes. Another point that bothers CMHC is that there is no security. Floating homes can be floated away. Further, the National Housing Act restricts the structures for which insurance is available through its definition of house which is, under current legislation, "a building plus land".

I have already pointed out that the first issue of registration can be resolved. The question of security is more difficult. Owners of floating homes point out that the value of their home declines drastically if it is removed from its mooring. It derives its value and its comfort from its location in a marina. However, CMHC does not accept the argument. It might be possible, however, to meet the corporation's requirements by passing regulations that home owners must secure their house boats to piles and remove the engines in the same way that mobile homes are secured in one place. The point is that if institutions were flexible these problems could be worked out. Finally, my first amendment addresses the issue of mortgage insurance by CMHC.

Since Bill C-89 does not deal with the definition of house but does change the definition of housing project, motion No. 1 seeks to amend Clause 1, line 20, which deals with the definition of housing project. By inserting the words "or homes" after the word "houses", motion No. 1 removes the dependence of CMHC on the definition of house as "building plus land". If houses must be on land, then the word "home" could be used to include dwellings that are not on land, such as floating homes.

Motion No. 1 would empower CMHC to insure mortgages for development projects of all types no matter where they are located, on land or water. It is hoped that in the future the National Housing Act could be amended to empower CMHC to insure mortgages on individual units rather than on whole communities. It is only a first step. There are many more things that need to be done to encourage the development of floating homes, but it would be a start toward overcoming the institutional bias against floating homes.

The purpose of motion No. 2 deals with the fact that there is nothing in the present wording of the interest deferment plan which prevents floating homes from being eligible for assistance. That is quite important. In the present wording, they are not left out. However, officials of CMHC have told my staff that residents of floating homes are not eligible. They have made this policy decision 2,600 miles away from where the need is.

CMHC argues that the taxpayers should not subsidize luxury accommodation. Somehow, in their unfamiliarity with what house boats are on the west coast, they equate them with luxury accommodation. I do not believe that it is the mandate of CMHC to judge the quality of living accommodation on land or water. I do not believe that CMHC assesses the luxury of conventional houses before determining if they qualify for other programs. If the houses meet the criteria, the residents are deemed to qualify. To use the logic of CMHC, its officials should look at the quality of the broadloom and the furnishings in homes to judge whether the residents are living in luxurious surroundings before allowing them to qualify for government programs. I do not believe that CMHC should have this discretionary power.

CMHC also suggested that if the residents of floating homes are having financial difficulties, they should move on to land. CMHC officials of all people should know about the crisis in affordable housing in Vancouver before making such a suggestion. Their regional director is certainly well aware of the problem.

I also think it is unacceptable for CMHC to be telling Canadians where and how they should be living, provided that their home complies with municipal regulations and standards. This is clearly one of the problems with centrally-administered national programs. National institutions must be sensitive to regional needs. In the lower mainland area of British Columbia, regional needs include floating homes and a marine coast.

For all these reasons, I urge members of the House to support these amendments and extend equal treatment to home owners inventive enough to use the only space available to them in many areas, that is, marine space.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is an important and a proud day, proud not only for the government but for all members of the House who have been associated with supporting Bill C-89. Most of all, it is a day that will show some ray of hope for thousands of Canadian families and individuals seeking assistance with housing and employment needs.

As I indicated in my remarks the day after the budget was introduced, November 13, Bill C-89 is a sensible and sensitive response to the needs that I have described. For many Canadians this is a very important piece of legislation. I predict, as I have throughout the many days and evenings of discussion with my colleagues in the House, that this bill will have a significant impact, not only on housing problems and conditions of Canadians, but on the economy and the provision of employment in that sector.

In short, Bill C-89 does four major things. First, it enables the Canada mortgage renewal plan to proceed without delay. Second, it allows the Canada rental supply plan to move toward operation. Third, it contains provisions which will be of interest to all home owners, but especially to first-time home buyers. I will expand on that shortly. Fourth, it will enable Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to conduct its activities in a more efficient and, indeed, a more compassionate manner.

It provides very important steps needed to enable the government to deal effectively with housing issues, and as such it is very important to all participants in the housing market such as home owners, prospective home owners, rental entrepreneurs, renters, those seeking rental accommodation upon family formation, the building industry and the lending institutions which serve the industry.

Of equal concern is the situation of those who are concerned about rental accommodations, both its provision and its supply as well as its affordability. There is concern among lower income families about the availability of rental units and the amount they will have to pay for them. This government will be assisting in the construction of approximately 55,000 rental units in Canada this year which are comprised of 25,000 units under the non-profit and co-operative housing program under section 56(1) which supports co-operative and non-profit construction, as well as 30,000 units which have been identified under the Canada rental supply plan. These units have been identified by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and provided for by him through the commitment of $350 million in the next two fiscal periods.

I would remind hon. members that of the 30,000 units to be supported by the Canada rental supply plan one third are designated to serve Canadians on a rent-geared-to-income basis. It is obvious in the case of those provinces which will co-operate and assist in that rent-geared-to-income program, which is specifically designed to assist Canadians who are seeking affordable accommodations, that there could hardly be a more equitable program than the rent-geared-to-income program which is in place and being further supported by the Canada rental supply plan.

I do not believe that I have to dwell any longer on the economic impact of the Canada rental supply plan in the housing market and the opportunities which it will provide to those working in the housing industry. I am sure that those members who have longer experience in the House and in this business understand well the immediate impact that the construction of 30,000 multiple units will have on Canadians from coast to coast.

There are two other features of the bill which I would like to address. First, I will discuss the topic of mortgage instruments and the provisions in the bill which would enable Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to facilitate the development of new mortgage instruments. As we are all aware, the term of the mortgage instrument had declined from 25 years to 5 years, and now to one year—in some cases for even a shorter period of time. This has increased uncertainty for mortgage borrowers and has almost totally reduced the security which home owners used to have with fixed monthly payments over that period of time. This has made it much more difficult for rental entrepreneurs who need five-year mortgage money because rental production is not economically viable to them for construction in the short run. The reason for this is that investors in mortgages do not want to invest in longer term investments only to see the investment returns increase in the future. This situation of volatile mortgage interest rates has resulted in considerable attention to new mortgage instruments such as the variable rate mortgage, shared equity or appreciation mortgage and price level adjusted mortgages.

I am pleased that this bill will enable CMHC to facilitate these new developments. These instruments do have the potential to improve the situation for both borrowers and investors; help to ensure the availability of longer term funds for mortgages and provide greater certainty of mortgage payments.

Another area dealt with by this legislation is the premiums which Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation can charge for mortgage insurance, which are presently set out in the act and cannot be changed except for an amendment to the act. This is one of the reasons why these changes to the National Housing Act must be made to introduce this additional flexibility so that CMHC can operate in the marketplace in a more business-like fashion.

Not only is it essential to the efficiency of the corporation, but, in turn, it gives a better return for the expense side of the operation of the corporation and thus a better return to the taxpayer who is supporting the government operation.

The bill now before us would allow CMHC to accept an assignment of mortgage in a default situation rather than obtaining possession. This is another provision of the bill which makes the corporation more efficient and thereby reduces the cost of operation to the government and the taxpayer. For example, in the case of a multiple unit housing project which is in temporary difficulty but which CMHC believes is a viable business proposition, the amendments would enable the corporation to move in a way which will ensure not only a tax saving to the taxpayer but will prevent inconvenience to tenants in such buildings. It would also permit another option. The amendments would also allow another claim settlement arrangement whereby lenders would be permitted to sell a property where, after close examination, it is deemed by the corporation, in consultation with the project owner, to be practical and feasible. As far as the mortgage insurance fund is concerned, the result would be that it would acquire fewer properties and the case load on the fund would be substantially reduced. Again, it would thereby reduce the cost to the corporation and the government which, as you know, has had to move to assess the corporation in the last few years because of the high demand of failures and hence claims on the fund.

The Canada mortgage renewal plan will and is presently being prepared for implementation by CMHC in anticipation of the passage of Bill C-89 before the House. I can assure the House that no time will be lost in taking advantage of the legislation, which hopefully the House will deal with today. A comprehensive public information program will be undertaken so that individuals will be able to have access to programs as they pertain to their particular circumstance.

I was interested to hear the explanation and the urging for the adoption of the amendments proposed this afternoon which were addressed by the first speaker. I would have to indicate that although the corporation has responded by initially indicating its concerns for the proposed amendments, I have not had an opportunity to receive advice from the corporation, nor have we had time seriously to consider the implications of the proposed amendments. Certainly the amendments proposed by the hon. member urge a sympathetic hearing but, as you can well recall, the member also indicated the difficulties which exist in accepting such amendments. Because the amendments were introduced at a late stage we cannot support them today.

I want to make one further comment about the remarks of the hon. member who addressed what was apparently an observation by officials of the corporation about the quality of housing. He said that the corporation or the government should really have no role and nothing to say about the quality of housing. An integral and very important part of the Canada rental supply plan is that it is designed so that the Canadian government and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation can ensure that the 30,000 units constructed under that program with the $7,500 second mortgage are of modest construction. One of our major concerns is to ensure that the incentives under this plan will guarantee that modest accommodation is provided—not luxury accommodation but that which will provide affordable and modest rental homes. One of the features of the plan is that the corporation can exercise control to ensure that the quality of building is modest and at the same time attractive.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all those Canadians who feel that the program may be of benefit to them, to investigate the options provided under it.

I should like to thank my colleagues who have supported the legislation, Mr. Speaker. I should also like to thank members of the provincial legislatures who have indicated support for it and those various municipal officials who, in response to my communications offered support for it. I should like to thank the trade union organizations who indicated support for it and finally, the industry organizations such as CIPREC, UDI, and HUDAC, the traditional representative in the industry who, as we know, urged passage of the legislation as soon as possible.

The reward for adoption of this important legislation will be for me, as I am sure it will be for all members, the help it will offer to many thousands of Canadians seeking assistance in housing and in jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 1 (Miss Carney) negatived on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on Motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 2 (Miss Carney) negatived on division.

Mr. Cosgrove moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I am informed that there is no debate at concurrence stage of the motion but only at third reading stage. We can proceed to third reading with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cosgrove moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to address the House briefly at third reading stage of this bill. The House will remember that this legislation is the result of a year and a half or two years of promises by the Liberal Party to do something to help Canadian home owners. From that standpoint we welcome the fact that it finally came about.

Throughout the summer and fall of 1980 and into 1981, Canadians saw mortgage interest rates that they had never seen before. They saw an increase in foreclosures and power of sale proceedings became a way of life for thousands and thousands of Canadians who previously had no idea of the force and effect of this remedy. Interest rates continue to cripple the housing industry. Many Canadians have seen their mortgage payments double as a result of the Liberal high interest rate policy. Thousands are abandoning their homes because they can no longer make the mortgage payments.

After marches on Parliament by Canadian home owners in the fall of 1981 we finally got a budget which, in most ways, was a disaster. If there was any glimmer of hope for Canadians, it was in the provisions of the bill that was passed before the House.

Interest rates still concern us, Mr. Speaker. Since the bill was introduced, CMHC brought forward its annual report dated March 12, 1982, which focused upon high interest rates in 1981 and what they have done to the Canadian housing market and the ability of Canadians to make mortgage payments. The corporation stated that it is very very difficult for first time home owners to participate in the current market. In 1981 there was a crisis in housing starts. The current prediction is for 152,000 starts this year, although for various reasons CMHC has suggested that we need 220,000 starts per year. There has been some suggestion that the number will be reduced to 200,000. Even at that rate we would still have 25 per cent or 30 per cent below what CMHC says we need to house Canadians properly.

I should like to draw the attention of the House to some things that are being done in other countries. In March 1982 the mortgage rate in Great Britain was 15 per cent. Housing societies there, which are like our trust companies, cut the interest rate on mortgages to 13.5 per cent. It is a shame that all we can get out of this government is that, through this bill, it will give an interest free deferral of up to $3,000 to home owners who have five per cent equity in their home, and to home owners who have no substantial equity in their home it will give a grant of up to $3,000. In order to qualify, home owners must pay more than 30 per cent of their income for principal, interest and property taxes. I remind the House that this plan only applies to mortgages which mature between September 1, 1981 and November 11, 1982. If the government continues with its Liberal high interest rate policy, there is no question the minister will be back in the House next fall asking for an amendment to the act in order to redress the problems the government will have created for Canadians in the intervening eight or nine months.

The comparison of this legislation is interesting. We on this side suggested to Canadians that they had every right to treat mortgage interest and property tax as legitimate deductions from income, as was done in the United States and in Great Britain. We suggested that it was a legitimate deduction from income which Canadian home owners could use. The net result of the much maligned—and I say much maligned by the Liberal Party—Progressive Conservative mortgage interest and realty tax credit plan would have been, in 1982, to give Canadians with normal $35,000 mortgages a tax break, credit or payment of approximately $150 per month. If we examine the increases in the mortgage payments of ordinary Canadians as a result of the Liberal high interest rate policy, we find that our suggestion, which was before the House in the form of legislation, would have gone a long way toward overcoming the grief with which Canadians are faced today.

Now I turn to the area of vacancy rates. The vacancy rates created by the government have reached all-time crisis proportions. If one lives in Oshawa, one is faced with a vacancy rate of 0.0 per cent. If one lives in Hamilton, it is 0.7 per cent. The standard figure of 3.0 per cent is considered to be acceptable in order for Canadians, with the normal flow of people in and out of apartments, to find decent, affordable accommodation in which to live and raise their families. The bill suggests that interest-free loans of up to $7,500 per unit will be given to assist in the construction of 15,000 rental units. This was proposed in November, and in the intervening months between November and early March the government found, as it has with many of its predictions, that its prediction was not correct. Perhaps the government was fooled by the many holes in the ground, or the in again out again, now you see it now you don't attitude, created by MURBs. The holes and footings in the ground were considered to be housing starts, but suddenly the government realized that nothing would be erected over these holes, so it came forward with the promise of another 15,000 units in March. This promise was made in an announcement by the minister contained in a comprehensive release from his office, in which he talked about what the government would do for repairs of Canadian houses.

This is all very nice, but I think it is well understood that apartments or rental accommodations are not being built because of the Liberal high interest rate policy. There is no way that one can economically build rental units under the present high interest rates which the cabinet and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) are supporting as a tonic for Canadians. It is not much of a tonic, because we are not receiving housing starts. Any Canadian involved in the development business realizes that apartments cannot be built with interest rates at the level at which the government is keeping them.

Unfortunately I did not have an opportunity to participate in all committee meetings which were held, but I have reviewed the remarks that were made. I should like to bring to the attention of the House that there is some hope for Canadians. The Minister of Finance firmly suggested in the budget that it was the intention of the Liberal government to tax Canadians on the imputed rental value of their homes. This was based upon budget figures which were brought forward by the minister. He said that it was not correct, according to the Liberal Party, that Canadians should own homes, should pay them off, and then should be able to get away with not paying income tax on the imputed value. The Minister of Finance stuck to his guns on this. He absolutely refused to say that at no time will the Liberal government tax Canadians on the imputed value of their homes. This now appears to us to be government policy as enunciated by the Minister of Finance. Quite frankly we are shocked.

We feel there is no reason that Canadians should be forced to pay income tax on income which they have not received in cash. We feel this Liberal concept of imputed rental value ignores significant costs associated with home ownership, such as maintenance, mortgage payments and realty taxes. This concept could force Canadians to lose their homes. We have seen far too many homes lost under Liberal government policies, and we on this side of the House do not want to see Canadians losing their homes. The Liberals who are forcing this socialist concept upon Canadians will find that the Progressive Conservative Party, in all probability, will fight hard to ensure that the imputed rent concept gets no further than any of the other proposals upon which the Minister of Finance has backtracked.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Undoubtedly the hon. member was not in the House when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) dealt with the particular issue by indicating that this concept resides only in the mind of the Dominion Life Assurance Company and in the minds of hon. members of the opposition.

Mr. Siddon: It was in his budget.

Mr. Lewis: I am quite pleased to address myself to the problems of the hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais). As deputy opposition House leader I have to be here every day. Undoubtedly I was present when the Minister of Finance, who was not present today, made his remarks. As to anyone understanding the remarks of the minister, I know there is great confusion on both sides of the House when it comes to that.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Whether the hon. member was in the House when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) gave in answer the opposite interpretation as to what has been said, I really do not know. However, my point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. minister is referring to an interpretation; I hope that is not his point of order.

Mr. Cosgrove: The hon. member indicated that it was introduced by the present Minister of Finance. In fact it was introduced by the former minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Siddon: That is not true.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was not introduced by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie); it was a departmental paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I will entertain a point of order from the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), but if he wants to indicate who introduced what, when and where, I do not think it is a point of order. Certainly it is a point of debate, but I will recognize the hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: I simply ask a question: Why was the minister crying that he lost $45 million if he did not intend to bring it forward?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I understand the confusion on the government side. We are not at all surprised that there is confusion on government benches as to what imputed rent means. We know the government wants to get at it, and we intend to fight it.

It is interesting to hear the minister of housing referring to matters such as this, because in one of his speeches to the Department of External Affairs he spoke on African trade. It is difficult to go from imputed rent to African trade, but the minister responsible for housing seems to have been able to do that. In the absence of the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley), we have no idea what that has done to African trade. We know what the minister for international trade has done for Japanese and Iraqi trade. Quite frankly, we on this side are surprised at the confusion in the housing industry. We see housing starts going down the drain and we see critical vacancy rates, but we find the minister of housing addressing an external affairs seminar on African trade. One cannot be surprised too much by that because we understand the minister responsible for housing addressed a sales seminar at a major real estate firm recently. There was some concern on this side as to why that might happen.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to tell the House that we have been able to determine the reason why the minister responsible for housing has addressed a sales seminar.

One knows that in the real estate industry it is important to get sales listings. Listings are what you get on the boards, the signs and the whole thing. We have come to realize that this minister of housing has done more to create listings in the real estate markets of Canada than any other housing minister, because the powers of sale he and the Liberal Party have created together with the foreclosures have led to more listings than ever as a result of the Liberal high interest rate policy.

I just wanted to draw that to the attention of the House. Just as there is confusion on that side with imputed rent, there is confusion why the minister would be flitting around the country making speeches like that.

In closing, I want to say that we intend to support the bill. We are shocked at the inadequacy of it. We are shocked that this is all this government could come up with after promising to rescue Canadians from the spectre of foreclosure. The government has created the spectre of a bill which is so totally inadequate to deal with the real concerns of Canadians.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. member who preceded me.

Mr. Lewis: I would think so.

Mr. Deans: There were two matters that he raised and that I think are worthy of expansion, the latter being his indication that, although the bill be deficient in many ways, the Conservative Party is prepared to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the bill is indeed deficient in all of the ways the hon. member indicated. I had come to that conclusion myself some time ago. In listening to him enumerate the deficiencies, I was reinforced in my belief that though I would have liked to recommend to my caucus that we ought to support it, I could find no justification or foundation to make that kind of recommendation. I think when something is deficient, when something works a hardship and provides little if any benefit, then it is not supportable. In this instance, I believe that refers to this particular piece of legislation. I urge the Conservatives if ever they should pluck up their courage between now and, let us say, forty minutes from now and change their minds, they could join with us and we will defeat this government today, and we will build houses in this land when we become the government.

I want to make reference to another point that I think is worthy of at least passing reference. I hear the family squabble between the Liberals and the Conservatives—

Mr. Huntington: The "socialist-alliance".

Mr. Deans: —over imputed rent.

Mr. Lewis: You would tax it.

An hon. Member: Kissing cousins.

Mr. Deans: I cannot help but smile—

Mr. Huntington: You are gorgeous.

Mr. Deans: I realize we are not supposed to laugh at people when they are in trouble and desperately trying to get out of it, but when I listen to Conservative members rising in righteous indignation to demand of the government that it answer for this folly, the proposal to introduce in some form or other, at some date in the future, a concept called imputed rent, and then I go back to the budget papers of 1979, I think to myself how that very same concept in almost identical words—

Mr. Siddon: Not in the budget papers. Tell the truth.

Mr. Deans: —were contained in the ministry's background papers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member wants to be accurate, but that statement was not in the PC budget papers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Any correction can be made during debate or at a later stage, but certainly not in a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, when I go back to reading those papers that travelled with the budget, those papers that were supposed to provide the background information—

Mr. Huntington: That is a little more accurate.

Mr. Deans: —and the thinking that went into the budget—if you do not want to call them budget papers, you can call them what you like, Mr. Speaker; the choice is yours—I find right there in exactly the same wording the suggestion that the Conservatives too were considering imputed rent.

An hon. Member: No, we weren't.

Mr. Deans: All I can say on behalf of the tens, hundreds, thousands of Canadians who are desperate over the prospect is that if ever they were to elect a Conservative government—

Mr. Huntington: Those words come from the socialist bureaucrats in the government.

Mr. Deans: —it would be equally as bad as the Liberal government. There is every reason to believe that if the Conservatives were to win, they would do exactly the same thing.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: What is the matter?

Mr. Taylor: The bureaucrats put that imputed rent out during our term of office. The Liberals accepted it and put it in their budget papers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I hope hon. members will refrain from raising points of order when they are not points of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, in order to be charitable and fair, as I always am—

Mr. Huntington: You are misleading the House, my friend.

Mr. Deans: In order to be charitable and fair, as I always am, I want to say to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) that if he wants today to reject that proposition on behalf of the Conservatives, then I accept that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: If he wants to say that they will never again have it in any of their background papers, I will accept that. I will not argue with him.

Mr. Huntington: It is a socialist doctrine.

Mr. Deans: Who am I to argue with the hon. member for Bow River?

In any event, all I can say is thank God it never became law. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, because I know you are concerned, that when the NDP forms the government—remembering, of course, that we are now at 26 per cent of the popular vote and rising—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: —there will be no imputed rent.

Mr. Oberle: There will be nothing.

Mr. Deans: There will be no imputed rent. Not only will it not appear in the budget, it will not appear in any budget papers. It will not appear in any background paper.

There will be no imputed rent when we form the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: Not like the Liberals and the Tories.

Mr. Deans: It is noisy in here, isn't it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: That is fire hall talk.

Mr. Deans: At any rate, let me deal with this bill in a little more detail. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the minister and I suppose to anyone else who cares to listen, that the legislation before us is inadequate. Normally if you had inadequate legislation placed before you, you would consider whether or not on balance it was supportable because of the little things that it did. But in this instance the inadequacy of the legislation in dealing with the prices that confront by far the vast majority of those who are attempting to buy homes or find rental accommodation is so great as to make it virtually impossible for anyone to support it who cares about making sure that people can get a home of their own at a price they can afford.

I have looked at this legislation in some detail. I am convinced it opens the way to even far greater problems than we already have. As a result of this legislation and other legislation which has at least been alluded to in recent days, we will undoubtedly see more and more Canadians assuming mortgage payments that will stretch their ability to pay to the limit. This stretching of their ability will result without question in their deferring principal and interest payments to another time when they hope they will earn more. When they make that deferral it will result in those people owing more at the end of any given year than they did at the beginning.

As a result of this legislation and this government's actions, and as a result of the interest rate policy Mr. Bouey is pursuing, we will see a repeat of the things which happened in the AHOP program. People were encouraged to buy homes they could not afford and assume responsibilities they could not handle. They put off the real cost of the home to a day five years down the road, and when that day arrived they found in so many cases that they were not earning enough to keep the home and they lost all of their investment.

If I am not mistaken, it was in Mississauga that something in excess of 50 per cent—I will get the exact figure if you want—of all the people who moved into an AHOP home ultimately lost it. They were encouraged to go in there by the government, and when they did so it was in the hope and expectation that their wages would continue to rise and they could cover the mortgage payments. That did not happen in the society we are living in, and they lost their homes.

That is the measure of this program, as well. With these variable rate mortgages and the short-term assistance program which, I might add, as the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) points out, terminate within a year, people are simply putting off to another day the inevitable clash with foreclosure.

The measures taken by the government are inadequate. If you look at them from an analytical point of view they are, if anything, harmful. For that reason alone I would not encourage people to become involved in these programs. The hon. member for Simcoe North makes the comment sotto voce that somehow or other I am not saying these things to the people in my riding. I want to make it quite clear that when I was in the Ontario legislature during the time the AHOP program was available, I advised people not to take it because I knew in five years' time they would not be able to afford the home.

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

Mr. Deans: I say the same thing to them today. These are not programs which will enable families to create the kind of stability where at some point in their life they can own outright the home they are moving into. For that reason, and a number of others, I just cannot find this legislation supportable. It is an entrapment, if you will. Many people will be further and further in debt as time goes by. Rather than paying the debt off, they will be accumulating even more debt.

Mr. Lewis: They have to have a roof over their heads.

Mr. Deans: The hon. member quite rightly says that they have to have a roof over their heads, but I put to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that it would be better if, instead of supporting a measure which will ultimately result in those people losing their homes anyway, we could combine our efforts in the opposition and force on this government the requirement that it get into the house building business, as it once was; that it get into the mortgage lending business, as it once was; that it take action to bring down interest rates, as it must do; and that it ensure that affordable homes are available for people who need them. That is a supportable measure, and it is not contained in this legislation. That is the problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: If we in this House continue to support these ridiculous half measures brought forward by the government with all kinds of fanfare and rhetoric, the end result of which will undoubtedly be greater hardship and heartache in the long run, then we do the people of Canada a disservice. That is why we cannot support this legislation. It might appear to be useful for a few people, but for the vast majority it is entrapment.

Let us get together, Mr. Speaker, and insist that mortgage interest rates be reduced. Instead of supporting the Bank of Canada in its interest rate policy, why does the Conservative finance critic not get up and demand that they take a different tack in setting interest rates and respond adequately and properly to the needs of the Canadian people? Why is there no support for an excess profits tax on banks when they made hundreds of millions of dollars without having to do a single thing in the marketplace or anywhere else to earn them? Why is there no attempt being made to recover some of that money in order to reduce interest rates? Because the government will not do it and the Tories will not help us, that is why.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: They are quite content to sit there and allow their fat-cat friends to get fatter on high interest rates and live high off the hog at the expense of the vast majority of Canadians! That is why!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to maintain your composure when speaking about one of the most essential parts of any human being's life. I ask you, what can be more important than food on the one hand, and shelter on the other? These are the basic things that people must have. And we create a system which takes into account the needs of the people who lend the money, but not the needs of the people who cannot find accommodation.

Mr. Lewis: What about property rights?

Mr. Deans: As to the remark of the hon. member for Simcoe North, I say to him that on property rights we are firm. People in Canada are entitled to own their own homes.

Mr. Lewis: That is why you voted against it.

Mr. Deans: Not simply by virtue of some paragraph in the Constitution, they are entitled to own their homes by virtue of the economic system we live in which will enable them to earn enough money to purchase and own the home they want to live in. That is the difference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: The question is an economic one; it is not putting in some fancy words concerning the right to own a home. I say unequivocally that people have the right to own their home. But on the other side, to give someone the right to own their home and then create an economic system which makes it virtually impossible for the average working man and woman in this country to do just that, I ask you, in heaven's name, what kind of right is that?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: As I said earlier, this legislative proposal now before us is wrong-headed and speaks to the wrong things. It does not speak about providing more accommodation in order to raise our housing stock to the level required to meet the obvious need in this country. We need 220,000 housing units this year and we will build 157,000.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deans: Even with the minister's new plan we will still build just 157,000, and every single year we fall behind by 70,000 housing units. We are denying Canadians not only accommodation, but accommodation at a price they can afford. Surely that must be the key.

• (1650)

In closing, let me say that certainly the one major problem confronting us is that the minsiter, by his statements, makes it quite clear he is supporting variable rate mortgages; in other words, perpetual indebtedness. The banks cause perpetual indebtedness through variable rate mortgages. They make sure that one never pays off the debt. A person can adjust the mortgage rate all the time and forever accumulate more debt.

I will tell Your Honour something which is more important. I know Your Honour knows this because I can just see by your eyes that you are sitting there ready to tell me.

Mr. Lewis: You cannot see that far!

Mr. Deans: Your Honour knows that the variable rate mortgage is illegal under the Interest Act of Canada. The minister is sitting there, laughing. However, he does not mind illegalities.

Mr. Blais: He is not laughing. But he is very happy that you will let our bill go through.

Mr. Deans: The banks have latched on to this very narrow concept. This is another way they will gouge the workers of this country and get more out of their meagre pay packets. The government is doing this to ensure high profits. What did their profit amount to this year? Was it $1.5 billion or $1.7 billion? I believe it was $1.7 billion.

Mr. Lewis: Get your facts straight.

Mr. Deans: The government is now bringing in these fancy new instruments supported by the minister to further erode the purchasing power of Canadians who want to buy homes. Not only is the government further eroding their purchasing power, but it is also able to do it in a way which is quite clearly outside the law of Canada as it presently exists. The minister nods his head, acquiesces, bows down and thanks the people for their efforts and tells them how wonderful they are. No, minister, we will not support the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in the debate on third reading of Bill C-89. Just like the United States and the European countries, Canada is going through difficult economic times. Our government is committed to make the fight against inflation and the recovery of Canadian economy the top priority until this aim is achieved. This determination of the government to counter inflationary pressures does not mean, however, that we do not recognize the importance of helping those who need it most.

Regarding housing, the budget of November 12 stated that the government would offer interest-free loans to assist in the construction of 15,000 rental units in those areas where the vacancy rate is very low. Last March 23, the hon. minister responsible for housing and public works announced that the government would allocate an additional amount of $100 million to increase from 15,000 to 30,000 the number of new units eligible for interest-free loans of up to $7,500 per unit. This will give more Canadians access to proper housing at affordable prices.

Moreover, the government has earmarked $30 million in interest-free loans for the improvement of existing houses. These funds will be allocated to the areas with the highest unemployment rates. Quebec alone will receive 43 per cent of the total budget, or $9.6 million. The new assistance program for housing renovations will supplement the $169 million already allocated for this purpose under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, better known as RRAP, and differs from the latter in that the assistance will be directed to high unemployment areas. It will promote job creation because loan recipients will have to invest $7 for every $3 of assistance granted. The renovation program will provide an incentive to the Canadian construction industry.

The government is also concerned with home owners who have to renew their mortgages and may lose their home because of higher interest rates. In that respect, the government has developed a plan under which if an individual has more than 5 per cent equity in his home and after having renewed his mortgage, considers that his mortgage payments plus property taxes exceed 30 per cent of family income before taxes, the approved lender could defer interest payments for a year, up to a maximum of $3,000. Where an individual has less than 5 per cent equity in his home, but his payments still exceed 30 per cent, that individual will also be entitled to a grant of up to the $3,000 maximum.

That plan applies to mortgage loans with maturity dates falling between September 1st, 1981 and November 11, 1982. These recent commitments as well as the existing programs will bring to 100,000 the estimated number of jobs that will be created directly or indirectly by the Canadian government's initiatives in the housing area.

Such initiatives are a tangible expression of this government's commitment to do all it can to remedy the precarious situation that prevails in rental housing, to help Canadians facing serious difficulties when renewing their mortgages, and to restore healthy economic growth.

Mr. Speaker, I listened earlier to opposition members who had reservations about this legislation, and I was tempted to laugh at all the proposals, suggestions and solutions which they were putting forward. The previous speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), referred to matters that can really affect all Canadians. His comments verged on demagogy, Mr. Speaker, for what could be more natural, Mr. Speaker, for Canadians than owning their own homes?

An hon. Member: That is a fact!

Mr. Tousignant: That is a fact, I admit it. What could be more natural than a young couple owning their own home!

They also raise the matter of the right to home ownership. Is there a more basic right than the right to home ownership? Tell me, are they not touching these people who speak from both sides of their mouths, Mr. Speaker? Why don't they say that it is all right to want to become a home owner, while it is not to want to buy a $75,000 home with only a $500 down payment? They would have to explain that. I feel it would be much more normal and make a lot more sense to tell people to buy instead less expensive homes, worth maybe between $45,000 and $50,000, and to make down payments somewhere between $15,000 and $20,000. But these people run around asking whether there is a more basic right than the right to home ownership and leaving all their listeners unsatisfied. There are others who refer to high interest rates, who blame the government for spending too much and who, in the same breath, complain that the government is not spending enough on housing, saying that they support the bill, but that they would like to see the government spend more. Clearly, it is possible to deal with all the problems and cases piecemeal, one by one. Then, they come back after a while and complain that the deficit is too high and that the government should do something about it. Well, what do they really want?

Of course, just about any problem could be solved with a great deal of money, say $200, $400 or $500 million, whether in housing, agriculture, forestry or in the automobile industry. We are aware on this side of the House that problems exist and we can identify them. We have no masochistic reason to try to keep people in poverty and have them raise a hue and cry. We can identify all the problems which exist in Canada, but in order to solve them all overnight it takes money, and the people opposite are the first to tell us that the deficit is too high, that we spend too much. Then, Mr. Speaker, those people ought to become a bit more serious. Of course, I know they are not there to campaign for the government now in power, that is most obvious; but still, there comes a time when they should be a bit more honest in what they say, in what they do. So, I am being asked to speak on the price of gas. Of course, I am proud, and I thank the hon. member for throwing me a line. There again, that is what we hear from one end of the country to the other: "You, Liberals, you get elected by saying that the price of gas will not go up; now, look at how high it has gone. You beat us on the 18 cents".

An hon. Member: Sky high!

Mr. Tousignant: Sky high! I say this to the hon. member. He knows full well that with a Progressive Conservatives government the price of gas would naturally have also gone up to 85 per cent of the world price. We, instead, said 75 per cent of the world price. Those are the facts. In addition, they were talking about an additional 18-cent tax. That is the truth of the matter.

So, naturally, just as the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals had foreseen, the price of gas increased, just like the price of other consumer goods, such as bread, butter, etc. But they had planned an additional 18 cents. So, that is that. I am happy, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member gave me the opportunity to make that clear.

It is that kind of falsehood which is spread here and there and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that in the future those people will try to report exactly what happens without necessarily praising the government in power and at least be as honest as possible.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, before I conclude, I know that on the whole they are all in favour. They had to speak against, of course, but on the whole I know that everybody is in favour. Therefore, I hope that the bill will be passed and I am quite pleased because it is an historic moment, as I mentioned a while ago, it will benefit many Canadians, since 60,000 jobs will be created, and with the $30 million provided under the other program, 30,000 further jobs will be created—

Mr. Cosgrove: 60,000!

Mr. Tousignant: Therefore, this will benefit a great number of Canadians who will have access to cheaper rental accommodation. Evidently, they cannot obtain them free of charge. Of course, this cannot be done. We cannot pay for everything and the minister cannot build those housing projects himself. This legislation will enable many Canadians to get cheaper and better rental units. It will also put some Canadians to work in the construction industry. It will give a new impetus to construction. In the present situation, the minister responsible for housing has almost worked a miracle, it is an amazing feat. I am quite pleased this has happened today and I hope that in a few minutes the bill will be given third reading.

• (1700)

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): This is the second opportunity I have had, Mr. Speaker, to rise to speak to this bill, C-89, to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. I think back over the last year and the many times that members on this side have risen and put questions to the minister of housing. When is he going to help the home owner? When is he going to help the renter? The only answer we ever got from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) was to wait until the budget comes.

The budget came on November 12 and we questioned him again and he said: "I am going to bring forth legislation." That legislation came forward on January 28. On March 2 when the bells commenced ringing and all of us on this side implored the government to continue the committee meetings, the government House leader would not allow it and the Minister of Public works would not allow his committee to meet either. We asked for that committee to meet in spite of the division bells ringing. Mr. Speaker, there are many people who have spoken out against the lack of action by the government.

The Toronto Home Builders' Association said the federal budget discontinued various incentives to private investment in Canada. We believe the Department of Finance was inadequately informed as to the negative impact that many changes would have on the housing market.

The Canadian Institute of Public Real Estate Companies said that high interest rates have made construction of new apartment buildings an unenviable proposition; in Ontario, to break even on a new building financed at today's figures a landlord would have to charge in the order of $800 a month for a typical one-bedroom apartment.

This bill does not address those problems. The CMHC estimates that between 210,000 and 220,000 housing starts are needed each year, yet the estimates of the number of starts is down around 160,000 to 170,000. I might indicate what the housing starts have been over recent years. In 1976 we had 273,000 housing starts; in 1977 we had 246,000 housing starts; in 1978 we had 228,000; in 1979 we had 197,000; in 1980, 158,000; and in 1981 we had 178,000 housing starts.

The minister can stand in this House and tell us how many jobs he is going to create. It is quite possible he will create many jobs if he brings the housing industry to a complete stop and then turns around and brings in legislation saying it will help the housing industry and will increase employment. Unfortunately, the housing industry does not agree; the industry suggests that 50,000 housing units are needed to bring up employment in the construction industry and that there will be 100,000 jobs lost, not gained, by this bill. That is reflected in about $2.8 billion lost to the construction industry, which translates into $400 million lost revenue to the government. Yet this minister insists on suggesting that he is going to increase employment.

In 1981 the average home sold for $61,000, which is 12 per cent higher than the previous year. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) then has the gall to stand in this House and say that people are doing well because the average income of a person buying a home is $36,658, an increase of 22 per cent over the previous year. His answer is that if incomes are up by that amount, more people must be able to buy homes. However, CMHC suggests that fewer people were able to buy a home in 1981 than in 1980. The age of the average purchaser went from 30 to 32. The proportion of buyers who were previous home owners rose from 39 per cent to 56 per cent. Surely the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Public Works have more common sense than to suggest that home buyers are better able to buy homes at these new prices.

At second reading, the NDP suggested that the increased price of homes was due to the increase in the price of land. Statistics for the last year indicate that the average price of land remained constant. Therefore, that is not the reason for the increase in price. It was due to the high interest rates and nothing more.

I have asked the Minister of Public Works questions in this House. There are more questions I would have liked to ask. Why is the government spending $60 million on advertising which could be used to help home owners and renters in this country? Can the Minister of Public Works tell us why foreign aid will be increased by 19.9 per cent, or by $157 million, in the coming year when this money could have been used for home owners and renters?

Can the minister tell us why more is not done about Crown corporations which continue to lose money? Eldorado Nuclear is losing $130 million, yet it was hiring people on the day it closed its mine last fall. In spite of this the minister has the gall to tell us he is doing all he can to help home owners and renters in this country.

From time to time members opposite have asked what we would do. We have many, many suggestions. I will mention just a few. We would encourage, not discourage, investment capital in this country. In the last two years $17 billion has left this country because of the energy policies of this government.

There is an excess of natural gas in western Canada. It has been estimated that up to $2 billion in sales could accrue by the export of this natural gas. What does the government do? It discourages exports. It discourages the development of the oil industry in western Canada. It is discouraging one of the few viable industries left in Canada. The government is attempting to do what it has done to the automobile industry, and we all know the terrible state of that industry.

This bill will do little. It is like giving an aspirin to someone who has an ulcer. It may help the pain just a little, but it will certainly not cure the problem. It does not deal with the real problem of high interest rates. However little the bill provides, we unfortunately must support it. However, we will continue to press the government for better legislation to bring needed help to both the home owner and the renter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cosgrove), which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I note by the clock that we have a little time until six o'clock. I understand there will shortly be a visit from the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, but until that occurs I think the time could be used appropriately by hon. members to raise certain matters.

Grievance—Hon. Walter Baker

While government members are in the House, and particularly while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is here, I want to raise a matter by way of a grievance to air the issue. I should like to deal with the very vexing and disturbing questions which remain unresolved about the state of the nation's economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The Prime Minister can show his usual lack of concern for the plight of Canadians, if he wishes, by walking out of the House.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): In terms of his attention to public business, he has walked away from the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the House has time before we receive the visitor, I suggest that we call the borrowing authority bill and get on with the business of the House. If the hon. member wants to discuss the economy, he can use their allotted day on Friday to do so.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): One problem is that the government does not realize that the economy of the country, the question of employment, the investment climate and the problems with respect to housing, are the business of the House. What else could be the business of the House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why has the government not dealt with those questions? Where is the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) right now, when there is an opportunity for him at long last, months after the budget was brought forward, to present something positive with respect to the economy of the country? He has not done it; that is the problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Breau: Madam Speaker, I respectfully submit that the orders of the day have not been called by the Clerk as is customary. There is not really a substantive question before the House at this time and it does not seem appropriate for any member to make a speech when the orders of the day have not been properly called in the House.

Madam Speaker: As we are awaiting the messenger from the other place, it is a period when the grievances of certain members may be heard.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I believe the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod is at the door.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Since the visitor from the Senate has not yet arrived, I should like to indicate that I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) indicate that there was no business before the House of Commons. If the economy of the country does not occupy the mind of the hon. member, then I do not think I know the hon. member for Gloucester, coming from the province he does. There can be no doubt about it—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) has asked me to call the following order:

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the order: Government bills (Commons):

Resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of State (Finance) for the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-93, an act to amend the statute law relating to certain taxes and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Where is the minister?

Madam Speaker: Is the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) seeking the floor to speak on this matter?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton has the floor.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is very interesting that the government should attempt to cut off debate on the economy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —by bringing in at the last minute a bill dealing with financial administration, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), who is responsible for the bill, in the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), who is responsible for the bill, and in the absence of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières), who is also responsible for the bill. We are talking about the financial and economic administration of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I would like if it were possible in the minutes remaining, some economic minister somewhere to rise—

Some hon. Members: Where are they?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is here.

Mr. Clark: The minister who resigned!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I should like that minister to tell us about the appalling record of the government with respect to development of industrial areas where many Canadians now find themselves unemployed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gimaïel: Madam Speaker, I insist on raising a point of order because, if hon. members are allowed to debate interesting points during this period, I would suggest that I have every right to seek the floor, just as the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has.

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. member please resume his seat. Of course, he has every right to seek the floor, just as any other hon. member has, but the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton already has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to turn my attention, if I might, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I remember when our government was in power and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was the financial critic of the opposition. What did he say? He said that if we would vote Liberal in Canada, interest rates would stay down. In fact, he said "I will lay my seat on it".

• (1750)

An hon. Member: Some seat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: He is sitting on it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is still sitting on his seat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Maybe that is one of the problems. Then there was the Minister of Finance. Do you recall the Minister of Finance, Madam Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I am not going to be shouted down by that crowd over there, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Then there was the Minister of Finance. When he campaigned in Cape Breton—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —he said to us, "Vote Liberal"—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —"and keep your gasoline prices down". Not only did the gasoline prices go up—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) is rising on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Masters: Madam Speaker, my point of order is—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have a point of order from the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon.

Mr. Masters: Madam Speaker, my point of order is—I suppose it is more a clarification that I seek—

Some hon. Members: Order, then.

Mr. Masters: I wonder what the rules allow for in a situation like this.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Masters: Many of us would like to be involved in the debate, if I only knew at which point I could have the floor. Certainly members on all sides welcome the opportunity to speak in this House.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If I may give the hon. member clarification in this period when we are awaiting a message from the other place, it is a time when grievances may be expressed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: That process had begun when the parliamentary secretary asked me to put a certain motion to the House, which I have. Debate has begun on that motion I think, although I am not sure whether that is the motion being debated. But the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton did get up and he has the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Olivier: I rise—

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There can be no point of order. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton has not yet spoken. He has the floor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the justice in your hands as you attempt to do something with that unruly crowd over there. I have been a member of this House for ten years, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —and one of the things I have seen happen here, whenever they are a bit embarrassed is for government members to bark and try to shout people down. I said earlier I will not be shouted down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I was dealing with the Minister of Finance when I was last interrupted, Madam Speaker, and I want to return to him.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe that the hon. member can—

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a queston of privilege, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I wish that the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton would be allowed to explain the grievance that he wishes to raise in the House. I understand that hon. members are perhaps not willing to hear this grievance, but as Speaker of this House, I must hear it. This is a time when grievances can be brought before the House. I have recognized the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and I wish that hon. members would respect that. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Epp: Sit down!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am a great respecter of the rules of the House of Commons and I hope the chairman of the Quebec Liberal caucus will respect them in exactly the same way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): My hope may be futile, however.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, I rise—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do have to interrupt the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton now because the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) seems to have a grievance. However, we now have a message from the Senate.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Govenor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-11, an act relating to the inspection of electric and gas meters and supplies—Chapter No. 87;

Bill C-45, an act to amend the Pest Control Products Act—Chapter No. 88;

Bill C-78, an act to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code—Chapter No. 89;

Bill C-99, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1982—Chapter No. 90;

Bill C-100, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983—Chapter No. 91.

Madam Speaker: It being past six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.15 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CRIMINAL CODE

CALL FOR REVIEW OF FIREARMS PROVISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the Solicitor General in this House rightly condemned Bill C-451, a private member's bill on gun control which has been introduced by his party colleague, the former solicitor general, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House direct the Solicitor General to adopt the motion on the Order Paper in the name of the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland to initiate a detailed review of firearm control provisions in the Criminal Code by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that this committee could conduct hearings across Canada, at which time the public, particularly in rural areas, could give their views and suggestions for necessary changes to the present gun laws which are cumbersome, expensive to administer, and ineffective except to harrass law-abiding people, since currently the criminal code does not restrict the use of firearms by the criminal element.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

CALL FOR REDUCTION IN FEDERAL TAXATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Liberal government wants its pound of flesh irrespective of whose blood is shed in the taking. Workers, farmers, businessmen, elderly pensioners, and single women under 65 years of age are being crushed with the extra taxes being imposed because of the national energy policy. A recent 39.2 per cent increase in natural gas prices in my constituency, and I believe elsewhere in Canada, was approved because 16.6 cents per gigajoule was necessary for gas supply as a result of the national energy policy, and 22.6 cents because of federal taxation. The income tax alone on a comparable revenue of the company increased from $8 million in 1980 to $64 million, including Canadian ownership taxes, in 1981. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House recommends that the hon. Minister of Finance and Prime Minister Trudeau cease at once—

Mr. Cousineau: Order. Rephrase.

Mr. Taylor: All right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: I will rephrase as follows:

That this House recommends that the hon. Minister of Finance and the Right Hon. Prime Minister—

Do you mind if I leave out his degrees that he won when I was fighting overseas for democracy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: I will finish as follows:

—cease at once from filling their own treasure chests and start giving the people of Canada some consideration especially those living in poverty by cutting their take by 50 per cent. Do the cries of hungry kids not move this government at all?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CALL FOR ACTION AGAINST ALLEGED WAR CRIMINALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas almost two years ago the Solicitor General returned from a meeting in Washington, D.C. with Simon Wiesenthal, promising that Canada would take long overdue action to bring to justice alleged Nazi war criminals in Canada, and in view of the fact that the Solicitor General has just recently announced that there will be in fact no action taken in Canada against those persons accused of these offences, recognized in the Charter of Rights as crimes against humanity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That this House urge the government to take speedy action to try in Canada, under accepted principles of criminal justice, those persons against whom evidence exists of the commission of war crimes, crimes against humanity, to make clear on behalf of all Canadians that the passage of time does not in any way erase the enormity of their crimes committed during the holocaust.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

CALL FOR REDUCTION OF TAX ON NATURAL GAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The ability of many Canadians to heat their homes has been threatened by the federal government's taxes on heating fuel. Through its octopus-like grab for power and money it has forced up the price of heating fuel, and subsequently the very cost of living beyond a level that can possibly be borne by northern communities. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stop playing power broker with people's lives, and immediately reduce the federal tax on natural gas.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CONCERN FOR SAFETY OF SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER DURING PROVINCIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Allan Blakeney, has recently been subjected to hostile and threatening behaviour by several members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees who were ordered back to work by the premier on March 25, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith):

That this House request the Solicitor General to ask the RCMP to ensure the personal safety of the premier while he is on the campaign trail.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Dresser Industries Canada, Ltd. of Cambridge, which manufactures mobile oil drilling rigs, has this week laid off 55 workers as a result of slumping sales. The jobs of central Canadians and of the employees of Dresser Industries in Cambridge depend upon the Canadian oil and gas industry. Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the government be condemned for its National Energy Program, the unfairness of which has not only fostered bitterness and resentment in the minds and hearts of western Canadians, but has caused and will continue to cause unemployment in the manufacturing sector in central Canada which depends heavily upon the prosperity of the oil and gas industry for its success.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

PROVISION OF CONVERSION KITS TO DISABLED AND HANDICAPPED PERSONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the metric system is destined to be fully implemented in Canada during 1983, and the Metric Commission has yet to provide aids to assist disabled or handicapped Canadians to adapt to this conversion program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

That this House requests the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to request the Metric Commission to make available to disabled and handicapped persons metric conversion kits in Braille, taped cassettes, large print, and other necessary aids that will enable those persons to cope with this system on an equal basis with able-bodied Canadians.

IMMIGRATION

RECRUITMENT OF SKILLED WORKERS FROM ABROAD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has announced he is bringing 25,000 skilled workers to Canada this year. He says that figure was arrived at in consultation with the provinces and industry. Since these figures were compiled last summer and were based on the megaprojects starting this spring and based on low unemployment rates this year, not on the 1,200,000 people presently unemployed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration reconsider these large numbers of skilled workers he wishes to bring to Canada, taking into consideration present economic conditions and the large number of skilled workers now unemployed in Canada because of the government's destructive economic policies.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FINANCIAL RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND INDIAN BANDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the 1982-83 spending estimates show a reduction in funding to Indian bands and associations. As of today funding through the community development program of Indian Affairs in New Brunswick has been cut, with the loss of 15 jobs in that province. Barely two weeks notice was given to Indian leaders. This it just one more example of sloppy fiscal management by the Department of Indian Affairs. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House accept the proposal of the National Indian Brotherhood that the Minister of Indian Affairs set up a task force to investigate fully the financial relationship between the Government of Canada and Indian bands.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

THE HONOURABLE MEMBER FOR BOW RIVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, it being April 1, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the House do today grant its award for best performance in a leading role to the hon. member for Bow River.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PENSIONS

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF BENEFITS FOR HOME MAKERS AND SINGLE WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House calls on the government to make an immediate commitment to introduce before this fall a bill to provide women who work in the home with pensions equivalent to those available under the Canada Pension Plan, such pensions to be available not just to those who could afford to pay a high premium but to all women who work in the home, and this House also calls for the said bill to provide pensions forthwith for women between the ages of 55 and 65 who are alone and who are not in the labour market, it being the view of this House that the needs of such women should be met without further delay.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCOME TAX

DEADLINE FOR FILING RETURNS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Prime Minister, relates to the immense economic suffering in the country and the economic impact on Canadians of his government's policies.

The Prime Minister will know that his Minister of Finance has indicated that he is planning further changes to his budget. The Prime Minister will also know that income tax forms are now being circulated, which forms assume taxes which might never be legal. The filing deadline for those income tax forms is April 30.

In order that Canadians will not be required to pay their taxes until they know what those taxes are, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would consider delaying the deadline for filing income tax returns until after the government knows what it is doing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: That is never!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, under that reasoning, I would ask them to file their returns now, because the government always knows what it is doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE TAX CHANGES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, does the Prime Minister intend that statement to indicate a declaration by the government that there will be no further changes to the budget? Will there be further changes to the budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that every tax bill can be amended. Indeed, tax bills frequently are amended when they go to committee. That may happen in the case of these tax bills.

The best advice I can give taxpayers at this time is to file their tax returns, as is the custom, by the usual deadline, based on the fact that the Ways and Means motions tabled at the time of the budget bring taxes into effect on the dates specified in those motions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, we have a situation where the government's own actions, including its announced intention to publish draft bills before it introduces real bills in this House, have created more uncertainty than ever before in Canadian history about what taxes Canadians will be required to pay. I consequently hope that the Prime Minister will reconsider the imposition on Canadian taxpayers and will delay the deadline for filing income tax forms which reflect taxes which will probably never be legal.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS IN MINING, FORESTRY, AND AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRIES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Since the Prime Minister is not prepared to offer immediate help to taxpayers, let me ask him a question about unemployed Canadians. The Prime Minister will know that in the mining industry alone it is anticipated that there will be more than 16,000 lay-offs this year, that in the forestry industry alone it has been estimated that there will be some 50,000 lay-offs this year, and that in the automotive-related industry alone it has been estimated that there will be some 60,000 lay-offs this year. Will the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons whether he has any new programs to announce to stop these massive lay-offs in these three industries?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have none to announce today, but I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that in the past weeks and months ministers have been announcing, on a weekly and sometimes daily basis—

An hon. Member: Very weakly.

Mr. Trudeau: —job-creating programs.

In the forestry industry alone, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has negotiated over 400 cases, I believe—

Mr. Huntington: None of them last. They are temporary jobs.

Mr. Trudeau: —of job-creation schemes with provincial governments.

The hon. members opposite talk about pie in the sky. That is not the view of the workers who have signed these agreements.

Mr. Huntington: How long will those jobs last?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, there are supplementary questions. I wish the hon. member would show more respect for his leader when I am attempting to answer his questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister considers it to be an answer to the economic problems of the country when he announces that there will be 400 temporary jobs created in an industry where his policies are causing 50,000 permanent jobs to be lost.

• (1420)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DEFICIT IN FUND

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me put a supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He knows that Statistics Canada yesterday published figures indicating that 1,054,000 Canadians qualified for unemployment insurance benefits in January, and that 396,000 Canadians made new claims in January—the highest figures in the history of the country, in both cases. The minister will know that the budget forecast of unemployment insurance deficits is $1.059 billion. Will the minister tell the House what the increase is in the projected deficit of the unemployment insurance fund; and will he tell the House the size of the increase he is contemplating in the employee contributions to unemployment insurance?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as was explained in this House before, we calculate the rate of premiums in approximately the third quarter of each year. We then have a much better estimate of what the actual draws upon the fund will be. I have pointed out in this House before that we substantially reduced the premiums for both the employees and the employers last year, down by 15 cents per $100. That was a major reduction in the actual cost, because we had a surplus in the fund. We do not expect a very favourable increase in the fund beyond that increase for the forthcoming year. I would not like to go away out on a limb—

Mr. Clark: You are out on a limb.

Mr. Axworthy: —as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is constantly out on. I would first like to have a proper estimate at the proper time when we ascertain the proper figures. I say there is no cause for the alarm which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition always envisages.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PIPELINES

DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF ALASKA GAS PIPELINE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Would the minister confirm the recent announcement by his northern pipeline commissioner, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, that the Alaska pipeline project is again being delayed and will not now be completed until 1988 at the earliest?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the statement of the northern pipeline commissioner. As the hon. member knows, the commissioner reports to Senator Olson. I will inquire and find out what the commissioner has said, and I will be very happy to report to the House when I have a full answer.

CONSTRUCTION GUARANTEES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I might point out that information to that effect has been circulated to interested members of Parliament by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Madam Speaker, the minister will recall that under the pipeline act and in the treaty with the United States a starting date of January, 1981, was contemplated for this project. That would mean many thousands of jobs in the manufacturing, steel and construction sectors of the Canadian economy. They are really needed in the conditions of unemployment prevailing today, such as those related by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I would like to ask the minister what has happened to his ironclad guarantees that he gave us two years ago that this project would start on time. What specific measures is he taking to ensure that there will be no further delays and no further loss of job opportunities for Canadians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend was not in the House two years ago or he would have remembered that one of the points about the ironclad guarantees was when I asked, when the Conservative government was in office, that that government provide us with ironclad guarantees before approving the sale of gas to the United States.

We have made representations to the United States administration, as hon. members know. We have obtained a commitment from the President and Congress of the United States to support the project. More than that, we have obtained from the Congress and the United States administration the enactment of all the necessary legislation, to make sure that there will be no legislative obstacle to the implementation of this particular project which is of great importance to our country. We were very happy to see that the administration and Congress of the United States passed those laws. At the present time the negotiations are taking place between the promoters and the United States bankers, to try to raise the necessary financing. I am still hoping that these negotiations in the private sector in the United States will prove conclusive and positive.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You said ironclad, right from that seat.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

TAKEOVER OF WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY BY TEXAS FIRM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns the takeover today of White Farm Equipment in Brantford by a foreign minority shareholder. TIC of Dallas, Texas, has forced Linamar Machine Ltd., of Guelph, the Canadian majority owner, to sell its control by threatening White Farm with receivership. This would cause a $2.8 million loss to Linamar. In selling, on the other hand, Linamar is apparently making a cool $1.5 million profit. In view of the fact that TIC will permanently shut down White Farm within six to nine months, throwing nearly 1,000 workers in Brantford out of work, can the minister give us his unqualified assurance that under no circumstances will he allow TIC or any other foreign group to take over controlling interest of White Farm Equipment?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the White Farm Equipment was reopened and hundreds of workers were given new job opportunities because of initiatives taken by this government as well as the Ontario government. We are keeping in close touch with the situation. I can assure my hon. friend that we will use whatever leverage we have under the law to protect the interests of the workers and the community.

Mr. Blackburn: That was not a very strong assurance, but I am going to hold the minister to it anyway.

PATENTS FOR CANADIAN PRODUCED COMBINE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. In view of the fact that government funding helped to produce the Axleflow Combine, Series 9700, will the minister assure this House that under no circumstances will he allow the patents for this combine to leave the country? Will the minister also assure me that FIRA will use every means at its disposal to block what I consider to be the rape of a Canadian-controlled corporation which is a viable company in an otherwise delicate agricultural market?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am glad my hon. friend has confirmed that this advanced rotary combine technology which White Farm has, was developed with the support of a federal government program. If I am not mistaken, one of the terms under which the support was advanced was that the technology cannot be worked outside of Canada without the consent of the government. Certainly my intention is to ensure that this technology remains in Canada to the benefit of Canadian workers and the Canadian economy. At the same time, I have asked for a report from my officials to see what role FIRA can properly play in this matter.

In addition, the terms and conditions under which assistance was given by the enterprise development program to support the reopening of White Farm some months ago involved the necessity of consent if that assistance is to continue under new owners. I want to ensure that those terms and conditions are used to the maximum extent possible to protect the interest of the workers and the community.

POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN CONTROL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, when the minister is in discussions with TIC officials tomorrow, as well as Linamar, I hope he will keep in mind what he just said. If all else fails, will the minister assist any other Canadian group, specifically the workers at White Farm in Brantford, to purchase Linamar's controlling interest in White Farm with either government-backed loan guarantees or through direct government funding? I ask this in view of the fact that the government already has a heavy investment of taxpayers' money in that company.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I would be pleased to receive from workers or other Canadian groups any ideas they have to bring about what they consider to be a more suitable development of the company. I will be happy to see what forms of government assistance could facilitate their projects. I would welcome any other ideas that come forward from the workers or others.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—RESULTS OF GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that 1.1 million Salvadorans have shown their preference for voting rather than violence—twice the number that was anticipated to turn out to vote last Sunday—would the minister indicate in what way his government has commended the people of El Salvador for their courageous act, and would he indicate whether we can expect more aid to go to that country from Canada? Further, would he consider inviting the Canadian ambassador to El Salvador to return to Canada so that Members of Parliament and other groups may be briefed in order to understand this tragic situation better?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, before I get to the substance of the answer, perhaps I might be permitted to congratulate the hon. member and his colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, for their courage in braving the bullets on election day in El Salvador.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: Perhaps I might be permitted to add that the bravest part of that was daring the wrath of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands in going to observe the elections there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: How about congratulating the people who voted?

Mr. MacGuigan: To get to the substance of the question, it is not surprising that the hon. member was not able to count all of those voting on election day. In fact the total is even more impressive than the one which he gave. There were about 1.5 million Salvadorans, three times the number predicted, three times the number who voted in 1972, who cast ballots.

I would indeed like to congratulate the people of El Salvador for the courage they showed in exercising their democratic right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: We are awaiting developments as to what kind of government emerges. Certainly the possibility of Canadian aid is open to that country as part of the tripling of aid to Central America which I announced about a month ago. We will not have a further announcement until such time as the governmental situation is clarified.

CONFLICTING VIEWS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, since, as we all know, we have in our midst in the House the Vice-President of the Socialist International, who at this moment is meeting with that organization in Bonn, West Germany, an organization that has actively worked on a daily basis with the guerilla groups in El Salvador, would the minister indicate whether he agrees with the Vice-President of Socialist International who called the election "a travesty of democracy", or would he indicate that the President of Mexico was much more accurate when he referred to the line-ups in thousands that turned out to vote as "a beautiful sight" in that country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, after the election the only people who have spoken ill of the electoral process in El Salvador were the Socialist International and the hon. member for Oshawa in particular,—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacGuigan: —the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, and the Soviet Union.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL FOR URANIUM CANADA IN PRICE FIXING TRIAL

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In a recent interview with the Ottawa Citizen, The Citizen was advised by counsel for Uranium Canada that on the question of Crown immunity the instructions they were taking, that is the law firm, came from Mr. Gordon MacNabb and also from Mr. Rowley, who is an administrative assistant in the minister's department. In light of the fact that Mr. MacNabb is a party—although not charged—with respect to the conspiracy to fix uranium prices, when will the minister stop shirking his responsibilities and stop being wilfully blind, and when will he give directions to the law firm that it is unfair and indecent that the Crown should be able to be above the law and be allowed to claim Crown immunity in a criminal charge?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has referred to two officials who are members of the board of directors of Uranium Canada. I have told him that I had not given instructions to Uranium Canada, a Crown corporation, in this regard. I do not intend to, and I will not. I cannot be more emphatic than that. I will not interfere with the judicial process, and I will not interfere in the operations of the board of directors of the Crown corporation.

An hon. Member: You are doing it now.

Mr. Speyer: I point out to the minister that Uranium Canada has no office other than the offices he occupies, that it has no assets other than nine dollars, and it has no employees. It is a shell corporation. When will he do his duty?

PROPRIETY OF ACTION TAKEN

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, would the minister please discuss the propriety of a person who is a party to a conspiracy, although not charged as such, giving instructions to a Crown corporation? Will he permit that?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I suggest to the hon. member that my duty and his duty are not to interfere with the judicial process.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—PROGRESS OF REMOVAL PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The minister will know that on December 23 of last year he announced a $110 million federal government assistance program for Canadians whose homes contain urea formaldehyde foam insulation. Given the fact that three months have elapsed since the program was announced, without any of the UFFI home owners receiving any tangible benefit from the program—

Mr. Nielsen: Here comes another announcement.

Mr. Burghardt: —will the minister advise the House how the program is progressing and when UFFI home owners can actually expect some benefit from the assistance program?

Mr. Nielsen: Another announcement.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is cabinet day.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the hon. members that the program is going well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Every person who has been registered with the UFFI centre in Ottawa has received an application form.

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, good.

Mr. Ouellet: The number of home owners who have already registered with the program, asking for federal aid, is substantial and increasing very heavily on a daily basis.

Mr. Siddon: How many?

Mr. Ouellet: We expect that half of those who are eligible for grants or for aid from the federal government have already registered.

Mr. Epp: How many have received money?

Mr. Ouellet: I welcome this question because indeed it will inform home owners who are affected by this product that they should register in order that they may receive aid from the government.

I want to indicate to the hon. member that we are sending thousands of decimeters to home owners every week for the free test which is offered by the government. Finally, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has already trained 100 inspectors to aid home owners with appropriate technical advice. The government is in the process of establishing a list of reliable contractors who are qualified to do the repair work. As soon as Parliament approves the legislation authorizing payment to the home owners, cheques will be received by them.

INQUIRY RESPECTING MEASURES TO HALT LAY-OFFS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. According to reports this week, 600,000 families are now receiving welfare in various parts of Canada, many of them for the first time, and many of them not only because there have been many plant closures but also because they have run out of unemployment insurance benefits. The processing of claims is taking so long that many entitled to unemployment insurance have not received it. Can the minister indicate whether the government proposes any new program to reduce the number of people who are being laid off every week?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member should know, we have already introduced a number of special measures which are now taking effect. We have enrolled over 26,000 workers across Canada in the work-sharing proposal which was brought in just before Christmas, and we have therefore been able to avert close to 12,000 lay-offs because of that program alone. We are signing 50 or 60 agreements per week, so that program has met with a very large response from employers, employees and trade unions. I think this is a very clear example of how we can co-operate with all the major participants in the economic system to ensure that workers are protected during this very difficult period.

At the same time we have introduced a number of initiatives for job creation, particularly in the forestry and fisheries industries. We have invited the provincial governments to work with us in establishing major responses in those areas.

I would also like to point out, if I might, that we have taken special measures in the administration of unemployment insurance by establishing special teams to move into areas where demand has increased at a very large rate. As a result of those special measures we have been able to work down the backlogs enough so that we now have a good handle on this particular problem.

So, Madam Speaker, I would like simply—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Orlikow: It is obvious that all the programs announced by the minister and other ministers have not had any effect on the fact that the rate of unemployment has gone up every month and will continue to go up.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PROCESSING CLAIMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the minister a question about the waiting period for unemployment insurance. There are reports from various parts of Canada that the waiting period for people registering to get the unemployment insurance benefits to which they are entitled is now running four to eight weeks longer than it did a year ago. The reason for that, apparently, is not just that there are more people making claims but also because last year the minister's department laid off or terminated the employment of all temporary and part-time employees.

Given the fact that there are so many more claims coming in every week, I would like to ask the minister whether it is not time for his department to hire more people so that people who are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits do not have to wait as long as they have, and do not have to go to the cities or provinces to ask for welfare.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member raises a legitimate complaint. It is one I have received myself, and it is one reason I visited some of the areas where the pressure was most severe, British Columbia and parts of the Atlantic provinces. As a result of that we have introduced special adjudication centres and special teams to move from one part of the country to the other. We have brought on part-time people—former unemployment insurance officers—to help relieve the load during this extreme period. The consequence of these measures is that we have substantially reduced the backlog, and I think we now have a handle on the problem.

If, however, members of Parliament are feeling particular pressures in their areas, I ask them to get in touch with me, and we will respond as quickly as we can to provide assistance in those areas. I ask members of Parliament for their co-operation in this matter.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—QUERY RESPECTING TAXATION OF INSTALLATION AND REMOVAL GRANTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question put by the hon. member for London West, and it is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I am delighted he has briefed himself so well on this home insulation problem.

Having encouraged home owners to install urea formaldehyde foam insulation, the government then went on to subsidize them by way of home insulation grants. However, the government added the amounts of those grants to the taxable incomes of recipients. Therefore, people filling out income tax forms now are paying taxes on the grants they received to put the insulation into their homes. My question is very simple. These people are taxed to put in this insulation. Under the minister's new program will they be taxed now to take it out?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think I should refresh the memory of the hon. member. First, the program was established to encourage home owners to insulate their homes. The government never favoured one product over another product. Therefore, the assertion of the hon. member that we encouraged people to insulate their homes with urea formaldehyde is totally incorrect. That has never been done.

Second, the hon. member says that home owners today are paying income tax on grants they received in relation to UFFI. That is stretching it in the sense that no home has been insulated with UFFI for over a year, because Canada was the first country to ban this product, more than a year ago.

Mr. Huntington: Canada is the only country in the world that subsidized it.

Mr. Ouellet: There has been no insulating with this product in Canada for over 14 months now.

Third, under the program we announced we are giving grants of up to $5,000, and those grants are not taxable.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ASSURANCE GIVEN BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT TO FIGHT ACID RAIN POLLUTION

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Reports coming out of Washington indicate very clearly that the American government intends to go on studying indefinitely the question of acid rain, while at the same time, and during the past year, it has been issuing licences to a very large number of coal-burning factories and power stations along the southern shores of the Great Lakes. That government has made it very clear that it has no intention of matching Canada's commitment to reduce emissions causing acid rain by 50 per cent by 1990.

Would the Prime Minister seriously consider calling the American President and pointing out to him that when he was here a year ago he committed his government—and I quote his words—to "work co-operatively to understand and control the air and water pollution that respects no boundary". Will the Prime Minister urge the American President very strongly indeed to match the Canadian commitment to cut down on acid rain?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for the concern he is showing and has shown in this matter. I would want to defer to the Minister of the Environment for more details on this, but the minister has been keeping me up to date on progress. Admittedly, it is slow, but it is progress nonetheless. The matter was discussed at a meeting of officials a month ago, and I am informed that at the present time there is a drafting committee which is at work on draft legislation in relation to that environmental commitment or agreement. So, there is progress.

The hon. member quoted President Reagan as having said he would work co-operatively. That co-operative work is proceeding. Once again, for further details I would have to defer to the Minister of Environment.

Mr. Hees: Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister discusses this matter with his responsible minister and with his ambassador to the United States, he will learn that the American government is making no progress whatsoever and that the U.S. Congress has made it very clear that it intends to do nothing in this regard. The lack of progress during the past year has been really shocking.

REQUEST THAT CANADA LODGE OBJECTION

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, in view of what the American President assured us last year, and in view of what has not happened in the meantime, does the Prime Minister not think he was incredibly naive in believing the assurances given to him by the President of the United States a year ago, and will he tell the American President that we in Canada object very strongly to being brushed off by "Big Brother", which has been the case in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I may have been somewhat naive. If so, I must apologize to the hon. member. I have to remind myself constantly that the President of the United States is not supported by Congress as readily as the Prime Minister in this country is supported by the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

YIELD TO PURCHASERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the fact that there has been no increase in the yield on government annuities since 1976, despite the recommendation of the minister's department back in February of that year that increases would be reviewed from time to time to reflect further fluctuations of higher interest rates and the increase in the cost of living, I should like to ask the minister whether he is aware of the recommendation of his department. If so, will he consider taking positive steps in this regard and introducing some measure of relief for those people who purchased annuities in good faith to supplement their incomes and retirement funds?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, certainly I am aware of the issue, not only because we are studying it in our department but also because we have received a number of representations from Members of Parliament and from the general public. As a result of this, I had discussions with the Minister of Finance to determine whether the government would now conduct an over-all review of the annuity situation because it relates to other kinds of government investment portfolios. A change in the annuity structure could not be undertaken without an obvious decision in relation to our other patterns of investment. The Minister of Finance and I will be discussing it further. I believe that review is probably required. We will announce it at the proper time.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REDEEM LOW YIELDING ANNUITIES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, when the minister is having his conversations with the Minister of Finance perhaps he could go one better and recommend that the government could redeem very low yielding annuities purchased some 25 to 30 years ago, at full face value, thus eliminate the unfortunate problem, and at the same time offer some real relief to the holders of such annuities.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, certainly we are aware of the disparity in interest rates being received. As I pointed out in my previous answer, judgment must obviously be made in relation to other returns on different government debentures, bonds and holdings. I am sure we will take this into account and report to Parliament on the decision as to when the review will take place and the results of it.

HOG PRICE STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. A meeting was arranged between the L'Union des Producteurs Agricoles and the Liberal caucus in Montreal last Tuesday to discuss economic difficulties faced by farmers, as indicated by the 54 per cent increase in bankruptcies in Quebec and the 13 per cent increase in defaults on loans through the provincial lending agency. Since only four members of the Liberal caucus attended the meeting of over 1,500 farmers, they need some answers to their questions in the House. The hog stabilization formula makes lower payments as the market falls. Is the minister considering amendments which would base payments on the cost of production?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member made a speech before asking his question. He should know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, my deputy, myself and several other officials, met with UPA at its annual convention in Quebec city. Later we met the board of directors and their president in Montreal. Four Members of Parliament including my parliamentary secretary, attended the meeting in Montreal. They received very short notice of the meeting. The hon. member knows that these members have responsibilities to do committee work, etc. I thought they did very well, for that many to be there, on such short notice. They had a good meeting. They were satisfied with the meeting. I was happy they were able to attend it.

Our programs in the province of Quebec which are used by the producers of that province are the ones which are accepted. I understand a much larger meeting will take place in Quebec City where they were confronting the provincial minister of agriculture about the problems faced in agriculture in the province of Quebec. The hon. member asked what we were doing. We are doing more federally. Even in his own province he knows that last year we spent $131 million and that the province of Saskatchewan only spent $61 million.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INCREASE PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I guess making speeches is a little catching. Since there is a nation-wide crisis in the current year, will the government pay out 100 per cent of the cash cost of production for the year now ended to help producers until such time as a more adequate program can be negotiated?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that in 1977 we proposed 100 per cent of income assurance to farmers for all their products. It was not picked up by producers or the provinces, etc. Some organizations are proposing practically the same thing I proposed on behalf of the Government of Canada in 1977 as something they originated. We hope to be able to work out some kind of mutually-agreeable program. I hope we will be suggesting something in about three weeks.

BANKRUPTCY OF ECON CONSULTING LTD.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since the minister was in Winnipeg on Tuesday of this week he should be up to date or briefed on the problems resulting from the bankruptcy of a grain firm called Econ Consulting Ltd., which left some 250 farmers primarily in Manitoba with losses of anywhere from $5,000 to roughly $100,000 in grain marketed to the company but never sold. Of course they never received the money. Since the Canadian Grain Commission has more than a passing interest in the entire matter, could the minister indicate what the government is prepared to do at the present time for farmers who are so severely affected in this case?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member mentioned, I was in Winnipeg on Tuesday at which time I met with some of the officials and a commissioner of the Canadian Grain Commission. We discussed this problem. I am satisfied that the Canadian Grain Commission followed its jurisdiction and responsibility in bonding the company; they have collected the bond.

As the hon. member knows, the matter is under investigation. The farmers are making representations to the Government of Canada, saying that the money was owed to them by the company—and they suggest that the bond should have been larger than it was—and that the Canadian Grain Commission or the government should compensate them. There has been no decision taken on this at the present time. I do not know what we will do. We are awaiting all reports to ensure that all sales were legitimate and proper, that the Wheat Board books were used, etc. Then we will look at it more closely. I do not see how we can treat this bankruptcy any differently than any other kind of bankruptcy. The Canadian Grain Commission runs spot checks with its auditors. They cannot possibly audit the books of every grain dealer every year. When they find something wrong, it is brought to the Commission's attention and they enforce the law.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT AID AFFECTED FARMERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I should like to make a suggestion to the Minister of Agriculture through you, Madam Speaker. Since some of the affected farmers will surely go out of business this spring because of the losses they have sustained—and some of them have told me this personally—would the minister be prepared to look either at having the Farm Credit Corporation administer money to the affected farmers for the amounts lost, which could then be repaid over a period of time, or using the Small Business Development Bond in some manner? We will see some farmers in Manitoba going broke because of what has happened. Rightly or wrongly they blame the Canadian Grain Commission for a lot of their problems.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we will use every recourse or avenue that we have to assist them in any way we can within the jurisdiction given our department by Parliament.

LOCATION OF PROPOSED VETERINARY COLLEGE IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister inform the House whether the federal government is committed to funding a fourth veterinary college in Canada to be located in the Atlantic provinces? If so, does its commitment depend upon an agreement by all four Atlantic provinces on a site, or would an agreement by three provinces suffice?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we made a decision several years ago. We even had $500,000 in the Blue Book to start the veterinary and aquamarine college to be established in the Atlantic provinces. They cannot agree among themselves. The terms of reference which I was given as the Minister of Agriculture were that if they agreed it would go ahead. They have not seen fit to agree. The provinces cannot agree among themselves on where it should be located. If they had agreed, that school would be in the business of educating young people at the present time. We are still waiting for them to agree. It is not our fault, that is for sure.

Mr. Clark: Answer the question.

Mr. Whelan: I have no other directions than those which I had in the first instance. The funding which was there has to be replaced because it has been withdrawn from the estimates. As the hon. member knows, we need money; we cannot just leave it in abeyance waiting for them to make a decision.

• (1500)

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ACCEPT MAJORITY VIEW ON LOCATION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, if it is not possible for all four Atlantic provinces to agree on a site for the Atlantic Regional Veterinary College, would the government take the initiative itself to get this long-delayed project off the ground, for example, by supporting the site favoured by the majority of the provinces—three of the four provinces in the Atlantic region—and by committing funds to the project now, based on that agreement of the three provinces?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, all that sounds good. But I am sure the hon. member knows which province will not go along with the other provinces. I am sure the hon. member knows the premier of that province; I am sure his leader knows the premier. Why can he not use his good offices, because they are of the same political faith, and ask him to impress upon Premier Buchanan the importance of this school being located in Prince Edward Island so that we can get it on the road?

Mr. Clark: Do you want me to do all your work for you, Gene?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, might I ask the government House leader to confirm the business for the remainder of the week and next week as well? I presume we will be proceeding with Bill C-97 in that it is out of committee today, and that tomorrow will be an allotted day. When he answers, could the government House leader indicate also, if he can, which of the energy bills will be coming to us next week? If he is unable to do that, perhaps he might give us some indication when we might expect to see notice of those bills.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, in so far as the business for today is concerned, my hon. friend is correct. On both sides of the House we have the appropriate consensus to deal with and complete report stage of the fiscal arrangements bill today. Tomorrow is an opposition day.

[Translation]

Next Monday, we shall debate and complete third reading of the fiscal arrangements bill; on Tuesday and Wednesday we shall start consideration of the energy security bills. In this connection I can confirm to my hon. colleague that tomorrow we shall be able to give notices concerning most of the eight bills in question, but I cannot now determine the sequence in which the bills will be debated. Tomorrow I shall be able to be more specific in this regard. Finally, next Thursday will be an opposition day.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I am curious whether I missed something in the response of the President of the Privy Council. Could he go over what we will do on Monday next once more?

An hon. Member: Bill C-97.

Mr. Pinard: Next Monday, that is right, Madam Speaker; we will complete third reading stage of Bill C-97, dealing with fiscal arrangements.

I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but my hon. colleague for Hamilton Mountain is correct, we did discuss other matters at our meeting this morning. There is no firm agreement but there is an understanding that everything possible will be done on Monday to get third reading of Bill C-58 and Bill S-19, but there is no commitment on any side to complete those stages on Monday. However, in good faith we will do our best to try to have third reading of Bill C-58 and Bill S-19. Arrangements concerning Bill C-97 were settled.

THE LATE BARRY MATHER

TRIBUTES TO FORMER MEMBER FOR SURREY-WHITE ROCK

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I simply want to tell the House that the former member for the constituency of Surrey-White Rock, Mr. Barry Mather, who was my immediate predecessor, passed away yesterday. He was a member of this House for 12 years, a highly respected man, both here in the House and in his constituency. I know that hon. members of the House would like to pass on their condolences to his wife and to members of his family.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I had intended to raise this matter after we had finished with House business. I want to join with the present member of the Surrey-White Rock-North Delta constituency, and I am sure with other members of the House of Commons, and extend on behalf of the New Democratic Party, for whom Barry Mather toiled for many years, the feeling of loss that we all have when we lose a good friend and a close companion. We wish to extend to his wife and to other members of his family our sympathy on their sudden loss.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the government and members on this side of the House, I would like to join with my colleagues in their expressions of sympathy on the passing of Barry Mather, who had friends on all sides of the House. He was a very well respected and very diligent member. We would like to extend to Barry Mather's family our very sincere sympathy.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OLIVIER—INCIDENT ON MARCH 31, 1982

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege which, I feel, is extremely important and concerns an incident that occurred yesterday in the House, where I tried several times to get your attention for a question of privilege. First of all, Madam Speaker, I feel—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! If the hon. member intends to raise a question of privilege regarding the incident that occurred yesterday in the House, he should have given me notice of his intention. Unfortunately, I have not received such notice. If the question of privilege arose out of proceedings in the House today, I could listen to the hon. member now, but since the question concerns an incident that occurred yesterday, notice must be given, in accordance with Standing Order 17(2). If the hon. member wishes to give me notice, he will be heard by the Chair in due time. The hon. member for Longueuil has the floor.

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, if you do not mind, I will first discuss my second question of privilege. It concerns the current proceedings in this House. For two days, my simultaneous interpretation equipment has not been working properly, and I have been trying to get the attention of the House to point out that my rights in the House are being breached if I am not recognized. Therefore, this question does arise from today's proceedings. When I want to hear the hon. members—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! The hon. member must understand that the fact that his earphone is not working properly does not in itself constitute a question of privilege. I realize that the hon. member must have suffered considerable inconvenience as a result of his defective earphone, but he could simply have let me know. He could have called me on the telephone or stopped by my office, and I would certainly have made arrangements to have his equipment repaired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Parker: Madam Speaker, I have a question with respect to House business. I was on my feet before the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) made his comments. My question pertains to Bill C-60. This bill was passed in the House of Commons close to Christmas. It has been approved in the Senate. Could the President of the Privy Council tell us when it will receive royal assent? I have many constituents in my riding who are looking forward to that bill being implemented.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, discussions are taking place with the National Energy Board as to when that body will be ready to proceed with the implementation of this particular bill. As soon as it is possible and advisable, we will proclaim it.

PETITIONS

MR. NICKERSON—YELLOWKNIFE HOUSING AUTHORITY TENANTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 99 tenants of the Yellowknife Housing Authority. The petitioners request that Parliament take the necessary action to redress their several grievances dealing with the high cost of electrical energy in the north, the lack of incentive for rental accommodation construction contained in budgetary and tax measures being pursued by this government, the government's policy of leaving staff housing vacant over long periods when ordinary citizens are forced to go without adequate accommodation, and lastly, the unrealistic regulations of CMHC which cause a rent structure to be imposed which is inappropriate to the special conditions found in the north.

The petitioners would hope that these important matters can be dealt with as expeditiously as possible.

MR. FRIESEN—REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present a list of 980 names on behalf of my constituents as well as those gathered from Burnaby, New Westminster and Coquitlam, asking that the government institute a national referendum on the subject of capital punishment.

CANADIAN PARENTS FOR FRENCH

Question No. 3,689—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 3,267 relating to annual amounts extended on a provincial basis from federal funds to Canadian Parents for French and with reference to the heading "National" which appeared for each fiscal year, by year and by province, in what manner were the funds distributed through the national office of Canadian Parents for French?

2. What accountability practices are in force in relation to funds allocated to national and provincial chapters of Canadian Parents for French?

3. In what manner were each of the allocations spent, nationally and provincially?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Secretary of State): 1. Funds referred to in the previous reply to question No. 3,267 as being contributed to the national office of Canadian Parents for French were retained by the association's national office, and spent on such activities as an annual national conference; a national newsletter; publications such as the book "So You Want Your Child to Learn French"; a bibliography; article reprints etc.; and a national survey of parents' views on second language instruction.

2 and 3. Each allocation was accorded after approval of a submission from the association which was judged to meet the objectives and criteria of one of the department's programs. All funds thus contributed to Canadian Parents for French are subject to the standard accountability practices and financial controls established by the department for grants and contributions to all voluntary organizations, in accordance with Treasury Board guidelines. The funds previously referred to as having been contributed in fiscal years 1978-79, 1979-80, and 1980-81, have been properly accounted for and were spent in accordance with the stated objectives.

DISPOSAL OF ARGUS FLEET

Question No. 3,893—Mr. Crosby:

1. Did the government, through the Department of National Defence or otherwise, spend funds to "mothball" or ready the Argus fleet for storage and, if so (a) how were the funds spent (b) what amount was spent (c) who received the payments?

2. Were tenders or proposals requested when the decision was made to dispose of the fleet and, if so, what were the tenders or proposals received?

3. What were the terms under which the Argus fleet was sold or disposed?

4. Was the amount received the highest amount tendered or proposed and, if not, for what reason was the highest tender or proposal not accepted?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Crown Assets Disposal Corporation informs me as follows:

1. The corporation did spend funds to maintain the Argus fleet to applicable engineering standards. (a) The funds spent were for the maintenance of the aircraft. (b) The total amount spent was $349,298.87. (c) $260,110.75 was paid to the IMP Group, Halifax, for maintenance services and $89,188.12 to the Department of National Defence (DND) for materials including the tie downs.

2. Starting in the summer of 1980, an 18-month search for potential buyers was undertaken by CADC and External Affairs to sell the fleet as operational aircraft. A sale could not be negotiated. DND re-categorized the aircraft to scrap metal status and CADC distributed the offer to purchase to 400 known scrap dealers. The following nine bids were received and opened publicly in Halifax on September 25, 1981.

Associated Electronics and Metal Salvage Ltd.	143,664.00
Cirsic Inc.	138,842.00
Bristol Metal Industries of Can. Ltd.	126,936.00
Pine Creek Ventures Ltd.	102,336.00
Michael Haws	69,000.00
Ajax Aircraft Parts Ltd.	55,555.55
Chatham Salvage Ltd.	49,200.00
Camille Siebert	49,200.00
Abe Levine and Sons	42,156.00.

3. The standard terms and conditions of sale were used in the offer to purchase. In addition, the overriding conditions of sale were that: the aircraft were to be smelted or broken down on site to the extent that parts would not be recognizable as Argus aircraft parts, and that the project had to be completed no later than March 31, 1982.

4. The amount of $71,936 was received for the scrap metal from Bristol Metal Industries of Canada. This was not the highest amount bid for the following reasons:

The first bidder, Associated Electronics and Metal Salvage Ltd. withdrew its offer.

The contract with the second bidder, Cirsic Inc. was terminated by CADC for default, and for that reason, the performance deposit for $50,000 made at the time of the contract award was forfeited by Cirsic Inc.

By the time, CADC approached the third bidder, the ten day validity period to accept the offer to purchase had elapsed. The original bid of the third bidder, Bristol Metal Industries of Canada Ltd., was $126,936; but due to the suddent depression in the metal market that occurred during CADC contract negotiations with the second highest bidder, Cirsic Inc., Bristol's revised bid of $71,936 was assessed as fair market value. However, before the contract was awarded to Bristol Metal Industries of Canada Ltd. CADC tried to contact the fourth bidder, Pine Creek Ventures Ltd., but this company situated in the Yukon was untraceable.

The remaining components were sold by lot to the highest bidders for an over-all sale value of $318,810.81. It is expected that the future sale of spare parts may generate additional revenues.

SUBMISSION OF LAND CLAIMS

Question No. 4,026—Mr. Manly:

On what date was the comprehensive land claim of the (a) Association of United Tahltans (b) Gitskan-Carrier Tribal Council (c) Kitwancool Band (d) Kitimat Village Council formally submitted to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

(a) March, 1979.

(b) November, 1977.

(c) October, 1977.

(d) May, 1978.

ACCEPTANCE OF LAND CLAIMS FOR NEGOTIATION

Question No. 4,027—Mr. Manly:

On what date was the comprehensive claim of the (a) Association of United Tahltans (b) Gitskan-Carrier Tribal Council (c) Kitwancool Band (d) Kitimat Village Council accepted for negotiation by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

(a) March, 1980.

(b) December, 1977.

(c) December, 1977.

(d) October, 1978.

MR. GEOFFREY JAMES

Question No. 4,062—Mr. Cossitt:

Did Mr. Geoffrey James of the Canada Council make a statement to the effect that a recommendation from a Member of Parliament for a specific artist or project is "the kiss of death" and, if so, will the government either refute the statement or confirm that all applications to the Canada Council recommended by Members of Parliament did receive "the kiss of death"?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: Mr. James did make such a statement in relation to what he recalled as the reaction of some members of Canada Council juries to letters of reference from Members of Parliament which were included by artists in their applications for arts grants. A check of our files has not revealed any cases of letters of reference from Members of Parliament in such applications, although the council sometimes receives letters of support from Members of Parliament. If an application did contain a letter from a Member of Parliament, it would receive the same treatment as other applications and would be assessed by the jury according to the same criteria, foremost among which is artistic quality.

Question No. 4,063—Mr. Cossitt:

1. To the knowledge of the government, was a statement made recently by Mr. Geoffrey James of the Canada Council that "The worst thing that can happen to an artist is a recommendation from a Member of Parliament. It's the kiss of death"?

2. Is it government policy to permit public servants to ignore representations made by Members of Parliament and to regard a recommendation from a Member of Parliament as "the kiss of death" to whatever or whomever a member is recommending and, if so (a) what are all the reasons (b) is the government preparing to adopt a policy of governing the country without a Parliament?

3. Does the government intend to amend the new Constitution so that Canada will be governed by the Prime Minister and the cabinet only?

Mr. Jack Masters (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): 1. See reply to question No. 4,062 answered this day.

2. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) No.

3. Parliament, not the government, is the only competent body to amend the Constitution.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Pinard: As I pointed out earlier, it seems that there is agreement on all sides for proceeding to the report stage of Bill C-97 on fiscal arrangements. So, as I said earlier, this is today's business if one of the parties wishes to move an amendment at this time, it is agreed that no notice will be required.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I presume at this point I can take part in the report stage debate of the bill.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for proceeding?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House gives its consent. Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, just on a preliminary point of order, I want to make it abundantly clear that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) will be moving an amendment and there is also consent for the House to consider that amendment.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, that is correct. There is consent on both sides that all amendments, if more than one, be now put so that we can debate them and then we will vote on the amendment or amendments and the report stage later today.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, we would like the amendment considered in the usual way, that it would be the subject of a separate vote and that the report stage would also be the subject of a separate vote.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Olivier: No.

Madam Speaker: Does the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) say no?

Mr. Olivier: Yes.

Madam Speaker: Then there is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I distinctly heard the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) say "yes".

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, it merely proves, on the point of order regarding my question of privilege, that I am unable to understand hon. members when they speak in the other official language of the House. I therefore ask you to safeguard my privileges, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I really would like to know what kind of privilege the hon. member for Longueuil is referring to. If his earphone is not working properly, I would ask him to use one of the other seats so that he can follow the proceedings of the House. There is nothing I can do right now to help the hon. member since it takes fifteen or thirty minutes, or at least an hour, to repair a defective earphone. If he would co-operate with his colleagues, he could listen from another seat.

I repeat the question. Does the House give unanimous consent to the suggestion made by the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard)?

Mr. Olivier: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: In that case, we do not have unanimous consent.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think that earlier you indicated that there was unanimous consent for proceeding with the report stage. So I think that is settled. The present refusal to give unanimous consent concerns a request to start immediately consideration of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). In that case, if——my colleagues, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), are willing to come and talk with me, we might start debate on the report stage, for which we have unanimous consent. I think together we can settle this matter, allow this amendment to be put and debate it a little bit later today.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it was my impression that the lack of consent of the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) applied to the whole process, the report stage and any subsequent proceeding. I regret very much that the failure to give consent has to come from a government member, especially in the light of the willingness of both opposition parties to co-operate with the government in getting this legislation through today.

I think the real solution lies with the government House leader perhaps taking the hon. member for Longueuil aside and speaking in an avuncular fashion to him in the hope that he will change his mind. Even if the Chair finds I am mistaken—and I do not think I am—in my belief that the failure to give consent by the hon. member applies to the whole process here, in terms of pure logic there can be no debate at the report stage without debate on an amendment.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, on the point of order, on the off chance that the hon. member who did not see fit to give unanimous consent did not hear the proposal correctly—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: —I wonder whether Your Honour might be prepared to put that proposal again. Because I must confess that I am a little confused myself as to the exact proposal. I feel confident that if Your Honour were to just explain it a little more, perhaps with the explanation we could all agree.

Mr. Paproski: The President of the Privy Council will go over and explain it!

Madam Speaker: We are at the point of procedure at which the House is asked whether it will give its unanimous consent to consider the amendments for debate.

Mr. Nielsen: No, no.

Madam Speaker: The amendments to the report.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: As you just heard, Madam Speaker, there is unanimous consent for moving the amendments, and there is more than one, immediately. I think the New Democratic Party also wants to move an amendment.

It is understood that the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) is reserving his right to give you the notice required for raising his question of privilege at the appropriate time. That being understood, and now that the member for Longueuil has safeguarded his rights, we shall now proceed, as agreed with the House leaders, to complete the report stage and consideration of appropriate amendments to the fiscal arrangements bill.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I was beginning to wonder whether I would get the opportunity to speak in the debate this afternoon. I wish to open the debate at report stage of Bill C-97 by remarking on the intensive scrutiny which we had to give it over a very short time in committee.

As Your Honour knows, Bill C-97 left the Commons on Monday evening when second reading was completed. Then it moved to committee study. The time allocated for committee study was woefully inadequate when one takes into consideration the magnitude of the fiscal measures embodied in the bill. The allocation of some $105 billion to the programs of equalization—

Madam Speaker: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member. However, so that I can put a motion before the House, I would like to ask the hon. member which of the eight amendments the Chair has received the hon. member wishes to debate.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I will be introducing a motion. I am not sure what Your Honour has in the way of the eight amendments before you. I have one motion that will read:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-97, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be amended by deleting Clause 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"6. Sections 18 and 19 of the said act shall lapse on April 1, 1984."

I apologize if there has been any confusion in the procedure that I have been following, but I am sure Your Honour knows that this bill was just reported out of committee at one o'clock today. That shows the way in which committee members have been working at it since Monday night. They have been attempting to subject this bill to the kind of scrutiny in committee work that it indeed merits.

There has been very little time in which to refer the bill back to the House from committee and to have reproduced, for the work of the chamber, the various amendments that we wish to place before the House. I know hon. members of the New Democratic Party also wish to bring amendments forward. I mentioned that the bill had been sent from here to committee following second reading only on Monday night of this week. That meant that we had very little time in committee to give the kind of scrutiny to this bill that is necessary as it embodies such tremendous fiscal measures. It includes the allocation of some $105 billion from the federal government to the provinces for equalization and established programs financing over the next five years.

May I say to Your Honour that in our committee work we tried our best to give it intensive scrutiny, although we could not give it the kind of thorough examination that an extended period in committee could have provided. A number of witnesses appeared before us. With varying degrees of intensity, they all condemned the government's proposal to cut back substantially on funding of post-secondary education and health care by removing, as the government proposed, the revenue guarantee component of the established programs financing.

Let me mention some of the organizations which appeared before us in committee during the few days that were available to us. All of the organizations which came before committee in the last few days were unanimous in their opposition to the cutbacks proposed by the federal government. The organizations included The Canadian Council on Social Development, the Canadian Hospital Association, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Canadian Federation of Students, The Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Medical Association. Your Honour will see, from the list of witnesses I have mentioned, that all of these organizations have a very real and deep interest in the funding of post-secondary education and health care across this country. They came before us in order to make known, in the strongest possible terms, their opposition to the proposals of the government. They were unanimous in their point of view. None of them agreed with what the government was doing. They all strenuously objected. Only three witnesses who came before us in that period of time supported the cutbacks. They were the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin).

I can understand the motivation of the Minister of Finance. He told the committee that all he wanted to do was to save money, regardless of the threat those savings posed to the standards of post-secondary education and health care across this country. His only interest was savings. He pushed the whole question of reduced standards of health care and post-secondary education in this country to one side. I suppose I can understand his motivation; he wants to grasp every penny he can get his hands on. However, what I cannot understand, what I find to be deplorable, and what I consider, indeed, to be a betrayal of their obligations as ministers responsible for the programs involved, is the meekness with which the Secretary of State and the Minister of National Health and Welfare surrendered to the Minister of Finance.

We propose to defend the clause that they have abandoned. We are doing so by the introduction of the amendment that I read at the beginning of this debate. We propose to defend the measure, which the government has decided to take out of the established programs financing, by introducing this motion:

• (1530)

That Bill C-97 be amended by deleting Clause 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"6. Sections 18 and 19 of the said act shall lapse on April 1, 1984."

That is very simple, both in intent and in expression. The amendment provides that the revenue guarantee component of established programs financing entitlement will continue for two more years.

We would prefer to go further. We would not stop with that amendment as I have read it if we had the option to do so. We would prefer to go further and make the continuation of that clause conditional on signed commitments by each province to increase their spending on health care and on post-secondary education during each of the two years, by percentages equal to the growth in the EPF escalator, which means about 11.5 per cent.

We would make that conditional on the provinces if we had the power to do so. However, while the government could have written such a condition into the bill presently before us when it was being drafted, an amendment by the opposition to accomplish that purpose would not be out of order. So I am regretful that indeed we cannot take that further step and make it conditional upon the provinces to meet this obligation. We are therefore settling for a second best alternative.

During the two-year period that I have mentioned, we advocate an up to date federal-provincial inquiry into the funding needs of health care and post-secondary education. We advocate that that take place with full scope for input from interested groups and the public at large. That inquiry's findings would provide the basis for the proper division of responsibility for funding those services between the federal and provincial levels of government. It could also take testimony on the better definition of program conditions and on standards of health care and on what might be the appropriate national goals in post-secondary education.

I raised this question with the Secretary of State so that during this two-year period what we could come up with, I would hope, would be indeed a better definition of program conditions and standards of health care and the appropriate national goals in post-secondary education. Both of these, we trust, would command the support of both levels of government and lay the groundwork for serious negotiations on those points. We think that, given such an effort, the result would be funding arrangements better than those agreed on in 1977, because they would reflect a broad national consensus.

We also believe that agreement could be reached on national goals in post-secondary education and on standards of care and a more precise definition of conditions in the field of health. At the very least, we think that the attempt should be made. I would hope that it would be successful; nevertheless, if it should prove unsuccessful we would have two years in which the programs are funded by the federal government according to the commitment that it made in 1977—and that in itself would be an achievement. After March 31, 1984, the formula now embodied in this bill could be reintroduced if a better one is not renegotiated.

Should this amendment pass, sir, I believe each province has the moral obligation to fund both these programs at rates of growth at least equal to that of the EPF escalator. I know that a number of the provinces, even in the face of the termination of the revenue guarantee component of the established programs financing, have announced funding levels for 1982-83 which indeed meet that standard which I would make conditional on the provinces in the next two years. Assuming, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces respond to that moral obligation, I believe this amendment is a fair one. I do not believe the concessions asked are unreasonable in view of the importance of the programs at stake.

Many of us have had the opportunity to speak on this bill and to stress the importance that we lay on programs of post-secondary education and health care in Canada. They are important to every individual, to every Canadian citizen. Therefore, we are trying to ensure that the standards in both of these programs remain at the level they are at now or are improved upon. What we do not want to see—and this will happen if the measures that the government proposes come into effect—is the standards reduced.

I would be most remiss if I did not acknowledge that the amendment I am proposing was inspired by the Canadian Association of University Teachers, whose approach to this issue throughout has been a thoughtful and a constructive one.

During the committee hearings on this bill, Mr. Speaker, a number of comments were made by members and ministers opposite which I think are relevant to this amendment. Yesterday afternoon and this morning we heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare admit that the provinces would never have agreed to go from cost-sharing to block funding for hospital insurance in 1977, as the federal government wanted them to, without the commitment of the federal government to add partial compensation for the 1972 revenue guarantee to the EPF formula. They would never have agreed to take that step if they had not been guaranteed that there would be partial compensation for the 1972 revenue guarantee. That was to be built into the 1977 formula, as indeed it was, and the provinces expected it to continue.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare then argued that terminating that component of the formula—a step which will save the federal government $5.7 billion over the next five years—is not a breach of faith with the provinces. Although she admitted that it had been put in there in the first place as a part of a bargain with the provinces, she then went on to say that removing it is not a breach of faith with the provinces. She cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. In that argument we see once again the quality of this government's word. For on June 14, 1976, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) proposed the EPF formula, he argued that one of his reasons for doing so was that "the arrangements for these major programs should be placed on a more permanent footing". I repeat, he said "on a more permanent footing". Those were his words. So much, Mr. Speaker, for permanence and, indeed, so much for the word of the Prime Minister.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare went on to contend that the shortfall of $5.7 billion could somehow be absorbed without any impact on our health services in the provinces across the country. She argued that $5.7 billion less on health care and post-secondary education could somehow be handled without the standards being lowered in these two major programs. I am afraid, sir, that her faith in miracles is touching. I only wish it were matched by an appreciation of how much this bill is placing health care standards in jeopardy—because that, indeed, is what it is doing.

We also heard the Secretary of State say in committee that he could give no commitment as to what level of percentage increase in funding, if any, he will provide for post-secondary education after 1982-83. I pressed him on that, asking if the commitment beyond 1982-83 would be equal to, or an increase in, the EPF escalator. He refused to answer. He of course keeps in reserve the threat in the finance minister's budget paper on fiscal arrangements that the post-secondary education cash transfer will be frozen at its 1982-83 level after April 1, 1983, if negotiations with the provinces prove to be unsuccessful. This, after that cash transfer has already been reduced in 1982-83 by $180 million from its 1981-82 level.

Therefore, we have a decrease this year in the actual cash payments that will be provided by the federal government for post-secondary education and we have no guarantee that after 1982-83 the transfers will not be frozen at a lower level than they were last year. That is the tremendous dilemma that faces all post-secondary institutions across the country, all students involved in those institutions, the faculty, the people who work in those organizations. That is the threat they now face.

First, they are being cut back this year in the level of funding. Second, the threat lies there that in future the level of funding may be held to what it is this year, which is reduced from what it was last year. At the same time, the Secretary of State expressed concern about interfering with the provinces' spending decisions on post-secondary education when I outlined this amendment to him. I told him what it was we wanted to accomplish with this amendment, to allow him two years to try and negotiate a better arrangement for post-secondary education financing and health care financing, to maintain the levels of spending at what they were last year and maintain the formula that was agreed to in 1977. However, he would not listen to that. He rebutted me with something to the effect that "I will cut my spending and then freeze it while you increase yours, but it is interference with provincial rights to say we will maintain our spending if you maintain yours while we negotiate". That was the intent of the comments by the Secretary of State yesterday.

I fail to understand his reason or his logic because it is not reasonable and it is not logical. Apparently the Secretary of State believes in a federalism of convenience. Perhaps I should not be too harsh on these ministers. After all, it is hard to be loyal when your government is implementing a policy which threatens to lead to the underfunding of programs you believe in. There is a real temptation to resort to the kind of sophistry we heard from these ministers in committee. If they truly believed in the programs they are supposed to defend, there was another path open to them. Instead of meekly following what the Minister of Finance told them they have to do, cut back on these major programs, a path was open to them, a path which people of more principle have taken in the past, and that is, after having lost the fight in cabinet, to resign in protest. If they truly believed in their programs, that is what they would have done.

Let me return to the comments of some of the backbench Liberal members of parliament who attended the committee hearings on this bill. They were very concerned, they said, that under the EPF arrangements the provinces had reduced their share of funding for post-secondary education. They did not see the use, they said, of extending the EPF arrangements because there was no guarantee that the money transferred to the provinces would be spent on the services for which it was intended. We heard that said over and over again. If that is the cause of their concern, I can understand it. If those are the reasons why they want changes to the EPF, I do not see how in conscience they can do other than vote for this amendment. It puts real moral pressure on the provinces to at least maintain, if not increase, their share of post-secondary education funding during the next two years. The bill, as it stands, does not. The members who expressed concern as to whether the provinces might cut back on their funding, in this period of two years when moral pressure was brought to bear on the provinces to keep the spending at the level of the EPF escalator or to increase it beyond that, could see that being accomplished if they would support this amendment and give the negotiations a chance to take place in the next two years.

The amendment ensures that federal EPF funding will continue to rise according to the formula agreed to in 1977. If provincial funding does not rise by an equal percentage, the burden of explanation will then be on the provinces. The bill simply removes the revenue guarantee, as it now stands. The amendment which I am proposing uses the revenue guarantee as a carrot to get something of real value for the programs, time for serious negotiations and moral pressure for provincial spending commitments while negotiations go on.

If the Liberal backbench members who expressed concern do not vote according to the logic of their arguments, we can only conclude that their real motive is that of the Minister of Finance, a motive which the minister explained to us in committee with, I may say, refreshing candour—that he would not support this amendment because it would cost him $2 billion over the next two years. That was his only explanation; it was going to cost him $2 billion. He believes that he can spend that money better elsewhere than on post-secondary education and health care costs.

We do not believe the government can spend that great amount of money, $2 billion, on better programs than post-secondary education and health care costs. Neither does the party to my left, the New Democratic Party. They do not believe it could be better spent elsewhere. Nor does the Economic Council of Canada. Nor does the Business Council on National Issues. Nor does The Canadian Council on Social Development. Nor did the all-party task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. All of them recommended against cutbacks in post-secondary education and health care costs. We hope that enough members on the other side will have the wisdom and the courage to join that illustrious company I just mentioned to ensure the passage of this amendment.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move an amendment on behalf of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is an amendment before the House. If the hon. member is proposing an amendment which could be grouped with this amendment for debate and perhaps have the two voted on separately, this would require unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blaikie: What I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, is that they could be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Therefore I move:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 35 to 42 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) the aggregate of

(i) $15.26 and

(ii) the quotient obtained by dividing

(A) the federal contribution payable for all the established programs to all the provinces for the fiscal year commencing on April 1, 1975

by

(B) the population of all the provinces for that fiscal year".

The effect of this amendment would be to restore for the duration of the next five-year fiscal period the money associated with the compensation for the termination of the revenue guarantee. It is similar to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) in so far as the amendment moved by the hon. member would leave the same amount of money but only for the next two years. As expressed by the hon. member, she would like to see that two years become a time for negotiation between the federal and provincial governments as to the role that the federal government plays in post-secondary education and national standards for health care.

We support the amendment of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands but we would like to see the money continued for the whole term. We are not against the two-year negotiating period but, as has always been our position, the money associated with the compensation for the termination of the revenue guarantee is money for health care and post-secondary education. It was regarded as such in the last fiscal arrangement and should continue to be regarded as such for the next five years.

There has been much confusion and debate about what has been known as the revenue guarantee. This is not the last time I will mention the guarantee because in all probability I will try to explain it again at third reading. In any event, I will try once again to explain for the record the way in which the government has been dishonest about the role of the revenue guarantee in the established programs financing.

I would like to begin by saying that there is no revenue guarantee at this time. There is nothing known, labelled or to be found in any piece of legislation as a revenue guarantee. For this reason I keep repeating that when I refer to the revenue guarantee I mean the compensation for the termination of the revenue guarantee, because that is really what we are talking about.

It is due to linguistic laziness that people refer to it as the revenue guarantee. It has become a dangerous habit because this conveys the notion that there is something called the revenue guarantee and therefore something separate from the established programs financing that the government can remove without being accused of taking away money intended for health care and post-secondary education.

The fact of the matter is that the revenue guarantee, as such, ended in 1977. It was an agreement made in 1972 by the federal and provincial governments to compensate the provinces for whatever revenue they might lose as a result of the tax reform initiated in 1972. This agreement expired in 1977. At the same time that it expired, the federal government and the provinces were renegotiating the EPF and the funding for health care and post-secondary education, moving into a block funding system for those two programs. I assume that during other independent negotiations the provinces were complaining about the termination of the revenue guarantee. The federal government indicated that the revenue guarantee was finished, but since the provinces were unhappy about this fact, it would contribute extra money—$7.63 per capita, to be exact, plus one tax point—to the established programs financing. In other words, it offered to sweeten the pot.

On this condition the government asked the provinces if they would agree to integrate all the legislation into the new established programs financing bill rather than wait until 1980 for the hospital legislation to terminate. The provinces agreed to this and the revenue guarantee ended. The sum associated with compensation for termination of the revenue guarantee was rolled into the established programs financing.

What ensued was that the federal government consistently—up until the November, 1981 budget—regarded all the money in the established programs financing, including the money that the provinces were acquiring as a result of the tax point transfers, the money associated with the compensation for the termination of revenue guarantee, the cash payments, the transitional payments; all this money was regarded by ministers of the Liberal government as money for health care and post-secondary education. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in particular travelled across the country telling people what the percentage of federal government spending on health care and post-secondary education was and claiming great credit for spending this amount of money.

What occurred next was that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) decided that he would like to solve his deficit problems, and although these problems do not result from these programs, he decided to pass on some of his deficits to the provinces and make the terrible mistake of trying to fight economic problems which were caused by other sources at the expense of these particular programs. The minister decided to change the government's perception of the money associated with the compensation for the termination of the revenue guarantee.

In committee this morning, the Minister of National Health and Welfare admitted that she wanted the provinces to regard the money associated with the compensation for the termination of the revenue guarantee as money to be spent on health care. If there is anything beneficial about meetings being held one after the other, it is that by sheer persistence you can sometimes get people to say something that they have been desperately trying to avoid saying for a number of days. In any event, she said she regarded that money in that way but could not persuade the provinces.

I have admitted all along that the provinces were wrong about this. They made a very serious mistake in the first few years of that last agreement, which was a very good agreement for them. They should have said, "Yes, all that money is for health care and post-secondary education", and they should have gone ahead and spent all that money on health care and post-secondary education. If they had done that, they would not be in the spot they are in today. They would not be in that spot if they had not let their percentage spending fall. They were partly to blame too.

• (1600)

However, the federal government, particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as she admitted this morning, regarded that money as money for health care and post-secondary education. What has the government done? It seems the Minister of Finance has said, "I want to save money anyway, so here is a good angle: we will throw the arguments of the provincial governments back in their faces and keep repeating them to them". That is what the federal government has been doing. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, probably embarrassed—initially, at least—by the cutbacks in this particular area, has tried to claim that she always had this view of the revenue guarantee; but this morning it seemed to me she slipped up for a minute and indicated that yes, she had seen this money spent this way, and she wished the provinces had spent it on health care and post-secondary education, but they did not. She could not persuade them, so now the federal governement is going to take it away from the provinces.

My position is that the federal government was right all along. It was right until it changed its mind in November of 1981. It should have stuck to its position. It should have stayed with the amount of support it regarded as necessary to provide for health care and post-secondary education and entered this new period of negotiating national health standards with that amount of money in its hand. It should have said, "We want to give this much support to health care and post-secondary education, we want to continue to give this much support to health care and post-secondary education and we want to give it under the following conditions". That would have been a much stronger bargaining position for the federal government had it entered this new negotiating period in that way. But instead, what has the federal government done? It wants to bargain for tougher national health care standards, but it is taking money off the table, and this is more unfortunate than I can possibly express. It does not bode well for the negotiations I want the federal government to go into. I am not taking the side of many of the provinces which say that the federal government should stay out of medicare, that it should not have an opinion about how this money should be spent and that it should not demand accountability. I want the federal government to do all those things. My complaint about this legislation is that it makes it more difficult for the federal government to do that. There was really no need for it to do this. This is a stupid, blind move which does not have to be made. The federal government could move into these negotiations with all the money it was previously giving to health care and post-secondary education with a strong commitment to both those programs and have much more success at the negotiating table than it has now. Our amendment is designed to put that money back in.

All the groups which appeared before us in the committee and everyone I can think of, except the Liberal Party, have the same view of the consequences of the cutbacks I have just enunciated. The Canadian Health Coalition, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, The Canadian Council on Social Development—it did not matter who it was; all the witnesses before the committee took the view that it would be very damaging indeed for the federal government to go ahead with these cutbacks.

Our health care system is in a crisis. I do not like to use the word "crisis" over and over again because it is a word that is used too much in this House, and certainly our health care system could be a lot worse.

Mr. Manly: Give the Liberals time.

Mr. Blaikie: Someone says, "Give the Liberals time".

Mr. Nystrom: Not too much time.

Mr. Blaikie: I am reluctant to use the word "crisis", but generally things do not just deteriorate overnight. It is a process, and I think this step by the government is one significant step in that process. It is not the end of the world, but this step makes it unlikely that in another area—that is, the negotiation of standards and conditions and the clarification and enforcement of those conditions—negotiations will succeed in the way I know most Canadians would want them to succeed and in the way I know my own party wants them to succeed. This is just another step down the road to a time when some provinces in particular—but all provinces—will feel the bite of these cutbacks.

The responses of the various provinces will differ because the medicare systems in the provinces differ. However, the consequences will be similar, as I have said, in terms of there being an effect by the cutbacks. However, I am particularly concerned about provinces like Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta. I pick these three provinces by virtue of the fact that they are the three provinces which still charge premiums for medicare. This says something about how they like to finance medicare. They do not like to finance medicare in as progressive a way as possible. They are more attached than other provinces to "user-pays" views of health care.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is the same in Yukon.

Mr. Blaikie: I am told it is the same in Yukon. We did find that when we went up to Yukon. When the federal-provincial task force went up to Yukon, we found that in spite of all the rhetoric of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, at hospitals in the Territories for which she is responsible they were imposing user fees. I think that got out and they were discontinued shortly thereafter, but sometimes there is a difference between appearance and reality.

As I was saying, in some provinces in particular, there will be a move to reintroduce and strengthen some of the private funding mechanisms that are already there. Some provinces will be looking for more ways to bring private money in to compensate for the lack of public money. In some cases this will be welcomed by these provinces.

Medicare is not as established in the national fabric as we all like to think it is. Any program which is only 18 years old is not very established. In the long run of political history a program of 18 years' duration is not very established at all. Medicare is a very young and fragile political fact. Many of the people who were so violently opposed to medicare only 18 years ago are not dead yet, they are still around. They still hold grudges. Perhaps they would still like not to have medicare. We have to be very careful that we do not provide the political pretext for all these people to come out of the woodwork again. They have been lying low while there has been a lot of money around. We can have almost any system we like if there is a lot of money to spread around, but when we come across hard economic times and we create the political context and economic context for medicare that the Minister of Finance is helping to create now, these people will start to show up again, and the arguments for more private money in the system will start to show up again. They will show up, ironically, in some of the provinces which have the most money and the most ability to fund their medicare systems in a progressive way entirely from general revenues.

It has always seemed to me to be a complete mystery why provinces like Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia cannot afford to fund their medicare systems out of general revenues through a progressive taxation system, when Manitoba, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick can afford to do this. Why? Because there is still that philosophical hostility to medicare which exists in certain places more strongly than in others.

Mr. Orlikow: Especially Conservative provinces.

Mr. Blaikie: The member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) says especially Conservative provinces, and I could not agree with him more. It is a very dangerous game indeed that the Minister of Finance is playing. The Minister of Finance is taking an unnecessary risk. He will really be providing a cover for those who would like to move against the principles of medicare in any case.

Medicare is not just a matter of money; it is also a matter of commitment to a particular view of society and of the Canadian community as a place where people ought to have available high quality health care, whether they are rich or poor, whether they live in the Atlantic provinces or in Toronto. Medicare embodies a particular view of the country. It is a universal program which is available to people because they are Canadians, not because they are poor or have passed some kind of test. This is something we want to say about Canada. People in Canada, unlike those in many other countries—and the United States comes to mind—do not have to worry about the financial consequences of becoming sick. If they feel that there might be something wrong with them, there is no disincentive to attending doctors' offices for early diagnosis. They do not have to put it off until family allowance cheques come in or until they can afford it next week because they would like to buy bicycles for their children.

For most Canadians medicare is a classic example of what co-operative federalism can be when it is made to work and when it is informed by the kind of vision about which I have been talking. I think the Minister of Finance and the government are making a mistake; they will rue the day. I do not want to be standing around here or somewhere else down the road saying "I told you so." I would much rather the government accepted either the Tory amendment or ours and give time to conduct the policy discussion first in order to discover what kinds of medicare and post-secondary systems Canadians want. Then the fiscal decisions can be made afterwards. As The Canadian Council on Social Development pointed out, it is being done totally backwards. They are making fiscal decisions first and then deciding on what kind of system Canadians want. In that event, as has happened many times before, the financial structures will determine the system we get rather than the system determining the financial structures.

I hope these amendments will pass, and that Liberal members will have a change of heart and vote for them.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise and make a few comments concerning the debate as it has progressed thus far. Before doing so, I should like to say to the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) that the two of us have had a great time romping our way through the billions of dollars.

Mr. Blenkarn: We sure have.

Mr. Fisher: I remember well in the last election campaign when I was asked my attitude about the world in general that I confessed I was a spender. It has been a revelation to discover that the same sentiment beats in the heart of the hon. member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fisher: He showed himself to be a great enthusiast with the public's money; we are grateful to see this conversion in him. It is a real improvement.

The debate on the opposition amendments have made two important points, both of which I reject. The first point was that the revenue guarantee was important money spent on health care and post-secondary education. We on this side of the House do not accept that argument. The second point was that because we are removing this label or category from spending, we will see some kind of collapse in the school and health care systems. Again I do not accept that argument.

There has been much said about it, but we have not seen any evidence.

I should like to take a look at the numbers themselves, at the evidence. Hon. members know that on March 19 the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) released a statement in which he gave some important figures. The first and most important part of the statement was the total number of dollars involved. Over the past five years, under both equalization and established programs financing, we spent approxiamtely $61 billion. Over the next five years we will spend $105 billion. We are spending $16.4 billion this year, and that will rise in 1986-87 to a total of $26.3 billion. Out of that, we see that the federal government will spend some $76.2 billion on health care and on post-secondary education. This year—$11.6 billion will go to those two categories, and in 1986-87 it will be $19.2 billion. We are talking about huge amounts of money and about very respectable rates of growth in our transfers to the provinces. We are not talking about cutbacks—or abandoning our responsibilities. We are talking about a reasonable maintenance of the standards and dedication of the government to these two vital programs.

I think we should look at the fact that the growth here parallels the growth in the economy. It is a reasonable, planned growth and an amount the economy can manage. It is not unlimited growth; it is not a flat line, either. We are seeing approximate 12 per cent increases year after year over the next five years. Can we be satisfied that this growth rate is adequate?

I refer the House to the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) yesterday, from which I will quote directly:

> It is no secret that we are in a time of economic restraint. But the federal government is committed to upholding its side of the bargain when it comes to financing social programs for Canadians. We will not reduce our support for health care. In fact, over the next five years federal contributions for health will increase at an average annual rate of 13.4 per cent. Next year our support will grow by 12.2 per cent. The federal contribution to the provinces for health will total about $8.5 billion next year. This translates to a total of $347 for each person living in Canada.

As the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated, that is a very respectable maintenance and growth level for the health care program. When the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) appeared before the committee, he made the same kinds of commitments. We are not abandoning our responsibilities; we are maintaining and expanding them responsibly.

Also we must ask ourselves why we have not supported the two amendments which have been put forward. The Minister of National Health and Welfare gave the answer in the first sentence which I quoted:

> It is no secret that we are in a time of economic restraint.

If we were to extend the established programs financing for the next two years, we would be spending an extra $939 million this year and an extra $1,052 million in 1983-84 above the rate of growth we have already scheduled.

Mr. Blenkarn: Now you admit it.

Mr. Fisher: We simply do not believe that we are sacrificing the quality of the programs by not spending that money, and we do not believe that those expenditures are called for during this period of restraint.

• (1620)

A very great deal has been made about the $5.7 billion that somehow has magically been taken out of this whole program. This amount, called by the opposition the revenue guarantee, for the next five years would not have gone to health care or post-secondary education. The premiers have told us that. They told us last August that they would not spend this money on those programs. They do not automatically consider this money to be committed to those programs. They consider this money to be simply a transfer from the federal treasury to the provincial treasuries. This is money to be spent at their discretion. Perhaps by chance it could go to health care or post-secondary education. Equally by chance, it could be spent on highways, on sewers or on some other physical development of assets within the provinces. Their choice would be to spend the money as they see fit on their own provincial priorities. There were to be no guarantees that this money would be dedicated to those programs.

It is fallacious to argue that we are reducing our funding for these social programs by that amount simply because that amount is not in our budget. There was no guarantee in the beginning that the amount would be spent on those programs.

I believe restraint is needed. We have all received that message. What are we restraining here? We are not saying to the Canadian people that we are cutting back on funding to universities, to hospital care and medical care. We are not saying that. The figures I quoted earlier indicate the commitment we have to sustain these institutions and these programs. What we are saying instead is that the sky is not the limit. We cannot take that approach today. We simply have to put a cap on the rate of growth. We have to say that a reasonable expansion that takes into account the expansion in the economy will be permitted. We will not permit unlimited spending increases. We have to put a cap on those. We have to watch our spending as we heard so eloquently today and yesterday from the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and as we have heard from the Secretary of State who spoke yesterday in the committee. We have heard the commitments of these ministers to quality in these programs.

Anyone who wants to find out the direction of our spending programs and our commitments for the next five years would be well advised to review the notes of the committee hearings. The debate was stimulating. Both ministers very clearly stated their personal beliefs and commitments to these programs. They have each indicated they are allowing their spending to expand to protect existing programs. They do not intend to go for new programs or for unlimited new increases in spending. The Canadian people do not want that. We have a commitment to Canadians to restrain our spending to within the growth limit of our economy. We are maintaining that commitment in this bill.

I do not think anyone in our party has to apologize for restraining increases in spending for medical care, for hospitalization or for post-secondary education. Members of this government are the people who originally urged the beginnings of these programs. Ours is the government that put these programs into place. Ours is the government that has defended these programs. Ours is the government, as we have seen, that will nurture these programs over the coming five years. We make no apologies either for our commitment to these programs or for our commitment to restrain our spending.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to participate in the debate concerning Bill C-97. I wish to address my comments to, and focus on the amendment that has been introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

I was interested in the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) and his recognition that there will be a cut of $1 billion a year. I was interested to know about his commitments to quality, yet he believes that quality somehow can come without any expenditure. I am interested in those comments because it reminds me of the person who makes a commitment to a loved one and writes a note saying: "I want to see you more than anything else; I am coming to visit you tonight". Then there is a postscript to the note: "I will be over if it does not rain." The commitment which the parliamentary secretary outlines is not a commitment to philosophy. He also says, "do not confuse us with the details as to how we will deal with it."

The terms of the amendment put forward by my colleague allow the federal government a way out of the federal-provincial impasse which has unfortunately obscured the very serious problems faced by Canada's post-secondary education community. It is in this area that I wish to focus my remarks.

Regrettably, this piece of legislation both begins and ends any opportunity to pull together the potential contributions of both those levels of government. Instead, it does little more than add to the current state of unproductive confrontation between levels of government and the disquiet in our advanced educational institutions. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is a self-evident rule of policy formulation that this bill is coming at the wrong end of the process. First, we should have had public hearings that would have involved all the interested parties in the nation's post-secondary community. Then on that basis, the federal and provincial government should have sat down and worked out negotiated funding mechanisms, grounded in mutually satisfactory visions of the role of post-secondary education in Canada's future. Then, and only then, should those agreements have been enshrined in federal legislation.

The current Secretary of State takes every opportunity to make the point that the support of post-secondary education has already been studied enough. Indeed, the important contributions of the special task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements have taken the country well down the road to informed decision making. However, we should not forget the limited terms of reference of the parliamentary task force. As reported in Hansard for February 5, 1981, we find the following:

> —to examine the programs authorized by the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, focusing in particular on fiscal equalization, the tax collection agreements, the Canada Assistance Plan, and Established Programs Financing; and that this examination take place within the context of the government's expenditure plan as set out in the October 18, 1980, budget.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the task force was not empowered to address itself to non-financial matters. this is in keeping with this government's insistence that the future direction of post-secondary education is entirely a matter of dollars and cents agreements with the provincial governments. Is it any wonder that such unilateral actions as the federal government has taken with Bill C-97 have caused the students, staff, faculties and administrators, who are committed to an increased vitality in the post-secondary community, to suspect the motives of this government? Where is this government's umbrella statement of the future place of post-secondary education in Canadian society? It runs surveys and polls in a variety of other areas, but it does not survey opinion in this area; rather, it attempts to dictate it. It does not formulate long-term policies; rather, it counts its short-term spending visibility as most important. It has no vision, merely the desire for political credit.

• (1630)

In my riding of Waterloo three prominent national post-secondary institutions, the University of Waterloo, Wilfrid Laurier University and Conestoga College of Applied Arts & Technology, met to discuss what they called the crisis in post-secondary education. The message communicated to me in that public meeting was that these institutions feel like a basketball being bounced back and forth between two levels of government. They also voiced considerable support for the Canadian Association of University Teachers' proposal to extend existing EPF agreements for two years in return for a provincial commitment to increase post-secondary spending by 11.7 per cent in 1982-83 and 11.9 per cent in 1983-84. They have proposed that the two-year cooling off period be used for a joint inquiry to be conducted by the federal government and the Council of Ministers of Education. Open, public hearings would be held so that students, faculty, staff, administrators and community leaders could express their respective wants and needs in the area of advanced learning. The inquiry would be given only one year to report its findings, and the second year would be devoted to federal-provincial negotiations on the basis of those findings.

That is what I mean by pulling together a Canadian vision for the future role of post-secondary education and its support. A practical, creative mechanism for negotiated change. That, Mr. Speaker, is the process for which our party's amendment provides.

Lest members opposite scoff at the potential utility of such a policy-formulation process, let me relate it to the work of the federal cultural policy review committee, sometimes referred to as the Applebaum-Hébert commission. Its recently submitted "Summary of Briefs and Hearings" casts an interesting light indeed on the need for a similar investigation into the future of post-secondary education in Canada. The chapter entitled "Knowledge and Scholarship" deals with the relationship of knowledge and scholarship to culture and federal cultural policy. The brief submitted by the Canadian Teachers' Federation zeros in on the policy vacuum which I address here today in the context of this amendment. It says:

> The problem of cultural choice cannot, in our view, be divorced from the question of educational policy. The need for a coherent cultural policy is an aspect of the need for a national consensus on educational goals.

The Canadian Association of University Teachers made a detailed response on this theme. They said:

> It is ill advised and unrealistic to try to devise an adequate national cultural policy without discussing the role and development of education. Taken as a whole, the education system:
> 1. provides the knowledge and intellectual base on culture;
> 2. acts as the most important institution for the transmission of our cultural heritage to future citizens;
> 3. plays a direct role in the training of future arts and cultural thinkers; and
> 4. increasingly provides important facilities and resources for cultural events accessible to the general public.

The Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council made a point which goes to the very heart of the bill before us today. They said:

> The human sciences, in applying a reasoned approach to the perception and assessment of human materials and events, attempt to place current problems in the perspective of things past and to vistas on the future in the light of lasting human values.

Very telling, that phrase "lasting human values". In view of our discussion here today, Mr. Speaker, I wish that the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) had the wisdom and political energy to have grounded Bill C-97 in any recognizable "lasting human values".

I do not want to overdraw my comparison between the need for a full review of post-secondary education policy, such as it exists, and the federal cultural policy review initiated by the then secretary of state, the Hon. David MacDonald, in November, 1979, so I will conclude my remarks on it with this quotation from the brief presented by the Association of Universities & Colleges of Canada. They said:

> Be it fundamental or applied, humanistic, social or scientific, university based or not, research is directed at the creation of new knowledge and of new understanding of ourselves and our world. It is intellectual and creative activity at its best, and it is essential for the cultural advancement of society.

The point as I see it, Mr. Speaker, is that without first laying out its vision of the role of post-secondary education, the federal government risks permanent—albeit unintended—damage to the cutting edge of Canadian intellectual activity in generations yet to come.

What, pray tell, has possessed this government to take such a scatter-gun or, one might say, scatter-brain approach to the funding of advanced learning as that documented in this legislation before us today? Why have they not first come to some informed decisions about general policy directions? Just what do the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State imagine will be the consequences of this sort of unilateral action? What have they envisioned to be the role of community colleges and universities? Given the underfunding, which the parliamentary secretary has just recognized, enshrined in Bill C-97, what do they expect post-secondary institutions to look like in two, five or ten years? Will they have libraries, for example? What quality of education will they be able to offer? Will our best scholars in areas other than Canadian studies or job-creating areas have fled the country? To what social groups are they directing educational opportunities? How many of the present institutions will be left in existence?

These are just some of the questions which need to be answered. At the same time they must be considered against the background of the final report of the task force entitled, "Fiscal Federalism in Canada", to the effect that any further cuts forced on post-secondary institutions will be cutting not into fat, but into sinew and marrow. The Secretary of State's predecessor concluded his testimony to that task force by:

> —noting the need for a federal strategy that will address the challenges facing the post-secondary system in the eighties, a federal strategy that will actively support the achievement of national objectives, and a federal strategy that is realistic in light of fiscal restraint and that is consistent with basic principles such as accountability and visibility.

While I have yet to see an adequate definition—to say nothing of a social justification—for "visibility", I am close to agreeing with the balance of his remarks. What concerns me most, however, is that there has been no new initiative from the federal government to follow up on those bare thoughts since they were delivered in June of last year. In the absence of such a policy framework from the Secretary of State, we are faced with the financial ultimatum contained in Bill C-97. This is not good enough to encourage the wholehearted co-operation of those in the post-secondary community in terms of the future.

The amendment, which I support and which I encourage this House to consider and support, seeks to provide a mechanism for the discussion of these important aspects of the funding of post-secondary institutions.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it is, once more, a pleasure to take part in the debate on fiscal arrangements this time at the report stage. I believe that the two amendments, we are now discussing, one by the member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and one by the member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), would both have the effect of delaying or extending established programs financing as it is now, including the revenue guarantee. At least, aside from all the statutory complexities or technical amendments, that would be the effect of the amendment by the member for Kingston and the Islands. Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize, and I repeat what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance said earlier, that revenue guarantee is a program that was introduced in 1972 to protect the provinces against drastic changes in the federal tax base. The House will recall that in 1971 it legislated a thorough reform of the tax system and, at the time, some provinces said that this would drastically change the federal tax base.

Since at least nine provinces—all the provinces with the exception of Quebec, which has its own system for collecting income tax—are using the federal tax base to establish their own provincial tax, any change in the federal tax base also affects provincial revenues. The provinces have said: Give us a guarantee that the drastic reform you are now introducing will not just as drastically reduce the revenues of the provinces. The guarantee was what is still known as the revenue guarantee program. In fact, the program was extended in 1977, when the federal government and the provinces were negotiating agreements on block funding to replace the former shared-cost programs.

The question is, therefore, whether or not the revenue guarantee the government now proposes to eliminate was actually a part of programs financing. In 1977, the federal government or rather Parliament, decided that for administrative purposes, including the sending out of cheques, payments under the guaranteed revenue program, according to legislation that still exists today, would be made by the ministers responsible for the programs at the federal level in the same proportions as financing for health programs and post-secondary education. So that is the issue. In the report by the Standing Committee on Fiscal Arrangements mentioned earlier in the House this afternoon, a detailed history is given of the revenue guarantee program and various interpretations are given. In the tables listing the payments, revenue guarantee is listed separately from the programs, but there was a recommendation, which I supported at the time, that the revenue guarantee program should be allocated to the programs. And that is the big difference between the recommendation by the Parliamentary task force and the government's proposals. It is one of the big differences.

Now, is that justified? That is the question. Is it justified in terms of political morality and political judgment? Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the provincial premiers published their press release in August, after the task force completed its report. We did not know they were going to say that. Our report was not published until August 31, but for all practical purposes, it was completed in terms of political decision making around July 24 or 25. The provincial premiers said that they did not consider the revenue guarantee as being allocated to programs financing. I am sorry about this, because I would have preferred to see the money allocated to the programs, and that could probably be justified. However, one of my reasons for supporting the position of the government today is, that despite the recommendations I agreed to in order to reach a political consensus on this matter, I have always believed that revenue guarantee was not an equitable transfer. I see the member for Mississauga-South (Mr. Blenkarn) is smiling. I have always thought the program was unfair, because it was an automatic transfer of funds, no strings attached, to all provinces, while the only program we have traditionally said would be entirely discretionary and automatic is the fiscal equalization program.

Mr. Speaker, there is justification for this, and for more than one reason. Even if the program were eliminated, we must remember that because of the changes proposed in the November budget which will result in an increase in the federal tax base, automatically, the provinces, if in some cases they introduce legislation to adjust to changes in the federal budget in most provinces this is done automatically, at least as far as personal income tax is concerned they will benefit from nearly $685 million in additional revenue. The members opposite claim this does not count, because these are provincial revenues the provinces themselves collect in the form of taxes, which is true. The fact remains, however, that it is a case of political judgment. We have to make a decision in terms of political morality, and the decision is up to the elected politicians. When the federal government makes a decision in Parliament, and Parliament legislates an increase in the federal tax base which provides additional revenue for the provinces, then, even if these are provincial revenues, at least we should consider the fact that such action, both political and parliamentary, to some extent justifies eliminating a program such as the revenue guarantee, which the provinces themselves decided they were not going to allocate to the other programs. Mr. Speaker, there is another side to this question. In the final analysis, when I add up the figures—

[English]

When I add up the figures, it is obvious what the over-all effect will be, even putting aside the question of additional revenues, caused by increases in the federal tax base. Hon. members of the opposition say that we should not count them. However, even if we do not count them, the over-all effect of the arrangement being proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the arrangement that he made with the Atlantic provinces, just considering the increases to the equalization program, will be to more than compensate the provinces which receive equalization for the losses attributable to, or caused by, the elimination of the revenue guarantee.

Mr. Orlikow: That's not true!

Mr. Blenkarn: Not true!

Mr. Breau: Let us look at New Brunswick as an example. The equalization entitlement for New Brunswick in 1981-82 amounted to $415 million. In 1982-83 it will amount to $490 million, an increase of 18 per cent, or $75 million. The changes to the revenue guarantee means that New Brunswick will lose $6 million. The tax transfer will continue to go up. I do not count the additional revenues due to the federal tax base. They will amount to $9 million, but let us not count them. So despite that, there would still be an increase to New Brunswick of $75 million in equalization, plus what is not counted here, a special arrangement that the Minister of Finance has introduced in this bill as an adjustment because of certain population changes.

• (1650)

Four Atlantic provinces and Manitoba were receiving, and always have received, equalization payments based on assessments of population from the best figures available. In 1980-81 and 1981-82 those payments were too high. The provinces were not really entitled to them. It has happened before and was recognized practice that in the years to come those payments would be adjusted; in other words, there would be an accounting entry. They would not have to give the money back but it would be taken off the entitlement of the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Breau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: I have in front of me a table from page 55 of the budget papers tabled in last November's budget. They show in Table A-2, "Estimated Impact of Proposed Federal Savings on Provincial and Territorial Revenues for Years 1982-83 through to 1986-87". These are the figures prepared by the Department of Finance. For the province of New Brunswick it shows a loss of revenue for 1982-83 of $23.7 million; for 1983-84, $26.7 million; for 1984-85, $30.5 million; for 1985-86, $34.5 million; and for 1986-87, $38.7 million. At a rough count, that is $150 million. I wonder if the hon. member would explain those figures.

Mr. Breau: I will be glad to explain them, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member helps me to make my point. He is quoting a document that the government tabled with the budget on November 12. Either the hon. member takes an awfully long time to read, or he does not read new papers that come out, or he cannot read. I have a release that came from the Minister of Finance in March of 1982. That is a long time after November 12, 1981. The figures that he quotes do not deal with equalization because on that day the equalization proposals were not even given to the provinces. They were given to the provinces for the first time at a meeting in Halifax on November 24 or 25. The hon. member should stop reading into the record the November 12 document and start reading the March, 1982, document.

I am quoting here the increase in New Brunswick, $75 million in equalization over and above the special payments I was in the process of explaining, $60-odd million, $186 million in all for the four Atlantic provinces and the other equalization recipient provinces. That is $60-odd million over and above the increase that the province of New Brunswick will receive in equalization payments. The over-all effect of these changes will be that only those provinces that do not receive equalization will be affected even when we do not count the increase in provincial revenues due to the enlargement of the federal tax base. I say that in terms of political morality you can count them, but even if you do not count them the over-all effect of this will be that only the provinces of Ontario, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Alberta will be affected to any significant degree. The equalization recipient provinces will be very generously compensated due to the changes in the equalization program.

I know there will be different political opinions. All the provincial governments will continue to say that there are federal cutbacks. That is the nature of the political game. They have to bargain, to negotiate hard, particularly at this time because the unions are asking for increases in wages. Some 80 per cent of what they are talking about that goes into post-secondary education and health care is wages. It is a tough period, they have to take a tough stand and it is good politics to blame the federal government. I expect that to continue. But the facts are that the over-all increases in revenue to the provinces that receive equalization will more than offset any loss due to the ending of the revenue guarantee. It will more than compensate them. If the provinces decide that they want to squeeze the post-secondary institutions, or the hospitals, or the doctors, or anybody else, that is a political judgment that they are making. It is totally untrue and a distortion to say that it will be because of federal cutbacks. I repeat that I have not included, in making that judgment, those revenues that will be automatically provided by the enlargement of federal tax base.

Let us consider another thing, if anyone wants to talk about what is fair and what is unfair in politics. In the last five years, in the arrangement that finished at midnight yesterday the federal contribution has represented a larger percentage of the total expenditure from year to year. For example, in my province, New Brunswick, in post-secondary education contribution, if you include second language and minority language education programs, the yearly average has been an 18.4 per cent increase. The provincial government only allocated 11.5 per cent. We provided for that. If we had a system that permitted the provinces not to allocate the same amount that they were receiving from the federal government, what is so bad about that if there is going to be some adjustment on that in the future?

I quoted in the House of Commons ten days ago that in 1981-82 for example, the fiscal year that ended yesterday, the federal contribution to post-secondary education and second language education programs in New Brunswick represents 107 per cent of what the province spent. The federal contribution represents 99 per cent of what the institutions spent. That means that the legislature of New Brunswick, through the New Brunswick government, allocates only 1 per cent of what is spent in that province on education after high school.

I recognize, and I did recognize in the House of Commons when I quoted those figures, that one cannot expect the Atlantic provinces to be able to sustain, on their own, post-secondary education systems. First of all, we cannot afford it. Secondly, too many of our young people, once they have graduated, go elsewhere because of the needs of the economy elsewhere. So why should there be a sacrifice by the taxpayers of these provinces to train people so that they can go and work in Alberta or Ontario? So it is justifiable to spend a higher percentage in the Atlantic provinces. All the arrangements since 1966 recognize that. There was a special arrangement made in 1966-67 also.

However, in 1976-77 in my province the federal contribution was only 76 per cent or 78 per cent; now it is 107 per cent of what the province spends. Anyone who has sense and who wants to be fair ought to admit that this is not normal, that there is no reason why the provincial government should receive 7 per cent more than what it spends on post-secondary education. The equalization program provides unconditional support but it is totally unjustifiable to make a profit on program transfers.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette)—External Affairs—Future of Gibraltar within NATO; the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid)—(a) Hazardous Substances—Urea formaldehyde foam insulation—request that loans be granted to affected home owners. (b) Refinancing of homes. (c) Use of funds allocated for home renovation program; the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass)—Airports—Charlottetown airport expansion.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Notices of Motions Nos. 22, 35, 1, 48, 28, 43, 5 and 54 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

EMERGENCY PLANNING—P.C. 1981-1305, MAY 21, 1981, REGISTRATION SI/81-76 JUNE 10,1981

The House resumed from Thursday, December 17, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Friesen:

Emergency Planning

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, memos, telegrams and communications relating to the order respecting Emergency Planning, P.C. 1981-1305, May 21, 1981, Registration SI/81-76 June 10, 1981.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was last in the House, I had just made a brief five-minute introductory speech before time ran out. Therefore, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to continue my remarks.

From time to time in this House non-issue issues seem to dominate its deliberations and the media outside this chamber. These non-issue issues, as I call them, are issues that really have little or no substance to them, but they are issues that pack an enormous psychological clout. They are designed for that very reason, to scare the heck out of as many Canadians as possible and, in so doing, besmirch the reputation of the present administration.

We have had excellent examples of two of these non-issue issues over the last six months. The two issues that I refer to are, of course, the taxation of imputed rental value of homes which the official opposition party raised, and the issue of internment camps created by planning order P.C. 1981-1305.

If I had the opportunity of speaking to the first non-issue issue, I would bring the attention of the House to its inadequacy. However, since we are dealing with the second one, it is my pleasure this afternoon to outline the nature of that issue, as I see it, and explain frankly why Canadians should not be concerned with that as an issue and why it should be completely dismissed and taken from the table of legitimate debate in Canadian society today.

We have two choices in this House when it comes to emergency planning. We can believe that we are living in a paradise in which nothing happens, to which nothing can happen and for which there is no need to plan; or we can believe that since we live in a very real world with all sorts of potential dangers in it which are growing increasingly more hazardous as we move more steadily into the industrial nuclear age, we must prepare for one emergency or another, domestic or foreign.

This government chose the latter option. I do not think anyone in this House would dispute that. Any party that forms the government would have to assume that at some time or other, in one part of the country or other, emergencies will develop, that we must anticipate them and have the personnel, resources and equipment ready to deal with them. If you accept that we must be ready for those unknown, unforeseen and yet very real emergencies that lie ahead of us, and we must obviously plan for them.

This government was faced with two basic options. It could have decided to plan exclusively within the confines of one single, large federal department. I am sure members opposite would argue that such a department would be typically and bureaucratically top-heavy, and in the end when it had to act would probably do so in a way less effective than we had anticipated.

The other option, of course, was to have built on the diversity which characterizes the Canadian nation, the diversity which hon. members opposite often referred to in many of the debates on the Constitution. This diversity I am referring to is the diversity of resources that lie in the volunteer section of our society, at the provincial level and at the municipal level. The federal government's relationship to those three segments would be to provide the resources necessary for each of those three groups to do whatever job is needed in that future unforeseen circumstance of national, regional or local tragedy.

Of those two options which I have just outlined, the government in its wisdom, and I hope members opposite will agree, has chosen to create plans built on the diversity of talent which exists in this nation today. So far I do not think I have said anything with which members opposite could disagree. The conclusions which this government has reached, namely that we should have emergency plans and they should be based on the diversity of Canada, would, I think, meet with the agreement of all three parties in this chamber.

Having said that, and I think having the agreement of members opposite, we now begin to enter the realm of speculation and, I would argue, distortion by the official opposition. It claims that in planning for these future emergencies, this government has created new, unprecedented powers. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has made that claim time and time again. The Globe and Mail, which appears to be his official organ, has repeated that claim almost as often as he has.

That accusation is, simply, straightforwardly and patently false. I dare not call it a lie because that would be unparliamentary language. But it is a distortion of the reality of the planning authority which is the backbone of this planning order. The planning order does not create new powers. What it does is assign responsibilities to the various departments of government. These departments have always had those responsibilities. There is nothing new in any of them. Those responsibilities stretch all the way back to the administration of the late Lester B. Pearson. Those responsibilities are almost two decades old.

The disturbing aspect of this debate, the distortion which has been made by the opposition party, is that the opposition knows this. It knows that those responsibilities have always been with those departments. It knows this because members of the opposition recently asked for a legal opinion on that very issue. The opinion which they received concluded that the government had the power to issue such an order in council as I am presently describing and that the government has acted validly and within an existing jurisdiction.

Being aware of that legal opinion, opposition members have apparently shifted the focus of their argument. They have moved on to ask this question: If the departments already have responsibility for that planning, do they have the authority to implement the plans? I believe the answer to that is twofold. First, the answer may be found in existing legislation. I would point out to hon. members opposite that the National Defence Act provides military aid to the civil power. The Energy Supplies Emergency Act of 1979 carries within it the authority to implement emergency plans, as do the various plans that fall under the aegis of the disaster financial assistance arrangements.

Although I could make further comments, I hope I have made my point that within existing legislation there lies a firm foundation of authority for the government to exercise and implement emergency plans which may be necessary in the future. There may be need for future special legislation to deal with areas which are not covered by the legislation which I have enumerated. It may be that special legislation will be prepared by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) who has special responsibility for these matters. I cannot speak on his behalf so I do not know if he will be bringing special legislation to the attention of the House.

It may that the House will wish to deal with special legislation at the time of an emergency. A decision such as that is not without risks. For example, it takes several days to prepare any bill for discussion and obtain passage in the House. In times of emergency we cannot afford a couple of days to await the reaction of federal, provincial and municipal governments. Reaction by these governments as well as volunteer groups such as the Red Cross must be immediate and focused. A couple of days just might mean the difference between life and death for thousands and perhaps millions of Canadians.

What happens if the House is not sitting? What happens if the House is in recess or has prorogued? Indeed, what happens if this House were dissolved and the three parties were involved in a general election? These are matters which every member of the House should recognize and remember when regarding, as suspiciously as opposition members do, the powers within the War Measures Act. Despite how abhorrent this act may appear to some members of the House, it allows the government to react immediately to any emergency which might arise when the House is not sitting. I would urge hon. members to recognize the attractive and responsible portions of that act and understand that it can be legitimately invoked on behalf of all Canadians at any time under conditions of a physical or military emergency.

I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that the major arguments and criticisms directed at this government over this non-issue issue, namely that it is without precedent, are totally false. I think I have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the House that there is absolutely nothing new or without precedent in the authority which this government would use to direct emergency operations within the dominion of Canada. Not only is there nothing new in this order, but more importantly it is obvious and clear that this order in council is within the law. This government is not acting illegally and has absolutely nothing to hide.

The roots of this order lie deep in the administrative and legislative history of this House. They stand exposed: clearly, honestly and openly before all members in this chamber. For anyone opposite to conclude and argue otherwise is to give this debate an irrational and demeaning character which will not serve the interests and welfare of the citizens of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, prior to commencing my remarks I would like to ask for the indulgence of the House. I believe there are another fifteen minutes left before the government can make its summation and the mover, the member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), can summarize as well. I wonder if the House would be so inclined as to give unanimous consent that I share those fifteen minutes with my colleague, the member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers)?

Mr. Miller: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, members of my party have not had an opportunity to express our views in this debate. I would like the opportunity to do so within the next fifteen minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. I recognize the hon. member for Provencher.

Mr. Epp: That being the case, I regret that my colleague will not have an opportunity to speak. However, I intend to take the fifteen minutes.

With respect to the topic which is before us, the government emergency planning Order, I would first like to commend the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta for his vigilance, the vigilance of my deskmate, the member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), as well as that of other members in the House in terms of this planning order.

The member who spoke on behalf of the government a moment ago made it appear that this emergency planning order is simply a pro forma approach by the government. He said it is something the like of which the government has been in the practice of passing and that its justification is that it is good planning for the future. On the face of it, one might say there is some validity to those arguments; but are they the real issues which are facing us? I suggest that is not the case.

The issues facing us are the following. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta and other hon. members have mentioned them before. The first is why legislation was not brought into the House. Why did the government have to use a regulation, an order in council, to pass the emergency order? I telephoned a provincial member who participated at the federal-provincial conference and asked him if he and his colleagues agreed to this kind of procedure whereby this matter is dealt with through the regulatory approach. He said, "We raised objections even at that time", in terms of the scope of these emergency planning orders. This is not a matter on which the government should be moving ahead and defending under the aegis of good planning. It goes much further than that.

It is interesting to note how quickly Canadians have become aware that their civil rights can be removed by the government, not through legislation but, rather, through this order. It is ironic that in this month when we will be getting back our Constitution, including a charter of rights, we should even be debating an emergency planning order by regulation rather than by legislation. Since the 1970 crisis, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has committed himself a number of times to bringing that kind of legislation to the House. It is because of the vigilance of hon. members on this side of the House, both in the House and outside, that this debate has been forced, and I commend those hon. members for that.

What is being defended by the government as being good planning? Let us look at some of the issues. I repeat that this planning order was never passed in the House or debated in the House other than through this motion. Under this planning order—without parliamentary approval, I might add—the Prime Minister could manage and co-ordinate the national information services. What are the national information services? Does this mean that freedom of the press will be suspended by a declaration, an edict or an order of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Paproski: They do it in Russia.

Mr. Epp: Is that the national information service?

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) could control and regulate farm production and food trade, both internal and external. Has that matter been debated with the farmers of Canada? Have they debated the fact that the Minister of Agriculture can control agricultural production and distribution?

When we discussed the Constitution we talked about mobility rights. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) would have the power under this order to control the registration and movement of civilian manpower and "arrange any required international manpower transactions".

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) could control all fuel production, assess national and regional requirements, establish such priorities as may be required and regulate international and external trade.

The next power to which I will refer is possibly the one which has been focused on most acutely in the public, and that is that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) would establish and operate civilian internment camps and, if necessary, by "the selective reduction and transfer of the present population". Those words need some interpretation.

Mr. Huntington: The RCMP are not involved either.

Mr. Epp: What does it mean? Are the RCMP involved?

Mr. Huntington: No, they are not.

Mr. Epp: The minister has been asked in this House whether he is already working on the setting up of internment camps. He has been very coy in his answers because he does not want to answer definitively yes, that is what he is doing. However, if we follow the logic of the hon. member who just spoke—he said this is only for good planning—we wonder if this is being planned as well, and if it is not, is this then outside the scope of good planning? For example, the Solicitor General was asked recently whether he has already determined which prison population can be moved out so that civilian populations can be moved in. He chose not to answer that either.

People might say this is simply a scare tactic. If that charge is valid, why did the government not follow up on the commitment the Prime Minister has made since 1970 to bring legislation into this House? Why, in the stealth of night behind closed doors in cabinet, did a regulation have to be passed?

Mr. Kelly: Maybe it was in the stealth of day.

Mr. Paproski: Surreptitiously.

Mr. Epp: No matter what time of day it was, it was wrong, and the reason hon. members opposite are back pedalling as rapidly as they can is that Canadians are very conscious of the fact that when their civil rights are in jeopardy, there will be a reaction. People will react against any government which appears to take powers unto itself which should be left to the people.

People might think we are over-reacting because "it can't happen in Canada".

Mr. Paproski: Don't kid yourself!

Mr. Epp: Hon. members of this House have different backgrounds. I am not for a minute trying to equate this government with governments in other countries because I do not think that is a fair tactic. However, I want to put something before the House because someone has said that the only protection of civil rights is the constant vigilance of the electorate to maintain those rights. Why is it that Canadians who have ethnic backgrounds react so quickly to this kind of situation? They do so because they carry the scars of their own backgrounds. They carry the scars of bitter experiences in which governments have moved against people and the rights of those people. I want to tell the government very clearly that democratic rights can be removed very easily, and that can be seen to be very justifiable. However, a question remains as to whether the general public is willing to give up certain rights for the nebulous concept of immediate security. Many governments have sold the concept of restriction of civil rights for the illusory promise of security.

I said that many of us react because of our backgrounds. My own people, who were welcomed by this country, were able to escape, but some of our family members did not. My uncle, now passed on, spent 22 years in a Soviet internment camp. His crime? He was of the wrong political persuasion. What was that persuasion? He had never been involved in public life or political action. His crime was that he was a land owner. He had property. It was not even his property, it was his father's, and because he was the eldest, he expected to inherit it. He felt he had a responsibility to his father to stay on that land, and he paid for it with 22 years of his life. His children, who happen to be my relatives, still cannot move back to the Crimea where the family once lived. They have never been back, and today they still live in Kazakhstan, in the so-called virgin lands, because of the crime of their father in that he was a land owner.

I am repeating myself because I do not want what I am saying to be equated with what this government or any Canadian government is doing. I am simply saying that all of us in the House must be vigilant and must not exchange supposed security for our rights. That is dangerous, extremely dangerous. The reason the government is in trouble on this issue is not necessarily to be found in all its provisions. The reason rather, is that the government chose again to act by order in council. The government did not see the need and definitely did not take the action of bringing the emergency order into the House in legislative form.

One must ask the question: how many times does the issue of government by regulation have to be expounded on the floor? When will the government learn that every time it does this it removes a little more of the rights of Canadians and of the responsibilities they have given to their representatives on this floor.

This issue is extremely critical in the minds of Canadians today because they are worried about their economic security. They are worried about the world scene in terms of a nuclear holocaust. They are convinced that they should not allow government to trample over their rights through orders in council and regulations for the supposed security and orderly planning which the government indicates is inherent in this emergency order. I commend the members of the House who have forced the government into debate through this mechanism. I regret that again legislation was not seen to be the best vehicle to bring the issue to the floor of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It was called to the attention of the House that according to Standing Order 48(2). I must now interrupt the debate, 90 minutes having expired. At this point a minister on behalf of the government—and I believe the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) seeks unanimous consent to be recognized on behalf of the government—has five minutes to reply, followed by the mover of the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Thank you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order so that the House will realize that the practice of a parliamentary secretary replying for a minister designated by the rules will not be taken as a precedent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair asked for unanimous consent of the House, recognizing that it was necessary, and there appeared to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: There is in fact unanimous consent. I simply stated that this should not be taken as a precedent.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its consent. I assure the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that we will not assume this to be a precedent. I am simply batting for the minister because unavoidably he is unable to be here.

I regret that this issue has aroused a number of unfortunate concerns in the minds of hon. members of the House and of Canadians as a whole. Some of the things which have been said really represent a misunderstanding. I do not question the intentions of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) or of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I think some of the statements which have been made are misleading. I do not think they are deliberately misleading but they are misleading. I should like to point out a couple of facts.

First, obviously the order in council cannot give government any powers it does not already have. It has been suggested today that the government is taking powers unto itself by virtue of this order in council. That is simply not correct. The order in council designates to various ministers the lines of jurisdiction to which they should be looking, in terms of the areas for which they are expected to have plans drawn up.

Second, it is very important to bear in mind that the order in council is not a brand new one. It is a revision of a 1965 order in council. I have read the 1965 order quite carefully. In fact there are previous orders going back to the 1940s, which I have also read quite carefully. They were not as comprehensive as the 1965 order in council. In the 1965 order there was reference to internment camps in wording identical to this one. It was delegated to the minister of justice in the 1965 order as opposed to the solicitor general, but it is in there; there is nothing new about it. What I am saying is that obviously the order was on the books the entire time the government, of which the hon. member for Provencher was a minister, was in power. If there was something in it which offended them about internment camps, they should have cancelled the order. But it was on the books the entire time they were in government. With regard to the internment camp issue, it would only come into force in the event of war. If Part I and Part II of the schedule are read carefully, that point can be quite clearly understood.

Reference was made today to vigilance on the part of the government and of the Canadian people. Can anyone seriously suggest that the government would be living up to its obligations if it had no plans to deal with emergencies in the country? I would suggest not. It is incumbent upon the government to have in place plans to deal with certain emergencies which in fact could arise.

With regard to the motion before us today, is the government trying to hide anything? No, we are not trying to hide anything. We are agreeable to the motion. As hon. members know, we cannot table the documents until they have been translated. They are quite voluminous. Translation has been under way for some time but is not yet completed. I had discussions with other members of the House and the consensus was that we would be agreeable to an order which could be issued if the House gave its unanimous consent, indicating that the papers be tabled as soon as the translation is completed. If unanimous consent is not forthcoming on that, then we would vote for the motion. We have nothing to hide. Canadians have nothing to fear. This is good, sound planning with regard to possible emergencies—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I have no problem accepting the validity of the word of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith). I think he was sincere in saying that the government was willing to turn the papers over. However, I am not willing to accept the word of the PCO or the PMO on this, which I think is the greater concern. I put this motion to the House last fall. The government could have been getting these documents ready since then, if it were serious about it.

Mr. Nielsen: That is six months.

Mr. Friesen: I put the motion on the floor because the government's argument has been that this is in preparation for an emergency. If in fact that is the case, the government could have begun with legislation out of which regulations would have flowed. The government has had plenty of time. As the parliamentary secretary said, the government has taken this from the 1965 order. I have read the 1965 order as well as this one. I would say with respect to the hon. member that this is not a simple redrafting. It is an entirely new order, if one makes a simple comparison between the 1965 order and this one.

If in fact there is no national emergency, then the government has time to bring forward legislation. If there is an emergency, then people have the right to know the nature of it, if the government really has trust in Canadians. There are some serious questions in the minds of Canadians, not the least of which rests upon a bedrock series of betrayals as the public sees it, from the leadership of the government. It is not simply this order which has betrayed the trust of Canadians; it is a long series of them. This is the culmination of those betrayals which the Canadian people feel.

I would add that it is the introduction of the new Constitution that raises questions. My friend and colleague, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) would have liked to have spoken on this and asked what the effect of this order would be on Clause 11, subclause (g), of that new Constitution, which reads:

—not to be found guilty on account of any act or omission unless, at the time of the act, or omission, it constituted an offence under Canadian or international law—

Whatever that means. Are we now subject to international law? Subclause (g) continues:

—or was criminal according to the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations.

Just yesterday I raised an issue with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) regarding Crown prerogative. What are the limits of Crown prerogative? The Prime Minister said to me here in the House, as reported in Hansard at page 16005, the following:

Certainly I am on sound ground in saying that any prerogative, royal or otherwise, can be limited by statute.

There is no statute, Mr. Speaker. Is that not saying that there is no limit to the Crown prerogative which the Prime Minister could invoke in times that he deems to be a matter of national emergency?

When the co-chairman of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments wrote to the Prime Minister, the letter was redirected to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). That letter confirms the fact that Crown prerogative would have precedent over any other aspect of these provisions.

We have a choice in our country and that is whether we are going to be governed by man or by law. It has been the history of our land and all democratic societies that freedom rests upon law. The reality of Crown prerogative within the loose context of these provisions indicates that we are easily becoming the victims of rule by man. I hope we never come to the stage in our country where a man, under the provisions of this law—this order in council—has control over censorship, and has control over all the powers of information. Surely the public needs information in order to make decisions. The public can be easily swayed, and if we are going to be ruled by a man with both kinds of powers that I mentioned, then surely we are falling victims to the powers of a dictatorship.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with the comments made by the parliamentary secretary in offering an alternative motion of tabling the papers, when available, in both official languages. He went on to say that if the opposition would not accept that, the government would vote for the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making an argument. He does not have a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am coming to the Official Languages Act.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Epp: Question.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a point of argument which could have been made during the course of debate. I have to rule at this point that he does not have a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the Official Languages Act was not debated under this motion. I am talking about tabling. I assume from what the parliamentary secretary said that the government would agree to table these documents.

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Dionne (Nothumberland-Miramichi): But he has said they are not available in both official languages.

An hon. Member: That is the government's problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has made his point. However, at this stage the Chair feels obliged to put the question.

Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Instead of showing the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) as being the seconder of the motion, I would appreciate if the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) could appear in the record as being the seconder instead. The hon. member for Hillsborough is not in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is out of order. The Chair read a record of the motion as originally put to the House. The record of the proceedings of the House will so indicate.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Friesen) which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: It being past six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6.09 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-97, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, and to provide for payments to certain provinces, as reported, (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and Motion No. 1 (Miss MacDonald) and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, we were treated to the hon. member from Gloucester (Mr. Breau)—who was privileged to go around the country with the fiscal arrangements task force, its report being known as the Breau report—coming before the House and trying to justify what he said was political morality. He indicated that, despite the terms of that report, which clearly dealt with what is described now as revenue guarantee, he was prepared to sell that principle out. He was prepared to sell out the principle that the report sets out in Chapter X. I read the relevant parts of that chapter into the record on second reading. In political morality one must wonder about the attitude of the member for Gloucester, particularly when he compares the settlement eventually arrived at with his province. He says somewhere along the line "We lost, we lost a great deal of money on established programs; but we picked it up on equalization." The fact is, if he would read his own report—he was the chairman of the task force—with respect to equalization he would find that the province of New Brunswick was diddled out of equalization and is being diddled now, with his concurrence and consent, with respect to the established programs financing act.

The only interpretation, Mr. Speaker, that can possibly be given to the member for Gloucester of his performance here this afternoon is that he is looking for a cabinet position. He is looking for a cabinet position and probably he is not going to get it. He is prepared to sell out his province, sell out his university, sell out the hospitals, because he thinks he is getting more for them under this deal than he would get if he stood behind his own report, a report to which he should be proud to attach his name. I and other members of the committee sat with him as our chairman, and we came up with a report that was virtually unanimous, saying very clearly and unequivocally that any cuts in the established programs would cut into muscle and sinew, and would make those programs not viable.

From time to time, Mr. Speaker, as it goes in political contest, when you have a member from one party representing one part of the city and a member from another party representing another part of the city, we often find we are in debate locally. So I want to make some reference to the speech made to the House this afternoon by the hon. member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher).

He was refreshingly honest. He made no bones about it. He said clearly that $937 million in cash is being taken from the provinces that would normally go to health and post-secondary education this year, and $1,058 million next year. He said quite clearly the government could not accept the amendment of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) because we are in a period of restraint. He said the government had no intention of spending that kind of money on post-secondary education and health care.

He was not refreshingly honest, unfortunately, with respect to the question of restraint. He followed the attitude expressed by the government in that respect, restraint in every program except the programs that mean most to the people of Canada. We see no restraint in the CBC. Their budget goes up by $73 million. We see no restraint in CIDA. Its budget goes up $146 million. We see no restraint on government advertising. We will have more programs with Canada geese flying across the TV screens. We see no restraint with regard to the programming for the forthcoming Royal visit. We see no restraint with the Enterprise Development Board which is blowing $125 million on Consolidated Computer. We see no restraint in the enterprise development loan guarantee program and the Enterprise Development Board. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) clearly admits this will cost us millions and millions of dollars as loans are defaulted on one after another because of inept, incompetent and incapable management.

We see no restraint with respect to guarantees under the Export Development Program, for example, guarantees to make 10 per cent or less money available to Algerians to build monuments to the revolution. One colleague suggests it was two bananas and a doughnut around it and a McDonald's sign on the bottom. This is what our money is being spent on. There is no restraint on money to subsidize interest on loans of over $600 million to the Soviet Union to build gas pipeline facilities.

The restraint is on what the people of Canada want. Talk to them. Talk to them in your riding, Mr. Speaker, or the ridings of Lincoln, Parkdale or Hamilton West. Ask them whether they would rather have restraint on foreign aid programs or restraint on medicare.

The people of Canada are not concerned about which government pays the bill. There is only one taxpayer. The established programs financing act is part of the fiscal arrangements of all of Canada. It happens to be convenient in order to spread the risk in Canada. It happens to be convenient in order to make sure that we have decent medical and post-secondary education facilities across the country. That is the way we organize a co-operative federalism.

This government does not give a damn about co-operative federalism. Because these programs may, under the Constitution, fall within the ambit of provincial responsibility, the government is prepared to say they are open to drastic cuts, almost a billion dollars this year, $1 billion next year and $2 billion in two years. That is the attitude of this government clearly expressed by the hon. member for Mississauga North. That is where the restraint is going to be.

That hon. member will have restraint even in his part of Mississauga where a new hospital is to be built. He will have us restrain the growth of that hospital as well as the medical fees to doctors. There will be reduced services for his constituents and mine. We live in the same city. That is the restraint he would have.

He is quite prepared to vote for more foreign aid, a larger budget for the CBC and more Liberal advertising bunko on television. He is prepared to vote and to recommend, as his minister does, that medical services be cut back, that funds for Erindale College and the University of Toronto be cut back. He would have cutbacks for young people trying to build a future because the expenditures are not made directly by the federal government but are financed in co-operation with the provincial governments.

Some effort was made in the bunko leading up to this proposal by the Government of Canada that the provinces were not carrying their weight. The purpose of our amendment is to allow a task force to inquire into that in order to find out how these established programs should be financed. We say there should be another two years so this can be properly looked at.

I want to bring to the attention of hon. members evidence produced before tha task force committee with respect to medical services. The federal government's share of provincial health programs was 47.9 per cent in 1979-80. In 1980-81 it was 47.6 per cent. As the years go by, this becomes smaller. Indeed, the outlook prepared by the Department of National Health and Welfare indicates that even if the established programs financing stays the same, the federal share of health financing will continue to decrease. Therefore, all this talk about the provinces not carrying their weight with respect to health care financing is nonsense. All the members opposite have to do is to read the documentation produced by the Department of National Health and Welfare to the task force and produced on April 14, 1981, in, of all things, a slide presentation.

Mr. Epp: Slide?

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, to sell us on the deal.

Mr. Epp: I thought it was a sly presentation.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is a slime presentation today, but the truth is what they said in April, 1981. It is slime today because they do not say the same now as they said in April, 1981. Today, in the mirage and smoke and mirrors of tax points, they say they are not cutting. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), bless her soul, is totally incapable of calculating anything. As a matter of fact, she takes pride in the fact that she cannot make a calculation. She says in the House that she is increasing health expenditures by 13.4 per cent. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance says that we are ripping them off by $937 million this year. The Minister of National Health and Welfare says there will be a 13.4 per cent increase and he says there will be $937 million less.

Well, it does not take a great deal of intelligence to read the figures—maybe grade three learning. The hon. member for Mississauga North has at least that level of education and he can tell us the correct figures. In fact, he has told us the correct figures and perhaps he could go to the ministry of health and give its minister some correct figures.

While he is doing this, he might as well talk to the minister in charge of lotteries. I say the minister in charge of lotteries because the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) has abandoned any claim he has to represent the interests of post-secondary education. He is the minister of lotteries and the minister of "gimmes", the quick buck fix. He has no intention of giving fair consideration to what is happening. He indicates that education spending is rising by 12 per cent, but the member for Mississauga North is correct—the budgets are being cut and cut drastically. These cuts will apply to every student, teacher and everyone who wishes to progress and better himself in our society.

We hear stories of libraries being cut back and publications going down the drain. Witnesses who have appeared before the committee have told us that. Essential community courses such as English as a second language are being cut out because they are no longer essential. People are told it is no longer essential because they speak the language of the country. This is the kind of attitude which the government takes toward development which is necessary to make our country grow and prosper again.

Cuts are taking place in some of the most essential services. These cuts are occurring because of the intention of government to restrain its expenditures. There is no restraint by this government. Its intention is to eliminate moneys over which they do not have absolute control. It is an attempt to make the provinces pick up a deficit in some areas so that it can have a larger deficit in other areas. The government is not showing restraint; it is only attempting to transfer deficits.

The hon. member for Mississauga North said that maybe I am a spender. We are not talking about a change in spending patterns. We are discussing the question of established programs. This is a new spending program for new foreign aid ventures, new spending for new CBC development, new spending for new advertising ventures. This is ensuring that the medical health care systems we have are retained and that the established education programs which we have organized in Canada remain.

When our party proposed that the existing programs be extended for two years, it is because there has been a feeling across the country that the provinces have not paid their share over the years. Therefore, if that is the case, we make the same suggestion as the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada has made. Let us have a task force on education to find out who should finance these programs. Should they be financed by a voucher system, as suggested by the Secretary of State? Should they be financed as they presently are? Should they be financed by a 50-50 contribution between federal and provincial governments? Perhaps they should be financed by direct grants to universities and colleges from the federal government, but certainly we should have an inquiry into the subject, which is the reason for proposing a two-year hoist on the matter. Any sensible Liberal member would accept that suggestion.

The same argument applies to health causes. We have evidence of people having to wait from three to six months for a hospital room in order to get to the operating room. We have evidence of people who are in fact dying because they cannot be operated on for a heart condition. We have evidence of people who must lie on stretchers in hospital corridors and some who can only get into a hospital because of an emergency. These incidents must stop. I suggest that the government members, and particularly backbenchers in the government, must fulfil their obligation to their constituents and recognize what is happening to our established programs.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of letting some of the comments of the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) go unchallenged. Let us set one matter straight for the record immediately. In the report to which he referred he used the words "virtually unanimous". When a recommendation is not accepted unanimously all we know is that it was approved by a majority of the members.

Mr. Blenkarn: It was unanimous.

Mr. Herbert: I will repeat here what I said in the committee. As far as the revenue guarantee is concerned, I was opposed to its continuance. I said that in committee previously, said that in committee today and I am repeating it on the floor of the House tonight. I was not in favour of the continuance of the revenue guarantee which has already been continued for five years too long.

With respect to the effect of the discontinuance, since 1972 the provinces were supposed to readjust their financing by themselves within the ensuing five-year period as they have the right to levy their own taxes as they see fit. There is absolutely no logical reason at all for continuing this payment.

However, I would like to make an important point. It is that the revenue guarantee was approximately $800 million this year. If the hon. member for Mississauga South is honest he will know that in the spring of this past year, 1981, when we were reviewing the amount which was being transferred to the provinces in the past year—we had the estimates—we were looking at transfers in fiscal equalization amounting to approximately $3.4 billion, of which $1.7 billion was going to my own province of Quebec.

What the opposition has chosen to ignore is that a program of equalization is based on the capacity of various provinces. During this past year there has been a change in the amount that has been paid due to necessity. In fact, the province of Quebec during this year which has just terminated on March 31, 1982, will have received from the equalization program a total of $2.1 billion, or $400 million more. For the total program, including all Maritime provinces, the increase alone was over $800 million. I am not referring to the increase that applies to the Canada Assistance Plan. If you consider those amounts combined, the amount that the provinces received extra in the last year which they could not possibly have counted upon at April 1, at the beginning of last year, is in excess of $1 billion. Therefore, anyone who does not talk about that but chooses to talk only about what they see as cuts on the other side is giving a false impression.

He made another point with which I do not agree. He said they want to dispose of the revenue guarantee, which they cannot control. Will he please acknowledge that post-secondary education funding is completely and unconditionally transferred? There is nothing which obliges the provinces to use these moneys for post-secondary education and, in fact, there are two provinces to which the federal government transfers more in cash than those provinces actually spend. I want that on the record too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: Furthermore, when it comes to health care, we transfer a sum on a per capita basis or on a population basis. It is block funding but, in essence, right across the board we transfer an equivalent sum per province according to its population. Once again, although the funds are earmarked for a certain purpose, we do not decree the amount that should be spent on health care. That is a provincial decision, and if there is any reduction in services, the responsibility is one hundred per cent that of the provinces.

Today a very right wing group, the Canadian Medical Association, appeared before the committee and gave evidence which annoyed me intensely. I will quote some of its remarks as follows:

> We see no reason why the Government of Canada must give every province exactly the same amount of money per capita for health care regardless of the health care needs or financial ability of the provinces. We see no reason why the Government of Canada should not promote reasonably comparable health services in every part of this country by providing 60 per cent or 70 per cent of health care costs in some provinces and only 40 per cent or 30 per cent in richer ones. Why not incorporate the principle of equalization into federal support of medicare? Why not establish a program earmarking federal health care funds directly related to the health care needs and inversely related to the fiscal capacity of the provinces?

I had to laugh when I heard that and after listening to the approach of that association today because it seemed to me that it would mean less money going to the richer provinces and more going to the poorer provinces, which is a means of equalization. I do not oppose that, but I merely say that if we take these figures and extrapolate them according to the populations of the richer and poorer provinces, the net effect will be a transfer of fewer dollars, and to me that does not make too much sense.

The point is that, in fact, the amount of money that has been transferred in the past year, which ended yesterday, has increased, by the very nature of the programs themselves, by more than $1 billion. That is $1 billion that the provincial governments could not have included in their budgets for this past fiscal year. And it is equally possible, depending on the way the economy goes in the ensuing year, that there could be equivalent increases.

Hon. members opposite continually harp on the fact than any reduction in services is a federal responsibility. First, the federal government does not control in any way the spending of funds for health care. Second, the federal government does not even earmark transfers for post-secondary education which, as I have indicated, in some cases amount to more than the amount spent by the provinces. The federal government transfers unconditionally all equalization payments to the provinces. When the federal government pays the bill for the Canada Assistance Plan, it writes the cheque according to the amount a province decides to spend. The decision in each one of those programs rests entirely with the provincial governments. As long as the federal government is transferring 20 per cent of its budget to provincial treasuries for responsibilities which are entirely provincial, I do not think the provinces should come back and spit in our face for our generosity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I was amazed at the speeches we heard, first from the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) and now from the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). Any resemblance between the speech made here by the hon. member for Gloucester and the report of the all-party task force which he chaired is purely coincidental.

Let me spend a few moments dealing with the speech made by the hon. member for Vaudreuil. He was defending the action of the federal government as enunciated in this bill, which will mean that in the next five years the funds which the federal government has paid to the provinces—in block funds, but which originally were directed to help finance health care and post-secondary education—will be reduced by $5.7 billion.

Mr. Herbert: Not true.

Mr. Gauthier: Not true.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member says it is not true. I have the figures. I do not mean the figures I used this afternoon which, as the hon. member for Gloucester said, were last November's figures. I have recent figures. Let me put on the record what the reduction for the province of Quebec will be in the next five years. It will not be a reduction in actual funds from what Quebec received this year but from the amount it would have received—

Mr. Gauthier: Ah, a reduction in the increase.

Mr. Orlikow: It is the reduction from the amount Quebec would have received—

Mr. Gauthier: A reduction in the increase.

Mr. Orlikow: —if we had continued with the present formula. The reduction in the next five years for the province of Quebec will be $1.399 billion. Since I have been a Member of Parliament here in Ottawa, almost every day I have read either The Montreal Star, when it was being published, or the Montreal Gazette, and almost every day I read about cutbacks in hospital services in the province of Quebec. Almost every day I read about the increasingly difficult situation of universities, and particularly English universities in Quebec such as McGill University and Concordia University. I hope five years from now the hon. member for Vaudreuil is still around so that he can explain to his constituents why the services and the standard of education at McGill University, Concordia and Macdonald College have been cut the way they will be cut and why hospital services have been cut.

Mr. Gauthier: Blame the provinces. Put the blame on the provinces.

Mr. Orlikow: I am told that Quebec is now the heaviest taxed province in the country.

Mr. Gauthier: There is a socialist government in charge there.

Mr. Orlikow: It will not do the people of Quebec very much good and it will not help them very much if they are told it is the provincial government which has to cut the services. The fact is that the standard of services for the people the hon. member for Vaudreuil represents will be cut very substantially because of the attitude he takes.

The hon. member for Gloucester tried to say this afternoon that the province of New Brunswick, his province, would not suffer. Well, the amount of money in the next five years that the province of New Brunswick will get less than the amount it would get under the formula we have had until now is $133 million.

I want to put on the record some of the conclusions of the all-party task force which the hon. member for Gloucester chaired. Let me read just a couple of paragraphs from a news report which appeared in The Globe and Mail the day after the report was tabled so that hon. members will not think I am somehow misrepresenting or editing unfairly what that task force, headed by the hon. member for Gloucester, said.

Mr. Deans: You wouldn't do that. We would never think that of you.

Mr. Orlikow: Let me quote from the article, as follows:

> There is no fat left in federal-provincial spending on health, post-secondary education and social assistance programs, according to the parliamentary task force that has been investigating major shared-cost programs.

There is no fat, yet the federal government introduces this bill. I think the hon. member for Vaudreuil was on that committee.

Mr. Epp: He signed it.

Mr. Deans: He signed the document.

Mr. Orlikow: But he is willing to go along with this very substantial reduction in federal funding. The article went on to say that there is:

> —no fat in post-secondary education, no excess spending in social assistance, little redundancy on social services . . . serious cuts in program funding would cut into muscle and sinew, not fat.
> Federal cutbacks, the task force says, would almost certainly mean shifting the load. In health, this would mean more reliance on user charges and extra-billing; in education, higher tuition fees. "In either case, basic national objectives of equity and equality of access would suffer," the report says.

Another paragaph reads:

> —there does not exist a long-term structural mismatch between the revenue capacities and expenditure responsibilities of the federal government. It cannot be claimed that the capacity of the federal government to raise revenues has reached a structural (as opposed to a political or discretionary) ceiling.

• (2040)

They are not alone. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), that great representative from my city, spoke at a meeting earlier this week in Winnipeg. In reference to the brief prepared by the Canadian Association of University Teachers, of which he was one of the less distinguished members before coming here, he said that the CAUT statement was full of hyperbole unsubstantiated by fact. He has not been away from the city of Winnipeg and his teaching role that long. He ought to know—and I am sure he does—that the university at which he taught is short of space. Its library is a disgrace and its laboratories have 50-year-old equipment. This is the situation of the university at which the minister taught. Also he knows that the new government of Manitoba was left with a deficit of almost $300 million when it took office a few months ago, and that the deficit will be larger this year. When the federal government cuts back on funding, which should have been allocated and directed as it was until a few years ago to post-secondary education, it will be difficult if not impossible for provincial governments, with the possible exception of the government of Alberta, to pick up the deficits with which they will be saddled by the federal government. Yet we have members of the task force—

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not mind.

Mr. Tousignant: The hon. member is talking about deficits all over Canada as if the federal government were responsible for them. Is he trying to tell us now that if a woman becomes pregnant in Canada, it is the fault of the federal government?

Mr. Deans: Listen, are you denying it?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind answering questions with some common sense or of relevance. I cannot say that I heard anything relevant in the question just addressed to me.

Mr. Gauthier: We feel the same way you do.

Mr. Orlikow: The Liberal federal government has a deficit. The Conservative government of Ontario has a deficit.

Mr. Tousignant: The Saskatchewan government has a deficit.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, the NDP government of Saskatchewan has a deficit. Will we severely cut services so that they will not meet the needs of people, because we are afraid of deficits? We are saying that it is necessary to maintain and even to improve services. Even if deficits get bigger, we are prepared to accept it.

I should like to put on the record a few quotations from some of the presentations which were made to the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. The task force did not arrive at its conclusions in some mysterious way or take its arguments out of thin air. Some of the most prestigious, knowledgeable organizations in Canada appeared before the task force and gave all the arguments as to why the federal government should not reduce its contribution to post-secondary education and health care as it is. The Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada appeared before the task force and in part indicated:

> The task force rightly concluded that " . . . there is no fat left in the post-secondary education system . . . " Provincial grants to universities since the introduction of EPF have in large part been below the rate of inflation.

It went on to argue that the federal government should continue to fund institutions as it has in the past.

I wish the Minister of Employment and Immigration were here because he frequently worked for the Social Planning Council of Winnipeg which also appeared before the task force. In part it said:

> Obviously, the federal government cannot continue its commitment to minimum standards of human services and at the same time reduce expenditures in the social affairs envelope.

This is precisely what the government is doing. Then it went on to indicate:

> Services currently funded by the Canada Assistance Plan and the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons' Act, are widely admitted to be in their early developmental stages. Indeed, some services, such as home care, are not yet available in large parts of Canada. Clearly, minimum standards in these areas have not been reached and can never be achieved with expenditure reductions.

The council is calling for more expenditures, not just because they would improve services. In fact, many of those expenditures would save money. Providing a part-time worker to go into the home of a senior citizen who cannot manage by himself may cost $25 per day under home care. It would cost $200 or $250 per day for the same person to be in hospital, as so many of them are. We should not be cutting back or reducing our services. We need to improve our services, to change them, and to take another serious look at how they are doing.

I should like to refer to the presentation of The Canadian Council on Social Development to the parliamentary task force. The organization includes in its membership virtually every government, private and non-profit agency in the field of social development. It is highly respected, and it should be. Many federal government departments have representatives in that organization. Among other things, it said:

> —the impact of specific federal reductions will be generalized and spread over all social programs by provincial budgetary processes. Since health, welfare, and education programs compete for the same allocation of provincial treasuries, the loss will be shared across all three sectors and the unpopularity of resulting tax increases will be blamed on the three sectors equally.

We will see a reduction of services. It cannot be any other way. We know that seven of the ten provinces now have deficits. Faced with substantial cuts in funding by the federal government, what are their choices? Should they raise taxes, which is almost impossible at a time like this? What about user fees? It is not so many years ago that people who had someone in the family afflicted with a long-term illness were wiped out. I remember when in 1956 someone in my family spent three or four months in the hospital. I had to sell my house because hospitalization costs then were not covered by a universal plan. Thousands of people in Canada face the same situation. Tens of thousands of people in the United States—and not just poor ones—have been wiped out because of long-term illnesses in their families. The tuition fees in some of the United States universities today are running $12,000 to $14,000 per year.

If we are to have universities in Canada with any stature, particularly in have-not provinces such as New Brunswick represented by the hon. member for Gloucester, or Manitoba from which I come, it will be because the federal government over the years helped to build those institutions. In 1976-77 the federal government put close to $2 billion into post-secondary education. What we will see now with the passage of this bill will be a steady and inexorable decline in the standards of our universities and in the kinds of health services provided the people of Canada, about which all parties have been very proud until now. However, we are beginning to see the dismantling of most of the things that we accomplished in the last 25 or 30 years. I will not say that this Liberal government is being as brutal as President Reagan is in the United States, but it is a matter of degree, not a very big difference in degree. What we are seeing, however, are the first steps in the same kind of process, that has been such a disaster in the United States.

• (2050)

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member accept a serious question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Would the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) accept a question from the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) recognize that the province of Manitoba is one of the three western provinces which restricts entry of out-of-province students to 5 per cent of its university enrolment, whereas the two largest central provinces have something in the order of 30 per cent enrolment of out-of-province students? Would the hon. member try to get his newly elected government to change its 5 per cent limit on out-of-province students in order that there can be fair sharing across this country for students who would like to transfer from one province to another?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the fact to which the hon. member refers. I am not saying that it is not true, I am saying that I am not aware of the fact. If the hon. member will give me the details, I will be happy to take up the matter with the government of Manitoba. I want to say to the hon. member that there are many things about education with which I am not happy. I am not happy about the very high fees which some universities are charging foreign students, which means that only students from wealthy countries and wealthy families can come to our universities. If the hon. member wants to join me in that crusade, I will be happy to have him with me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Order, please. The House will now proceed to the consideration of the motion of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp).

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher) moved:

That Bill C-97, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be amended in Clause 2

(a) by adding immediately after line 19 at page 7 the following:

"(7.1) Notwithstanding sub-sections (1) to (5) and (7), but subject to sub-section (8), the fiscal equalization payment that may be paid to a province

(a) For fiscal years that begin on April 1, 1982 and for the duration of this part shall not be less than the amount equal to the sum of the percentage increase in fiscal equalization payments of the province with the second lowest percentage increase in entitlements in the absence of this section and that provinces' fiscal equalization payment for the fiscal year that begins on April 1, 1982, if any,

(b) In the event that a province's fiscal equalization entitlement for a year commencing after April 1, 1982 in the absence of sub-section (7.1) declines, its fiscal equalization entitlement under this section shall be reduced by the same amount";

(b) by striking out line 24 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor;

"determined under sub-section (6), (7) or (7.1)";

and

(c) by striking out line 29 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(7.1) for that year".

He said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the time this evening—and I know other members of the House want to speak—I will try to be as brief as possible.

The House might be somewhat surprised in terms of who the mover and the seconder of this amendment are, but I want to thank the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for seconding the motion.

This matter arises from the situation that has developed through the negotiations in federal-provincial fiscal arrangements as they affect Manitoba particularly. I said during second reading debate, and others in this House have said it as well, that I did not want to be provincial or parochial in the debate, but when one looks at the figures in terms of the equalization formula, one finds that without question the formula impacts on Manitoba most severely. People who have studied the formula, quite apart from those who come from the province in which I reside, generally agree about the impact. You will find there is a non-partisan approach to this matter in terms of the Progressive Conservative Party, the New Democractic Party here, and in fact, members of the Manitoba legislature, and it is on that basis that I raise it.

The debate that has taken place so far, and I do not want to reflect on the preceding voice vote, has generally focused on the established programs financing and cutbacks in that field. That matter has been dealt with very adequately in the amendment standing in the name of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). In terms of waiting for two years, they were not simply there to delay for the sake of delay but to be utilized for the purpose of negotiation, accommodation and agreement. That was the purpose. But what is unique is that the equalization formula is the major crux of the problem faced in Manitoba.

Prior to the negotiations that took place, we had the ten-province base. Then, when the federal government came in with its proposal, it brought in the Ontario base. The fear at that time was that Ontario as a province could become eligible for equalization payments. The argument then was that Ontario should not be eligible for equalization and, no matter what the financial factors were in Ontario relative to the rest of the country, Ontario would always be the base. That obviously reflected negatively on the province of Ontario, in fact, on the formula generally. Consequently, there was an amendment whereby a five-province base was used, the so-called have provinces.

The province I want to reflect on today is the province of Manitoba. Mr. Speaker, we heard in committee today the finance minister of Manitoba saying a number of startling things. He pointed out that his province would continue to face record high deficits for the next five years. We do not know what they will be, but the general projection is a minimum of $300 million per year. This will impact severely on that province's taxpayers not only in the sense of increased taxation but, equally importantly, on the ability to maintain national standards. That is another reason for the amendment by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. The fact is that Manitobans would have to lower their standards of health care and post-secondary education, which is unacceptable. The question then remains whether adjustments could be made in the transitional period to lessen the impact on Manitoba.

The Manitoba finance minister also said that while their deficit would increase, the federal government's deficit would decrease. I do not agree with the second part of that equation. When I look at the federal government's deficit position, my fear is that it is going to increase for the following reasons. As the economy flattens out, the Minister of Finance's projections in his November 12 budget concerning the deficit are out the window. In addition, the National Energy Program has had the effect of lowering the output of the have provinces. The province of Alberta, on which a lot of revenue projections were based, has not seen the growth projected in the NEP and in the energy agreement between Alberta and Canada.

Mr. Speaker, could we have some order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Those hon. members who are carrying on a conversation can perhaps do it behind the curtain and give the hon. member who has the floor the opportunity to complete his remarks.

Mr. Epp: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, I think the reduced deficit projections are now out the window. So what does the federal government do? Is there a transitional point whereby, for example, Manitoba would not be affected as greatly as it is under the five-province base? A number of us have looked at that question, and that is why you have the amendment. I said I would not be too long because I do not want to infringe on the time of other members, but the amendment proposes the following. I know there have been meetings with the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and I think even he has been somewhat surprised at the negative impact the equalization formula has had on Manitoba. What is being proposed is that the percentage share of equalization for Manitoba could not be less than the second worst percentage of any given year, relative to the other have-not provinces. The figures show, Mr. Speaker, that in 1982-83, Manitoba would receive equalization payments of 10.7 per cent, when the national average will be 13.6 per cent. In 1983-84 it would receive 10.7, when the national average will be 11.3 per cent. In 1984-85 it would receive 10.7 per cent, when the national average will be 10.5 per cent. In 1985-86 it would receive 10.7 per cent, when the national average will be 10.3 per cent, and in 1986-87 it will be 10.1 per cent, when the national average will be 10.3 per cent.

You will find, Mr. Speaker, and I mention this because of the transitional period—which is why the hon. member's amendment appeals to me because it impacts very heavily on Manitoba in the first two years—that we would be willing, if that amendment were carried, to let this amendment go by because I think we would then have taken care of that first two-year period. So in order to meet that transition problem for Manitoba, we are proposing to use the second worst percentage formula, if I can describe it in that fashion. If one looks at the formula today, Manitoba would lose $582 million net over five years. It was $747 million, but the Minister of Finance recognized the disparity and the loss has been reduced. So there has been recognition that a problem exists. I am simply saying that Manitoba taxpayers cannot afford to be locked into an equalization formula for five years which will impact on their ability to maintain national standards.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, there is the question of whether the amendment is in order. I know members who serve on the committee are familiar with the argument that, on the basis of the House rules and because it involves some $300 million over the life of the formula, the amendment is in violation of the royal prerogative in that the expenditure of public funds has to be a government initiative. Well, I accept that. If the government, for example, wants to move this amendment, or if it wants to modify it, I would be willing to look at the modification. I would be willing to have the government, after the discussions it has had, move an amendment similar to this one. The seconder of the motion can speak for himself, but I think he would want to consider that as well. We are simply saying that we do not approach this on a provincial, parochial or selfish basis. Rather, if we believe in equalization as it is to be entrenched in the Constitution, then surely it stands to reason that before we do that on April 16 we must have in place an equalization formula which is in fact not an equalization formula. We could have used any formula, for example the Alberta formula, and then everyone would have been eligible. I would suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher)—and he is in the House tonight—that if he is willing to examine this question from the suggested perspectives, I would be willing to discuss with him what modifications should be made. If he wants to adopt the amendment as his own, I accept that, but I say to him that the manner in which this equalization formula impacts on the taxpayer of Manitoba is not fair. Therefore, I commend the amendment to members of the House.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of the motion now before the House I would like to add to what the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has said about the reason this particular amendment is so important. It is only days before the new Constitution is proclaimed here in Canada. Equalization payments to the provinces will be included as part of the very Constitution of Canada. If we are able to proclaim that particular section of the Constitution with any kind of integrity and consistency, then I think the amendment now before the House must be approved by the House. The amendment would redress the way in which the province of Manitoba is now affected by the proposed equalization formula.

Before I go into any more of the arguments, I would like to put on the record what I know other hon. members have stated, even at second reading. I would like to tell the House about the way in which Manitoba is treated so unequally by this formula. In the first year of this five-year agreement, the percentage increase for Manitoba will be 9.9 per cent. What will it be for the other have-not provinces? It will range from 21 per cent to 10 per cent. In the second year of this five-year agreement, the percentage increase for Manitoba will be 6 per cent. What will it be for the other have-not provinces? It will range from 14.4 per cent to 10.7 per cent. The third year is when Manitoba will really get kicked in the teeth. Our percentage increase will be 2.8 per cent. What will it be for the other have-not provinces? It will be 11.3 per cent, 11.2 per cent, 11.8 per cent, 11.4 per cent and 10.7 per cent, compared to our 2.8 per cent increase. In the fourth year, what will be the percentage increase for Manitoba? It will be 3.8 per cent. Again, we are looking at figures of 11 per cent and 10 per cent for all the other have-not provinces. In the fifth year we will get an increase comparable to the other provinces, around 10 per cent.

The over-all effect is that over the five-year agreement Manitoba will receive a percentage increase in equalization payments of 37.2 per cent. The next lowest will be Quebec, at 66.1 per cent. That is from 37 per cent to 66.1 per cent. The other four have-not provinces, the Atlantic provinces, will all receive percentage increases in the 80 per cent range.

I simply ask, where is the justice? Where is the equalization in this? Where is the equality in this particular kind of proposal? What madness, vindictiveness, error or absence of mind led the government to develop and then to propose a formula which would treat a particular province, the province of Manitoba, in such a way? I am simply baffled. I am sincerely baffled as to why the government picked this particular formula out of all the formulas it could have picked. Other formulas would still have had the effect of reducing the government's over-all payments through equalization but would not have singled out any province as much as the province of Manitoba has been by this particular formula.

I therefore plead with hon. members on the government side to consider seriously the fact that this amendment has been moved with the support of both opposition parties. The government ought to consider making this amendment its own and bring it in before this bill goes forward.

What would be the effect of the amendment? The effect of the amendment would not be to bring Manitoba up to the highest level, to make sure that Manitoba gets exactly as much as everyone else. We realize that the formula, in order to stay a formula, must be treated with a certain amount of respect. Manitoba differs, in its fiscal capacity, from the Atlantic provinces. All this amendment asks is that in every year of that five-year agreement, Manitoba be paid a percentage increase which is at least as much as that paid the second worst province out of the six have-not provinces. That seems to me to be a rather humble proposal. We are not asking to be elevated to the top. All we are asking is that Manitoba be treated the same as the second worst province, as it works out in this formula.

I do not see any reason the government cannot accept this proposal. I want to put it very bluntly to the only two Liberal members from Manitoba. If this amendment is not passed and if the government does not make this amendment its own, I promise the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael) and I promise the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) that I will make sure the fact that they did not stand up for the interests of Manitoba in this House at this particular time will be carried to every doorstep in their ridings, bar none—they can count on it—in the next election.

An hon. Member: Let CUPE do it for you!

Mr. Blaikie: They are already in trouble. Between this matter and VIA Rail, we should be able to get rid of the hon. member for St. Boniface with no problem at all. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry will look after himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will hire him.

An hon. Member: The Senate. Senator Axworthy!

Mr. Blaikie: I am quite serious, but I look across at the hon. members, and they are smiling, having a bit of a jape among themselves. If they think this will not have some political impact on their fortunes in Manitoba, then they are kidding themselves. God knows, it could not get much worse, but they still do elect people out there. This will have an effect on the province of Manitoba and that effect will be made known to the voters of Manitoba by the provincial government and by members of both the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party.

There is an argument which has been offered concerning the reason Manitoba should not be complaining too loudly about the way it is treated by this equalization formula. Just for those who might have the misfortune of hearing it, the argument is that payments to Manitoba in the last five-year period were quite generous and that the formula has just worked out differently this time. One gets lucky in one five-year period and the next five-year period one gets unlucky. We really got unlucky this time, but that is another matter.

The reason that the equalization payments to Manitoba appear to be so generous in the last five-year period is that they are viewed in relation to the payments it received in the five-year period before that. One cannot view these equalization payments as a little snap photograph in history somewhere and then say, "Look what you were getting last time." The equalization payments Manitoba received from 1977 to 1982 were higher because it had received a bad deal for 1972 to 1977. It seems that the Liberals go in cycles. Now it seems that we are supposed to get a bad deal again. However, as I tried to point out, this time we are really getting a bad deal. We are getting such a bad deal that one finds the province of Manitoba getting a percentage increase which is approximately half of what the second worst province in the formula receives, or 37.2 per cent as opposed to 66.1 per cent, which is what Quebec will receive over the next five years.

All we are asking in this amendment is that the province of Manitoba be raised up to the level of the second worst province in the formula. I want to repeat Mr. Speaker, why would you have a formula that does this to one particular province? I cannot understand it. It does not make any sense.

When I came down here as a new Member of Parliament, it may be because I come from Manitoba—where we are a kind of combination of political and cultural values, with Ontario and the west and ourselves right smack in the middle—I did not really have a kind of regional consciousness. I did not come down here to be a spokesman for Manitoba, I came down here to be a member of the Canadian Parliament and to figure out what to do for the whole country.

I must say that over the last few years, sitting here and looking over there, and seeing what can be done to rail service, seeing what can be done to the Crow or what is proposed to be done to the Crow, and the whole attitude of the government, I found myself developing more and more a regional consciousness here in the House. In a way I regret it. I did not come down here to see myself as a member from one region opposed to members from another region. The fact of the matter is that this is what is beginning to happen to me, and I regret it. After these last few weeks, after looking at a formula that treats my home province in this particular way, I cannot say that I am exactly on my way to retreating from that regional consciousness of which I spoke.

I plead with the hon. members, on the government side in particular, not to allow this present equalization formula to go through in the way it is. It would be a tragedy for Manitoba, it would also be a tragedy for our whole view of equalization. It makes a mockery of the very notion of equality between the provinces and the ability of all provinces, no matter which province it may be, to provide public services at reasonably comparable levels.

We had some other amendments to move, Mr. Speaker. I want to mention some. We moved them in committee. If we spend all our time now and we vote on this amendment, so be it, because this is one of the most important amendments in this particular package. I am going to sit down so that others can have a chance to speak.

I want to put on the record that in order to pay more attention to this particular proposal we have forgone our opportunity to debate our amendment dealing with the way in which the federal government is discriminating against the province of Saskatchewan by not forgiving them what the province of Saskatchewan owes them due to census readjustment, when we are forgiving all the other provinces that owe the federal government money.

We have forgone our amendment which tries to get rid of the GNP cap that the Liberals have put on the equalization payments. That is another way of deconstitutionalizing equalization payments, by saying that equalization has its limits and it is going to be tied to the GNP. We have forgone that amendment.

There is one other amendment that we have forgone that I want to mention. It is one in which we want to build into this fiscal package an opportunity for review before the next fiscal arrangements are negotiated, in the same way as happened in an ad hoc way, as a result of the setting up of the special parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. I thought that was a particularly good exercise. I began to have my doubts about it as I listened to members of the very task force that I was on and who signed the same paper that I signed. Yet I saw the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) get up here and I can hardly believe that these are the same people with whom I spent 265 hours in hearings, and that those are the same people who signed the parliamentary task force report. That report made a lot of recommendations, and good recommendations, that this government has completely ignored, including some of the central recommendations, like the revenue guarantee, leaving the money attributable to the compensation in the revenue guarantee. This particular package was taken out; that was a main recommendation, but they ignored it.

Not having lost faith in democracy, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that by the next time we have that kind of review, we might have a different government. Who knows, we might even have a New Democratic government. Wouldn't that be the day! Then we would have a government that would pay attention to those people who come to these hearings and who give their views. We might pay attention to them. So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will pass this amendment, redress this injustice to Manitoba and then truly have the kind of equalization formula that we ought to have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): I would like to take a few minutes of the time this evening, Mr. Speaker, to make the case that the mover and seconder of this motion, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) have made.

When listening to this discussion and the debate that has gone on so far, I wondered whether someone coming here, listening to the debate for the first time, would wonder whether he was a citizen from another planet or from another part of the world. Someone capable of being a little more objective than many of us are would wonder whether we were talking about two separate sets of taxpayers; one set of taxpayers paying tax to the provincial government and one set of taxpayers paying tax to the federal government. It seems to me that we have lost sight of the fact that the same people whom we are discussing, asking whose ox is going to be gored, happen to be the same taxpayers of the country, whether they pay those taxes to the provincial government or to the federal government and whether they get the services back from the provincial government or from the federal government. It seems to me that we should be concerned about the taxpayers as citizens of the country who are expecting some services back for the taxes that they pay. If we could keep that in mind, we might have a better attitude to what goes on in the House and set a better example to those who watch the debate and the proceedings in the House.

It is up to us to set the proper tone, to realize that we should both be aiming at serving the people who pay the taxes and those who are expecting the services back—and in this case we are talking about the equalization payment.

I have two or three other quick points, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad to see that the parliamentary secretary is here and paying close attention. I know he has a close relative in Manitoba. It is not that I expect anything in the way of a favourable decision or any judgment that he may have in this matter. I just point out that he has a relative who comes from Manitoba and, having regard to that, I expect he is well aware of the province and some of the problems we have there.

As to the point of whether we should or should not have more from the federal government I think that what concerns us in Manitoba—and this is a non-partisan topic in Manitoba, or at least it should be—is that whatever point has to be made for Manitoba, or whatever cuts there are, we expect they should be equal across the country.

All kinds of figures have been given by the two hon. members who spoke ahead of me. Many people talk about percentages and statistics. The point, to my mind, is that Manitoba, over the next five years, will receive an average increase of about one-third over what we have now, whereas the next lowest increase will be approximately two-thirds. Looking at it on that basis, it is not a small amount, it is a large amount. We will get about half as much, on average, as far as the increase goes over the next five years, as the lowest province next to us. So we are not talking about a few fractions or a few decimal points here and there, we are talking about almost half as much of an increase as the province of Quebec will get, which will be the next province above Manitoba.

When we are dealing with figures like this, it sometimes takes a long time to fully understand them, regardless of whether we want to be critical of the Department of Finance or the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) or whoever is in power, and there is a possibility that something has been overlooked. I do not think we can use that excuse any more after tonight, because the issues have been well aired in committee and it has been well aired in the House of Commons. Up until now, if we wanted to be kind about it, we probably could have given the government the benefit of the doubt and said it was an honest mistake; but we are drawing the attention of the government to it this evening and hereafter I do not think that excuse will hold water any more, so clearly we have to make clear the position it is going to put Manitoba in by this new equalization formula.

It puts us in a particularly bad situation because, as the Manitoba minister of finance said this afternoon, talking about that province, "We are heading to greater deficits at the same time that the federal government is heading toward lower deficits." There is another problem that we have. At the same time the federal government is attempting to lower its deficit, if Manitoba wants to maintain the services that have been provided in the past, there will be larger deficits for the province of Manitoba. I think all members will find that acceptable. One would expect the federal government to have some sympathy for that position if it believed its projections and, if those projections come about, because the federal government is heading toward a lower deficit.

Another point needs to be made with regard to the equalization formula. Over the past number of years our record in terms of economic growth has stayed relatively constant. As the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill said, there is no reason why over the next five years we should be treated so much worse than the average. It appears there is nothing, in terms of the formula, which would cause us to be treated less well in terms of less equalization payments than we have been in the past.

I really cannot understand why this amendment should not be passed. I do not want to get into the threats made by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill. We do not threaten to campaign against the two Liberal members who have been elected in Manitoba. We want to get the job done for the citizens of Manitoba. If the government would take that kind of attitude, it would see fit to support this amendment. Whether it be in the name of the mover and seconder is immaterial. We are interested in seeing that the citizens of Manitoba are treated equally, relative to other citizens throughout the country.

I wish to close by referring to something said in the throne speech on April 14, 1980, almost two years ago. In the throne speech it was said that Members of Parliament who are not government members have a special duty to represent those areas of the country that are not represented by government members. On the other hand, we have a special duty to represent our part of the country here in the house and to represent Canada in our constituencies. This is an opportunity for the government to put that into practice.

If we are to do a good job in terms of being federal members and standing up for our country, we have to be treated fairly. I throw that admonition back to the government members to ensure that we are not treated unfairly in Manitoba, so that we can be proud to be part of this part of the country and are treated fairly.

I do not want to prolong the debate. I hope that the two Manitoba members who sit on the government side will prevail upon the government to correct what is obviously a very bad situation for Manitoba when you look at the equalization payments in the new formula.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure once again to comment on Bill C-97 following the three previous speakers, especially the last one who reminded me so touchingly of my close family ties in Manitoba. I am not sure whether it is appropriate or not but I would like to take this occasion to say hello directly to those members of my family who might be watching right now. It is a real pleasure.

Before I go into some of the arguments on the other side, I would like to put on the record again, as was done earlier today, some of the statistics that are involved. This will help the people of Manitoba to cut through the rhetoric that has been thrown out by all parties.

This year $895 million will be going to the people of Manitoba under the equalization and established programs financing. Over the next five years that will grow until 1986-87, when $1,280 million will be sent out. That gives a grand total of $5,363 million. Included in those figures is a total of $165 million being sent to Manitoba to help that province in the change from one calculating formula to another. That $165 million is broken down as follows: $82 million this year, $56 million next year and $27 million in the third year. It is a diminishing transition payment intended to cushion the blow of moving from one formula to another.

There is a third payment that has not been included in these calculations, that is, $31 million going to Manitoba in the form of forgiveness for some calculations on population size. That $31 million was included in payments made previously. When the new population figures were provided, it was found we had overpaid by that amount. That amount technically is being forgiven. That is an extra $31 million for the province of Manitoba.

This afternoon in committee and now in the House we have heard talk about the formulas and the basis for calculating them as if there were some kind of competition between the provinces. That is misleading. Equalization payments are exactly that; equalization payments make provinces equal to a mathematical standard. The minister clearly explained this when he visited the committee last Monday. I would like to pass along a couple of comments which the minister made. He said:

> The formula is intended to bring all provinces up to a standard . . . Obviously, at a certain stage, particular provinces get close to that standard, and because of that the yield of equalization decreases and some provinces slip out of the equalization formula because of their improved fiscal capacity.

The minister pointed out a couple of other things, particularly with respect to Manitoba. He said it is still true that even with the transitional payment, calculating the rate of growth percentage-wise year to year in certain years, the rates of growth for Manitoba are less than for the Atlantic provinces or Quebec. He answered by saying:

> If an equalization system is to measure fiscal capacity it cannot yield similar results for every province.

In other words, let we remind our friends from the NDP of one of the age-old principles that they like to present to the Canadian people; that is: from each according to his ability; to each according to his need.

We do not give the same amounts to every province. For example, we do not yet give any equalization to Ontario. Bill Davis might put us in the position where we eventually have to make an equalization payment to Ontario, but we are not yet in that position. Should Ontario then come to us and say that it is receiving less equalization on a percentage basis than Manitoba and therefore it should get a special grant to make up for that? It sounds ridiculous. It is equally ridiculous for Manitoba to say that it is receiving less than the Atlantic provinces and therefore it should get some flat payment in forgiveness. That is what is being presented here, a kind of competition among the provinces where they would say: "Because we do not get as much on a percentage basis, we want a special payment." That is what the members are telling the federal government. I am sorry but I cannot agree with that.

Let us review some of the statistics involved. From 1976-77 to 1981-82, Manitoba's equalization entitlement had increased more rapidly than those of any other province. It went up in Manitoba by 156 per cent, and it went up in Nova Scotia by 72 per cent. How did this happen? Why did Manitoba get 156 per cent and Nova Scotia only 72 per cent?

The treasurer of Manitoba answered that question in the committee this morning. He said:

> Over the last five years, the Manitoba economy has performed well below the national average, and a number of indicators, such as real growth, job creation and investment show our performance to have been the worst of any province.

Since the performance was bad, equalization payments were greater in order to lift Manitoba's share up to the national standards. Now that Manitoba is closer to that standard, the percentages will not be so high. It is a very simple calculation.

Mr. Blaikie: That is a completely false argument.

Mr. Fisher: It is not a competition between regions; it is a measurement against a standard.

Mr. Blaikie: You do not even know what you are talking about.

Mr. Fisher: When you get closer to that standard, you get a lower percentage. It is unfortunate that the members have decided to present it as some kind of competition between regions. I can assure the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) that he is at his best when he is not slipping into the narrow regional interests which he presented earlier. He should keep his sights high and keep himself on course.

What are members asking for, Mr. Speaker? Let us be specific. They are saying that the special $165 million transition payment is not enough. The federal government has taken some steps to soften the change-over, yet some hon. members are saying that it is not quite enough and would like just a little bit extra—just $300 million extra. They say that $165 million does not quite get us there, but $300 million would get us home.

Members are expressing some other views. They are saying that Manitoba should not only have that extra gift—virtually two times more than what it is receiving—it should also have a special status in order to enjoy that gift so that no other province would get it. I cannot accept that because it is asking for far too much.

We must recall that it receives less because it is closer to the standard. It is no longer experiencing the hardships described by the treasurer.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Fisher: I will answer questions at the end.

Mr. Blaikie: If the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) would answer a question—he made a commitment to answer a question at the end of his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): That question will be permitted with the consent of the Parliament Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance and the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has had ample opportunity to speak. I think that the hon. member must admit that I have listened with great interest and attention to his comments, which is why I am now in a position to be able to answer some of them.

Miss Jewett: You started it.

Mr. Fisher: What is the federal government proposing for Manitoba apart from the $165 million transition payment, the $31 million special population payment—

Mr. Blaikie: That is included in the figures we were using.

Mr. Fisher: —and a very healthy growth in our support for general programs? We want Manitoba to get out of the conditions which have been forecast to be so terrible by the treasurer. On this side of the House my two colleagues do not look upon the world with the same gloom and doom as the treasurer did today, describing that province's future in such terrible terms. It is my hope that their varying transitional payments are unnecessary, I hope that the special gifts are unnecessary and that their economic health brings them to the point where their equalization payments are similar to those of Ontario, Alberta, British Columbia, and other rich provinces, that is, zero. If we can get Manitoba to the point of zero—

Miss Jewett: Typical Ontario patronizing.

Mr. Fisher: —what better gift to give that province than that kind of payment?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood from the hon. member that he would permit a question at the end of his remarks. Will he permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it just shows that the Liberals will clap for anything. My question to the parliamentary secretary is this: does he realize that this amendment provides that if the economy of Manitoba improves, the equalization payments will go down—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member has participated in this debate once and he can only do so again with the unanimous consent of the House. I gather that there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I asked a question. I did not make a statement. I asked the hon. member whether he realizes that the formula provides that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I must tell the hon. member that he can only ask a question with unanimous consent, and I gather there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the devil is the matter with my question? I asked whether he realizes the formula provides that if the economy of Manitoba improves, the equalization payments would go down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. There are many ways to present an argument and to seek the floor but certainly not under the guise of a point of order. This is not a point of order. For the hon. member to ask a question, he must have unanimous consent of the House, which he does not have.

● (2150)

The question is on Motion No. 3, standing in the name of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion would stand deferred, but since there are no further amendments, shall I call in the members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on Motion No. 1 (Miss MacDonald) which was negatived on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been made.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—FUTURE OF GIBRALTAR WITHIN NATO

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, I wish to expand on the question I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) on Monday, March 29, 1982, concerning the dockyard closure in Gibraltar, the answer to which in my mind was unsatisfactory.

The people of Gibraltar are now facing two serious economic problems, namely, the closure of the dockyard and the opening of the frontier with Spain. The closure of the dockyard was announced in November of 1981, to take effect in 1983. This follows a British defence review, and clear indication given at that time. To prevent the closure of the dockyard now would not appear to be feasible politically. The announcement that both the Chatham and Portsmouth dockyards in Great Britain will close gives an air of finality to the closure of the dockyard in Gibraltar. It would appear that the only alternative left to the Gibraltar government is to find a commercial use for the dockyard.

An in-depth study of the dockyard was made by consultants following the British defence review. These consultants had made an earlier study on the Gibraltar port and its future, giving special consideration to an open frontier. The conclusions of the consultants' report was to the effect that commercialization was a feasible prospect, provided that requisite sums were spent by way of investment, to ensure that technical skills were of sufficient quality and once this was done it was hoped that within a period of five years the commercial yard could be successful.

In general terms, there were three essential prerequisites to commercialization: first, the areas of the dockyard no longer required by the ministry of British defence be transferred to the Gibraltar government at zero price; second, subventions in the amount of £30 million over a five-year period; third, co-operation from the unions and work force. Without these three factors, commercialization is not feasible. The consultants, the Pedia Group, also went on to say that commercialization could not be undertaken by the government, if at the same time the government had to face an open frontier.

This problem is paradoxical in that an open frontier will provide considerable revenue to the people and the government of Gibraltar. However, the problem is that this will not be an easy matter. To understand this problem one has to consider the history of the blockade and the introduction of restrictions by the Spanish government. Prior to the blockade in 1963-64, th Gibraltar economy had been largely dependent upon its private sector, and the blockade was designed to destroy that private sector. However, these measures did not have the desired effect for two reasons: first, the British government determined to sustain Gibraltar and; second, the people of Gibraltar were prepared to make sacrifices in order to accommodate a new economy.

Therefore, as a result of the blockade, the private sector was greatly atrophied and the public sector increased enormously. In the new economic strategy a heavy dependence was made on the dockyard which, during the years of the blockade, had been the mainstay of the economy of Gibraltar, in that it accounted for the major inflow of foreign money to Gibraltar. This reliance on the dockyard was such that even the loss of 500 of the 2,100 jobs would be vital to the Gibraltar economy.

The policy of sustain and support introduced by the British government was conditional on the existence of the blockade and, as such, the opening of the frontier heralds the end of this policy and therefore of overseas development aid from Great Britain.

The people of Gibraltar are also faced with the fact that the Spanish government will reopen its border to Gibraltar on April 20, 1982, and that the re-establishment of these links may inadvertently undermine Gibraltar's political independence through economic dependence on Spain. Therefore, it is important for the Gibraltar government to undertake the revival of the economy which in effect will put that country in a similar position to pre-blockade days. This will therefore mean substantial investment to create a tourist infrastructure commensurate with the new tourism to be expected in Gibraltar following an open frontier, and encouragement to the private sector in order to allow it to expand and meet new demands. Similarly, attention will have to be paid to the losses to be incurred in the public sector.

The net result of the problems posed by both the closure of the dockyard and the opening of the frontier mean that the Gilbraltar government cannot face both, simultaneously. Regrettably, however, Gibraltar is being required to do so and this has caused considerable unease in Gibraltar.

It would appear, therefore, that in order for Gibraltar to survive the immediate economic future, the necessary aid required for commercialization should be forthcoming from the British government. Similarly, ministry of defence for Great Britain should have its land transferred at zero price. Without these two concessions from the British government, Gibraltar's future is bleak.

The British government's saving, following the closure of the dockyard, has been calculated at £10 million sterling per annum. The savings would appear to be negligible in comparison with the value of Gibraltar, and the moneys required for commercialization do not, in my submission, appear to be unreasonable, even given the present state of the British economy.

One might wonder why I would raise in the Canadian House of Commons what the Secretary of State for External Affairs described on Monday as a purely internal British matter. With respect, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the minister implicitly answered this question when he stated on page 15897 of Hansard on March 29th, 1982:

—that the fact that the relations between Britain and Spain concerning this question appear to have somewhat improved, and the fact that Spain is now entering the NATO alliance, should help set the stage for more useful discussions.

He then went on to muddy the issue further by saying:

Therefore, although there should not be discussions in NATO itself, the joint membership of both countries in NATO should be a disposing factor toward a settlement.

What the Secretary of State for External Affairs was saying is that the future of Gibraltar, as a strategic component in NATO defence, is of concern to all NATO nations. In view of this admission, it is entirely appropriate for me and other members of this House to encourage the government of Canada to raise this matter with our NATO allies.

I understand that both the U.S. and Dutch governments have expressed their concern to Great Britain that the capability of Gibraltar's naval facilities could be gravely compromised unless time is given for the people of Gibraltar to make the transition from a defence-based economy to a tourist-based economy. At the very least, Mr. Speaker, Canada and our NATO allies should prevail upon the British government to phase out at least its financial commitment to the Gibraltar dockyard over a five or ten-year period so that the transition just described could be achieved. We are talking about a very small place in a sea of English language culture and a sea of other cultures in the Mediterranean.

I think it is incumbent upon members of this House to speak in defence of the people of Gibraltar who have valiantly fought to preserve their culture and linguistic traditions of the past 300 years. It is for this reason, and for the strategic reasons of NATO and Canada's role in NATO, that I bring this matter to the attention of the House this evening.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) for bringing this very important matter not only to the attention of the House publicly but, also, to the attention of members of the House of Commons and the Government of Canada.

The question is, are we affected as an ally with the closure of the royal naval dockyard in Gibraltar. We are concerned, but we have to caution our concern in these terms. Canada has no mandate to speak for the people of Gibraltar. Gibraltar is a British dependent territory. Therefore, it is essentially a question for Britain's domestic policy.

The history of Britain in Gibraltar goes back 278 years to 1704 during the war of the Spanish succession when Sir George Rooke took possession of Gibraltar. The possession was ratified legally in 1713 by the Treaty of Utrecht. We are not talking about something that is recent, but something that is directly within British jurisdiction for 278 years.

We are encouraged in Canada by the fact that the British government has a white paper entitled "The United Kingdom Defence Program: The Way Forward". In it, the government of the U.K. unequivocally acknowledges its obligation to support the economy of Gibraltar. Let us face it, Mr. Speaker, without the dockyard the economy of Gibraltar would be crippled. Under this paper the U.K. government confirms it is prepared to consider alternate means of investment if there is a dockyard closure. We have every faith that the U.K. government will honour its white paper—because it has historically looked to Gibraltar, and consequently we feel the issue of Gibraltar should not be raised at NATO at this time, whether inside that organization or through bilateral discussions with NATO members.

Having said that, I again want to thank the hon. member for raising this issue in the House. Historically we feel a part of Gibraltar, and it is appropriate that members of this House remind us of that from time to time.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES—UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—REQUEST THAT LOANS BE GRANTED TO AFFECTED HOME OWNERS. (B) REFINANCING OF HOMES. (C) USE OF FUNDS ALLOCATED FOR HOME RENOVATION PROGRAM

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, on March 24, 1982, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if the Government of Canada, through CMHC, would give consideration to amending the National Housing Act to permit CMHC to make direct loans to people having trouble renewing mortgages or refinancing their homes due to the presence of urea formaldehyde foam insulation, which, from now on, I will call UFFI.

The subject was first brought up when we were discussing the housing bill in committee with the minister responsible for CMHC. At that time I asked the president of CMHC, if in fact under certain circumstances CMHC made direct loans to home owners. He confirmed that under certain circumstances they do, such as in resource communities where it is difficult to obtain private financing. I suggested to the minister that he consider bringing an amendment to the act to allow CMHC to do this. It would not cost the taxpayer any money, the loans would be at current rates, and it would help people who have a very serious problem.

Unlike the government, I feel it must assume some responsibility with respect to the UFFI problem. After all, a government corporation provided the UFFI to the people who put it in their homes. It gave grants through the CHIP program to those who used it in their homes, so it has to accept some responsibility, and this is one area where I feel it can.

I brought up the case of Mr. Jim Rogers of Norval, who happened to work in the insulation business. To set an example, I guess he insulated his own home with UFFI and then did a number of others. I gather from those who have had the insulation installed that he did an excellent job. When the government banned the insulation, he of course lost his franchise, his business, the special equipment he purchased, his truck and so on, and he went bankrupt. During his financial difficulties he lost his family and is now on the verge of losing his home because the people who provided private financing for his home have now purchased their own homes and want their money. At the end of May he will not have a mortgage on his home. He has gone to various lenders and they will not provide financing. He has a unique problem, one that I think the government has a responsibility to do something about. The solution is simple: CMHC can provide direct loans to people who are having trouble financing.

Another example is Mr. Gerald Prevost of Georgetown. He has a second mortgage on his property and, because of this insulation problem, he cannot refinance that privately held second mortgage. It is being called and he is, therefore, also going to have trouble keeping his property.

I plead with the government to take another look at the matter. The minister responsible for housing brushed it off in committee, said it was not his responsibility. The Prime Minister said they were already doing enough for the people suffering from this particular problem, which is not true.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is remaining quiet about the whole thing. I plead with him to take another look at it.

In the one minute left remaining to me, I would also like to say that I suggested in the same series of questions that if the $30 million designated to create employment and to add to RRAP—the home improvement program—could be earmarked to remove the urea formaldehyde foam insulation, or help with a portion of the costs of removing it from homes which would not otherwise qualify under the program which the government has already set up, this would create more jobs than the government has proposed, because it would be so labour-intensive. At the same time, it would help to clear up the very serious problem in this country caused by the use of urea formaldehyde foam insulation.

With those two thoughts, I leave it with the government. I ask it to give serious consideration to those two programs. It will not cost the taxpayer a penny more than permitted now, and it will help with a very serious problem.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak regarding government assistance to people with homes containing urea formaldehyde foam insulation. I would like to respond to the issues raised by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). Questions have been asked about Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation making direct loans to people with homes containing UFFI. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has a long established relationship with thousands of private lenders. That relationship has helped to provide billions of dollars to many millions of Canadian home owners. If specific cases of difficulty in financing or refinancing homes occur, the home owner or the Member of Parliament, such as the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown, should inform the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

Mr. McDermid: I did! He brushed me off!

Mr. Flis: —the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and the local office or headquarters of CMHC. They would want to know about any instances of established private lenders refusing to provide mortgages to people with UFFI in their homes. The hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown reported such an instance in the House last week. CMHC wants to receive full details from anyone knowing of such situations. I would urge any home owner who feels he is being discriminated against because of UFFI in his home to immediately take the steps I have suggested.

The hon. member also referred to the Canada home renovation plan which allocates $30 million to help pay the cost of home repairs. He asked about UFFI home owners benefiting from this program. As hon. members of the House know, more than $100 million has already been allocated as part of the government's response to provide direct assistance to UFFI home owners.

Mr. McDermid: Only if there are fumes.

Mr. Flis: I think all hon. members on each side of the House would like to be fully aware of just how much the government is doing to assist the owners of homes with formaldehyde insulation.

One of the first steps taken by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was to establish the information and coordination centre on urea formaldehyde foam insulation. The centre has served as a focus for the government program by providing advice and information to thousands of concerned home owners. The centre has carried out an extensive testing program involving houses from coast to coast.

A new program was announced in December to help people who are experiencing serious problems and to restore confidence in the value of UFFI homes. The government, as the minister mentioned in question period today, is providing free tests on demand to determine whether the formaldehyde is above the acceptable level. This started on March 22, and several thousand more test kits are going out this week. It also provides for technical advice and assistance to home owners, registration of qualified contractors and laboratories and financial assistance to a maximum of $5,000.

AIRPORTS—CHARLOTTETOWN AIRPORT EXPANSION

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue in more detail a question I directed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on March 24 dealing with the expansion of the Charlottetown airport. My question dealt with the delay of the necessary approval of Treasury Board to proceed with construction of the airport.

In order to understand the anxiety we Islanders are feeling, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to know that this matter goes back to 1974 at which time a federal-provincial planning committee agreed that a new air terminal building and a new cross-winds runway would be constructed on the present location of the Charlottetown airport. Following this, agreements were reached with the federal, the provincial and the municipal governments on a number of items, these being an environmental plan, public participation, zoning regulations, water and sewer hookup, diversion road construction, airport access interchange, and the airport terminal building.

The original terminal design was done in 1977; it featured a unique open design, a large tourist promotion area, rampside visibility, a children's play area, extensive landscaping, a VIP lounge and energy conservation features. The cost, in 1977 dollars, was $5,861,500.

On November 3, 1977, Treasury Board announced that tenders would be called for construction of the first phase, early in 1978, and it approved $21,531,500, subject to the following conditions: (a) The terminal building design be reviewed with a view to reducing its size and cost because of revised passenger forecasts; (b) annual reports be submitted to update the total cost, taking inflation into account; and (c) there be no increases in project scope. This resulted in a complete review of the passenger forecast figures which had been done in 1973-74 and upon which the size of the airport terminal was established.

In the early summer of 1978, three alternatives were put before the then minister of transport, the Hon. Otto Lang. They were: (a) proceed to Treasury Board with the original concept; (b) reduce the cost of the original concept; or (c)—and this is the one the minister chose—amend the original project by using a "Step" air terminal building modular design with a separate control tower.

During the summer of 1981, Mr. Speaker, discussions took place between officials of Transport Canada and the province of Prince Edward Island. The provincial officials were successful in pointing out the problems with congestion and the safety hazards connected with parking at the present terminal building. Transport Canada, with the assistance of the department of highways and public works, increased the present terminal building and included a new baggage-handling system. Transport Canada has assured the province that these minimal improvements are only temporary and it is hoped that the new air terminal building will be started in the summer of 1982.

The minister and I have had a fair amount of communication regarding this matter over the past few years, Mr. Speaker, and I am confident that he would like to see this issue settled almost as much as I would.

On February 11, I questioned the minister further on the delay and he promised to send me a letter giving me the agenda for coming developments. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the minister's exact words were: "The Charlottetown airport is on my mind all the time, with the Crow, at the moment; but I have not really been able to memorize the work agenda for each of Canada's one thousands airports, so I beg permission to send my friend a detailed analysis of every step in the coming hours."

Following question period, the minister and I did have a chance to talk but he did not give me a date as to when this matter is going to Treasury Board, although he did provide me with other related information.

On March 24, I asked the minister when the submission was going to Treasury Board. He replied that when I asked him the same question the other day he gave me a full report with a timetable and agenda and so on. He also indicated that if the submission did not go to Treasury Board exactly on the hour that he indicated, he would find out and report back as precisely as he did the last time. You have to give the minister points for being consistent. He has consistently told me he would provide me with an answer and he has consistently failed to do so.

While we are optmistic that now that the ball has started to roll it will continue to do so, but we are also painfully aware that, unless that ball picks up a lot of speed, the construction industry in P.E.I. will be facing an extremely bleak future. We appreciate the minister's support, but again we know that this redevelopment project also had the approval of the Hon. Otto Lang.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who make our home in Prince Edward Island, and who have been watching the so-called progress of the Charlottetown airport development over the years, know one thing for sure. We know that on November 3, 1977, Transport Canada received approval from Treasury Board for the redevelopment of the Charlottetown airport at a cost of $21,531,500. The present estimated cost of the project, including control tower and operations building, has now risen to $30,963,750. This is a disgraceful situation and should be rectified without further delay. Treasury Board must approve this project immediately so that we can get on with the job and provide a much needed facility, and also some relief to the construction industry of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, further to the information provided to the hon. member by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) on February 11, 1982, I am pleased to be given the opportunity to outline in detail the progress of the Charlottetown airport expansion. The purpose of this over-all upgrading of facilities is to ensure that the airport will be able to accommodate forecast growth in aircraft and passenger traffic in the coming years.

Redevelopment of the Charlottetown airport has evolved from a master planning study and has been conducted in co-operation with a joint federal-provincial planning committee, as indicated by the hon. member. It is expected that the final cost of the entire project will be in the $30 million range. Thus far, a combined services building has been erected at a cost of $2.2 million, and an aircraft parking apron and connecting taxi ways have been completed at a cost of $1.7 million. The hon. member will be pleased to know that the land acquisition program is proceeding well. Total cost of the program to date is close to $2 million. A sum of $770,000 is programmed for the design of a control tower-operations building during the current fiscal year, with tender calls scheduled for the spring of 1982.

Since the air carriers agreed to the most recent proposed layout for a new air terminal building, a Treasury Board submission has been prepared which seeks funding authority to hire consultants for design work and the preparation of cost estimates. The submission is now being considered by Treasury Board. I might add, for the information of the hon. member, that consideration of space for Canadian inspection services, including customs and immigration, is included in this submission.

Although the minister had hoped that the program documentation would be reviewed as originally anticipated, the construction schedule has not been jeopardized. Given a favourable decision from the board, Transport Canada still proposes that construction begin during the spring of 1983. I am certain that this information will be well received by the constituents of Malpeque.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 11.09 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MR. MICHEL JOBERT, MINISTER OF STATE AND MINISTER OF EXTERNAL TRADE OF THE REPUBLIC OF FRANCE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour of calling the attention of the House to the distinguished presence in our gallery of Mr. Michel Jobert, Minister of State and Minister of External Trade of the Republic of France.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

SUGGESTED EXPANSION OF GRANT PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, over the past two to three years we have been promised that new and large boundaries and guidelines will be created with respect to regional development incentive grants. In that time nothing has changed despite the fact the expansion of the grant program would provide incentives to industry either to locate in new areas or enlarge existing facilities, thus helping solve the problems of job creation and regional disparity in many areas not now included in the program. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the minister responsible immediately announce changes involving regional development incentive grants which would result in the establishment of new and enlarged boundaries.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

IMPENDING DECISION OF SKAGIT VALLEY FLOODING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On October 9 of last year the International Joint Commission said it would rule today on the fate of the Skagit Valley in British Columbia. The IJC is meeting at this moment behind closed doors in Washington, D.C., and may make a decision without a Canadian chairman because the Liberal government has left the position vacant for over a year. In order to protect the Skagit Valley from being flooded by Liberal indifference, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That this House support the call for public hearings into the Skagit Valley issue, which is supported by all parties in this House, and that because of the Liberal government's failure to appoint a Canadian chairman to the IJC, an all-party committee be struck today to seek a Canadian of high repute who can serve on this important bilateral body.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, at present gasoline prices in White Rock, British Columbia, are about 30 cents a gallon higher than in the State of Washington just a few miles away. The United States price reflects the world price, whereas gasoline prices in Canada have almost doubled in the last two years, most of the increases reflecting increases in taxation. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicate clearly whether it is the policy of the government to make consumers in Canada pay higher than world prices for gasoline to support excessive government taxation which finances programs which do not lead to energy self-sufficiency.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

FILING OF RETURNS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in only 28 days Canadians will have to file their 1981 income tax returns under threat of heavy fine and imprisonment should they fail to comply. However, the government has not even introduced the tax legislation emanating from the ill-conceived November budget which will dictate the taxes people will be forced to pay. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the Minister of Finance immediately avail himself of one of the following options:

(a) Introduce the pertinent tax amendments;

(b) extend the April 30 deadline for tax returns; or, preferably,

(c) resign and take the Prime Minister with him.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF RESEARCH COUNCIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, Canada, indeed the whole industrialized world, is sitting on an environmental time bomb. The very health and welfare of our children and of our children's children are at stake depending on, whether we act now to halt the poisoning of the planet, and how this is done. Dioxin, acid rain, PCBs, methyl mercury, and captan are only the tip of the iceberg, not to mention the stuff we deliberately put in our food, such as red dye No. 2 and sodium nitrite. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House instruct the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the cabinet in general to consider the setting up of an independent national hazardous substances research council so that we can begin to make such research a priority to prepare ourselves for an already risky future, and that this research be partially funded by a levy on all the corporations which, over the years, have so carelessly and selfishly endangered the future of human life in the idolatrous pursuit of profit.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SHIPPING

MARINE FUEL SURTAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, Canada's 1982 Great Lakes shipping season starts Monday under a very serious cloud of uncertainty. The number of ships coming through the Great Lakes is down by estimates ranging up to 25 per cent of the total fleet. Lower levels of economic activity and higher energy costs are cited as being among the major reasons for the slump. Given the impact of high energy costs on water-borne commerce, particularly accentuated by the discriminatory marine fuels surcharge tax, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the government take immediate steps to roll back or rescind the discriminatory tax on Canada's shipping fleet so that it might be restored to its full competitive position.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—REPORTED INVASION OF FALKLAND ISLANDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gary Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I note that this morning's news includes reports that Argentinian troops have landed and claimed possession of the Falkland Islands, historically a British protectorate. Ninety-eight per cent of the residents are of British descent and they have expressed a desire to maintain their British roots. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House resoundingly condemn Argentina for its overt military aggression and send a letter of protest to the President of Argentina requesting the immediate withdrawal of military forces so that a peaceful and democratic solution to this conflict may be attained.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SECRETARY OF STATE

SUGGESTED ACCEPTANCE OF ACFO COMPROMISE ON FINANCING—MOTION UNDER S.O.43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the Secretary of State's decision to break up the Association canadienne-français de l'Ontario by dealing directly with its regional branches; in view of the fact that this goes against the wishes of the majority of the members of this association and that the government's real reason for taking this action has been the positions taken by the ACFO during the debate on the Constitution, I move, seconded by the member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the House condemn the attitude of the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) and recommend that the Secretary of State accept the ACFO's compromise solution for financing that organization.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented by the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

CARRIAGE OF RESTRICTED ARTICLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, whereas Canadian airline employees have detected a dramatic increase in the number of loaded firearms, and instances of restricted articles being transported in baggage and freight shipped on passenger aircraft, items which include toxic gases, leaking chemicals, acids and explosives, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the Minister of Transport immediately investigate the aforementioned serious situation and take corrective action.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

STATUS OF BUDGET

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has taken his "Show and Tell" on the budget on the road, but he won't show and he won't tell Canadians what, if any, further changes he is planning. In his absence, therefore, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister, if I can get his attention.

The Globe and Mail today says that finance officials are referring to the November budget and subsequent revisions as a working paper for a new budget. Could the Prime Minister tell Canadians exactly what is the status of the November budget? Is it a budget, or is it a working paper for a new budget? Or is it a myth?

Mr. Nielsen: It is a can of worms.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member could be reminded of the well-known rule of the House that we should not be asked to comment on newspaper reports—and for good cause. This is an erroneous report.

CONTENTS OF DOCUMENT REFERRED TO BY MINISTER

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's response reminds me of that old saying, "Budgets, budgets everywhere, but not a bill insight."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: The government's coyness over the budget is creating great uncertainty and hardship on many Canadians who are attempting to file their income tax returns and run their affairs. Now the minister is further confusing businessmen by telling businessmen at his meetings that there is a new document which is at the Queen's Printer and is being translated. What is that document, and when will it be presented to the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance answered that question in answer to a question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. The Minister of Finance said that there was going to be a comprehensive ways and means motion which would permit various interested parties to examine the proposed bill in detail.

Mr. Nielsen: An omnibus ways and means motion.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR TAX DETAILS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): If the finance minister were clear on what he is proposing, we would not have to ask these questions continually on behalf of Canadians, who are thoroughly confused. These parlour games would be fun, except that in the real world they are creating real casualties. There are 10,000 miners in B.C. who this summer will be on temporary or permanent lay-off. That includes the Cominco smelter and mine at Trail and Kimberley, which has survived a great depression, World War II, 14 years of Trudeau government, and still cannot survive this budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Cominco will have to shut down this summer for the first time in 40 years. When is the government going to end this charade and tell Canadians what they are going to pay and when they are going to pay it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I fail to see really how Cominco's fate is linked to the hon. lady's question about a detailed Ways and Means motion.

Mr. Nielsen: It is linked to your government.

FILING OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is supplementary to the questions previously asked. The other day the Prime Minister suggested that Canadians should follow the 163 Ways and Means motions presently filed as a result of the November 12 budget, in preparing their income tax returns. The Prime Minister failed to mention that there were no ways and means motions filed with respect to the December 18 statement. There have been other statements by the Minister of Finance across the country. There is speculation everywhere that changes are going to be made or have been made.

Could the Prime Minister tell this House if and when new ways and means motions are going to be filed, so that people can have some understanding of where they are going? The Prime Minister must realize the uncertainty that is being caused by the general feeling that this budget is causing great damage to the community.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asks if and when a new Ways and Means motion will be filed. The Minister of Finance said quite clearly in answer to a question by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, as I have repeated in the House now, that there will be a detailed Ways and Means motion which will be put before this House, a practice which has been followed many, many times—

Mr. Nielsen: Never like this.

Mr. Trudeau: —and which was announced in the very budget read by the member for St. John's West when he was the Tory finance minister.

Mr. Nielsen: There never was this delay.

Mr. Trudeau: There is nothing new about this and there is nothing new about the rule that the taxpayer must file his report on the basis of the Ways and Means motions on the dates that have been announced. There are frequently amendments brought in when the detailed tax bills are brought forth. There may be some in this case, or there may not. If there are, the taxes will be adjusted in consequence.

Mr. Nielsen: The Department of National Revenue is in chaos.

DATE OF FILING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister tell a tourist operator, for example, filing his 1981 tax return, what kind of capital cost allowance he is allowed in filing that return? When he buys a lamp, towel or something of that nature, does he write it off in full as the old law says, or is it half capital cost allowance? What do those who were students do with respect to money they thought they were getting back on their returns which they planned to use to pay their student loans? What about farmers who have bought equipment; do they depreciate it in full or at half depreciation rates? Can the Prime Minister tell us where we are going? Is this uncertainty going to continue?

It is now nearly five months since the budget. It has been changed and altered, and changed again. Will the Prime Minister come clean with the people of Canada today and state on what date these new Ways and Means motions will be filed? Will they be filed before the Easter recess?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not surprised if there is confusion in the minds of the people of Canada, because the opposition has been endeavouring for the past three months to create that confusion. I wish they would follow the time-honoured rules of taking the budget statements and the dates announced there for tax changes as the rules. There have been changes to every budget since I have been here. There are always some amendments, whether it be in one or another aspect of the bills, that are accepted. There may be some this time as well. If there were not, the opposition would accuse us of being stubborn and unreasonable.

There are already four of five tax bills before the House. They have been debated by this House, one having to do with housing relief as a most recent example. Therefore the budget is proceeding, the tax bills are proceeding, and there will be, as there is after every budget, a debate on the bills when they come before the House.

HEALTH

LEVEL OF DIOXIN IN LAKE ONTARIO FISH

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday the Ontario environment ministry found in a study that dioxin levels in Lake Ontario are the highest they have ever been. The study showed there were 27.4 parts per trillion of dioxin found in trout, and 59 parts per trillion found in minnows, in the Port Credit area. Will the minister advise Canadians who live in that community and who fish in Lake Ontario, in the immediate area of Port Credit, if in her opinion it is advisable for them to continue to eat fish found in Lake Ontario?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I did not receive notice of this question which involves a recent and technical situation. For the benefit of Canadians, I would prefer to look at the dossier first. I was in committee all morning and, therefore, did not have occasion to look at it. I will report to the hon. member as soon as possible.

MEASUREMENT OF DANGER LEVEL

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. The minister's department set a level of 20 parts per trillion as being a danger level for fish found in Lake Ontario. The government of New York State set ten parts per trillion as being the danger level. The Ontario environment minister indicated that, in his view, dioxin levels in Lake Ontario present a long-term potential danger even for people drinking water from Lake Ontario. Does the minister intend to reduce the danger level of 20 parts per trillion to at least ten parts per trillion as has been done in New York State?

• (1125)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of new information received by my department, but in my last briefing on the question of the levels which we judge safe or not, we did not have reason to change ours. I will inquire and add that to the reply which I owe the hon. member.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET UNITED STATES GOVERNORS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, the Premier of Ontario has indicated that he is so concerned about the dangerous chemical leakage into Lake Ontario that he intends to meet with the Governor of New York and the Governor of Michigan in the near future to express his concern. Would the minister agree to do exactly the same thing?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I think it is an excellent initiative to be taken by the Premier of Ontario. We already have committees at the federal level which are working in close co-operation with the States. And, of course, the fight to reduce unacceptable levels of dioxin is a primary objective of my government.

METRIC CONVERSION

STATEMENTS IN COMMISSION PAMPHLET

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for metric conversion in Canada. In his role as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs he is supposed to guard Canadians against false and misleading advertising. Yet, as minister responsible for the Metric Commission, he is in fact dispensing blatantly false and misleading advertising to consumers about going metric. Will the minister explain just one misstatement from the pamphlet called "Moving to Metric," and it is riddled with misstatements, which tells us, "Conversion in Canada is being done on a voluntary basis". Does this signal a change in the government's metrication policy?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No more fines or imprisonment?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, as far as unwarranted statements and misleading advertising are concerned, these have certainly been indulged in by the member for Peterborough and some of his colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party.

[English]

STAFFING OF COMMISSION KIOSKS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, at least the minister refrained from calling me a fanatic as he brands all people who happen to disagree with the government's metrication policy.

My supplementary question concerns Metric Commission kiosks, or advertising booths, which are dispensing this stuff. They are popping up in supermarkets and shopping malls across the country. Can the minister for metric tell us how many people were hired to operate these booths and how they were hired, since the government positions were not advertised? How did prospective employees know about these jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question could appropriately be placed on the Order Paper and then be given a written reply. I should be glad to provide one, if the hon. member wishes to submit a written question. I any case, I can assure him that these booths are providing a public information service to the Canadian people and that the information is very well received by consumers across the country.

SHIPPING

REQUEST THAT MARINE FUEL SURTAX BE RESCINDED

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The government will be fully aware of the very serious decline in the number of Great Lake ships which will leave for the Seaway when it opens on Monday. To a large measure this is due to the marine fuel surcharge. At jeopardy here is not only the lowered activity of the Great Lakes fleet but it is, in a very direct way, a threat to the jobs of 1,100 and upwards to 1,700 Canadian seamen. Would the government consider, as a serious step to protect those jobs and enhance the competitive position of the Canadian Great Lakes fleet, rescinding or rolling back the very significant marine fuel surcharge tax?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. member, first, that there is no surcharge on Canadian lake ships employed in shipping between Canadian ports. The surcharge applies only when oil is used for international trips, and it applies equally to American or Canadian ships on the same basis. At the present time this charge is rather minimal, as a matter of fact.

I remind my hon. friend that all over North America the transportation industry generally is facing a difficult situation. This applies to railways, trucking, airways, and the shipping industry in general. The industry is having a difficult time, but not because of the cost of fuel. It is because of a slowdown in the economy generally in North America as well as in Europe. The surcharge is a very minimal factor in the general operations of a company, and it applies only to international trips.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, my concern is about the protection of jobs. If the minister wants to dismiss lightly $8 million or $10 million in discriminatory charges with respect to marine fuels, that is his business. I think he should remove them.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN SEAMEN

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to someone over there who is concerned, perhaps the Prime Minister. What steps might the government take on a fairly urgent basis to ensure that these 1,100, 1,200 and possibly as many as 1,700 Canadian seamen do not in fact lose their jobs as a result of the slump to which the minister has just referred?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, Canadian shipping companies enjoy an advantage over their American competitors in terms of shipping between Canadian ports. They enjoy a benefit. They have enjoyed it in the past. We in this House are all concerned about unemployment in this country. We want the economy to go into high gear as soon as possible but, as my hon. friend knows, the whole world, the whole western world, is facing this particular crisis at the present time.

BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the minister has been delaying the payment or the announcement of the pay-out under the beef stabilization program for three months, I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture would make an announcement to the House of Commons on what the pay-out will be, and when it will be. I hope he will not reply to my question with his pat answer, "Soon".

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Epp: Now what are you going to say?

Mr. Whelan: —the cattlemen's association with which we met about three weeks ago is fully aware that if we used the Agricultural Stabilization Act as it is, there would be no pay-out for 1981 production. What the association is asking for is that I go past the statutory 90 per cent. It is suggesting I go to 95 per cent. That is being considered at the present time.

REQUEST PAYMENTS NOT BE LINKED WITH SUPPLY MANAGEMENT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I am wondering if the minister will guarantee cattle producers that the announcement about which he has been talking for some time, and which he might make in three weeks, will not be linked in any way with supply management.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is confusing two things. Under the Agricultural Stabilization Act it is statutory that we make an announcement concerning the 90 per cent pay-out of the last five years' average using the current year's input costs. The other program is a program which has been suggested by various commissions over a period of time. They have suggested different ways of marketing beef. We hope to be announcing that program in three or four weeks. I believe the other day I said three weeks. We are working on that at the present time, but that has very little to do with the program we are talking about under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

INTERNATIONAL MARITIME TRANSPORT

LEVYING OF TAX ON WORLD PRICES

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and is supplementary to the question by the member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Could the minister inform the House whether he agrees with statements made by representatives of the Canadian shipping industry who held a convention here in Ottawa this week? They felt that levying the surcharge on marine fuel expended on international voyages in inland waters on Canadian entrepreneurs was discriminatory, and also that the surcharge was an infringement of the National Transportation Act, since it applied only to marine transportation and not to railway or highway transportation, and finally, that a large part of the traffic in American goods carried by Canadian entrepreneurs would now be carried by American shippers who, as a result of the surcharge would now be economically more attractive.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I must say I disagree with this assumption. First of all, we must not forget that there are certain taxes for land carriers, for instance trucks, which are different from those levied on marine carriers. We have always had taxation systems that varied depending on the type of transportation.

As far as international transportation is concerned, we have the same arrangement for American and Canadian ships, but there is no evidence that this factor has had any effect on the preference for Canadian or American carriers in international transportation.

Finally, I should like to remind my colleague that Canadian carriers have a considerable advantage in Canadian ports, and that this advantage could be put to good competitive use, even on international routes.

ENERGY

OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns a tax rip-off of about 18 cents a gallon to Canada's oil consumers. Why, in his announcement yesterday, did the minister not change the flat rate compensation formula, which does not consider the actual cost of imported crude but only the average, thereby today over-compensating certain oil refiners and oil importers in eastern Canada by as much as $9 a barrel?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am afraid my hon. friend does not understand the oil compensation charge very well. As he says, it is an average, and for every cent of advantage that a particular refiner might get on a cargo, he or his competitors will lose an equivalent cent on other cargoes because the charge is an average. The total net result, as far as importers are concerned, is exactly zero. For any money they will make on one cargo they, or somebody else, will lose it on another cargo, so there is no advantage over-all in terms of the import compensation charge.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, perhaps I do not understand the complexities of the oil compensation charge, but I certainly do not understand the minister either, because the minister has come out with a policy to reduce exports, reduce prices, involve himself in swaps, and all the rest of it. If it does not make any difference, why bother?

REQUEST FOR CONSUMER REBATE

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, will the minister assure the House that he will institute either a better reporting system, involve himself in complete swaps, or at least, if there is over-compensation, institute a rebate so that the consumer can get money back from the over-subsidizing of oil importers in eastern Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I noticed that the hon. member prefaced his last question with "if". I want to assure him that the system is built in such a way that there cannot be a profit made over-all in the system by the refiners or the companies. It is just impossible under the rules of the system which have been established.

As far as the total charge is concerned, the agreement with Alberta specifies quite clearly that the government should not make a profit, and the net result at the end of the year should be that the oil compensation charge should be equivalent to the cost of importing. If adjustments are required, we will, of course, make them, but the system, as it is built, is such that the industry cannot end up with an over-all profit.

MINING

REMISSION OF TAX ON NORTHERN LIVING ALLOWANCE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. Earlier this week the Minister of State for Mines was visiting New York, and she was surprised to be addressed by several interested people in the United States on the future of the northern living allowance. I gather she was unprepared and unable to answer questions put to her down there. She has had some difficulty explaining why it is the government refuses to extend the remission order while at the same time it has not come forward with an acceptable alternative program. I understand that the minister has privately told many people that she is in favour of extending the remission order. I want to ask the minister if she has made that recommendation to the Minister of Finance and other members of cabinet and, if so, why they are not acting upon it.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I should like to correct the impression that the hon. member has left that the mission to New York was not successful. On the contrary, it was a very successful mission. In fact, the Minister of State (International Trade) is reading the press reports of that mission at the moment. I was able to reassure the investors in New York that their investments are indeed welcome in Canada.

As to the northern remission order, I was very pleased and somewhat surprised at the sophistication of the questions regarding this. I replied that the government, as has been said over and over again in the House, is committed to having a program in place to replace the remission order that is currently in effect, because we think it is inequitable. We feel that if we are going to do this it must apply fairly to citizens of the north and of isolated communities. The questions were answered fully in New York.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that the industry, including United States' interests in our iron ore industry, is very concerned because of the uncertainty created by the government. The replacement of the present system with respect to taxation will have a destabilizing effect on the northern economy, and the industry wants to know what the alternative is going to be.

On Tuesday the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was quite firm in dealing with the steelworkers who came here to see him. He told them that the only alternative system being considered was a grant-based system. I want to know if the minister agrees with the notion that the only alternative program would be something involving a per capita grant in the order of $500 per person. If that is the case, there is no purpose in further discussion of this matter. Would the minister please clarify this point?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I was not at that meeting, and I do not think the hon. member was either. I think he is taking some stabs in the dark at the moment. I should like to inform him that a number of people are looking at a number of policies. A grant system is just one, but it is not the only route. We are consulting with the mining companies. A whole process of consultation is under way which includes the labour unions. Before we come forward with the policy we must make sure that all those involved, including the mining companies, know exactly what direction we are taking, so that there will be stability in the north.

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON EMPLOYMENT IN NORTH

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration about the thousands of lay-offs in northern Canada, specifically in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, in such places as Flin Flon with Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Co. Limited, Rattan Lake, Leaf Rapids, and Creighton, for instance. Can the minister explain why it is that the disastrous economic policies of the government have resulted in the lay-off of thousands of northern Canadians? They have lost their jobs and do not have a future. Could he explain how these economic policies have impacted so negatively on northern Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Provencher makes one basic, illogical error, and that is to say that it is government policies responsible for the problems in the mines. As my colleague has indicated in the House several times, and as have many others, the mining industry in particular is facing a severe depression on a world-wide level. As a result, there are no customers for our mining products. I think the hon. member is learned enough to know that if the ore and other products are not sold, then there will be no work. That is why the lay-offs have occurred.

In the meantime, Madam Speaker, we are trying to protect the workers by offering them a number of alternative measures, such as a work-sharing program. We have now signed over 530 work-sharing agreements across the country. We have the unemployment insurance program in place which provides income security. We are using the full arsenal of programs to provide for some income security protection during these difficult times when the international markets are not working the way we would like.

JOB-CREATION MEASURES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I find it passing strange that whenever a job is created in the private or public sector the minister takes credit for it, but when jobs are lost the fault lies with someone else.

I should like to ask the minister if he has been approached by officials of the government of Manitoba, for instance, to see how these jobs can be restored and how people can stay in the area so that when there is an upturn in the world market they will be available for work. We should not lose these valuable people.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to tell the hon. member that we have had discussions with officials of the government of Manitoba. We have offered to use Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act to create alternative employment. This would require the co-operation of the mining companies, the unions, and the provincial governments. We are encouraging the provincial governments to sign these agreements. We have signed with the province of Ontario and we are negotiating with several others. If the hon. member could use his good offices with the province of Manitoba to provide further encouragement, we would appreciate that. Our offer stands and we are prepared to respond as soon as Manitoba takes the initiative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—ATTACK ON FALKLAND ISLANDS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the hostile actions of Argentina in attacking the Falkland Islands, a fellow democratic territory with Canada in the Commonwealth of Nations, can the minister report to the House on the situation there this morning? Can he tell the House what action is being taken by the Government of Canada to protest these unwarranted attacks on the Falkland Islands by Argentina?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it appears that Argentinian forces either actually have landed or are in the process of landing in the Falkland Islands and other islands in that group. This is deeply shocking to the Government of Canada. It is shocking that a country such as Argentina should have recourse to violence in this way, in a situation in which there has been no change and where there is no reason of any kind for such action. This is particularly so because it flies in the face of a General Assembly resolution in 1976 when Argentina joined with the majority of countries in urging the parties to the dispute not to try to alter the situation unilaterally by force. In these circumstances we take a very serious view of the situation, and we will be communicating that view to the Government of Argentina.

TESTING OF UNITED STATES MISSILES IN CANADA

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the minister knows, the consultative group on disarmament met his ambassador for disarmament and senior officials from his department yesterday, and they are meeting again today. He also knows that this group includes such distinguished representatives as George Ignatieff of the United Nations Association, William Epstein of Pugwash, Murray Thompson of Project Ploughshares, and many others. The group has expressed enormous concern and frustration because its opinions and advice are never sought by people at the policy-making level, or by the minister. When he has this consultative group on disarmament available, why did the minister not consult with it before arranging a framework agreement with the United States to provide for the flight testing of the Cruise missile in Canada? Why did he not consult this group?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the hon. member herself gives the proof of consultation when she asks questions. The group was established by us for the purpose of giving us their opinions. As the hon. member has said, they have been meeting with my officials for the last day and a half. After question period I will be meeting them for lunch in order to discuss with them all the questions that they wish to raise.

ROLE OF CONSULTATIVE GROUP

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the minister is getting very bad advice from his department. Does he not know that all day yesterday the consultative group was asking that its opinions should be sought out and that it should not, like the rest of us, have to read in the newspapers that we are going to flight test a missile or anything else? They want to be consulted before, not after the fact. Would the minister therefore make a commitment now that in future this consultative group will be consulted ahead of action being taken by the government?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the purpose of this consultation with the consultative group is precisely to take their views in advance of our position at the UNSSOD II meeting in New York in June. That is typical of the way in which we seek the advice of this group. The hon. member would surely not want to suggest that the Government of Canada cede its decision making power to the group. The fact that we do not share her party's view of NATO and do not share her views on various questions concerning the disarmament field surely does not imply we are not aware of them.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

EARLY RETIREMENT OF REAR ADMIRAL HUGHES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It concerns the sudden and early retirement of Rear Admiral Hughes from the Canadian Armed Forces. Can the minister tell us whether Admiral Hughes was paraded to the minister's office last fall and warned that he was not to speak to the media on any subject because it might be considered by the minister to be criticism of the government?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I never said such things to Admiral Hughes when I had a conversation with him with the Chief of Defence Staff. I can say nothing more than I said six weeks ago, namely that the Chief of Defence Staff offered a posting to Admiral Hughes. Admiral Hughes refused it, and he decided of his own volition to take an early retirement.

ADVICE TO CABINET

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. On March 6, at a press conference held on the west coast, the minister disclaimed any participation in the early retirement of Admiral Hughes. When it was decided to offer Admiral Hughes an unacceptable posting as a method of retiring him, was the minister consulted or not? Will he tell the House whether he in turn advised the Prime Minister or his other colleagues in the cabinet of what was afoot?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should know very well, because he is an ex-minister of defence himself, that postings are the responsibility of the Chief of Defence Staff. However, I am, of course, consulted on some of the postings. It is the responsibility of the CDS to post whomever he wants to wherever he wants. Most people go to the postings assigned. When an officer asks for early retirement, there is nothing else for us to do but accept his request.

COURT MARTIAL APPEAL COURT

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a related question for the Minister of National Defence. It is with respect to a recent order in council which I understand has been passed appointing a new president to the Court Martial Appeal Court. If such a president has been appointed, can the minister tell the House why the individual so appointed who has never been a soldier, who has never seen military service, who is not a lawyer and who has no legal experience has been appointed as president of the Court Martial Appeal Court?

Mr. Paproski: What are his qualifications?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, when an appointment such as this is made it involves consultations with the justice department. In co-operation with the justice department we do appoint the man we think is most suitable.

Mr. Siddon: What are his credentials?

REASONS FOR APPOINTMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Why is it that such an individual who has no military service, who has never been a soldier, and who has no legal experience, nor is he a lawyer, found his way into this highly responsible and professional position?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): First, Madam Speaker, I will have to check to find out the name of the person involved.

NATIONAL SECURITY

EXPULSION OF SOVIET EMBASSY OFFICIAL

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday he announced the expulsion from Canada of a certain Mikhail Abramov, an official with the Soviet embassy, for carrying on activities which were illegal under Canadian law, namely, an effort to extract from Canada certain high-technology materials.

According to the Canadian businessman contacted by Mr. Abramov for the purpose of perpetrating his activities, it appears that there was at least one other official of the Soviet embassy involved with Mr. Abramov. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate whether this is in fact the case? If it is, why have no other officials of the Russian embassy been similarly expelled from Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have no further comments to make and no further details to add beyond what I said yesterday, except to say that the Government of Canada has acted in what it sees as the national interest.

STAFFING OF SOVIET EMBASSY

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, according to the minister's own press statement, this is the third time in a period of four years that Russians have been involved in activities of this nature. As I recall, in 1978 12 individuals were expelled for espionage activities in Canada. It appears that trapping these people, who are carrying on these activities, has no impact on retarding the Russians in their efforts to breach the laws of Canada. May I suggest to the minister that it might be appropriate now to convey to the Russian government that if the Russians continue to engage in these activities in our country, we will have to take steps to make them realize we are serious, such as cutting the number of staff and Russian officials by one half who may remain in Canada, so at least there will be fewer people in this country breaking the laws of Canada.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the government will take what steps it sees as necessary from time to time. The hon. member must not underestimate the disruptive effect of an action such as the expulsion which is taking place. I might also mention that this does indicate the high technology sanctions, which were tightened as a result of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, really do have considerable bite. The Soviet Union is, therefore, in a position where it is obviously prepared to go to extreme lengths to obtain the kind of technology which is denied, and which we will continue to deny to it as long as that country continues its aggressive acts.

THE MINISTRY

ROLE OF MINISTER OF STATE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Member of Parliament for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve in his capacity as Minister of State. Would he tell us which minister or ministers he assists?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Minister of State): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to say, in answer to the question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, that I am available to all my cabinet colleagues for the purpose of assisting them in explaining to Quebecers the scope and meaning of decisions made by the Canadian government and applying to Quebec.

[English]

POWERS, DUTIES, AND FUNCTIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve indicate to us what specific powers, duties or functions he performs on behalf of those ministers?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order, please! I believe this question should be directed to the Prime Minister. In fact, I am not altogether sure, but I think the House should be careful about this, although I have some hesitation as to what I should or should not allow at this time. I feel that it is up to the Prime Minister to be answerable for the responsibilities he gives his ministers.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I am quite happy to direct to the Prime Minister the question as to which specific powers, duties or functions are performed for any ministers by the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in terms of the Financial Administration Act the answer would have to be none. But in terms of the role of the minister in assisting other ministers, from time to time I do assign to him specific tasks to assist other ministers.

An hon. Member: What are they?

Mr. Trudeau: For instance, assisting the Minister of Justice during the constitutional debate, both in meeting with many groups throughout Canada—

An hon. Member: That is over.

Mr. Trudeau: I am giving examples, not of the future, but of what happened in the past.

Mr. Siddon: He was not a minister then.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Leader of the Opposition, would you convince your members that you have some importance in this House and that your questions are—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PROVISIONS OF GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1970

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since the Prime Minister has mentioned the Financial Administration Act, could he inform the House what specific powers, duties or functions are performed by the Minister of State, the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, under Section 23 of the Government Organization Act, 1970?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member would refer to my previous answer, he will find that I answered that question in advance.

SUGGESTED ASSIGNMENT FOR MINISTER

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since there are no administrative duties assigned to the Minister of State, to whom we are referring, would the Prime Minister consider assigning the Minister of State to the Minister of Communications who is having great trouble in bringing on a freedom of information law despite the expressed commitment of his government?

• (1200)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I suppose the members opposite are welcome to give me suggestions in so far as they are of assistance to other people. Could I suggest to the hon. member that he himself should give more assistance to his own leader because—

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Trudeau: —his own leader is performing his duties very pitifully in this House.

ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, now that the Prime Minister has been brought up to date and knows that the minister to whom he was referring was not a minister when he described the functions he thought that minister then performed, I wonder if the Prime Minister can tell us what duties, powers or functions of an administrative nature the hon. member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve performs at this point in time for any minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I answered that, Madam Speaker. None in the sense of the Financial Administration Act.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the Government Organization Act?

An hon. Member: What is he being paid for?

PETITION

MR. SIDDON—CARRIAGE OF BAGGAGE AND FREIGHT ON AIRCRAFT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege and responsibility to present to this House a petition signed by some 1,600 aviation workers employed by the air transport industry in Canada. They have noted a dramatic increase in the number of loaded firearms and instances of restricted articles being transported in baggage and freight shipped on passenger aircraft in Canada. They have called for the posting of restricted article signs at all check-in counters in Canadian airports.

They have also called for an amendment to the restricted weapons and firearms control regulations to allow the mandatory use of gun tags for all firearms carried on commercial aircraft. They have suggested that stringent penalties be imposed on persons who violate such regulations, and that an independent body be established to monitor enforcement of same.

These workers, Madam Speaker, have documented many potentially disastrous incidents involving loaded firearms, toxic gases, leaking chemicals, acids and explosives which have been discovered in baggage on Canadian commercial aircraft. This is a serious matter indeed and demands the immediate attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin).

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,673, 1,697, 3,181 and 3,889.

[Text]

FINKELMAN REPORT ON EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS

Question No. 1,673—Mr. Herbert:

Does the President of the Treasury Board intend to respond to each of the seventy-two recommendations in the Finkelman Report on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service and, if so, on what date can the comments be expected?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): The report to Parliament of the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service contained 72 conclusions or recommendations made as a result of that committee's consideration of the Finkelman Report. The Finkelman report itself presented approximately 300 recommendations on employer-employee relations in the public service.

These recommendations are under study by the government which will propose in due course, amendments to the existing legislation. Also, please refer to part (b) of question No. 1,697 answered this day.

The President of the Treasury Board does not intend to respond to each of the recommendations individually.

LOCK-OUT OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 1,697—Mr. Herbert:

Does the government have the right to lock out public servants and (a) if so, has it exercised the right in the past three years (b) if not, does it intend to seek the right in legislative proposals to be brought before the House?

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): (a) The Public Service Staff Relations Act which governs employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada as defined in Schedule 1 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act does not contain a lock-out provision. Thus, the government does not have the right to lock out public servants and has not done so.

(b) The government is presently reviewing legislation concerning collective bargaining in the federal public service. That legislative review includes a review of the framework of collective bargaining and the processes for the resolution of disputes. As a result of the review, the government will be proposing, in due course, appropriate amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act and other legislation which may be affected.

STRIKES WITHIN PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 3,181—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the current government policy on strikes in the public service and Crown corporations, particularly in essential services?

2. Has the government considered or is it considering changes in the present legislation, limiting the right to strike in essential services and substituting some other method of settling labour problems?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Treasury Board of Canada and Labour Canada as follows:

1. The Public Service Staff Relations Act, which received all party support when first passed in 1967, allows bargaining agents representing employees of the federal government to choose conciliation/strike as the dispute resolution method. The government respects that right. Section 79(1) of the Public Service Staff Relations Act also provides:

"Notwithstanding Section 78 (concerning the establishment of a conciliation board), no conciliation board shall be established for the investigation and conciliation of a dispute in respect of a bargaining unit until the parties have agreed on, or the board has determined pursuant to this section the employees or classes of employees in the bargaining unit (hereinafter in this act referred to as "designated employees") whose duties consist in whole or in part of duties the performance of which at any particular time or after any specified period of time is or will be necessary in the interest of the safety or security of the public."

Section 101(1) of the same act provides:

"No employee shall participate in a strike—

(c) who is a designated employee"

It is to be noted that the act refers to "duties . . . necessary in the interest of the safety or security of the public and not 'essential services'."

The current government policy on strikes in the public service is to endeavour, in negotiating with its employees, to avoid strikes. However, where agreement cannot be reached through direct negotiation and where the bargaining agent has chosen the conciliation/strike route, then the provisions of Sections 79 and 101 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act with respect to safety or security of the public apply.

Crown corporations are under the Canada Labour Code and thus the provisions of the PSSRA do not apply.

2. The government is presently reviewing legislation concerning collective bargaining in the federal public service. That legislative review includes a review of the framework of collective bargaining and the processes for the resolution of disputes. As a result of the review, the government will be proposing, in due course, appropriate amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act and other legislation which may be affected.

Labour Canada

1. With respect to strikes involving Crown corporations, the government fully supports the free collective bargaining process, including the right of employees to withdraw their services or the employer to lock out his employees. Part V of the Canada Labour Code contains provisions which place certain requirements on the bargaining parties before lawful strike or lock-out action may be initiated; these include the filing of a notice of dispute with the Minister of Labour and the exhaustion of all conciliation assistance available to the parties at the discretion of the Minister of Labour. In addition, the code effectively prohibits strikes over rights disputes and on the question of union recognition, and allows for limiting the acquisition of the right to strike or lock out when Parliament is dissolved.

In instances where contract negotiations reach an impasse, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service of Labour Canada provides expert conciliation and mediation assistance to the parties in an attempt to resolve their differences and arrive at a mutually satisfactory agreement. The vast majority of disputes referred to FMCS are settled without resort to strike or lock-out action.

2. The government is not considering changes in the present legislation with regard to

(a) the acquisition and exercise of the right to strike; and

(b) the mediation and conciliation procedures for the resolution of disputes with respect to the collective bargaining process in Crown corporations.

BUDGET ADVERTISING

Question No. 3,889—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation state in the House of Commons that employees of Graphic Artists, Studio S & B, 400 St. Antoine St. West, Montreal were sworn to secrecy in connection with their work on the budget advertising and, if so (a) what was the exact date and time they were sworn to secrecy (b) who administered the oaths of secrecy (c) what were the names of all the persons to whom oaths were administered?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): No. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, major policies of the government have made economic conditions in Canada worse by forcing lay-offs, preventing job creation, slowing economic growth and driving out investment.

He said: Madam Speaker, as you will see from the text of the motion, its purpose is to focus attention upon major government policies, particularly those of an economic nature, or which impact directly on our economy.

I might say by way of introduction that government policies are the result of the exercise of political power. I would be hard pressed to find a government, indeed a political party, more obsessed with political power than the one opposite me. Unhappily, I believe it has been this obsession which has obscured and distorted the use of power. Without oversimplifying the matter, I suggest to you that political power is nothing more or less than the right and responsibility of a government to provide services to people. As a result of the exercise of political power, and implementation of government policy flowing from it, services should be delivered to Canadians.

They may be, Mr. Speaker, Canadians in a particular region where a government policy enhances the opportunities of the people in that region. They may be Canadians in a particular strata of society who are being assisted; the poor or disabled, for example. They may be Canadians in a certain sector of our society, such as farmers or manufacturers, or they may be social policies which would be of benefit to all Canadians.

The point is that, with very few exceptions, government policies should operate to benefit Canadians. I am not only sepaking of the expenditure by the government of the tax dollars that it has collected, because the government may opt to create, for example, a climate of opportunity, or a climate of challenge, or a climate of optimism, which is often much more effective and beneficial than the expenditure of billions of taxpayers' dollars.

What has prompted this particular motion is that recently major government policies have done exactly the opposite to what they were supposed to do and what they have traditionally and historically done. Instead of creating benefits and beneficiaries, the government has created casualties and victims by the thousands, by the tens of thousands and by the hundreds of thousands. One casualty list alone has over one million names on it. That is the list of jobless casualties. They are in every region, in every sector and in every strata. They may be fishermen in our coastal waters or farmers in our rural areas. They may be miners, they may be factory workers, they may be the young who are trying to enter the job market or they may be the elderly on fixed incomes. They all have one thing in common: they are the victims of government policy. I want to deal with just one group this afternoon. I want to deal with the jobless. There are officially over one million unemployed, plus thousands who are not on the official casualty list, such as the young who are attempting to enter the job market, those without unemployment insurance benefits, and those who once received benefits which have now run out.

If I may focus, may I do so in a local sense. I do not attempt to focus parochially or to suggest for one minute that my riding is the microcosm on the perfect example of all ridings in Canada. However, it is obviously the one I know best. I would like to use the Stratford area as an example because our work force has historically been stable and industrious. Our incomes have been much lower than many communities. We do not claim to be on the top of the average income list. However, we have a good employment record. For example, concerning government make-work grants, we have never received a grant above the minimum in the more than nine years I have been here. These grants are presumably based on unemployment records. We have never received more than the minimum, whether it be under the local incentives program, Canada works, the young Canada works, or the new one, the community services program. Every time we change a minister, we change the name. However, we have never received more than the minimum and we have never claimed more.

We have experienced no dramatic increase in population, but we have had a community of home owners with confidence in themselves and in their community. We have had a community of stability, and we have had a community of optimism. We are typical of many hundreds of Canadian communities from one side of this country to the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: What has happened to that one community—and we share the situation with many others—in five months? In the Stratford district we have a work force of 22,000 people. Three thousand five hundred people have been laid off in five months. Three thousand five hundred people have lost their jobs and have become victims along with the other thousands who are dependent upon those victims. There has been a decrease in manufacturing employment of 35 per cent. We have a Canada Employment Centre which has a caseload capacity of 250 people a day, but the present volume is 400 to 500 a day, which is double our capacity to handle. With respect to unemployment insurance services, our active claim load increased by 52 per cent this winter as compared to last winter.

I repeat, we are not unique in Perth county or in Stratford. Dozens of Members of Parliament represent constituencies in southwestern Ontario and right across the country. Their numbers change, but the scenario remains the same. The reality is that over one million people are out of work. My 3,500 jobless constituents want jobs, they do not want handouts. They are proud, productive and hard-working. They do not want to rip off a government system, and they are not ripping off a government system. They are victims of the government system.

What happens to a community when 15 per cent of its work force is laid off in five months? Indeed, what happens to a country with one million unemployed? There are three major, direct, adverse impacts: the economic impact, the social impact and the psychological impact. We have yardsticks to measure the economic impact, such as business bankruptcies which increased by 22 per cent in 1981 over 1980, and increased by 43 per cent over 1979. During the first two months of this year, there was another 28 per cent increase in bankruptcies. We also have the yardstick of housing starts. Last year the city of Stratford had only three new housing starts. Three, in a city of over 25,000 people! That is a yardstick. There are others, such as retail and wholesale sales and the percentage of productive capacity.

However, unhappily and tragically, the best yardstick is unemployment and the cost of unemployment. One should go to a municipal official and ask him or her what the cost of unemployment is to the welfare department of that municipality. In Ontario, one should go to the ministry of community and social services and ask those provincial officials what the cost of unemployment is to their budgets. If one wants to ask the federal government, one should go to the Unemployment Insurance Commission officials and ask them what the cost of unemployment is to their fund. Over and above every dollar, nickel and penny contributed by the employers and employees to that fund, the Canadian taxpayer will have to pick up a shortfall of $1 billion in that bankrupt fund.

An hon. Member: That is not right.

Mr. Jarvis: That is the cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

Let me deal with the social impact. Not long ago, a colleague of mine in this House dealt with the social impact resulting from unemployment. One of the ministers of the Crown said it was nonsense. Well, that minister was either ignorant or insensitive to a very real fact of life; that is, the absolute, direct relationship between unemployment and adverse social manifestations, whether drug or alcohol abuse, family breakdown, suicide, heart attack or crime of all kinds. The Department of Labour has a report to show the direct relationship. As unemployment increases, so does social tragedy increase. It is not necessary that Your Honour believe me. Talk to a law enforcement officer or a probation officer. Talk to a welfare official. Talk to children's aid caseworkers. Talk to family counsellors. Talk to doctors and hospital staffs. If one does this, one will find that the cost is staggering in terms of dollars, if we want to be so callous as to measure social cost in terms of dollars. However, the real cost has no dollar value. That is the cost in terms of human misery, human despair and human degradation.

The third impact is the psychological impact. It may not be the most important, I do not know. I know that for me, and I think for many of my colleagues, it is the most difficult to understand. Unfortunately, I think it may be the most difficult to cure.

May I give Your Honour two examples from my riding. One group, which is likely next to my rural constituents in stability, is made up of skilled workers—machinists, tool and dies makers, electricians, carpenters and cabinet makers. These people have put their roots deeply into the community. They have purchased their own homes and are active participants in the community. They are people who purchased their own homes, who are active participants in the community, a stable, hard-working, optimistic work force normally.

What has happened to this group? This group is frightened. There are a lot of them out there now who are mad, and we all have constituents who are mad. Every weekend when we go home we hear about it. Anger boils up quickly and often dissipates quite as quickly. But fear is like a cancer that eats and eats and eats away.

I have the skilled labourers in my riding saying to me, to themselves and to their families: "Now that my house is mostly paid for, now that my children are mostly looked after and I am in the last half of my working career, is there going to be a job; is that company going to be in business for the last half of my working career?" That is what they are saying. Then they say: "Even if the company stays, is it going to move into a high technology field and am I going to be capable of being trained, or are services going to be there to retrain me?"

Therefore, you have one of the most stable sectors in your riding saying to itself, out of fear: "Am I going to tear up my roots; am I going to try to sell my house; am I going to move into a strange community, because I cannot survive here?" Sir, that is a very difficult thing to manage.

The other group, Mr. Speaker, that I want to talk about in my riding we all have, and I call them, for lack of a better name, the risktakers. It generally consists of the farming community and the small businessmen. I suggest they have been the builders of my riding and the builders of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: They are the men and women that at high personal risk will build and enlarge and improve. It may be the building of a new barn, the enlarging of a factory, buying a combine, a tractor or a delivery truck. They are willing to take a chance because they have always had confidence in themselves and they have had confidence in the country.

What are these risk-takers doing? I will tell you what a lot of those who had capital, those who are in a liquid position, those who were deterred by having to borrow at high interest rates, did, Mr. Speaker. They bought Canada Savings Bonds at 19.5 per cent interest. That is what the risk-takers did. They did not build a barn, they did not enlarge their business, they did not buy a new truck or car. If they had sufficient liquidity, they bought Canada bonds at 19.5 per cent. That is exactly what happened. What jobs in Perth county can be created by that? None. The traditional demand from risk-takers vanished, and with it vanished jobs. Part of those 3,500 jobs were lost in five months alone.

This is the tragic situation in my riding and I am sure in many others. A stable, productive, confident community has vanished, ravished by high inflation, deterred by high interest rates but, most important, brutalized by lost jobs.

What does the government do and say? It does nothing and it says: "We cannot do anything because we are simply part of an international recession and we cannot divorce ourselves from the economy of the United States". I do not accept that, Mr. Speaker, I do not accept it at all, but I will not debate it right now, I will go on and point out what a government's responsibility is in such a situation.

Let us assume that we can do nothing about those international pressures on the one side, and our economy tied to the United States on the other. What does a responsible government do then? Does it throw up its hands? Does it shrug in despair? Does it wait it out? Does it accept the loss of productivity and the one million people unemployed? A responsible government in this situation, Mr. Speaker, looks within its own country to those sectors that are unique to it, that may operate as a defence against those external pressures.

Have we in Canada anything unique? We have a number of things. We have one thing I would like to talk about, one very important sector. We have the oil and gas sector; that is one. What other industrialized countries have it? Name me one, in the industrialized world, that has the potential that this country has in the production of energy.

Let me discuss three energy fields where government policy has stolen the jobs of my constituents and the jobs of constituents of every member of this House. One, the tar sands megaproject of Alsands and Cold Lake; two, the Alaska natural gas pipeline; three, the conventional oil and gas exploration and drilling industry. The tar sands have $20 billion of direct investment in those two projects, with $40 billion of indirect investment flowing from the construction of those two projects. There is job creation far beyond the province of Alberta, because 25 per cent to 35 per cent of the expenditure of those billions of dollars goes to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec in the manufacturing sector, in the engineering sector, and the construction sector.

What has happened? Two years ago, Alsands should have started construction. Not one job has been created. Why? Because Canada and Alberta cannot agree. That means 3,500 people in my riding are laid off because Canada and Alberta cannot agree.

The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and the Premier of Alberta should say to their respective ministers of energy: "Gather up your officials, gather up your reports and documents, go into that room and don't you dare come out of that room until you have that problem solved, to get those projects started". The failure to do that is costing my constituents their jobs and no one who is a leader in the federal government or in the government of Alberta has a right to do that. It means 25,000 man-years of direct employment, and 220,000 man-years of indirect employment, but they will not even go into a room to resolve the problem. Canadians were promised those jobs and we want that promised fulfilled. We know that four and one-half years ago in this House the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), then President of the Privy Council, made that promise. We want that promise fulfilled.

Now the natural gas pipeline, Mr. Speaker. Again there was an ironclad guarantee, another promise of jobs, but where is it? While the minister of energy of Alberta and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of Canada (Mr. Lalonde) are in that room, I do not want the Prime Minister jetting around the world, I want him in the oval office in the White House in Washington, resolving the natural gas pipeline problem. Because failure to do so is robbing my constituents of jobs.

Let me talk about the third item. It is one on which the government does not have to agree with anyone else on. It is the conventional oil and gas service industry of Saskatchewan and Alberta and British Columbia. What has happened since the National Energy Program was implemented? Drilling in Canada is down 25 per cent and at the same time drilling goes up by 25 per cent in the United States. We find a 33 per cent decrease in rigs operating; 225 to 270 rigs have left Canada; 40 per cent of our drilling rigs have gone out of the country. This figure does not even include the service rigs. We have exported to the United States over $1 billion in oil and gas rigs. It is exactly the same, Mr. Speaker, as if I picked up a cheque book, wrote out a $1 billion cheque and handed it to the United States and said: "Here, go ahead, create jobs, thanks to Canada." That is exactly what has happened.

What effect has that had on Stratford? Stratford is far removed from the drilling area. The oil and gas industry is the biggest single consumer of trucks of any industry in Canada. It is not construction, it is not mining, it is not lumber, it is the oil and gas industry. What does Stratford make for trucks? It makes the brake cable, radiators, the interior trim, the filters, the fans, the bearings. Let me give you an example, Sir. I have a letter from the president of Cooper Energy Services Ltd. of Stratford. I will read part of it:

> Since late 1980, coincident with the National Energy Program, the demand in Alberta for reciprocating compressors in gas production and gas gathering applications has declined dramatically parallel to the departure of drilling rigs from Canada.

He goes on to say:

> Since the end of 1981, approximately 94 skilled tradesmen have been given lay-off notices.

In the energy industry, that Stratford plant should be bursting at the seams. It should be on three shifts a day. It should be hiring and training skilled labourers. However, 94 skilled tradesmen have been laid off since January 1. It is absolutely unbelievable that that should be going on in this country.

• (1230)

A headline in today's Globe and Mail states "55 laid off by oil service rig firm in Cambridge". This matter was raised yesterday in the House of Commons. That plant in Cambridge, a neighbouring riding, should be on three shifts a day, bursting at the seams and planning to expand. Every time a drill rig leaves this country, it costs Canadians jobs. In 1981 we paid $3⅓ billion of taxpayers' money to subsidize imports of foreign oil. Not one job was created with the expenditure of that money.

We import oil. What do we export? We export drill rigs, service rigs and thousands and thousands of Canadian jobs. The government's National Energy Program, and I will be as kind as I can, is a national disgrace and a national disaster. It is robbing my constituents of their right to work.

Mr. Gimaïel: Tell Mr. Lougheed.

Mr. Jarvis: I hear a Liberal heckler saying I should tell Mr. Lougheed. I will tell him to send his minister of energy into that negotiation room if he can convince the disaster that is the minister of energy for Canada to go in the same room with him. I would tell Mr. Lougheed to tell that minister to stay in the room until they have both worked out a deal. This government does not have the guts to do that and the Liberal backbenchers do not have the guts to put pressure on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is content to let people stay out of work. I am not content to let my people stay out of work because they want jobs.

I wish I had more time to spend on this. However, may I give one more example of a government gone crazy, the budget. One little item in that budget was capital cost allowance. I read in the paper that because of the implementation of the capital cost allowance provision, which reduces the ability of a taxpayer to write off part of the cost of depreciation on a car, 40,000 new vehicles will not be sold to the car rental industry. That is just one industry. It does not include the commission salesmen and all the other Canadians who use cars, just the car rental industry.

What right does the government have to do that at a time when the car industry and auto parts industry is at the lowest point since the depression? What could prompt a government, except insanity, to invoke a provision that would rob auto parts workers in my riding and across this country? It is the sheerest of folly. If the capital cost allowance provisions need review, fine; I do not mind reviewing them. I do not mind hearing the evidence to support that change. However, of all times in history, why on earth would the government deter the sale of cars and arrest the production of auto parts? It makes absolutely no sense.

This is a country beset with international problems; I acknowledge that. We have direct links with the United States economy; I acknowledge that. I also acknowledge that certain Canadians are victims of those external pressures. However, in that situation these Canadians do not have to be the victims of a government policy that operates to cost them their jobs rather than provide employment opportunities.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) for providing the House with this opportunity once again to address what has to be one of the most critical problems facing our country today, the economic difficulties in which we find ourselves.

More important, I want to thank him for providing us with this opposition day so that once again we on this side of the House can do whatever is possible to convince members opposite that indeed there is a very serious economic problem in our country. I still hear daily from various ministers as they respond to questioning the opinion that the problem is not that serious, that with any luck it will begin to turn around at the end of this quarter and, by the summer of 1982, we will see a recovery under way.

I do not think a single member on this side feels that way. Nor do I think does anyone opposite. That is why I appreciate the fact that the hon. member for Perth has again provided us with an opportunity to bring some facts to light and to raise some points of view that hopefully will get through to members across the aisle.

I also thank the hon. member for Perth for introducing a new concept as we struggle as a country to increase our exports. He identified a new export, the export of jobs. I know the government will find some convoluted way of using this to indicate that there is a major thrust forward and that our exports have increased. However, when we ask what they are, we will be told they are jobs, service rigs and so on. That is where my more complimentary comments will end.

As we begin to examine this economic challenge which faces our country, I do not believe it is appropriate or necessary to go into a litany of the problems. All of us on this side of the House are aware where the difficulties lie and what the problems are. It is appropriate that we emphasize the cost of these problems.

One need only look at what UIC payments cost Canadian taxpayers every year. It is fair to say, and I will watch my words very carefully, that we on this side are getting sick and tired of setting aside something in the neighbourhood of almost $5 billion a year for UIC payments. That is not to that say we do not want to provide UIC payments for those in need, of course we do. However, $5 billion of taxpayers' money going out needlessly to those folks who have lost their jobs is something we have to turn around. Last month this country paid out in excess of $600 million in UIC payments alone, not including the burden placed on every province in this country of having to make welfare payments to those folks most desperately in need.

Let us look at the statistics. I understand the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) will be speaking later today. He will state that there are 1.1 million people who are out of work. That is not true. If one looks at the real figures of unemployment in this country, it is closer to 1.8 million. That is in excess of 15 per cent of the work force right across Canada presently out of work.

It is interesting to look at the constituency of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). Statistics Canada reported that 9,000 people were unemployed in Cape Breton last month. However, what is interesting to note is that 18,000 people in Cape Breton were collecting UIC. This would mean an unemployment rate of over 30 per cent in Cape Breton as opposed to the figure of 16.8 per cent reported by Statistics Canada. In Cape Breton, the home of the Minister of Finance, the unemployment rate is 30 per cent.

An hon. Member: The same as Quebec.

Mr. Riis: The official number of unemployed in January of this year was 346,000. Even that number, which includes many people who are out of work and should be meaningfully employed, is not the right number. The number of those collecting UIC was not 346,000 but 417,000. If you take into consideration those people who recently applied before the statistics became valid, the unemployment rate was 589,000, or more than half a million people were applyng for UIC in the province of Quebec.

I remind hon. members that at the outbreak of the great depression in the early 1930s, the unemployment rate was just over 20 per cent. In parts of Canada today the unemployment rate runs from 30 per cent to 35 per cent, and in western Canada, one of the most prosperous regions of our country, the unemployment rate is nearly 25 per cent. In other words, those unemployment rates reflect those rates which existed at the beginning of the great depression.

What is the cost of unemployment? In monetary terms it represents $4.8 billion for unemployment insurance plus the cost of welfare to the provinces. Of course, another cost is all the revenue which is not collected since people who are not working and plants which are not operating do not generate tax revenue to the government. It is difficult to calculate what this lost revenue might be, but I suggest that it represents billions of dollars in taxes which are not flowing into the federal coffers as a result of these difficult economic times when nearly two million people are not working.

While it may be easy to calculate the economic costs of unemployment, I suspect that these are not the real costs involved. The real, most difficult and most important costs which tear at the fabric of society are the social costs. The hon. member for Perth identified a number of these costs. Examples of this are child abuse, wife battering, drug addiction, alcohol abuse and an increase in juvenile delinquency. Children are having difficulty at school. Crime rates increase, which necessitates larger police forces. These are some of the social costs which will not turn around at the end of 1982 or turn around when recovery begins. These are costs which may be with us for years, decades and perhaps even one or two generations into the future. The social fabric of our society to which we have become accustomed is literally being torn apart. Those social costs will haunt us for many years.

We have heard from many members on this side of the House who I believe travel more often throughout the country to talk to the average Canadian than members opposite. There is an evident lack of confidence for the future of Canada expressed by consumers and investors. Until recently, with the exception of the height of the depression, Canadians have had a work ethic which was best described by Frederick Jackson Turner as the frontier ethic. The meaning of that ethic was that when you venture out and apply yourself, you know that your future will be better and your children will be better off than you. By applying that effort, people knew in their hearts that their children would progress and have greater opportunities in the future.

This Canadian ethic has altered somewhat in the last number of months. No longer do people feel that their sons and daughters will have greater opportunities and better lifestyles than their own. Our confidence and hope for the future has been dashed by this government. One result of this lost hope is that young people in school begin questioning the purpose of continuing their education. They ask, "Why should we struggle and study to graduate when the unemployment level in the country is nearly two million and going up every day? What is the point of continuing in school?" Of course, when people lose hope for the future, there is no future. This government, which has the responsibility of leading the country, has caused this situation as a result of its policies.

Two areas where the real problems exist can be identified as fiscal policy and monetary policy. The fiscal policy of the government is demonstrated by the November 12 budget of the Minister of Finance. This budget, which was introduced the day after Remembrance Day, will go down in history as the turning point in our economy when the government failed to provide the necessary economic and political leadership which was required at the time. The fiscal policy which was demonstrated in the budget was anti-development, anti-growth and anti-improvement. All the minister wanted to do was to cut, cut, cut. These cuts were similar to the mindless sort of suggestions we have often heard from members to our right. They have suggested that reduced government investment is the route to follow. We do not necessarily adhere to that mindless policy during these difficult times. I have yet to hear of a businessman who has become successful through cutting back in investment.

Mr. McDermid: In tough times they tighten their belts.

Mr. Riis: If you do not invest money you do not make money.

Mr. McDermid: Have you ever been in business?

Mr. Riis: I have been in many businesses and every one has operated on the theory of making money through investing money. That is why I say the mindless—and I use the term positively—cut-back mentality of the Conservative ethic is not what we need today.

Mr. McDermid: More government waste.

Mr. Riis: As a demonstration of this government's fiscal policy, the budget is hammering this country to death. The real problem does not lie with the fiscal policy as much as it does with the monetary policy. The present monetary policy, which advocates high interest rates as a solution to combat inflation, is having the most devastating impact that this country has ever experienced. The government decided in 1975 to begin a monetary policy to fight inflation by increasing interest rates in order to cut back the money supply. The feeling at that time was that it was the only alternative to use in the fight against inflation. I suspect that until recently that was the feeling of most of the members in the House, that we should cut back spending to fight inflation because inflation is caused by spending more than you are producing. Therefore, the obvious theory was to reduce spending in order to combat inflation.

The government introduced that monetary policy in 1975 and seven years later interest rates remain at a skyhigh level. Has inflation been reduced? Is it lower than it was in 1975? Not only is it not lower, it is higher and still rising—11.6 per cent last month over the same month in the previous year. How many years do we have to have a policy before the government admits it has failed? I suspect that seven years is enough.

If we were to ask the people of Canada, as opposed to Governor Bouey, what the government should be doing—which we should do if we believe in a democracy—I believe it would be difficult to find a handful of people who would agree that a high interest rate policy is the answer and will provide us with a dynamic economy. One would have to be quite a dreamer to believe that. You would have to believe in unicorns, Mr. Speaker.

There is no doubt that this policy has failed. I beg the government and the minister who is presently in the House to admit that the government has misjudged—not necessarily erred or made a drastic mistake but misjudged—its policy and has launched on a theory under the directorship of Governor Bouey which has not wrestled inflation to the ground.

This leaves the question of what alternative there is to fight inflation if we do not do it with this monetary policy. I believe that is a fair question, one which has not been given great attention by the press or elaborated on to any great extent by Members of Parliament. However, if inflation is caused by spending more than you are producing, presumably another alternative would be to increase productivity in Canada. If there is any country in the world today which has the built-in potential to increase productivity, it must be ours. It has to be Canada. We could not identify another country which has the built-in capacity for improved and increased productivity that Canada has.

Yet what is our fiscal policy doing? It is throttling the very life out of our economy. There is no development and no productivity. That is what the fiscal policy of this government is, and that is what the monetary policy of this government is. I say it is time for a change. After seven years of failure we have to do something else.

This is no better reflected than in the attitude of the government toward the small business community. I must say that I appreciated the comments of the hon. member for Perth who said that confidence is something we have to turn around. The small business sector is the only real Canadian-owned sector of our economy. It is virtually 100 per cent Canadian-owned, which is something about which all of us in this House should feel proud. We should want to see it continue. That is where research and development occur. The small business sector is where the creativity in our economy is. That is where jobs are being created. Statistics tell us that the overwhelming majority of jobs created in Canada over the last seven years has been in the small business sector. That is where there is creativity and growth, despite government policies. That is where initiative originates. That is where flexibility exists, and I emphasize the term "flexibility" because if there is a problem we face in coming to grips with some of our economic problems, that problem is bureaucracy. I do not mean government bureaucracy only. That is what we usually talk about, but I mean the slow-moving bureaucracy which exists in big business, and big labour as well. This bureaucracy makes it very difficult for business to react quickly to the changes and challenges which face us.

Mr. McDermid: Big unions.

Mr. Riis: I said big business, big government and big labour. How much clearer can I make it for the hon. member?

Mr. McDermid: You did not say labour.

Mr. Riis: I did say labour. This is a problem we face today, but the small business sector does not face that difficulty. The small business sector has the ability to move quickly to take advantage of new trends in the economy. That is the sector we must support and encourage. That is where research and development is taking place, certainly not in the government. Government expenditures on research and development in Canada are on a par with those of that progressive, technological, industrial nation of Egypt. I do not mean to put down the country of Egypt. It has its own difficulties, but leading the world in research and development is not its forte. It should be ours. When we measure our research and development expenditures at the level of developing, struggling countries such as Egypt and Turkey, I must say we have real problems.

What is the attitude toward small business? Today in committee the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) said he agreed that in spite of some of the attempts—with the emphasis on "attempts"—by the government to assist small business, the present high interest rates nullify all its efforts. When a small business person has to borrow money at 20 per cent and more, it does not matter if there is some little government policy or some system to aid him in some way; that 20 per cent-plus interest rate will kill him.

What we are seeing is the slow erosion, which is becoming faster all the time, of the small business sector in this country. What replaces that small business sector? Needs and demands still exist, but mergers start replacing that sector, and again international chains, multinationals and so forth begin to take over that sector of the economy. Very slowly we are exacerbating the problems which, presumably, high interest rates are attempting to improve. High interest rates are making the matter even worse.

As the hon. member asked earlier, why do we have a high interest rate policy? It is because of our connection or our relationship with the United States. Does our high interest rate policy remove us from that dependency? It increases that dependency, and the solution has now become part of the problem in more ways than one.

How does the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism respond to the crisis faced by the small business community? In his response to provide assistance to those businesses wanting to expand their operations, provide more jobs and carry out more research and development? Absolutely not. That is not what the government supports or encourages. To do that we would need a bond called a small business "development" bond. Such a bond would assist small businesses and encourage them to expand. It would encourage the expansion of farms. But we changed that in the budget of November 12. We changed it, and it is now called the "small business bond". It is meant only to bail out those who are literally and beyond any doubt going bankrupt. It is a welfare system when we need intensive care. The small business sector of this country needs intensive care, but we have no real medical service and no preventive medicine to assist that sector. That is the kind of leadership we should be providing the small business sector, but we are not doing that.

Nearly two years ago the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism told us that the financing of small business was the problem and that we had to study it, analyse it and identify what the problems were. That was two years ago and today the situation is still being studied. We still have not seen any report. Why does it take two years to identify the problems small businesses face in relation to financing? Surely to goodness if this is a priority we could find that out in at least six months. Two years later we are still waiting. Let us pray that it does not simply become another report which identifies a whole host of small business financing problems, makes a whole set of recommendations and then is tabled and the government says it has done its bit.

What can be done? What are some of the options available to us? In my short time remaining—

Mr. Siddon: Two minutes.

Mr. Riis: —I think we have to admit that anything short of almost putting the government and the country on an economic wartime footing would not be enough. Major steps are needed today. Major action is required today. We do not need the little programs here and the little programs there to which we have been referring. We need a program which would identify, along the lines of what the hon. member for Perth said, those areas of the economy where we have a strategic advantage over most countries in the world, and develop those growth areas where we can expand our economy. We should not continue to shore up those old areas which have never been productive, are not productive today and certainly will not be productive in the future. We should identify the strengths this country has and build on them. In other words, we should develop an overall, comprehensive industrial strategy, and the critical component is reduced interest rates.

Mr. Siddon: What specific projects?

Mr. Riis: It is in this area that we differ with our colleagues to the right. I am not sure whether they advocate lowering interest rates, maintaining interest rates as they are or increasing them, because I hear hon. members talking about all three options.

Mr. Parker: They support the banks.

Mr. Riis: I do not know what on earth they are recommending. It depends which speaker is making a speech and to whom he is making it.

Mr. Siddon: What would you do about interest rates, Nelson?

Mr. Riis: Interest rates have to be lowered as part of an over-all industrial strategy. If they are not lowered, we cannot expect a rejuvenation of our economy or a recovery to occur. Without a reduction of interest rates, economic recovery is impossible. I ask hon. members to ask themselves a question. Why is it that interest rates in Japan can be 7 per cent or 8 per cent?

Mr. Siddon: You tell us.

Mr. Riis: Why does any Japanese investor invest anything in Japan when he could bring his money to Canada and obtain a 20 per cent return? How can interest rates in Japan be 7 per cent? The reason is that the Japanese have a comprehensive industrial strategy in place. The Japanese have a government which is able to develop co-operation between labour, management, financial institutions and the government. That is something we do not have in this country, and at this moment we certainly have a long way to go toward developing that co-operation.

A comprehensive industrial strategy, including the reduction of interest rates, is the way to begin to turn the present recessionary trend around and the way to begin to develop confidence in our future.

Mr. Siddon: That was all very specific.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Lachance): The hon. member's time has now expired. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

The House took recess at 1 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2.00 p.m.

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unaccustomed as I am to this wild applause—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: But in a more serious vein, today we are being treated to the likes of an opposition resolution which is designed to condemn the government for all sins of omission and commission and what other miscellaneous things they can find. I want to say though that the traditional routine to which we are usually subjected on Fridays has been somewhat enlivened by the highly theatrical performance of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis). It befits the member who represents that centre of Canadian theatre, Stratford. It is appropriate the opposition sees fit to appoint someone who is so talented in the ways of the theatrical arts. It is the only way in which they can make their case convincing because there is actually no substance to what they have to say. They have to hide everything by using all kinds of wiles and guiles, of which only the member from Perth is capable.

When the hon. member talks about the problems of unemployment and when one considers his performance, I think a second career is called for on the stage at Stratford, not here. However, this brings to mind a quote from Macbeth, of which I am sure the hon. member for Perth will be aware. It reads:

> Away and mock the time with fairest show. False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

• (1410)

I would say that is exactly what we have before us. Judging by the subterfuge that is being presented by members opposite, it appears they are trying to present a case they know is not there. It is unfortunate that we are being treated to this theatrical performance as opposed to a serious debate. We all know how serious the situation is. We all know this country, along with many others, is facing a recessionary period. There is a serious downturn in employment. There is still an unacceptable rate of inflation. There are still a number of turbulences in the economy which must be straightened out and dealt with. I do not think it is to anyone's benefit to keep hearing what the hon. member for Perth and the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) keep saying, namely that it is the government's fault. It is a question for which we as a government take some responsibility. Certainly there are many others in this country who must share more of the responsibility for what has happened. But they must also share the responsibility for solutions.

We on this side of the House say constantly that we are ready, willing, and prepared to co-operate and join in partnership with the business community, with trade unions, with the opposition and with financiers in order that together we can come to grips with things during these difficult times. That cannot happen, Mr. Speaker, if the whole point and objective of the opposition is to create division and fractiousness; to create false alarms which constantly frighten people into stampedes in the hope that they will gain some momentary or temporary political advantage, as opposed to offering some reasonable and rational solutions to the problems.

This is unfortunate because the times call for more serious leadership than this. We are always being presented with blanket condemnations. When members get to the end of their speeches they say they will talk about the solutions. Before that happens, though, we have 28 and a half minutes of vitriol and fulminations about the perfidy of the Liberal government, and in the last minute or so we hear "I think we have a solution, but I am sorry, I cannot give it to you because I have run out of time". That is a classic example of what we hear in this House day in and day out. We hear "Boy, do we have problems, and if you would only give us the chance, we would give you the answers, except that we have just run out of time".

I have been through several opposition days in the last two or three months as befits my own position as Minister of Employment and Immigration. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am waiting to hear members of the opposition say something that makes sense. When members of the opposition can solve their own internal contradictions and resolve their own basic inherent conflicts in their caucuses, perhaps then we will have a clear and consistent position from the opposition as to what they think should be done.

On the one hand, we have the financial critic for the Conservative party who gave a speech in Toronto who said the only answer for Canada is Reaganomics. He said: In other words, "Let us do what President Reagan is doing and slash, cut and tie everything down. Let us go back to the Reagan formula, cut back social services, social welfare, training, employment—cut back everything". That is his answer.

Mr. Bosley: Absolutely the opposite.

Mr. Axworthy: Now we hear the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) saying "Absolutely the opposite"—let us spend more money, let us do more. Let us stimulate. Let us have incentives. Let us have cash incentives. Let us do all of these other things. Well, who are we to believe? Who speaks for the Conservative party here?

Let me give another example. We have the hon. member for Perth decrying with the most eloquent crocodile tears the failures of the megaprojects. He says, "My riding is suffering because the Liberal government could not get an agreement with the Alberta government." He does not mention Shell, Gulf, or any other companies who are the ones who are actually pulling out of these projects, even though we are offering substantial subsidies and incentives. The hon. member says that it is their responsibility, and he asks: "What can we do about it? Let us get something going that will create work in my riding and in other ridings."

It was only a week ago today that I was in this very House debating an opposition resolution on transportation. I listened to the outrage and the outcrying of members of the Conservative and New Democratic parties, who kept saying, "Do not modernize the transportation system. Do not go ahead and spend $17 billion, even though by doing that it would create work in southwestern Ontario and right across the country." Modernizing the railway system would create $17 billion of investment and provide tens of thousands of jobs for Canadians.

That was the position they took last Friday. This Friday the hon. member for Perth says: "Go ahead and do it. Let us get the megaprojects on the road." Last Friday they told us not to go ahead and do that. I do not know what has happened in the last week. Maybe they had a caucus meeting and decided that today was turnaround time. But it simply comes down to the unalterable fact that we cannot find out what the Conservative Party wants to do.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Neither can they.

Mr. Axworthy: That is the problem, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) just took away my punch line. The reason we do not know what the Conservatives want is that they do not know what they want either. It is endemic of that party. What they are doing is trying to tiptoe through these difficult times hoping that no one will find out that they have an internal mass of contradictions that are wrapped up in an enigma, led by a person who is less than an enigma.

We are trying to debate the serious topic of economic growth and development. We are looking for an opposition day to at least provide us with the kinds of answers that we think would enhance our sense of direction. They say they know what to do, yet all we see is this constant inability to have at least a consistent line of argument. So, Mr. Speaker, if at times we have a certain degree of skepticism about their sincerity and willingness to come to grips with the problem, I think it is justified. Every time we look at what they have to say, all we see are contradictions or gross exaggerations. The hon. member for Perth is guilty of the parliamentary sin of trying to create a sense of hysteria by using false figures. He says there is going to be a billion dollar deficit in the UIC fund which we will have to bail out. Where did he get those figures from? In fact, last year we had a $350 million surplus in the fund. We then reduced the premiums by 15 cents per $100 of salary. It is our estimate that even if unemployment averaged 9 per cent for the entire year—which it will not—the total additional cost would be $400 million to $500 million, which means any extra premium cost would only be what we reduced the premiums by this year.

Now, that is an estimate, a judgment. We do not begin to forecast what the fund will be until the third quarter, but the hon. member for Perth has his own little abacus back there where he adds things up and gets this magical $1 billion deficit figure. Well, that is irresponsible, and I charge the hon. member with being irresponsible for using those kinds of figures. He has no business doing it, and he knows better because he is generally a responsible member of this House. However, I think he is getting carried away in a sort of caucus euphoria where they say we have tough times, let us see if we can burrow and dig and make things a little worse by using this kind of false figure. That is not the way to deal with serious conditions in a serious time. What we should be dealing with is realistic members, looking at the real problems and trying to come up with real answers.

At the same time we are also dealing with a situation where the Conservative party keeps fuelling the fire of its sins by insisting that somehow it has an answer for high interest rates even though as a government it was in favour of them. The Conservatives recognized—and I give them credit for it—that this is not a problem isolated to Canada; it is one which every industrialized country of the world is facing. So looking at this resolution which says the government is responsible for lay-offs and so on, if they use some sense of logic—and I hate to try and convince the opposition to use logic because I know it is a practice foreign to them—they would have to follow through and say that the American, British and German governments, indeed all governments, are dead wrong in their policies. Whether they be Social Democrats, Republicans, Conservatives, Socialists or Liberals, they are all wrong. Which means the only people who are right must be the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

An hon. Member: You have got it.

Mr. Axworthy: They are the only ones who have the answer—except we have not yet heard it, Mr. Speaker. So they are going to keep us wondering for another opposition day, and another one beyond that.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that if we want to come to grips with these issues, as do members on this side, let us at least be honest about it and deal with facts and reality, not the fiction and fantasy which appears every time we look at one of their resolutions. Let us deal with what is happening in Canada and with what kinds of solutions might be available.

The NDP finance critic says we do not have any policy, there is nothing there. Well, let us examine that because I think there are some interesting contradictions among our friends in the NDP as well. I wonder what their strategy is. One day I hear from the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) that we are not doing enough to bring people into the country; let us bring in more refugees and help these different groups of people overseas.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Jim Coutts will take care of him.

Mr. Axworthy: We are certainly hopeful of that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You will be hoping for a long time.

Mr. Axworthy: The concern over immigrants is legitimate and one we respond to. But then last week the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) said that this government is engaged in dastardly deeds; it is bringing in skilled workers. You cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. They cannot say one day, "bring more people in", and the next day, "stop bringing in anyone at all". I guess one day they talked to one group of people, and the next day the CLC slapped their wrists and said, "Hey, we are not in favour of more skilled workers".

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I hate to interrupt the hon. member in full flight, but I wonder if he would permit a question. Does he make a distinction—

Mr. Axworthy: I will be very pleased to respond to a question if time remains at the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

We have a situation, Mr. Speaker, where the NDP finance critic said: "Our strategy is to go for the growth industries; let us go for the winners in society, the guys who are on the way up." All right, I will buy that, but is it not exceedingly strange that the NDP, the great spokesmen for the working man, are prepared to forget the hundreds of thousands of workers in other industries who must also be protected? Is it not odd that this party, which carries the banner of labour and in fact does their bidding, is prepared to forget about the textile, footwear and garment industries, which are in some decline? They are not prepared to offer any assistance to them whatsoever.

Well, we are not as heartless as they are because we have an industrial strategy which is aiming to provide grants to help those industries develop new equipment and technology. At the same time we have introduced a number of programs to help workers affected by changeovers to adjust. There is a $350 million program for industrial labour adjustment which is now in operation in many communities represented by NDP members to help workers be retrained for new jobs.

The New Democratic Party members forget about things like that, Mr. Speaker. They do not want to talk about the worker whose only real security is in his or her skill. Oh, no, this is a party totally indifferent to skill training in Canada. I do not hear them congratulating this government when we increase the budget for skill training by 18 per cent this year alone, so that we will be spending over $1 billion this year and adding thousands of opportunities for workers to be retrained. What do we get from the NDP for that? They say, "Oh, that is not good enough; it is a gimmick, a trick, do not listen to them." What do we get from the president of the CLC? "Do not listen to them; that is not important. We do not care that the government is spending $1 billion to help retrain workers in Canada. We do not care about retraining or adjustment."

The NDP finance critic said to just go for the big winners, the growth industries. Well, we are not prepared to buy that. We will help those people, and we are doing it now because we just put $436 million into the aero space industry, which is a new technology industry. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) has established six micro-electronic centres right across Canada—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: —to provide for the development of a new technology industry. But at the same time this same government is also employing a program to help the textile and footwear industries. We are providing major assistance in places like Cambridge and Brant.

• (1430)

I would ask the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap to speak to his colleague, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), who has written letters of congratulation to me and other ministers thanking us for the ILAP program, which is helping thousands of workers in his riding to find adjustment in new jobs.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Axworthy: Those are the kinds of strategies we are putting in place.

Mr. Riis: What about interest rates?

Mr. Axworthy: Let us speak about another major area of assistance that we do not hear the NDP speaking about. In fact, we hear them pouring scorn on the work-sharing program. As of today, we have signed over 530 agreements with trade unions and employers for work-sharing across Canada. That means that we are covering close to 30,000 workers and have avoided 13,000 lay-offs in this country within the two months that the program has been in operation. What do we hear from the New Democratic Party and the CLC? We hear, "Gimmickry, trickery! It doesn't mean a thing." I ask the NDP to go back to those areas and speak to those workers who are signing an average of 20 or 30 agreements a week, and ask them if they think it is a gimmick that we are saving their jobs and keeping them employed. Is that so much of a gimmick? Is that part of the NDP's callousness toward the workers, showing that it does not care that we are saving jobs?

What we are pointing out is that this kind of emotion which is constantly erupting on opposition days is not really based upon the reality of what we are trying to do in this country. This is evident, because we do admit we have difficult times and we have hard times; but we are also saying that we are trying to work our way out of it. At the same time we are trying to provide protection and security for working people.

Mr. Nickerson: You got us into it.

Mr. Axworthy: Let me consider another statement by the finance critic for the NDP which I think will be of enormous amusement to everyone in this House. He said, "I will give you the motto if you wish it followed. Let us do what the Japanese do." The Japanese have been pretty successful. Has the hon. member really considered the way the Japanese society is organized? Does he know that it is a fully corporate society where the large corporations make the decisions behind closed doors with government? This is the party whose leader stands up, day after day, and yells and screams and goes into a tantrum about the multicorporate state and the dominance of the American corporations; but now his finance critic is saying, "Why do we not do what the Japanese do and get that secretive corporate state together?"

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): American is bad. Japanese is good.

Mr. Axworthy: That is right. Somehow, the Japanese corporate society is okay, but if an American corporation tries to do something here, it is no good.

Again, we come back to the point that we would like to be able to listen with some respect to the propositions put forward by the members of the opposition. But surely, when we are faced with those kinds of statements, when one day they say zig and the next day they say zag, when one day they are up and the next day they are down, when one day they are left and the next day they are right, we do not know who speaks for whom. It is truly the party of total individualism because each of its members says something different.

We must find a more realistic approach. As we have said in this House many times, we have provided a budget and an economic program that we believe will make a difference in this country.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, it sure will.

Mr. Riis: It will make a big difference. It has already made a difference. It killed us!

Mr. Axworthy: That is right. It is making a difference because the inflation rate has come down in the last two months.

Mr. Riis: It is 11.6 per cent.

Mr. Axworthy: The inflationary pressures are being reduced. We realize there is still a problem on the horizon. We still realize that a number of highly inflated wage settlements are being considered, and some of the major sons in the CLC are saying, "No truck or trade with anyone, boy, we are going for broke!" There is no co-operation, no partnership and no attempt to compromise. They are saying, "We are going straight down the line for what we want. We do not care about anyone else. We do not care about the country. We do not care about industry. It can go broke, for all we care. We are just going for the big bundle." That is what we are beginning to hear from the political masters of the NDP and from the CLC executive. We must face that problem and find some resolution.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap said something which I thought was kind of intriguing. Maybe he gave us some kind of a clue as to what the NDP is really after. He said that what we have to do is go to a wartime footing. Whenever there is wartime there are wage and price controls. Are we hearing the first indication that the NDP is saying, "Aha, the real answer is wage and price controls"?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Emergency powers.

Mr. Axworthy: Maybe emergency powers. May it was the members of the NDP who were really the authors of the internment camp philosophy. Maybe they were really the ones who influenced our bureaucrats who prepared those papers stating that we should have internment camps. Maybe that was the basic source of all that difficulty.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: The fact is that I find that to be exceedingly strange.

Mr. Riis: Sure you would.

Mr. Axworthy: I agree we are in difficult times, but this government is not prepared to go to wage and price controls at this time. We would prefer to have voluntary restraint. We would prefer that business, labour and government each showed a sign of restraint.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Get them together.

Mr. Axworthy: We have taken our first step by putting forward a budget which shows that restraint. Through that restraint we will bring inflation rates down and, by bringing inflation rates down, we will bring high interest rates down.

Mr. Riis: Are they bringing them down?

Mr. Axworthy: There is no artificial mucking around. Rather, we are doing it on the basis that that is the system from which there will be a natural market decision to bring the rates down, not an artificial decision which would produce all kinds of convulsions in international trade and in the flow of finances out of this country, and which would cause a higher rate of inflation because we would have to import products at higher cost from abroad.

Mr. Fennell: That is what has happened.

Mr. Axworthy: That is the kind of position we are taking. However, in addition, we have also put forward a major economic development paper which is now acting as the basis for discussions with a wide variety of participants from the private sector. It has put forward the basic element that we must stimulate research and development. I fully agree with the finance critic of the NDP. R and D is indeed important. That is one reason we have increased the budget of the National Science Engineering Council by 21 per cent this year. We have increased the budget of the Medical Research Council by 23 per cent. We put $436 million into the aerospace program and an additional $100 million toward the Telidon program. Therefore, there is agreement that that is a major area of investment.

It is the reason that our envelope of economic development commits $60 billion of government investment to provide incentives and subsidies in support of private industry in this country. It will help the Mitel Corporation of New Brunswick to supply 1,000 jobs to the workers in that depressed area. It will provide for major intervention in western Canada where we are setting up, in the province of Saskatchewan, the province of many of the hon. member's colleagues, the new hydrology institute which will do major research into water and ice conditions to provide for major expansion of agricultural production in that area. We are to provide for a major $150 million expenditure in the core area program of my own city to provide for redevelopment there.

Mr. Fennell: Sure.

Mr. Axworthy: It will provide for the development of 3,000 or 4,000 jobs, and $60 million will be provided for the application of a new computer facility for Air Canada.

Mr. Riis: It is called "ad hoc".

Mr. Axworthy: It is those kinds of interventions and investments that we are prepared to make.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We need a change in the tax system.

Mr. Axworthy: But at the same time, we believe that we must go beyond that. We must have a basic framework of restraint. We must see that those investments are strategically placed in those areas where they will have the maximum impact. However, we also need major co-operation from the other economic actors; we cannot do it alone. The government does not run the entire economy, it is run by all departments. Thousands of decisions are being made every day by businessmen, by trade unions and by provincial governments, which spend far more of the national purse than we do. If one adds up the provincial budgets, they have a much higher public expenditure than the federal government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is why you need co-operative federalism. You should never say it is dead.

Mr. Axworthy: That is right. That is why we we need better federalism and have tried to come to better arrangements in those areas. Therefore, we see there is a need for economic strategy.

I refer hon. members to the paper which was tabled at the time of the budget. It sets out the basic element of that strategy. That is what we should be debating today. Hon. members of the opposition would be well advised to concentrate their attention on it and say, "Let us improve it, let us modify it, let us change it", instead of condemning and contradicting in the manner we have heard in the debate thus far. Our basic thrust in these difficult times is to develop some kind of confidence and to use the tax system.

• (1440)

One of the things we have to deal with is the position taken by our Conservative friends right from the beginning, where they want free markets, laissez-faire and free enterprise. They go and speak to the chambers of commerce and to businessmen and they say: "You make the decisions; you get the government out of the market place". Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) did exactly that by reducing the over-all rate of taxation to Canadians and by plugging up some of those specialized loopholes, instead of saying, "You make the decisions as to where you want things done." There were some particularized, specialized investment loopholes.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have not read the budget.

Mr. Axworthy: Let us reduce it down to the minimum. Let us say we will do it in that way, and then ask: "Where do you want to invest it?" That is the party of free enterprise, laissez-faire and free markets. Let us come back to the idea of providing more specialized incentives, more specialized subsidies.

They have been reducing the real rate from 60 per cent to 50 per cent. That is the normal rate of reduction. It could be a lot more, to provide expenditures and provide for businessmen to make these investment choices. They are doing it of their own making and in their own time, not being dictated to by government. We are doing what the opposition is asking us to do and what do we get for it? We do not get applause and we do not get any appreciation or any feeling of satisfaction. What we get is their acting as if they were on a stage, as if they were back in Stratford on opening night. I am afraid we cannot take them seriously on that account.

I would simply ask them, when their next opposition day comes around, to look at what is happening in the country and try to get their own act straightened out, rather than relying upon grease paint and coloured lights and magic lantern shows. They should come up with real propositions, real solutions and real contributions to this debate, so that Canada can get on and so that we can provide work for the unemployed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Evans): The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta).

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister said he would be pleased to answer a question of mine if I placed it at the conclusion of his speech. I wonder if he would be prepared now to entertain my question. He accused another speaker of a dramatic performance. I would like to congratulate him on his own performance. Some might feel it was a flop.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Evans): Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, the minister has one minute left, if he would care to respond. He does not have to, obviously, but if he wishes to, he may.

The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Lisgar.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, could I ask—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Evans): Order, please.

Mr. Rose: I asked if I would be permitted to ask the minister a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Evans): With the minister's consent, the hon. member can ask the minister a question. The minister does not have an obligation to respond, but if the minister so wishes he may. He has declined to respond, so the hon. member therefore cannot ask his question.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Speaker used up at least part of the time. I wonder if I could ask him—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Evans): Order, please. The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) has put a question. The time has expired and the hon. minister has declined to respond because his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, why do we not hear the question, by unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Evans): The Chair can recognize the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody to ask a question and the minister can respond, if I have unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Evans): I have unanimous consent. The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. Rose: I thank hon. members of the House, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to ask a question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Do not waste it.

Mr. Rose: I know the minister is very objective and would make a distinction between the importation of refugees or allowing refugees to seek refuge in this country and the importation of skilled workers, rather than providing training for our own Canadians. I know he does not wish to distort the attitude of the New Democratic Party in any way and I would like him to have the opportunity to clear that up.

Mr. Axworthy: With the agreement of the House, Mr. Speaker, which I appreciate, I would be very pleased to answer the hon. member's question. I would point out to him that the New Democratic Party have been saying, on the one hand, that we should bring more people into the refugee program and, on the other hand, that we should not be bringing skilled workers in. Even though they are skilled workers, they are going to jobs for which Canadians are not sufficiently trained and for which the skills are not available at the present time.

The NDP are therefore providing a detriment and a handicap to economic growth, because the only basis on which we allow skilled workers to come into Canada is that they provide further economic stimulus or a skill which is not available here. That is one of the reasons we introduced the national training program, to make sure that more Canadians have those skills. The NDP cannot have it both ways. They cannot say: "Import more people without any skill" thus adding to the problem, and at the same time say: "Do not bring them in". Because they are adding to the economic productivity of the country.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): It was with interest, Mr. Speaker, that I sat through the speech by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). One certainly would not think that the two of us came from the same province, Manitoba, when one listens to the Minister of Employment and Immigration talk about how things are, that the government may be at fault to some extent but it is trying to work through its economic problems, but really it is the job of everyone else to go ahead and give it the support it feels it needs.

At the same time, one cannot help but think that one of the things that is destroying the confidence of people in the country at this particular point in time is that businesses, large and small, individuals, labour unions, anyone earning any kind of income, are totally at a loss on account of the budget which the hon. minister had some responsibility for bringing down.

The budget is one of the most disastrous pieces of legislation this House or this country has seen in a long, long time and is directly the responsibility of the Liberal government itself. It came down in the face of all economic indicators that said that the economy was moving into a recession and that what was needed was not the kind of negative budget that the government brought in at that particular time.

The minister never touched on that. He never mentioned anything in terms of the budget, the direction in which the government is going, the fact that we are in a depressed time, that it is income tax time and there are still a good many things that Canadians do not really know in filling out their income tax forms because the government has not given the proper kind of direction and leadership.

He was right on one point, and that is that individuals or the opposition parties cannot blame the government for all the ills. But the party in power that has a cabinet and a Prime Minister, and that is certainly taking credit for running this country when times are good, must give good leadership. They should give direction to the country and to the people so that at least we know where we are going. There has to be a feeling of confidence generated by the government and it has to get through to the people. That is not happening at the present time.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right; that is the problem.

Mr. Murta: The current outlook, Mr. Speaker, no matter how you look at it, whether from government sources or private sources, is very bleak; it is negative and frightening for the average Canadian. Statistics Canada in February warned that a current recovery is not imminent, that all indicators are negative and continuing to decline. In March they said a recovery is not yet imminent. Nothing really has changed. The outlook for exports, according to Statistics Canada, is not good for the automotive sector, particularly as it pertains to Ontario, and also the manufacturing sector is extremely bleak. I suggest that in April we will have roughly the same kind of scenario, that a turnaround in the economy is still not imminent.

The outlook is bleak, and that comes not only from government sources but other sources. One of the reasons is that we are still continuing to have double-digit inflation, and interest rates that are astronomical by any standards. I will mention more about interest rates and their effect later on in my remarks.

Unemployment in this country is far too high. The decline in business investment and the weakness in the United States on which our economy depends to a large extent rules out the possibility of a quick turnaround in economic activity. For many Canadians this means disaster, not only disaster with regard to their job in the coming year, but their homes and, most important, the dignity with which they conduct their affairs.

We know what brought this on. It is a combination of many things. We are paying for past sins. Government spending is far too high and it is still climbing. Inflation, which is part of the whole question of government spending, is running far in excess of what it should be.

There is a lack of confidence in the government. In some cases people do not trust any political parties. They certainly do not trust the government in giving economic leadership. I am not necessarily saying Canadians should follow that leadership, but the leadership should be there. It is not at the present time.

The economic situation is so bad that every day the government has to borrow $30 million. It is spending money it does not have. In order to borrow that kind of money, it has to compete. It competes with the private sector and with individual Canadians who must borrow money for mortgages and capital projects. The government, which is the regulator in our society, is one of the main purchasers of money in the marketplace. Canadians must compete with the government. If Canadians followed the same kind of spending program as the government, they would be broke.

This year Canadian taxpayers must pay $17 billion to service the national debt. This figure comes from the spending estimates tabled in this House by the government. The debt service charge is increased by $2.1 billion over last year. It represents 22 per cent of the total outlay of $76.3 billion. It is significant that the size of the expenditure is about ten times the amount the government will spend on economic development.

In spite of this expenditure to service our debt, we are not getting ahead; it just pays the interest. It is similar to the situation of someone who has borrowed to the maximum from his bank and can get no further credit, so he goes to another bank to make a loan to pay the first bank. This government has gone to a whole series of banks around the world. We are not only mortgaging what is being done at present, but mortgaging the future of our young Canadians.

The public debt charge is the fastest growing area in government expenditures. The government must borrow more money simply to pay the interest on the $122 billion it now owes. If a business borrowed in that manner, it would soon go bankrupt.

Other members who have spoken in this debate today have dealt with the matter of where the money should be spent. In times such as this, there are basically two areas. Money should be spent to help those who cannot for various reasons help themselves. People require help because they have been hurt by inflation, a stagnating economy and the stumbling and bumbling by the government through its budget and other tax proposals. It is absolutely necessary to target money for housing and other such areas.

On the other side of the coin, the government through the tax system and tax incentives should give encouragement and direction to the productive sectors of the economy. One that I am keenly aware of and know something about is the agricultural sector. Over the last number of years we have lost the ability to compete in world markets for a good many products. Canada has the potential to become a superpower in one area, much like Japan and West Germany have become superpowers in some instances. That area is agriculture. We can produce food more efficiently than most countries in the world. We can produce it on a par with the United States.

If we are going to excel, we must have an industrial strategy. We must attack the areas of greatest potential in our economy, as the Japanese and West Germans have. If we are going to capitalize, it should be in this area. We have lost to other countries in electronics, notably radio and television, and in automobiles. We are having problems trying to keep down auto imports as consumers want to buy other than what is produced in this country.

We could become a superpower in agriculture. We should direct our attention to that area and develop an industrial strategy aimed at agriculture. About 4 per cent of the population produces the food, but approximately 40 per cent of the total economic activity in this country is a derivative of agriculture or an agriculture-related activity. This is not happening at the present time. We are not directing our efforts toward an industry in which we could be the best. It is unfortunate, but I believe that the United States will take away more of our markets.

We have the potential to be a superpower in agriculture. However, the government is not giving it the proper attention which it should. Nation wide farm bankruptcies are up this year from last year by 75 per cent in January and 54 per cent in February. Although the figures are not out yet, the number of bankruptcies will be high in March and probably just as high in April and May.

Many farmers discover that they cannot finance their operations to put seed, fertilizer and chemicals into the ground for the spring. This is a shocking situation and unfortunately it is only the tip of the iceberg. However, it is the best indicator of the situation which is developing within the agricultural sector. Many farmers are being forced out of business either by foreclosures or by sales. Farm costs in western Canada have increased by almost 12 per cent. Over the past decade farm costs have run at over 300 per cent. This is largely due, certainly within the last few years, to a 635 per cent increase in interest charges on farm debt.

I know of very few other sectors of our economy which uses capital in the way the agricultural sector does. Agricultural authorities estimate that in 1982 the cost of farm input will increase by at least 10 per cent while net incomes will decline by an enormous 15 per cent. The gap is beginning to widen to such an extent that many agricultural producers are no longer caught in a squeeze, they are in a death grip. We must keep in mind that if one industry in this country is capable of turning our GNP around and generate economic activity, it is the agricultural industry because Canadian farmers can produce agricultural products better than any other country in the world.

All other costs related to farm production have also risen significantly. For example, the cost of machinery is up by almost 20 per cent, building and fencing costs are up approximately 12 per cent, supply and services rose 20 per cent and crop production input costs rose 14 per cent. All this occurs during a period of declining real income for farmers.

What does the government do in response to this situation? It introduces a Farm Credit Corporation program which provides such a small amount of money to the agricultural sector that it is spent before the bill has even been passed. In effect, it is technically allocated through Parliament and it is snapped up in a matter of days because of the very small amount involved.

These serious difficulties arise in all probability because of the interest rate and monetary policy which the government will not reconsider in relation to the interest rate policies of the United States. We will see interest rates being paid by the agricultural sector which admittedly are similar to the private sector in the range of 17 per cent to 27 per cent, if the projections for December of 1982 are correct. The reason for this high interest is that there will be a great demand for money.

It is unfortunate that during a debate on an opposition day we are unable to achieve greater response from the government. It is unfortunate that opposition criticisms and some proposed strategies which we believe should be pursued only fall on deaf ears. I suppose the only alternative we can hope for is that Canadians who are concerned about what is happening in Canada and the direction in which it is headed will read our debates and listen to our speeches and apply pressure to the government and all members of the House to find answers to our dilemma.

It is my hope that we can develop a made in Canada interest rate policy. I believe this policy is overdue and that it is time for us to develop our own policies to protect the productive sectors of our economy.

• (1510)

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, today we are faced once again with an opposition motion on the state of the economy in this country. I heard the member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) tell us that the government did not seem to be doing anything, and on another opposition day, he said the government did not seem to want to specify what measures it was taking to improve the economic situation. Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and other ministers, and just now, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), have mentioned a number of government projects and measures aimed at improving the state of the economy. We are being told time and time again that the problem is our high interest rates, and that we should have made-in-Canada interest rates. The Minister of Finance has discussed this matter several times, and has said that our policy in this respect will be aimed at reducing the deficit and slowing down inflation.

We are maintaining these interest rates with a view to turning around the economy, and I am sure all Canadians will realize this, as soon as we manage to get out of the economic recession that is plaguing all countries, not only Canada. As soon as Canadians realize that we are, in fact, getting out of this difficult situation, they will agree that our measures and our policies were the best, in the circumstances. I have a few words to say about the Progressive Conservative motion that says our economic measures and the economic situation are forcing lay-offs and preventing job creation. That is somewhat surprising, because within our own Department of Employment and Immigration, we have implemented a vast number of programs aimed at reducing lay-offs and creating jobs. During 1981-82, through eleven labour market programs including community development projects, local employment assistance programs, summer programs for students and programs for the handicapped, we have created nearly 180,000 jobs. Other programs have been implemented in order to preserve existing employment, such as the work-sharing concept I mentioned earlier. We have succeeded in saving nearly 12,000 jobs. There is another extremely interesting program that has been accepted by the Government of Ontario, and we hope other governments will follow suit.

Under the program, under Section 38, we have been able to provide 2,000 workers in Ontario with very interesting work which allows them to keep their jobs, while the community also benefits. I should like to give a few more details on the two programs I have just described. If we look at work sharing, for instance, this has probably been the government's most popular program in the past several years. During the last six months, we were able to sign nearly 500 work-sharing agreements across the country, which means that workers who would otherwise have been unemployed were able to keep their jobs in a number of Canadian businesses. Under the program, employees agree to work from one to three days a week and receive unemployment insurance benefits for the rest of the week.

Similar programs have helped a number of businesses to keep their workers employed and to remain competitive with other companies in the Canadian market. Last week, we had a striking example of this in Ontario, where a company that had agreed to the work-sharing formula was able to get three contracts for manufacturing instruments for other large companies. Mr. Speaker, if the company had been forced to shut down because of an economic slowdown, it would no longer have been able to compete on the Canadian market, and obviously, it would have lost the three contracts it was now able to obtain. That is why formulas like the work-sharing concept are extremely important to all areas in Canada. Ontario and British Columbia have signed the largest number of work-sharing agreements in Canada. Quebec has also had its share, and I hope that in the days and weeks to come, Quebec's industries will be able to benefit from this very popular formula, and thus safeguard the jobs of a great many Quebecers.

The other most important program, Mr. Speaker, is the new labour formula that we are now developing in consultation with the provinces under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Obviously under such a formula, workers who have unfortunately lost their jobs because of the economic situation and are now receiving unemployment insurance can come back onto the labour market and remain active, which means that they will be able to go back to their factories or to their former employers when the situation improves and be as productive as before. Such a program must obviously be developed in co-operation with the provinces, businessmen, industries and unions. The purpose is to create immediate opportunities for these workers who have unfortunately lost their jobs in the short term and wish to reintegrate the labour market. As I said earlier, we want to keep these workers busy so that later on they will be able to go back to their old jobs, and we are trying as much as possible to develop programs in the occupations where these people use to work.

As I said earlier, one province, namely Ontario, has signed an agreement with the Canadian government, thanks to which it has been able to keep or put back 2,000 workers in the labour force. Discussions are now under way with other provinces, including British Columbia, New Brunswick and Quebec. According to our most recent information, the negotiations with Quebec are still going on and we should be able to announce programs for Quebec within a few weeks. Of course, we are all aware of the problems of the forest industry in Quebec and other Canadian provinces. It will certainly be useful to come to an agreement with this government for reforestation and forestry programs which will give positive results in the future and will benefit the Canadian people and especially those who are employed in this industry.

As a matter of fact, as recently as March 25, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced subsidies of $220 million for the forestry and fishing industries. These subsidies, of which $170 million will be provided from the unemployment insurance fund, will create nearly 27,000 jobs in Canada. Of course, as far as fishing is concerned, we shall be able and we shall want to develop projects in areas such as the Gaspé Peninsula, the Magdalen Islands and the other eastern provinces. Naturally, when I speak of the Gaspé Peninsula, this also includes the whole North Shore of Quebec. All this shows that the subsidies which the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced last week are extremely important, and this is why we urge the government of Quebec to co-operate with the federal government to complete this process which is extremely important for these two industries, namely forestry and fishing. There is another sector of the economy which is very important and which must also co-operate with both levels of government. I am talking about the labour movement.

It has been suggested that the province of Quebec was somewhat lagging behind the other provinces in respect of the two programs I have just mentioned, because we have problems with labour. Mr. Speaker, some points that have been made are very compelling. In the March 24, 1982 issue of the newspaper Le Soleil, Mr. Fernand Daoust, who, I understand, is vice-president or general secretary of the QFL, is quoted as saying on the matter of work-sharing: "This is not a good direction for the Quebec labour movement." Mr. Speaker, it is my view that in the present economic situation, the responsibilities of governments, businesses, entrepreneurs and labour unions must go beyond individual ideologies or political partisanship. They should strike to create jobs for our workers and to improve economic conditions.

Only this week, the Prime Minister here in Ottawa made a speech on the problem and urged labour unions to cooperate more closely with governments. Mr. Speaker, I feel this is about the only solution for every group across the land, and particularly in the province of Quebec, as I stressed earlier, because our figures show that as far as work-sharing is concerned—and hopefully the same problem does not exist with agreements made under Section 38—it seems that in the province of Quebec, the reason why we do not have so many work-sharing agreements is because there are problems with labour unions, and according to that press report, it can hardly be denied. Mr. Speaker, that is why I believe that labour unions in the province of Quebec, and in Canada generally, will have to act responsibly in the current economic crisis and ensure that during 1982 and until we can feel and see that recovery, we will have to cooperate with all levels of government, whether federal or provincial, in order that agreements of this kind may be signed.

Other areas necessarily contributed to job creation, namely our community development programs and our Summer Canada programs. I think I can deal at length with our community development programs, because the constituency I have been representing in this house for over two years received its large share of community development programs. In a region such as ours, we succeeded in building infrastructures in some municipalities that allowed them to frequently hire permanent workers, and to make community space available to municipal councils and to every social club or group that applies for it.

With respect to fisheries, we have also repaired, developed and improved fishing ports to enable a great number of fishermen, who would otherwise have to file an employment insurance or social welfare claim to resume or continue their fishing operations. Since 1971, we have invested in the Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine riding alone almost $17 million. We have to check the facts and see, how many jobs I admit they are temporary, but I would say in 60 per cent of cases, it makes it possible for some workers to make ends meet, to live decently during a 12-month period and to maintain a decent standard of living so that our area, despite its massive unemployment will still remain an enjoyable place to live.

The other sector, Mr. Speaker, involves of course summer jobs. Over the past few years, I think that our Department has shown that we could take action and implement programs to enable our young people to re-enter the labour market and get summer jobs. We announced at the beginning of January that skills-training program. We hope that the provinces will finally manage to sign agreements for the five next years. With this program we make it possible for young people to complete their training and thus obtain a job which is available but for which they cannot apply because of a very minimal lack of skill. That program is intended precisely for the young, under 25, so that they can at least apply for available jobs.

With regard to summer employment, this year we will be able to provide jobs for approximately 30,000 young people. In December, we announced a budget of $100 million for that program; in March, the minister added another $20 million which will enable us to increase by 10,000 the number of students who can work this summer. Accusing the government of causing lay-offs and failing to create jobs is simply refusing to acknowledge those figures; above all it is to refuse to accept the facts. We have programs for the young, for the unemployed and people in difficulty, which can help them get back to the labour force, and cope despite the current economic depression in Canada and throughout the world. So, in closing, I would say that the programs we already have and are implementing are extremely helpful and if governments, unions and employers can work together hand-in-hand toward a common goal, we will be able to overcome the economic crisis.

[English]

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to say that I am delighted that you are in the chair. I am sure you will understand the personal reasons that prompt me to make that statement. It will be a challenge for me to continue when you are not in your normal seat.

In his remarks the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bujold) referred to shared work. In Germany, Mr. Speaker, that is called "short shift". I wonder if the parliamentary secretary has discussed with the Germans the problems it has created. It has been an abomination and has distorted the total unemployment picture. It has exaggerated the amount of money being paid out but it keeps the numbers low. Reference to the more than one million unemployed does not give the true picture which will become further distorted if this program is followed.

I will just pretend that the minister is in the House, Mr. Speaker, although it seems he could not stay long enough to listen to any positive suggestions that might be offered. He sloughed off the entire responsibility for the present situation to members on this side of the House. He said that we are totally responsible for all his problems. He also said we never make any helpful suggestions. We do, Mr. Speaker, but what good are they when he just talks and runs? I think he should stay here to listen or read some of the positive remarks that we have made in this debate.

The minister spoke about spending more money now. The problem with that is that the government has spent all the money over the past 14 years! It took the Keynesian theory and worked it in good times and now, in bad times, of course the Keynesian theory cannot work. The government got itself into this jam and now it is looking to us to get it out. We are supposed to save it from itself, and I think the public is starting to believe that.

The minister spoke about manpower training and the $1 billion that will be spent this year. He spoke of bringing 20,000 or 25,000 skilled workers into the country. But manpower training is a total failure, Mr. Speaker. It takes young people 18, 20 and 22 years old and provides them with an excuse to draw unemployment insurance while they are trying to learn a trade. I spoke to an instructor at Durham College in my riding about this. He wanted to know why the government will not allow them to put young people 15, 16 or 17 years old into a proper apprenticeship program; that is the age when they are malleable. Instead, the schoolrooms are filled with people who are not there to learn a trade but only there to collect unemployment insurance. Members on the other side may disagree that this is the case, but it is what I have heard. I think the minister should go out into the community colleges and sit in a classroom for 45 minutes or so. I am sure he would be amazed at what he found out.

The minister spoke of saving jobs but, Mr. Speaker, I have to go home this weekend and meet with 1750 UAW workers who have been let out this week. That is a tragic situation which was brought about by the incompetence of the Liberal government.

Members of the government talk about natural resources, about manufacturing, about industry, but what we are concerned with here is human resources, people who do not have jobs. The government has not taken any action to get them jobs, either.

We must be concerned with the social impact of this situation. It is not new, Mickey Mouse patch up jobs that these people are worried about; it is their mortgage payment, their car payment and the cost of fuel. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) brought in the National Energy Program and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought in a budget, but the one thing they forgot was people. They think they can get enough money by raping the oil industry, but there is only one resource that will generate tax dollars and that is people. But that is only if the people have jobs, Mr. Speaker. They are the only permanent tax base we have.

The Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) who is in the House this afternoon, has to admit that she has a problem. In Ontario for many years we have depended on our natural resources such as nickel, gold and copper but at present there is a lack of demand for those products, which is likely to continue. We will not get any revenue from our natural resources but the government still thinks it is going to make millions from oil.

The hon. member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) reviewed the figures in the National Energy Program. We have all heard them, Mr. Speaker. Each month the situation gets worse. But before I get into that, I want to put on the record a sentence I read in a brochure that was sent to me following the budget. It reads as follows:

> Historically, left leaning socialist ideology tends to de-emphasize the profit motive and tax incentives and to promote government intervention.

That is really what we are talking about. Government intervention started with the National Energy Program. That program has done much damage to my constituency of Ontario. I am sick when I have to deal with my constituents who are wondering what they are going to have to do for their next dollar. They feel badly about receiving welfare. They are responsible citizens. They are embarrassed having to go begging with their hands out. What this government is doing is to the public of this country to go begging.

A good example of that is what has happened to a company called Turbo Resources. Hon. members should take a look to see what that program has done to Turbo Resources.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It has torpedoed Turbo Resources.

Mr. Fennell: That is only an example of what has happened to hundreds of small independent oil companies and related services in Alberta, to the steel industry in Ontario, and to the car manufacturers in Oshawa. It is serious what this government has done. This government has put state intervention ahead of the people. That is what is killing this country.

I am sure that some of the multinationals are laughing because they are being subsidized as a result of this National Energy Program. They are being subsidized with foreign crude. That situation does not help this country. What it is doing is to export money from Canada, subsidize the multinationals on the one hand and take away the ability to develop new oil resources on the other. The only oil resources multinationals can develop are those located in Saudi Arabia, or the Middle Eastern countries, Venezuela and Mexico. What good is that doing for Canada? The National Energy Program is a very negative piece of legislation. It has really hurt the country. The minister has stated recently that he is going to open up the legislation again. He is taking a unilateral stand. He comes out with wonderful words. He is a master of words. I have great admiration for his ability to say so much without any content.

In western Canada we have 400,000 barrels of oil per day being locked in. We import 400,000 barrels of oil per day. We are exporting $16 million in cash a day. If that $16 million a day were to stay in Canada, think of the jobs it would create in the steel industry in Ontario, in the steel fabrication industry in Ontario and in the manufacture of half-ton pickup trucks in Ontario. This policy has hurt Canadians desperately. Interestingly enough, the government is paying out $16 million a day and the taxpayers are being asked to contribute $7 million a day from their pockets to subsidize this totally unsuccessful program. This program is a failure.

What has this program done to Canadian investment? There has been an exodus of 270 rigs from Canada. I understand that no one has been able to get a toehold on the amount of money involved, because it is so many billions of dollars, I certainly cannot keep track of it. I have heard that up to $18 billion is now being invested in the United States, Australia and in other parts of the world. But the real damage being done as a result of this is being felt right here in Ontario. Every day new statistics are announced. We hear about new lay-offs. Then we hear about a pipeline that is not going to be built. Directly affecting the steel industry.

But the seriousness of all this is the toll on human resources. In 1979, we produced in excess of 225,000 homes. This year, calculated on an annualized basis, it will be somewhat fewer than 100,000 homes. We will have a shortage of between 70,000 to 150,000 homes. Think of all the construction workers in Toronto who are unemployed. Think of all the lathe workers, the plasterers, the plumbers, electricians and woodworkers in my riding of Ontario, in Whitby, Pickering and Ajax who are unemployed. Those are the people for whom the government is doing nothing. This government is not dealing with the guts of this country. When I refer to the guts of the country, I am referring to the hard working Canadian citizens who have trades and who are capable of producing a product. Take a look at unemployment, Mr. Speaker.

In 1979, there were 800,000 people unemployed. That represented 7.5 per cent of the population. Today there are 1.1 million people unemployed, but as the hon. member to my left mentioned, the true figure is really 1.8 million. That represents 15 per cent of our work force who are unable to get a job to perform an important function for this country and to be productive.

What has happened to our money? We keep hearing from the government side that our government believed in high interest rates. That is what they told us. When we were in power, our interest rates averaged 11.57 per cent during 1979. Since the Liberals have been back in power, the interest rate for treasury bills peaked in August, 1981, at 20.85 per cent. These figures come from Statistics Canada. They are not dreamed up. They are statistics. What is the treasury bill rate today? The interest rate for treasury bills today is 15.32. The Liberals keep blaming everybody but themselves. We hear them say that it is the United States tight money policy; that it is what is happening in Europe and all over the place, that even the Conservative party is causing high interest rates. That is marvellous, but let us look at what causes high interest rates. Government spending causes high interest rates. The government is so grabby for funds because it wants to spend money.

Mr. Berger: What about the United States deficit?

Mr. Fennell: What has happened? Look at what was spent in the year between 1979 and 1980. The amount is $52 billion. Let us look at the current situation. If we look at the current estimates, the figure shown is $76 billion. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, and this whole House knows that spending will not be $76 billion, it will exceed $80 billion by the time the supplementary estimates are brought in. Together with the unemployment insurance problems and all the other problems facing this country, the government will not get away with less than $80 billion. Look at the increase in the figures. There has been an increase of practically $30 billion in two years.

I want to mention a word or two about manufacturing. Ontario was built on a manufacturing base. We have been proud of our manufacturing base. Today that sector is working at less than 50 per cent of its capacity. The Lake Ontario steel mill in Whitby is probably one of the most successful corporations this country has ever had. It expanded into the United States and with help through government loans—I will acknowledge that—it has expanded into England and into Ireland. It has been a very successful venture started by a very clever man who happens to be one of my constituents. They are now in a position where they are not sure if they can hang on. This is a very creditable and highly productive company of which I am very proud. They are now in a loss position. In addition, they have an engineering company which employed worldwide about 40 engineers. They are now contemplating the winding up of that operation and moving to Texas. Isn't that sad? We are bringing in 25,000 skilled people and losing excellent engineers who know the steel industry thoroughly.

I do not know how many jobs we have lost and I am not going to quote statistics, but I do know one thing: There has been a net job loss in excess of 200,000 since 1979. Two hundred thousand proud Canadians standing there with their hands out, and hon. members stand up over there and say that with these band-aid solutions they are going to solve it all. Well, I am sorry, that is not good enough for my constituents.

Look at farm bankruptcies. They are up 93 per cent. Those are the people who founded this country. The farmers created what we have in Canada. I do not know how much longer this government is going to stand still. Almost 25 per cent of our total budget is used to service the debt the Liberal government has built up since 1968. And then they blame us for being too critical.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, look at what they have done. It is disgusting. The fatal blow finally came on November 12 in what I refer to as a non-budget budget. I do not know what it is and I do not think they do either. They turned the whole thing into state intervention as opposed to tax incentives and removed the encouragement to people to put their necks on the line and start a business. That is a severe tragedy for this country. They removed the incentive to save. The only thing worthwhile is to buy their bonds in the fall at 19 per cent plus. If we cannot get this under control, then next year we will put it up to 20 per cent plus. It is a total government grab which they have worked in here.

How can you expect the private sector and free enterprise to survive with a government like we have on that side? It is destroying us. They say, "Yes, but we go out and buy foreign oil companies". I am sorry, but that has not created one job in my riding. In fact, it cost a number of jobs because one lessee of Petrofina has been ill-treated by that same organization. They talk about mobility of labour, but remove the ability of industry to move people around. That is now a taxable benefit. I have talked many times in this House about what we need, and then they started to turn it around and they—I cannot use the word, but they illegitimized our concept of the Small Business Development Bond.

Let us look at how the United States has done it in the past. They have the small business act which provides that people can start with zero interest while they are building a business, and then start paying interest up to a maximum, depending on their cash flow. That allows a company to build and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, once more we have had a fine example of bombastic rhetoric in this House where members of the opposition, as usual, assail the government for every problem imaginable. That is quite something coming from a party which claims to speak in the name of free enterprise. Yet every time a problem occurs they are the first to start yelling and screaming that, aha, it is the fault of the government. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, it is the government's fault that there are some 12,000 General Motors cars sitting on a dock in Halifax today.

Mr. Fennell: It sure is.

Mr. Berger: That certainly is the fault of the government. Yes, sir. Well, in a western newspaper, the Vancouver Province of March 30, there is an article, and what does it say? It says, "GM blows it". It does not say, "The government of Canada blew it", it says, "GM blows it".

Mr. Fennell: Read the Oshawa Times this week.

Mr. Berger: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the government which is responsible for all of these matters, but there are many serious ills in the North American automobile industry and in North American industry in general which have to be corrected by long-term policies such as the ones this government has adopted. These problems cannot be corrected overnight.

Mr. Fennell: You have had 14 years.

Mr. Berger: It requires, for example, training policies. It strikes me as amusing, Mr. Speaker, that every time the unemployment rate goes up by half a percentage point or something in that neighbourhood, we again hear cries of "introduce a new budget", or "bring in measures to create jobs". However, Mr. Speaker, I go back to my constituency every weekend, as most members do, and meet people in my constituency office, and—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Come back here on Monday with your tail between your legs.

Mr. Berger: —those people, Mr. Speaker, would not be helped with a new budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nickerson: Ask them.

Mr. Berger: Many of these people, unfortunately, are suffering from what perhaps may be termed structural unemployment. They are people, unfortunately, who have graduated from high school or CEGEP and who do not have the skills to meet today's job market.

[Translation]

A few weeks ago, I met a young man who had just been laid off by CPR. He had been working for that company for three or four years, and as he was only 23 or 24 years old, he must have quit High School 5 or 6 years ago, having probably felt that 12 years of formal education were quite sufficient and that the time had come for him to enter the labour market. He had worked, as I indicated, for a number of companies, including, I think, a brewery where he worked as a deliveryman, and then as a shipper in a CPR warehouse before being laid off. Well, what did he want to do? He wanted to register for a course in aeronautics at the Edouard Montpetit CEGEP on the south shore opposite Montreal. When he contacted the Canada Manpower Centre, he was told that he had some catching up to do, that he would have to take two courses in mathematics and physics, following which he might be allowed to take a one-year course in aeronautics at the CEGEP of his choice. Which means that within a year and a half, after a year and a half of training and his course in aeronautics, he might get a job in a technical field, whether in aeronautics or some other highly technological trade.

To introduce a new budget at this time would not help this young man, because what he really needs is training and formal schooling to secure a place in an increasingly complex and technical job market. As everybody knows, the government is doing a lot for other young people in similar circumstances. A few weeks ago, the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced an increase of at least $200 million for job training programs. How did hon. members of the opposition respond to that? They said, "That is no good." Their message was: $200 million for job training programs, is not worth a damn. I should like now to repeat in English what I have just said for the benefit of my hon. friends opposite.

As I mentioned, here is a young man who has unfortunately been laid off because of present circumstances. He was working at an unskilled job. In rough times, who are the first to go? Naturally, it is those who are the most unskilled. However, at the age of 24 or 25, what has he decided to do? He has decided to take a course in aeronautics which will last about one year and a half because he will have to take physics and mathematics courses again before becoming eligible for this program. Perhaps a year and a half from now he will be able to find himself a place in this increasingly complex and technical job market that we know today.

When the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced an increase of $200 million for job training programs a few weeks ago, what did hon. members of the opposition say? They said, "No, that is no good." Their message was, "It is not worth a damn", and it was sent to Canadians.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh, no, we did not say that.

Mr. Berger: I happen to know, as I have had the experience of meeting individuals every week, that that is probably one of the most pressing problems in Canada today. An effort by business and government is required. As we all know, it is not the Government of Canada which has the primary responsibility for education in this country. When students graduate from high school and do not have skills to become part of the job market, that is when the Government of Canada is expected to find miracle solutions.

We have all discussed the creation of a better climate here. Several weeks ago there was a tremendous debate on parliamentary reform. We all say that we want to improve this institution. However, as I have said on many occasions, the responsibility lies with both sides. The rhetoric that we normally hear from the other side of the House is not really conducive to getting to the bottom of our national problems.

Another example of this rhetoric was evident in the speech given by the hon. member. He made the usual charge that the government's answer to everything is to throw money around. He said that government intervention and government spending was the answer, rather than creating a proper investment climate. I have just indicated that the government has an extremely important role to play in the area of manpower training. I would also like to mention to the hon. member opposite that the present high interest rates in this country may just be the result of the fact that the government of the United States has projected a deficit this coming year which will be in the order of $90 billion, $100 billion or $120 billion. No one seems to know for sure. But when our government makes an effort to substantially reduce its deficit—

Mr. Nickerson: That is not true.

Mr. Berger: —and the financial requirement of the government will be reduced by $3 billion this year, hon. members opposite who talk out of both sides of their mouths are not happy with that either.

I would like to turn to the subject of government intervention and quote an article datelined Tokyo which appeared in the New York Times on January 3 entitled "Japan's Challenge to U.S. is Policies, not Products". It said:

> With much of the industrialized world stagnating, foreigners are studying Japan's approach. In France, Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy even tried to win support for Socialist nationalization plans by likening them, however speciously, to Japan's industrial policy. The United States, too, despite longstanding aversion to government economic intervention, seems increasingly interested.

Boy, oh boy! This is heresy! The United States is the bastion of free enterprise and capitalism, yet an article in this great capitalist rag, The New York Times, states:

> The United States, too, despite longstanding aversion to government economic intervention, seems increasingly interested.

In reference to the policy of government involvement and assistance in the economy, such as that practised by the government of Japan, Frank A. Weil, deputy secretary of commerce in the Carter administration, was next quoted in the article as saying that he believed that "the absence of such a policy in the United States is a major underlying cause of some of our fundamental economic difficulties".

Another example from the United States is found in a series of articles which appeared last year in Fortune magazine. The first such article appeared last June 15, and the following articles were published in that magazine until roughly the middle of August. An article which appeared one or two weeks before this series started was along similar lines and referred to the new electronic chip industry. This is an article in Fortune, of June 1, 1981. It says: "Japanese Score on a U.S. Fumble." In this article they outline how a little-known Japanese company based in San Diego, California, has grabbed a preponderantly large share of the $250 million a year United States market for a critical component of the microelectronic industry. The component in question is ceramic housings for the finest of those tiny electronic chips. This Japanese company based in San Diego, California, provides no less than 70 per cent of the ceramic packaging for semiconductors made in the United States.

• (1600)

They point out in this article that, first of all, the Japanese parent of this company was started in 1959 with a borrowed $10,000, $30,000 bank loan, and big dreams. I suppose that is the way most companies start off in the private sector, whether in Japan, the United States, Canada, or anywhere else. They set up a sales office in the United States in 1968. In 1971, during the 1971 recession, Fairchild Camera, whose semiconductor operation was financially strapped, asked this company, Inamori, to buy its ceramic packaging plant in San Diego. At that time the company was losing $100,000 to $200,000 a month. That is quite a challenge for a small company based in Japan to take over a company based in the United States and losing $100,000 to $200,000 a month.

While the Japanese investors were putting their faith in the United States and in this particular company, what were other American companies doing? Buffeted by the 1970-71 recession, they were hastily leaving the field to cut their losses. The San Diego plant, they explained, was faced by management, production and quality problems.

The United States managers did not take too well to Inamori's "strive for the good of the group" management style. The plant continued to lose money, so they fired the Americans and installed five young Japanese as managers. These new managers worked as men possessed, the article says, from 6:30 a.m. to midnight, seven days a week, doing two or three jobs at once, even pinch-hitting for absent workers. As the confidence of this company grew, Mr. Speaker, the Japanese began introducing more and more of what they call the Japanese management techniques. What are these techniques? These techniques call for the development of mutual faith and trust among managers and workers. They demand people willing to work two or three times harder than anyone else. They also have quite a technique on quality. Most American industries apparently have a quality control system based upon casual inspection or sample inspections, under which they might inspect one item out of every 20 of their product, but this Japanese company inspected every single piece of merchandise that went out of the company. What was the result? Their product became known for being better, for being much more durable, and they garnered, as I mentioned, over a period of time, 70 per cent of the market.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, that our economic problems are a lot more complex and need more than just crying out that it is the fault of the government every time there are 12,000 cars on the dock in Halifax, which some country will not accept because they are a shoddy product. I am not saying that that is the fault of workers or of management or the fault of the government. We have all to bear a little bit of responsibility in that. If we could cut down the rhetoric in this House and address ourselves to some of these serious questions, questions of productivity and manpower training, we might get a little bit further on the road to finding a solution to these problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): I could not but wonder, as I sat here this evening listening to several government members, Mr. Speaker, if perhaps I was in the House of Representatives in the United States, and listening to the opposition.

They sit there and they talk about the Americans and their problems and you begin to think they are totally ignoring what is happening in this country. Certainly they would have us believe that they are not responsible for any of the problems we have here.

I was interested in the comments the previous speaker just made here, that the deficit in the United States this year will be somewhere around $90 billion. It is intriguing, if you put that on a per capita basis, that our deficit should be somewhere around $9 billion, but in fact we are up to $14 or $15 billion. We will know precisely in another year, after all the final figures come in.

I am pleased to have an opportunity to address this motion today. It deals with the crisis we are facing in Canada, in my riding and I believe the workers are facing the same crisis everywhere. Since the election of February 1980 the government has given us nothing but promises, promises that have proved hollow and often deceitful.

I want to begin by talking about two particular promises. The first promise is one that came out of the budget and was given to us by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). I would just like to quote it. It reads as follows:

> The whole purpose of my fiscal strategy is to lay the basis for sustained growth in the future by clearing away the obstacles of high inflation and unprecedented interest rates ... The policies and programs of the national government are major instruments for managing and exploiting these development opportunities—

The second promise I want to quote is on the National Energy Program. It speaks on the action which must be taken by the federal government. It says this:

It must offer to Canadians, all Canadians, the real opportunity to participate in the energy industry in general and the petroleum industry in particular, and to share in the benefits of industry expansion.

We have been misled by those promises. Those promises have not been delivered. They have not been made good to the Canadian people. The government policies at the moment will bring about those promised results. The interest rates, as they say, should slow down the expansion of credit. They are supposed, then, because of the slowdown in the expansion of credit, to bring down inflation. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, that is not working. The reality of the situation is this, that in February 1982—just a month and a little better away—the loans by the chartered banks to businesses and farmers in Canada increased by 17 per cent. Inflation rose from 9.3 per cent in March, 1980, to 11.4 per cent in February 1982. The government policies are not having their intended effect. They are only hurting the people of Canada, they are hurting the small businesses, they are hurting the farmers, and they are hurting the Canadian workers. High interest rates are probably the biggest evil we are facing. Those high interest rates are great contributors to the farmers' difficulties, which I think are best demonstrated in looking at the bankruptcies, because that is probably the most obvious indicator of trouble. The farm bankruptcies have increased dramatically since 1979. In fact, in 1980 farm bankruptcies were up over 78 per cent from 1979. In 1981 they went up a further 18 per cent. What is going to happen in 1982?

As I travel through my riding, it does not look as if there will be any improvement. Many of our farmers have been forced to cut back on their production. They have been forced to sell off their assets. They are literally being taken off the jobs they have had on their farms. They are looking for jobs in the marketplace, only to find, as so many Canadians are finding that there are no jobs available.

High interest rates have discouraged our farmers from pursuing their livelihood. They discourage our young farmers from investing in land, farm equipment and buildings on their farm. They discourage even the most established farmers from developing, expanding and opening up new agricultural land which we so desperately need.

Our farmers are not laid off in the usual way, but every day we hear from farmers who are hit in almost every conceivable way with high interest rates, high input costs, high fertilizer costs and high energy costs. All those things are attacking our farmers daily. Our small businesses have also been hard hit by these high interest rates. A survey by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business recently said that one half of all businesses in Canada have cut back on their expansion plans, one third have laid off employees, three quarters have suffered profit reductions, 10 per cent have slipped into the red, in other words, no profit at all, in a loss position, all because of high interest rates.

When we look at the outlook for the future, if these high interest rates continue, we can expect that one third of the small businesses in Canada will end up closing, selling or losing at least part of their business. A large number expect that they may go into receivership or experience bankruptcy. That becomes particularly significant when you consider the fact that 97 per cent of all the businesses in Canada have annual sales of less than $2 million. In other words, that high percentage of our business is made up of small businesses.

When you see that large proportion of our business sector, with half of them cutting back on expansion, one third laying off employees, three quarters suffering loss in profits, obviously there is not much hope for our future and much opportunity for jobs. What hope do our workers in Canada have?

Small businesses are faced with a double whammy. They cannot withstand a recession very long. They simply do not have the economic base. They do not have the source of funds to draw on. They do not have a foundation to survive a long, difficult period. Already we are seeing evidence of soaring losses in small businesses. In 1981, losses in small businesses were up 46 per cent over 1980 and in January 1982, they were up a whopping 74 per cent over January 1981. We are left with nothing but a picture of tragedy, a future of unemployment and despair.

In my region, one of the industries most hard-hit is probably the trucking industry. Many small trucking companies in my areas have closed their doors. Large trucking companies have cut back to the levels of business in 1977. Some, in fact quite a number, have less than one half the number of employees they had a year ago. The rest of those employees are looking for work in a market where there are no jobs. They have been affected by the high interest rates and the National Energy Program.

Another industry that has been severely taxed in the area of Peace River is the forestry industry. In my riding, there are two major employers in that industry. The first, Canadian Forest Products, has been laying off employees since the last of October. Proctor & Gamble, another company in my riding, has severely cut back production. It has severely reduced the number of private contractors. This year, the first time in a long time, it will not be hiring seasonal temporary labourers. Until now, the main beneficiaries of that temporary labour have been students. Where will they get a job this year? How will they earn an income to complete their education and prepare to enter the job market?

Proctor & Gamble attribute these cutbacks to high interest rates. It is no wonder that high interest rates are hurting these industries when we look at what has happened to our building statistics and housing starts. No one today is building houses or apartments. In my riding, housing starts are the lowest they have been in a decade. That creates two problems. First, no longer are jobs being created in the construction industry. Anyone who knows anything about business knows that construction is often the industry that gets things started and stimulates the economy. Now there are no new jobs being created in that industry.

The second one, and this will become increasingly serious as each day goes on, is that there are no houses being built and no apartments being built. What is going to happen? Where are people going to live? Not only are jobs not being created by the building of houses and apartments, but homes are not being provided for the families who are each day looking for apartments.

I have been told that in the province of Ontario if a landlord was to build a new apartment building and he were to consider his financing costs, in order to break even—not show a profit but break even—he would have to charge rent in the neighbourhood of $800 a month. I suspect that is not only true in Ontario but in other parts of the country.

The question is what worker can possibly afford to spend $800 a month on rent? Obviously the many people on unemployment insurance in this country cannot afford that kind of rent. we can see the trend is well on its way for some very serious problems in this country, problems that are not reaching crisis proportions.

Where has the investor confidence in this country gone? Where has all the available capital gone? An investment in our country would develop our country. It would create jobs, build houses and would restore a sense of pride in our nation. However, that investor confidence which is so important and necessary to our survival and a good healthy economy, has been badly shaken. In fact, it has been shattered. Money that should have been invested in this country is being invested in the United States and Australia.

The National Energy Program, the promise I began with today, said that the oil industry would expand. Anyone who knows anything about that industry knows that has not happened. It is not true. The industry today in Canada is smaller than it was two years ago. While Canada has been discouraging investment, the United States has been encouraging it. What is very serious is that it is not that American investors have returned to the United States or Australian investors have returned to Australia. What has happened is that Canadian investors have gone to the United States and Australia. They have taken money from Canada, money which would have created jobs here, and invested it around the world. Canada is no longer considered a good place to invest, a good place to create jobs or a good place to create hope. That investment image is tarnished and, in fact, destroyed. The result is a smaller and weaker energy sector, which in turn results in fewer and fewer jobs.

Due to the National Energy Program and the uncertainly which it has created, Alsands, Cold Lake and our various Arctic projects are further away from being built today than they were six months ago or even two years ago. The federal government and its policies are moving us backwards.

The investment climate was further shattered by the November, 1981 budget, which was very much like an octopus in its attempts to reach out and grab and look for money and gain control. It was only a swipe at the investment community, our small businessmen and a swipe at entrepreneurial attitudes and approaches which we so desperately need in this country. It was a threat to the capital that we had available.

The budget has been a setback to the development of our resources and the expansion of businesses in Canada. The National Energy Program caused an outflow of cash and an outflow of jobs from the country and caused drilling rigs to be moved south of the border. It is estimated that an extra 10,000 oil and gas wells will be drilled in the United States as a direct consequence of the National Energy Program. The outflow of 10,000 oil wells becomes a significant factor just in terms of employment alone when one recognizes that each rig would employ 30 people directly. All of those jobs could have been and should have been in Canada. The use of those rigs should have been benefiting all Canadians by creating jobs and creating a flow of money throughout our various communities and into the housing, automobile and steel industries. This money would have come out of a constituency such as mine and into the heartlands of Ontario and Quebec. Instead of the economic development which the government has promised us, we are seeing that economic development in the United States.

In our region alone we recently had 60 oil rigs working. Today, we have nine. That is less than one sixth of the rigs which were there a short period of time ago. If that is multiplied by the thirty direct jobs associated with each of those rigs, plus the untold spin-offs to the construction, housing and auto industries, it represents 60 per cent of the manpower that has disappeared. In other words, 60 per cent of the jobs that have been associated with the service of the petroleum industry are gone.

Where are those people? They are lined up at the unemployment insurance offices and they are out pounding the pavement looking for work. But they cannot find that work anywhere. There has not been any further economic growth in my area for over a year. In fact, there has been no economic growth in Canada—our unemployment figures of more than 1.119 million proves that. Fifteen per cent of our young people in Canada, our future and our potential, are unemployed.

If you talk to people in my area about the National Energy Program and ask them about its benefits, they will turn around and ask, "What benefits? Where is the expansion of the industry? Where are the benefits we are to share?" To these people the National Energy Program has been nothing more than a cause of high unemployment in northwestern Alberta. A year ago, unemployment in that area was approximately 4 per cent. Since the introduction of the National Energy Program it has tripled to close to 12 per cent.

Early in 1982 there were 1,500 people looking for jobs in the city of Grande Prairie. There were only 90 jobs to choose from. The job vacancy as shown at our local employment office indicated there were only 90 jobs to choose from. In 1980 job vacancies peaked at 522. In other words, there were 522 jobs which were required to be filled. In 1981, that plummeted to 138 jobs which were required to be filled. As I just mentioned, job availability in 1982 went all the way down to 90, with 1,500 people trying to compete for them.

Unemployment insurance applications in my region have risen by 60 per cent in one year. While this tragedy occurs, the government blames it on the United States and talks about its wonderful programs.

The fact is that people are losing their jobs on a daily basis. What is important about this is that unemployment which is occurring in my region is affecting established residents who have never before being unemployed or laid off. Our construction industry has always had a shortage of manpower. Today, it has too many workers. Skilled people in our region have always been in demand. Today, they cannot find work anywhere.

I have had discussions with our business people. They receive calls every day from people who are looking for jobs. They receive up to ten calls a day and they have to say to those people, "I am sorry, I do not need anyone today because I may have to lay off some of my staff this week."

I get angry when I talk about this subject because there is massive potential in my area. We have massive proven gas reserves; we have foresty potential; we have agricultural potential; we have silica sand deposits, and I could go down the list.

If someone from anywhere in the world entered this part of the country, they would begin to dream of the opportunities, of jobs, of investment and security. This government has turned those dreams into a nightmare of tragedy and despair. This government has abused its right to govern and has abused the privileges which it was given in the last election.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, this is the first time I have had an opportunity to speak in the House as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I am very pleased to do so, especially after hearing the motion this afternoon, in which once again, the government is being blamed for the serious state of the Canadian economy. Of course, I prefer this kind of approach by the opposition to get its point across, to the steadily ringing division bells which did not really help the debate.

I may say first of all, that the motion is an interesting one if it is taken at face value, and I am thinking of the short-term perspective, but when we look at what is actually happening in this country and we compare Canada's present problems with the problems of other countries, we realize that our situation is quite similar to that of other nations, and that nevertheless, we have made a certain amount of progress. It is very easy, especially for those who are in the opposition, to blame the government for our present economic ills. In fact, the only mandate opposition members seem to have is to deplore the situation. They never feel like suggesting solutions. Since twelve o'clock I have been listening to hon. members, and I realize that one of our specialties is to deplore the situation and find a scapegoat, always the same one, without trying to distinguish between various levels of responsibility. To give the House an example, I would like to talk about something I am more familiar with, namely, my riding of Manicouagan. I would like to talk about the problems of the designated area of Sept-îles-Port-Cartier, and I am sure the official opposition will have guessed which company I have in mind. Perhaps hon. members can draw their own conclusions. I am referring to Iron Ore Co. of Canada. Everyone knows this company and its president is well known as well.

Is the federal government to blame for the present problems of Iron Ore Co. of Canada? Is the president of the company to blame? Anyone who says it is the president's fault is wrong. I can assure hon. members right now that is not the case. Is the federal government to blame? No, it is not. Is it the international market for steel? This, of course, would explain the problem but does not solve it. Unfortunately, although the federal government, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has designated the area as a special area—there are four others in Canada, namely, Sorel-Tracy, Windsor and Sydney, Nova Scotia—and although we have made substantial amounts available to all kinds of companies and intervenors, it has been very difficult to attract investors. It is very hard to persuade top people in the management and investment world to get involved in new economic recovery programs.

Even the Iron Ore Company, with all its money cannot modernize the pellet plant which had to close down because this plant is already modern. All we could do was to help out the workers directly and provide temporary programs to keep them busy. This should show members opposite that even when you are the government, have money and know the chairman of the board, the problem does not depend on the government or the chairman of the board, but rather on the international economic situation. However, this does not mean that there are no answers. Earlier, I heard the previous speaker say that the future looks dark. It does when you look only at the problems rather than at the potential. The motion introduced today states that the government does not do everything necessary to assist business and promote economic recovery. But what major decision did the Canadian government make a few months ago, not only to help Canadian families, but also to promote a strong self-sufficient Canadian industry? The government decided to amalgamate the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to bring back under one jurisdiction the responsibility of analysing the economic needs of the country and geographic distribution so that various regions may become more or less competitive with each other. To show that these methods can be extremely useful and to show what has already been done, let us look at the Mitel Company, which, because of a well-structured organization by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry, Trade and Commerce, has opened a plant in northern New Brunswick although it would have preferred a major centre such as Montreal or Toronto. Of course, the 11 levels of government in Canada have demonstrated more willingness to fight one another about the abstract concept of Canada than defend Canadian economy. The discussions which have taken place over the last five or six years, and all our actions since the incredible OPEC increase in oil prices are blatant evidence that we have continued to act collectively as though the future held no threat. Only in 1977 or 1978 did we make a direct commitment to an energy policy and begin Canadianize our industry? For too long, our country was happy to export, to import, to have internecine quarrels. It is virtually because of the present major economic problems that everyone is beginning to realize the importance of co-operating and developing original methods for processing our raw materials in Canada, reducing considerably our exports and becoming much more competitive on the market, and in this regard, I am thinking about what other countries can show us. We have the example of Japan. Without any natural resources, but with an extremely developed research sector and concentrated technological industry, it has succeeded in acquiring very substantial markets. We have also started to look at the quality of our fish for the domestic market. Everyone knows that, with the three oceans which border Canada and the 200 miles on which we now have absolute sovereignty as Canadians, we have an extremely profitable and substantial market which we should try to make much more competitive.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) introduced a most articulated program for fish marketing and quality control. Here is an industry that normally should experience an extremely rapid growth over the next few years. For better than two years already, despite difficult cycles, it has been realized in the area of fisheries and oceans that the fishing industry has progressed tremendously in Canada. As far as pulp and paper activities are concerned, this country of course is covered with forests. And the government has had to impress upon the companies that modernizing their equipment is important. We were becoming obsolete in the face of competition and falling way behind with respect to new markets. Only three years ago the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, in co-operation with the companies, introduced a modernization program. How was it that companies were not the first to assume responsibility for their own modernization? That is a question we should put to them. It is also strange that when the time comes for bringing out a budget, when normal input is requested from those industries, they immediately start complaining, although they are often besieging the government and pressing for grants and still more grants to do their own work.

There are important questions that should be asked at this stage. It is always easy to blame the government. It is the first thing that often comes to mind, and obviously the readiest for marking political points, and showing people that so and so is responsible. But speeches will not give the government and the country a sense of responsibility or a much higher economic level. Over the next ten years, the Department of Industry Trade and Commerce and the DREE believe that 5.5 million jobs will have to be created, of which 40 per cent will replace current jobs and 60 per cent will be new jobs. Projections based on responsible analyses dealing with facts, show that within the next five or six years we will probably be short of manpower for those jobs.

Later on, someone will be speaking for the official opposition, and I look forward to hearing his comments. Already, there is a shortage of people in Canada for specialized jobs. We have to import jobs. So there are already two major problems in Canada. There is the need for a much more advanced industrialization in the areas of specialization and with respect to markets and competitiveness. And there is a major short fall in young people. There is no way we can build up the Canadian economy without at the same time obtaining from the provinces a quality of skilled training that would be on a pair with level of economic modernization. One goes with the other.

But already, right in the midst of a recession, the government has to import a certain amount of skilled help, because despite a 9 per cent unemployment rate, we cannot find in our country qualified people to fill these jobs. It is all too easy to say that everything is bleak. The future is much more promising than people will say, to the extent we as a country can take the steps needed to compete efficiently and also to build a strong domestic market. An educational effort is also needed to inform our fellow citizens.

Just now I referred to a designated area in my riding, namely Sept-Îles-Port-Cartier. I have already explained what the problem was in Sept-Îles. Port-Cartier has a mill, and offers have been made to several companies to come and set up a business there, but despite very attractive grants, only two companies have shown an interest. Actually, any positive developments will be due to the fact that the government will be a major participant in activities to put the Port-Cartier mill back into production. However, the major forces at work here are neither money nor politics but the need for restructuring our domestic economy and the influence of the international economic situation. The latter, however, would be intolerable if the government did nothing to counter it. I feel that the measures taken by the government which, quite frankly, are often far from perfect, and that is understandable, I feel that these measures are in line with the objectives of the opposition in this respect. I am convinced that the present situation will be temporary, although it may not evolve as fast as we would like. Anyone who is unemployed, even if he is the only one, is in an extremely difficult situation which prevents him from finding his true place in society. However, it is no use making long speeches and telling people that the government, any government, has the answer to their problems. That would be most unrealistic.

If we look at other countries, for instance Great Britain, where Mrs. Thatcher's government has a policy that stresses private enterprise, has done away with social measures and made budget cuts—they now have an unemployment rate of over 13 per cent. Last year they had major social problems. Look at France and the policies of Mr. Mitterrand, who believed that with socialism French style, he would be able to turn around the French economy. After a few months in power, he is also facing major problems, such as higher unemployment and a substantial devaluation of the franc. Scarcely twelve months ago, Mr. Regan in the United States seemed to be the saviour of the North American economy and now he is also anticipating deficits, and it is not because he failed to take strong action. Mention could also be made of Italy and other countries. Obviously, there is no miracle solution.

They want to talk about interest rates. I remember that when the Progressive Conservative Party was in power, Mr. Bouey appreared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and at the time, that party approved Mr. Bouey's policies and confirmed him in his present duties for seven years. It is easy enough to criticize and speak out when in opposition. But when the time comes to take concrete solutions, they realize it is not so easy.

Another major issue which I would like to raise in connection with this government is the creation of the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development called MSERD, which will be responsible for allotting substantial financial projects in Canada and ensuring that every area may enjoy the benefits of the Canadian economy. Often in the past, even if DREE has made every effort during the ten last years to balance the Canadian economy, it became obvious that the economy was concentrated in cities such as Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Calgary, that is in large centres. Now, Canada is much more then those large centres, it is perhaps first and foremost the outlying areas. There is much to do as far as regional development is concerned and there is no lack of means available, but the fact is that the various partners must come together. Here is another example with regard to attitude and co-operation.

Let us deal with the energy dispute between Newfoundland and Quebec. I am sure the opposition is well aware of the position of Premier Peckford, of Newfoundland, which differs considerably from that of Premier Lévesque. If only Quebec and Newfoundland would come to an understanding, the whole territory of Wabush, Labrador City, Fermont and Schefferville in northern Quebec could be developed, for the benefit of Newfoundlanders as well. But while the two provincial governments keep on fighting, their populations are paying the price. But answers to such political problems do exist. If the Quebec-Newfoundland dispute could be settled tomorrow morning, some $20 billion would be earmarked for investment in that area. If this makes some members opposite smile, let them read once again the remarks made by the president of Iron Ore, an excellent source of inspiration for the hon. member for Manicouagan. They would realize that tremendous possibilities exist. But for some years, the development has been hampered by endless disputes between the provinces themselves and between the provinces and the federal government. If we believe in the same country, if we believe in ourselves, we should be the first to develop our economic potential.

I think that the challenge we have to meet now is to stop crying over our problems and consider our potential. But we seldom do that; we would rather complain about our neighbour and say that we are powerless. On the contrary, we can build something. But we must have the ability to work along with others. Likewise, the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine(Mr. Bujold) mentioned the workers a while ago. We need this social consensus, this type of understanding among governments, investors and the workers, the only possible way to a sound economy. Without such a consensus, we will continue to fight each other and waste our energy. In conclusion, I suggest that the motion moved by the Progressive Conservative Party seems to me to be quite irrelevant at this time and that what we really need is team work.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Thank you Mr. Speaker, for finally calling time. I rise to support this motion which clearly condemns the government for following the policies which are destroying our manufacturing industries which make the things that Canadians need.

The government is knowingly and willingly causing unemployment. At the present time 1.8 million Canadians are jobless and the number is increasing. The government knows that this has come about largely because of its policies, yet it intends to continue with those policies.

What has caused so much unemployment is the government's plan to move Canadian workers away from private industries and public services and to employ Canadian workers to provide the things that Canadians need. The government plans to force these workers to move to new locations at temporary work sites in the Canadian north to dig up the oil, gas and coal and then ship it to other countries. With those products, hundreds of manufacturing jobs that are needed by our people will be lost. No doubt the banks and a very few rich corporations will grow richer, but most Canadians will grow poorer.

This plan was announced by Senator Olson and applied by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and his cabinet colleagues. The movement of workers, forcing them away, is done by the planned destruction of certain markets. This is the plan I wish to examine in the hope that we can find a way to reverse this evil policy.

During the past few weeks I have been in touch with Canadian workers, trade unionists and manufacturers in the footwear industries, mainly in Spadina, but also in other parts of Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba. The over-all pattern is the same—lay-offs because of almost uncontrolled imports from low-wage countries.

These past few months have been a nightmare for those engaged in the footwear and tanning industries. Since December 1, the date the government's new policy for footwear began, thousands of workers have been laid off, and the effects of this continued to spread throughout the related industries and service sector. Unionists and manufacturers in my riding see nothing but gloom ahead if the government's policy is not changed. At this stage their frustration is turning to bitter anger as the government refuses to budge. Let me trace for this House the events in their most recent struggle.

The government-commissioned anti-dumping tribunal began its hearings on the Canadian footwear industry in July, 1980, nearly two years ago. Organized labour, as well as manufacturers' associations connected with the industry, were in broad agreement on the type of action required to save their industry. The unionists argued before the tribunal that to maintain the approximately 20,000 jobs of direct workers, tanners and suppliers, effective global import quotas would be essential. The quotas would have to be global in both the geographic and generic sense. There must be no exceptions.

The industry had been engaging in a significant transformation process despite the patchwork approach of government. There was the three year breathing space at one time, an additional year at another, the plugging of import leaks after damage is done and the continual studies to decide what to do next. The industry argued that this atmosphere of uncertainty was in itself hampering the manufacturers' efforts at modernization. A significantly longer period of stable expectations was required for the upgrading of plant and equipment and for long-range planning to assure the survival of a more modern industry which could provide incomes and working conditions on a par with other Canadian manufacturing industries. They admitted that the number of jobs might not increase significantly, but that these jobs would be better jobs in every sense of the word and that they would be secure within the context of a stable competitive industry. They further accepted the fact that imports would always account for about half of our domestic market, even under long-term protection. Together with the manufacturers' associations, they argued that comprehensive and global import quotas should be instituted until the end of 1989 to achieve their stated goals.

In February, 1981, the anti-dumping tribunal published its report. Those engaged in the footwear and tanning industries were cautiously triumphant. The tribunal had supported the position of the industry in almost every aspect of their exhaustive research and especially on two very important points: that the protection required to save the industry must be long-term, and that it must not exclude any type of material.

The tribunal found that our industry had not been able and will not be able in the foreseable future to compete with imports from low-wage countries. And this fact, they emphasized, is for reason of price alone. The Canadian industry is competitive in style, quality, and product range. Workers in our industry point out that the wage difference between Canada and low-cost countries is partly due to our good legislated working conditions which, unfortunately, are not at present incorporated into the labour laws of many developing countries. The social costs of exploitation are enormous and no one would propose that our labour force should divest itself of the benefits for which it has struggled over the decades. There is just no fair comparison between our wages and those of workers in developing nations. We hope that those countries will improve their labour laws, but at this time their governments are enforcing unfair competition. The following quotation I assure you is not at all out of context:

> Imports of leather footwear from (low-wage) countries now compete directly in the middle price points of the Canadian footwear market, where Canadian producers direct about 90 per cent of their product. In the absence of import restraints, the ability of the domestic industry to retain even its present share of the market would be seriously threatened, and the possibility that this situation would be any different in five or ten years time is remote.

That is the opinion of the tribunal appointed by the government. But clearly the government has not followed its recommendations.

Meanwhile, our industry is partially paralyzed awaiting the next moves of exporting nations which will soon flood our markets in response to this opening of the gates, despite the pleadings from manufacturers and unions. That comprehensive protection over a longer period of time would be required to finish modernization and to stabilize the industry. The government has chosen to try yet another angle in its short-term harassing approach.

In the statement of the new policy the minister fairly boasts that Canada will remain one of the world's most open markets for footwear imports; as indeed it does. If the import penetration continues to increase as a result of this leather loophole and a virtually meaningless system of quota protection, we can look forward to losing our whole domestic leather footwear industry, becoming 100 per cent dependent on imports and becoming world leaders in helplessness. This seems to be precisely what the Minister of State for Economic Development, Senator Olson, had in mind when he stated a few weeks ago to the Liberal student club at the university of Victoria:

> We're going to stop propping up mature industries that will never be competitive in this generation, like textiles, clothing, footwear, and a number of others.

The new footwear policy, announced on November 24, sent shock waves of alarm throughout the footwear industry, and especially the sector in Quebec where leaders immediately read the message for the footwear industry whose products are close to 90 per cent leather. The Quebec government with unions and employers' associations set up a task force united in their resolve to have this new policy reversed. They appealed to many members of the House. They appealed through the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), a member of the minister's own party, through my colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and also through the Quebec minister of industry, trade and tourism. They got absolutely no response or encouragement from the minister of trade and commerce.

In January, the task force wrote to the government asking for essential changes in the new policy. These were a limit on the import of leather shoes to 40 million pairs per year and a guarantee for Canadian producers of 50 per cent of the domestic leather footwear market. By this time the terrible results of the new policy were clear. Over 6,000 of 20,000 jobs had been lost in the four months since the minister brought in this ruinous policy. The minister continued to ignore complaints. In March, Jean-Guy Maheu, president of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada, wrote to the minister. In part his letter reads:

> We have not been asking for a favour, Mr. Gray. More than a year ago, the Tribunal found the industry threatened with serious injury from imports of footwear—leather footwear as well as non-leather footwear.

> The only way to prevent the complete demise of our industry is to review the policy immediately in order to include leather footwear in the global quota.

Next week there will be unemployed workers and industrialists here to speak to Members of Parliament about the serious danger of complete destruction of the industry. Although the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) asked for our views, but did not stay to listen, I will nevertheless outline the idea that has been proposed by the leader of my party. Canada needs to establish production agreements in key sectors, Canada needs to establish production agreements in key sectors with multinational manufacturing firms. These agreements will concern the value of production of such manufacturers in Canada. The aim must be to ensure that production in Canada in key sectors, whether aimed at the domestic market or the export market, will equal sales in this country.

We have a powerful position from which to negotiate such agreements. As the national government of Canada we control imports. We can do as many of our trading partners in GATT are now doing and insist that imports shall not destroy Canadian production.

In leather footwear, the very first step in this direction is to guarantee at least 50 per cent of the Canadian market to Canadian producers. This must be done at once, otherwise Canada will lose its leather footwear industry as we lost our rubber footwear industry through destructive government action.

Canadian workers and employers in the footwear industry are good workers. They work hard and well and they produce good products. They have a right not only to fair pay for their productive work, but also to be able to provide that market for Canadian products which Senator Olson so despises. I call on this government to scrap Senator Olson's philosophy and the ruinous trade policy built on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Watson): Order, please. It being 5 p.m. it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 58(11) proceedings on the motion have expired.

HOUSING

DEVELOPMENT OF NEW BUILDING MATERIAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas in today's The Globe and Mail it was reported that the International Development and Research Centre has developed a revolutionary new building material consisting of mud with additions of asphalt and boiled banana stems, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That in light of Liberal high mortgage rates, mounting local taxes and the ill-fated November budget, the minister responsible for CMHC personally check out the new system's applicability to Canadian conditions by living in a mud hut for the next six months.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—INVASION OF FALKLAND ISLANDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the Argentinian invasion of the Falkland Islands is a blatant breach of international law and a violation of the fundamental principles of the United Nations. The United Kingdom has exercised sovereignty over the Falkland Islands since 1833. Its inhabitants are British citizens and have no wish to be subjected to the dictates of an alien military junta. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That this House condemns the military aggression of Argentina and urges the Government of Canada to impose economic sanctions against Argentina until such time as that country withdraws its forces from the Falkland Islands, as instructed to do so by the United Nations Security Council.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SEARCH AND RESCUE

TRAINING FOR HELICOPTER PERSONNEL STATIONED AT PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Department of Transport has now admitted it does maintain a Sikorski 61 helicopter at Prince Rupert in British Columbia and does admit that the crew has received no training whatsoever in search and rescue procedures. The department has also admitted that it does maintain a Bell nine-passenger helicopter at Victoria and its crew has not received search and rescue training either. The department claims it is not its primary duty, but every sailor knows that it is everyone's duty to help in a marine disaster, and to be skilled in so doing. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House instruct and order the Department of Transport to arrange immediately for full search and rescue training for department personnel involved, and that additional equipment useful in search and rescue be made available to these helicopter personnel to avoid possible loss of life on the west coast.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ARGENTINA—CONDEMNATION OF INVASION OF FALKLAND ISLANDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to preface the motion I am rising to move under the provisions of Standing Order 43 by saying that it also concerns the important subject of the invasion of the Falkland Islands, but that it is different from the one which was moved just a moment ago. I hope it is one which will receive the approval of all sides of the House.

S.O. 43

Last week over 4,000 Argentinian troops invaded the Falkland Islands in a move which the United Nations Security Council has overwhelmingly opposed. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House condemns the invasion of the Falkland Islands and urges the immediate withdrawal of Argentinian troops.

NATIONAL SECURITY

EXPULSION OF RUSSIAN EMBASSY OFFICIAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my motion deals with the lack of clarity of the Prime Minister in his public utterances. Last Friday the Prime Minister, according to the transcript of his press conference, stated that he had not heard what the expelled Soviet trade official had done was illegal, but that he was attempting to circumvent "one of our policies." Many Canadians are trying to do that, particularly with respect to the budget and metric conversion. However, he also noted, in response to Mr. Lubor Zink's question pertaining to simultaneous sanctions and friendship with the Soviet Union, that we do not have any friendship protocol with the Soviet Union and that the word "friendship" did not exist in any treaty or accord or agreement with the U.S.S.R. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the Prime Minister explain on motions exactly why Mr. Abramov was expelled if he was not doing anything illegal and how it is that the word "friendship" does in fact appear in the opening preamble of the Canadian/Soviet protocol in this context: "Inspired by a desire to develop and strengthen relations of friendship, good neighbourliness and mutual confidence between the two countries".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

CANADIAN MEN'S CURLING RINK CAPTURES WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The sport of curling is one of Canada's most popular winter activities. Yesterday in Garmisch, West Germany, the Canadian men's curling rink, comprised of Skip, Al Hackner, Rick Lang, Bob Nicol and Bruce Kennedy, from the Fort William Curling Club in Thunder Bay, won the Air Canada Silver Broom, the symbol of world supremacy in curling. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner):

• (1410)

That this House does recognize and commend the magnificent efforts of these Canadian sportsmen who have brought great honour to Canada.

Madam Speaker: I have said before that I cannot accept congratulatory motions because this is not, of course, the purpose of Standing Order 43. But if the House wishes to applaud this accomplishment, it is free to do so.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DEMAND FOR RESIGNATIONS OF FOUR MINISTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, Canadians are moved with admiration, noting the respect shown to the time-honoured British tradition of ministerial responsibility which prompted the resignation of Lord Carrington, Foreign Secretary of the United Kingdom government. I therefore move, seconded by the member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House demand that the Government of Canada return to this honourable tradition, so regrettably neglected by the arrogance demonstrated opposite, by requiring the resignations of the Minister of Finance for his high interest rates and for failure to honour his promise "Vote Liberal and the price of gasoline will stay down"; of the Minister of Employment and Immigration for his failures demonstrated in more than one million unemployed; of the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General for their failure to protect the security service from unfair trial.

These resignations, and many more, will signal to Canadians and the world that responsible government has been returned to Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

FINANCE

TAXATION OF FISHERMEN'S INCOME AT SOURCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the proposed scheme that would allow the taxation of fishermen's income at source would seriously hamper the ability of fishermen to make a living and would undermine the economies of Canadian fishing communities, and whereas this scheme was imposed unilaterally and greeted with dismay by fishing organizations on both of Canada's coasts, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the ministers of revenue and finance be instructed to meet fishermen's groups and fishing community representatives, so that they can at last hear the problems that mandatory income tax at source will create; and that in the meantime this scheme be withdrawn along with the rest of the budget that was equally so poorly considered.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE CONSTITUTION

PREFERENCE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL MONARCHY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my colleagues and I wish to voice the warmest words of welcome and best wishes to Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Philip on the occasion of their upcoming visit to Canada. Our constitutional monarchy symbolizes the epitome of democracy. The Queen is not the representative of the majority of the people but the people themselves.

I suppose an integral movement in any well executed pirouette would be an about-face. The Prime Minister has demonstrated in regard to the Queen that he is fast on his feet but slow in his reaction time to policies and principles—above all, principles. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King):

That this House affirm its recognition of the rich legacy bequeathed to us by the British parliamentary system of government, our preference for a constitutional monarchy along with the checks and balances which guarantee the primacy of the individual, his or her rights, privileges and basic freedoms, and that this House enhance this legacy building on—not chipping away at—the symbols and institutions, traditions and customs which have led us along the road to full nationhood.

EDUCATION

TAX EXEMPTION SOUGHT FOR PAYMENT OF INDEPENDENT SCHOOL FEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas taxation at all levels should be on an equitable basis, and at the present time parents who support independent schools are required to pay the regular taxes to the public or separate school system, even though the curriculum in an independent school is approved by the department of education, and then pay the total cost of the independent school, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to amend the Income Tax Act granting at least exemption for income tax purposes, of the tuition fees for the independent school, if not for the total amount contributed to the independent school.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EMPLOYMENT IN DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the minister responsible for mines and the status of women has issued a press release congratulating herself on the improvement of the position of women in the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources in the last year, and in view of the fact that this release showed that only three people of the 47 people hired in the senior administrative positions were women and that 60 per cent of the women hired were still in the support category, I move, seconded by the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish):

That this House express its disappointment that the mines minister is so easily satisfied with such a minimal improvement of the position of women in her department and recommends that she step aside and be replaced by someone willing to take tougher stands in her own department.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—ACTION TO REMOVE ARGENTINIAN FORCES OF OCCUPATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. It relates to the events in the Falkland Islands. Will the Prime Minister report to the House on any specifications which Canada has taken to ensure that the Argentinian occupying forces will be removed immediately from the Falkland Islands?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be able to answer that question in detail. I have been discussing this matter with him and with the deputy minister. There will be a meeting of cabinet ministers this afternoon for further discussion on external problems. I will defer to the foreign minister to give the details of the measures we have taken.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, following the resolution adopted by the United Nations Security Council, we called in the Argentinian Chargé d'affaires and informed him that all Argentinian forces should be immediately withdrawn from the Falkland Islands and other British possessions which they occupy. In view of the serious situation which has developed, we have recalled our ambassador from Buenos Aires for urgent consultation. We are placing an immediate embargo on all military shipments to Argentina, and we are cancelling the proposed visit of the National Defence College to Argentina.

This afternoon my colleagues and I will be giving consideration to further measures which the government might take. I might mention that since there are some nine Canadian citizens involved who are residents of the Falkland Islands, we have asked the Argentinian authorities to ensure the safety of Canadian nationals on the Falkland Islands. The only other comment I might make is that I had a meeting with Lord Moran this morning to consult on the situation.

ENERGY

IMPORT COMPENSATION PROGRAM—REASONS FOR MINISTER'S APPEAL TO REFINERS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister has known for at least six months that there is a serious problem with the manner in which the import compensation program is working. Common sense would dictate that the program should ensure maximum utilization of domestic crude oil, with the remaining requirements being made up with the cheapest possible offshore supplies. In this way, maximum benefit would accrue to governments in the form of taxes, industry in the form of cash flows, and consumers in the form of cheaper gasoline and heating oil. Instead of correcting this program, last Thursday the minister announced that he is asking eastern Canadian refiners to refrain from buying cheap offshore oil. Will the minister please explain to the House how this will benefit Canadian consumers which, after all, is the original reason behind the import compensation program?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would very simply explain to the hon. member that one should not ask companies to walk away from valid contracts which have been entered into. I asked the companies to act in whatever way they can without breaking contracts and endangering future medium and long-term security of supply for Canada.

As the hon. member well knows, part of that problem arose from the fact that the government of Alberta arbitrarily cut back production last year by 120,000 barrels a day. Some refiners had to enter contracts with foreign countries to make up for that loss. They have to honour those contracts until they expire. I have indicated to the refiners that once their contracts expire they should renegotiate those contracts bearing in mind the availability of Canadian crude and also ensuring medium and long-term supply for Canadians.

As far as the immediate steps which they can take are concerned, I have said that "when there is Canadian crude available", as there is, "do not go for spot market purchases at the expense of Canadian crude. If you are buying it on the spot market, buy it at the expense of your other foreign suppliers."

Mr. Andre: The minister knows that these long-term contracts were entered into at the instigation of the federal government and were resisted by the industry.

USE OF GOVERNMENT REGULATORY AUTHORITY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, when the Mexican crude contracted for by Petro-Canada first became available, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources used his regulatory authority to force refiners to use this oil in spite of the reluctance of refiners to do so because of its poor quality. Having demonstrated the government's willingness to protect Petro-Canada's and Mexico's interest, why is the government now reluctant to use its regulatory authority to protect the interests of domestic producers and also, incidentally, the interests of consumers who would be paying less for their gasoline and heating oil if they were using Canadian crude rather than the high cost imported crude which the companies were forced to contract for, by the government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is not telling the truth when he says that the government has forced the refiners to enter into long-term contracts. The contracts entered into by the companies have been made on their own as commercial business decisions.

As far as the supply from the Government of Mexico is concerned, my hon. friend will recall that the Government of Canada entered into that contract with Mexico at a time when there were shortages in the world and everyone was scrambling for supplies. We succeeded in getting 50,000 barrels a day and we intend to honour that contract. With respect to policy steps which were announced last week, I must remind the hon. member that the Canadian Petroleum Association has come out in support of the steps we have taken.

INCREASED PRICE OF HOME HEATING FUEL

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. As a result of government policies which were just referred to, people on low and fixed incomes, the working poor and unemployed, have to pay an average of $35 a month more for home heating fuel this winter than they did a year ago. That is $175 over these past five winter months. They have to spend $175 more on home heating fuel and $175 less for food, shelter and clothing. Would the minister explain to these people who have had to fork out $175 from their very limited budget, how the price for their home heating fuel has to go up each month in this country while that of their neighbours in the United States is going down?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member would ask that question because it is obvious that we have negotiated an energy agreement with the producing provinces that requires step by step increases in the price of energy. On the other hand, because the United States did not follow a policy of moderating price increases for lower-income people, it allowed prices to rise to the world level immediately. That is the reason for the difference.

Miss MacDonald: They are better off.

Mr. MacEachen: The consolation I have for the suddenly discovered friends of the hon. member is that if she had been a member of the government a much more expensive burden would have been laid on the consumers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: I remember the minister making such fun of the Conservative proposal during the election when he promised that any price the Liberal government brought in would remain at a 14-cent increase. Where is that 14-cent increase now for these people on low and fixed incomes when they are paying 50 cents, 60 cents, and 70 cents more for a gallon of gasoline? He has no explanation for them.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN TAXATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, if world oil prices continue to fall, or even remain stable at the current rate, will the minister introduce some measure that will ease the burden on people who are on low and fixed incomes either by reducing taxes on home heating fuels—that would be one measure he could consider—or by providing them with an energy tax credit? Will he be concerned enough about the people who are hurting because of these taxes he has imposed, to try to do something to help them out?

• (1425)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member really must know that the increases in the price of energy which are taking place are the result of an agreement we worked out with Alberta and the other producing provinces, and we have resisted further increases as much as we could. We got the best deal we possibly could from the producing provinces. We settled only when members of the opposition were insisting on a settlement and when even the hon. member for St. John's West was urging the Premier of Alberta not to settle until he got a better deal. I did not see the hon. member get up at that time and say she stood with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when he was attempting to get a better deal for the consumers of Canada.

HOUSING

VARIABLE RATE MORTGAGE SCHEME

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for housing. As the minister knows, because of government inaction current mortgage rates remain at the unconscionable level of 19 per cent. He also knows that the banks' most recent gimmicky scheme for dealing with this housing crisis was the introduction of the variable rate mortgage. Is the minister aware that the legal foundation for this scheme is very shaky? Indeed, it may well be illegal. Specifically, has the minister asked his own departmental lawyers to look at this, or has he asked officials from the Department of Justice to consider it, and could he give us a report on that?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I will preface my response by saying that high interest rates were a concern of the government, and the government was concerned about people faced with the problem of renewing at high interest rates. Because of those concerns the government introduced the Canada mortgage renewal plan which was part and parcel of Bill C-89. It is unfortunate that that plan, which would have provided a 4 per cent to 5 per cent interest reduction, was not supported by the hon. member for Oshawa or by his party. That relief alone will provide assistance to 50,000 families across Canada. The government has moved to respond to the problems of people who are in the most difficult circumstances, and they will be assisted by that initiative of the government.

In terms of the legal position of the legislation dealing with interest rates, I suppose that question would more properly be put to the Minister of Justice.

LEGALITY OF SCHEME

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, this is an extremely serious matter because this month the banks are starting to offer variable rate mortgages to Canadian families who are looking for some security in terms of home ownership. If I understood the minister correctly, he has just told the House that he has publicly supported a scheme which he himself does not have confidence is legally valid because he has not checked into it.

I would like to put the problem to him and ask him to answer or at least ask his colleague, the Minister of Justice, to deal with it. Since the Interest Act stipulates that the rate of interest chargeable on a loan must be clearly stipulated on the loan document, and since by definition the variable rate mortgage does not do this, does the minister not agree, as some lawyers I have consulted do, that a person getting a mortgage under these terms may well end up with an illegal document and may well have no security of ownership whatsoever in terms of the mortgage?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if the motive behind the question of the hon. member for Oshawa is his concern that Canadians who take advantage of such a mortgage may not have a legal basis for it, and if he is concerned that these people will not find any relief, I find that somewhat strange, in view of the fact that in his absence his party voted against that legislation which is designed to bring relief and designed to support those types of mortgages.

MINISTER'S ENDORSATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister's answers become more disturbing all the time. I remind him that 650,000 families have mortgages coming up for renewal this year, not to mention the ones who may be in positions to buy homes for the first time. Since the minister has endorsed this program, is he telling the House that he has endorsed a program the legality of which is seriously in question? If so, he should resign from his responsibilities.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I admit that I too find the line of questioning of the hon. member for Oshawa somewhat strange, in view of the facts that there are some 30,000 units of modest rental accommodation provided for in the same legislation voted against by his party, and that there are some 70,000 jobs available to Canadians, voted against by the hon. member's party. Today he is leading a line of questioning dealing with interest rates and legalities. What about people who want jobs? What about people who want affordable rental accommodations?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—RELEASE OF DRAFT LEGISLATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week, during the minister's absence, the Prime Minister cast some real uncertainty on the legislative process arising out of the 1981 budget. I hope the minister will be able to clarify this today, because many Canadians are filing their 1981 tax returns and actually paying tax based on the budget. Quite specifically, will the minister be releasing draft income tax legislation for public discussion prior to the final legislation being put before the House? If so, when will it be released? How long does the minister expect the discussion process to take and, finally, when will the final income tax legislation be presented to the House of Commons for legislative action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I read the Prime Minister's answers which were given in my absence and I found them very clear; they could not be improved upon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: That is what you said about the budget, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: As I indicated some days ago in the House, it was my intention to produce draft legislation in the form of comprehensive Ways and Means motions which would be available to tax practitioners and others for comment before the final legislation would be introduced in the House. This practice has been followed on previous occasions by ministers of finance. It is not a new practice, and it is one which has been much appreciated and welcomed by those who wish to have an opportunity to make technical comments on tax matters prior to final legislation being introduced.

REQUEST FOR DEFERRAL OF IMPLEMENTATION DATE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the minister observed that this is a practice which has been followed many times in the past. He is practising on Canadian people here, because it is the second Ways and Means motion which will be brought forward. We still have not seen a Ways and Means motion for the December 18 changes. We need facts upon which people can base their decisions. I ask the minister when they will come out. It probably means that we will not see the Ways and Means motion in time for the legislation to be put before the House or until about nine or ten months after the original budget was brought forth. In order to protect Canadians from the uncertainty of this delay, would the minister explain why he will not defer the implementation date or the effective date of the various pieces of legislation until after the legislation is actually passed and approved by the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I should make one clarifying comment. The hon. member referred to the fact that no Ways and Means motions were tabled in connection with the changes on December 18. I ask him whether he is aware that it would be quite unnecessary on that occasion to table Ways and Means motions because all the measures were of a relieving nature and, therefore, Ways and Means motions were quite unnecessary.

Mr. Wilson: But people are paying specific taxes on those.

Mr. MacEachen: I am sure the hon. member should have been advised of that. But he asked me about uncertainty. I do not find any uncertainty except when I listen to the questions of hon. members opposite. Every day they are attempting to create uncertainty, which is quite unjustified. The Ways and Means motions indicate the tax measures, the effective dates, and their implementation is based upon a practice which has been followed in Canada since the beginning of our country and followed, by the way, in ten provincial legislatures. It is the hon. member who is attempting to create a new custom in the country.

INQUIRY RESPECTING DRAFT MOTIONS AND BILLS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, on March 30 I specifically asked the Minister of Finance whether he was considering publishing draft budget legislation before introducing budget bills relating to any aspect of the budget. He has just indicated that he is proposing draft Ways and Means motions. He knows there is a difference between budget bills and Ways and Means motions. Last week he said that he was publishing draft bills; today he said that he is publishing only draft Ways and Means motions. When was he speaking the truth? What is the government doing? Will the government be introducing just draft Ways and Means motions, as he said today, or will it also be introducing draft budget bills before the real budget bills are introduced in the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the practice is to introduce comprehensive Ways and Means motions—

Mr. Jarvis: With the budget.

Mr. Wilson: That has already been done.

Mr. MacEachen: —as a detailed expression prior to bringing in tax bills. In a sense the Leader of the Opposition will understand that under the rules of the House a comprehensive Ways and Means motion, in detail, constitutes the precursor of the budget bills, because Your Honour would rule any budget bill out of order—

Mr. Wilson: Bafflegab.

Mr. MacEachen: —if it were not precisely patterned upon the Ways and Means motion. The Leader of the Opposition is really talking about the same thing but using different words.

PUBLICATION OF DRAFT MEASURES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I congratulate the minister on his bafflegab. Is it the minister's present intention to publish a draft of every budget measure on everything in the budget, before he introduces any Ways and Means motions or any budget bill in the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that Ways and Means motions have already been tabled. Normally the next step would be to table tax bills as part of the legislative process. But in order to accommodate tax practitioners, ministers of finance recently have been in the custom of giving an opportunity, before the bills themselves come in, for others to make comment.

Miss MacDonald: Who are the others?

Mr. MacEachen: Citizens and tax practitioners. This is what the former minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West, had in mind when he stated in his budget speech of December 1979—

Mr. Wilson: But who did it?

Mr. MacEachen: —that in future prior to tabling tax bills he would make available to the public a draft of the legislation so as to enable tax practitioners to make technical suggestions for improvement. I should like the Leader of the Opposition to have a chat occasionally with his former minister of finance.

Mr. Chrétien: He is never here.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister has now admitted that he is intending to change the November budget into a white paper which will be introduced in April, May, or some other unspecified date. It is clear the budget is gone; he is going to be bringing in a white paper and planning his new budget, or whatever he calls it, on the basis of discussions on that white paper.

• (1440)

My question is very simple: will this new white paper he is introducing in place of the budget be made available before any Ways and Means motions or any budget bills flowing from the abandoned budget are introduced to the House of Commons? Does he intend to introduce a comprehensive white paper touching every element of the late unlamented November budget, and other matters, before he introduces Ways and Means motions or budget bills?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is obviously in heavy weather—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —in attempting to understand this rather complex business.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are floundering, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: He has asked for the Ways and Means motions relating to the November budget. May I repeat for his benefit that these Ways and Means motions have already been tabled according to tradition, and there will be no replacement of those Ways and Means motions.

An hon. Member: They will just stay there and die.

Mr. MacEachen: In accordance with the proposal made by a minister in his government, there will be draft legislation so as to aid tax practitioners and others, and that draft is usually made available in the form of a comprehensive Ways and Means motion. That is the situation, Madam Speaker, and if he wants—

Miss MacDonald: You have got to be kidding.

Mr. MacEachen: —examples of other occasions when this was done, it happened in 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1978-79, and 1980. I ask him to look at the record.

PUBLICATION DATE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): A very brief question, Madam Speaker. When will this white paper be published?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Never, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSING

LEGALITY OF VARIABLE RATE MORTGAGES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who, no doubt, listened to the series of questions asked by my leader of the minister responsible for housing. I would like to know whether the Minister of Justice has been asked to provide a legal opinion on the legality of variable rate mortgages currently being offered by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and, as I understand it, to be introduced by the end of this month by other banks in Canada, given that the Interest Act of Canada expressly prohibits mortgages which do not show clearly on their face the rate of interest to be charged.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to give a legal opinion on a contract between a private citizen and a bank. If there is some problem with the legislation, I will advise the minister responsible, but I think in this case there is no specific problem which has been brought to my attention.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OBTAIN LEGAL OPINION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the minister responsible for housing. The Minister of Justice indicated he is in no position to give a legal opinion, which I assume means he has not already given one. Therefore, I ask the minister whether, prior to his endorsing, as he has done, the variable rate mortgage currently available, he has obtained a legal opinion on whether or not those mortgages are in conformity with the Interest Act of Canada? If he did, would he table it in the House? If he did not, would he get that opinion before tens of thousands of Canadians are placed in jeopardy as a result of this system being offered?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, that question is in essence a repetition of the question asked by the hon. member's leader, and my earlier answer stands.

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER REPRESENTATIONS WILL BE MADE TO QUEBEC TO REDUCE IMPACT OF GASOLINE RETAILERS' STRIKE

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to either the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The gas retailers' strike in Quebec, which seems to be spreading, is causing major disruptions in both passenger and freight traffic to and from the maritimes.

Can one of the ministers inform us whether he has made or intends to make representations to the Quebec authorities, urging them to take steps to lessen the strike's impact on the free movement of goods and individuals in this country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the present situation in Quebec has aroused the concern not only of maritimers who get their supplies from Quebec but also of all Quebec citizens. I think the best way for the Quebec government to bring the situation back to normal and also be fair to gas retailers would be to reduce the excessively high tax introduced by Mr. Parizeau not long ago—Quebec citizens pay 7 cents a litre more for gas in Quebec than in New Brunswick or Ontario. As long as the situation continues, I am afraid there will be some extremely difficult times ahead for distributors and consumers in Quebec.

FINANCE

PROCESSING OF INCOME TAX RETURNS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Revenue Canada has issued a bulletin in which it instructs Canadians to file their 1981 tax returns as though the November budget were in fact law, yet regional tax offices right across the country are stockpiling tax returns affected by the budget or by the transitional changes announced December 18 by the minister.

Because the continuing confusion surrounding the budget is holding up tax refunds urgently needed by Canadians during the current recession, will the government instruct its officials to process without delay all 1981 tax returns affected by the November budget and pay refunds due, or, for Canadians who have not yet filed their returns, will the government at least absolve those taxpayers affected by the budget from late filing penalties, since their tax returns are just going to be gathering dust anyway?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, these are matters for decision by the Minister of National Revenue—

Miss MacDonald: You put them in that mess.

Mr. MacEachen: —and I would be glad to take the question as notice for the minister.

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF REFUNDS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Minister of National Revenue should have prepared this budget which is causing all the confusion.

The minister should realize that many Canadians have already filed their tax returns in good faith and in accordance with the government's instructions. They now find their refunds being held up while the Minister of Finance, not the Minister of National Revenue, tries to get his act together on the budget. Does the minister realize that for many people those funds are urgently needed in a time of deepening recession, and how can he and his government justify making Candians wait for refunds because of confusion caused by the government itself?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there is no delay attributable to any confusion arising from the Ways and Means motions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

RIDLEY ISLAND TERMINAL CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport, with regard to the jobs that went to Japan instead of Canada with respect to the Ridley terminal in British Columbia. The minister gave me the reasoning behind this action in a memo from the National Harbours Board. He now has a reply from Canadian manufacturers, Stephens-Adamson in Belleville, and I assume he will be tabling both of them later.

The minister now knows that the reasoning he and I were given is full of innuendo, half-truths and outright lies, and that his answers to the Leader of the Opposition and myself with regard to technology and timing were incorrect. Will he now call the meeting which has been requested three times, and promised once, in order to turn the situation around, and will he correct the false impressions given with regard to Stephens-Adamson?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is a rather difficult issue. After receiving Stephens-Adamson's comments, I submitted them to the National Harbours Board and they are going to provide me with their reaction in a very few days time. I suggest to my hon. friend that both of us are responsible, both of us have the interests of Canada in mind. I suggest that he should wait for the reaction and then he and I will talk together and decide what we will do from there.

PROVISION OF JOBS FOR CANADIANS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a brief supplementary question, Madam Speaker. Approximately 400,000 man days of work were purposely sent to Japan instead of being used in Canada. Neither the Minister of Transport nor his colleagues have attempted to keep them in Canada. We have received four different memos. They have taken three months. Surely we must not wait much longer to try to turn this matter around. Will the minister tell us exactly what he will do when he gets the next memo to provide jobs for Canadians?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will speak bluntly now. Last year Canada imported more than 200,000 motor vehicles from Japan at a cost of $1.5 billion. I want to compare that with the present circumstances, however regrettable, involving a $20 million purchase, half of which will be produced in Canada. Therefore I realize that it is a very important matter for hon. members.

As I said in my first answer, as soon as I get the commentary of the National Harbours Board on that subject, we will get together and decide how to proceed. We will consider whether we will table it or whether we will ask someone else to give an opinion. We will decide that in due course.

PROJECTED PAYMENT OF GRANTS TO OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. According to Data Resources of Canada, the federal government could lose between $22 billion and $30 billion from expected oil and gas revenues over the 1982 to 1986 life of the federal-provincial energy agreements because of the world soft crude oil market. The government has committed itself to pay $6.5 billion in PIP grants to the oil companies over this period. I think legislation will come in today or later this week. In view of these declining oil and gas revenues, where will the money come from to pay for these rich grants to the companies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if those forecasts are complete, I suspect that even the Economic Council of Canada will have to revise some of the reports that it published last year. I am very eager to hear what the Economic Council of Canada will have to say about this matter.

However, as far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, it is obvious that if the price of oil rises less rapidly, or even declines over the next four years, it is likely that less money will go to the governments and to the companies and, as a result, we may end up in a situation where less exploration is required. Some more expensive projects might be delayed. Therefore, relatively fewer grants would be paid to support such exploration.

Mr. Waddell: As the minister knows, the problem is that those grants will be in legislation. One can apply for them, they are open-ended, and the minister may have a problem.

SOURCE OF FUNDING GRANTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. According to the same study, not only would the oil and gas revenues be down, but corporate income taxes of the energy firms would also be down. The study said, "This suggests that the government may need to alter its long-term budgetary strategy".

One minute ago the minister said that he wanted to help Canadian consumers. If he does want to help the Canadian consumer, why does he propose to give $6.5 billion in grants to the oil companies? Who will pay for that money? Where will he get the money? Will he get it from the Canadian consumer, through increased energy taxes, or is he intending to go to the ordinary person and increase personal income taxes? Where will he get the money for those rich grants?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the revenue and expenditure forecasts for the current year have been laid out in the budgetary papers.

Mr. Wilson: It is totally out of date, and you know it!

Mr. MacEachen: It would be the occasion in the fall, when we are providing the fiscal framework for the succeeding year, to review all these questions. It is obvious that in this current situation there will be—

Mr. Wilson: Come clean.

Mr. MacEachen: —declining revenue and increasing expenditures because of the recession and the factors to which my hon. friend has alluded. However, no decision has been taken as to new taxes or a change of taxes in order to meet his projections as to the future. All I can say is that the projections, including those of the Economic Council of Canada, have proven to be quite erroneous.

Mr. Wilson: Yours, too.

Mr. MacEachen: It has not been so long since the Economic Council of Canada provided a correction, changing its forecast of the Canadian deficit by $4.5 billion.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ASSIST TRENTON, N.S.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who promised to bring a new dimension to regional development. Can the minister report to the House on whether he has decided to do something innovative to alleviate the situation at Trenton, Nova Scotia, where over 1,000 men are out of work and where there is a critical need developing for some quick action to produce rail cars which will be required very shortly, in any event, to help the country's economy develop?

The transportation spokesman for the NDP has made representations. I have, also. A delegation from Trenton met with the Deputy Prime Minister this morning. I am wondering whether the hon. gentleman can give us some hope and show us some imagination in bringing this new dimension to economic development that he promised he would do when he took over his responsibilities?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have been consulting with the Minister of Transport on an early answer, an early decision with regard to an order for hopper cars which will involve the Trenton works. I look forward to my discussions this afternoon, right after question period, with a delegation from the Pictou County Development Commission. I hope that the views of the delegation will be of assistance to me in bringing about some useful initiatives for the Trenton works and their employees.

POSSIBLE INTERIM AID

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I am sure the minister will be interested in what the delegation has to say. I want to ask him whether he will, in fact, bring this extra dimension that he spoke about into his department by considering bridge financing or interim aid so that these cars which are needed, not only by Hawker Siddeley, but by other work forces, could be produced now. Money should be given to help produce these cars now rather than simply to pay out unemployment insurance benefits.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, that type of idea is something I would be happy to examine with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport.

FINANCE

IMPACT OF TAXES ON AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the Minister of Finance knows, at the present time the federal government is involved in a massive tax grab at the expense of the farmers of Canada, due to the imposition of some very harsh and discriminatory taxes on farm fuel and natural gas used for the production of ammonia. The tax amounts to approximately 60 cents a gallon for fuel and some $25 a tonne of ammonia, which will rise to some $70 a tonne in the not too distant future.

Given the very serious impact that this will have upon the producers of Canada and the implications for further food production, can the Minister of Finance tell the House whether he has received any representations from his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, on this very important matter? If not, may I ask whether the Minister of Finance would undertake to review this discriminatory tax, particularly in light of the other high input costs and low commodity prices which farmers are experiencing?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not regard the tax to be discriminatory in any way. I know that the hon. member is obviously asking me to reduce taxes, in this particular case. On Thursday the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands moved a motion calling for additional expenditures of $2 billion. The hon. member for Etobicoke Centre constantly asks me to reduce the deficit. Therefore, I do not know how I can satisfy the three hon. members simultaneously.

Mr. Clark: Resign.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECONSIDER TAXES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, we are dealing here with the production of food. Given the fact that the farmers of Canada have very little opportunity to pass their added costs on in the case of export markets, while in the case of domestic pricing the increased costs of production will be reflected in an increase in the cost of living, would the minister not reconsider and re-examine the situation, both from the standpoint of reducing input costs to the farmers and of reducing the cost of food to Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, no minister of finance is so unreasonable as to refuse an hon. member's request for consideration. I will do that.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEWART—OPENING OF PERSONAL MAIL BY PRIME MINISTERS' OFFICE

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I rise on a very serious question of privilege which involves my rights as a citizen and as a member of Parliament.

A letter was addressed to me as a member of Parliament; it was correctly addressed; there can be no mistake about the name and address of the intended recipient, myself. My mail was inspected by X-ray machine by the RCMP and then opened and read by someone in the Prime Minister's Office. The RCMP X-ray inspection date stamp "Safe to Handle" is dated March 29, 1982.

Then, apparently, the letter was sent to the Prime Minister's Office, where it was opened and read and initialled by "B.J.M." The date and time stamp from the Prime Minister's Office is "digits 000050 received PMO 10.25 a.m., March 30, 1982". Another set of numbers was stamped on the letter and then obliterated by a white opaqueing agent. The numbers are discernible from the reverse and are "2089 133."

I received the letter in my office by regular mail on Friday, April 2, 1982. I am wondering how many similar occasions there have been. Madam Speaker, I believe I have a bona fide question of privilege. I demand an explanation from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his ironclad assurance that his office does not routinely monitor mail for members of Parliament, such as this letter or any other members' letters, or letters from persons who are not partial to his philosophy, his actions or his deeds.

I so move, Madam Speaker.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member asks for an explanation and wants you to consider that there is a question of privilege here. I have no objection to the latter, if the House wishes to go that route.

I just want to tell the House that the explanation has already been given to the hon. member, that it is a common sense, plausible explanation. There are many Stewarts in Canada and there happened to be a Stewart in the Prime Minister's Office. For some reason which I do not know and I am sure the post office does not know, there was a letter addressed to Mr. Stewart delivered to another Mr. Stewart, and so far as we know that was how the letter got into the stream of mail in the Prime Minister's Office. Mail is opened there, I almost dare to say, by the carload. The letter that came to the office was opened automatically. As soon as it was looked at, the reader realized that it was not addressed to the Prime Minister or to anyone in his office but to someone else. The letter was then redirected.

I think the hon. member is indulging in some kind of a hyperbole when he asks that I give some kind of guarantee that we are not in the process of opening other people's mail. Let me just say, Madam Speaker, that with the thousands of letters I get every day, we have enough to do without bothering about the hon. member's mail.

Madam Speaker: I will look into this question and into all the facts and provide a reply on this question.

PARLIAMENTARY SEMESTERS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-649, to divide the calendar year into three parliamentary semesters.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for three fixed semesters of Parliament in each calendar year, so that the members of the House of Commons will know when Parliament will be sitting and thus can better organize their time to perform the related duties of Members of Parliament.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act.

LECLERC INSTITUTION

Question No. 3,523—Mr. Friesen:

1. Was a Mr. Beauchemin employed by the Correctional Service at the Leclerc Institution and was he discharged by the service and, if so (a) for what reason and from what capacity (b) was he reinstated by the service and, if so (i) in what capacity (ii) what is his annual salary and what are his hours of work per week?

2. Is a Dr. Harris employed by the service at the institution and, if so, in what capacity?

3. Were grievances submitted by the inmates at Leclerc for the period during which Dr. Harris has been employed on matters relating to his conduct, services and functions and, if so, how many and how many were considered legitimate?

4. What is Dr. Harris' salary and what are his hours of work per week?

5. (a) As of September 1, 1981, who was the dentist at the Leclerc Institution (b) is he still employed there (c) is he on contract (d) for how long has he been employed (e) how much time per week is he required to spend at Leclerc (f) how many inmates has the dentist seen since he was employed at the institution on an annual basis?

6. Were grievances submitted by inmates against the dentist and, if so, how many and how many were deemed legitimate?

7. What is the fee per visit of the dentist?

8. What was the total amount paid to the dentist by the Service for each year he was employed?

9. From September 1, 1980 to September 1, 1981, on how many occasions did inmates request to see a dentist and, in each case, was the inmate seen by a dentist?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as it concerns the Correctional Service of Canada:

1. A Mr. Beauchemin worked at the Leclerc Institution as a teacher, through the Les Ecores school board which employed him. He was not discharged but rather reassigned to the Federal Training Centre.

Mr. Beauchemin now works at the Leclerc Institution as a teacher on a contract basis. This has been the situation since July 1, 1981. He receives an annual salary of $30,000, including fringe benefits, and works 37½ hours a week.

(a) Not applicable.

(b)(i) and (ii) Not applicable.

2. Yes, Dr. Jean-Guy Harris is the Assistant Warden, Medical Services at the Leclerc Institution.

3. Yes, five grievances were submitted, three of which were upheld.

4. The annual pay scale for Dr. Harris is from $40,281 to $50,160. The duties of the Assistant Warden, Medical Services are such that definite working hours cannot be established. In addition to holding a clinic at the institution, normally three mornings a week, Dr. Harris is on call at all times for emergencies. He is responsible for the treatment of all the patients from the Quebec region admitted to the Cité de la Santé de Laval hospital. In addition, he co-ordinates visits to emergency rooms and to out-patient clinics.

5. (a) Dr. Edmond Khazen.

(b) As of December 8, 1981, he was still employed by the Correctional Service of Canada.

(c) Yes.

(d) Since August 1, 1979.

(e) His services are required for two sessions a day, three days a week.

(f) Number of inmates seen by the dentist in 1979, 1,300; 1980, 1,337; 1981, 1,143, (including December 8, 1981).

6. Yes, one grievance was submitted and upheld.

7. $110 a session (a session represents a half-day).

8. Amount paid to the dentist for each year he was employed:

August 1, 1979 to December 31, 1979:	$10,400
January 1, 1980 to December 31, 1980:	25,200
January 1, 1981 to December 8, 1981:	27,900

9. Statistics are kept on the number of inmates seen by the dentist but not on the number of inmates who request to see him.

If an inmate feels discriminated against, he can file a complaint or a grievance in accordance with the standard procedures. No complaints or grievances were received indicating that inmates who wanted to see the dentist were unable to do so.

Number of inmates who saw the dentist between September 1, 1980, and September 1, 1981:

1980		1981
September	141	January	106
October	155	February	56

MEDICAL STAFF OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Question No. 3,692—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of medical staff working for the Department of Veteran Affairs?

2. How many (a) doctors (b) registered nurses (c) paramedics (d) nurses' assistants (e) other support staff work in the department?

3. What is the average age of the doctors working for the department?

4. How many doctors began working with the department (a) immediately after graduating from medical school (b) after (i) two (ii) five (iii) ten (iv) fifteen (v) twenty years of private practice?

5. What proportion of the medical staff now employed with the department, including Pension Advocates, had training in tropical diseases and how many have (a) taken courses (b) a degree or diploma in the field?

6. How many Canadian veterans died as a result of a tropical disease and how many living veterans have a tropical disease which is now under treatment?

7. How many tropical disease specialists does the department employ?

8. How many non-doctors on the medical staff have a specialized knowledge in the field of tropical diseases?

9. Are tropical disease refresher or updating courses offered to doctors and medical staff?

10. Will the department be sending a medical staff to the International Congress of Parasitology in Toronto to be held between August 7 and 14, 1982 and (a) if so, how many will attend (b) if not, for what reason?

11. (a) Does the department's Medical Branch have up-to-date diagnostic facilities and (i) if so, are they readily accessible to veterans (ii) if not, for what reason (b) do the facilities adequately meet the needs and demands placed on them by the veteran population?

12. (a) What methodology is the department using in its testing of Hong Kong and other veterans for strongyloides and is the method sufficient, considering the fact that the disease may still appear in test samples after some ten samples have been examined (b) how long will the process take and will the findings be made public (c) will compensation be given to veterans who are discovered to have strongyloides and, if so, what will it be?

13. Does the department plan to expand or reduce the size of the medical staff in the future?

14. Does the department intend to introduce compulsory tropical disease testing for (a) doctors (b) nurses (c) other medical staff and (i) if so, on what date and what kind (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Seventy.

2. (a) 70 (51 full-time, 19 part-time), (b) 403 (320 full-time, 83 part-time), (c) 100, (d) 380, (e) 80.

4. (a) four, (b)(i) 10, (ii) 16, (iii) 14, (iv) 3, (v) 23.

5. This question cannot be answered in specific terms since many professionals have varying amounts of training during their careers. (a) 16 (23 percent), (b) One. No Pension Advocates are employed by the department.

6. Unknown. The majority of veterans are treated by doctors of their choice without any involvement of the department. Except for those veterans treated in DVA's two remaining hospitals, diseases and causes of death are not made known to Veterans Affairs.

7. One.

8. None.

9. No, as non-departmental medical specialists are used on a referral basis.

10. Yes, (a) two.

11. (a) The department makes regular use of the most up-to-date diagnostic facilities available in the country. (i) yes, (ii) N/A.

(b) Yes.

12. (a) Methodology agreed to by departmental medical staff and the designated National Centre for Parasitology. The method is considered sufficient by the specialists involved.

(b) The testing will take six months and the results will be made public.

(c) Compensation (other than the costs of testing and treatment which will be borne by DVA) is a matter for the Canadian Pension Commission to determine.

13. The department's medical staff will decrease as hospitals are transferred. Medical services will increasingly be purchased from community resources.

14. (a) No, (b) no, (c) no. (i) N/A. (ii) There is no indicated need for the testing of veterans services health professional staff at this time.

DISPOSAL OF ARGUS AIRCRAFT

Question No. 4,103—Mr. MacKay:

1. How many bids were received from individuals or companies with regard to the disposal of the Argus aircraft and, in each case, what was the amount of the bid?

2. What was the amount of the successful bid and was the successful bid lower than several other bids?

3. What amount was paid to IMP for mothballing the Argus for storage?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Please refer to question No. 3,893 Part 2 answered on April 1, 1982.

2. Please refer to question No. 3,893 Part 4 and Part 2 answered on April 1, 1982.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. André Ouellet (for the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have some comments I should like to make in the House concerning this bill which, I feel, is extremely important. In fact, I feel that the draft legislation we are now discussing, Madam Speaker, has consequences that could be compared to those of the bill on constitutional reform. When the subject is fiscal arrangements, relations between the provinces and the federal government and sums of money that run into hundreds of billions of dollars, I think we can say, without exaggeration, that this legislation is of vital importance both to the entire country and to each province individually, and more specifically, where it concerns the federal government's contribution to health services and post-secondary education in the provinces. I have said, and I say it again without hesitation, that this bill is particularly important. A number of hon. members have spoken to the bill, Mr. Speaker. We are now at the third reading stage, and I assume that we are getting ready to pass this bill.

A number of widely differing views have been expressed, and as the provinces have also indicated earlier that they disagreed with the federal government, I therefore feel that today, as a member of this House, it is my duty to remind the government that it is important to negotiate and to spend a considerable amount of time negotiating, especially when large amounts of money are involved and objectives are being discussed that are vital to the entire Canadian nation. I know there have been all kinds of comments for months, and that the provinces were almost unanimous in opposing this bill. Of course, we had some amendments. At first, even the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) had some trouble with the figures he tabled in the House, some mistakes were made, there were some computation errors, and all this has been part of the debate. We are now about to adopt this legislation, and we are also faced with the fact that we have, in a sense, failed; that is, we would have preferred to give the provinces some proposals or a decision they would have been able to accept unanimously.

The members on the opposite side will say that the provinces have a voracious appetite, but they will have to admit that the government has made decisions without sufficient consultation with the provinces. And speaking of the provinces, my own province has, through its representatives, made a number of comments on this legislation, and I have also listened to my colleagues opposite as they explained the nature of the proposals contained in the bill, while quoting very specific figures. Although they are saying in Quebec that under this legislation, Quebec will see its payments reduced, it is a fact that in absolute terms, Quebec will be receiving several thousand dollars more than last year. On the other hand, there are those who say that if the federal government had not changed the formula, Quebec would be getting even more money in the next few years.

At least one thing is clear. With the new formula, the federal government will be getting a better deal than before and will be paying out $5 billion less over the next five years than it would be paying under the old formula. There are no two ways about it. And we know for a fact that the costs of the services in question which are vital to all Canadians are increasing and will continue to do so according to the economic scenario we have now. In those circumstances, obviously the provinces are not wildly enthusiastic, nor is my own province wildly enthusiastic about this reduction in funds, compared with projections made several years ago, and it is perfectly normal for the representatives of my province to express their disappointment with the decision or decisions made by the federal government, and their impact on Quebec particularly, as a result of the formula changeover.

Mr. Speaker, previous speakers have already mentioned quite a number of figures in their speeches, which I found quite interesting, but I have no intention of repeating them. I think we have had an ample supply of statistical data provided by all three parties and by a number of members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is extremely important that the government should show more respect in its relations with the provinces. This legislation is essential because it involves billions of dollars and absolutely vital services, and the federal government should recognize its responsibility as the originator of these services and programs. It should also recognize and accept the fact that the provinces are entitled to not only make representations with respect to the allocation of the funds they need but also with respect to the economic situation facing us today.

The present government cannot ignore these circumstances and disclaim responsibility for the problems confronting Canadians today. The way I see it, the record of this government's administration during the past 15 years has not been particularly encouraging, which has probably led the provinces to claim that, deficit for deficit, the federal government has not been setting a particularly good example.

The provincial governments, including the government in my own province, may be criticized, and they have been, for their present deficits. However, I feel that the worst example has been set by the present federal government, which has been increasing the national debt and its deficits during the last 15 years I have been here in the House.

However, one can only go so far, and it seems the government has realized this. In fact, the Minister of Finance has been dragging us through the mill during the past few months, and the provinces are, as it were, squirming in a financial strait-jacket, because the federal government is reducing its deficit by cutting funds to the provinces. At this point, I must say, and I have said it before, that there may be dangerous developments in the years to come. In other areas, there is the distinct impression that the government, because of its financial circumstances for which it is, in fact, to blame, is increasingly making decisions that go against the wishes of the provinces and are not preceded by the negotiations appropriate to a federal system.

Mr. Tousignant: My, you are serious this afternoon!

Mr. La Salle: I seem to be getting some comments from the other side of the House, Mr. Speaker. On the subject of federal-provincial relations, I feel that in a federal system that purports to respect the status of the provinces, there is at least an obligation to encourage negotiations and conduct them in a manner that reflects respect for the true federal concept. That is not what is happening.

I understand that a number of hon. members, and it has become more apparent in the last year or so, have fallen into the habit of blaming the provinces for situations that are prevalent across Canada. I feel that we who are sitting in this federal Parliament have an obligation to demand that this government should respect its partners, the provinces, without exception. Members opposite seem to think this is highly amusing. During the Constitution debate, there were some unfortunate incidents, thanks to the persistence and dedication of an opposition that earnestly wanted all the parties concerned, all governments in Canada, to participate in the exercise of constitutional reform, and I feel that we, in any case, need have no regrets for having made a special effort to make the government understand the spirit of federalism.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) states that, in his opinion, co-operative federalism is dead, we have to ask ourselves serious questions and the provinces have to be very concerned, as do all Canadians, about the nature of future negotiations. In other fields, Mr. Speaker, I could refer to certain comments which I also heard. It is obvious that this government has decided to reduce its negotiating process and its discussions with the provinces because it is tired of dealing and discussing with them, which is of course dangerous, because the people opposite will then try to convince us daily that we have to work for national unity. This same government will try to take credit for saving the country and working in the interests of Canada. However, it is not by making unilateral decisions that we can promote and strengthen the bonds of real federalism. I believe that I am quite justified in reminding this government how important it is at every opportunity to allow the provinces to take part in a greater number of major national decisions and to find compromise solutions with the provinces, especially when dealing with such an important bill as the one which we are now discussing at the third reading stage. This bill deals with billions of dollars and has very important consequences for the service sectors involved. I fail to understand why the government has not managed to bring the provinces to an acceptable consensus and compromise. I must conclude that, because of its actions, attitude and arrogance, the government has succeeded in creating a climate of suspicion.

In every area, whether it be economic development, constitutional reform or fiscal arrangements, a climate of suspicion has been created in this Parliament because of the government's reprehensible and regrettable attitude. This is why the premiers and the ministers responsible cannot trust it at federal-provincial meetings. Of course, this multiplies the problems, and because of this, negotiations take longer. However, since this is somewhat annoying for the Prime Minister of Canada and his cabinet, they make an increasing number of decisions on their own, which is regrettable and goes against the very principles of true federalism which must survive because the future of the country is based on this concept. The present government no longer believes in it. I say once again that we shall see more and more direct action by the federal government about economic development and more and more programs governed, imposed and administered federally without proper consultation with the provinces. I sincerely regret this and I must warn the government that it is not the way to save the country or to serve it well.

I could refer to the history of the last fifteen years, especially in my province. I know that this will also shock my colleagues opposite. However, as I have said before, the record points to an embarrassing failure on economic matters and the Constitution on the part of a government which would now want us to believe that it has succeeded. If we talk about the economy, the situation in which we now find ourselves is hard to believe. As for this bill, I can appreciate the arguments of the various provinces and especially my own concerning provincial needs. I believe that we must go beyond party politics when we are dealing with such an essential piece of legislation.

I suggest that it is both possible and necessary to do so. I do not take hon. members opposite to task for having quoted exact figures in connection with the computation formula or the bill, nor do I question their figures; yet, they should agree with me that the old formula would have brought more money in and that the Quebec Minister of Finance is complaining that he will be getting a little less money because of the change; but, as I was saying, Quebec will be getting a few dollars more than last year, and the fact remains that over the next five years, the federal government will hoard in its own coffers $5 billion which the provinces would have received otherwise. It is quite normal that in view of their requirements and needs, the provinces should demonstrate that they are somewhat disappointed with this bill, and I should like the House to consider the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) for a more in-depth study to be—

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Tousignant: Would the hon. member accept a question, either now or at the end of his remarks?

Mr. La Salle: I think that the hon. member who wishes to ask me a question will have the possibility of doing so, for I do not intend to deal with this issue for 40 minutes; when I have completed my remarks, the Chair may invite him to ask his question, and if I can, I will certainly give him an answer. I think it is therefore important, Mr. Speaker, to remind hon. members that well-prepared negotiations are necessary when such major legislative measures are brought forward. I was about to say that the climate of trust which existed 15 years ago has vanished entirely. We have seen all sorts and we have had various indications for a while that the mistrust which has prevailed in this Parliament is clearly due to an arrogant attitude on the part of this government, and because of this mistrust, problems in Quebec become still more serious whenever the federal government is involved. I should like to take this opportunity to invite hon. members opposite to make an additional effort to encourage discussions and negotiations between the two governments. Both governments cannot continue to stir up a confrontation, because this would prove too costly for our constituents who do not deserve that partisanship be shown at their expense.

I think that the time has come to remind all my colleagues that negotiations and the respect of our provincial governments are essential, and I think that all those who still believe in a true federalism would agree, but should one believe in that true federalism? When I hear the responsible government authorities, the ministers of the Crown increasingly give the impression that they are determined to act alone without consulting the provinces, that is not the way to strengthen the ties among the regions and to ensure a promising future to the country, Mr. Speaker. The study of this legislation today affords me the opportunity to urge the government to reflect seriously on the negotiations with the provinces, which have greatly disintegrated and deteriorated in the past few years. However, the Leader of this Government in the opinion of millions of Canadians, seemed capable of uniting this country, but over the past 15 years and at present, I do not think any government has managed better to tear our country apart and to create such dreadful conditions as those we are now experiencing. Under the circumstances, instead of turning away, of ruling out further negotiations and denying the proper respect which must be shown to provincial governments, it would be to the advantage of this government to resume negotiations more seriously than ever before and to urge governments to co-operate in promoting the economic recovery of the country.

Not long ago, the Right Hon. Prime Minister appealed to the unions, urging them to co-operate with the federal government, because otherwise he would once again be forced to make unilateral decisions. During the past 15 years, the Prime Minister has had plenty of time to bring the unions, businesses and the provinces to the negotiating table, but as a result of his unbending attitude, instead of bringing these people together, he has done the exact opposite. Today, the situation being what it is, we must make a last effort and urge the government to be far more attentive to the problems facing the provinces and to those confronting millions of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to dwell further on this bill, which, although I do understand its ramifications, is not easy to understand since it is a sophisticated piece of legislation. In any case, because of this bill, the provinces will once more be obliged to seek other funding sources if they wish to maintain the same level of health services and post-secondary education. To reduce its deficit and lighten its financial burden, the federal government has decided to shift some of this burden to the provinces. Considering the present economic situation, for which I hold the federal government largely responsible, there will be other opportunities to prove this.

I think this government would have been well-advised to listen to the suggestion made by my colleague, the member for Kingston and the Islands, who asked for a two-year extension during which time the government would have a chance to prove to the provinces that it has sufficient flexibility to make federalism more viable and more acceptable. It is true that in Quebec, people are becoming more and more disenchanted with federalism, which was certainly not the case a few years ago. However, during the past 15 years, Mr. Speaker, and I say it once again, we have seen Quebecers becoming increasingly alienated from the federal government, despite the fact that there have been some six dozen members from Quebec here on a fairly regular basis, plus a Prime Minister from Quebec, all of whom have been unable to cure this alienation and have even made it worse through their frequent tendency toward confrontation and arrogance. This has encouraged a negative attitude to our federal institutions instead of making people understand the positive side of federalism, people are now probably going to accuse me of siding with it. No, Mr. Speaker. Once more I want to ask this government which has such a strong contingent, at least in numbers, of members from Quebec, to make a last attempt to explain to Quebec government representatives the scope of the fiscal arrangements or at least discuss certain objectives that could be better pursued jointly instead of duplicating our efforts.

I earnestly hope that the impact of this legislation will not cause too much hardship in my home province. I also hope that the government will act on the request I made today that it increase its negotiations and strengthen its relations with the provinces instead of dropping negotiations entirely and denying their importance in order to justify unilateral action, which is altogether undesirable. Increasingly, I have the impression that this government wants to act unilaterally, and I insist, and I cannot say it often enough, that this is not the way to strengthen this country. If we really want to keep alienating Canadians from the federal system, we should go on doing what we are doing now, but if we really want to strengthen this country, if we want to make all Canadians, wherever they happen to be, benefit from federal negotiations with the provinces, there must be a change in attitude and there must be a change soon.

The atmosphere in this Parliament has become an atmosphere of mistrust. Provincial premiers, unions and members of the business world are finding it very difficult to trust this government today. This is an extremely negative factor in view of the present economic situation. If we really want to turn around the economy, I would urge the government to respect the status of the provinces and to make an unprecedented effort to get them to work together with him. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is really interested in getting together with the provinces and working with them. If he is not, Mr. Speaker, I think he should be prepared to make a decision, and it should be that the interests of this country must take precedence over his own interests and objectives. I hope hon. members and ministers on the opposite side will take this opportunity to remind the Prime Minister that his principal role is to unite this country and to help the provinces, and in a federal system, this means supporting the efforts and priorities of the provinces. I feel that these priorities are not incompatible with our greater national objectives. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the arguments, speeches and comments that have been made in connection with Bill C-97 will at least have had the effect of reminding the members of this government that consultation and federal-provincial relations are of paramount importance, now more than ever before. I hope that the recommendations I am making today will be taken seriously, because in making them, I am convinced, with all the sincerity of which any member here is capable, that our country and our provinces will be the better for increased consultation, which in my view is absolutely necessary.

Mr. Tousignant: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant), on a point of order.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has been talking about unbending and arrogant attitudes of the government, and is accusing this government of refusing to release sufficient funds in its negotiations on fiscal arrangements. The hon. member goes on to contradict himself, when he says that the deficit is too high and that we should try to bring it down. I have a simple question for the hon. member and I would like him to answer yes or no. Could the hon. member inform the House whether he thinks the money received by the province of Quebec is well spent by that province?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I think the government of Quebec makes the best possible use it can of the money it receives under these arrangements. I hardly think it would be better spent by the federal government! In any case, I think the fiscal arrangements we are discussing here will give millions of dollars to the Quebec government as well as to the other provinces, and I trust they will be used for the services indicated in the bill, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I will not use this opportunity in debate on third reading to go over once again the arguments I have made earlier. I will not go into the argument about the revenue guarantee again, for instance, because I believe that even in the short time provided to the opposition for debating the bill, we have succeeded in getting across to the public what has been going on and what kind of dishonesty the government is involved in when it says that it is only cutting the revenue guarantee and is not cutting money for health care and post-secondary education. We have made the case on the basis of the government's own contention over the last five years about the revenue guarantee, that it is cutting money for health care and post-secondary education. That will become more clear as events unfold when the new fiscal arrangements come into force and people see the effect the cutbacks will have on health care and post-secondary education.

Neither will I go into the argument about the way Manitoba is treated in the new equalization formula embodied in Bill C-97. I will not go into that because I still entertain a hope, however fading at this point, that before the end of the day we may yet see an amendment offered by the government to redress in some way the injustice done to Manitoba in this formula.

Rather than repeat the arguments already made—although it is tempting to do so—I want to reflect on our medicare system and some of its problems, in particular the growing unhapiness of the doctors within medicare. We know that there is a dispute in Manitoba between the government and the doctors about the role of binding arbitration, fees and the whole negotiating process. We also know that there is a dispute in Ontario. It seems that in one province after another there is a crisis in the relationship between doctors and the provincial governments and between doctors and medicare as such. I should like to make some observations about that and hope that they will prove helpful to the government.

I agree with the Canadian Medical Association's contention that medicare is underfunded. I think I should say at the beginning that there are areas of agreement between the New Democratic Party and the Canadian Medical Association. Some time ago I took the time to read the text of an address by the president of the Canadian Medical Association to the St. John's Rotary Club on February 25, 1982. I should like to make a few observations about that speech.

Before I comment on those areas on which I think there is common ground between the CMA and the NDP, I should like to refer to an anxiety that was expressed by the president of the CMA at the commencement of his address. He speculated that the audience might well be expected to perceive his remarks as being just one more pitch for higher fees and higher incomes for doctors. I think he put his finger on the impotence, the powerlessness, of the Canadian Medical Association's attempt to alert Canadians to the dangers of prolonged underfunding of our health care system. Why is it that no one seems to listen to the Canadian Medical Association? The fact is that otherwise legitimate concerns of the medical profession are compromised by the consistent link which doctors make between the underfunding of health care, on the one hand, and their incomes, on the other hand.

Having travelled across the country with the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements last year and listened to many different groups concerned with, and/or employed in, our health care system, I regret to say that it was only the doctors who came before the committee in the public hearings to talk about their own incomes. It was as if higher incomes for physicians would somehow solve all problems; as if higher incomes for physicians would mean more chronic care beds; as if higher incomes for physicians would mean more modernized equipment and facilities in hospitals; and as if higher incomes for physicians would mean more nurses in hospitals.

What has also compromised the concern of the medical profession about medicare and about underfunding is the obvious philosophical hostility which some of its spokesmen display toward medicare. One gets the feeling that higher incomes would satisfy some of the discontent in the medical profession but that for another, more vocal group—I would suggest a minority—the root of the problem is medicare itself. It is as if they object to the very principles of medicare and therefore look for every opportunity to discredit the system.

I believe the vast majority of Canadians regard medicare as one of the great post-war achievements in social policy. They cannot be blamed if they are unmoved by, somewhat skeptical of and suspicious about the concern of doctors for medicare, given the criticism that is sometimes heaped on medicare in principle by certain spokespersons for the medical profession.

In my view, the problems of how much physicians ought to be paid and what the mechanism ought to be for determining their income in detail after a general level is set, desperately need to be dealt with, but they must be dealt with separately from the issue of the general underfunding of hospital care or the need for other improvements in our health care system. In this respect I think it can be fairly charged that the medical profession is making the medicare crisis and the debate about medicare more difficult by constantly clouding more important issues with their own self-interest and with their rhetoric about the decline in physicians' incomes. This rhetoric, Mr. Speaker, usually employs 1971 income as the base, without ackowledging that this represents a considerable increase over pre-medicare income. I pointed this out to the president of the Canadian Medical Association when I wrote to him some weeks ago.

An article appeared in today's The Globe and Mail entitled "Shed No Tears for MDs". It points out that it is misleading to show only what has happened to doctors" incomes since 1971. Indeed, they seem to have gone down since 1971, but it is misleading to use that year as a base because, prior to then, the incomes of doctors were considerably lower. If the truth be told, what happened was that in the years just prior to medicare when they could see medicare coming, physicians' fees started to go up. This was to ensure that when medicare did arrive, the public would be paying these higher fees. The doctors had not charged them until they could see medicare coming. I have heard medicare described not so much as medicare but doctor care. In other words, it ensures that doctors will receive an income from each and every patient dealt with.

I was pleased to see in the presentation of the Canadian Medical Association to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs that for once it made an argument about what was happening to medicare and to patient care and left out the argument about physicians' incomes. If this is an indication that the Canadian Medical Association is moving away from trying to blend these two issues in what I have already said is a very unhelpful way, then I welcome it. I think the two matters need to be dealt with separately, if possible.

The CMA is quite correct in pointing out that Canada spends less of its GNP on health care than many other nations. For instance, the United States spends some 2 per cent more of its GNP on health care. This is not in itself evidence of underfunding in Canada. There are millions of poor Americans who have little or no access to the kind of health care to which almost all Canadians are accustomed, despite the fact that Americans spend 2 per cent more of their GNP on it. The higher costs in the United States are as much the result of higher physicians' incomes and irrational technological competition between unco-ordinated private health centres, as any greater commitment to health care.

The fact that we are spending 2 per cent less of our GNP on health care gives cause for reflection on just how badly health care costs in Canada are rising. We have heard much concern about rising health care costs. Sometimes the concern is tied to the fact that our health care system is being funded publicly which, according to certain ideologues on the right, is a guaranteed way to have higher costs. The fact of the matter is that with a publicly-funded system we in Canada have a much more cost-efficient health care system than the Americans who do it entirely through the private sector. Nevertheless, I agree more support is needed for health care in Canada, not less. This is why my party and I strenuously oppose the proposed cutbacks in federal transfer payments to the provinces.

Furthermore, New Democrats across the country have been vigilant in their opposition to spending restraint in health care practised by most provincial governments since block funding was introduced in 1977. We have been active in relating to the Canadian public the kinds of service deficiencies which the Canadian Medical Association eloquently pointed out in its presentation to the finance committee or indeed whenever it has the opportunity to do so. No party has a better record of providing facilities and required staff for better chronic health care than that accomplished by various NDP provincial governments in the construction of nursing homes; for instance, my home province of Manitoba comes to mind.

In attempting to provide more public money for such needs, we often run into the opposition of none other than those who now like to lament the inadequacies of medicare. The political right is opposed to increases in government spending and to a more equitable and fair tax system because it thinks that would somehow eliminate incentives and not create the correct investment climate. It is opposed to the measures with which we could pay for increased spending, but at the same time expresses concern about cutbacks in funding for these particular programs.

This is my problem with the approach of hon. members of the Progressive Conservative Party to the issue. I have been happy to have them as allies in opposing the withdrawal of the revenue guarantee, but at this point in the debate I must confess a certain amount of skepticism about the position they take. What is true is that day after day, year after year, they have been instrumental in developing a paranoia about government deficits, upon which the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) now plays as a justification for cutbacks in these programs. I say to the colleagues on my right that they are not without blame or totally non-culpable in the matter. Many of their provincial colleagues are even more to blame.

There is a kind of inconsistency in the approach of the Progressive Conservative Party to the issue. I ask them, in as generous a spirit as I am capable of, to reflect on the contradictions in the rhetoric, on the one hand, about reducing government spending and, on the other hand, about condemning the government whenever it reduces its spending. We in this corner can at least say that we are consistent. We condemned the government for reducing its spending in this area, and we say that if it means the government has to collect more money in order to fund particular services, we will support it. This is something which hampers the credibility of the Conservative party when it comes to medicare; it is no secret that it is not one of its strong points. There is not a great deal of deep-seated trust among Canadians when it comes to the relationship or the attachment of the Conservative party to medicare.

The underfunding problem in medicare is related to the larger political and economic problem that in a period of shrinking economic growth we must have a greater sharing of our common wealth of such things as health care if we are to maintain and, indeed one could argue, to restore standards. We in the NDP are in favour of a greater sharing of our common wealth. We would be prepared to reform our tax systems in order to make it possible. Is the Canadian Medical Association prepared to advance the argument that those people who made exorbitant incomes last year but paid no taxes at all should be more fairly taxed and should pay their share? Is the CMA prepared to advance the argument that corporations which do not pay their fair share of taxes should pay more taxes in order to fund the health care system? It seems to me that this is the route which must be taken, particularly in these difficult economic times. Are Conservatives prepared to advance a fair and more progressive tax system? I do not think so, because every time anybody so much as breathes about reforming the tax system, they are up on their feet talking about the investment climate. It seems that in order to please members of the Progressive Conservative Party when it comes to the tax system, we have to guarantee people can make as much money as they want and then they will do us the favour of doing business in the country; that is not our approach to the tax system.

When it comes to the medicare debate, it is important for people in obvious positions of leadership to be philosophically honest, whether it is the Canadian Medical Association or anyone else. If they are in favour of medicare as a system, then in my opinion they should be advocating more public and political commitment to an appropriate amount of government support, not advocating short-term measures such as more extra billing, a user fee here or charging more for hospital care there. Short-term solutions which introduce private mechanisms for funding added costs of health care in difficult economic times are shortsighted and will destroy medicare as Canadians now understand it. So when the Canadian people can believe that the Canadian Medical Association is unreservedly committed to the survival of medicare and its basic principles, then perhaps others concerned about health care will be able to join hands with the CMA in co-operative action to make sure all Canadians have the best possible health care system and the best possible health, in a system which does not use doctors or anyone else as scapegoats, one in which there is an appropriate balance between the professional integrity and the freedom of doctors and the responsibility of the community to ensure that the allocation of medical resources, scarce or otherwise, is an accountable community decision and not something left to the marketplace.

• (1600)

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), Mr. Speaker, now says that she wants to bring in a Canada health act. I hope she means that she wants to develop a new fiscal arrangement for health care superior to the one we had up until today, and superior to the one we will have after third reading of Bill C-97. It seems to me that the fiscal arrangements for health and education get worse every time they are renegotiated, although you cannot say of this one that it was renegotiated because it was unilateral. I hope she has it in mind to bring all existing legislation under one act which will involve certain standards and conditions having to be met in order for provinces to receive federal money. One of the things I hope will be in that new act is the prohibition of extra billing by physicians, and a mechanism to ensure that provinces see to it that there is no extra billing in their jurisdiction.

The medical profession has some arguments in favour of extra billing. They talk about the doctor-patient relationship and the need for a cash transaction in order to enhance the integrity of that relationship. I guess it is only coincidence that this argument is advanced more strenuously the more doctors feel their incomes are not keeping up to what they think they should be. We did not hear that argument as much when doctors were satisfied with their incomes. I guess their relationships with patients had more integrity then. In any case, we hear more now the argument that what is at stake is that relationship and somehow the transfer of money between the doctor and his patient makes the relationship more worth while.

Mr. Speaker, I am only being partly facetious when I say that this sounds like an argument by analogy for the virtues of prostitution: something is only worth while when there is a cash transaction. I question the value of that argument. It sounds good on the surface, but the minute you begin to look at it, it sort of falls away, besides which it is an insult to all the professions who do not operate on a fee-for-service basis. The argument advanced by the CMA concerning the need for money in order to enhance their doctor-patient relationships is, by implication, a charge against the value of the relationships other professionals have where they do not charge on a fee-for-service basis.

An hon. Member: How many hours does a doctor work a week?

Mr. Blaikie: I hear someone ask how many hours a doctor works a week. I was just going to get to that. Doctors claim that in order to keep up their income they have to see more patients, and that this is one of the main reasons the quality of health care is going down. They have to practise what is called "turnstile medicine". They only get so much per visit so they have to get them in and out, get more visits in, in order to keep their incomes up.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is a distortion.

Mr. Blaikie: That is exactly what I have heard any number of times from the CMA and various provincial medical associations.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You have the wrong verb in there, that is your trouble.

Mr. Blaikie: I have said this before, Mr. Speaker, and it is nothing new, but if what the doctors say is true, it seems to be nothing more than a euphemism for manipulating the market. Surely, many people only come back to the doctor's office if they are told to come back. There is no line up at the door; they come to the doctor's office if they are told there is a need to come back. If there is a deterioration in the quality of health care as a result of doctors having to see more and more patients in order to keep their income up, then that kind of practice is obviously suspect.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is a good thing you are covered by parliamentary privilege.

Mr. Blaikie: Clergymen do not charge per sermon, Mr. Speaker. We just give freely of our time.

Enough said about medicare, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to put on the record some of the concerns I have over the arguments advanced by the doctors. I do not think doctors are somehow sacred, and I do not think it should be regarded as such a nasty thing to get up here and question some of the arguments they advance about their incomes and their position in medicare. They are answerable to the political process and to public dialogue, just like anyone else. It seems to me that some of them would like to escape that kind of accountability, but there is no retreat from the fact that everyone, doctors, lawyers and everyone else, will have to be more and more accountable if we are serious about the democratization of society. People will have to be accountable for their decisions and not be able to hide behind professional privilege or whatever. That is true not only of doctors but all professions, and it is something we have to keep in mind.

There has been a deterioration in the respect that people have for all professions, for teachers and lawyers. Of course, they have always had a certain disrespect for lawyers, which is a healthy thing. However, this has been happening to all professions in general, which I think is probably a good thing, and doctors should not feel as though they have been singled out. Rather, they should see what is happening to them in the larger social perspective and not blame medicare or any other system as the cause of their problems.

I would like to make a few remarks concerning post-secondary education, the other aspect to the funding that we are concerned about when we talk about federal-provincial fiscal arrangements under the established programs financing act.

Many students, and others, have a growing anxiety concerning the future of post-secondary education. In part there is a feeling that university education does not provide the kind of opportunity it once did. Of course, many think that it still does provide opportunity. But, at one time, it was a truism to say that a university education provided upward mobility, particularly for those who came from a lower-income group or those down the socioeconomic ladder, so to speak. It was the means whereby they could proceed to greater and greater things.

What has happened is that we have begun to realize two things. First, it has not been as great an instrument of social mobility as we would like to believe. When we consider who is attending university, we find there has not been as much progress as we would like to think. For instance, we have not ensured that people from working class backgrounds would actually make it into university in significant numbers. And, even if they do get there, they do not have as much of a guarantee as in the past that a university education will be the means to achieve a success story, or however one wants to describe it.

I think that over the years we have placed too much emphasis on education as a means to provide a greater standard of living and income. Now when we have reached the point at which that can no longer be said to be the case, we find there is a crisis in the perception of post-secondary education.

Unfortunately, I think the government is operating out of this crisis perception. I think that the government has been hinting, as is evident by some of the rhetoric in the debate over post-secondary education, that it wants post-secondary education to be even more instrumental in its view than it has been up until now. It wants to tie the goals of the post-secondary educational community to the needs of the economy.

Of course, no one wants to say that our education system should be independent of the needs of the economy. However, what we and many in the post-secondary educational community are concerned about, and rightly so, is that the government will take an overly instrumental view of post-secondary education. We fear that the government will merely see post-secondary education as a form of manpower training, and that over the years it will begin to underfund those aspects of post-secondary education which are valuable in and of themselves. Those are the aspects which help to create the critical minds which can provide the kind of intelligent and reflective debate which is so necessary to the ongoing health of the political life of a democracy. This is the long-term consideration.

I become very concerned when I hear the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) discussing a voucher system whereby the federal government would actually pull money from the general funding for post-secondary education and give it to students, as individuals, in the form of vouchers. I last heard this advocated by the libertarians during the provincial election in Manitoba in 1969. I thought it was sort of a fringe idea. However, it now seems that it is being actively considered by the federal government.

What would happen in that case? The federal government could then discriminate against those courses that it felt were not as useful to the economy or to its political future. If one wanted courses for a high-tech job, one could receive a voucher of $5,000; but if one wanted to take philosophy, one would only receive $5. This is what I am talking about. It would give the federal government an incredible amount of manipulative power and should cause us grave concern.

We do, however, support the desire of the Secretary of State to have more national dialogue about the role of post-secondary education. In this respect, I do not quite understand why the government will not agree to something like, or identical to, a royal commission on the role of post-secondary education, what the CAUT called for, the equivalent of the first Hall report with regard to post-secondary education. Instead, the government wants to do the same thing it does concerning nuclear power and everything else one can imagine. It wants to have its own little, internal kind of inquiry where one never gets to see the terms of reference, one never gets to hear what the government is thinking or proposing, and then it shows up with a bill one day and gives the House a couple of weeks in which to pass it.

The government would have the support of many people in trying to develop more of a national discussion about the role of post-secondary education. For this reason, I agree with the task force proposal that the funding for health care and post-secondary education be separated so that we could have separate discussions. It is very difficult to tell what the government is spending on each when they are both lumped together in such a way. It also blurs the lines of accountability.

I hope the government will actively consider, at some point in the future, the creation of separate fiscal arrangements for health care and post-secondary education. In relation to health care standards, it should ensure a mechanism whereby the federal government could bring delinquent provinces into line.

It seems to me that this is probably an historic low point for federal-provincial fiscal arrangements as they pertain to health care and post-secondary education. I hope we have sort of bottomed out and that, from here on in, we can begin the process of putting into place a better fiscal arrangement for health care and post-secondary education.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, third reading of Bill C-97, respecting federal-provincial fiscal arrangements and established programs financing, provides the last chance to record, for public attention, the fear and concern that these new measures will adversely affect health, education and other social services across Canada. The debate on Bill C-97 and the limited opportunity for public representations before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs have made it abundantly clear that the changes in equalization provisions and in federal contributions to established services will seriously affect the financial ability of many provinces to continue all government services at current levels and standards.

It is unfortunate, as we meet today, that we are under the directive from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) that, unless this bill is passed, the financial provisions and the provinces affected by them will be endangered. It was with that threat hanging over our heads that we hastened to complete deliberations on this bill which will have such far-reaching effects for the provinces and for the residents of those provinces which are dependent upon transfer payments for their very financial existence.

The government's claim is that $105 billion will be transferred to the provinces over the next five years to support equalization and established programs, principally, health care and post-secondary education. The Minister of Finance tells us that this amount is substantially larger than the $61 billion transferred to the provinces for equalization and established programs in the five years ending March 31, 1982.

While the proposed contribution appears generous, let us remember the rate at which total federal expenditures have increased over the years. For the fiscal year 1980-1981, total federal expenditures were $58.6 billion. Five years later, for fiscal year 1985-86, total federal expenditures are forecast to reach $105 billion. As a result, federal expenditures will almost double in five years.

It is not surprising, then, that an increase from $61 billion to $105 billion for federal transfer payments to provinces for a subsequent five-year period might result in less real financial support to the provinces. The important bottom line on the government's new proposals contained in Bill C-97 is the net effect or result on provincial finances.

It has been said time and time again in this debate, but never has it been denied, that the net effect or result on all of the provinces collectively is that federal transfer payments will be reduced in this five-year period commencing April 1, 1982, by $5.7 billion. That is, the federal treasury will be saved $5.7 billion by applying the new formulas enacted by Bill C-97. To take Nova Scotia as an example, Mr. Speaker, this change will result in a decrease in revenues from transfer payments of at least $100 million and possibly an amount as high as $200 million. If you transpose that into the population available to support the revenues of the province of Nova Scotia, it means an additional amount per taxpayer of almost $300. If you spread it across the whole population over that time frame, of course the amount is less; but we have to recognize that it is only from the taxpayers that the government can obtain revenues. The result of this saving to the federal government is a deficit to the provinces that receive transfer payments, and that eventually will have to be passed on to the residents and citizens of those provinces.

Who can quarrel, Mr. Speaker, with an attempt by the Government of Canada to reduce its massive deficit, a deficit which has been running close to $10 billion annually and a public debt in excess of $128 billion that soaks up one dollar in every four revenue dollars? That is a deficit and public debt that costs each and every Canadian $4,900, and that costs each and every taxpayer approximately $12,500.

What we can and should bring to public attention, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the Government of Canada is reducing its deficit by withdrawing financial assistance to the provinces to the extent of $5.7 billion in a five-year period. At the same time, the federal government is virtually forcing those provinces to keep and maintain the same level and standard of public services that it has asked and encouraged the provinces to provide for its residents to ensure national standards in health, education and social assistance.

The federal government, having established the level and standard of government services to Canadians, now seeks to abandon part of its financial responsibility for the provision of these services. "Co-operative federalism" is indeed dead in Canada, Mr. Speaker. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made that pronouncement a few weeks ago, he was not really stating a fact but was making the announcement that he and his government had killed "co-operative federalism". It was, in a word, Mr. Speaker, homicide and not suicide. The Prime Minister must take the responsibility for the ultimate result.

This country has grown on the basis of co-operation between the federal government and the provincial governments to achieve programs and services that are available to all Canadians. The statement that co-operative federalism is dead endangers that process and the procedure by which these programs and services were made available to Canadians in the past.

It is essential to underline and clarify the effect of the cutback of $5.7 billion in transfer payments to the provinces.

Faced with a substantial loss in revenue, these provinces have only four alternatives. First, the provinces may use other revenues or untapped sources of revenue to provide for the loss of revenue. An important footnote to that alternative is that most provinces operate on an annual deficit and do not have the resources available to them. Other provinces have virtually exhausted their sources of revenue.

A second alternative would be to reduce or cut back services. We cannot do this in the fields of medical and health care because of the great danger it would pose to the persons who receive benefit from those services. By the same token, the universities, and the students who attend those universities and other post-secondary institutions, would be horrified by the prospect of cutting back services and programs within those institutions.

The third alternative I want to outline is that provinces have the alternative of reducing standards of services. Mr. Speaker, I do not think anyone in this House or any responsible elected official across Canada would favour a reduction in the standard of services, particularly in the health care and educational fields.

The fourth alternative left to the provinces, Mr. Speaker, is to increase taxation. Some provinces, like Nova Scotia and Ontario, are more or less at the end of the line with respect to taxation.

In a moment, Mr. Speaker, I want to provide some information on the extent to which the provinces have exhausted their tax resources. First, I want to say that if none of these alternatives that I have outlined is readily available, medical doctors, hospitals, universities, colleges and other post-secondary institutions are left with resolving the problem within the framework of their own institutions and within the framework of their own practices. They must consider cutting back these services or reducing the standards of those services. In the end, whether it is the provinces that make the decision in terms of cutting back or reducing services, or in terms of imposing taxes, or whether it is the deliverers of those services themselves, the medical doctors, the hospitals, the universities and post-secondary institutions, the public across Canada are affected. It will be the people of Canada that will either bear the increased cost or suffer from the cutbacks and reductions in services. The point is that in the case of the provincial governments which cannot raise revenues or tap sources of revenues, the only alternative left to them in many cases is cutbacks in services or reductions in the standard of those services.

Let me speak now, Mr. Speaker, about provincial taxes and our increase in provincial taxes as a means of making up the deficit which the federal government has imposed on the provinces to the extent of $5.7 billion in the next five years. It has already been reported that many of the provinces simply do not have any further tax base to use. In fact, the survey included with the budget documents which the minister brought to the House of Commons on November 12, 1981, indicated that on a scale of 100, two provinces, Nova Scotia and Ontario, only rank 88; that is to say, they have exhausted their resources and taxation capabilities to that extent. In contrast, the province of Alberta has a score of 192, so it is easy to see that this particular province, in relation to the provinces of Ontario and Nova Scotia, does have some resources which it might apply to make up any deficit in transfer payments.

I might mention for the record, Mr. Speaker, that among the other Atlantic provinces in which I have a particular interest, New Brunswick rated an 89 in relation to the base figure 100, Newfoundland rated 92, and Prince Edward Island, 97. You can see that those provinces have little capability to make up any deficit that results from cutbacks in federal transfer payments.

The other aspect of increasing taxes as a method to meet any shortfall imposed by the Government of Canada is the capability of the taxpayers, residents in each province, to bear additional taxes. I have a report that indicates that today 41 per cent of a family's income is expended for taxes, apart from food and shelter. Those figures indicate, if I were to list them, that among the people of Canada there is very little room left for payment of increased taxes. For instance, the average British Columbia family will earn $29,201 this year and will have to pay $12,114 of that to governments. Income tax is the biggest single item at $4,055. The myriad of other taxes account for the other $8,059. When an average family in British Columbia with an income of $29,201 pays $12,114 in federal income tax and a myriad of other taxes, we realize that the taxpayers of Canada have pretty well reached their limit.

With rising costs for food, shelter, transportation and other essential services, each day erodes the ability of the Canadian public to put more money into taxes to pay for services they have been receiving in the past. It is not a simple matter, as the Minister of Finance may claim, to allow the federal government to get rid of its deficit by transferring the problem to the provinces and then have the provinces utilize their resources to acquire additional funds to apply to the shortfall. As I have already explained, in the case of most provinces, certainly the Atlantic provinces, that involves increased taxation. There is simply no room for that either in terms of the financial capacity to raise additional taxes or the financial capacity of the people to pay additional taxes.

What the federal government has left us, with its financial policy and the provisions of Bill C-97, is a problem that appears to be insoluble. It can be resolved only by a reduction of services or a change in the standards of those services.

In the debate on Bill C-97 in this House and in the committee which reviewed this bill and heard public representations with respect to its provisions, there has been myriad statistical information and a plethora of financial information. I am not going to add to that.

We have in addition the report of the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal earnings. It also contains a great deal of information on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements in the past and makes recommendations for the future. My major purpose is to consider the human side of the fiscal reductions proposed by Bill C-97 and to indicate the effect these reductions will have on Canadians.

We have the Canadian dream of equal services across Canada in the essential areas of health, education and social services. Previous Liberal governments, and politicians in this House and elsewhere across this country have attempted to establish national standards in essential services so that as you go from province to province in Canada, each citizen receives the same standard and level of basic services. That dream is in danger today. Once having been established and implemented across this country, the Government of Canada threatens that dream; it threatens to destroy that dream that has become a reality over the past decade.

I want to deal, in this context of the human side and the effect on human beings, with the matter of the equalization payments that are made to those provinces which cannot, according to financial tests, provide services at the level that the richer provinces of Canada are able to do. I also want to talk about health care, including medical and hospital care, and post-secondary education.

First I want to consider why the Government of Canada has taken this drastic action at this stage in our development and is cutting back on the amount of its transfer payments to those provinces which require the payments to provide services.

Why, in 1982, does the government see fit to do this in the face of all kinds of economic difficulties and massive unemployment, approaching 1.2 million persons unemployed? In addition, there are 250,000 no longer looking for work. Another 260,000 are employed at jobs much below their level of capability and qualification. Approximately 1.5 million Canadians are employed part-time. When you add all that up, you find almost three million Canadians have an employment problem. There are grave difficulties across the country. This affects the whole fabric of our society. In the face of that, the government has decided to cut back on the payments to provinces used to provide essential services to their citizens.

We must ask ourselves why the Government of Canada is taking this action at this time. I can only answer in this way. There appear to be two developments that have led to the introduction of Bill C-97 and the change of attitude on the part of the Government of Canada respecting financial transfers to the provinces. One development is quite specific. It is the financial plan contained in the budget introduced November 12, 1981. That budget proposed as its main thrust to restrain government spending and reduce the deficit. As a second prong of that thrust, the government purported to apply equity to the tax measures that comprise our tax system. I will talk about that in a moment.

The second development is much more unjustifiable. I refer to the increase in the hostility of the federal government to provincial governments and the complaint by the federal government that it does not receive political credit from the provincial governments for the services it provides and for the financial payments it makes to the provinces to provide other services. That is an important development when you consider that in all ten provinces there does not exist such a thing as a Liberal government. One can easily see why there is this hostility toward the provincial governments.

One wonders why the Government of Canada would take steps to enact measures in this House of Commons through the budget and through Bill C-97 which wreak havoc with those provincial governments in their financial dealings. The reason has been stated by the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) in public on at least two or three occasions that I am aware of; they are upset about this lack of political credit. The Secretary of State was quoted in the February 22, 1982, edition of the Toronto Star. That newspaper is not known for giving support to the opposition parties in this House of Commons. That newspaper saw fit to report remarks made by the Secretary of State. The article stated, and I quote:

> From now on, Ottawa wants to get direct political credit for whatever it spends, whether it's in a federal or provincial jurisdiction, and is prepared to go around the provinces by giving universities or students direct aid, if it can't make a new deal with the provincial governments.

The article also stated:

> If the Government of Canada is to remain relevant to the citizens of the country, it must deal more directly with the citizens, or must have the citizens realize what it is doing or how their dollars are being spent and not merely be a banker for the provinces—

That is what the Secretary of State said in an interview with the Toronto Star. The federal government just cannot be a banker, it has to get credit. The people of Canada have to know what it is doing with their tax dollars. They have to know it is helping to finance hospital and medical care, and that university students are being assisted by the Government of Canada.

To get that political credit, to get that silly point across to the people of Canada, that is what it is doing. As if Canadians did not know from the payment of their taxes that the government is receiving vast amounts of money! To get that little point across, the federal government is setting about endangering the whole federal-provincial system, merely to gain some credit.

We have these two developments. One is very serious, if misguided, in terms of the budget provisions. The second is the search for political credit which has led to the introduction of Bill C-97 and this change in federal-provincial fiscal relations.

Let me talk briefly about the budget which, as I have indicated, has the intention of reducing the federal deficit and allegedly bringing equity to the tax system. I stated that the Minister of Finance claims to have reduced the federal deficit, but we have already seen, as evidenced by Bill C-97, that all the Minister of Finance has done is taken the $5.7 billion which should have gone to the provinces under the existing cost-sharing and transfer formulae and kept it in the hands of the federal government. He simply grabbed the $5.7 billion which will eventually be applied to the federal deficit through the government's financing process.

That is why the Economic Council of Canada has said that the budget does not, in fact, contain measures which will effectively reduce the deficit and restore faith in the government's financial capability. That is why the Economic Council of Canada has pointed out time and again and confirmed that what is occurring is simply a transfer of the deficit from the federal government to the provincial governments. This cannot be of any possible financial benefit to the people of this nation.

This leads us to examine another justification which was given for the budget. It is that the tax measures were intended to create equity. I will list only a few of those measures. For example, there is the loss of the pension deduction. This has a detrimental effect on senior Canadians who should be given some encouragement to provide for the years when they will not be able to work by saving during their working life. They are being punished for their endeavours by having the pension deduction taken away from them if they receive pension income and continue to work. That is the minister's attitude toward the senior citizens of this country.

Another provision of the budget is to tax health benefit plans which were introduced by employers with the co-operation and consent of employees to ensure the employees receive adequate health services. The Canadian government will now tax the employer's contribution to those programs resulting in the fear that those programs may collapse simply because employees are unwilling to pay tax on dollars that they do not even receive. Who can blame the seven million employed people across Canada who participate in the health benefit plans but do not receive any money, only to be asked by the federal government to pay tax on the dollars that they do not receive? That is what the Minister of Finance does to the working people of Canada.

There are 13 million Canadians who have life insurance in order to provide for their families in the event of an untimely death or physical disability. With respect to life insurance, the Minister of Finance will tax that desire to protect their families from unfortunate accidents.

Workers' benefits will be taxed in a manner different from that which was applied in the past. Those workers who are employed in northern Canada's frontier or offshore and receive food, clothing and shelter or are provided with transportation in the course of their work will now be taxed on a much stricter basis and will be required to pay more tax. How will that attitude of the government help the development of northern Canada and help Canada grow and develop its resources which have been neglected?

Other Canadians who will be affected are the farmers and fishermen who work all their lives to build up their equity in a farm or a fishing vessel. The only way they can provide for their future is to sell their assets—whether it is a farm or a fishing vessel—and put the money which they receive into an income-averaging annuity to avoid having it taxed at the highest possible rate in the year in which they receive it, so that their future security will not be wiped away. The minister will not allow farmers and fishermen and small businessmen, who have used this device in the past, to use it any longer. He is taking it away. Where is the equity in that?

Those are only some examples which prove the falsehood of the budget. There is the falsehood expressed by Bill C-97 that the government is restraining its expenditures and bringing equity into the tax system. We are left with Bill C-97 and its cutbacks which will affect Canadians for the next five years. Co-operative federalism is indeed dead. It has been killed by this budget and by the Prime Minister, who will not consider the reality that Canadians need services and an effective system to provide financially for those services.

The net result of the budget is that the federal government receives more and the provincial governments receive less. However, the provincial governments are still faced with the necessity of providing essential and necessary services to their citizens. The federal government has abandoned Canadians in all provinces and is not providing the provinces with the financial capability to provide services.

As I have indicated, the Secretary of State supports this legislation in the wake of the failure of the provinces to give political credit to the Government of Canada for the role that it plays. How callous and mean can you get when you are dealing with your own electorate, the people of Canada, who have elected this government? Canadians should be annoyed at how they are being treated. Many Canadians do not understand what is occurring in the House of Commons. They do not always understand the effect of the budget provisions or the effect of a piece of legislation like Bill C-97. That is why we stand in the House and before committees, like my colleague for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) did, and try to get the message across to the government and Canadians about the harmful effects of these financial measures. That is why we try to prevent the government from hiding behind an alleged policy of fiscal restraint or an alleged policy of equity in its budget measures.

We want to expose the government so that Canadians will be able to judge their elected representatives on both sides of the House and will be able to render judgment when the time comes. In the meantime, we will not listen to the fabrications foisted on the House by the government that it is restraining expenditures and creating equity in the tax system, while at the same time allowing essential services to be provided to Canadians in the same manner as in the past.

We must consider Bill C-97 in the context of the financial situation in Canada. We realize that the government has already spent too much of the taxpayers' money for too long and has piled up deficits which are too high. These deficits are coming back to haunt Canadians and particularly the Government of Canada. We must maintain services which we all regard as essential to all Canadians. I can think of many ways to raise the funds to support those services. All you have to do is look at the $500 million dollar deficit in the Post Office. There are $675 million in debt write-offs for the St. Lawrence Seaway. It is not difficult to find funds that will allow the government to maintain transfer payments at the current level so as to preserve the capability of the provinces to provide these services. Even if the government is not willing to do this for all the provinces which have been receiving transfer payments, at least it can do it in the case of those provinces, such as the maritime provinces, which it knows are unable to provide the financing for these essential services.

Now that the Minister of Finance has entered the chamber, I will remind him that the government of Nova Scotia, for example, already has a deficit of $200 million; Newfoundland has a deficit approaching that amount, as has the government of New Brunswick. In percentage terms, the government of Prince Edward Island has a similar deficit.

I also want to remind the minister that these provinces are already spending a large amount of their total revenue on social services, education, and health. In Newfoundland, 25 per cent of the provincial revenue is spent on education, 20.6 per cent is spent on health and 17.9 per cent is spent on other social services. Where is that province's capacity to continue to provide services at current levels without help from the federal government? I remind the minister that I have already indicated that the bottom line of this proposal is that $5.7 billion less will be flowing to the provinces, including the Atlantic provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

• (1650)

In the time I have left I would like to deal with the human side of the four elements which are very much involved in Bill C-97, the proposal we now have before us, with respect to federal fiscal transfers to the provinces. As I have indicated, those four points are equalization, health care, medical care, including hospital care and post-secondary education.

First a word about equalization. Equalization in relation to the concept of regional disparity did not just pop out of thin air. It has been a matter of great concern to people in the Atlantic area for some time as well as people in Manitoba and in some parts of western Canada. That is why, when the government brought forward its proposal of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms for all Canadians, we on the east coast were particularly concerned with the inclusion in that Charter of Rights and Freedoms of a provision respecting equalization. That provision was included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in Section 36. I just want to read Section 36(2) into the record because it states in a few words the concept of equalization. It says:

> Parliament and the Government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

That is what equalization is, and that is what it states in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

What has happened to that concept? What has happened to that provision in the charter in relation to Bill C-97? The Government of Canada has simply determined in advance that all that that provision, which will be enacted as part of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, means is that the level of services which the Government of Canada plans to support once Bill C-97 goes into effect is sufficient for the purposes of the charter.

Citizens and residents of provinces like Nova Scotia wonder what they are getting in this provision respecting equalization. What are we getting? Are we getting anything or are we not? Is there any meaning to it? Does it change anything? What is the point of the provision if the Minister of Finance and his government can simply come along and change the formula and the provisions for equalization, eliminate the revenue guarantee and change the provisions of the established programs financing and say: "There you have it, ladies and gentlemen, that is it; that is all you get; never mind this constitutional provision?"

It seems awfully funny because in recent years we in eastern Canada, and particularly in Nova Scotia, have looked forward to the future with some hope and expectation because we see offshore developments, and we see a changing attitude on the part of the Government of Canada evidenced by its willingness to include in a constitutional proposal and enshrine into law the right of each province to be equal and to have equal benefits in terms of government services. The duty on the part of the Government of Canada is to eliminate regional disparity. When we see that kind of attitude demonstrated in the provisions of Section 36 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and when we see the possibility of development of new resources offshore and new revenues from those resources, we have hope for the future. But then that hope is immediately wiped out in a single act; the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance in November of 1981, and now Bill C-97 which claims for the federal government the right to legislate the rules regardless of the constitutional reference to equalization and regional disparity. That is a great and grave disappointment to us.

I want to talk briefly about health services and first about medicare. We in Canada and certainly in this Parliament sometimes have the idea that we are the prime movers in the health care field and that we are way ahead of the rest of the world when it comes to the provision of health services, either in the form of medical care or hospital care to our citizens. That is simply not true. There are many countries in the world which spend greater percentages of their gross national products on health care services than does Canada. In fact, over the past few years many nations have increased their expenditures on health care services at a greater rate than has Canada. We cannot stand still in these fields. We want for Canadians the best possible health care services, and we have to work to provide those services. Even countries which are often thought of as being less fortunate in terms of social and health services than Canada, such as Saudi Arabia, can claim to have health services, and particularly hospital services, of a high calibre and possibly even higher than those in Canada, so we do not want to go to sleep on this development. We do not want to assume that we have achieved a level of excellence and that we can rest for a while, because that is not true at all. Those in this chamber and across Canada who have had to go to the United States, West Germany and other parts of the world for health services will know that while we have done a very good job—and I commend our medical profession and our hospital operators—we still have a long way to go and cannot relax one bit.

With respect to medicare, I was amazed at the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) with respect to income for medical doctors. The idea that a medical doctor is not entitled to an appropriate and proper income for the services he extends is totally ludicrous.

Mr. Miller: That is not what he said.

Mr. Crosby: If hon. members do not want to accept my word—

Mr. Miller: Read the "blues".

Mr. Crosby: —they can look at statistics respecting doctors who have left Canada. We have in Canada a medical education system the standards of which, I understand, are very high by world standards. We are very proud of the doctors we educate in Canada, and we are very proud of the fact that they stay in Canada to administer to the needs of Canadians.

However, at the very same time we have to be very concerned about the number of doctors leaving Canada. In 1977, that number was 549; in 1978, 663; and in 1979, 605. With that number of members of the medical profession leaving Canada we know there must be a problem, and we have to ask ourselves what it is. If the problem is a low level of income to those doctors or if the problem is a lack of services and facilities available to them, then we have to work to solve that problem because, as the Minister of Finance and everyone in this chamber knows, we spend vast amounts of money educating doctors in Canada. It would be a terrible thing if we allowed ourselves to lose the benefits provided by those people simply because we did not provide for them adequately in terms of finances.

I understood I had 40 minutes and I am coming to the end of that time, but I just want to say a word about hospital care. Again, failure to finance hospital care properly will result in dangers to the health of Canadians. We do not want that. What we have to do in the case both of hospital care and medical care is establish what the standard of service ought to be for all Canadians and, having established that standard, we have to be prepared to pay for it. It is as simple as that and there is no way around it. We have to establish the standard of care and then find the means to pay for it. We cannot blame doctors. We cannot blame hospital authorities. We simply have to deal with the realities of the problem.

Let me talk about post-secondary education in the two minutes I have left. Let us think of the students across Canada whose careers will be in jeopardy if we do not find funds to finance post-secondary education. Again, we have to view the cutbacks with that in mind.

The time has come to face up to the realities of the situation and to find the funds for essential services so that we can help and benefit all Canadians.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the next hon. member, in this case the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger)—International Maritime Transport—Levying of tax on world prices; the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga)—Administration of Justice—Allegations concerning production of documents; the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—Public Service—Action taken against employee of Department of Manpower and Immigration. (b) Application of Charter of Rights.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance) that Bill C-97, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I understand it is customary to seek the unanimous consent of the House at third reading for the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to speak. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is he going to close debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I assume in seeking unanimous consent that that would, of course, not close debate.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the minister have another chance to close the debate as well?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): First, the same hon. member cannot speak twice on the same bill and, second, there is no closing of debate at third reading in any event.

• (1700)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, thank you for permitting me to participate in the third reading debate on Bill C-97. At this final stage I should like to comment on a number of the points made in the course of the debate and to give my views on a number of concerns raised by hon. members.

First of all, there has been some comment about the length of time allotted to deal with the issues in this particular bill. There has been, however, a good deal more involvement and understanding by members of this House in this debate on fiscal arrangements than there has ever been in the past. This is due, at least in part, to the establishment of the parliamentary task force which has proved to be a major step forward for parliamentary interest in, and parliamentary influence over, federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. Without the work done by the parliamentary task force there would not have been as great an understanding of the issues debated at second reading and in committee. The total debate would not have been as productive. I think all members who participated in the task force headed by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) have acknowledged the value of their involvement.

The report of the task force comments on the result of the exercise as follows:

> [It] marks the first occasion on which public consultation, and active parliamentary involvement, have been possible during the process of reviewing and renegotiating the central features of fiscal federalism in Canada.

I should certainly like to thank members of the parliamentary task force from all parties for their valuable contribution. I should also like to thank members who participated in the debate at second reading, at committee stage and at third reading.

I have noted with satisfaction the general approval given by members of all parties to most elements of the bill. They have not approved all elements, but a substantial number of the important elements have been endorsed. I am pleased to note also the support which has been given to the government's proposals for a new equalization system. This is a program which we all agree is of the utmost importance to our federation.

I am pleased there has been considerable support for the equalization formula given by provincial governments. It has not been possible in every case to meet the concerns of all provincial governments, but I believe that most equalization-receiving provinces would acknowledge that their views have been listened to on quite a number of important aspects.

I am also pleased to note the support for the continuation and improvement of our fiscal stabilization program. In addition, support has been expressed for the proposal to make over $200 million in payments to fiscally disadvantaged provinces in order to offset the effects of the recoveries of equalization arising from the 1981 census. In that connection I should mention the discussions I had with the representatives of the Atlantic provinces and the province of Manitoba. Certainly in the case of the Atlantic provinces, the arrangement entered into has been of direct benefit. The ministers of the provinces, including the Premier of New Brunswick, have expressed their appreciation of the efforts made to accommodate them in this respect.

Approval has also been given to the proposal to accelerate payments to oil-producing provinces of their share of the federal oil export charge.

There have been criticisms of the bill, of course. Most of these have been directed to the established programs financing provisions. Before I deal with those criticisms, I should like to deal with the case of the province of Manitoba and indicate why it was not possible to accept the proposal to base Manitoba's equalization entitlement on the entitlement of the province with the second lowest rate of growth. Acceptance of this proposal would have meant that the entitlement of one province would have been based upon that of another. The whole idea behind equalization is that it be based upon each province's measure of fiscal capacity. It does not make sense to provide that it could be based upon the fiscal capacity of another province. That has never been the case. If that proposal were adopted, it would go a long way to weakening—I will not say undermining, but to weakening—the credibility of the equalization program. It would be extremely arbitrary.

We recognized that Manitoba did have a concern and a problem and that what was needed was an arrangement which would protect a province such as Manitoba which would be adversely affected by the change from one equalization system to another. If no steps had been taken to accommodate the concerns of Manitoba, they would have been a drop in the entitlement of Manitoba in the first year of the new five-year period. I believe it would have dropped by 10 per cent over the preceding year. However, on the base of the first year of the new period, its entitlements would have increased in accordance with the more or less general level of increase applicable to all other provinces.

To meet this particular transitional problem we proposed an arrangement with a substantial cost of $165 million over the three years in so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned. This is a very generous provision and is unprecedented in the history of the program. I believe this provision is adequate to meet the circumstances.

Hon. members are aware that the purpose of equalization is to increase the revenue-raising capacity of equalization-receiving provinces up to the prescribed standard level. We select a standard which we think is fair and adequate and then bring disadvantaged provinces up to that level. The effect of the proposed transitional measure put forward by the government will be that for a period of three years Manitoba's per capita fiscal capacity will be raised to a level higher than that of any of the other provinces that receive equalization. Indeed, in 1982-83 and in 1983-84, Manitoba's fiscal capacity after equalization will be even higher than that of Ontario.

I know that an amendment has been seriously proposed by two members of the House of Commons which would have raised Manitoba's fiscal capacity above that of Ontario for all five years of the new arrangement, even though Ontario would receive no equalization payment. In my view, that would have created real difficulties. It would have been unacceptable from an equalization point of view. The amendment was not acceptable because it was quite costly, but also because it did not make sense in terms of an equalization program which is intended to deal with the fiscal capacity of various provinces. That is my comment about the Manitoba case.

In addition to the recovery provision amounting to $30 million in the case of Manitoba, we have provided a transitional arrangement costing an additional $165 million. In any equalization program, if fiscal capacity related to a standard is to be the guide, provinces will vary in their entitlements. Otherwise it does not make sense as an equalization system.

It is worth recalling, because one does not want a residue of bitterness to prevail, that when we started the last period of equalization the entitlements of the province of Manitoba in comparison with those of the Atlantic provinces were much greater; the percentage rate of growth was more rapid. It is the opposite this time because of the operation of the standard and the fiscal capacity of Manitoba. As the fiscal capacity of a province increases, its entitlements will decrease. The closer a province gets to the standard, the less entitlement it will have;

that is the general system. We have attempted to help Manitoba as a result of discussions which my officials and I have had with the minister of finance.

It has also been suggested in the course of the debate on this bill that the five-province standard proposed for the new equalization formula is inadequate because, "there is no evidence that the five provinces now selected . . . are appropriate provinces for a mean average of Canada." I should like to remind hon. members that the five provinces in question, namely Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, account for over 80 per cent of the total provincial population. Moreover, Alberta, which is the largest of the provinces excluded from the standard, certainly cannot be considered as more representative of all provinces than any of the five standard provinces taken individually. Its resource revenues are such that it enjoys a unique position among our ten provinces. As for the four Atlantic provinces excluded from the standard, it should be noted that their inclusion would result in a lower standard than that provided for in the bill.

I will not digress and reflect upon the initial proposal to bring all provinces up to the Ontario standard. I thought that was a good standard. I thought we were hitching the destiny of equalization-receiving provinces to an admirable standard provided by the province of Ontario. But others did not have the confidence in the stability of that province that I had.

Therefore, I moved to a five-province standard which in the view of provincial spokesmen—and their views ought to be respected—would be more stable over the long term. This is why we moved from the Ontario standard to the five-province standard. I must say that almost all equalization-receiving provinces regard the five-province standard as better than the Ontario standard, although I am sure all of them would wish to have kept the pre-existing equalization formula, which in the circumstances was not possible.

Let me say a word on established programs financing, the part of the bill which has been attacked by hon. members of the opposition. Given the quantity of inaccurate information and improbable argument which we have heard in the debate, it seems useful to start with a brief summary of what Bill C-97 proposes to do about established programs financing.

It is not very complicated; there are only two clauses involved. Clause 6 indicates that the total entitlement will be paid as a cash contribution and an equalized tax transfer. That clause goes on to set out the total entitlement of a province as the per capita federal contribution in respect of hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education under the cost-sharing arrangements in 1975-76, multiplied by the current year provincial population, and increased by the growth in the Canadian economy. Thus, the total entitlement of a province is based upon the actual experience of 1975-76, escalated by the growth of the Canadian economy. It is worth stressing that federal contributions in 1975-76 represented 100 per cent of the federal contributions under these programs. If 100 per cent of the federal contribution is escalated each year by the growth of the economy, we have a pretty solid base, and the contribution will grow in the future on that solid base.

I have not heard anyone in the opposition criticize any of these elements. Federal contributions under cost-sharing were based upon what it cost to run health insurance and post-secondary education. When the switch was made five years ago from a cost-sharing formula to a block-funding approach, it seemed a fair basis—it still is. Current entitlements, which will go from 1982-83 onward, will start from that base and grow with the population. This is not an unreasonable approach since both health and educational services are supplied to people, people are the population, and the base grows with the population.

Finally, it seems reasonable to assume that federal contributions to these programs should grow in line with the growth of prices and incomes in the country. Using an escalator based upon the gross national product would appear to accomplish this. If all three parts of the total entitlement appear reasonable, it is hard to understand why combining them creates such criticism.

What would opposition members have us do at a time when restraint in federal expenditure is necessary? Is it argued that we should continue a transfer—and this is what it is all about—originally designed to guarantee provincial income tax receipts during implementation of a tax reform ten years ago, the short-term revenue impact of which was difficult to predict? Since the tax change took place ten years ago, the necessary adjustment period must surely be over by now. Is it really necessary to continue, not even the adjustment payment, but a payment designed to cushion the reduction in provincial cash flows which its termination involved? This is the compensation for the termination of the revenue guarantee. A system which is based solidly upon the actual cost experience of 1975-76, which grows with the population and with the gross national economy, is a very fair way for the Government of Canada to support post-secondary education and health care.

• (1720)

A number of opposition speakers—I gather even today—claim that the cuts are not in transfers to provinces but in transfers to hospitals and universities. They claim the revenue guarantee, which is to be eliminated, was a payment to the hospitals and universities. Well, if that is the case I would like to see the evidence, because it has yet to be produced. The estimates we have produced, which are not disputed, show regular increases in entitlements and transfers. Over the next five years these transfers will increase, as I told the committee, at 12 per cent to 13 per cent—

Miss MacDonald: Cash payments will go down.

Mr. MacEachen: —built upon the base of actual experience in 1975-76. If you want to talk about hospitals and universities, I suspect that many of their treasurers would be very pleased if the funds that provinces make available to them had grown as fast as federal contributions to the provinces. They would be even happier if there were a commitment that provincial contributions would grow as fast in the future as our established programs financing payments to the provinces would under the provisions of Bill C-97. Is there a commitment from the provinces that they will increase their support to post-secondary education and health the way we will in the next five years? I have not heard any such commitment, and I think we should not pin the Government of Canada with the responsibility—

Miss MacDonald: Oh, indeed we will.

Mr. MacEachen: —for any alleged reduction or future reduction in the share of funding for these purposes.

Mr. Chrétien: The provinces are cutting back.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the problems that the opposition complain about so loudly—that is, reduced funding for health and education, increased charges and falling standards—simply cannot be laid on the doorstep of the Government of Canada. Nor can they, under current arrangements, be resolved by the Government of Canada alone.

Having said that, the concerns raised are obviously illegitimate. The standards of health care and post-secondary education in Canada are of concern to all hon. members, and they should continue to be. However, the problems arising from these concerns are in fact the sort of issues that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan) hope to redress in their discussions with provincial health and education ministers. The two federal ministers want to be able to assure us, as the task force said they should, that the money voted in this House for health and post-secondary education, and the associated tax revenue we have given up to the provinces, is in fact spent on these services. That is what the task forced asked us to do.

Mr. Blenkarn: They also asked you not to cut it.

Mr. MacEachen: Those ministers would like to have some input into the planning of progams so that they will reflect, and adjust to, the changing needs of the Canadian economy. It is a fact that we believe our national university system should respond to the needs of our society and our economy. But there is no opportunity, nor has there been in recent years, for any federal minister to participate in any discussions at the council of ministers on these subjects, even though it was clearly understood that this would result from the 1977 negotiations. Provincial ministers have not been prepared to discuss and negotiate our legitimate national concerns about health and education programs.

There is more to this business than money. Money is important, but there is also the necessity for this House to have some assurance that the moneys voted for these purposes are spent on these purposes, and that the universities, which are national institutions, do so. If I may say so personally, it has been a regret of mine that in recent years the universities have appeared more and more to be provincially oriented and drawn more into local and provincial concerns rather than national concerns. To me that would be a rather deplorable development if it continued.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress that the interpretation which several members of the opposition have given of the revenue guarantee compensation element of the established programs financing is completely at odds with what the provinces have been saying.

An hon. Member: It is not at odds with what you were saying.

Mr. MacEachen: In the standing committee and in this House members have argued that the revenue guarantee is an integral part of program spending. It is rather odd, Mr. Speaker, that provincial ministers certainly did not push that point very far in our meetings leading up to this bill. Obviously they wanted to continue the revenue guarantee, but they did not push the argument as strongly as the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald)—

Miss MacDonald: Based on Don Macdonald's statements.

Mr. MacEachen: —that the revenue guarantee was part of programs financing. They did not press it for very good reasons, because they have traditionally maintained that the revenue guarantee should not be considered as a program transfer.

Mr. Chrétien: Right on.

Mr. MacEachen: That is what they have done. At the Premiers' meeting, in Victoria I believe it was, last August, there was issued a joint communiqué. There was an opportunity for the premiers of the ten provinces to tell us what they thought about the revenue guarantee. They listed the contributions coming from the Government of Canada to these programs and deliberately omitted and ignored the revenue guarantee. So when the provinces cannot make the case, when the provinces drop it as a case, when the premiers omit it from federal contributions, why do members opposite persist in trying to be more heroic than even the provincial finance ministers have been?

There has also been the suggestion that we just roll over the EPF for a couple of years. The provinces have made that point several times, and it would be very nice if one could just say we will forget about restraint for a couple of years and roll it over. They made that pitch from the beginning; I believe it was something that could not be accepted. The amendment proposed for the roll over would cost the federal treasury $1.7 billion over the next two years. They were asking me on Thursday to send $1.7 billion more to the provinces over the next two years when we in this Parliament are attempting to exhibit restraint. I find it very odd that members of the opposition, especially the official opposition—who daily berate the Minister of Finance, who daily demand reductions in the deficit—can come joyously on a Thursday afternoon and toss off $1.7 billion without thinking about it, or without relating it to what the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) have said, those stern disciplinarians of the federal treasury. But they have let the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands have her way, and become the bountiful provider of $1.7 billion, not to spend on universities—

• (1730)

Miss MacDonald: You bet!

Mr. MacEachen: —not to spend on post-secondary education. If that were the case, one would have some sympathy, but why spend money on an object which the premiers themselves have said is not part of payments for post-secondary education?

Now, may I turn for a moment to—

Miss MacDonald: You would have to get off that one, fast!

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I like that subject, because hon. members of the opposition are pushing a case which the provinces have not pushed very hard because they know the facts. However, I want to say a word—

Mr. Chrétien: Not like Flora.

Miss MacDonald: Or Don Macdonald.

Mr. MacEachen: —about the population recovery adjustment payments with which I dealt in Part II of the bill. It has been stated that the provisions pertaining to these payments are unfair because they would preclude the possibility of Saskatchewan receiving payments, although that province will be subject to recoverance. I would like to deal with that because, here again, it is important to make it clear that provinces have been fairly treated.

Why did we bring recovery adjustment payments into the bill? We brought them into the bill because of the financial hardship which would be imposed upon the provinces if we did now what has always been the case; namely, if we went ahead with these recoveries. For example, the finance minister of Newfoundland who, I believe, was faced with recoveries of $60 million to $70 million, would certainly find his budget damaged if we insisted on these recoveries. It was in response to that kind of attitude expressed by him, Premier Hatfield, Mr. Matheson, Mr. MacPhail and Mr. Schroeder, that the effect on their budgets was considered and this provision was included.

The population recovery adjustment payments are designed to ease the financial situation of provinces which meet two criteria. First, they must be subject to population related recoveries of part of the equalization paid to them for fiscal years 1980-81 and 1981-82 as a consequence of new population data contained in the June, 1981, census. Second, they must have below standard fiscal capacity in 1982-1983, an indication that normal recovery procedures would strain their financial situation at the time the recovery would commence. The province of Saskatchewan meets the first requirement but not the second. Indeed, recent calculations based upon the new and improved measure of fiscal capacity, which would underline equalization calculations for the next five years, indicate that Saskatchewan at present has a fiscal capacity which is quite comparable to that of British Columbia and which is exceeded only by Alberta.

One reason for Saskatchewan's very high capacity is contained in this very bill. Section 10 of the bill provides for the payment of $273 million of shared federal revenues to Saskatchewan in respect of the oil export charge. That is a very large sum for a province of less than one million people. I am glad that it is benefiting from its resources. This is a new source of revenue for Saskatchewan which will buttress existing revenues from royalties to oil, potash, uranium and other minerals from its rich agricultural-based economy.

I should add in passing that a perusal of the budget tabled by the Saskatchewan minister of finance on March 18 gives no indication that population related recoveries of equalization would strain the public finances of that province. That is why a provision has not been put in the bill in the case of Saskatchewan. It is because its fiscal capacity is such that the recoveries would not strain its public finances.

I know that hon. members have been proposing amendments. It has not been possible to accept these amendments because we are attempting to follow a certain strategy of fiscal restraint. We cannot respond to all the requirements of the provinces. However, we do believe that we have provided for an equitable system. We have provided that the payments under the established programs financing for those vital programs for the Canadian people will grow over the next five years at an average rate of 12 per cent to 13 per cent. In this bill, we have enshrined a system of equalization which, I believe, carries the support of most of the equalization receiving provinces.

Miss MacDonald: Down 4.6 per cent next year!

Mr. MacEachen: Therefore, I am pleased to have been able to participate in this important enterprise. I hope that Bill C-97 will become the law of Canada in time to make the payments to the provinces before they have to re-adjust their budgets as a result of not having these payments at their disposal.

Miss MacDonald: Now explain it to the students.

Mr. MacEachen: Thank you for staying, Flora.

Mr. Blenkarn: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has a minute or two, I wonder if he could perhaps answer a question. Is the minister aware that the figures from the ministry of health relating to all health matters indicate that the federal government at present spends only 47 per cent of the cost, and that with the current reduction of $35 per capita to the provinces by transfer, the federal share of health expenditures will very dramatically decline from 47 per cent to the neighbourhood of 42 per cent or 43 per cent?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the very eloquent and convincing testimony which was given to the committee by the Minister of National Health and Welfare who testified that the removal of the revenue guarantee would not impair the support we have been giving to health and post-secondary education and that it would not impair those obligations we have assumed, which were based on actual cost experience in 1975-1976.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. minister would expand just a little further on the point he made that he had to cut back because provinces were not providing the service through the EPF, particularly at the university level. I heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) make the comment that that was particularly true of Quebec. Many of us have always felt that people in the Atlantic provinces have spent a lot of money educating young people who then came to central Canada, Upper Canada and western Canada. Therefore, what evidence does he have that the comments of the Minister of Justice are correct with regard to areas outside of the province of Quebec that the universities have not been providing an education which has benefited people across the whole country?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, what I was saying—

Miss MacDonald: It's not what you meant.

Mr. MacEachen: —and I think I ought to clear it up, is that in so far as operating expenditures in the field of post-secondary education are concerned, in many cases the Government of Canada is providing more than 50 per cent of the operating expenses. In one university, in one province, it is providing 120 per cent of the operating expenses.

Miss MacDonald: That's not what he's asking.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the purpose of our support for post-secondary education.

Miss MacDonald: That's not what he's asking.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member now asks me what evidence I have to support belief that universities do not have the national orientation which we would like them to have. Let me put it another way. He was asking me why I am concerned that the Government of Canada, through the Secretary of State, for example, has had no opportunity to discuss with the provinces national goals with respect to post-secondary education.

• (1740)

One evidence is objective, namely, that in recent years it has not been possible for a federal minister to sit down with the council of ministers representing all the provincial governments to discuss this whole field—not in recent years. That was discussed at the first ministers' conference, even though when the last negotiations took place it was understood that the federal government would have an input. So that is objective evidence.

If you want to know my subjective attitude, it is that one of the most valuable assets this country has is the university community from coast to coast. They have a very rich contribution to make. I believe that in order to make that rich contribution they must take a national orientation. It is my regret that too frequently they are taking a provincial orientation, and that is understandable in the circumstances because the Government of Canada is virtually excluded from discussions with respect to the goal of post-secondary education.

Mr. Blaikie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) cited the arguments of the provinces, that they did not regard the money attributable to the compensation for termination of the revenue guarantee as money for health care and post-secondary education. I wonder if the Minister could tell us whether he had always agreed with that position or whether at any time he had disagreed with it.

Mr. MacEachen: It was my obligation, Mr. Speaker, when I began the negotiations with the provinces, to examine the evidence that was available as to the role of the revenue guarantee. I do not believe that I had passionate views on the revenue guarantee before I began these negotiations.

Miss MacDonald: Do you have passionate views on anything?

An hon. Member: What about you?

Mr. MacEachen: When I acquired all the information, I concluded that there was a very strong case to be made that the revenue guarantee was not a program-related contribution. I doubt if I am on the record earlier than this on the revenue guarantee.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I listened with a good deal of interest and hope, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) when he was speaking, because coming from the province of Manitoba, of course, we as Members of Parliament feel that the people of Manitoba have more than a passing interest in the legislation that we are dealing with at the present time.

I am disappointed that the Minister of Finance really has not said anything new in the way of alleviating the problem that concerns the people of Manitoba.

The minister, at the conclusion of his speech, said that he hoped that this bill would pass and he was sure the provinces would agree with him. But let us take the situation that you were living in the province of Manitoba and had, over roughly a five-year period, a shortfall in revenues going into a particular area of close to $600 million. That money would have to be made up from somewhere else.

If we are looking at a recession period in terms of the economy not being good, I do not think you would need to be any kind of a financial or constitutional or federal-provincial expert to know that a province such as Manitoba would be adversely affected and very seriously affected in the quality possible in health care over the next number of years. Quite certainly a potential is there at least to cause the quality to deteriorate significantly.

The situation is felt with such intensity in the province of Manitoba that the opposition literally has joined forces in terms of opposing and trying to put forward a positive voice and a positive position to the Minister of Finance. As far as the Manitoba Members of Parliament are concerned, one has to question the strength of the argument, or whether there was an argument at all. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael) and also the hon. member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), were trying to convince the minister, the parliamentary secretary and the finance officials, of what will become a growing need over the next number of years for money going into a province such as Manitoba for health and post-secondary education.

I am not going to speak for a great length of time, Mr. Speaker, because like many others in this chamber I am not an expert in this particular area. I know one thing, Mr. Speaker, I know that when you are short of a substantial amount of money, especially in an important area like health care, there will be problems. That is the kind of thing that concerned and disappointed us because the Minister of Finance did not come in with something he could have done, that is, basically, an amendment to allay the fears of particular provinces such as Manitoba.

I do not often quote a provincial minister of finance. I cannot ever remember quoting a provincial New Democratic Party finance minister in the House of Commons. The minister of finance for the province of Manitoba has, I believe, made some pretty substantial representations to the government in Ottawa. He has put the point forward in a very responsive and straightforward manner when he commented on the whole question of the five-province standard and the so-called representative average standard toward which the government is moving. He made a point—and I think it should be made again here in this House—that it is inconsistent with the equalization principle, which is really soon to become a permanent part of the Constitution. The Constitution resolution is being put into force, I assume, and we will have a chance to take part in the ceremonies a few days from now. The Constitution resolution talks about the whole question of equalization, and says:

> Parliament and the Government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

That is not going to take place, under this legislation, for some provinces. For example, under Bill C-97 the impact on the provinces between 1982-83 to 1986-87 will be negative, and in the case of Manitoba, it will lose close to $3,000 per family, or $2,786 to be exact. That money has to be made up somewhere, or else the standards will drop. It is as simple as that.

That is the whole essence of the disappointment I feel this afternoon in listening to the Minister of Finance, hoping he would have an amendment or would be more constructive, rather than saying something that most of us in the House have known for a long time. Certainly the government of Manitoba has already included the figures that he put into his statement this afternoon, and have already put into their projections the shortfall that the government of the province of Manitoba is going to incur. That shortfall will be substantially higher than that of most other provinces. In fact, this $2,700 figure, close to $3,000, that I mentioned earlier, will be five times the average cost for the have provinces and will be 50 per cent higher than the average for the have-not provinces. With 4.2 per cent of the national population and 3.7 per cent of the national output, Manitoba will bear about 10.2 per cent of the net cost of the federal cutbacks. I cannot reinforce enough the fact that this is not fair. The have-not provinces bear about 71.6 per cent of the cutbacks, compared with 43.5 per cent of the population, and 36 per cent of the national output. In contrast, the have provinces bear about 20 per cent of the cutbacks, compared with 50 per cent of the population, and 63 per cent of the national output. It does not make sense. That is not equalization. It is not fair.

Over the next five years, the percentage shares of the equalization payments to Manitoba will plunge by 1.7 per cent. Under the expiring agreement, they would have increased by 1.9 per cent. Obviously those of us who are from the province of Manitoba would like all that we could obtain from the federal government. But surely there must be a happy medium. There must be a meeting area between what members of Parliament representing constituents of Manitoba would like and what the federal government is doing at the present time. The federal government has not found any middle of the road solution in terms of the cost-sharing part of this legislation.

The minister and members of this House know that the very provinces which have little financial room to manoeuvre are receiving the biggest federal cutbacks. That is one of the great problems of Manitoba and of some of the maritime provinces. The economic indicator figures from 1976 to 1981 show Manitoba as the lowest of any province in all three categories of domestic production, employment and investment growth, yet Manitoba is allocated a projected equalization growth rate only slightly more than half the national average. It is 3.27 per cent compared to 6.98 per cent.

Even with those figures, we were not able to convince the federal government to loosen the purse strings and to look at the situation in a more realistic manner. Manitoba simply does not have the resources to absorb a financial blow of this magnitude without the detrimental impact being felt at some time by every resident of Manitoba, whether it is in the north, in Flin Flon, Churchill, The Pas or Thompson, the central part of the province, the southern part, Winnipeg or Brandon. The impact will be felt and will increase over the length of time that this legislation continues to be in effect.

Manitoba just does not have the financial capability to sustain that kind of financial blow which the federal government is trying to impose upon it. Such action by the federal government simply does not make sense. Under the cutbacks, the provinces with the greatest need for development of their economic activity are being rendered the most incapable of generating a particular capability because of what is happening with this bill.

During the five year lifetime of the act, the federal cutback of funds to Manitoba will amount to about $719 million. I repeat, the cost will be about $2,800 per family of four. I stress again that this comes at a time of recession, of present and presumably continuing high interest rates, of poor export markets, and at a time when not only Manitoba but all provinces are experiencing a greater number of business bankruptcies than we have seen for a long time.

Manitobans simply cannot afford to pay increased provincial taxes to cover the federal government's shortfall. The money simply is not there. The economic activity is not there.

This situation not only exists in Manitoba but across the country, in some provinces it is to a lesser extent and in others to a greater extent. In the case of the maritime provinces, the situation is more dramatic. These proposals will implement a dramatic decline in real terms of federal support for the basic programs throughout Canada. I do not believe that this act is a product of a substantiated policy.

It appears from discussions with the Minister of Finance, the Manitoba minister of finance and some officials that the policy was not thought out. As I mentioned before, there should be a way for the government and members of the House from Manitoba to find an area between what is proposed in this bill and what is wanted in order to maintain the kind of health and educational standards Manitobans are entitled to. There should be a year in which to make a trade-off. Obviously that was not to be.

With the federal government pulling back in terms of health care and education, there is the danger of a checkerboard system in this country for health and medical care and education. The possibility exists where the wealthier provinces will benefit. Obviously the western provinces other than Manitoba could have a more sophisticated and up to date health care facility in relation to research, infrastructure and technology than does Manitoba and some of the maritime provinces.

When one looks at the whole program, not only in terms of health care, one wonders why the government went in the direction it did. Virtually every group has been opposed to this part of the bill, including the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. The Economic Council of Canada did not have much to say that was positive about the method or the direction in which the government is going. The Canadian Council on Social Development, the Business Council on National Issues and most other groups in this country are concerned about the direction in which the government is going. They are concerned about the situation developing—a patchwork situation—with some provinces having better medical components than others.

Finally, we are disappointed that the Minister of Finance did not see fit to address some problems which are going to be very real in this country for years to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): For the sake of the following occupant of the chair, may I ask whether it is the intention of the hon. member to continue his remarks at eight o'clock, or has he concluded his remarks?

Mr. Murta: I have concluded, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-97, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces.

As you will know from having heard the debate up to the present time, the bill is intended to carry out a number of functions. Its primary purpose is to extend for another five years programs in an act under which major federal-provincial transfer payments are made—specifically the established programs financing plan and the equalization program. The EPF will be amended by terminating its revenue guarantee component and thereby substantially reducing the federal contribution under established programs financing over the next five years.

On the question of equalization, a different formula is being introduced to replace that which has been in place since 1977.

I wish to focus my remarks on the EPF and equalization-related provisions in the context of the Atlantic provinces in general and of my own province of Prince Edward Island in particular. I would like to begin by discussing the established programs financing plan. I have been keenly interested for some time now in this whole issue dealing with arrangements under established programs financing for the financing of post-secondary education, medicare and hospitilization, but my interest was sharpened greatly when the government signalled in its October 28, 1980, budget that it intended to realize substantial net savings in the social development envelope.

Let me quote from that budget, which was a little less infamous, and perhaps a little less offensive, than the recent one. It was stated in the October 1980 budget that:

> The government intends to achieve net savings in this area—

That is the social development envelope.

> —to help finance initiatives in other envelopes. Because of the statutory nature of much of the spending in this envelope, savings are not assumed to begin until 1982-83. Savings are expected to include reductions in federal transfers to provinces relating to areas coming under provincial jurisdiction. In part, savings may be redeployed within the envelope.

The reason why I quoted that statement from the budget is that it was the first real signal of the federal government's intentions which have been expressed in the bill we are debating tonight. The cat was partially let out of the bag with the October 28, 1980, budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). If the cat was let out of the bag a little bit in October, 1980, the cat was swiftly kicked out of the bag as a result of a statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) during an interview with the CBC on November 8, 1980, just a few days after the minister brought down his budget. In that interview, the Minister of National Health and Welfare made it clear that the cutbacks to which reference was made in the budget would not be in the health care area. She made it very clear by implication that the federal government's net savings in the social development envelope would be achieved at the expense of the other part of the established programs financing package, namely post-secondary education. The educational system in Canada, especially the post-secondary educational system, is an easy target and a convenient whipping boy for any government which wants to cut expenditures without incurring the wrath of the Canadian public. By its very nature, the Canadian higher education system has too often been docile. Consequently, the Minister of Finance obviously thought that he could slash federal expenditures in that area, where there would not be enormous organized opposition. Of course, health care was not to be spared. But, the fact is that it was in the education area, according to the minister of health, where the government expected to achieve most of its savings. Unfortunately, people's worst suspicions have been realized in Bill C-97.

Let us look for a moment at the established programs financing provisions in the bill. EPF is a major federal-provincial transfer payments program. It is designed to provide funding from the federal treasury for post-secondary education, hospitalization and medicare. The existing EPF arrangements, which are now coming to an end, were set in place in April of 1977. Annual block payments were made to each of the provinces from the federal treasury. Half were in the form of tax transfers; there were various arrangements between the federal government and the provinces in taxation, whereby the federal government created a little room for the provinces to raise money for EPF purposes. The other half under EPF was in the form of cash. Under the 1977 program, which has continued to the present, no conditions were attached to the money intended for post-secondary education. About a third of the government's EPF money was earmarked for post-secondary education. There was, however, no obligation on the part of the provinces to spend the money for post-secondary education, once it was received by the provinces from the federal government. In other words, there was merely an understanding that it would be spent on education.

I have no doubt that the federal government—and to this extent I will give it its due—is right when it argues that the total federal share of the cost of post-secondary education in Canada has increased markedly since 1977. For example, in 1977-78, the federal share was 65 per cent of total provincial expenditures for universities. In 1980-81, this figure had increased to 76 per cent. The federal government may well have a case—I suspect it does—for saying it is paying a disproportionate share of the total cost of post-secondary education in Canada. The government is probably also right when it argues it is not getting its fair share of the credit for these expenditures. The provinces are doling out the money, having received much of it from the federal treasury. The people, the electorate, see the provinces on the front line and the federal government taking a back seat when it comes to the allocation of political credit. Finally, the federal government is probably right when it argues that it is having too little direct say in how those expenditures are actually made.

However, having conceded those points, I think it is just not good enough to argue on the basis of them that we need a whole new federal-provincial fiscal transfer arrangement of the kind contemplated in Bill C-97. There are legitimate national concerns about post-secondary education. One is that there be maximum accessibility. There is a legitimate national concern about bilingualism. There is a legitimate concern about Canadian studies, manpower planning and research and development. Of course the federal government has a legitimate role to play in the financing of post-secondary education, even though education technically resides within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Such considerations, however, are hardly a justification for the fundamental way in which the government is trying to alter the funding system under Bill C-97.

Of particular concern to me and my colleagues is the planned elimination of the revenue guarantee. The revenue guarantee was a means of compensating the provinces for revenue lost following the 1972 federal tax reforms. Those reforms, after the Carter royal commission reported, would have had the effect of reducing provincial revenues, unless certain compensating provisions were made. So in 1972 the revenue guarantee was instituted, and then in 1977 it became part of the established programs financing parcel. The revenue guarantee was unconditional in the eyes of the provinces. The money was to go into the consolidated revenues of the provinces to support all their programs, and not just higher education, medicare and hospitalization. It was to support all programs right across the board. However, even though that was true, the provinces would never have agreed to the 1977 established programs financing formula in the absence of the revenue guarantee. So the two are very much an integral part of one another. In that sense they are inseparable. But now the federal government, through Bill C-97, is seeking to separate the inseparable. The revenue guarantee is to be abolished. Future contributions by the federal government to or established programs financing are to be calculated without any reference to the revenue guarantee. The result will be a substantial reduction in the total capacity of the provinces to fund health and education.

In this House, and outside the House in forums across the land, the Minister of Finance insists that federal contributions to EPF programs will increase. He has told me, in response to at least five questions on the floor of the House of Commons in the Oral Question Period, that the federal contribution to EPF will increase about 12 per cent per year. He is right if he ignores the revenue guarantee. But, reading between the lines, we find that what he is actually saying is that he will increase funding 12 per cent per year on a much narrower base, the base being shorn of the revenue guarantee, which again was really integral to the established programs financing. The minister is completely ignoring this point. The Minister of Finance is deceiving the Canadian people. I am not saying that is necessarily the result of chicanery. The effect, however, is that the Canadian people are being misled on this important point. There will be a 12 per cent increase per year, or in that neighbourhood, in established programs financing but on a much smaller foundation. The minister's calculations are based strictly on program-directed grants, ignoring totally the sister transfer arrangement, the revenue guarantee. Over the next five years, the federal government will slash EPF by $5.7 billion because of the elimination of the revenue guarantee. In 1982-83, federal savings will be $915 million. That is taking into account the program directed part of established programs financing. When we take into account planned increases for established programs financing per se, together with the elimination of revenue guarantee, the actual cash payments to the provinces under EPF in 1982-83 will be some $400 million less than in 1981-82.

When the budget of November 12 was brought down, the Minister of Finance said that those reductions would be offset partially by increased provincial revenues contemplated by the tax measures in the budget. He predicted a net loss of $1.9 billion over five years. Well, Sir, on November 23, just 11 days after the minister brought his budget down, he had to revise his calculations. He admitted an administrative error of $662 million. I do not know how a government, especially this government, can justify administrative errors of such a magnitude, but that is beside the point. The fact is, the minister conceded there was a $662 million error in his calculations.

Then on December 18 he came into the House and announced at least 20 major transitional changes, as he called them, to his November 12 budget. Some of them, probably most of them, had the effect of restoring benefits to the taxpayer. That restoration in turn had the effect of reducing both federal and provincial revenues originally projected in the budget. So much uncertainty now surrounds the budget, so many changes are being made, and there is such confusion about it, that we still do not know where the provinces will stand once the ways and means motions are presented and voted upon. We do know, though, that the provinces will have a shortfall of at least $5.7 billion because of the elimination of the revenue guarantee.

If I may be allowed to focus on the implication of all this on my own province for a moment, I would point out that the new arrangement means a net loss to Prince Edward Island under established programs financing. In 1981-82 Prince Edward Island received $45 million in EPF, proper, and $3 million under the revenue guarantee part, for a total of $48 million. Under the new system, with the revenue guarantee abolished, Prince Edward Island can expect no more than $47 million in 1982-83, $54 million in 1983-84 and $61 million in 1984-85. These projections do not even keep pace with the 12 per cent inflation rate we have had in the country. These amounts will have dire consequences for my tiny province and, indeed, for every province.

At present, the federal government pays in excess of $3 billion for post-secondary education across the country. In 1979-80 $1.6 billion of the total was in cash payments and $1.4 billion in tax points. The $3 billion represents between 65 per cent and 100 per cent of the total spent on post-secondary education in the provinces, from one province to another. In the Atlantic provinces the federal contribution to higher education is about 100 per cent of the total. In my province it is certainly close to that, largely due to a lack of alternative revenue sources.

When the federal government starts to cut back in the area of post-secondary education, the Atlantic provinces are especially vulnerable. In fact, education across Canada will suffer. The provinces, starved of federal funding, will have to squeeze their universities and colleges even harder than they are already squeezed today. Operating grants to post-secondary institutions have grown by only about 41 per cent since 1976, but the consumer price index has jumped 54 per cent in the same period, so the grants are not even keeping up with inflation. Student enrolment has jumped by 70,000 to 630,000 at the university level since 1976. Universities and community colleges are, therefore, being compelled to do much more with much less. The poorer provinces are being hit the hardest.

I need not remind you, Mr. Speaker, that shared-cost programs, almost by definition, are designed to ensure that people across Canada have access to equivalent facilities. The idea is that people are not to be disadvantaged because they lived in Manitoba, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, say, in terms of receiving some minimal level of services. That principle has now been sacrificed by the government on the high altar of the greed of the Minister of Finance.

Alberta, for example, has all kinds of resource revenue. I do not begrudge them that revenue, but I simply state that the province has the wherewithal to roll with the federal government's punches. As the federal government retrenches in areas such as post-secondary education, Alberta can make adjustments. British Columbia, too, has enormous resources revenue and other wealth. Thus, to some extent it can make adjustments, as can Saskatchewan. Those provinces can adjust as the purse strings are pulled tighter. By contrast, the four Atlantic provinces will be left high and dry to fend for themselves.

The total post-secondary education system in the maritimes costs about $260 million annually to operate, of which $190 million or about 73 per cent is paid by the federal government through transfer arrangements. Of that, $120 million or 46 per cent is in cash transfers. The Atlantic provinces, therefore, are singularly vulnerable to any federal government belt tightening.

I hasten to point out that while we in the Atlantic provinces are particularly disadvantaged in that respect, all provinces are affected. I ask myself what is gained by the efforts of the federal government to lower its deficit at the expense of post-secondary education. What is gained by the federal government's efforts to reduce deficits at the expense of any of the major areas in the social development envelope? All the government is doing is transferring its own deficit to the provinces. That is what I call Mickey Mouse economics, Mr. Speaker.

The total public debt is what is important in controlling inflation. It is not important whether the debt is at the federal level, the provincial level or the municipal level. It is the total public debt that fuels and inflames inflation. Transferring public debt from one level of government to the other accomplishes absolutely nothing. It is a cosmetic act. Already, because of the federal and provincial retrenchment of financing for post-secondary education, class sizes have had to be increased, library hours at universities and community colleges have had to be cut, research equipment has become increasingly obsolete and many programs have had to be eliminated or truncated. In Ontario, serious consideration is being given to at least the possibility of closing down four universities and four community colleges. That action may never happen. Yet the very fact that it is being considered reflects the extent of the problem.

Mr. LeBlanc: Scare tactics—that is what it is.

Mr. McMillan: Every department, from engineering to liberal arts, is affected; none is insulated. In the process, the quality of education is being allowed to suffer.

One of the things that particularly concerns me is the question of accessibility. Cuts will make it impossible for a large number of children from middle and lower-income families to go to our colleges and universities. Already, a disproportionate number of students from poorer families is exluded from higher education. New funding arrangements given expression in Bill C-97 will make the situation worse. Universities will be forced to increase fees, perhaps massively. There is a direct link between tuition and accessibility, Mr. Speaker. The Stanford Research Institute established that link beyond a shadow of a doubt in 1975. In the Atlantic provinces most families fall in the lower-income category. In Prince Edward Island, the average family income is only about $18,000 per year. If the provinces, because of cutbacks at the federal level, are forced to reduce funding to universities, and if the universities, in turn, are forced to increase tuition fees, the burden will fall most heavily on the poorer people of the country.

I want to conclude on a note about equalization. I am convinced that, however bad the situation is because of established programs financing arrangements being planned, sunshine will not be shed on the situation due to proposed equalization provisions. Since 1967-68, payments have been based on a national average of fiscal capacity among provinces. Excluded from the calculations was half the revenue from non-renewable resources; excluded as well were all municipal taxes. Any province which fell below a national level so defined was given an equalization payment. The November budget proposed that a substantial change be made in the old formula; payments were to be made on the basis of the Ontario standard. I argued vehemently in the House against the Ontario standard because the Conference Board, for example, had projected that Ontario in the years to come would have the slowest rates of growth of any province. To hitch the wagon of the have-not provinces to Ontario's star would jeopardize, in all likelihood, the sources of revenue of the provinces under equalization.

I welcome the fact that the minister saw the light and abandoned the Ontario standard. Now with a new formula based on a five-provinces average, he has introduced the capacity of five provinces to raise revenue. The new formula includes all revenue from natural resources and municipal taxes. It excludes Alberta and all Atlantic provinces from the five-province average. The new formula provides for a modification, namely, a ceiling and a floor. Both are helpful. I commend the minister for including them. But I believe that the total effect will be potentially disastrous for provinces like my own, and especially Newfoundland and Nova Scotia because as oil and gas revenues in those provinces come on stream their equalization payments will be reduced correspondingly. That provision amounts to virtually a 100 per cent tax on resource revenue. It cannot help but build into the system a disincentive for the have-not provinces to become self-reliant.

At first blush Prince Edward Island stands to gain. We do not have resource revenues or many municipalities. The inclusion of revenue from those sources has the tendency of defining Prince Edward Island as poorer than would otherwise be the case and therefore to strengthen its position in terms of receiving payments under equalization. The statistics also look encouraging. For example, in 1981-82 we will get $103 million; in 1982-83 we will get $124 million; in 1983-84 we will get $140 million. By 1986-87, Prince Edward Island will receive $189 million.

The statistics do not tell the entire story, however. The problem is that Prince Edward Island, the other Atlantic provinces, Manitoba and Quebec have become too dependent upon transfer payments because the government does not realize the value of helping them to become self-reliant. Instead of giving provinces an opportunity to develop their manufacturing sector, they have been weaned on transfer payments. I think the figures bear this out. Total federal transfers to governments, to persons and to businesses in Prince Edward Island will represent 51 per cent of the island's gross domestic product in 1981-82. By contrast, for all Canada total federal transfers will represent only 13 per cent of gross domestic product in the same year. Prince Edward Island receives the highest per capita equalization payments of any province in Canada at the governmental level. In terms of transfer payments to individuals last year, a total of $52.9 million was paid in unemployment insurance benefits, or an average of $426 for every man, woman and child on Prince Edward Island. We have become very dependent on transfer arrangements. However well structured they may be, and no matter what improvements might be introduced, the basic point is that the federal government is relying too much on the transfer approach to economic development at the expense of preventing the Atlantic provinces and region from becoming to a degree self-reliant.

I should like to stress a point which I made in my speech on the Constitution on October 20, 1980. I made the point then—and I stick to it now—that such regional economic servitude is not exclusively the result of neglect or of accident. I went on to say that one cannot overlook the fact that it has served the interests of central Canada to have the Atlantic provinces as a ready market for their manufactured goods, rather than engaged in manufacturing themselves. National policies, from protective tariffs to freight rates, have consistently favoured Ontario and Quebec—the very provinces whose votes have enabled the Liberal Party of Canada to govern the country for most of this century.

I want to conclude by quoting a former premier of Prince Edward Island, Angus MacLean, who said:

> Could it be that the central government only responds "in the national interest" when those who are asked to make concessions are minorities in the House of Commons, but never when those expected to make concessions are the numerical majorities? Could it be that, if we had a truly federal state, in which all partners had a more significant voice, national policies might more truly reflect the interests of all provinces and, hence, the entire country?

To my mind Bill C-97, especially with its proposed changes to the established programs financing and equalization arrangements, perpetuates the same faulty approach. That is why I for one oppose the bill, and I wish to do so vigorously.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) is anxiously awaiting my words of wisdom. We always seem to be in the House together when I make a speech condemning the government, quite properly, for its oversights.

Again I stand in the House on another bill as I have done several times before. Bill C-97 has received first reading and second reading in principle when some very major defects were pointed out on all sides of the House, government backbenchers included. Then the bill went into committee stage where amendments were suggested and some very good reasons for them were given. Report stage having been finished, we are at a point where the government has accepted absolutely none of the recommendations or the amendments of my party or of the NDP. It overlooked and blocked, through its caucus process, changes which its own members would have suggested. The government permitted only one amendment which deals with the province of Manitoba. It was so apparent that it was brought to the attention of the government by members on this side and by the provinces. The government had no choice but to go along with it because the unfairness for the people of Manitoba was just too enormous to overlook. But, sir, the principle still stands: the process is defective and will remain so until we reform the parliamentary rules so that the committees can have much more power and so that bills and laws which flow from here are the result of a process in which all regions have shared and which reflect the compromises necessary in a huge land like this.

We have a separatist government in Quebec and a separatist in the Alberta legislature. The complaints, even in Quebec, when you get down to it, are basically that they feel the decisions flowing out of the House are not a sufficient political compromise to enable them to live with them. Is that not the way we are in this country, Mr. Speaker? Until the advent of this government, our politicians have always been able to come up with a compromise which people are prepared to live with. Read the history of Sir John A. Macdonald and the compromises he had to make. He wanted a strong unitary state, but in order for the system to work he had to give and agree to a confederation where the provinces had power. He made that compromise. If you look at the administrations of Louis St. Laurent and John Diefenbaker, you will find that they were prepared to let the regions have a legitimate view. This government is no longer doing that, and I think that is why we have a separatist government in Quebec and a separatist elected in the Alberta legislature.

I gather, Mr. Speaker, that this statute will apply for the next five years. The one clear fact which flows from it is that starting this year the provinces will get less cash for the next five years than they did during the last five years. The government has argued vociferously that that is not so; it is just removing a revenue guarantee which should not be applied to health care and post-secondary education. Sir, the fact of the matter is that there is a cutback, and the members opposite, who never get the true data from their briefing agencies, should turn to Chapter 1, page 32 of the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983. Under the heading "Hospital Insurance", "National Health and Welfare", you find that this year they will transfer $3,985.2 million; last year it was $4,273.2 million. The net change was a drop of $288 million. On that same page, under "post-secondary education", we find that payments have dropped from $1,729 million last year to $1,611 million this year, a drop of $181.2 million. They try to justify it by saying it was a revenue guarantee in 1971. The fact of the matter is that $469 million less will go to the provinces this year. What that means is that certain provinces will be hurt more than others because, as you know very well, provinces are very much like people; they have different fiscal capacities and different natural resources, just as people have different talents.

We find, Mr. Speaker, that British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan are financially flush at this time. They have a strong people, infrastructure and resource base upon which they are building. However, the provinces east of Saskatchewan are in some pretty deep deficit positions, as is the federal government. How can we expect the province of Prince Edward Island, for example, to handle its share of that $469 million cutback? Even if it is only $5 million or $6 million, where will that province get the money? The real question is one of fiscal capacity and which level of government can best cope with deficits. Clearly the federal government has the best fiscal capacity, and the reason is simple. The federal government can tax all the people and corporations across this huge country. It has exclusive jurisdiction in taxing the resources of the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and that vast land of the Arctic Islands. In addition, they have the offshore areas of both our coasts. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, it has an enormous fiscal capacity as compared to Prince Edward Island with its 122,000 people and its agricultural economy.

The government claims, Mr. Speaker, that the revenue guarantee is the reason it is cutting back. Let me tell you about that revenue guarantee. In 1971, when the then minister of finance, Edgar Benson, brought in tax reform there was great uncertainty as a result of the Carter report. Because of that uncertainty when they signed the agreement in 1971 for fiscal relations applying from 1972 to 1977, the then minister of finance said to the provinces: we will put in this revenue guarantee so that you will not suffer any dramatic negative effects from the new taxation system.

As it turned out, the new system was more harmful to the provinces than the federal government had said it would be, and they had to make a transfer to the provinces under the revenue guarantee. In 1976, with regard to the agreement which would apply from 1977 to 1982, there were discussions about the whole basis of the agreement. The two sides had their respective positions and they simply negotiated until they came up with the 1977 agreement.

During these negotiations the provinces wanted to have four tax points and a certain amount of cash, but the federal government did not agree. They negotiated until the federal government made an offer of $7.60 per capita plus one tax point in lieu of the revenue guarantee. The provinces accepted the offer and the revenue guarantee effectively came to an end. In the yearly transfers from that point on there was no mention at all of the revenue guarantee. Indeed, as further proof of that, Donald Macdonald said in the House that the revenue guarantee had been negotiated away. In addition, the cheques came not from the Department of Finance, as they had from 1972 to 1976, but came in fact from the then minister of national health and welfare for medicare, and the then secretary of state for post-secondary education. That was for the period ending in 1981.

So we then come to a new agreement for 1982-87, and suddenly the federal government says it is going to cut back and is going to take out the revenue guarantee. It skipped back to 1971, ignoring completely the agreement negotiated in 1976, and ignoring the statement by Donald Macdonald that the revenue guarantee had ceased to exist. What kind of a government would do that? I mean, it seems perverse for a government to break its word, to break an agreement and to use false reasons. That should not be done to the Canadian people. If the government wanted to cut back, why did it not simply and honestly tell Canadians that it had a deficit which it could not handle, that it would therefore cut back, and that it would have to be picked up by the provinces? The government should at least face the problem directly rather than come up with some peculiar and dishonest reason.

I feel strongly about that because I come from the province of Alberta. In 1971, when the international price of oil was rising, the treasurer for the province of Alberta came down and looked at the situation and held discussions with the finance minister. One day they sat together and discussed the whole business of energy. They thought they had an agreement, but the next day the federal minister of energy stood in this House and unilaterally put on an export oil tax. That action by the federal government was totally deceitful. It broke the verbal agreement which had been reached, and broke the spirit of trust between the new government of Alberta and the federal government. The next time they sat down to negotiate the gas agreement—

Mr. Cullen: What about the royalties?

Mr. Thacker: —the province of Alberta said to the federal government, "Look, we cannot trust your word. Therefore, we must have this in writing". So they negotiated an agreement on natural gas. It was reduced to writing, they signed it, they sealed it and—

Mr. Cullen: You don't believe that!

Mr. Thacker: —24 days later, Mr. Gillespie, the former minister of energy, stood in the House and unilaterally repudiated an agreement and totally changed things around. Therefore, one cannot believe the federal government's word.

Mr. Cullen: What about the royalties? One-eighth to 45 per cent. What about that? It happened overnight.

Mr. Thacker: I will tell the hon. member about those royalties, and I will tell him how much the people of Alberta are getting per gallon of gasoline as compared with the federal government, which has no right to it at all but is just using it for ulterior motives. Will the federal government share its royalty from the Northwest Territories with everyone else?

Mr. Cullen: All the way! You've got it, Blaine!

Mr. Thacker: The fact is that there is a lower base from which the provinces will receive money, and that will hurt them, particularly the Atlantic provinces.

I would like to deal for a minute with some of the comments made by my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He seemed to be levelling a criticism at this party because we stress that the deficit must be brought under control. He seems to think that because we want the deficit reduced, we are somehow attacking the principles of medicare.

However, nothing could be further from the truth. I challenge the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill to find one speech in which anyone from this party has ever attacked the principle of medicare. Indeed, he went on to say that the doctors had come in—

Mr. Blaikie: I didn't say that!

Mr. Thacker: —and were challenging medicare.

Mr. Blaikie: You are being overly defensive! I didn't say that!

Mr. Thacker: It is not correct that the doctors are challenging medicare. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill sat on the task force which went across the country, as did I, and in every case the doctors came before it and said, "We are in favour of medicare". They went on to say that there were great problems with medicare. Nonetheless not only did they say they were in favour of the principle, they also went on to point out that the people of Canada were getting a bad shake because they were not getting enough health care. They said that the line-ups at their offices were enormously long the line-ups at the hospitals were enormously long and the line-ups at the emergency wards were long. The doctors were fighting for a better form of medicare and pointed out that they were grossly underfinanced.

There is no doubt as to the position of the NDP. It agrees that there should be no cutback on government spending and that the deficit should therefore be increased. I want to examine that because I submit to Your Honour that we now have a deficit as a result of the Liberal-NDP coalition over the past 14 years—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: —which has taken the nation into this enormous debt position. This coalition is now hurting the very people it purports to support. Tell me, Your Honour, are the senior citizens in this country better off tonight than they were ten years ago? Are the poor people in this country better off tonight than they were ten years ago? The truth is that they are not better off. The reason they are not better off is that the deficit will come back to haunt them.

Let us compare the situation now with that of 1968 when we were clearly a unified nation. We were coming out of Expo 67. We were building this great country north of the forty-ninth parallel. Where are we today? Quebec has elected a separatist government, Alberta has now elected a separatist member and the Western Canada Concept is growing by leaps and bounds. We had a balanced budget, but now we have yearly deficits of $14 billion to $15 billion. We had a national debt which was $3 billion to $4 billion, but it is now $140 billion. When one looks at all of the accounts of this country, one finds that some $17 billion is taken just to service that debt. That has dramatic ramifications. We must ask, is that $17 billion helping the poor? No, it is not. That $17 billion is concentrated in the hands of people with real wealth. We are therefore becoming a class society. Within a decade, we will have a class of incredibly rich people and a huge class of incredibly poor people, as in India.

An hon. Member: That's the Conservatives!

Mr. Thacker: At the same time that we have this tremendous deficit, with too many dollars chasing too few goods, we settle on land. What does that lead to? That leads to classes of landlords and serfs, and it takes us a step back, 900 years back into history, into feudalism. That is what happens when there is a socialist government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: —because it does not respond to the real interests of people.

An hon. Member: Conservatism.

An hon. Member: Go back to school!

Mr. Thacker: Members of the NDP are really upset tonight. They are finding that as they go out to talk to the people, the people are beginning to say, "Look, you are the guys who offered us something for nothing. It is great for a few weeks, but then the bill comes in." The socialist coalition has been offering all sorts of socialist programs. It has been telling people that they can have the low capitalist taxes and saying, "It's all right, folks. We will just borrow the difference under the table." That is what the coalition is doing, and now the cost of servicing those debts amounts to $20 billion.

Mr. Blaikie: Is medicare a socialist program?

Mr. Thacker: It is evident that socialism is going its full length when a government nationalizes this and nationalizes that. However, in tonight's newspaper it is reported that in Czechoslovakia the pure socialists are saying that it is not working.

Mr. Blaikie: Point of order. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) would submit to a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) accept a question?

Mr. Thacker: Well, Mr. Speaker, at the end of my speech, if the hon. member is prepared to let me go beyond the 40 minutes of allotted time, I am sure—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: —that I will, because this government and its little red rump over there are so afraid. But it will take 40 minutes, I am sure, to set forth even a couple of my points. But I will do it any time.

An hon. Member: Can you count?

Mr. Thacker: Oh, they are something for nothing people. What did we have in 1968 with respect to hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education? In 1968, there were solid, worth-while programs. They were there at a time when the nation could afford them because we had balanced budgets. What do we have now with a deficit of $140 billion requiring $17 billion just to service it? It is necessary that the federal government cut back. Even the old socialist Liberal government across the way is having to cut back, just as the governments in Britain, in Russia and in all of the other states are having to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: The hens are coming home to roost, and so are the roosters.

Mr. Thacker: What would be the PC way? We believe that the deficit can be cut while still maintaining these programs. Let us take a look at some of these great socialist corporations which have been put into place. The CNR is a source of great pride to the socialist left.

Mr. Blaikie: Tell us about Air Canada!

Mr. Thacker: Why is it that if the CNR, a great socialist corporation, is so good, the government has to write off over $800 million every few years?

Mr. Blaikie: Because we inherited it from the private companies that didn't make any money. Read a little history.

Mr. Thacker: What about the Atomic Energy Control Board? There is a beauty that the socialists like. Why do we have to write off over $800 million for AECL? Why do we have over 400 Crown corporations? Here is the point on these Crown corporation. We know that in private industry, of the 400 corporations created this year at least 50 per cent in the normal course would have to drop away because of inefficiency and bad management. Has one Crown corporation ever disappeared? Not one. Because they can come back and get their nose in the public trough, they never drop away, just as there is no recognition of a socialist government.

• (2100)

An hon. Member: What about socialism?

Mr. Thacker: Look at Air Canada. What about Air Canada? I see it paid a dividend of $13.5 million.

Mr. Deans: What about Ontario Hydro? Tell us about that one.

Mr. Thacker: Exactly. How efficient is Ontario Hydro? How responsible is it, with its enormous problem with acid rain? Why is that so, Mr. Speaker? Because it is buying Pennsylvania coal that has 3 per cent to 5 per cent sulphur. That is why. I come winging in from Alberta and I deal with a Crown corporation and I say: "Why don't you buy Alberta coal that has 0.5 per cent sulphur? Look at what that would do for national unity. It would solve your acid rain problem. We could have more tracks, more trains, more cars. We could have mines in Alberta. Would that Crown corporation respond? No, no, it would rather bring in high-sulphur coal.

An hon. Member: That is the socialist toy.

Mr. Thacker: Is it these Crown corporations that are not responsive? The great "commies" to my left, why don't they listen to one of their own? I have just attended a two-day conference. Why don't they listen, why don't they read the speech—I will send it to them, it is by Mr. Richard Lipsey, a very highly recognized socialist. He went to the United Kingdom. He teaches at Queen's University. He spent 17 years in England. He made the socialist experiment. And Richard Lipsey came back and said: "After 17 years of socialism, I am still a socialist, but I am convinced that we have to get back to the market economy". Every incident in the U.K., over 17 years of Crown corporations getting involved and of the government getting involved, has led to disastrous results. The simple conclusion is that we have to get back and let people themselves create the wealth.

That brings me to the point about taxation, Mr. Speaker. How can we let people be creative if we in Parliament and the provincial legislatures are taking all the money from them?

A slave, Mr. Speaker, is simply someone who has lost all his human rights and all of whose decisions with respect to his human rights are made by someone else. A slave in terms of economics is simply someone who is taxed 100 per cent. That takes all of the economic rent from that person, the decisions on how that money is to be spent, are made by someone else. But then, look at what we are doing here. What are we taking from the citizen, for instance, or the miners whom the members of the NDP try to represent? That includes the man who gets black lung disease and dies at 45 years of age. Have we left him his money to decide what to do with it? No, we are taking over 55 per cent. So he is 55 per cent a slave because there is too much government, whereas this party here, would leave that man and that woman and those workers and let the millions and millions of individuals have the liberty to spend that money. We believe that would lead to a wiser result than taxing it away, while we are here in Parliament.

I do not purport to say that I know better how to spend the money of that man who works in Yellowknife and who is going to die of radioactive disease or the black lung disease, or the farmer who sits on his tractor and freezes to death to get that crop in, in the spring, and who becomes exposed to those highly dangerous chemicals that he is spraying for crops and to destroy weeds. And then in the fall there are dangers.

I wonder if the NDP realizes that farming is the most dangerous occupation in the country. Police die at the rate of 3 per 10,000, whereas farmers die at the rate 7.7 per 10,000, in order to put food on the table. Those chaps over there and the Liberals would be only too happy to oblige by taking away all that person's wealth. We would not do that; we would leave it with them.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you speak to the bill?

An hon. Member: Socialism, it is a wonderful story, but it won't work.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you speak to the bill?

Mr. Thacker: The House leader for the NDP has an abscess or a sore tooth which seems to be bothering him.

Mr. Deans: You are making it worse.

Mr. Thacker: He should go back to his room and lie down if he cannot take it. Let us look at the outflows of money, Mr. Speaker. Let us look at the great Crown corporation, Petro-Canada. We have taken $2 billion from the Canadian people, we have taken $2 billion of their tax money. We borrowed it at 19.5 per cent interest.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: They don't like it. We hear the socialist chorus in the background. What has Petro-Canada done? At least with John A. Macdonald, he made sure that the money went to the railroad company and that it built something new. That is the difference with a Crown corporation; they never build anything new. I don't mind using government money if they would build something. What happened to the $2 billion or $3 billion the taxpayers put into Petro-Canada? It was used to buy existing oil companies, existing companies that were finding oil and paying money to us in the way of tax dollars that we could redistribute. When we took that $2 billion and bought existing companies, that money flowed out of Canada. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, $10 billion has flowed out of this country, capital that we should have kept here to create jobs for our people. We have over one million unemployed. This is not the time to be developing policies that drain $10 billion out.

As a result of the National Energy Program and the loss of $10 billion, our business climate has been so affected that an additional $8 billion has left. So the unemployment is going to rise, and it will be much more than a million. There will be up to two million unemployed because of this deterioration in the business climate. The members of the NDP simply do not understand the concept of a business climate and the fact that $8 billion has flowed out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: Let me tell them something, Mr. Speaker, about the $8 billion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: They seem to think it is part of an international conspiracy of something. I will tell them what it is. It is ordinary Canadians. That $8 billion represents ordinary Canadians taking their money and putting it into other countries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: What is he talking about? Earning money honestly? The hon. member has never earned an honest dollar in his life.

Mr. Deans: I have made more honest money than you have ever seen. I understand you are a lawyer.

Mr. Thacker: He says he is making money on his own now—with a printing machine? Ah, Mr. Speaker, maybe you should give them an aspirin because they really do seem to be riled tonight. They honestly hate to have these things debated because then their position is exposed for what it is.

We set forth a reasonable Progressive Conservative alternative that deals with individuals, because when you get to the bottom line you really find that the NDP does not genuinely trust people. We are prepared to let individuals get out and work and create, and the market economy will thin out the ones that are inefficient. But they do not trust people.

Years and years ago, when people were basically uneducated, there were no laws governing all these things; and people did very well. Now that we have practically the highest average education in the whole world, they want to take over and take everything away from us.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment for a few minutes about the—

Some hon. Members: The bill!

Mr. Thacker: —about this medicare business.

An hon. Member: The bill! Let us get back to the bill.

Mr. Thacker: The NDP are part of the group who want to put a total ban on extra billing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: That is a fair point, Mr. Speaker. They want to do that. They cannot think anything through very clearly, either, because in the course of the total banning of extra billing, and trying to preserve the medicare system exactly as it is now, they are going to end up by hurting the patients, the people who will use it far more than they could ever imagine today. Why do they not go to Britain? The United Kingdom today is faced with exactly the same situation that these people are trying to impose on Canada. Why is it we in this country are incapable of learning from the experience of others?

• (2110)

We need to know where we were in the past. We have to know what the unique role of doctors was. They were self-governing. They were self-employed in the sense that they provided their own offices and staff. They worked long, hard hours. I do not think anyone would object to that. They had a special doctor-patient relationship. It was felt we should have medicare. This was supported by people all across the country, not just the NDP.

An hon. Member: But the taxpayer paid.

Mr. Thacker: Does the hon. member believe that just because the taxpayer somehow pays for the education, the doctor is not entitled to any more than the minimum wage? What is the hon. member's point?

The average wage of a doctor in this country is not $100,000. Up to this last increase, it was closer to $58,000. I know many doctors who earn less than members of the House. Out of that lesser income, they must provide their office, staff and their own pension. That is what I am saying. Why not be honest with the doctors? If Canadians want doctors to be civil servants, why do we not enter into that negotiation? Here is what we would have to do.

We would have to say to the doctor that he will have this type of salary. Let us assume it is the same as we receive. Members of the NDP are often critical of doctors, but they sure take their $65,000, some $16,300 of which is tax free. We could turn to the doctors and say that we will give them $75,000, which will put them on a par with Members of Parliament. They could have access to the same type of pension, 5 per cent a year. After six years, each member of the NDP will either resign from the House or be thrown out and collect a pension of a minimum of 30 per cent.

An hon. Member: Don't you get that?

Mr. Thacker: Sure I do, but at least I am honest. I do not stand up and hypocritically condemn someone else. That is exactly what members of the NDP do.

An hon. Member: What are you doing?

Mr. Thacker: I am condemning the hypocrisy of the NDP. I have a feeling that if we went to the doctors and offered them $75,000 a year with the same pension plan as that of Members of Parliament, deputy ministers and senior management, and provided them with office space and staff that Members of Parliament and others receive, and required them to work 37.5 hours a week as do civil servants, every doctor in the land would accept that. If they could get in the trough with that kind of money, they would be in it. Why do we not do that? The cost to the Canadian people would be billions of dollars.

I want to deal with the incomes of doctors. The NDP talk about $100,000. That is not correct. It is true that some specialists make a lot of money, but the average GP works 60 to 70 hours a week. That is why his income is as high as it is. He puts in super-long hours. If a doctor worked 37.5 hours a week, he would earn only half as much as a Member of Parliament. If the Canadian people had to choose between their doctor or their Member of Parliament, they would choose their doctor. When I travelled across the country, including my travels with the task force, I gained a very strong feeling that people favour their doctors. They appreciate the hard work their doctors do. For the NDP to challenge that is just incredible.

The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill went after the doctors today. He challenged them. If he is going to criticize them and then portray doctors to us as being good people, why does he not say one good word about them? I have never heard that hon. member say anything good about doctors.

Post-secondary education is another critical issue in our society. The cutbacks here are going to hurt more than anywhere else. By making these cutbacks in the Atlantic provinces, the Liberals are attacking the future of the nation. Just as the deficit places a burden on future generations, cutting back support for post-secondary education will also affect the future. There will be fewer people coming out of our universities and colleges who are adequately trained to take on the challenges of the future. That is bad.

Today the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) made a funny statement about EPF. He said the universities were not meeting the national goals, not responding to the imperatives of the federal government. When I asked him to clarify that, he did not do very well. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) made an interesting comment with regard to the reason for the cutbacks. He said the federal government is going to determine where the money goes because his own province of Quebec uses the money for ulterior purposes.

That may well be, because that province has an elected separatist government that is doing some mighty funny things. However, let us not make cutbacks in all the other provinces, because of a separatist government in Quebec. For years and years people have had to move out of the Atlantic provinces in order to find jobs. The taxpayers in the Atlantic provinces have been keeping the institutions going, providing some of the top graduates in every discipline, but these graduates have had to go to other parts of Canada to find work. So it is quite appropriate that the federal government should transfer enormous amounts of money for education. Maybe it should be 100 per cent.

Mr. LeBlanc: It is. In my province it is 98 per cent.

Mr. Thacker: Why then was there a cutback of $181.2 million in the transfer payments by the Secretary of State (Mr. Regan)? Check page 132 of the estimates. It is in the Blue Book.

The real issue in post-secondary education is fiscal capacity. How can those seven provinces east of Saskatchewan cope with the deficit? The federal government can because it has access to taxation across the whole country. That is not something that the people in P.E.I. can bear. There is clearly a cutback. The revenue guarantee is a fraudulent excuse. I will be glad to oppose this bill tonight because the government has been dishonest with the Canadian people.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to participate in this debate. However, after listening to the last two speeches, there are a few comments that should be put on the record. We just heard an attempt by a couple of hon. members to drive wedges between the people of this country. I take extreme exception to that kind of political rhetoric and dishonesty.

I was astounded and astonished to hear the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) talk about the shameful way in which the federal government is treating his province. Let me put a few facts on the record. Let us examine the federal contribution to provinces for post-secondary operating expenses for the years 1974-75 and 1981-82. I can give the hon. member figures for all the years in between but I will use those two years.

• (2120)

I will begin with the province which is represented by the hon. member for Hillsborough. In 1974-75 the percentage of the total operating costs for post-secondary education was 69 per cent from the federal government to the government and people of Prince Edward Island. In 1981-82 it is 110 per cent, and yet that member has the unmitigated gall to rise and say that we are reducing the expenditures to the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) talks about $185 million. As usual they are using selective figures and selectively misleading the public with those figures because that $185 million from the department of the Secretary of State which she talks about refers specifically to second-language training in the province and does not refer to post-secondary education.

Miss MacDonald: It is in the estimates. That is a lie.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That is another canard laid to rest.

Let us examine the other provinces. If we look at the percentages as a percentage of the operating expenses of post-secondary education, in Newfoundland it was 62 per cent in 1974-75 and 83 per cent in 1981-82. In Nova Scotia it was 51 per cent in 1974-75 and 58 per cent in 1981-82, a modest growth there. For New Brunswick it was 62 per cent in 1974-75 and 98 per cent in 1981-82. Ninety-eight per cent, Mr. Speaker, and the premier of the province had the nerve to get up in front of a group of students in front of the legislature the other day and tell them that if they want more support for education they had better see their federal members. What a disgraceful performance we are getting from these Tories. I will refer to Premier Hatfield a little later, as sickening as it may be. In Quebec it was 50 per cent in 1974-75 and only 49 per cent in 1981-82, which of course has to do with the particular bent of the Quebec government at the present time. In the wealthy province of Ontario it was 46 per cent in 1974-75 and 60 per cent in 1981-82. In Manitoba it was 51 per cent and 68 per cent.

An hon. Member: You are playing with figures.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): In Saskatchewan it was 48 per cent and 61 per cent. In Alberta it was 46 per cent and 51 per cent. In British Columbia it was 43 per cent and 54 per cent. In 1974-75, the figure nationally was 48 per cent of all the operating costs for post-secondary education in Canada which came from the federal government. That percentage has grown to 57 per cent in 1981-82. All this despite the fact that we have no responsibility whatsoever in post-secondary education or indeed in elementary and secondary education.

There are a few points which have to be made about those figures. These federal transfers to the provinces are an attempt by the federal government to achieve a balance of restraint and responsibility. I wish that the premiers of these provinces would exercise some balance, responsibility and restraint. I wish that members opposite would show some restraint, responsibility and balance.

Mr. Taylor: How about the Liberals? Do not tell us about restraint, practise it.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): There have been no cutbacks in equalization payments or in the established programs financing payments. Members opposite do a lot of talking about the revenue guarantee being cut out.

Miss MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just said that there have been no cutbacks in EPF transfers. I wonder if he could explain in that context why we were given figures in committee, which were issued to us last week by the Department of Finance, which show that EPF transfers have dropped in 1981-82 from $6,187 million to $5,807 million. Could be explain why the Department of Finance gave us those figures?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) choose to accept the question at this time?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, that was not a point of order. However, the fact is that the hon. member knows, or should know, that that is the base figure without the transfer of tax points and other programs, like the refusal, on the agreement of the government, to charge back to the four Atlantic provinces and to Manitoba the excess moneys that were paid to them because of their decline in population, which amount to about $67 million as an outright gift in the case of New Brunswick, for example. I can give the figures for the other provinces but I think I have used enough figures.

There have been no cutbacks. Another fact that the opposition continually refuses to recognize is that the Government of Canada, as a national government, must protect its ability to fashion, implement and promote national policies. The opposition continually forgets about this. They want to sectionalize the country and turn it into that community of communities which will be a community of nothing if they have their way.

All of the money which we are talking about is being given to the provinces without strings attached. As a matter of fact, if I have any fault to find with this program it is the fact that strings are not being attached. The very reason the revenue guarantees are being cut out as a separate payment to the provinces is that the provinces were using those guarantees for all sorts of projects except those for which the money was intended, that is health, medicare and post-secondary education. They were going to build all kinds of edifices to the memory of the Tory ministers in those provinces.

Mr. Taylor: That is completely false and you know it. You are day-dreaming.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Almost $200 million in overpayments were forgiven to five provinces.

The evidence is in the facts that I am afraid the hon. member for Hillsborough deliberately ignored when he was speaking in the House and misleading the Canadian public with his selective figures, and in fact with his statements that were based on nothing but his own imagination.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The fact is that at least 80 per cent of every penny that the government spends in his province comes directly or indirectly from moneys raised by the federal government. I happen to be rather proud that those of us who live in the less advantaged provinces can obtain that kind of support from the federal government. But if those members over there who want to tear apart and destroy the national government and give all power to the provinces have their way, we will not be getting those payments for very long. It is damn near time somebody woke up to that fact and told them so. As a matter of fact, the Government of Canada has been increasing the support to post-secondary education on a regular basis, as the figures I have quoted tonight prove.

Mr. Taylor: Tell us another fairy tale.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): As a matter of fact, Prince Edward Island now receives 126 per cent of the operating costs of its university. We just heard the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) say that that is fine because the federal government is obviously the one which can most easily afford the deficit. Yet they get up on their hind legs here every day and condemn the government for the size of the deficit while at the same time demanding increased expenditures from the government. They cannot have it three ways, and that is why they are in opposition.

• (2130)

We also heard the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills talk about a separatist government in Quebec and a separatist being elected in Alberta. Obviously that distresses all of us.

Miss MacDonald: I am sure it does.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I take exception to that facetious remark by the hon. member for Kingston and The Island, who thinks she is the only one around here who is a Canadian. She thinks she is the only one who cares about this country, and she is not. There are many of us who care. I do not question her loyalty to this country, and I do not like her questioning that of anyone else because she is not the only one around here who has virtue, and she has no monopoly on it, as far as I know.

Would the growth of separatism in western Canada have anything to do with the propaganda of the Tories in this House, their hate campaign against the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), their hate campaign against the Charter of Rights and their continued belittling of the Charter of Rights in many speeches across the country because it does not contain a guarantee of property rights?

Mr. Taylor: Tell us about metric.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Never once did hon. members opposite publicly say that clause was in the Charter of Rights and was withdrawn at the insistence of all the provinces. The Premier of Prince Edward Island was one of the most vociferous against that clause in the Charter of Rights, as well as the premiers of Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba and British Columbia.

Mr. Taylor: Tell us about metric.

Mr. Blais: That is what he is talking about.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): There is no point in telling the hon. member about metric because he does not understand it.

Mr. MacBain: He doesn't understand imperial either.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I want to put on the record a couple of brief quotations. I want to quote from a speech—

Mr. Taylor: Tell us about gun control.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): —given in the House on March 26 by my colleague, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), when he was talking about this very bill.

Miss MacDonald: The switcher.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): He said:

> The moral question is important . . . My own province of New Brunswick is an example but we could take any province, the trend is the same in all. In New Brunswick the federal contribution as a share of provincial expenditures for post-secondary education through EPF—and I include in that, minority and second language training—has gone from 78.1 per cent in 1976-77 to 107 per cent in this fiscal year. That is legally correct. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker. In 1976-77 the federal government paid 67.7 per cent of what the post-secondary institutions spent. When I say post-secondary institutions, I do not mean only universities but include everything after high school—community colleges and technical schools. What credit does this federal Parliament get for that?

Is the hon. member for Hillsborough prepared to give credit to the federal Parliament? Is the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills?

Mr. McMillan: I did.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The hon. member for Hillsborough gave it, yes, in a very left-handed manner after he put all kinds of canards on the record.

Mr. Taylor: Where did you get the money in the first place?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I want to put another quotation on the record, and this one is from the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). We have heard doom and gloom from the opposition on about how badly they are being treated, and I think it is important that this statement be put on the record one more time.

Mr. Taylor: Tell us whom you get the money from.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): We get the money from the people of Canada, the same people the hon. member's colleague just said we could afford to tax more in order to give to the provinces. The hon. member cannot have it both ways, so he should just sit there and keep quiet for a minute. Perhaps he will learn something. He may not be beyond the pale yet.

Mr. Taylor: Tell us about where it came from.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It came from the taxpayers of this country, and it is precisely because of the Government of Canada and the generosity of Canadians across this country that we can afford to make equalization payments to the poorer provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It is precisely for that reason that we in the House should not be misrepresenting the facts as they have been time and time again by Tory members across the way.

Mr. Taylor: Tell us about loans to Russia and the statue in Algiers.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I would like to go on and put on the record the quotation from the Minister about which I spoke.

Mr. Taylor: Tell us about loans to Russia and low-interest loans to other countries.

Mr. Corbin: The order of the day is transfer payments to the provinces, Taylor. You know that; wake up.

Mr. Taylor: I am wide awake. I am sick and tired of your policies.

Mr. Corbin: Write your motions under Standing Order 43, and never mind the rest.

Mr. Taylor: It is that kind of talk that is causing separation.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. yahoo opposite would keep quiet, I would continue my speech.

Mr. Taylor: Talk sense, then.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I wish to put this quotation from a speech of the Minister of Finance on the record because of the dire statements made by hon. members opposite and their exclamations about how we as a national government are being so grossly unfair to the provinces.

Miss MacDonald: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): This is what the Minister of Finance said:

> Four of the six equalization receiving provinces have formally indicated to me that they find the representative average standard system conceptually superior to the Ontario standard and consequently they are able to support it. I have received written communications to that effect from the Hon. Richard Hatfield, Premier of New Brunswick—

He is hardly a Liberal.

> —the Hon. Joel Matheson, Minister of Finance of Nova Scotia—

Another Tory.

> —the Hon. Dr. John Collins, Minister of Finance of Newfoundland—

Another Tory, for the time being.

> —and the Hon. Lloyd MacPhail, Minister of Finance of Prince Edward Island.

That is the island we just heard was being devastated by this formula.

> I have had detailed discussions with each of these ministers on the implications of the equalization formula for the province concerned. I have had negotiations with finance ministers as a group; I have had them individually; and I have had discussions with them by telephone since the first ministers' conference. I believe that we have made an effort, an honest and successful effort, to accommodate the principal concerns of equalization receiving provinces.

Mr. LeBlanc: Why don't you admit it, Tom?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I want to talk again about the topic raised by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills, the separatists in this country.

Mr. Anguish: Western Conservative cousins.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): There is no doubt that we have problems in this country, and those problems will not be solved by members of this House going across the country sowing and cultivating hatred among Canadians and sowing and cultivating mistrust, distrust and discord, because that kind of sowing and cultivating can only result in the reaping of disaster. We cannot sow hatred and reap love any more than we can spend without taxing.

We happen to be a very fortunate nation. We happen to be perhaps the most fortunate nation on earth, and I find it very disconcerting to sit here in this chamber day after day listening to hon. members from various parts of this country proclaiming what an awful state we are in. I do not believe we are in such an awful state on a comparative basis. It is true we have problems today which we did not have in 1974 or 1972 or 1968. We have problems, and there can be no argument that we do not, but compared with any other nation we are fortunate indeed. There are few other nations in which Members of Parliament could get away with making some of the outrageous statements which are being made in this country. There are few countries indeed where a fellow like the fellow who has just been elected to the legislature of Alberta could make the kinds of calumnies he did in his election campaign about the national government and get away with it. There indeed are few other countries in the world where the editor of the Edmonton Journal and the publisher of the Alberta Report could continuously and consistently publish calumnies, falsehoods and outrageous distortions and not have to be called before the bar of justice. And it might not be a very just bar if it were in many other countries. Yet day after day in the House hon. members try to sow the seeds of dissension, the seeds of distrust and the seeds of disunity.

In this House we brag, or some members do, because one province has a separatist government and that is supposed to make the federal government look bad. We brag in this House, or some of us do, because a separatist has been elected in Alberta. That is supposed to make the federal government look bad. We crow because—

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In all fairness, the hon. member opposite should clarify what he is saying. I should like to know who has bragged in the House. If he cannot name the member then it is obvious that he is not telling the truth.

Mr. Blais: You should have been here earlier. There were three of them tonight.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am trying—

Mr. Elzinga: You are very trying!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): —to put some facts on the record tonight. Obviously I am cutting rather close to the quick of some of the members opposite. Just a few minutes ago we heard the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills crow because this government was responsible for the election of a separatist in Alberta. If that is not crowing then I do not know what is.

Mr. Elzinga: You said bragging.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): What is the difference between bragging and crowing? The hon. member is crowing now and his colleague was bragging. That is okay.

It seems to me that it would behoove us all to tone down the political rhetoric in this nation and start to deal a little more in fact than in fancy. We should try to knit together the noble fabric of the nation rather than try to shred it.

I do not take any satisfaction in the fact that there is a separatist government in Quebec. I do not take any satisfaction in the fact that there are separatist candidates running in the Saskatchewan election. I suppose it will be immaterial in the final analysis or one hundred years from now who will win the election in Saskatchewan, unless it happens to be the separatists. I am confident it will not be, however, but that would not be a matter of indifference to historians. It is not a matter of indifference to us today, or it should not be that there is a separatist government in Quebec, a separatist government that is turning Canadian against Canadian. That is what some of the rhetoric uttered by other politicians in the country is doing—it is turning Canadian against Canadian.

We hear some of the most outrageous rhetoric—we heard some tonight, Mr. Speaker. Some was shouted at me across the aisle on the subject of metrication. Whether we like metrication or whether we do not is immaterial, I suppose, but many years ago a decision was taken—in fact the law regarding metric was passed by Sir John A. Macdonald's government—

Mr. Taylor: Baloney!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) does not accept that either, but it happens to be a fact.

Mr. Taylor: He did not impose it on people.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It was he who passed the law, but I am not going to get into any more arguments with the rather vocal member opposite who is inclined to be rhetorical. As a matter of fact, the government of which he was once a supporter promoted the metric system just as this government has. Yet hon. members opposite go across the country talking about it being forced down their throats even though when that party formed the government it followed exactly the same practice.

Mr. Huntington: You do not know what you are talking about!

Miss MacDonald: There is nothing new about that.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The only difference is that that government appointed a minister of state for metric.

I hope that in the days ahead, we will continue as a national government to contribute to the legitimate needs of the provinces. I hope as well that the governments of the provinces recognize where the funds come from because they come from all the people of Canada who, through their taxes and their generosity, make equalization payments possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Burnaby.

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: Let's vote.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the floor and there are a few remarks that I should like to make and I am going to make them.

Voltaire once said that when it comes to money we are all of the same religion. He could have said as well that when it comes to taxes we are all of the same religion.

Just the other day the Fraser Institute published figures which indicate that 40 per cent of the average Canadians income goes to taxes. A study of the history of the world and many civilizations will show that as soon as taxation goes above 40 per cent, all incentive in the country dies. That is the time a country gets into serious trouble. This country is in that state today, Mr. Speaker. It scares the pants off me when I see what is taking place.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal government forced the provinces into medicare by guaranteeing to pay 50 per cent of the cost. It forced them into block funding by offering a bonus of $7.63 per capita and one equalization tax point. This bill removes that incentive, although as late as April 23, 1981, a Liberal minister promised that it would be maintained.

We speak of the need for higher education in this country yet each of us has received letters from our secondary schools and universities complaining about the cutbacks in funds for education. These cutbacks were instituted by this government, a government that claims to be interested in research and development while it cuts back on funds for education.

We talk about equalization for all provinces and of course no member is opposed to the poorer provinces receiving help from the richer provinces. The question is how that should be done. The bill mentions five provinces—but why not equalization based on ten provinces, Mr. Speaker? Why not treat each province exactly the same as the others?

The government has lost control of national educational standards, Mr. Speaker. There are just no standards. Some of the gobbledygook I have heard this evening appals me. The House has ceased to be a place of reasoned thought, a place where we all realize that each of us came here for the same reason, and that is, to do the best we can for our country. I hear insults hurled back and forth on all sides of the House, and in many cases the debate strays very, very far away from the subject matter of Bill C-97, which is what we are supposed to be discussing. The subject of metrication comes up—deplorable as that may be—and other subjects which should not be discussed. I suggest that stronger restraint on the part of the Speaker should be exercised.

I am not going to speak very long on this bill, Mr. Speaker. Obviously I will vote against it and I will vote against it because it is bad for the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Ouellet for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to advise hon. members, including my good friend the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), that the Quebec Liberal Party has just won two resounding victories in the ridings of Saint-Laurent and Louis-Hébert.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in light of the interest of the Liberal Party in by-elections, I wonder if the Prime Minister might call the three by-elections.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INTERNATIONAL MARITIME TRANSPORT—LEVYING OF TAX ON WORLD PRICES

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): During question period last Friday, Mr. Speaker, I referred to statements made by respresentatives of the Canadian shipping industry, who held a convention in Ottawa last week, concerning the levying of a surcharge on marine fuel expended by Canadian ships on international voyages in inland waters.

Again this morning, at the official opening of the seaway for 1982 which took place in Saint-Lambert in my riding of La Prairie, a number of representatives of the industry foresaw a very difficult season and blamed it precisely on this surcharge. In principle, the National Energy Program aims at protecting the Canadian economy by making it possible for all Canadians to buy Canadian oil below world prices. The fact that world prices are imposed on Canadian ships as well as on foreign ships, while highway or railway transportation are exempted deals a very hard blow to an industry which is of paramount importance to a sound economy.

Such a discriminatory policy, according to representatives of the Canadian shipping industry known as Dominion Marine, may have dire consequences not only for the shipping industry but also for Canadian consumers. The practice will deprive Canadian shipping of essential cargo and benefit American shippers who are now more competitive. There is, therefore, the possibility of a huge deficit. Thus, Mr. Speaker, American steel plants are already getting less of their iron ore from Quebec and Labrador and more from the United States themselves, particularly from the Mesabi Range. Unemployment will therefore increase in Canada. The higher transportation costs of those Canadian industries which use and depend on river and sea transport will inevitably result in higher consumer prices. Water transport is now the least expensive means of transport available. It is three times more energy efficient than the railways and eight times more than road transport. Therefore, by forcing the sea carriers to pay world prices for their fuel, which does not apply to road and railway transport, the federal government is promoting a traffic transfer to a means of transport which is less energy efficient. This is a cause for concern at a time when energy conservation is an absolute priority.

While supporting the efforts of our government aimed at avoiding that foreign sea carriers benefit from lower fuel prices on the domestic market, I cannot agree to a policy which clearly discriminates against one sector of the Canadian industry. This policy goes against the purpose of the National Transportation Act, which states the following:

> Regulation of all modes of transport will not be of such a nature as to restrict the ability of any mode of transport to compete freely with any other modes of transport;

I believe that the right to free competition has been unfairly restricted. The Canadian maritime industry uses 6,000 barrels of fuel a day for domestic international shipments. By imposing world prices, the government will get about $5.5 million a year. This $5.5 million of additional revenue constitutes the only advantage for the government. The benefit seems small compared with the following costs: first, the additional administrative costs imposed on the private and public sectors, which will amount to over $1 million.

Second, the loss of a major part of the American traffic which was until now using Canadian ships, and finally, which is even worse, the obvious damage caused to the entire Canadian maritime transport industry. To conclude, Mr. Speaker, it seems obvious to me that this action goes against the interests not only of the industry, but also of Canada, and I believe that the government would be wise to reconsider its position.

• (2230)

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) for raising an issue which is not only very important to the industry but also to the government.

Allow me to take this opportunity to remind hon. members what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said when he replied to this question in the House on April 2, that the government has always had taxation systems that varied, depending on the type of transportation. For instance, we have certain taxes for land carriers which are different from those levied on marine carriers. He went on to say that Canadian carriers have a considerable advantage in Canadian ports and that, while in the case of international transportation the same arrangement exists for United States' and Canadian ships, there is no evidence that this factor has any effect on the preference for Canadian over U.S. carriers, or vice versa.

I would like to remind the House of the objective of the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge. It is to ensure the recovery of equivalent federal oil import compensation payments for oil exported in the form of marine fuel. The charge is currently levied on fuel used by domestic and foreign vessels involved in international trade.

The transportation fuel compensation recovery charge on marine fuel, as it pertains to domestic carriers, is based on prevailing competitive fuel prices in U.S. and other relevant international markets. Since fuel prices vary considerably from country to country, and change frequently, this is a matter requiring judgment and ongoing review.

I would like to emphasize that Canadian carriers are paying international fuel prices only for marine fuel consumed in international transportation. Fuel consumed in travelling between Canadian destinations, which generally comprises the largest portion of fuel purchased in Canada by domestic carriers, will still be acquired at subsidized Canadian price levels. The application of international fuel prices on a non-discriminatory basis to both Canadian and foreign carriers is consistent with undertakings which Canada has with other countries and international organizations. In addition, it is reasonable to expect Canadian carriers to maximize efficient fuel utilization and to pay international level fuel prices when competing with foreign carriers in international transportation markets.

Finally, there appears to be no evidence at present that the charge is causing serious damage to the economic position of the industry. Much of the reduced activity, which some in the marine industry have apparently ascribed to the TFCRC, is the result of changing market circumstances and slower economic growth. I am sure hon. members would agree. In addition, the administration of the charge has helped to ease the impact on the Canadian marine sector, for example—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary but the rules for adjournment motions are extremely strict. I cannot allow him more than three minutes as that would have to be subtacted from the time available to other members.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, in participating in the adjournment debate tonight I should like to say that a number of us on this side have, on a regular basis, put questions to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). I refer to the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) and the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) and myself. We have asked the Solicitor General to release the documentation RCMP defence counsel have requested, as it is essential for a fair and full trial of the 17 RCMP officers charged in the Quebec courts. I have pointed out that two former security service chiefs have indicated that they were pressured by the government to become involved in probing, by legal or illegal means, separatism in Quebec. The reason for the Solicitor General's refusal to release the documentation is simply a cover-up—the alleged cover-up for this government's illegal activities. It is alleged that the reason for the failure to release these papers is that the documents would shift the blame from the RCMP to Liberal politicians and bureaucrats. In addition, there are allegations that this documentation will be destroyed in order to make sure that Liberal politicians are never implicated.

Mr. Paul Jackson, who is the Ottawa correspondent for the Edmonton Journal, has put months of research into a lengthy article which appeared in that newspaper on February 4, 1982. I should like to commend him for his painstaking research that went into his story, which is the basis for my remarks this evening. He contends—and I agree—that the treatment the 17 officers are receiving from this government is shameful.

I hope the government will have the decency to release these papers, at least to the courts, so that these officers do not have to take the blame for the instructions they received from top Liberal politicians and bureaucrats.

Douglas Fisher of The Toronto Sun highlighted the story in an article of April 2, 1982, and paid tribute to Mr. Jackson for his thoroughness in investigating the story. Mr. Fisher also indicated that "there does remain unfinished matters of equity and fairness".

• (2235)

Let us look for just a moment at the McDonald commission report. I should like to illustrate a very good example of McDonald's two-faced posture. He would not criticize government ministers because he is a Liberal and part of the "old boy" network, but his findings when read carefully are contradictory. We must remember that Starnes did not know until February of this year that McDonald had been president of the Alberta Liberal Party. Starnes had been wondering for months why McDonald never took time in his reports to make public his devastating evidence of Liberal Party attempted manipulation of the RCMP for partisan purposes. This is why Starnes resigned in disgust in 1973.

An example of the unfairness which resulted from the McDonald commission decision to avoid comment on the quality of the acts of ministers and senior public servants is contained in its third report. On page 177 the commission criticized John Starnes, the former security service chief, in the following terms:

> Mr. Starnes was aware of violations of federal and provincial laws occurring as a result of physical surveillance operations. Specifically, he was aware of traffic violations, the use of false documentation, false registration in hotels and the use of false or "dummy" registration for surveillance vehicles. In the absence of supporting evidence we do not accept Mr. Starnes' broad statement that the security service talked to ministers about traffic violations and dummy registrations . . . Mr. Starnes took no steps to stop these practices which he considered to be illegal and in that respect his conduct was unacceptable.

However on page 45 of the same report, in dealing with what transpired at a meeting of cabinet ministers and senior officials on December 1, 1970, the following passage appeared concerning testimony by the secretary to cabinet, Gordon Robertson:

> —he does not doubt that Mr. Starnes must have said something like, "the S & I has been doing illegal things for 20 years but never caught" or such words would not in his view appear in the notes.

The report went on to say that the secretary to cabinet:

> —infers, from the fact that the notes do not record that anyone at the meeting asked Mr. Starnes what he meant by that statement, that everyone around the table must have thought Mr. Starnes was talking about . . . "minor misdemeanours where things like traffic violations, false registrations in hotels, completing ownership certificates for cars falsely, surreptitious entry, other things of that kind took place", and that was thought to be a perfectly normal and necessary part of police work.

It is difficult to imagine what better supporting evidence the commission needed to satisfy itself that ministers and senior officials were aware of such activities, yet nowhere in the three reports of the commission is the secretary to cabinet or any of the 15 others around the table criticized or cited for unacceptable conduct on this score.

This raises the interesting question of whether ministers and senior officials received notice, called "Section 13 Notices", as did Starnes, warning them that they might be cited for unacceptable conduct in relation to their knowledge of possible violations of federal and provincial laws as a result of physical surveillance operations carried out by the RCMP. If ministers and senior officials also received such notices, the question then arises as to why such criticisms are not in the third report.

Possible explanations are that, (a) those who might have received such notices were more successful than was Starnes in appealing before the commission, (b) the criticisms were removed from the reports by the governments, or (c) the commission decided that the testimony of the secretary to cabinet, Gordon Robertson, did not constitute, to use the words of the commission, "knowledge of illegal activity combined with a failure to stop it or deal with it in some proper manner, or willful blindness".

I close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that my main concern is to protect the innocence of the 17 RCMP officers charged in the Quebec courts. I think this government has a responsibility to the officers to offer those documents at least to the court, so they will be cleared of any charges against them, because they received their directions from the ministers opposite.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the House will recall, during the course of proceedings in November, 1981, against present and past members of the RCMP instituted by the attorney general of Quebec, it was necessary to swear an affidavit under Section 41.2 of the Federal Court Act to withold documents requested by defence counsel. These documents contained information the production of which would be injurious to national security, or disclose confidences of the Queen's Privy Council of Canada. The documents requested were among the thousands to which the commission of inquiry into the RCMP had access.

The federal commission of inquiry, headed by Mr. Justice David McDonald, was given access to all categories of government and RCMP documents. In an unprecedented move, under the terms of an order in council passed in 1979, the commission was permitted access to cabinet and cabinet committee minutes which might bear on government knowledge of illegal activities. In its third report the commission pronounced itself well satisfied with the terms and conditions of this access. It had access to the indexes of the minutes of cabinet and its committees, and was shown any minute which it thought relevant to its concerns. In its report the commission noted that the Clerk of the Privy Council interpreted its right of access to cabinet and cabinet committee in broad terms.

In its report published in August, 1981, the commission made three principal findings: Certain members and former members of the RCMP had committed acts not authorized or provided for by law which could be referred to an Attorney General, federal or provincial, for possible prosecution, and to the commissioner, RCMP, for possible discipline; that in order to establish the context of the acts in question, certain information should be made public notwithstanding the need to protect cabinet confidences, national security and international relations; no superior authority for the acts could be attributed to ministers and senior officials.

The commission sought and received declassification of the relevant portions of many classified documents, and reported at length on the contents of many of them. These disclosures were unprecedented in our history, and were made possible, not as a result of findings of wrongdoing but because the government acceded to the commission's request to publish all relevant material, even if the purpose was to establish that no wrongdoing occurred.

The commission took the view that it would be necessary to make a report citing misconduct if any minister or senior official participated in, knew of, or failed to deal with activities of the RCMP not authorized or provided for by law. After hearings, which numbered in excess of 300, and having received evidence from numerous ministers and senior officials, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the commission was unable to make any finding of misconduct against any minister, former minister, senior official or former senior official.

The government, through its judicial commission of inquiry, has done everything possible to ensure the publication on the basis of independent advice of all material relevant to questions of guilt or innocence in relation to allegedly illegal activities of the RCMP.

PUBLIC SERVICE—ACTION TAKEN AGAINST EMPLOYEE OF DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION. (B) APPLICATION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on March 30, 1982, I had an opportunity to present to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), and then to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the case of Paul McNeill of Halifax, Nova Scotia. Mr. McNeill is employed by the Department of Employment and Immigration as an economist whose duties include assessing the labour force and market in his region, which duties are totally unrelated to the federal government home insulation program. Mr. McNeill has another avocation forced upon him by a chain of unfortunate circumstances.

In 1979 he purchased a home in which urea-formaldehyde foam insulation had been installed. I will not detail the subsequent links in the chain, but suffice it to say that he and his family suffered physically from the effects of this chemical product officially approved by CMHC as agent for the Government of Canada. Understandably, Mr. Speaker, he joined with others who had encountered a similar problem. In 1981, he was active in the formation of an association called the Urea-Formaldehyde Fight Society of Nova Scotia. He removed the UFFI from his home in August of 1981 at a cost of $12,500. Quite naturally, he was interested in whatever compensation program the federal government had established. Quite understandably, he was disappointed, as were the other 80,000 Canadians with UFFI in their homes, at the level of compensation offered by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). That program, as Your Honour recalls, had a limit of $5,000 for remedial measures. However, I am not here to discuss or debate the compensation to home owners with UFFI, but to consider the more important matter, namely, freedom of speech and public expression.

In my question, I was concerned with two related matters: first, the provision in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, second, the need and desirability of a code of conduct to govern the activities of departmental employees of the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada, in the case of the Department of Employment and Immigration, has apparently approved a very extensive code of conduct, a portion of which I will read. However, let me first deal with the provisions in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 2 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms states that everyone, that is every person in Canada, has the right of freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of press and other media of information. Those freedoms are guaranteed by Section 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which states that these freedoms exist and are only limited to the extent that it can be demonstrably justified, in a free and democratic society, that restrictions are required.

The question I put to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Employment and Immigration was simply this: does the provision of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms not allow public servants, along with all Canadians, to publicly express their opinions and their views on a matter of serious concern to them? Is any restriction on that right of public expression not outlawed by the provision of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms? Of course, the answer I got from the Prime Minister was that the matter would have to be determined by the courts of law.

It is a shame and a crime that we stood in this House of Commons day after day and debated the provisions of the constitutional proposal, particularly the provision of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but that when there is a practical application, where a dedicated public servant only seeks a remedy for a wrong which has been done to him, he must go to the courts to seek redress.

I want to underline and point out to members of the House and to all Canadians that, with that kind of attitude on the part of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, this Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms will become an empty and meaningless document.

Let me address a few remarks to the other aspect of the question that I put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration concerning the code of conduct which has apparently been adopted in respect of employees in his department. Anyone who looks at this code of conduct would be shocked by the wide nature of its provisions with respect to public criticism. The document virtually outlaws criticism of any kind of any government official or government policy whatsoever, whether it relates to the Department of Employment and Immigration or to any other work of the Government of Canada. The adoption of such a code of conduct would force employees of the Department of Employment and Immigration into second class status. It is not fair to the 500,000 public employees of Canada and other public employees across this country.

The adoption of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms for all Canadians can have real meaning only if we give it proper force and effect. If we cannot invoke the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in a practical situation to support the public statements of an employee of the Government of Canada, a Canadian citizen seeking to redress wrongs done to him, then it is meaningless and empty. Therefore, my point on rising is to bring to the attention of this House and of the public the plight of Paul McNeill and all other public servants whose right to express their opinions freely is unnecessarily restricted by the code of conduct and by improper interpretation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I hope the government will see the error of its ways and right the wrongs which have been done to Paul McNeill and other government employees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first allow me to say to the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) that I am glad to hear that he and his party are in agreement with the program that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has announced as it relates to the problem of UFFI. Furthermore, no one on this side of the House disagrees or questions the integrity or, indeed, the competence of the individual in question. That is certainly not the issue.

The nature of the various provisions contained in the code of conduct referred to by the hon. member are by no means peculiar to the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. These guidelines respecting employee conduct are founded on a well-established and widely understood principle, based on jurisprudence and precedent as these have evolved over time in both the public and private sectors. The proscription against public criticism in particular has been tested and supported many times through third-party review in the labour courts and tribunals, where it has consistently been held that while terms and conditions of employment may be publicly commented upon, employees must avoid public statements which are closely associated with criticism of government policies and programs.

In the case of Mr. McNeill, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission met its obligation to remind the employee of the provisions of the code of conduct and to ensure that the guideline with respect to public criticism was properly understood. The decision was ultimately Mr. McNeill's, whether or not to continue as public spokesman. It should be noted that at no time was Mr. McNeill requested or required to forgo his membership in this interest group.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.52 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PARLIAMENT

SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF CONSTITUENCY REDISTRIBUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to seek redress for an unnecessary exercise which will waste approximately $4 million of the Canadian taxpayers' money. A government spokesman, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, is on public record to the effect that the next election will be based on current boundaries. Therefore the proposed changes in electoral boundaries will never be used. As a result, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the government introduce a one-line bill halting this futile redistribution until such time as the much-needed reform of Parliament, including the Senate, has been effected in order to avoid a repetition of the useless redistribution which took place in 1972-74.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

CALL FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF GOVERNMENT GUARANTEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Auditor General has expressed deep concern that government guarantees of private company indebtedness now exceed $8 billion. Many of the companies whose debts the government has guaranteed are not viable and these guarantees represent a liability to the taxpayers not disclosed in the budget or budget papers. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That a special committee of this House examine the outstanding guarantees given by the Government of Canada to banks and bankers on behalf of private companies, to determine the extent of the government's liability, and that the government's financial statements be amended to make realistic provision for the payment of these guarantees should they be called.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—CALL FOR BREAKING OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering the refusal of the Argentinian government to obey the United Nations' call for a removal of its troops from the Falkland Islands and its belligerent assertion that it will use force to maintain their illegal occupation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House (1) urges the government to break off diplomatic relationships with Argentina, and (2) immediately contact other countries to urge them to follow suit.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, the high interest rate policy of the government is destroying the agricultural industry in Canada. Farmers cannot afford the interest charged on loans, general or operating. The Farm Credit Corporation loans and Small Business Development loans are a farce, with their tight regulations and meagre funding. I am sure that members on that side of the House are also aware that farmers just cannot raise their prices, like other producers, to cover cost increases. Madam Speaker, farmers just cannot take the price-cost squeeze any longer. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member from Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That this government immediately take steps to lower interest rates on all agriculture loans.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

SUGGESTED STATUE TO COMMEMORATE NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) combined in a devastating attack on Canadian home owners. If, as they suggested, variable rate mortgages are indeed illegal under the Interest Act, the Interest Act provides that home owners would be in no danger of losing title to their homes and would have to pay only 5 per cent interest or less. This year 650,000 Canadian home owners could have taken advantage of these low interest mortgages if these two hon. members—acting, no doubt, on behalf of the banks—had not exposed the scheme. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That, to commemorate the folly of the two honourable members' questions, a statue of Don Quixote be erected on Parliament Hill, with curly white hair and holding a long Cuban cigar instead of a lance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SERVICE TO LAKE LOUISE, ALTA.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the community of Lake Louise has been imploring the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to improve its signal in that community, but CBC, contrary to facts, insist that the population of Lake Louise is only 140 according to the 1976 census and CBC will not undertake the project until the permanent population reaches 500. Whereas the actual population of Lake Louise is 411 year-round residents, plus 800 permanent seasonal employees, plus some 300,000 visitors—all of whom want better radio and TV facilities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That this House urges the hon. Minister of Communications to contact CBC and provide improved facilities for these people. People who live and work in our national parks are human beings and deserve equal treatment to that given to other communities, many of which are much smaller.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SUGGESTED RESPONSIBILITY FOR CANOLA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43. Whereas the Minister of State for Trade has told us, through the press, that Japan recently purchased 25,000 tonnes of canola from Sweden because Canada's open marketing system could not deliver, even though Pacific port stocks were 85,000 tonnes at the time; and whereas Canada lost a sale of 20,000 tonnes of canola meal to Hungary for the same reason, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

• (1410)

That this House instructs the government to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to include rapeseed or canola under the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board in order that a co-ordinated sales approach can be undertaken to the benefit of producers.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

EDUCATION

FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, university students and their families across Canada are disturbed by the prospect of drastic increases in tuition fees to offset government funding cutbacks to post-secondary institutions. Students have been forced to demonstrate publicly to bring their plight to public attention. Yesterday concerned students at the University of Moncton demonstrated to focus attention on tuition increases and funding cutbacks. Similar demonstrations will occur at other universities. Accordingly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to assure Canadian university students that new federal government policies on provincial transfer payments will not result in tuition fee increases beyond the normal and that the dream of post-secondary education will be preserved for Canadian young persons.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. We on this side of the House are delighted to learn from Le Soleil that the leadership of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is more solid and widely based than at any other time, and that he fully intends to lead his party in the next federal election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chénier: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette):

That this House express its confidence in the right hon. member's ability to lead and wish him well in keeping his party working so well together.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

METRIC CONVERSION

SUGGESTED ENDORSATION ON VOLUNTARY BASIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in view of the widespread opposition to mandatory conversion to metric by cabinet decree of Order in Council PC 1981-1705, which will be illustrated by the presentation of thousands of petitions later this day, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this Liberal government follow the example set by the previous Progressive Conservative government and endorse conversion only on a voluntary basis with the agreement of the sectors involved.

POTENTIAL DANGEROUS EFFECTS ON EMPLOYEES USING VIDEO DISPLAY TERMINALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, since video display terminals are having abnormal effects on pregnancies, and since federal government department heads are quoted as being afraid to formalize a transfer policy for pregnant women because of the fear of setting a precedent, and since in the case of Les Terrasses de la Chaudière, workers there do not know about the government's policy of transferring ill or pregnant workers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That Treasury Board issue a directive to all management personnel stating that all ill or pregnant employees be allowed immediate transfers from potentially dangerous work stations.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Next Wednesday will mark the secondary anniversary of the Speech from the Throne in which the government promised to bring forward amendments to the Human Rights Act to protect the rights of the handicapped. In view of the fact the government has not yet done so, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House calls on the Minister of Justice to bring before this House amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act that would prohibit discriminatory practices against disabled Canadians and that these amendments be in conformity with recommendation Number I in the "Obstacles Report."

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

CONFERENCE BOARD OF CANADA ANALYSIS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. We have available today the quarterly report of the Conference Board of Canada which includes a survey of economic forecasters who describe our current recession as "the longest and probably the most severe in the post-war period". Of course, the minister has available within his own department his own forecasters and analysts. Does the Department of Finance analysis lead the minister to agree with the report published today by the Conference Board of Canada that we are in fact in our deepest recession since the 1940s?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not examined the precise figures which were released this morning by the Conference Board. I just saw them as I came into the House. I have no complaints with their description that the economy is in a recession. The recession, or the downturn, is deeper than we expected. On that point I think their comments are justified. I am not in a position to confirm whether they are correct in saying that it is the worst since 1947. It is bad enough the way it is.

CONCERN OVER HIGH INTEREST RATES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, the minister might comment on one specific figure wherein the average forecast with respect to unemployment was 8½ per cent. I wonder if the minister's advisers agree with the accuracy of that forecast. The principal fear of the Conference Board is that a projected second half economic recovery might be cut short and we would be back into a recessionary period in 1983 because of increased credit demands and higher interest rates. Do the minister and the departmental advisers share that concern as a real possibility and, if so, would the minister say what policies are being considered to avert that very serious situation? I emphasize that question because it would seem that his November budget is now very badly out of date.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member rightly draws attention to the prospects for recovery which most forecasters expect to take place later this year and the attendant fear that that recovery might be frustrated by a resurgence in interest rates. If the hon. member recalls when I spoke in New York in February, I drew attention to that very point and the danger that recovery might be thwarted by a resurgence of interest rates in the United States occasioned by a very large deficit. I can only express the same sentiment which I expressed in New York, namely, that all partners of the United States are still living in expectation that the assurance given by the President at the Summit in Ottawa last August that interest rates would decline will be fulfilled. That is very largely dependent upon how the deficit is handled in the United States.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION FORECASTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): I would ask the minister again if he might comment on the average forecast of 8½ per cent unemployment and whether his analysis in his department shows that to be an accurate forecast.

As the minister knows, Madam Speaker, the Conference Board forecasters were a little bit more optimistic about inflation rates, just under the 11 per cent mark, particularly as a result of moderation in food and world energy prices. Frankly—and I look forward to the minister's comment—in a deep recession one would expect a sharper downturn in prices when very few consumers are able to buy except where absolutely necessary. Does the Conference Board inflation forecast closely correspond to that of the minister? Second, can he explain why there has been less moderation in prices and in inflation in Canada as compared to that in the United States during the current recession?

• (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the forecasts for 1982 established by the department are available in the budget papers, and they have not been revised since the budget. I do not have them at hand to refer to them—

Mr. Jarvis: Unemployment?

Mr. MacEachen: —but I believe the unemployment rate suggested by this collection of forecasters is 8.5 per cent on average for 1982. We have already exceeded that figure. In fact the last two rates were higher than that, so I do not believe their forecasts in any way overstate the gravity of the unemployment situation in Canada.

The hon. member has asked why, in my view, we have not succeeded in showing a better price performance in Canada than in the United States. I think there are two reasons, which are reflected in the Canadian cost of living index, which are not as pronounced in the United States. The first is rising energy costs. World prices were absorbed almost in one gulp in the United States. The second is that wage settlements in the United States currently are running at about four percentage points lower than in Canada. The American performance on the price and wage fronts is certainly better than Canada's at the present time.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF JAPANESE IMPORTS ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. The news today is that Japan will export the same number of vehicles this year as it did last year, namely, 174,000. Has the minister analysed the effect this will have on jobs in the automotive industry, and what is he going to do to solve this problem?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we have indicated to the Japanese that shipments the same as last year of 174,000 units is not acceptable to Canada because of the fact that we expect a decline in the domestic market this year. Thus, if we accepted the status quo, that would mean a higher percentage of penetration of our market by the Japanese. Negotiations are ongoing.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I really wonder if this minister has the intestinal fortitude to put his point across in a real way on behalf of the auto workers in this country and let the Japanese know the damage they are doing to the job situation in Canada.

Mr. Rossi: Ask your question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER NEGOTIATE FAIR DEAL FOR CANADA

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I know a Japanese trade delegation is here right now. When is the minister going to go back to Japan with some hard-headed businessmen to negotiate a fair trading deal for Canada for the sake of jobs in the automobile industry in this country?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, those decisions are not taken by the private sector in Japan; they are taken by the Government of Japan. I have just returned from Japan with a blue chip group of 50 top level senior Canadian businessmen. Those businessmen are trying to sell products to Japan. They were not trying to restrict the import of products from Japan.

HOUSING

VARIABLE RATE MORTGAGE SCHEME

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for housing. Section 6 of the Interest Act stipulates that mortgage agreements must clearly indicate rates of interest, and also that interest is to be calculated either annually or semi-annually. Considering that the latest self-serving gimmick of the banks, the variable rate mortgage, meets neither of these requirements, could the minister tell us today if he has had the legality of this scheme checked out?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has referred to a section of the Interest Act. I would like to respond by pointing out that Section 3(4)(h) of the National Housing Act clearly states that a mortgage:

—was made on such terms as to principal, interest and taxes by monthly instalments or otherwise as may be determined by the Corporation.

I would like to assure the hon. member in response to his question, and his questions of yesterday, that it is the intention of the corporation to ensure that with respect to any application by any carrier—be it a credit union, bank, trust company or other financial institution—for insurance from the fund for any of these kinds of new mortgage instruments which have been raised, all acts of the Parliament of Canada are closely looked at. The corporation would not insure any loan which did not comply with the provisions of any of the laws of this Parliament.

• (1425)

INQUIRY RESPECTING LEGALITY OF SCHEME

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, when I put a question to him about the Interest Act, the minister quoted from the National Housing Act. Is he telling the House, in unequivocal terms, that this scheme, which does not stipulate what the interest rate is, which could have a home owner ending up, after five years, owing more money on his home than at the start of that five-year period, is clearly within the law? Is the minister telling us that, or is he not?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I was attempting to respond to the hon. member's question by assuring him that the government is concerned about consumers who might apply to take advantage of that kind of financial arrangement which is offered by credit unions, banks, etc. In so far as the Interest Act has any pertinence to the ministerial responsibility that I exercise, I have indicated that the government will ensure that all acts, whether the Interest Act or any other act of Parliament, are reviewed as they affect the operations of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and that the legalities of any proposition made by any carrier will be reviewed. We will assure all hon. members that, as has been the practice in the past, the law will be followed.

EFFECTS OF SCHEME ON HOME OWNERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I take it from what the minister said that the government is going to review the Interest Act which, I understand, has not been changed in about 100 years. I also understand that the government accepts what we say, namely, that the variable rate mortgage is not a legal proposal and is going to require supportive amendments to government legislation. I wish the minister would state categorically if that is what he intended to say.

How can the minister support a scheme, the legality of which we think is nonexistent, that could leave the home owner owing more after five years of paying on his mortgage than he owed at the outset? Is that any kind of justice for home owners, to put them deeper in debt without them even knowing?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the hon. member forgot one significant fact that is important to a person who is making a choice about what kind of mortgage to apply for. At this point we have not examined the variable rate mortgages that are being offered to which the hon. member has referred because they are no business of ours. Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation does not insure them so the government is not involved. Those are private contracts between mortgage companies and individuals.

I am told that under these variable rate mortgages an applicant is offered an interest rate which sometimes is two per cent less than the going rate. I do not know why the hon. member is doing his very best to try to ensure that Canadians who opt for that break in interest rates cannot take advantage of it.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL INTRODUCE NEW MEASURES RESPECTING HIGH INTEREST RATES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Last week, over 1,000 farmers met in Montreal to comment on the federal government's agricultural policies. The president of the Agricultural Producers Union, Mr. Proulx, took this opportunity to condemn, in very strong terms, the federal government's national policy, especially regarding interest rates, and he said that the present interest rates are bleeding farmers white. I should like to ask the minister first of all whether, considering this statement by a bona fide association, he intends to introduce new measures to reduce interest costs, and whether he received the information kit distributed by the APU in which federal Quebec members are criticized for not defending the interests of farmers in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that last week a question was asked in the House about who attended the meeting, etc. My parliamentary secretary attended the meeting, along with several other members of the caucus from la belle province. They had a very good meeting. Also the hon. member knows that about 7,000 members appeared in the capital of Quebec, Quebec City, and confronted the provincial minister of agriculture about the problems which in any case are the provincial minister's responsibility.

We have the farm credit legislation which was before the House and is before the other House at the present time. We are not in the short-term money market; we are in the long-term money market. We intend to increase our ability to lend money through the Farm Credit Corporation. The province of Quebec has a long-time program subsidizing interest rates. It has become a very costly program for them. They withdrew from it to some extent. We are not promising anything different than we have now. We have interest-free programs on storable crops. I believe last year the producers of the province of Quebec took advantage of that to about $40 million. We have national supply managed programs to take in the marketing costs of the whole operation, production costs, and the costing price formula which the majority of producers use in the province of Quebec. Those producers who are within that kind of a marketing system do not have the real concern of other producers outside the marketing system depending upon the open and free market to supply their return.

RECOMMENDATION THAT PRICES BE BASED ON PRODUCTION COSTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): This time, Madam Speaker, I should like to remind the minister that I am asking a question that specifically and exclusively concerns the federal government's interest rate policy. This is no time to blame our interest rates on one of the provincial governments.

Mr. Rossi: Is the federal government to blame for the results in Saint-Laurent and Louis-Hébert?

Mr. La Salle: Secondly, Madam Speaker, the APU strongly condemned the agricultural stabilization programs, and recommended that the stabilization system should be based on production costs instead of the average figure for the past five years. Considering that the seventy-four Quebec members opposite have the same document I do and that the the minister would have done well to examine it, could the minister inform the House whether he intends to respond positively to this recommendation, for the greater benefit of Canadian farmers?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member referred to a document which was released late last week. Let me go back even further to one which I made available to farmers and to himself in 1977 where we offered 100 per cent income assurance to producers. Farm organizations and provincial governments turned down that program. If they had accepted the program which the Government of Canada offered them at that time, there would be no problem at the present time with the vast majority of producers in Canada.

Mr. La Salle: Yes or no, Gene!

Mr. Whelan: It offered to take care of those things. I suggest he ask his leader right next to him who advocated higher interest rates in the fall of 1979. He advocated higher interest rates. He said that we could look toward them and that he would support the Governor of the Bank of Canada at that time.

Mr. La Salle: You said, "No", Gene; that is all.

HOUSING

FIRST-TIME PURCHASERS OF HOMES

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Bill C-89 which was recently passed in the House provided some help for people who are renewing their mortgages, renovating their homes or needing rental accommodations, but no help was provided for first-time purchasers of homes. My question is simply this: why not?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, with respect, the question as posed by the hon. member is inaccurate. Indeed, questions were raised in the House over the last couple of days, for example dealing with new mortgage instruments such as a variable rate mortgage, a shared equity mortgage, or who knows what other new types of instruments might be promoted in the present changing economic climate, and all those instruments heretofore were not possible and could not be insured by the corporation. It was the initiative of the government in Bill C-89 to give the corporation additional flexibility to provide mortgage insurance to encourage additional flexibility for people who are first-time home purchasers.

QUERY RESPECTING NUMBER OF FIRST-TIME HOME PURCHASERS

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, the annual report of CMHC on March 12 indicated that first-time home purchasers had a much reduced ability to participate in the current market. Also it indicated that in 1980, 61 per cent of people buying homes were first-time purchasers and that in 1981 the figure was 44 per cent. What is the minister's estimate for this year?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, it is almost a truism to reflect that one leader in terms of inflation in the last two years has been the cost of land and of housing. We know that the rapid increase in the price of housing in British Columbia was repeated right across Canada, from west to east. However, in the last six months or so, it appears as if the price is moderating and that that movement as an indicator of inflation is moderating. I dare say that the budget, which introduced the position taken by the government to restrain expenditures, to reduce the deficit, to monitor the economy at the same time and to provide impetus and support to those who need help the most, is responsible for that moderation in inflation.

COST OF LAND

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, the minister said that the cost of land rose tremendously last year, but Statistics Canada showed that the cost of land remained stable. Who is correct, the minister or Statistics Canada?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have not had the opportunity of looking at the statistics to which the hon. member referred. I think I would need to have an opportunity of comparing the two figures to which he referred. It may be, for example, that land and buildings are referred to; sometimes statistics refer to real estate. Without having the particulars of the schedules about which the hon. member is speaking, I do not think I could answer the question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FUTURE OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The minister will recall that last November he announced in Chatham, New Brunswick, that 416 Fighter Squadron would be withdrawn from the base there. He also made a commitment to the people of the region that the full resources of the Government of Canada would be brought to bear to find solutions to the problem created by that withdrawal. Also the minister knows that a great deal of anxiety and concern was caused by the announcement. Could he give us an update on what has occurred since then to resolve this serious problem?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi knows the problem in this region very well. I understand his concern. I can assure him that our first objective is to try to ensure that equivalent for employment and economic activity is found for the Northumberland-Miramichi region. To that end, we have just established a new committee of very respected, high-ranking officials to look specifically at the current problem in Chatham. I would also like to assure the hon. member that we are doing everything possible to reassure the people of Chatham that we will stand behind the commitment we made in November when I was there.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE HOLD PUBLIC HEARINGS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. He has just announced today, April 6, the setting up of a committee that he announced in December he would establish. There has been a four to five months time lapse. Will the minister assure the House that this committee will be charged with holding public hearings? Will he explain to the House why this is a committee of officials and will he explain why he does not trust members of this House of Commons to conduct a public inquiry into this question?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not believe the Leader of the Opposition understands the problem.

As the Leader of the Opposition is aware, we have an interdepartmental committee looking into defence infrastructure, and this committee looked at the Chatham area. As we are phasing out the 416 Squadron, we have a commitment to the Chatham area to find equivalent in economic activities and employment opportunities for that region.

Under the direction of several different ministers, among them the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, we have now set up a special committee to ensure that we look at the Chatham area as a priority specifically so that we can arrive at a solution in 1984.

SUGGESTED PARLIAMENTARY STUDY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I understand perfectly that the Liberal government is shutting down the Chatham Base when it does not need to do so. I understand perfectly that the Liberal government is setting up a committee of officials, of public servants, who will shut out public inquiry. This is a democracy. Why trust everything to public servants? Why will the minister not allow this public question to be looked into by a committee of elected members of the House of Commons?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I fail to understand why the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is telling us we are not democratic. In fact, I announced last November to the Miramichi Chamber of Commerce that the 416 Fighter Squadron would be leaving Chatham. Certainly everything was open and above board. I believe we asked an interdepartmental committee to find out how we could meet our commitment to the citizens of Miramichi to maintain the same level of employment and economic activity in the region when 416 Fighter Squadron leaves in 1984. I think it is perfectly normal to ask our officials to look into this and prepare a study. I feel that, subsequently the ministers concerned will act according to their responsibilities and see what they can do in this area.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE BE ESTABLISHED TO CONDUCT INQUIRY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker. I fail to understand why the minister is so afraid of the members of this House and of the Parliament of Canada. I do not know why he always seems to prefer public servants. The matter is quite simple. Why not have an inquiry by a parliamentary committee and do this in a democratic way? Why hide behind public servants? Why not have a parliamentary committee in order to have a full inquiry, a public inquiry, so that members on all sides of the House will be able to do for the citizens of New Brunswick what hon. members for northeastern New Brunswick are not prepared to do themselves.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think it is very sad to see the Leader of the Opposition using the people of Miramichi to indulge in petty politics—

Mr. La Salle: Give a straight answer, it's not that difficult. Sit down if you don't have an answer—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lamontagne: I feel everything is quite straightforward. The Leader of the Opposition mentioned being afraid of democracy. The arrangements were made and the decision was announced last November. We met with the municipal council and the Chamber of Commerce. I had two meetings with the Premier of New Brunswick, Mr. Hatfield, who is coming here tomorrow for further discussions. So, everything is above board, and all the parties concerned in the Miramichi area will be informed about what we intend to do, and together we will decide what is to be done.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT SURTAX BE IMPOSED ON IMPORTED JAPANESE VEHICLES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. In view of the fact that he seems to be banging his head against a brick wall these days with respect to imports of Japanese cars and trucks, and in view of the fact that the Minister of State for International Trade said in this House that his primary responsibility was to protect Canadian jobs, will the minister now impose a temporary emergency 15 per cent surcharge on all Japanese cars and trucks coming into this country in 1982?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware of the substantial number of jobs in this country that are dependent upon exports that Canadian firms have to sell to other countries. I am sure the hon. member would like to see a positive conclusion to the negotiations rather than an enforced unilateral system here in Canada.

REASON FOR NOT IMPOSING SURCHARGE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister's seemingly positive approach to this problem is getting him absolutely nowhere, I do not think I can agree with what he just said. In seven months sales of Japanese-made trucks increased 109 per cent while 21 per cent of all cars sold in Canada were built in Japan. Since there are no further restrictions on Japanese cars, the Japanese will still be able to claim at least 21 per cent or 22 per cent of our market while truck sales could double again. I ask the minister once more how can he continue to reject a 15 per cent surcharge which would simply equalize the price of Japanese and North American produced vehicles here in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as I have indicated several times in the last three or four weeks, we would much prefer to have a voluntary restraint quota agreed to by the Japanese.

An hon. Member: Are there negotiations going on?

Mr. Lumley: This matter is under negotiation, Madam Speaker. Negotiations of this magnitude do not come to a conclusion overnight, or in 48 hours. I am very hopeful that we will still arrive at a positive conclusion.

AGRICULTURE

ANDERSON-VANDERMEULEN REPORT ON BEEF INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the very difficult problems of pricing, marketing, and import costs facing Canadian beef producers, can the minister tell the House whether he will be releasing the Anderson-Vandermeulen study which he commissioned some time last fall? Would he tell the House what actions he is planning to assist this industry as a result of this report?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Anderson-Vandermeulen report referred to by the hon. member has been completed. We have submitted it to the department. The department is considering this report in conjunction with work which the department has been doing, the questionnaire that I sent to some 230,000 beef producers and the Senate report. I hope to have something that I can make public in the very near future and which I hope will be for the betterment of the beef industry.

FINANCE

PROCESSING OF INCOME TAX RETURNS—TELEX SENT TO REVENUE CANADA OFFICE IN VANCOUVER

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the minister denied in the House that there was any delay caused by his inability to bring budget measures before the House. As reported at page 16139 of Hansard for April 5, 1982, the minister said:

> Madam Speaker, there is no delay attributable to any confusion arising from the Ways and Means motions.

Therefore I would like to draw to the minister's attention a telex that was sent from a Revenue Canada official in Ottawa to the Revenue Canada district office in Vancouver, which reads:

> Taxpayers have been encouraged to file 1981 and 1982 T1 and T2 returns on the basis of budget proposals to avoid a retroactive effect. Returns filed on this basis will not be processed until the legislation has been approved by Parliament.

Here we have an official statement saying that the taxpayers' returns will not be processed until the legislation has been approved by Parliament. Since 75 per cent of Canadians get refunds, and since this budget morass is not of their making, why does the minister not resolve the problem by simply delaying the effective date of the legislation involved so that these taxpayers' returns can be processed and Canadians can get the money they so badly need?

Mr. Mazankowski: That is too reasonable.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue will be in the House tomorrow. I have taken note of the hon. member's question and her views, and the minister will act in the best interests of Canadian taxpayers.

• (1450)

[English]

IMPOSITION OF PENALTIES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I will address my supplementary again to the Minister of Finance because it is his budget. At least that is what we are told.

Officials are urging people who really need the money to file under the conditions existing prior to the November budget, and therefore risk having to pay interest and penalties. Since the responsibility for this sad state of affairs rests with the Minister of Finance, is he willing to suggest to his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, that any penalties incurred by taxpayers trapped in this swamp should be waived?

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Tessier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of National Revenue is following very closely the matter of filing income tax returns. We do not intend to grant any extensions, but in order to safeguard the entire process as well as the filing of tax returns, we shall take appropriate action, as required.

Mr. Clark: Thank God for Hansard!

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVIEW INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Conference Board of Canada has now fairly well substantiated what most of us have believed for some time, that if there is going to be any reduction in the inflation level it will be marginal, and will be borne primarily on the backs of people who are going to be unemployed. It is quite clear that the interest rate policy pursued by the government is the single largest contributing factor to the major economic problems we face today. It matters not whether you are talking about consumer purchasing, farm purchasing, or housing, in every single area interest rates are given as the main reason why purchasing is not taking place.

I ask the minister, is it not time for the government to review its mad policy of pursuing high interest rates and set an interest rate policy consistent with the recovery of our manufacturing sector? And if it means exchange controls, then let it mean exchange controls!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, no one is quarrelling with the hon. member's concern about high interest rates, but every time he raises the question he fails to make the inevitable connection between high interest rates and high inflation rates. The surest way for the hon. member to get lower interest rates is to get lower inflation rates. Once he makes that connection it will be possible for us to have a reasonable discussion. If he refuses to make that connection, then of course it is futile for him to ask for lower interest rates because we will not have them unless we can lower prices and the general level of inflation.

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE REDUCED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, of course there is a correlation between the two; no one denies that high interest rates contribute to the high level of inflation. I put to the minister that today in Hamilton there are another 1,800 people faced with another major lay-off, people who had been earning a living and looking after their families. In every community, in every industrial sector, and I do not care what part of the country you go to, no matter how you make the calculation, high interest rates are a major part of the cost of any commodity in the marketplace. If you reduce interest rates, you reduce the cost of a commodity and you get more efficiency, so why will the government not understand that and implement that kind of policy?

Mr. Thacker: You put them in there.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has again made the mistake of saying that high interest rates cause inflation.

Mr. Deans: They contribute to it.

Mr. MacEachen: Obviously they contribute to it, as the hon. members says, but the main force behind these high interest rates is the high inflation rate. The hon. member knows as well as I do that the high inflation we have is causing high interest rates and high unemployment, and the moment we start to make more progress than we are in getting the inflation rate down, the sooner we will have more jobs and the necessary recovery. That is why, Madam Speaker, the government is following the only policy available in the circumstances to bring down our rate of inflation.

ENERGY

DROP IN SASKATCHEWAN OIL PRODUCTION

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who will know that ever since he took charge of his portfolio, people in the oilfields of southern Saskatchewan have been out of work; it has not just happened in the last year. Eighty per cent of production in the Swift Current area is shut in, and 35 per cent in the Estevan-Weyburn area. This means hundreds of people out of work in Saskatchewan. At the same time the minister continues the practice of importing 400,000 barrels of oil a day at a cost to the taxpayer of over $3 billion a year.

Will the minister explain to the people of Canada, and in particular the people of southern Saskatchewan, how he can justify the direction he is taking in his portfolio?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I wonder where the hon. member has been during the past two years. First of all, last week I announced a number of specific measures to provide assistance in this area, measures aimed at starting up production in a number of oil fields that are shut in at the present time. This was due in part to the excessive royalty rates imposed by the government of Saskatchewan, which has now agreed to revise its rates. Second, I have announced measures to increase exports of this commodity to the United States, with the possibility of extending export permits, and these measures have been endorsed and supported by the Saskatchewan Minister of Energy. I therefore suggest that my hon. colleague should be better informed before asking such questions.

[English]

INCREASE IN PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, when the minister took charge of his portfolio the price of gasoline in Saskatchewan was $1 a gallon; today it is $2. The tax on that gallon is $1.36, divided between the two levels of government. How can the minister justify yet another increase, for which he is seeking the authority of this House, in view of the high price he has brought upon the people of Saskatchewan?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada is not asking for an increase in price other than the increases which have resulted from the agreement with the Government of Saskatchewan—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —and the hon. members on the other side, including the Conservatives, have been pressing the government to get even more.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Epp: Where is the 18 cents?

Mr. Lalonde: We have had to fight to get the agreement we have at levels lower than—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —what the Tories were trying to push upon the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with respect to Atlantic offshore resource development. The minister must know that offshore development is the major hope for job creation in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, yet the most promising developments off the Nova Scotia coast, such as Shell resources' $200 million drilling program with the Sedco 709, have been delayed and may be cancelled.

I have to tell the minister, Madam Speaker, that his policies are blamed for lost jobs and lost opportunities in Atlantic Canada, and I ask him whether it is true that he has refused to approve inter-company agreements and proposals which would result in development activity, all in the name of Canadianization. Will he Canadianize petroleum industry employees by giving them unemployment insurance cheques and welfare benefits in place of pay cheques from offshore developments?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is completely off base on offshore.

MEASURES TO ASSIST DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the minister's answer indicates his view of Atlantic Canada, which is facing unemployment of over 120,000. Newfoundland has over 16 per cent of its population unemployed, and unemployment is almost as high in Nova Scotia. What I want to know and what the people of Atlantic Canada want to know is what the minister will do to promote offshore development instead of hindering and delaying it.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in the last month we have succeeded in arriving at an excellent agreement with the Government of Nova Scotia which, I am sure, the people of Nova Scotia are very strongly supporting. Under that agreement, the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada are working jointly. We are working together for the benefit of the people of Canada, and the people of Nova Scotia, in particular. I can inform my hon. friend that, thanks to the Canada Oil and Gas Act that this government has passed in spite of the opposition—

Mr. Clark: The minister for OPEC.

Mr. Lalonde: —of the Tories on the other side, we have substantially increased Canadian participation and benefits to the Canadian workers and Canadian businesses of this country.

PETITIONS

IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to present to the House 135,327 signatures on a petition against the forced implementation of the metric system. This petition is 36 inches wide, three and a half miles long and weighs 247 pounds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: This is one of the largest petitions ever presented to the House of Commons. It is to be added to the 24,000 signatures which I presented last year.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. When the Chair rises, hon. members know that they must resume their seats. Hon. members cannot have it both ways. If they have given the page the petitions, which I assume were in the envelopes—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That was just part of it.

Madam Speaker: The roll and the envelopes. If they are all original signatures, that is fine. I cannot say that that is not a petition if the hon. member tells me it is.

An hon. Member: That's what it is.

Madam Speaker: I thought that the envelopes contained signatures and that the rolls contained other signatures.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Bring it in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: There they go, to the internment camp!

Madam Speaker: It takes the pages and four MPs to carry that petition! I wonder what that means.

Mr. Andre: Thirty cents a letter, too.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I would like this petition of 135,327 signatures to be added to the 52,000 signatures which have already been presented to this House, making a grand total to date, in less than 12 months, of 187,327 signatures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: This petition was gathered, put together and signed by Barbara Amiel, Peter Worthington—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: Laugh at the people if you like.

Mr. Domm: —Robert MacDonald, A. Donato, Anti-Metric Canada, Operation HUMBUG, Measure Canadian and the staff and management of The Toronto Sun.

Mr. Chénier: Oh, The Toronto Sun!

Mr. Domm: This is the petition of the undersigned residents of the federal ridings of Peterborough, Carleton-Charlotte, Capilano, Red Deer, Don Valley West, Scarborough East, York North, Ontario, Rosedale, Etobicoke Centre, Mississauga South, Calgary West, Hamilton-Wentworth, Victoria-Haliburton, Brampton-Georgetown, Parry Sound-Muskoka, Crowfoot, Edmonton North, Edmonton South, Edmonton-Strathcona, Edmonton West, Pembina, Wetaskiwin, Yellowhead, Okanagan-Similkameen, Bow River, Calgary Centre, Calgary East, Calgary North, Calgary South, Malpeque, in the provinces of Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that this honourable House will therefore provide a remedy.

We oppose the mandatory imposition of the SI Metric system in Canada; and we believe the pace, degree and nature of change to the SI metric should and must be determined voluntarily in the various sectors of trade and industry by the individual firms or industries directly concerned and with minimal government interference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: I urge this Liberal government seriously to consider these 135,327 signatures and add them to the 52,000 of 1981, making the grand total of 187,327.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, on a question of privilege—

An hon. Member: We are not on privilege!

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, the petition presented today is the result of false and misleading representations and information given—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I am afraid that is not a debatable question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We have concluded that is not true.

Madam Speaker: The petition will be read by the Clerk of Petitions and if it is in conformity with our rules, it will be accepted.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in rising to present a petition, I should remark that it is not unusual that an hon. member who has, in the past, counselled judges—

Mr. Ouellet: Order.

Mr. Clark: —should seek to counsel the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents of Yellowhead, Alberta. The purpose of this petition is to indicate that these petitioners, along with thousands of Canadians, oppose the mandatory imposition of the metric system in Canada. These Canadians believe that the degree and nature of change to the Systems International metric system should be determined voluntarily in the various sectors of trade and industry by the individual firms concerned and further believe there should be minimal government interference.

Therefore, I present this petition on behalf of my constituents in the full knowledge that thousands of Canadians share their concern and are protesting mandatory imposition of metric conversion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: On a question of privilege arising from the remark which has just been made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), I want to say—

Some hon. Members: True, true!

Mr. Ouellet: —that if the leader of that party has to go with cheap shots like the one which has just been given—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: —to establish his own position in Parliament, it is very downgrading for this institution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1510)

Some hon. Members: Sit down, sit down!

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but this is no time for debate. With one sentence on one side and one sentence on the other side, I think that equals the opportunities.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition on behalf of a great many of my constituents in Hamilton-Wentworth who oppose the mandatory imposition of the metric system in Canada. While many of my constituents are not against metric conversion per se they feel very strongly that democracy should be brought to the system, that the conversion should be voluntary. My people believe, as I do, that if the Government of Canada can require bilingual labelling of all retail goods, then surely this same government can order tandem labelling of imperial and metric measurements, to give consumers a freedom of choice. Madam Speaker, I humbly present this petition.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by many hundreds of citizens in Calgary North, is to indicate to the government that the citizens of Calgary North protest the forced imposition of the metric system in Canada by order in council. The nature of the petition is to demand that this government rescind its compulsory order to impose metrication on Canadians.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their concern, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in you and your office to draw to the attention of the government the hardships caused by the imposition of this order in council.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise to present a petition on behalf of the many residents of Rosedale riding who want to show their opposition to the compulsory implementation of the metric system. Madam Speaker, they believe that the pace, degree and nature of the change to the Systems International metric system should and must be determined voluntarily in the various sections of trade and industry, and by the individual firms or industries directly concerned and with minimal government interference.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to rise on behalf of the citizens of Ontario, and particularly the thousands of citizens of Toronto who continue to be opposed to the mandatory imposition of the metric system in Canada. Madam Speaker, they, among the 90,000 who have signed various petitions against this matter from my area, believe that the pace, degree and nature of the change to the metric system should and must be determined voluntarily in the various sections of trade and industry, and by the individual firms or industries directly concerned, and with minimal government interference.

Madam Speaker, I pray you will find when thousands of Canadians petition this House that they are expressing themselves openly and clearly, that they prefer free choice, and that you will find this petition important enough that it be given due consideration at some point here in the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the citizens of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, and hundreds of thousands of Canadians across Canada, I would like to present this petition opposing the mandatory imposition of the metric system.

It is the firm belief of those who signed that the pace, degree and nature of the change to the SI metric system must be determined voluntarily in various sectors of industry and commerce and that the present law represents unwarranted government interference in the lives of individual Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House on behalf of my constituents a petition disclosing opposition to the mandatory imposition of the SI metric system and favouring a voluntary implementation of the same upon determination by the private sector.

At the same time, I would like specifically to pay tribute to a young man in my riding, a certain Chris Bartolin who, concerned about the way in which the government has behaved, personally paid for an advertisement which gave rise just recently to—

Madam Speaker: Order. Hon. members should limit themselves to the content of the petition.

Mr. Gamble: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise to present a petition on behalf of the worthy citizens of Edmonton North, who are angry, frustrated and furious that this government would not allow an open debate on metric and would hope that the government would absolve the cost of implementation of this disaster. Therefore, we oppose the mandatory imposition of the SI metric system in Canada, and we believe that the pace, degree and nature of the change to the SI metric should and must be determined voluntarily, in the various sectors of trade and industry, by the individual firms or industries directly concerned, and with minimal government interference. I pray that you will take this into consideration, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: Madam Speaker, I must protest against that gang of hypocrites on the other side of the House who are speaking out against the metric system, while their leader—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is time to present petitions, not to debate the question. Hon. members are entitled to present petitions now.

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, I just wanted to know—I gave notice in writing that I intended to raise a question of privilege, and I should be grateful if you would allow me to discuss my question now.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member will be able to discuss his question of privilege after the Chair has dealt with petitions, although questions of privilege do have priority over all other matters in the House. If the hon. member wants to discuss his question of privilege he may do so, since, it is true he has given me notice. The hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) has the floor.

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, as usual, I am quite willing to co-operate with everyone in this House. I am willing to do so if the Chair gives me the floor after the other members have finished their business.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I am interested in the concern of the members opposite. I am sure that if they put forward a motion or a bill to make illegal the metric measure, they will be very pleased with the debate we would have.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I am rising to present a petition.

Madam Speaker: That is fine.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I rise on behalf of thousands of constituents of Etobicoke North, Etobicoke Centre and Etobicoke-Lakeshore who have presented a petition. It is my duty to speak on their behalf, because they oppose the mandatory imposition of the Systems International metric system, particularly those Canadians who have been caught off guard in their shopping recently in buying goods in metric and finding when they got home that they had spent considerably more—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members need not be reminded, I am sure, that the only thing they can do is make a brief statement of the title of the petition, and that is all. They are not to debate it or refer to certain facts that are peculiar to their particular constituency. I would appreciate it, since I have had notices of several petitions being presented, if hon. members would be particularly brief.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I will be brief. I believe it is my honoured duty to present this petition on behalf of the constituents of Etobicoke Centre.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my petition on behalf of my constituents regarding the mandatory imposition of metric is similar. I only want to say on their behalf that freedom of measure ought to be a measure of freedom.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I present this petition on behalf of the many thousands of citizens of the electoral district of Red Deer, Alberta, who oppose the mandatory enforcement of SI metric. Prime Minister Pierre is imposing metric. The population finds it hectic. Convert or else—face jail or fine. Drop Imperial, toe the line. My petition is: if yards become meters, at the same time, will Pierres become Peters?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I rise today, as have many other hon. members, to present a petition to the House of Commons opposing the government's mandatory imposition of the metric system of measurement here in Canada and calling instead for voluntary conversion. The petitioners' view is echoed by widespread and determined opposition in the constituency of Oxford to the government's strong-arm tactics in pushing for compulsory metric. The petitioners hope that the government will come to its senses and be sensitive to the needs, desires and concerns of the Canadian people, allowing them a say in metric conversion.

• (1520)

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I rise in response to the thousands of names that I have received from my constituents with respect to the implementation of the metric system, and I present their petition at this time.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, we petitioners of the undersigned riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka—and I also speak for many of the ridings in northern Ontario—now avail ourselves of our ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy. We humbly sheweth that we oppose the mandatory imposition of the SI metric system in Canada, that we believe the pace, degree and nature of change to the SI metric system should and must be determined voluntarily in the various sectors of trade and industry by the individual firms or industries directly concerned and with minimal government interference and, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the federal riding of Burlington who oppose the mandatory imposition of the SI metric system in Canada. We ask the House to give a proper and just redress to this grievance.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the citizens of Mississauga, may I present a petition against the mandatory imposition of the metric system in Canada. My constituents believe that metric should be voluntary.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present a petition to this House on behalf of the constituents of the federal riding of Okanagan-Similkameen who have added their signatures to a petition, the purpose of which is to express opposition to the mandatory imposition of the metric system in Canada. The nature of the petition is to pray and beseech that this House note the desire of the people of Canada to return to the voluntary nature of metric conversion with a minimum of governmental interference.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency and that you will bring to the attention of the Government of Canada the anxious concerns of citizens to the mandatory imposition of metrication in their country.

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present this petition of the many undersigned residents of the federal riding of Calgary East in the city of Calgary, Alberta, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy for those citizens who oppose the mandatory imposition of the SI metric in Canada and who believe that the pace, degree and nature of change to the SI metric should and must be determined voluntarily in the various sectors of trade and industry by the individual firms or industries directly concerned and with minimal government interference and, as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present to you on behalf of the citizens of Scarborough East and the other Scarborough ridings not being represented here today a petition opposing the enforced implementation of metrication in Scarborough and in Canada at a time when electronics provide instant recognition on weigh scales, of both imperial and metric, and at a time when we apparently cannot afford the cost of extremely expensive bilingual labels. I earnestly petition that we be given the freedom of choice on all labels involving weights and measures.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, it is my honour today to present a petition on behalf of thousands of my constituents in the Bow River riding in Alberta. My constituents oppose having metric shoved down their throats. They oppose compulsion by a totalitarian government in imposing metric on them. They oppose the spending of millions of their dollars to let the people know what is good for them.

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sure that is not in the title of the petition.

Mr. Taylor: It is.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member must not argue about the petition.

Mr. Taylor: Okay, I won't argue. I simply ask on behalf of my constituents that the government which passed the order in council and made metric compulsory now make it voluntary by order in council.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, it is my duty on behalf of thousands of constituents of Calgary West to present this petition to the House. The constituents in my riding are also concerned about the enforced aspect of metric and about the fact that democracy was not well served. The constituents in my riding would like to remind the members of this House and the government that when democratic ways are not attended to the faith which the people have in democracy today is inevitably eroded. This is one of those examples.

We hope that the government will pay attention to these petitions and might rescind the order forcing metric on a nation that does not want it.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OLIVIER—INCIDENT OF MARCH 31, 1982

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege which I feel is extremely important and, in fact, there is a second question of privilege connected with the first one. That is why I accepted your ruling last week, in which you mentioned I had failed to send notice. Furthermore, I wish to make it clear that I did send notice the same day you pointed this out to me, and I trust that in that respect, I have acted in accordance with the Standing Orders of the House.

I have found, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Do I understand correctly that the hon. member now has two questions of privilege to discuss? I have only received notice for one question of privilege. If there is a second one, I am very sorry, but the same procedure must be followed. Unless this question arises out of proceedings in the House, the hon. member may not discuss it, but I should be happy to listen to what he has to say about the first question.

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, I would like to say that the first question has been expanded so there is now only one question. So, in that respect, I have met your request. I should like to point out, and I want to make this quite clear, that the Speaker's role in the House is a very difficult one, and it is certainly not up to me to dictate the behaviour of anyone, even the Chair, and certainly not to make any kind of judgment on the qualifications of the members in this House.

Madam Speaker, on March 31, around 5.40 p.m. or 5.45 p.m., the member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who had the floor, and several government and opposition members, I believe, tried to raise points of order or questions of privilege to draw your attention and be recognized. I must point out, Madam Speaker, that on page 16031 of Hansard, it is clearly established that I tried to draw your attention eight times. On pages 16031 and 16032, we see names of the hon. members who witnessed my attempts to draw your attention eight times, Madam Speaker. I realize that I am a backbencher and I have been one for ten years in this House, but after all, it would have been only fair and reasonable to recognize me between my first and eighth attempt.

At my second attempt to draw your attention, Madam Speaker, you rose and said, and I quote:

> Order, please. There can be no point of order. The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton has not yet spoken. He has the floor.

In my view, you had, in fact, ruled on the alleged point of order or question of privilege I had raised. Furthermore, you—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member at this point. I remember clearly pointing out to the hon. member that I could not allow points of order at the time because I had just given the floor again to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—who had not yet uttered a single sentence, if I remember correctly—and that consequently, there could be no point of order on what the member for Nepean-Carleton had just said because he had not said anything. I must point out to the hon. member that if he would like to recall the circumstances in the House at the time, there were perhaps as many as fifteen members who were trying to be recognized by the Chair, and I could not, of course, recognize everyone at the same time. I tried to give each member a chance to speak, and the hon. member is not satisfied with the manner in which I finally was able to give him the floor. I am very sorry, but I do not feel that this is a matter for a question of privilege. The hon. member for Longueuil.

• (1530)

Mr. Olivier: I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I did not want to doubt your word, but I just wanted to point out that at page 16030, the member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had already started to speak. I would also like to remind you, Madam Speaker, that one of the privileges and perhaps the only privilege a member has in the House is the right to speak. And it is clear that the purpose of all privileges arising from that single privilege is to enable a member to express his views. It is also a fact, Madam Speaker, that it is extremely difficult for the Chair to recognize 282 members at the same time, and I realize this. I also realize, Madam Speaker, that when we consider the sixth time I tried to get your attention, not the second time as I said earlier but the sixth time, once more, you prejudged the question I wanted to raise, assuming that I wanted to question the hon. member, which was not the case. As page 16031 of Hansard indicates, you prejudged what I was going to say.

I should like to point out, Madam Speaker, that Beauchesne's fifth edition mentions the member's privilege of freedom of speech. In Beauchesne, fifth edition, Citation 55 on page 21, it says very clearly, Madam Speaker, that practically the only right a member has in the House is the right to speak. And neither the Chair nor anyone else may judge the hon. member before he has been heard.

Finally, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please! I really have the impression that the hon. member, after sending me notice of his question of privilege which was supposed to refer to the fact that his earphone was not working, is now dealing with an entirely different question. The hon. member has probably realized that his earphone has been repaired. After looking into the matter, we found that the earphone's wires had been cut. That means that we have a serious security problem here in the House of Commons, because I cannot imagine who could possibly get into the House and cut the wires of a member's earphone.

In any case, the matter is being investigated, and as far as the hon. member is concerned, I believe that since then his earphone has been repaired. If the hon. member wishes to criticize the manner in which I conduct the proceedings in this House, he knows there is a formal way of doing this. The other day, I was not prejudging the question he wished to address. I was simply making use of my right to recognize this one or that hon. member, and when twenty or more hon. members are trying to get the floor, it is really one of the few powers the Chair has. I gave preference to another hon. member over the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) at various times. Eventually, it was his turn. I really do not see any reason for the hon. member to complain, and I do not see that this is a matter for a question of privilege. Therefore, I do not think the hon. member can take the floor again to discuss his question of privilege.

Mr. Olivier: Once again, you are prejudging what I am going to say.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Longueuil has the floor.

Mr. Olivier: Madam Speaker, once again you are prejudging my conclusions. I suggest you wait until I finish.

Madam Speaker: Order, please! Will the hon. member please sit down? The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has the floor.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, it comes as a shocking surprise to me that we learn for the first time that the electronic Hansard system in the House of Commons has been tampered with. No doubt you have asked for an inspection of all members' systems, so that their microphones and speakers may be examined. I would be interested in learning whether any other member's microphone or speaker has been tampered with and whether there is an ongoing investigation into the whole of the circumstances surrounding what appears to have been a deliberate tampering with the electronic system in this chamber.

Madam Speaker: I would remind the hon. member that there is an ongoing inquiry into what has taken place because I, just as the hon. member, was quite shocked at the idea that someone could have tampered in this way with one member's microphone.

Mr. Nielsen: No doubt, Madam Speaker, when your inquiries are completed all members would be interested in hearing the results.

While that investigation is going on, I recall that particular evening in question when the sound in the whole of this place was turned off. I noticed the gesture of despair which was made by the operator of the system. The only station that was being heard was the Chair. The sound and the lights were totally dead at all other positions. Perhaps that also is the subject matter of the inquiry you are conducting.

Madam Speaker: I believe if that happened it was because the Speaker was standing in her place. As the hon. member knows, the rule that we established when we introduced electronic Hansard was that there would be an electronic interpretation of the Standing Orders. This is quite a brilliant idea since, when the Speaker rises, members should resume their seats and only the Speaker should be allowed to speak. The microphones at members' desks go off automatically. Those are instructions that we have all agreed would be given to the people at the console. If the hon. member is referring to a situation such as the one I have described, he would know that that is quite normal.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I know it is quite normal in those circumstances but I recall very clearly that you had recognized the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). You were seated and the operator was obviously frustrated because he could not activate the microphone in front of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and he was shrugging in despair. I wonder if that might be checked out with the electronic Hansard personnel, just to double check on those circumstances.

Madam Speaker: That as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I also want to say that you were right when I pointed out that the simultaneous translation system was out of order. I simply wish to refer you to a ruling made by one of your predecessors, in 1968, I believe, about a defective translation system or the absence of translators. I would ask you to refer to this ruling, Madam Speaker, in the course of your investigation, and I would like this investigation to determine how it could happen that a member should be deprived of the simultaneous translation facilities when another member is speaking in the other official language which he cannot understand. It is in fact for this reason, Madam Speaker, that I rose eight times in an attempt to draw your attention to the problem. I did not want to interrupt the hon. member, who was entitled to speak, as you had recognized him. He therefore had a right to say what he had to say. However, what I want to say, Madam Speaker, is that I also had a right to understand what the hon. member opposite was saying, and it is for that reason that I tried eight times to call your attention to the problem and show you that I could not understand what the hon. member was saying. I would like to refer you, Madam Speaker, to a ruling made by one of your predecessors who stated very clearly that, in the various committees, when there are no interpreters or when no translation is available, the committees should not sit or should at least interrupt temporarily their proceedings while the problem is being solved. As you have pointed out, Madam Speaker, if we had 282 defective earphones, the whole proceedings would come to a stop, but when the problem affects only a few earphones, it is only fair and reasonable that someone should check the matter.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is still debating the issue. I shall look into this matter of the translation that the hon. member could not hear, but he must understand that this is only a technical problem affecting one member. Not all members were without translation. The hon. member should not overdo it. This is purely a technical or an administrative problem which could have been settled by a telephone call to my office. I believe this is the way to settle such matters. Unless the entire House is deprived of all the facilities to which it is entitled, I do not believe that such problems should be raised in the House.

• (1540)

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I do not want to prolong this matter, but I do think the record should be—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think the question has been sufficiently debated. I am trying to put an end to it. I will inquire into all these technical difficulties and report to the House.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING EXTINGUISHMENT OF CITIZENSHIP

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-650, to amend the Citizenship Act.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time, at the next sitting of the House?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the purpose of this bill—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should have risen earlier to make his brief statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I know he is allowed to make a brief statement, but he should have risen earlier. If the House will allow the hon. member to make his brief statement, we can revert to that particular part of the procedure.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to restore certain provisions omitted from the revised Citizenship Act which came into force in 1977. The former act extinguished the citizenship of any Canadian who, through a voluntary act, took up citizenship in another country or who declared his allegiance to another country. The bill would reaffirm this principle, namely, that a person cannot profess loyalty to two different countries at the same time.

I would add, Madam Speaker, that from the explanatory note in the printed version of the bill from which I am reading four words are omitted, and I would like to put them in. They should appear in the fourth line and read: "any Canadian who, through a voluntary act—"

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is debating the bill. I think the House has an idea what the bill is all about, and that is the purpose of this brief statement.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING EASTER RECESS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have had consultations with the representatives of each party, and if you ask the unanimous consent of the House for the following motion, I believe that you will get it, at least according to the discussions I have had with the hon. members for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

I therefore move:

That, when the House adjourns on Thursday, April 8, 1982, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 19, 1982, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Madam Speaker after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, Madam Speaker may give notice that she is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it has been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Madam Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker, the Deputy Chairman of Committees or the Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in her stead for all the purposes of this order.

Madam Speaker, I believe that there is unanimous consent for this motion.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I had no idea my name would appear as a seconder. I would like it to be removed. The seconder can be the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). We give our unanimous consent for the motion to be put now without notice. We do not intend to debate the motion. We do not intend to bring on a vote on the motion. We accept the decision of the government with respect to the content of the motion.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I get a little tired of the House leader for the official opposition picking and choosing when he will accept things. However, I will second the motion, if that is all that is required.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Poor Ian.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the government House leader could clarify something for me. My constituency is in Vancouver, and I would like to be home for Good Friday. I wonder whether the House will be adjourning at six o'clock on Thursday or whether it will continue to the regular time of ten o'clock, because we cannot get planes to get us home for Good Friday if it does.

Mr. Nielsen: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the way the motion reads it is obvious that the House will adjourn at ten o'clock on Thursday, but I certainly will not object if the hon. member leaves earlier, if he so desires.

I apologize to the opposition if I was understood as having said that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) seconded the motion. That is not what I said in French at all. I said I had consultations with him. It could be seconded by any hon. member on my side of the House who wishes to support the motion.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am not critical of the translation, but the problem is that what came over the translation was that I was seconding the motion.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, apropos what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has said, my House leader, of course, has quite properly agreed to a reasonable adjournment of the House. Those of us from the west coast are prepared to agree to this order—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Hey!

Mr. Waddell: —but I ask the government House leader to consider the possibility of adjourning the House earlier because some of us have to take part in these debates, it is a long way home and we want to be home for Good Friday. Perhaps by a later agreement, if the House leaders would think about this, we could in fact—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I hear hon. members laughing. This is a serious matter to us on the west coast. I just ask the government House leader to reconsider.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. member. I am willing to consider a further order, if we could get unanimous consent, but in the meantime I understand everyone agrees to the motion I have just read. In so far as the hon. member's request is concerned, I am willing to consider it and discuss it. If the opposition agrees—because Thursday will be an opposition day—I will certainly not object if we adjourn at six o'clock.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I would just like to advise that as an independent member of this House I was not consulted. In fact, I can refuse to give my consent to this motion. Nevertheless, I want to get home for Good Friday also, so I suggest that perhaps we do leave on Thursday at six o'clock. However, I point out that I would also be prepared to second the motion put by the hon. member opposite.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The House gives unanimous consent to the motion moved by the hon. President of the Privy Council which asks that the House adjourn—and I shall not read it again—on Thursday, April 8, at ten o'clock. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Motion carried.

ENERGY LEGISLATION

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I wish to put another motion which has the consent of all hon. members. We did not consult the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) when we dealt with the order related to the energy bills, but his rights were protected in the order. I want him to be assured that when we do not consult him, we see that his rights are protected at all times.

I move:

That, pursuant to section (g) of Standing Order 75.1, the members of the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation, created pursuant to the aforementioned section of the aforementioned Standing Order, be Messrs. Andre, Bosley, Collenette, Dawson, Evans, Foster, Hawkes, Lefebvre, MacLaren and Waddell.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,512, 3,961, 3,962 and 3,963.

[Text]

PORT OF LANSDOWNE, ONTARIO

Question No. 3,512—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the placing of question No. 3,322 on the Order Paper concerning whether or not immigration in the port of Lansdowne, Ontario might be placed under the direction of Kingston, is the government moving swiftly to have the matter placed under the jurisdiction of Kingston and, if so (a) what are all the reasons for haste (b) will the government consider representations from various interested parties before any decision is made to place the port under any jurisdiction outside the boundaries of Leeds-Grenville?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No.

(a) No haste is being taken in making this decision. As stated in the reply to question No. 3,322 part 1(b), it is part of our annual review of operational planning and as stated a final recommendation has not been made as of the date of this question.

(b) No. If it is simply an internal re-organization and does not affect the level of service in the area concerned or if it does not involve the closure of an office, the Commission has full authority to make this decision.

Question No. 3,961—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names and job designations of all the persons in government who played any part whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in the consideration being given to placing the Department of Employment and Immigration at the port of Lansdowne under the authority of the port of Kingston, which is outside the boundary of the constituency of Leeds-Grenville where the port of Lansdowne is located?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The decision to place the port of Lansdowne under the responsibility of the port of Kingston was made by the executive director of the Ontario region in consultation with his senior officials. It would be inappropriate to provide the additional information requested, as the full authority for making this decision rests with the executive director.

Question No. 3,962—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the provincial jail in Brockville in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville used for all persons arrested for immigration infractions at the port of Lansdowne and, if so, what would be the purpose of placing the port of Lansdowne, located in that constituency, under the authority of the Department of Employment and Immigration at Kingston, which would be outside the area and 50 miles from the jail?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No. The provincial jail in Brockville is used for some persons arrested for immigration infractions at Lansdowne. Some are transported to Ottawa immediately, the remainder are transferred to Ottawa within 24 hours. Brockville jail is usually crowded and does not have proper facilities to hold adjudication hearings. There are no full-time matrons for female prisoners; therefore, females are transferred to Ottawa as soon as possible.

Question No. 3,963—Mr. Cossitt:

Has political pressure been or is it being exerted from any person in government, directly or indirectly, on behalf of the government to place the Department of Employment and Immigration at the port of Lansdowne in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville under the authority of the port of Kingston which is outside the present area and, if so, what are all the details in this regard and what are the names of all those exerting such pressure?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No.

WAYS AND MEANS

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

That a Ways and Means Motion about a bill to amend the Petroleum Administration Act, laid upon the table of the House on Monday, April 5, 1982, be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-101, to amend the Petro-Canada Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to introduce for second reading Bill C-101, to amend the Petro-Canada Act, which is an important legislative element of the Government of Canada's National Energy Program. As hon. members may know, these amendments were originally included in Bill C-94, the energy security bill. The Tories' strike-with-pay against Parliament was an avoidable and most regrettable incident. Time which could have been spent debating in Parliament our proposals for energy security was lost, for nothing as it turns out, since the government had said all along that it was ready to split Bill C-94 if there was an agreement to treat all its elements with some dispatch.

Again today, Mr. Speaker, we saw more abuse of Parliament as the Tories were trying to turn the House into a circus. All those members who presented a petition today were the same members who, in 1977, passed unanimously the statute law amendment to the Metric Conversion Act.

Mr. Kempling: Wrong!

● (1630)

Mr. Lalonde: This is the type of hyprocrisy—

Mr. Kempling: You are the biggest hypocrite of all.

Mr. Lalonde: —that we are facing from the Conservative party, which had been hijacking Parliament a few weeks ago and is now trying to turn this House into a circus by acting on the basis of false and misleading information.

However, we now have an agreement by this House that all the legislative proposals contained in Bill C-94 will see approval by the end of June. I truly welcome this opportunity to put the past behind us and to put the first of our legislative proposals, these amendments to the Petro-Canada Act, before Your Honour.

During the 1980 election campaign, the Liberal Party promised to strengthen and expand Petro-Canada as an instrument of energy policy. This government is committed to deliver on this promise. Let me cite from our 1980 energy election platform. The Liberal Party program of the 1980 election campaign stated:

> The Liberal plan seeks to achieve energy security at a fair price for all Canadians. We would start at once to: > —strengthen and expand Petro-Canada as an instrument of national policy;
>
> —ensure that Canada's energy sector becomes more Canadian-owned and controlled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: That promise was formally repeated in the Speech from the Throne in which we said we will strengthen and expand Petro-Canada. I believe those are the precise words we used in the Speech from the Throne. Of course, the importance of Petro-Canada was ultimately written into the National Energy Program itself.

These commitments were obviously completely at variance with the position of the Conservative Party. Ever since, the Conservative Party has tried to dismantle, to dislocate, to destabilize Petro-Canada by hook or by crook. It has tried to damage Petro-Canada and to hurt this institution.

However, what we have is a number of amendments to the act. Many are merely for the purposes of consolidation and clarification. However, there are three amendments which I do consider express significant initiatives. These include an amendment to expand the authorized common share capital of the corporation, an amendment to permit the allocation of start-up funds for Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation, and an amendment to provide for the payment of moneys to fund a new subsidiary called Canertech.

Petro-Canada is an important element of the NEP because it allows all Canadians, through their national oil company, an opportunity to participate directly in, and benefit from, the development of our vast energy resources. Through its activities, Petro-Canada continues to play an important role in contributing to the process of Canadianization.

The total additional capital provided by this bill will be $4.9 billion. The new authorized capital ceiling it authorizes is $5.5 billion, but because $500 million has been subscribed under the present act, and since a further $100 million has been provided with respect to the interest in Panarctic Oils, the total of new capital funds available is $4.9 billion. This is a large sum, but in this context it should be pointed out that $4.9 billion is a small share of the roughly $300 billion which will be spent on Canadian energy projects in this decade.

What are the objectives of Petro-Canada, and how efficiently has this Crown corporation fulfilled that role? I think it is important that I spend a few minutes discussing these objectives, especially to inform our Conservative friends on the other side of the House about this very important national institution.

First, Petro-Canada is seen as playing a major role in securing Canada's energy future by finding and developing major new sources of oil and gas. To indicate the degree to which the corporation has been successful, I simply have to point out the Sable Islands and Hibernia discoveries where the role of Petro-Canada has been very significant and, as a matter of fact, Petro-Canada has been an active participant in both.

Second, it has the goal of encouraging industry to explore and develop in the risky and expensive, but exciting, frontier lands. Exploration and development activity in the Arctic Islands is testimony to Petro-Canada's achievement in this regard. Petro-Canada has been heavily involved in exploration in the Arctic Islands through Panarctic Oils, in which it has a 52 per cent interest. Panarctic, more than 80 per cent Canadian-owned, is the operator for a consortium of companies which has spent $600 million over the past ten years, resulting in very significant discoveries of natural gas and promising indications of oil in the Arctic Islands.

One field, Whitefish, which is located west of Lougheed Island, has been estimated to contain 64.5 billion cubic metres of natural gas. Panarctic officials estimate they have located possibly as much as 425 billion cubic metres of natural gas in the Arctic.

The third goal of Petro-Canada is to encourage Canadian oil and gas companies to become more deeply involved in oil and gas development by showing that a Canadian company can work with, and be as successful as, the major multinationals. Petro-Canada's success here is best illustrated by the fact that the company has been particularly active in encouraging other Canadian companies to become involved in eastern offshore drilling. For example, it heads up the Labrador project, a long-term effort involving many companies to thoroughly explore the coast of Labrador for oil and gas.

In 1980, Petro-Canada assigned a share of its participation in Davis Strait exploration to two Canadian companies, Home Oil Company Limited and PanCanadian Petroleum Limited, as part of a broad program to help Canadian companies become involved in frontier exploration.

The fourth objective is to provide Canadians with a significant and direct stake in the development of their oil and gas resources. Petro-Canada has made good progress toward achieving this goal, using the assets publicly acquired in effective and exciting ways. It has been particularly aggressive in exploring in the frontier regions and in encouraging other Canadian companies to do likewise. Approximately 35 per cent of its corporate spending and 60 per cent of its exploration budget goes into frontiers. Since 1976, Petro-Canada has been a prime mover behind 76 of the 128 wells drilled in the frontier. It is currently the only large Canadian landowner in the eastern offshore, the only Canadian operator there, and a participant in every major offshore well.

In 1981, Petro-Canada participated in more than 5 per cent of all exploratory and development wells in Canada. This included the drilling of over 230 oil and gas wells in western Canada, as well as participation in 15 out of the 22 wells drilled in the frontier Canada lands. I understand that the company's success rate on exploratory wells is 70 per cent, which is even higher than the average for the industry.

Although its spending in the frontier region is not expected to yield significant amounts of revenue until the latter part of this decade, Petro-Canada is facing the high risks of these frontier investments, knowing that when the time comes it will have the experience and talent, to the benefit of all Canadians, to develop the huge oil and gas reserves. The achievements of Petro-Canada have certainly not gone unnoticed, Mr. Speaker. Petro-Canada has in fact been recognized as a vital component of our plans to achieve energy security and self-sufficiency.

• (1640)

I would say that the only ones in this country and around the world who have not recognized this major role and major investment of Petro-Canada are the members of the Conservative party in this House.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lalonde: The 1980 study of Petro-Canada by the United States general accounting office identifies several areas where the Crown corporation has played, or is playing, a critical role in Canada's energy strategy. For example, the report has this to say about Petro-Canada generally:

> Petro-Canada has made an important contribution to improving Canada's energy situation, and is likely to play an increasing role in this regard under the Canadian Government's new energy policy.

Or this about Petro-Canada as a catalyst of oil exploration and development:

> Petro-Canada's experience indicates that it is possible for a national oil company to fulfil a social benefit function by accelerating the pace of exploration and development activities in high-cost/high-risk areas where private company activity may be insufficient and currently uneconomic.

As the U.S. study finds:

> Likewise, it appears that Petro-Canada has been about as successful in conventional oil and gas production as private companies.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe the facts I have just described speak for themselves, and more often than not, Petro-Canada has played a leading role in starting up projects, especially in the frontier areas of the Arctic offshore. However, I wish to repeat a formal commitment made by the government in the past. We want to strengthen and expand Petro-Canada and increase its activities, but the government has no intention of allowing the presence of the public sector to squeeze out the private sector in the oil and gas industry. The industry is, and will remain, largely in the hands of the private sector. In fact, a major part of the National Energy Program was developed with a view to creating policies and a climate that would be favourable to investment, thus enabling a dynamic private sector to fulfil its role in providing for Canada's future energy needs. If polls are any reflection of reality, Canadians heartily approve of the expenditures related to Petro-Canada. The Crown corporation has done excellent work, both on its own and in collaboration with others. Many of the projects it is undertaking in the national interest require enormous investments on which no return can be expected before the long term. The corporation must have the financial resources it needs to do a good job.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, another important initiative taken by Petro-Canada is the formation of the subsidiary, Canertech. Only a year and a half old, Canertech is already playing a substantial and important role in helping to achieve the National Energy Program's goals of conserving energy and moving off oil on to more abundant alternate energies.

Based in Winnipeg, Canertech is dedicated to helping commercialize conservation and renewable energy technologies. There are three ways that this mandate can be carried out: first, Canertech can invest in or participate in joint ventures with enterprises involved in demonstration, production, distribution and marketing. Second, it can take a leading role in producing, distributing and marketing these technologies. And third, the Crown corporation can engage in research and development projects.

Canertech can promote real progress in meeting public policy objectives in conservation and renewable energy. In this regard, it will act as a catalyst and provide management and financial assistance to an infant Canadian industry that is in many cases hampered by the lack of managerial or financial strength.

Canertech was originally capitalized with $20 million from Petro-Canada. The amendments to the Petro-Canada Act now before this House provide for the repayment of that capital as well as for up to $35 million in additional funding.

In addition to ensuring Canada's energy security we also have an obligation to less fortunate nations.

[Translation]

In the past, the Government of Canada has emphasized its desire to help less fortunate countries, particularly in the energy field. One form of aid would consist in helping these countries to reduce or altogether eliminate their dependence on imported oil. The objective is to give them the capability of producing certain quantities of as yet undiscovered or undeveloped energy resources, or to encourage them to focus on new forms of energy and adopt additional energy conservation policies. To meet Canada's commitment in this respect, amendments are being proposed to the Petro-Canada Act in order to establish a Petro-Canada subsidiary, to be called the Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation. The subsidiary is to provide various forms of assistance to developing countries, including, for instance, participation in oil and gas exploration in these countries and studies and preliminary studies on oil and gas exploration. Finally, Petro-Canada will be able to provide technical assistance and training in the exploration, development and production of oil and gas.

The government is placing considerable emphasis on this new initiative, which, I must say, has been extremely well received by the developing countries and in fact, by all countries, especially at the international conference held in Nairobi last summer under the auspices of the United Nations. The plan to create Petro-Canada International was very well received, and the corporation has already received requests for aid from some forty countries.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, which provides for a number of amendments to the Petro-Canada Act, is therefore extremely important. It specifically provides for a substantial increase in the corporation's capital, to enable Petro-Canada to take on its responsibilities with respect to the oil industry in general, so that the corporation will be able to continue to play the major role it has already been playing in Canada lands exploration and development. It is clear that as a Crown corporation, Petro-Canada does not have the same access to the capital market as a private enterprize, and that the corporation's financing is provided by the Government of Canada, its sole shareholder. The amendments to the Petro-Canada Act, whether they concern an increase in capital shares or the creation of Canertech Inc. which has a mandate to develop new forms of energy and energy conservation in Canada or the Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation, all of the amendments I have just mentioned are extremely important as far as the implementation of our National Energy Program is concerned.

Indeed I hope that these amendments will win the support of all the parties in this House and that for once, the Progressive Conservative Party will relinquish its instinctive antagonism against Petro-Canada and that all Tories in this House and elsewhere in this country will realize that the vast majority of Canadians are favouring the development of Petro-Canada, supporting the existence of this corporation and condemning the position of systematic criticism which the Progressive Conservatives have taken as concerns this institution. Indeed, the amendments which we are introducing today will give Petro-Canada, and through Petro-Canada, all Canadians, an opportunity to participate even more in the development of oil and hydrocarbon resources in Canada. Once again, I invite all the members of this House to consider these amendments and to support them unanimously.

• (1650)

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to talk on one of the eight bills which have come out of the bell-ringing which took place for 16 days in the Parliament of Canada. The bell-ringing has already achieved several objectives which I think are in accord with the protection of democracy and, therefore, important. Part of what we achieved through the bell-ringing is a saving of 46 cents a gallon in the taxing power of the minister. That is not necessarily a democratic principle, but it is a bread-and-butter issue for most Canadians.

As I stand here today, I wonder how many members of this chamber, in particular how many cabinet ministers and backbenchers on the government side, knew that one hour ago in this chamber they were voting on a Ways and Means motion which would impose a tax on gasoline of 52 cents a gallon; 52 cents a gallon from a government that won an election by saying that 18 cents was too much. That is not all the taxes. That is just one tax in that Ways and Means motion.

How many members opposite read the complex 140-page bill and the ways and means that lay behind it? How many understood that the tax was to be 98 cents a gallon? The bells rang for 16 days. Whenever we could we pointed out to Canadians that hidden in that massive, mixed up bill was 98 cents a gallon. All of a sudden the minister backed down from 98 cents and all he wants is 52 cents.

I wonder if the minister in charge of housing understood that. Did he know what he was voting on in this House one hour ago? I suspect he did not. He believed the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). One of the difficulties in Canadian public policy today is the mythology that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knows what he is talking about. That is a myth. This Minister of Energy Mines and Resources consistently, time after time, day after day in this House of Commons, demonstrates with clarity that he does not understand the industry and does not understand the impact of his national energy policy on Canadian consumers, workers and the fabric of our society.

As I stand in this House today, I have a sense of certain knowledge that we have heard time and again that this government will protect Canadians from the high costs of gasoline and home heating oil, that it has reached a marvellous agreement that will not allow Canadian oil and gasoline prices to rise above 75 per cent of world prices. They say it day after day after day.

To the south of us is a nation that in public policy said something different. They said their prices would be at world levels. Canada said ours would not go beyond 75 per cent. However, if we get in our cars and drive south across that border, in most parts of the country when we pull up to the gasoline pump or buy home heating oil, the price we pay as consumers is less than the price in Canada today. To prove that to yourself, Mr. Speaker, you need only get in your car and drive south of the border. That is a special kind of magic. We will only pay 75 per cent of world prices, Americans will pay 100 per cent; yet when a consumer buys gas or home heating fuel, he pays less south of the border today than he would pay north of the border.

Then we get to Petro-Canada. The minister says he will strengthen and expand it. He says the Conservative party would have dismantled it. I have never heard the leader of my party or any spokesperson on behalf of my party use the word "dismantle" in relation to Petro-Canada. We used the word "privatize", and we used it for good reason.

Let us examine the minister's assertion that Petro-Canada, on behalf of the Canadian people, has proved to to be a marvellous vehicle. We on this side of the House are anxiously awaiting the annual report of Petro-Canada; it is due fairly soon. It will deal with the activities of that Crown corporation in the year 1981, the year just passed.

It is an oil company existing in Canada, owned by the government. The shares are not held by all Canadians but by one person, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That one person appoints the chief operating officers, has influence on the board of directors and has put together a company. Over the years that company bought three successful companies differing in size but with one common characteristic. Every one of those companies made a profit, sometimes substantial. They paid taxes on that profit. They paid those taxes to the Government of Canada. Taxes were paid by their employees and taxes were paid on what they bought. All of that came into the government till.

Several years ago this chamber was asked to approve a bill. I was not a member of this chamber at the time. It was to take some taxpayers' money and put it in the hands of a president, chairman and board of directors in order that they could buy some successful company, which they did. I will make a prediction. It is too bad the minister of energy has left the chamber. When we get to see the 1981 annual report of the Crown corporation called Petro-Canada, I predict that the bottom line will be a red one. In spite of taxpayers putting over $1,000 million into that company in one form or another, its management, board of directors and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will have managed that company so successfully that it will be the only multinational, the only large company in the oil industry in Canada, which will have to report that it lost money.

• (1700)

The minister indicated that there were only three important amendments in this bill which is before us today. I believe there are more than three, but he identified three amendments which will cost taxpayers more money, and identified them as the most important amendments. The first amendment will cost $5 billion dollars. This is a curious day to consider the question of Canadian taxpayers forking over another $5,000 million, because in this chamber last evening at about ten o'clock the Liberal members made a choice on public policy. They are being asked to make another choice today. They indicated last evening that they were going to cut $5 billion dollars from the provinces who could use that money for health care and post-secondary education. They said they were going to squeeze health care and post-secondary education, take that $5 billion dollars which could have gone back to the people of this country and put it into the hands of a small board of directors who are appointed by Parliament so that they can spend that money—if they perform as they did last year—and go into the red again.

I remind members of the House that the government recently borrowed billions and billions of dollars at rates of interest very close to 20 per cent, 19½ per cent. If that $5 billion—$5,000 million—is simply loaned out, you could earn interest with it. You could just keep it but if it is loaned at close to 20 per cent it means $1 billion a year in interest. That is $1,000 million a year. This money could be kept in the hands of the government, who are the trustees of the taxpayers' money, and spent for other purposes.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources began his remarks by indicating that our party rang the bells as a strike against Parliament.

Mr. Lalonde: "Strike with pay".

Mr. Hawkes: Although that is a perception that I hope the minister really does not believe, I suspect that he does. Our concern on this side of the House is becoming deeper and more acute every day about the rights of Canadians to be able to express themselves in a democratic process, in Parliament and other forums.

Mr. Lalonde: You muzzled Parliament.

Mr. Hawkes: When I look at the amendments regarding Petro-Canada proposed by the minister, one of the amendments proposes to give three members of cabinet—the Minister of Finance, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources—the power to risk another billion dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money. If the government was concerned about democracy, Parliament and the electoral process, would that amendment be there? If it was concerned about democracy, would we have instead an amendment which would provide that if taxpayers of Canada are to risk their money through the borrowing authority of a Crown corporation, the opinion of Parliament on that borrowing should be sought? That is what democracy and representative government is about.

We live in a democracy—or we used to—with democratic processes. Voters elect people to come here and they give Parliament certain authority which does not exist in other parts of our society. They give us the right to take away our freedom through legislation in the Criminal Code. They give us the authority to take money out of their pockets and determine how it will be spent. During my two and a half years in this chamber, almost every piece of legislation I have seen has contained clauses which transfer that authority to take money out of people's pockets and put it into the hands of the government. There are always clauses which take that authority away from Parliament.

This subverts the fundamental principle of democracy that voters should control their Parliament. That is the reason why this place exists. The subversion which happens in piece after piece of legislation takes that authority away from elected Members of Parliament and gives it in perpetuity to appointed cabinet members, boards of directors and appointed civil servants. The authority to tax the people is taken away from their elected representatives and given to people appointed by the government. This is a subversion which is very real and damaging to our whole democratic system.

I would like to deal with some aspects of the National Energy Program and the role that Petro-Canada plays in it. I have already discussed the fact that by splitting this bill we were able to have a vote today on whether or not members of this chamber want to authorize the minister of energy to tax Canadians to the tune of 52 cents a gallon. The members in our opposition party stood up in the House and said no, that 52 cents a gallon was too much. If we had not allowed the bells to ring we would not have been able to vote separately, as was done today and as will happen two or three more times.

I wonder how members opposite will feel about getting up in the House two or three more times to say that the minister of energy should be allowed to tax Canadians 52 cents a gallon when those members know that they said during the last election that 18 cents was too much. That is the first point.

I am somewhat disturbed today. I was in public accounts this morning when the steering committee proposed a motion that the Auditor General of Canada—the watchdog of taxpayers' money—should conduct an audit into the operation of the petroleum compensation charge. It was a motion for an audit of that revenue of $5 billion to $6 billion which is collected in taxes, some of which they pay out.

Mr. Dingwall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is time for you to consider the point of relevancy. I do not see what this has to do with the bill which we are discussing this afternoon.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The nine members of the Liberal Party who were entitled to sit on that committee stood up today and said no, they do not want the public accounts committee—elected Members of Parliament—and they do not want the Auditor General, who is the watchdog on behalf of Canadians, even to consider whether or not there are hundreds of millions of dollars worth of taxpayers' money being wasted by that program. Testimony was put on the record showing clearly and absolutely that it is, but the Liberal members voted not to allow that inquiry to proceed. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall) was at that meeting, and that is the way he voted. He knows very well this is relevant to the bill before us today because this morning he heard that the advice to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources respecting that charge and how it should be spent may indeed have been influenced by Petro-Canada, that wonderful window, the large oil company which is losing money when all others are making money.

• (1710)

Mr. Thacker: Even dummies make money.

Mr. Hawkes: He knows such an investigation by the Auditor General might have been important to the taxpayers of this country. It might have been their only protection against a cabinet which controls information and appointments to board of directors. it controls and controls and controls. All we were trying to do in the Public Accounts Committee this morning was save Canadian taxpayers some money. I refer particularly to people on fixed incomes and with health problems. But no, something is going on on the other side. Something is going on which indicates that public inquiry is to be avoided. Getting information so that we understand is to be avoided.

When we rang the bells we set a couple of conditions, but one was of particular importance to hon. members on this side of the House. That condition was that the bill be split so that parts of it could be sent to committee. I do not intend, nor do other members of my party, to use a lot of the time of the House debating this bill on Petro-Canada at second reading because we believe it is important to get it to committee. The committee has the capacity to call witnesses who have the technical competence necessary to advise us on the repercussions of this particular piece of legislation and the seven others the committee will have to examine. That was the very important principle which lay behind the ringing of the bells. Pieces of legislation which deal with complex subjects and require witnesses with technical expertise should go to committee where witnesses can be called and hon. members can have the opportunity to be informed and, hopefully, to discover whether the minister has been well advised.

When we look at the National Energy Program, we discover very quickly that the consequences of that program to this date are as follows: the extent of our use of imported oil has increased. The extent of our use of domestic oil has decreased. Oil prices have gone up as an inevitable consequence of that mix. Our balance of payments has been affected negatively. The value of our dollar is less, and all kinds of goods are more expensive as a consequence.

It takes a particular kind of genius to put in place a chunk of public policy which is so clearly antithetical, negative and against the public interest, and yet that is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has succeeded in doing in two years. If the president of Petro-Canada, our marvellous window on the Canadian petroleum industry, appeared before the committee and we asked him what has happened to the Canadian petroleum industry, being honest, he would have to say he has never in all his professional career seen the industry so devastated, that he has never seen so many people out of work and so many dollars being sent out of this country and off to other nations. This is not just for the purchase of petroleum, which is bad enough; experts will tell us of the flight of some $10 billion—$10,000 million—of investment capital, money which could have been used in this country to create jobs and to buy cars, trucks, drilling platforms, pipe, snowmobiles and all those products produced by our manufacturing industry. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has sent $10,000 million out of the country with his policies. Has this saved us money at the pump? No, it has not. Most of it went to the United States, and when we drive up to the gas pump there today, we pay less than we do in Canada. Has this caused many to be unemployed? You bet your life it has, Mr. Speaker. In my city the bankruptcies are like dominoes. My city was a vibrant part of the country. It was an engine of economic growth. Jobs were being created all over this country because the industry was buying products.

Mr. Irwin: Why don't you use the Heritage Fund to bail them out?

Mr. Wright: Don't be so naive.

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources singlehandedly has done more than anyone to drive this country into depression and recession.

Mr. Waddell: He made an agreement with Lougheed.

Mr. Hawkes: I have heard hon. members opposite express concern on behalf of unemployed people in their ridings. I think their concern is genuine. Every member of this House is bothered by an increasing unemployment rate, but do we in this chamber accept responsibility for having caused it?

Mr. Gimaïel: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Hawkes: It is not an accident. It has been caused by a mix of misguided and ill-founded policies. The consequences of those policies were not thought through.

In the committee this morning the New Democratic Party joined with us in our concern about the impact of the petroleum compensation charge on jobs, on consumers and on people on fixed incomes. Members of the New Democratic Party should share some of the responsibility for the decision made in December 1979. That decision was to put the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in charge of energy. That decision was to put the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in charge of finance. That decision taken by the NDP in December 1979 was to put in place the policies which are driving Canadians out of their homes, driving Canadians off their farms, driving Canadians out of their small businesses and driving Canadians out of their jobs. That was a decision the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party together took in December 1979.

It is prophetic to be standing here examining Petro-Canada today, a day on which members of the Liberal Party stood in this chamber and voted to give the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the authority to raise the price of a gallon of gasoline 52 cents after he and members of his party fought an election saying 18 cents was too much. Surely there must be a point where politics stop, common sense begins and the welfare of the Canadian people becomes our primary concern. In the midst of a recession I hope that we have come to that point.

In that context, Mr. Speaker, we must consider whether we want to give $5 billion more to Petro-Canada. We must also examine whether we want to take it away from other potential uses, such as health care, job creation and education, and turn it over to a board of directors that apparently is not known to anyone. Who is on this board of directors? Do hon. members opposite know? What do these people know about running an oil company? Are they campaign managers, appointed civil servants with other responsibilities or are they people knowledgeable about what is a very difficult and technical business?

In the public accounts committee I asked whether there was anybody on the Petroleum Compensation Board who had the background, training and experience necessary to compete successfully for a position as a crude oil buyer. The answer was that there was not. At that moment I felt a small twinge of sympathy for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and for the cabinet. They have received advice on that program from people who do not have the background or experience that would make them reliable sources for the kind of information that is needed by a minister who is willing to listen and to act. When any of us receive flawed information, then the possibility of making a bad decision is increased immeasurably.

May I suggest that that is the difficulty that the Liberal party has always had in regard to energy policy, Mr. Speaker. Members of that party do not come from regions where large numbers of people are employed in the industry, and their friends, their neighbours and the people on the street in their constituencies do not work in the industry.

If I could draw an analogy, let us suppose we had an automobile compensation charge which worked the way the petroleum compensation charge does. In that case the federal government would decree that every car and truck sold in Canada would carry an extra tax of $2,000. It would then say that all importers of cars and trucks should be given $2,000 per vehicle. In other words, put it on all vehicles then give it back, and more, on the imported vehicles. Imagine what it would do to the Canadian automotive industry if all of a sudden a tax was charged on every automobile purchased and then that money was then given back to the foreign car companies.

The analogy to oil is not complete until we get to the numbers involved and find that some kinds of Mexican crude is 40 per cent cheaper than Canadian. In reality, the Canadian is the cheapest one but we are buying the Mexican crude and using our taxes to subsidize it and make it cheaper. How would hon. members opposite feel if that practice were applied to automobiles or shoes or snowmobiles? The money is being taken out of taxpayers' pockets in order that the government can give it to foreign competitors. This makes their product cheaper than the Canadian one. That is the logic of the petroleum compensation charge, Mr. Speaker.

I notice the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has come into the House—

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has suggested that I was just coming into the House. It is now 5:25 p.m. and I have been here all afternoon. I do not see why by innuendo he links my name with his criticism of the government.

Mr. Hawkes: By definition, I thought any cabinet minister was someone who belonged to the government.

Mr. Epp: No; they write letters!

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister of National Health and Welfare will probably not remember the first question that I ever asked her in June of 1980. In a series of question during Committee of the Whole I asked the minister if she believed more in the needs of senior citizens of this country than in the needs of the oil companies. As a member of cabinet and a member of the Liberal caucus she consistently stands in this House and says that she cares about health and about senior citizens. Last night, however, she voted to cut funding for those purposes by $5 billion. As soon as the Petro-Canada bill comes to a vote, I suppose she is going to vote to give Petro-Canada $5 billion. She is going to vote to take money away from health care and education and she is going to vote—

Mr. Waddell: Are you going to vote for it or against it? You have been speaking for 40 minutes and you have not said yet.

Mr. Hawkes: What is at issue here, Mr. Speaker, is an industry in which there are three important commodities: people, money and equipment. From day one Petro-Canada, as a state-owned oil company, has been and will always be in difficulty. In a competitive world labour market it has not been able to attract competent experienced people who will stay with it. The record shows that in its early days Petro-Canada had to pay 30 per cent over the industrial average in order to get staff; the record shows the remarkably high turnover rate of employees compared to the industrial average, and the record shows that people in senior positions on average have less experience and less skill. That is not a unique Canadian phenomenon; it is a characteristic of state-owned oil companies around the world. I think Canadians understand that.

If I owned a family farm that I had grown up on and gradually acquired, I would have learned a lot about farming. I would care about it because it was my land. But if the state came in all of a sudden and said, "We own your farm and somebody's campaign manager is going to be on the board of directors to tell you how to run the farm and he has no knowledge of farming", would it be expected that the farm would do as well as it had before? I suggest the answer is that it would not.

I hope that as hon. members opposite approach their task on this special committee and as they approach this bill, they will assist in bringing forward witnesses who will testify about the ease or difficulty experienced by Petro-Canada in acquiring staff. I hope we will hear some testimony about what they expect in the future.

Surely if hon. members opposite want to vote to turn $5,000 million more over to a board of directors and staff, they have an obligation to examine whether an organization of that size will be able to attract and hold the kind of competent people who will spend our taxpayers' money wisely. This is the basic issue. We might wish it were not, or all kinds of things, but in reality nothing works very well—the Parliament of Canada, the family firm or Petro-Canada—unless the people within it have the motivation, the skill and the desire to make it work. Before voting this $5 billion for that purpose, surely we should ask ourselves that question.

The second question we should ask ourselves is the money question. I am not prepared to accept the fact that Petro-Canada needs another $5 billion. But even if I were, surely hon. members opposite should join with us in obtaining an answer to the second question. If that money is needed, from where should it come? Should it come from general revenue? Should it come from the pockets of taxpayers at a time when 23 cents of every dollar is already going to pay the interest on the pubic debt? Should we increase the public debt and give it to the board of directors of Petro-Canada? Are there other ways of raising money which do not put such a heavy burden on Canadian taxpayers?

We used to have a system where people willingly put their own money into the development of resources. More than we think, we are replacing it with a system where money is forced out of people's pockets and put into the pockets of others—employees, boards of directors and landholders. We are taking it away through the tax system and giving it to a group of people who are not really accountable to Parliament but simply accountable to one man, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Surely the committee should explore whether there are alternative ways to raise the necessary money.

Another question is a bothersome one to anyone who believes in Canada, in Canadian ownership and in Canadian development. Some years ago the present chairman of the board was chosen. Much of his background was in New York. As Petro-Canada spends dollars on ships, rigs, carpets, logos and signs, perhaps the committee should explore the degree to which it spends dollars in Canada on Canadian products and the degree to which Canadian taxpayers' dollars are being used to fund a corporation which, far too often for my taste, chooses to spend money outside of Canada, creating work in other countries. In that connection I wonder whether or not, on the exploration side, Petro-Canada has spent more dollars in other nations this year than it has in western Canada on oil and gas exploration. If so, would that be the definition of a national Crown corporation? Should it spend more money on exploration in other nations than it spends in our nation?

Mr. Lalonde: From where did you get that?

Mr. Hawkes: I throw it out; it is something for the committee to examine.

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, throw it out.

Mr. Hawkes: What is its record lately? Where is it drilling? Perhaps the committee should examine whether or not the oil reserves of Petro-Canada are going up or down. We know that through acquisition it acquires new reserves. If, for example, one owns a grocery store, starts to sell groceries off the shelves and simply spends the money, rather than purchasing new groceries from wholesalers to restock the shelves, one would look pretty good for a while, but sooner or later one would have no groceries to sell and would not be in business any longer. The minister can say what he wants, but the basic record of Petro-Canada over its years of existence is that it sells barrels of oil in the ground which it bought from other companies and does not replace them. It is a one-way sleigh ride to a very bad end, if it sells the oil in the ground and does not use the proceeds to find more. I suspect that is what the evidence would show fairly clearly before the committee.

I should like to bring one other matter to the attention of the House before this bill goes to committee. A number of people in Quebec, Ontario and western Canada are increasingly disturbed about two specific incidents on which I hope the committee might hear some testimony. The first is that Petro-Canada is using taxpayers' dollars on something called the liquefied natural gas project and that it is commissioning engineering design studies to build the system. The word I get is that the technology which Petro-Canada is asking private sector companies to design on its behalf is 20 years out of date. I hope the special committee will call technically competent witnesses to examine as one illustration the management of the corporation and its ability to spend taxpayers' dollars.

The second concerns the increasing sense of unease in many parts of Canada that the giant they have created, Petro-Canada, is becoming a predator in the marketplace and that in fact that big company is driving out of business family owned and operated firms, not Imperial Oil, Esso or Shell. Some firms have existed over 20, 30, 50 or 100 years in the province of Quebec, for example. They are family-owned firms which supply heating oil or operate small service stations in small and medium-sized communities.

We must ask ourselves as members of the House whether or not we want to create with taxpayers' dollars a corporation which drives small family-owned businesses out of work. If we cannot answer the question in a manner which indicates that we should restrict Petro-Canada and not allow it to be the predator in the marketplace competing with small family-owned businesses, if in our wisdom we cannot design clauses to stop that, do we really want to move forward with making it ten times as big, making it ten times as hungry, or making it ten times as predatory? Do we really want to use taxpayers' dollars to drive family firms out of business?

I look forward to the bill moving to committee and to the examination we can give it there, if we have the will and the background knowledge to choose the witnesses and to ask the questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before I recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), may I deal with the proceedings of the adjournment motion this evening.

It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek)—Automotive Industry—(a) Negotiations over importation of Japanese manufactured vehicles. (b) Request that Canadian content regulations be imposed. (c) Length of negotiations; the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—(a) Corporate Affairs—Uranium price fixing trial—Query respecting Crown immunity (b) Instructions to counsel; the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Political Parties—Former affiliation of Manitoba Attorney General.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETRO-CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-101, to amend the Petro-Canada Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm that we are sitting through the dinner hour. I gather our House leaders negotiated that on our behalf, for which we can thank them.

I am pleased to open debate for the New Democratic Party on this first of eight bills dealing with energy security. We have a question which will be asked throughout the debate on the eight bills. It is this: Energy security for whom? In the context of setting out what we think are the fundamental flaws in the Liberal government's Canadianization program, we in the NDP would not merely increase the capitalization of Petro-Canada, as this first bill does; we would make Petro-Canada the number one oil company in Canada. It is not now. Dome Petroleum and other companies are ahead of Petro-Canada. We believe that predominant public ownership of the oil industry is long overdue. It is popular. It is what the people want and it is what they should get. Only then could Petro-Canada be the pace-setter for a fair retail pricing policy for Canadian consumers. Instead of taking this opportunity to advance the goals of Canadianization substantially, which I believe Canadians do support, and I tell the minister that, the Liberal government, however, has in the most complicated and convoluted way possible chosen the worst of all possible worlds. Instead of using Petro-Canada, the Liberals have opted for an expensive and unworkable program of grant giveaways to their chosen friends in the private sector. This is Liberal Canadianization. It is phony and it is a sham. Consumers pay at the pump. The money comes out of the pockets of consumers. The government takes $6.5 billion of it and gives it away over five years in the form of grants to private Canadian oil companies whose express interest is to export the oil and gas once found. I will illustrate this point a little later in my speech.

Therefore, the question is: Energy security for whom, Mr. Speaker? It is not for the consumer or the taxpayer. They are getting hosed. We will propose during the course of this debate a simpler and more effective way based on predominant public ownership. We would use the $6.5 billion grant money to take over one of the large multinationals through Petro-Canada. We would take the remainder of the money, because there would be some left, and we would put it where it should go, that is, into real energy security. In other words, into energy conservation and alternates. I will come back to that in a moment. Also I want to make reference to the minister's speech.

The energy pattern in this country is to give grants and tax concessions to private companies. There is an energy crisis and they need these things. Private companies have to find oil and gas. They find oil and gas and they want to export it. They export the resources and then they need more grants and tax concessions in order to continue. When are we going to break this pattern? We will not break it unless we make Petro-Canada the predominant company.

Before I go into some details of how Liberal Canadianization works vis-à-vis Petro-Canada, I have some remarks with respect to the speech made by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I see him here in the House. I am amazed when I hear Tory policy on Petro-Canada. I remember back to the much lamented Joe Clark government, lamented by them but by no one else, in which the Conservative Party had not one, not two, but three policies on Petro-Canada. The first policy was to privatize the whole thing, that Petro-Canada was bad. I was going to say it was a political position, but it was almost a theological position that Petro-Canada was bad, even though other countries in the world, such as Mexico, Norway and Britain, had set up government-owned oil companies.

Mr. Thacker: Would you like to move to any of them?

Mr. Waddell: If the hon. member would listen to his policies on Petro-Canada, not many people would move to a country that has these kinds of policies. The first policy was to privatize Petro-Canada.

Mr. Thacker: Answer the question.

Mr. Waddell: Then the second policy was to privatize part of PetroCan. The third policy, which came into view during the course of the 1980 election campaign, was that they did not know what they were going to do with it. The present Tory policy is that they still do not know what they are going to do with Petro-Canada. The Tories nit-pick at the kinds of people who are running the company and so on. What are the Tories going to do? Are they for it or against it? Are they going to vote for or against this bill? It is not good enough to take 40 minutes to throw out suggestions, as the hon. member for Calgary West did. Did we ring the bells for that? Is that what the big fight was about? We expected to hear some real policy from the Conservatives. I can imagine how difficult it must be for the hon. member for Calgary West and the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) to drive up to a Petro-Canada gas station in Calgary in their Lada automobiles and get served by a bilingual attendant and their gas measured in metric.

Mr. Thacker: Would you answer the question?

Mr. Waddell: It was not little Bob Rae and the NDP who knocked out the Clark government. It was the people of Canada. They had had enough and that is why the people threw them out. It was because of their stupid policies on Petro-Canada, among other things. It is not good enough to say: "Well, they threw them out in eastern Canada". They did not. People threw them out in western Canada also. In most of my colleagues' ridings in western Canada, the Conservative vote went down and the New Democratic vote went up. The Tories were not popular, and Petro-Canada was one of the reasons for that unpopularity.

I thought the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the Tory's previous energy critic, was starting to bring the Conservative party back from their allegiance to big oil. But with my friend, who is the new energy critic, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the Conservatives are back in the same old position of wanting to get rid of Petro-Canada and complete their free enterprise theology at all costs. What is the difference between a Tory and a dinosaur, Mr. Speaker? At least they bury dinosaurs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) laughing. He thinks he is going to get off lightly. Let me deal a little with this Liberal Canadianization policy. I want the minister to listen and I thank him for staying in the House to listen.

Mr. T. Trevor Eyton, President of Brascan Ltd. spoke recently to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce. He gave a rare and accurate insight into modern corporate thinking about government investment in the economy. I put it to the minister that he agrees with this thinking. Mr. Eyton said that governments should invest their vast pools of capital in the private sector but leave the decision-making to businessmen. Mr. Eyton also said:

> My suggestion is that governments should invest in private enterprise as substantial minority partners with the objective being to provide the requisite financing.

In other words, taxpayers—most of us—should provide the money but a small group of private entrepreneurs should control the projects. Preferably the projects should be the megaproject type. This philosophy exactly has been adopted by the Liberal government in its plan for energy security. In some instances the government will pay 93 per cent of the exploration costs for a minority 25 per cent control in the projects. Through the new grant system, taxpayers will put over four times the amount the company does for exploration on Canada Lands but gets only one quarter of an interest in the project.

This first bill is a smokescreen likely put up by the Liberals to embarrass my friends to the right on Petro-Canada. But you have to see the whole Liberal policy. This is a little more difficult dinosaur to deal with, but a dinosaur nevertheless.

• (1750)

One has to look at this project because, quite simply, the ordinary Canadian is being doubly hosed by this scheme. Consumers in my riding are now paying 41 cents a litre, compared to 37 cents in Blaine, Washington. Under the petroleum incentives program, known as PIP, the taxpayer is going to fork out $6.5 billion to the oil companies in the next five years. With medicare in jeopardy and student fees going up, this Liberal government has decided in its wisdom to dole out literally wheelbarrows of money to those poor oil companies. If I were the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is now in the House, I would in fact be concerned about this kind of money going out, especially when, as I pointed out the other day, all that money may not be coming in. Some of the money for the PIP grants will have to come from general revenue, which means out of the minister's budget eventually.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that Dome Petroleum has indeed struck it rich, not by drilling in the Beaufort but by drilling right here in Ottawa.

An hon. Member: They were drilling in cabinet.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, this process of tax breaks for oil companies is not new. The Liberals have used the taxpayer and consumer in the past to finance the multinationals' expansion and takeover of our energy industry. No other industrialized country has so much of its vital energy industry foreign owned and controlled. In 1980, for example, federal tax breaks to the petroleum industry were over $4.3 billion; income tax revenue is only $2.1 billion. Speaking at the University of Toronto on November 12, 1980—I have to say "Toronto" correctly, Mr. Speaker, in case I am mistaken for a Torontonian—the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

> It is true we have imposed new taxes on the oil industry. There have been complaints about this by the oil companies since the budget was brought down, but I can honestly say that their position was no worse in 1980 than it was in 1979, perhaps better.

It seems to me that 1982, in spite of all the yelling and screaming, will be a lot better. The netback for new oil under the October, 1980 National Energy Program was $7.19. After the September, 1981 agreement, it went up to $16.73. These figures come from the minister's own department. So there is a significant netback.

The nominal corporate tax rate for the petroleum industry is supposed to be 36 per cent, Mr. Speaker. However, because of tax concessions to this wealthy industry, its effective tax rate has been only 10 per cent for the period 1974-80. Compare that to an income tax rate of 18 per cent in 1980 for a married taxpayer with two children and earned income of $25,000. They would like to scream, too, but they do not have the power, wealth and advertising ability of the oil companies. For the period 1977-80, federal tax concessions to the resource sector were over $13 billion; income tax collected was $5 billion. I do not just throw out those figures; they come from the Petroleum Monitoring Agency.

The question then arises: why so many tax breaks in the past? The answer is simple, Mr. Speaker: to provide energy security, as this bill and the other seven bills are going to provide. But look at what we have. After telling us in the early 1970s that we had enough oil for 300 years, thus permitting oil exports to the United States, we now have an oil shortage and it appears we may be moving to paying more than world price for a litre of gasoline. So the question is: What are we going to get this time?

Mr. Miller: Another hosing.

Mr. Waddell: My friend says another hosing. During a wheat pool meeting in Mozart, Saskatchewan, in 1953, when the CPR argued that the Crow rate was driving them into bankruptcy, a farmer by the name of Johnny Grimson jumped to his feet calling the CPR a bunch of "hosers", and its president a "hose-head". The term "hoser" came from the old practice of sucking gas out of barrels left in the field near tractors and, of course, it applied to sucking higher freight rates out of grain bins. So things really have not changed. A practitioner of the art becomes a boggy-eyed, sort of brain-damaged hose-head or hoser. With apologies to Bob and Doug McKenzie, is this not exactly what the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is doing?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: You are on the other end of his hose.

Mr. Waddell: He is sucking money out of our pockets and siphoning it off to the oil companies in the form of PIP grants. He is a hose-head because he has not learned the lessons of our recent energy history.

The new grants, Mr. Speaker, are supposed to help industry find new oil for our energy security, our future.

Mr. Lalonde: Why don't you talk about the bill?

Mr. Waddell: If the minister will wait, he will see how this fits in with his Petro-Canada bill. Jack Gallagher, the chairman of Dome Petroleum—

Mr. Dingwall: Your friend.

Mr. Waddell: —told the CBC "Journal" on February 9, 1982—the hon. member should know Jack Gallagher; he is a good friend of that party.

Mr. Dingwall: You and Tommy Douglas.

Mr. Waddell: He is a good pal. Mr. Gallagher had this to say:

> Canada has lived and continues to prosper as an exporting nation, and there's nothing very different about oil or gas or wheat or anything else. If we can prove that Canada has a major surplus of oil, then there's no reason why we won't and can't export part of it.

There it is, Mr. Speaker, the same old pattern. The consumer and taxpayer give grants—grants instead of super-depletion allowances—to Dome and the company looks for oil to export. So again Liberal Canadianization, which is the main thrust of these bills, hoses the consumer and taxpayer. The government will grant a company up to 80 per cent of its exploration costs, and what does it get in return? A 25 per cent interest. For example, the government puts up $40 million for a project and gets 25 per cent ownership, whereas the private company puts up $10 million and gets 75 per cent ownership. What kind of deal is that? I ask even my friends to the right to examine that kind of deal. They are keen to have PIP grants and so on, so what kind of deal is that?

I address this part of my remarks to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Wouldn't she like this money? The federal share for PIP grants in 1981-82 is $940 million; $1,040 million in 1982-83; $1,150 million in 1983-84; $1,480 million in 1984-85; $1,850 million in 1985-86. That is a total of $6,460 million from 1981 to 1986.

Mr. Lalonde: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The mathematics of the hon. member are always very interesting, but I suggest his research assistant has provided him with the wrong speech. We have a bill which deals very specifically with the PIP grants, which bill is called the Petroleum Administration Act. Today we are debating the Petro-Canada Act—P-e-t-r-o - C-a-n-a-d-a—and I would invite my hon. friend to talk about this bill, which provides for an increase in the capitalization of Petro-Canada, the creation of Canertech and the creation of Petro-Canada International. I submit his speech is completely out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)): The minister was very specific, but I am not sure it was a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the minister was once termed a brilliant minister, but he has one brilliant fault. If he would listen a little bit, he would see how things fit in. He just cannot see beyond his own views. The point is this, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the minister to listen; $6.5 billion in PIP grants is the basis of this scheme. This first bill is a minor part. Instead of giving the oil companies $6.5 billion, if that money were given to Petro-Canada, they could then move in and take over not Petrofina, but one of the major foreign oil companies, like Imperial Oil. That would be real Canadianization. A greater role for Petro-Canada would lessen our vulnerability to private oil company blackmail.

• (1800)

One hears the argument that new taxes or less generous allowances will drive investment out of Canada. It seems to me that this argument forgets about one fact; that is, we have great potential for finding more oil in Canada. I invite hon. members to look at the situation in Norway and Britain, in the North Sea. For example, Norway has a more onerous tax regime, but the companies are still in the North Sea. Britain has a more onerous tax regime, but the companies are still there. We say that if the companies want to go after off shore oil, let them go after the off shore oil in Hibernia and the Beaufort Sea, but do not give away wheelbarrows full of public money with no guarantee that we would get equity and control. There should simply not be more giveaways to the oil companies.

I think the issue is even bigger because it does involve all the ramifications of Canadianization. As at the end of the first half of 1981, foreign ownership of oil and gas revenue was between 65 and 70 per cent. Foreign control was between 70 and 74 per cent. The assets of the oil industry have risen 359 per cent, from $14.6 billion in 1973 to $52.4 billion in 1980. The capital gains implicit in the growth have been mainly collected by foreign shareholders. We have permitted in this industry what no other industrialized country would permit, namely, foreign control of strategic commodities, oil and gas.

Who is responsible for this mess? The Liberal Party of Canada, with its continuous continentalist policies enacted by successive Liberal governments, is responsible. It even admits it. The minister, speaking in New York on November 18, 1980, said:

> —I doubt that Americans would tolerate anything like 50 per cent foreign ownership in any major industry—let alone a vital, basic industry like oil and gas.

Yet the Liberals have tolerated this for a long time. In 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) campaigned on a promise of 50 per cent to 60 per cent Canadian ownership for all new energy projects. That was another broken promise, just like the cynical promise of cheap gasoline in the 1980 election campaign. But now, in 1981 and 1982, these same people who offered Canadians that policy in the past are offering a policy of Canadianization. Therefore, one must very carefully consider what they want to do with Petro-Canada and what they want to do with Canadianization.

The problem with Canadianization, as the Liberals define it, is that it is both too little and too late, and it is missing a great opportunity. This is the point I was trying to bring forward to the minister. Petro-Canada is there; why do we not use it? If we were enacting this bill with regard to Petro-Canada, we would use the bill to make Petro-Canada in fact the leading member of the oil industry in Canada.

In order to make this case, I think it is necessary to define public interest in energy. I say that the public interest in energy is to ensure a secure energy supply at reasonable prices.

Canadianization, both for the Liberals and for the Conservatives, means privatization. The government proposes to replace large American companies with large Canadian companies. We are replacing the Rockefellers with the Gallaghers and the Blairs, all friends of the government. That is why I said that Dome had struck it rich in Ottawa. We have Petro-Canada, ready and waiting. But that is not the route that the Liberals are taking. They have chosen to go the route of the private sector. They say it will be a private Canadian sector. I even have my doubts about that. I think we will see corporate shells and we will see a lot of games being played and shuffling around so that the large multinationals which can afford to go up to the north and the off shore will still be in control of the developments there.

The main fault in Liberal Canadianization, it seems to me, is that the Canadian private sector of the energy industry has acted and will act no differently from the way the multinationals acted in the past. If we depend on the private sector, this time being Canadian, which I suppose is better in a sense than being American but not that much, we will be following the same old pattern I spoke about before. We will have the surpluses, allegedly the shortages, the tax concessions, the price increases, again the surpluses, again the shortages, again the pressure to export, and it will continue. That pattern is showing up again with natural gas, where there is pressure to export gas. Five years down the road, we will be paying higher prices for Arctic gas.

It seems to me that if the Liberals were really serious about Canadianization and about the public interest in this bill, they would bring in predominant public ownership. The reason is that predominant public ownership, through Petro-Canada, would mean that the people, through their elected representatives, their elected government, could set the course of energy development and we could get out of this Catch-22 situation that I spoke about.

We do not have to apologize for an active government presence in the energy industry because Canadians, the taxpayer and the consumer, have already financed virtually all of the expansion of the industry.

This is what the National Energy Program states at page 17:

—in general, price and tax policies have provided the industry with the cash flow necessary to finance its expenditures. This means that the oil consumer and the Canadian taxpayer have financed virtually all of the substantial expansion of this industry.

Historically, the tax system has not recouped the public investment. The value of this scarce resource will continue to go up, and this richest of industries will expand into non-energy areas.

Canada could achieve a dominant position in the oil industry by taking over Imperial Oil instead of giving $6.5 billion in grants to the private companies. What would this accomplish? One thing it would accomplish would be the rather instantaneous achievement recognition of 50 per cent Canadian ownership, the goal of the government. The government wants 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990. Instead of taking this money and giving it out in PIP grants and to Dome and Nova, that $6.5 billion, or perhaps two-thirds of it, should be used by Petro-Canada to take a really big company like Imperial Oil under public ownership. Then the government would achieve its goal. If the government were really serious about Canadianization, that is what it would do.

It would also accomplish something else. It would accomplish what the government itself has been arguing, and what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources argues when he asks for 25 per cent equity. He says that we need 25 per cent equity because we want to be at the table and we want to have some control. If we want to be at the table and have some control, we should get 51 per cent equity and then we can really have control. If we were to do that, Petro-Canada would not be subjected to the whim of the multinationals, buying oil for its refineries, getting oil refined for its gas stations. Petro-Canada could, in fact, be like Imperial was in the past, the trend setter on prices. It might do things differently. It would be much more democratic, and we could challenge it in the House.

Therefore, the same people who got us into the mess over here, those in the Liberal Party, propose to lead us out of the mess. Their solution is to have 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990. It is probably a solution which any other industrialized country would consider to be too little. The Liberal Canadianization means that energy decisions will be in private hands, even though the money is largely from the public. That is no solution at all. Therefore, I call it a phony and a sham.

The real solution would be to achieve predominant public ownership. A realistic scenario would be for Petro-Canada to take over Imperial Oil so that the government could become the leader in the field. Sometimes when one expresses that view in the House of Commons, one feels very alone, as though almost the entire House, with the exception of those in the New Democratic Party, is against one. However, I submit that there is support for that position in the country and that the politicians and the government are far behind public opinion concerning this measure.

• (1810)

In June 1981, the Committee for the Canadianization of the Petroleum Industry wrote these words to the Prime Minister:

—the majority of Canadians will support a determined and effective program to bring our energy resources under Canadian, particularly public, ownership and control which ensures that these resources are developed and utilized in the best interests of the nation—

On January 24, 1982, the committee said:

—Canada's goal must be increased to at least 75 per cent Canadian ownership of the vital petroleum industry by 1985 with Petro-Canada the largest oil company in the country.

This is not what this bill is doing—no way. The committee continued:

—we strongly urge the federal government to acquire one of the four major foreign-controlled companies as a new Crown corporation or as a component of Petro-Canada.

Where is it in this bill that gives Petro-Canada power or directs Petro-Canada to be the predominant oil company in the oil industry?

Mr. Lalonde: That is what we are doing.

Mr. Waddell: That is not what you are doing at all. You are Canadianizing by giving $6.5 billion in PIP grants. That is the Liberal Canadianization program.

Mr. Lalonde: You voted against that bill?

Mr. Waddell: In a poll conducted by Gallup on this very question, 64 per cent of Canadians favoured the goal of 75 per cent Canadian ownership by 1985, and 23 per cent were opposed. So Canadians want more Canadian ownership. On government takeover of one of the big four, 55 per cent said yes and 28 per cent said no. So Canadians are way ahead of their government and they are miles ahead of the official opposition. Instead, the government gives us these complicated, unworkable, inequitable, bureaucratic COR and PIP programs.

If the government were really interested in energy security, I would submit, and it is reflected in this bill, the government could look more at the demand side, that is, look to conservation and alternative energy.

The Russian writer, Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, once said that any gravedigger in the Ukraine could tell you that 12 worms would only gnaw one apple for so long. We are dealing with these non-renewable resources in oil and gas. If we had the wisdom of those village gravediggers, we would get into conservation and into alternatives in a big way.

I was listening, Mr. Speaker, while the minister was speaking and I noted he defended the Canertech. I may be wrong in what I heard him say, and I will no doubt be corrected if I am by the next speaker for the Liberal party, but it appeared to me that he was saying that Canertech had received $20 million and that it is the government's alternative energy corporation.

Mr. Lalonde: And another $35 million.

Mr. Waddell: And additional capital up to $35 million. Compare that with what Petro-Canada is being given, $500 million in authorized capital, going up to $5,500 million. It does indicate, in a rough way—

Mr. Lalonde: You are against it?

Mr. Waddell: The minister says I am against it. I would like him to listen to the point I am making. The point I am trying to make is that perhaps we are spending too much, or we are weighing it too heavily on the supply side, that is, going out and finding oil and gas, when we could be spending some more money on the demand side, and at times, too, on the conservation side. The minister and the government were told the same thing by an all-party committee. My colleague, the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), will speak again on this matter, when his turn comes to speak, and no doubt he will give a much more witty speech than mine on the value of conservation.

I should tell the minister that a study by the Peace Research Institute showed that Canada's energy effectiveness ratio, that is, its total primary energy in relation to gross national product, is the poorest amongst the OECD countries and that we have the most dismal record in real energy conservation. I should say that it is improving, and we are all glad of that. The study says that Canada has merely slowed down rather than eliminated the waste; and that a massive program of conservation and efficiency and genuine commitment to renewable energy sources is needed if we are to reduce demand in striving to achieve energy self-sufficiency. So says the study.

There is no reason, Mr. Speaker, why we cannot have an acceptable level of economic growth of over 3 per cent a year and an energy growth of 2 per cent a year.

A study conducted by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the minister's own department, predicts that if an energy demand of 2 per cent is obtained by 1990, Canada would be saving energy equivalent to the combined annual output of five Syncrude-sized oil sands plants, plus 20 per cent of total annual gas production in 1985, plus 13 Pickering-sized nuclear plants, plus 8.5 million tons of coal.

Some energy experts say, Mr. Speaker, that we can achieve this with only modest adjustments to our lifestyle. Such adjustments include adopting more rigorous fuel mileage standards for automobiles. We will have something to say about that when that bill comes up, it will be one of the future bills that we will be debating. We could have the adjustment also of promoting a more extensive insulating program to make buildings air tight and providing more incentives to reduce waste in industry.

Again I would draw the attention of the minister to the discrepancy in figures in this bill for what is provided for the alternative energy corporation, as compared with what is provided to Petro-Canada to go out and find more oil. I do not object to Petro-Canada going out and exploring. I want to say, however, in response to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), that my experience of Petro-Canada is that it is staffed by some excellent people, who, thank God, are working for a Canadian corporation and for the Canadian public, rather than working for corporations whose parents are in Pittsburg and New York, directing the show. I think that is a good thing, and that young engineers and young people in the oil business are going to work for people who will pay them a good salary. I think what the member for Calgary West was spouting is nonsense.

The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that real energy security demands predominant public control through Petro-Canada. That is not what we are given. Real energy security means substantial emphasis on conservation. It means taking some of that $6.5 billion now earmarked as giveaway grants to private oil companies and putting it into Petro-Canada to take one of the majors under public control.

The question facing democratic politicians everywhere, I suppose, is what economic areas should be under state control and what areas should be left to the marketplace. It seems to me that the development of a strategic commodity such as oil is one area where we should have at least predominant public control. That does not mean control of the entire industry—we have not advocated that—it means predominant public control.

The minister prides himself or congratulates himself sometimes on being logical, and when he makes the argument for the 25 per cent equity, the fact that they have to be at the table, that they have to direct, that they have to know what is going on, if you follow that argument to its logical conclusion, it would argue for predominant public control. This would regulate the industry, it is said, in one of the most over-regulated industries in the country. That is not true. The industry can get around all the regulations. Look at the history of the National Energy Board, and the way it has been manipulated with respect to exports, especially on oil.

The way to do it, logically, I put this to the minister, is that we should have predominant public control. It makes sense. The public wants it. But the public should not be bamboozled by this flim flam, this unworkable sham of COR and PIP and all these grants, in which millions of dollars go out to an industry like this. They should not get it that way.

I conclude then, Mr. Speaker, by returning to the question: energy security for whom? The Liberal answer in this group of bills is security for the oil companies. The government money will take all the risks. What about the taxpayers and consumers? They will continue to get hosed. It is no wonder Canadians are becoming more cynical of this Liberal government energy policy. It certainly has not been as promised.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): I hope to make some brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, on this first bill on energy that has been introduced in the House. To begin with, I would like to say that Petro-Canada is an essential key in the federal government's over-all energy plan. It will play a major role in terms of transferring regulation and control of the industry from the provinces to the federal government. It is in this area that I want to touch upon a few matters.

The minister has made sufficient speeches and published sufficient documents to give us the three goals of the National Energy Program. I would like to put forth six goals that tend to describe more adequately this very complex National Energy Program which very few people understand. I had hoped the program would have been implemented over a somewhat longer period than the short span in which it is being implemented. Some of the uncertainties and difficulties we will have to contend with would have been lessened.

• (1820)

In connection with the National Energy Program in which Petro-Canada plays such a vital role, I see the following objectives. The first is certainly Canadianization in two ways, Canadianization in the public sector and Canadianization in the private sector. There are some ingenious policies in this legislation by which this will be done.

The second and more important characteristic of the National Energy Program is control and regulation of literally most aspects of the industry. More important is the transfer of that control from the provincial area of jurisdiction to the federal. That is an area that I am concerned about. I think there will be increasing problems as we go into the future.

The third policy of the National Energy Program is nationalization. The program in Bill C-48, the oil and gas bill, has two pronas, the first with regard to Canada lands, and the second part with regard to energy security legislation which we will be dealing with in the next several weeks. Through Bill C-48 there is an all-inclusive system of nationalizing at least 25 per cent of the industry on Canada lands. All new oil and gas industry on Canada lands from here on will be nationalized to the extent of 25 per cent, either through PetroCan or a new corporation. I do not say this is good or bad. Bill C-48 has been passed, and that is fact. This is what it will permit.

The question is how much of the existing industry in the provincial sector will be nationalized in the federal government program. Here is where Petro-Canada can and will play a rather significant role, hopefully, as the minister said on several occasions, in the oil sands, and by purchasing other companies. It is now rumoured that Petro-Canada will be purchasing British Petroleum after having purchased several other companies in the past. I will come to that area.

The fourth major policy area is revenue accumulation from the industry to the federal government, or central Canada if you wish, and the subsequent use of that revenue for redistribution of the wealth of this nation. Oil and gas tax dollars will now be used for social programs and many other programs requiring wealth distribution instead of entirely for maintaining energy self-sufficiency for the future.

One can argue whether such a commodity as energy, which is basic to the well-being of the entire society, should be used as a means for wealth redistribution. Some of that wealth redistribution will be done rather ingeniously in terms of Canadianizing industry. You collect through the PGRT tax and turn around through the PIP program and give and promote Canadianization. Some will be used for Canadianization. Some will be used for wealth redistribution.

The fifth over-all policy is some international assistance, using Canadian energy dollars through Petro-Canada International. The sixth is the energy substitution program through Canertech which will be structured in this legislation.

In connection with the effect of the National Energy Program on the industry under provincial jurisdiction, particularly Alberta, it has produced some results in the last several months, in effect over the last couple of years. The first result has been chaos. It has brought uncertainty as to who is in control, by how much, who is to take how much money, how much is to be left to the industry and how much is for the little industry as opposed to large industry. It has made predictability almost impossible. It is impossible for the industry to plan on a mid-term basis or for a longer term because it does not know where it is going.

If anything, the legislation is necessary at the earliest opportunity so that the industry knows what it has to contend with. In the area of massive capital requirement, nothing is more difficult than not being able to plan two, five, ten or fifteen years ahead without knowing the rules. Even though the rules may be poor, it is absolutely vital that they be established at the earliest opportunity and not be subject to change.

I remember when we had to deal with the industry with regard to the environment. They constantly talked of predictability. Even though the regulations were very tough, they asked that they be left in place and not changed. Even though they were tough regulations, they wanted them left for five or ten years so that they could plan.

The second matter which is general in the industry in connection with the provinces is a flight of capital and a shortage of capital. Some major industries have impounded their capital. They are not going to move ahead until there is a further definition in connection with the National Energy Program. This has caused a flight of some drilling companies, and particularly technological competence. We are losing technological competence which was created over the past 20 or 25 years and is second to none in the world. Some of this technological competence is leaving the provincial area of energy resources. It is because of uncertainty, instability, a lack of cash flow and so on. It is too bad. Some of this flight is outside the country. Indeed, foreign capital has stopped coming in.

In the provinces, particularly Alberta, there are now bankruptcies and business contractions in the oil and gas industry. Interest rates and debt loads are high.

If you have a system of exploration, you try to plan ahead. All of these smaller businesses have borrowed heavily and are having to re-finance at the high interest rates. We are getting an increasing number of bankruptcies and more business concentration because some small businesses simply have to sell to the larger corporations. We are having corporate concentration because of Canadianization on the one hand and economic instability on the other.

This has caused regional alienation. No issue has caused more alienation between the west and central Canada and now the east and central Canada than the energy issue. It involves large capital flows and large capital sums. It involves the ability of being master in your own house. The west, which has always wanted to be somewhat independent of central Canada, and the east, which is now demanding to keep the tools it had in its hand for creating its own economic climate, instead of them being taken over by central Canada. This is the general wisdom that is increasing in the west. Regional alienation is increasing in western Canada, because, again, it is being said that the centre is coming over to take control over western resources. I might say that non-renewable resources have a one way trip through the economy. The west is anxious to convert their non-renewable resources into renewable resources, into dollars, into investments and into the accumulation of massive sums of money which can subsequently be revolved. The west is concerned about seeing a massive shift of money from their resources back to the centre and a redistribution of that wealth through a formula which is foreign to them.

The final effect is a change in mood out west from optimism to pessimism; a change in mood from excitement and enthusiasm to anger and disillusionment. Of course, this has given rise to political philosophies which are not necessary favorable to the stability of the country.

I do not want to comment too extensively on the Alberta-federal government agreement but I would say that there was obviously some juvenile and amateurish posturing during the negotiations which led up to that agreement. I have always been very disappointed that both Alsands and Cold Lake have been held for ransom with regard to the evolution of an agreement. I have always been unhappy that Alberta had decided upon a course of action to cut back on oil supply, which again was used as a club to evolve a national agreement. I found both actions unnecessary. Indeed, one finds that political perspectives change in this game whereby you may have a bad agreement for a couple of years but you can always renegotiate that agreement to get a better one later on.

I believe that the nature of the agreement will push the province of Alberta to venture into some rather different areas. If I were associated with Alberta I would consider very seriously not investing any money from the Heritage Fund into Alsands. There is not much point in Alberta investing money in a resource which it already controls. Section 92(a) of the new Constitution says very specifically that the legislature in each province may exclusively make laws in relationship to non-renewable resources. If I were the Alberta government and wanted to make sure that some of the money flowed back from the rest of Canada to Alberta and some measure of control was effected in Alberta over the entire nation with respect to the energy industry, I might be somewhat interested in seriously looking at purchasing Imperial Oil and converting it into an Alberta corporation and indeed controlling not only much of the play in Alberta but some of the play throughout the rest of Canada. Certainly, I would seriously think about proposing to the federal government that instead of having absolute control over Petro-Canada the federal government should give serious consideration to bringing the provinces in as co-owners of Petro-Canada. I asked this of the former Progressive Conservative government because the provinces then might be directly involved through the ownership of perhaps a third of Petro-Canada in establishing national energy policies directly rather than indirectly. If it is not possible to give some ownership of Petro-Canada to the provinces, perhaps one third shared equally among the ten provinces, surely they should be allowed to place a member on the board of directors of Petro-Canada so that they have a direct input into policies made by Petro-Canada due to its influence on the future of national energy self-sufficiency and the national energy policy.

I hope, as this debate unfolds and some of the other legislation comes before the House, that I will again have a chance to make some remarks, but I believe that it is appropriate to get this piece of legislation before committee at the earliest opportunity so that witnesses can be brought forward and a much better understanding of the National Energy Program can evolve at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not take long if the House is ready for the question, but I think you will discover that there will be another speaker from the other side after me.

This bill, Bill C-101, is the first of eight bills evolving from that enormous, outrageous and atrocious package that was originally presented to the House by an arrogant government. However, I wonder what we accomplished, because the hon. member from the New Democratic Party appeared to have written a speach in preparation for an omnibus bill, and the fact that it was broken up was not going to deter him from reading the speech which had been written for the omnibus bill. He went on and on to deal with all kinds of matters which had nothing to do with Bill C-101. After having listened to the hon. member it is hard to tell whether he is just dumb or doctrinaire.

An hon. Member: Both.

Mr. Andre: The New Democratic Party is obviously stuck in its reactionary posture. They have one answer for every problem: more government agencies, more Crown corporations, more state ownership, more regulations, and they call that progressive. Socialism was a progressive and new idea 60 years ago, and it looked attractive then. Even 40 years ago it was an idea which seemed to provide some hope for people who were in the midst of a depression. However, you would think that after 60 years of experience with socialism around the world where it has not worked anywhere at any time, people would learn from it. In a recent issue of Maclean's magazine, Northrop Frye said that the only way that you can see the future is by looking into the rear-view mirror. Apparently, the NDP looks back, sees the experience of 60 years of socialism in the Soviet Union, and in other countries to a lesser degree, and refuses to learn from that experience that socialism simply does not work. It has never worked. It has been tried extensively in many cultures and in all kinds of countries and it has not worked. It will not work. It certainly has not worked in the oil industry. There is not one state-owned oil company in the world, of which there are many because there are many people in other countries with the same philosophy as the NDP who insist that state oil companies are the direction in which to head, that comes anywhere close to the performance of a privately-owned oil company of equal size. However, the NDP say we should do the same thing. It makes you wonder why they do not learn from that experience.

This bill proposes to transfer another $5 billion to Petro-Canada. My colleague from Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) commented in his remarks on the fact that at this time in Canadian history, with the economy in the state it is in, on the day after we voted on a bill which would take $5 billion out of moneys available for education and health care, it seems perverse for us to be transferring $5 billion over to a group of people who are not accountable to the House or to the people of Canada in any respect. They are people who are appointed by the minister. One such person is Joel Bell, a good friend of the Liberal Party. He knows nothing about the oil industry, but he is a good friend of the Liberal party. I could go down the list. Interestingly enough, some people who initially joined Petro-Canada did know the oil industry and were knowledgeable and could have made a contribution, but they quit. Don Wolcott is an expert oil man. He has a tremendous reputation. He knows how to find oil. He did not last very long. He quit. The president of Petro-Canada, Andy Janisch, is an expert oil man with an excellent reputation. He knows how to find oil. He quit and joined Canadian Superior, a 100 per cent foreign-owned oil company. When Mr. Janisch quit, I understand there were seven vice-presidents who submitted their resignations but were talked out of resigning at that point in time because of the damage their resignations would do to the company. Yet my friends here, the socialists, say we should give them more money and more authority and let them run the whole show. That kind of thinking boggles the mind. One has to assume it is simply doctrinaire thinking based on a complete lack of understanding.

• (1840)

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the spokesman for the New Democratic Party on energy matters, pooh-poohed the remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary West, about the staff of Petro-Canada. I was watching Calgary television a couple of months ago when a television reporter asked a question of the graduating class of chemical engineers at the University of Calgary. There were 30 or 40 chemical engineers there. The television reporter asked the class to assume they had two job offers, one from Petro-Canada and one from Shell. The Petro-Canada offer was $200 a month more than the one from Shell. He asked how many would accept the job from Petro-Canada. There was not one. He asked how many would accept the job offer from Shell, and the whole class said, "hurray". That is the attitude of Canada's brightest and sharpest in the community which knows Petro-Canada best. The energy critic for the New Democratic Party says Petro-Canada has outstanding personnel, and that he knows it. He knows from nothing.

Petro-Canada was touted by the NDP as being a possible price setter. Indeed, it is. It has the highest priced gasoline in the country. In every community in which Petro-Canada operates its prices are at a high level. Petro-Canada is a price leader everywhere. The Canadian Independent Petroleum Marketing Association is anxious to present evidence that Petro-Canada is predatory and is driving Canadian independents out of business. The association is anxious to present that evidence, and we are anxious to hear it.

Petro-Canada did the Mexico deal. It bought oil from Mexico. It signed a contract which lets Mexico set the quality and the price. Now we have a marvellous contract; we are paying world price for oil of inferior quality compared with oil shut in in the province of Saskatchewan because there is no market. The Mexican stuff has driven it out. And we want more of that, according to the government and the New Democratic Party.

If Crown corporations are the answer to our energy problems, we should not have any problems with anything in Canada because there are 460 Crown corporations. Nobody knows the number for sure. Last evening the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) was asked in committee how many Crown corporations there are. He could not tell us. The minister responsible could not tell us how many Crown corporations the taxpayers of Canada own. He was asked how many have been created since his government took office in 1980. He could not answer that either. He thought it was some dozens, but he did not know how many. If Crown corporations are the answer to Canada's problems, then with over 460 Crown corporations why do we have any problems left? They are not the answer. They have not been the answer in any country which has resorted to that vehicle as a way by which to address economic problems.

Crown corporations are the vehicle for those who want to exercise power. They are a marvellous way by which the government and senior bureaucrats—those who feel they know better than the rest of us—can intrude, exercise authority and direct the lives of individual Canadians. That is fundamentally what socialism is about. There is a fundamental lack of trust in the people. Socialists do not trust the people.

Mr. Mayer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: They do not believe people can make decisions as to how to spend their money, as to what to invest in or as to how to run their lives. There is a lack of belief that people can be trusted, and if people are not trusted, Big Brother has to be brought in to run their lives for them. That is what this bill is all about. That is why we cannot go along with granting to Petro-Canada $5 billion more.

If Crown corporations had spent our money wisely in the past, we might say there is some justification, but let us think back to the Fina deal. In 1980, Fina shares were selling at about $40. They were selling at about $50 in August of that year. We paid $120 in January of 1981. Since August of 1980 the shares of oil companies have about halved. If Fina had gone with the market and was still privately owned, its shares today would be trading at in the vicinity of $25. Petro-Canada paid $120, five times as much—

Mr. Mayer: The people of Canada paid that.

Mr. Andre: —as the market says the shares are worth today. We paid $1.7 billion for something the market says is worth about $300 million today. Some insiders made a lot of profit from that—and hair on them—and the Belgians certainly came out of that smelling like roses but, by cracky, if the taxpayers of Canada have $700 million or $800 million to give away in foreign aid, I can think of countries much more needy than Belgium. We could have spent that money much more wisely than sending it to Belgium, which is what happened when Petro-Canada got excited about buying Petro-Fina at an incredibly exorbitant price. The reason Petro-Canada could do that was, of course, because we, the taxpayers, are paying for it. Petro-Canada does not have any shareholders to worry about. It does not have any bottom line to worry about. We have not seen Petro-Canada's 1981 report on how it performed last year, but I would bet a few dollars that there was some red ink. And that was when Petro-Canada was given everything and paid for nothing, which is not the case with most companies.

The other aspect of this bill which bothers me is that a director shall be paid by the corporation remuneration fixed by the governor in council. Directors are usually, I think almost exclusively, paid fees. That used to be the case. For some reason the government wants to pay a salary. Is it because it wants to find a more direct way of remunerating Mr. Phelps or others like Mr. Phelps, or are there some defeated Liberal candidates who need jobs? What is this about?

Mr. Kempling: Pork barrel.

Mr. Andre: It is another pork barrel, I am sure. I suppose Mr. Phelps' mortgage must be coming due, and we have to find some way to give him the cash to pay off his mortgage. I do not know what it is, but this certainly is a concern to me.

Much more could be said about this, and perhaps should be said about this, but given the time and the fact that there are seven more bills and other features of this so-called energy security package which will devastate Canadians and Canadian taxpayers even more, we will reserve some of our fire power for those other pieces of legislation.

• (1850)

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, today we have heard speeches from members of the opposition, particularly the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I think it is quite evident why those individuals and the parties to which they belong sit in opposition. It is clear that the Canadian people do not buy what those two parties are attempting to sell. In fact, the people have overwhelmingly bought the policies of this government. The hon. member for Calgary West seems to be fighting the 1980 election all over again, but he and his party have done absolutely nothing since that time.

Mr. Mayer: Why don't you make the case for Petro-Canada and tell us how great it is?

Mr. Dingwall: They talk about the ringing of the bells having saved money. Mr. Speaker, absolutely no money was saved; in fact, the Progressive Conservative Party cost Canadian taxpayers $300,000 through being on strike with full pay. That is what they did. We know where the Conservatives stand—they are anti-Petro-Canada and pro-multinational. Of course the New Democratic Party is locked in with that group of obstructionists which is against the PIP grant. That is absolutely unbelievable, Mr. Speaker. Supposedly they would prefer the old depletion allowance that we took away.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway reiterated that he did not think the PIP grants were useful to industry. I should like to tell him that the PIP program is going to be very useful, particularly in Atlantic Canada. Many companies there are coming forward to make sure that they can fit in the PIP program with the exploration and activity that is taking place on the east coast. The government ought to be commended for that. But the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway wants to destroy the free enterprise system. That is not the intention of the government, Mr. Speaker; we believe that we are assisting it. I imagine the hon. member would prefer that we go back to the Regina Manifesto.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) talked about the $5 billion as being a transfer to Petro-Canada which is taking place now. That is not the case. As he ought to know, Petro-Canada is planning for the future and for the benefit of all Canadians. As the situation warrants it will be called upon to use the money that this bill authorizes. Therefore I reject his statement.

Bill C-101, an act to amend the Petro-Canada Act, is not a long or complex bill. It consists of a few clauses, most of which are technical in nature, serving to clarify and consolidate the act. There are a few changes which are not of major significance, such as the provision for payment to the directors of the corporation for the many tasks undertaken in addition to attending meetings and the payment of money that it lent in connection with the Cold Lake program. Finally, there are three areas in which significant initiatives are proposed, although it must be acknowledged that these are not new initiatives. All of them were announced or indicated in the National Energy Program.

These three initiatives are amendments to allot funds for Canertech—and obviously hon. members opposite are not in favour of that—to permit the allocation of start-up funds to Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation and to raise the authorized share capital of Petro-Canada.

Speaking of the first initiative, the bill now before us provides authority for repayment of capital that Petro-Canada has advanced to its subsidiary Canertech, and also the payment for services it has provided to the new corporation during its start-up period.

As for Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation, it has yet to receive start-up funds. This bill provides for up to $60 million of the $250 million that has been allocated to it for the four-year period ending 1984-85.

Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation may be a world first. There have been a number of bilateral agreements for petroleum development assistance and technology transfer, but it probably represents the first permanent agency to provide development assistance. It is an existing idea that has been well received by the countries of the Third World and by international assistance agencies. Again, the Government of Canada ought to be commended for taking these new bold initiatives.

In the nine years since the international oil price began to climb, severe adjustment problems have not been confined to the developed countries with high energy costs. They have also occurred in middle-income countries where opportunities for economic development were often based on the increased use of imported oil. These middle-income countries, often dependent upon the export of a few commodities or manufactures for their foreign exchange, have found it difficult to cope with the tenfold increase in the price of oil. The repercussions have been severe.

For a number of obvious reasons, the large oil companies have little incentive to search for small fields in remote locations. Although there are excellent petroleum prospects in the Third World, exploration in these countries has been at a low level—not at the level that their geological potential would warrant. The countries need an assessment of their petroleum resources but they lack the knowledge and technology to do this. Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation can assist a few countries in their search for oil. It can provide the experience and the technology to assess the petroleum potential and to drill. It may also have a role in the development of the fields it discovers, but the greatest need will remain the need for assistance in exploration. Once a field has been found, the host country will find it comparatively easy to borrow development capital against proven reserves or to interest an oil company in operating the field.

This Crown corporation responds to a pressing need for development assistance that is recognized both by the countries of the Third World and by international organizations and agencies. This iniative will probably be imitated in the development assistance programs of other countries, and I am confident that members of the House, including hon. members opposite, will support the funding of Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation as is provided in this bill.

There are many parallels that could be drawn between the Canadian experience and the experience of oil-importing Third World countries. Canada has had the advantage of a rich and diverse energy endowment combined with the wealth and human resources and it should have taken full advantage of that endowment.

Mr. Mayer: And we have energy policies to lock them in the ground.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I wish you would tell the hon. member opposite to stop rattling his chain. He is becoming a bit of a nuisance to all hon. members.

Nonetheless, we have been an oil importing nation and we have faced the problem of assessing and developing our frontier petroleum resources.

Over 20 years ago, when the full oil and gas potential of the Canadian frontiers was unknown, the federal government's resource management regime encouraged exploration. The pace was often slower than we had hoped, but in the end it was successful to a certain extent. Now the new oil and gas act promises to accelerate activity on the Canada lands. Oil and gas were found, and the good news of these discoveries is one of the factors which has required the major thrust of Bill C-101, the increase in the authorized common share capital of Petro-Canada.

To produce oil and gas from frontier locations will require huge investments. Petro-Canada has an interest in many of the discoveries and it must be able to pay its share of development costs. Also, it has a stake in other important oil projects such as Alsands, but it does not have the same access to capital markets as its private sector partners. It cannot issue shares in the private market and must rely on equity contributions from the Government of Canada to meet its responsibilities.

While petroleum developments form a large part of its financial responsibilities, exploration is also significant, and the corporation needs access to additional capital if it is to maintain its interests and its holdings. Continued participation by Petro-Canada in the search for and development of new oil sources is a fundamental part of the oil supply and Canadianization objectives of the National Energy Program. Not only does this Crown corporation give the people of Canada a share in the ownership of the oil and gas industry, it will take the lead in providing Canadian companies with opportunities to participate in energy projects. Joint ventures are already underway, and more such opportunities will be provided as Petro-Canada obtains the necessary funds to undertake its share of exploration and development. Where would Sable Island or Hibernia be if it were not for Petro-Canada; let hon. members opposite respond to that one.

Mr. Andre: Mobil found Hibernia.

Mr. Dingwall: Petro-Canada is a new company with a very heavy emphasis upon frontier exploration, non-conventional oil, and research and development for unique Canadian conditions. As with a similar ambitious young company in the private sector, it needs more money than is provided by its cash flow. Without the same access to capital markets which would be enjoyed by a privately-owned company, it must look to its sole shareholder, the Government of Canada. Also, if it is to plan effectively, it must have its capitalization assured.

The bill proposes an authorized capital ceiling of $5.5 billion, but as $500 million has already been issued and a further $100 million contributed in respect to the interest in Panarctic Oil Ltd., the total additional capital provided by the bill is $4.9 billion. In considering this figure it is useful to remember that $4.9 billion of new funds is a very small share of the total energy expenditures of roughly more than $300 billion which is predicted for the country in this decade.

Petro-Canada has not enjoyed the support of all hon. members of the House in the past, particularly those in the Conservative Party of Canada, but it has enjoyed the support of the people of Canada who are far superior in their intellect and their ability to grasp the difficult situations and issues which Canadians must face. I am confident that Canadians across the country support the idea that Petro-Canada should take an active role in frontier exploration and development, in non-conventional oil, and in research and development. I am confident they feel that Petro-Canada should have the capital to undertake its share of the energy developments which will give the country the oil self-sufficiency to which its rich energy endowment entitles it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal information. I wonder if we could get that bearer of glad tidings, the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), to give us the results of the Newfoundland election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker: they elected no separatists.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, if you will give me the floor, I will make a good speech on why they should have voted in another way, but I always respect democracy and wish good luck—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Miss MacDonald: Tell us about the Newfoundland election, Marc. Give us the results.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is not your night, is it?

Miss MacDonald: Tell us all about the offshore. Tell us about Hibernia.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker—

Miss MacDonald: Newfoundland.

Mr. Lalonde: —Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act—

Miss MacDonald: Chicken.

Mr. Lalonde: —has been introduced to provide the Government of Canada with the ability to move quickly and decisively to deliver on our Canadianization commitments and to take advantage of opportunities to meet the energy needs of Canadians.

The amendment will give the government the authority to establish new Crown corporations in the energy field.

• (2020)

Mr. Clark: How many?

Mr. Lalonde: In our view it strikes the proper balance between providing the government with the authority necessary to effectively manage our national energy challenges while at the same time providing parliament with the new powers to scrutinize or even revoke the use of this authority. It should be emphasized that the provision in this bill to establish such corporations is limited. Corporations to be acquired must be federally incorporated companies. Companies that are either acquired or incorporated may only be established as Crown corporations for the purposes strictly limited to the energy sector as described in the bill.

The bill sets out these purposes as follows:

1) To explore for, develop, produce, gather, handle, refine, process, purchase, sell, import, export, distribute, store and transport all types of fuel and energy,

2) To produce, distribute and market energy conservation technology,

3) To conduct or engage or participate in energy research and energy conservation research,

4) To acquire and hold shares or assets of organizations carrying on these activities.

Mr. Clark: What is the reason?

Mr. Lalonde: We have introduced a bill which explicitly gives authority to parliament to reverse the decision to proceed with the establishment of a Crown corporation. It will be remembered that the previous government tried to dismantle a Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, without legislation.

Mr. Clark: That is false.

Mr. Lalonde: In the past it has been our practice for ministers to set up Crown corporations by merely arranging for incorporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act. What we are proposing is a mechanism whereby there will be specific parliamentary authority to create corporations in the energy field and where there will be a very specific provision giving parliament the right to negate the decision of the government to create a Crown corporation in the energy field specifically.

Mr. Clark: When can parliament not do that?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: I must also emphasize the fact that the takeover or the incorporation of such a company must be approved by the Governor in Council and that the order in council enacting this approval may be revoked by a negative resolution of Parliament, which could reverse the decision to set up such a corporation. Under the provisions of this bill, any order in council must be tabled in Parliament no later than the fifteenth sitting day of Parliament following the date it has been laid. The order in council comes into force on the thirteenth sitting day of Parliament following the date it has been laid before Parliament unless a motion to revoke it is addressed to the Speaker of either House. A negative resolution may be submitted by members of the opposition at any time during the nineteen days after the order in council is laid. In other words, before coming into force, the order in council must be laid before Parliament, where a negative resolution to revoke it can be submitted during the next nineteen sitting days of Parliament.

[English]

A motion to revoke an order to establish or acquire energy corporations would be considered by the House of Commons or the Senate upon presentation of such a motion signed by not less than 30 members of the House or not less than 15 members of the Senate. Members of the House will remember that under the provisions of Bill C-94 a negative resolution would have required the signatures of 50 or more members of the House of Commons or 20 or more members of the Senate. The new members, 30 in the House of Commons and 15 in the Senate, make parliamentary scrutiny of the powers exercised under this amendment even easier than was provided in Bill C-94.

Mr. Beatty: It is 50 and 20.

Mr. Lalonde: In the bill before the House it is 30 in the House of Commons and 20 in the Senate.

Mr. Beatty: Have you changed it again?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: As everybody knows, this bill is part of the legislation aimed at ensuring energy security in Canada. This amendment to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act will provide the government, under the control of Parliament, with one of the tools required to make the best possible use of the privileged position of Canada as concerns energy, namely the use of public corporations to complement the private sector in a climate of free competition.

[English]

The government does not foresee the need for frequent use of this provision. We do not envisage a major increase in the share of the oil and gas industry owned by the national government. As we stated in the National Energy Program, an early increase in the share of the oil and gas sector owned by the federal government was desirable, and substantial progress has been made in that area. This bill represents no new initiative toward public ownership of oil and gas. Rather, it is introduced in order to provide the government with the flexibility to establish corporations in the energy industry in order to take advantage of specific opportunities and to address specific problems.

Petro-Canada is now participating in the full range of activities and providing the full range of services of a national petroleum company. It will remain the principal direct policy instrument of the Government of Canada in the oil and gas industry. But, as was noted in the National Energy Program, the government is committed to competition. Competition is the lifeblood of the industry, and we owe it to consumers to ensure that competition is preserved both in the privately-owned sector and in the smaller publicly-owned sector.

[Translation]

The Canada Oil and Gas Act, passed by the House of Commons last December and given royal assent on March 5 this year, provides that the federal government will retain a Crown share of 25 per cent in oil interests in the Canada lands. This share may be transferred to a designated Crown corporation prior to the authorization of the system for producing oil or gas. To encourage competition in the public sector, it may be desirable to transfer Crown shares in oil and gas on Canada lands to a Crown corporation other than Petro-Canada. The bill will enable the government to establish new Crown corporations that will be responsible for holding and managing these assets for their owners, that is, all Canadians. Looking into the future, I would hazard a guess that it may be preferable to establish Crown corporations that are regionally based and hold Crown shares in specific Canada lands. As a result of the location of their offices and staff, and through the membership of their board of directors, these corporations could have first-hand knowledge of the energy requirements of the regions in question and be truly conscious of their needs, while managing their assets for the benefit of all Canadians.

In addition to Crown corporations to which would be transferred part of the assets represented by Crown shares in Canada lands, we might also need a Crown corporation other than Petro-Canada that would own and manage energy-oriented companies the Government of Canada might decide to acquire. In fact, Petro-Canada could act as an agent for such purchases, but its effectiveness as an instrument of the government might be reduced if it made too many acquisitions. A new Crown corporation might be necessary to stimulate competition in the public sector of the industry, and quick action would be necessary to make the transaction a success.

[English]

As members of the House will know, Petro-Canada has a subsidiary, Canertech, which is an investment corporation in the field of renewable energy and conservation technologies. I mention Canertech because it is another example of a potential use of the powers granted under this amendment. In this case, I am not speaking about a hypothetical situation, as I was when referring to the acquisition of petroleum companies, or a situation in which the action required is in the future, as is the case with the issue of which corporation is to hold Crown shares under the Canada Oil and Gas Act, but rather a situation where the amendments may prove useful in allowing Canertech to evolve as an independent Crown corporation.

• (2030)

As I mentioned, Canertech has its head office in Winnipeg. It is small in size, as is appropriate for its job. At present it is a subsidiary of Petro-Canada and it has benefited from corporate services, which would have been difficult for it to establish within itself during the start-up period. As time goes on, it might be preferable for Canertech to become a truly autonomous and independent corporation.

These are the main objectives and characteristics of the particular bill. As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, it formalizes and brings Parliament more into play than has been the situation in the past, when we have seen cases where governments and ministers were creating Crown corporations without referring to Parliament. The bill will ensure that in the limited sector of energy the minister and the government can create energy corporations and Parliament has the possibility of a negative resolution to annul the decision, if it so wishes.

[Translation]

I therefore ask the members of this House to consider giving this bill second reading, because it will provide the government with one of the tools it needs to develop its energy policy. Of course, its applications are limited, in the case of new corporations, to the establishment of energy corporations, and where acquisitions are concerned, to the purchase of corporations established under federal legislation. In both cases, such transactions must be approved by the governor in council, by cabinet, and may be the subject of a negative resolution by Parliament. Still, it is an instrument that can be used to resolve quickly a number of specific problems and to take advantage of opportunities as they are offered. I believe that Canadians agree that their government should have such tools at its disposal in order to ensure the energy security of our country.

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, at the time of the impasse when the minister first introduced the energy security bill, hon. members on this side of the House said that there were several elements of the bill which could be dealt with differently. Some of the elements of the bill were unobjectionable, others we felt were unwise, and others we felt were of questionable morality, such as the provision which would amend the Canada Business Corporations Act and allow the seizure and sale of people's shares without their consent. Other elements of the bill, though, were downright dangerous. The provision introduced by the minister which we are debating now in the form of Bill C-102 falls into the category of being downright dangerous. I intend to deal with that question as we go along over the course of the evening.

One thing which certainly struck my curiosity, as the minister was making his comment, was his suggestion that there was provision in the bill for a negative resolution to be put down in either House, either in the Senate or in the House of Commons, on the strength of 30 signatures of members of the House of Commons or 15 signatures of members of the Senate. Yet, last evening I came into the House and I asked for a copy of the bill which had been tabled by the minister, and I found that it provided for a motion for disallowance on the strength of 50 signatures in the House of Commons or 20 signatures in the Senate.

I have in my hands what the Table says is the House copy of Bill C-102. Clause 7(2) reads as follows:

> An order referred to in subsection (1) shall come into force on the thirtieth sitting day of Parliament after it has been laid before Parliament pursuant to that subsection unless before the twentieth sitting day of Parliament after the order has been laid before Parliament a motion for the consideration of either House, to the effect that the order be revoked, signed by not less than 50 members of the House of Commons in the case of a motion for the consideration of that House and by not less than 20 members of the Senate in the case of a motion for the consideration of the Senate, is filed with the Speaker of the appropriate House.

When I raised this issue with the minister, during his comments, he said that in fact the bill we are debating tonight has a provision for 30 and 50. Indeed, in the printed version of the bill which was distributed today to members, Bill C-102, those numbers have been changed to 30 members of the House and 15 members of the Senate.

This raises serious procedural questions which I think hon. members on this side may well want to raise; that is, where did the change take place, and on whose authority was the change made? The Table indicates that the bill, which was tabled by the minister in the House and circulated, contains the figures of 50 members of the House and 20 members of the Senate. I do not know on whose authority the change was made. Perhaps the minister could rise at this point and explain how it happened.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, obviously I cannot give a particular explanation for the point raised by the hon. member, because Bill C-102 which I have with me provides, as he mentioned, for 30 members of the House of Commons and not less than 15 members of the Senate. This is the bill which the government approved. There may have been an error in the tabling or in the distribution. I would certainly be very happy to co-operate with the Chair in exploring the matter. If there is a technical problem, or if there has been an error anywhere, I would certainly be happy to indicate right now—

Mr. Beatty: Which bill is before the House?

Mr. Lalonde: —that when the bill goes to committee, the government will move an amendment to ensure that it is 30 members of the House and 15 members of the Senate.

Mr. Beatty: I want to know which bill I am debating.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the difficulty which arises here is that while the minister, the government, and other members may have in their possession a bill which stipulates 30 members of the House and 15 members of the Senate, the fact remains that in so far as the official records of the House are concerned the bill tabled yesterday specified 50 members of the House of Commons and 20 members of the Senate. Naturally the question that arises is which bill is the House seized of, or which bill are we debating? The minister cannot hold out the assurance that he will amend a bill which is not before us and that would appear to be the case.

The minister cannot explain how the slip-up occurred. I cannot understand how instructions would have been given by the government to print the bill in the first place with the formula in that clause stipulated as 50 members of the House and 20 members of the Senate. Obviously there was either a typographical error or a change of policy, because what we have printed before members now is quite different than what we have in the possession of the House.

As a practical solution, I might suggest, if the government is advancing a bill based on the 30-15 formula, that we might seek unanimous consent to revert so that the government would be enabled to replace the bill tabled with the bill it wants us to debate. That could be achieved by unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I see the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) nodding his head. The Chair is in possession of the bill which, as the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), have indicated, refers to 50 members of the House of Commons and 20 members of the Senate. If I understand the mood of the House, it may be that the minister would put an amendment to correct those two figures, and the House would then debate on the understanding that those are the figures. Is that what the hon. member for Yukon proposes?

Mr. Lalonde: No, no.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am proposing something quite different. I am proposing that the bill tabled be withdrawn by consent, and that the government table the bill apparently before us, which appears to be based on the different fraction. I think the minister owes an explanation to the House as to why the 50-20 split was in the original bill tabled yesterday and why there is a difference in those figures today. Was this a change of heart, or was it a typographical error? Had the government reconsidered the unreasonableness of the 50-20 formula and thought perhaps that 30-15 was more reasonable? I think the minister owes us some explanation.

• (2040)

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for his helpful suggestion on how to proceed in this particular case. As far as an explanation is concerned, I cannot give one as to the substance of exactly what happened, but I will make inquiries about the other part and inform the House and my friend how the mistake could have occurred. However, I can tell the hon. member that we started by tabling a draft bill last June or July and the numbers used were 50 for the House of Commons and 20 for the Senate. No representations were received. The same numbers were put in Bill C-94.

However, subsequently I received representations, particularly from my own caucus and from members of the Senate, to the effect that the numbers appeared high. Lower numbers were suggested so that any opposition party in the House, as it stands today, could put forward a negative resolution, and to make sure to have a low enough number for the Senate so the opposition in the Senate would be in a position to put forward a negative resolution. On the basis of these representations and this advice, the government decided to cut down the numbers proposed in Bill C-94 to 30 and 15, instead of the 50 and 20 as originally suggested. In terms of substance, this is the explanation.

The instructions given to the drafstmen were to replace the numbers by the numbers that appear in Bill C-102. I will inquire why the bill that was tabled for first reading did not have those numbers in it. If it is agreeable to the House, I will be very happy to replace the text tabled yesterday by the text that appears in Bill C-102 with the proper figures of 30 and

15. If there is unanimous consent, I will be very happy to move that this be done.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, it would be interesting for all of us to know how this conversion on the road to Damascus took place overnight. As far as my party is concerned, we still think that 30 members for a negative motion is excessive. It is far in excess of those required in the Petroleum Administration Act. We do not like the idea of a negative motion at all. We know about the introduction of Bill C-102. It can be debated, but the exact numbers involves another discussion which I think can take place during the debate.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, we would be very pleased to accept the suggestion from the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). But if the minister is prepared to withdraw his bill of last evening and ask for unanimous consent for introduction of today's bill. We would certainly try to accommodate him.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent would have to be obtained for both stages, namely the withdrawal of the existing bill as tabled and the introduction of the bill that is apparently now in possession of members. We would certainly be prepared, since it was our suggestion, to give that kind of consent, particularly in light of this amazing conversion to humility by the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is discovering qualities that have always been there. I am happy they are becoming more and more perceptible to him. On the basis of this suggestion, if it is understood that we are proceeding at the same stage with the text that members have in their possession, I move, that the bill which is on the table be replaced by Bill C-102, which members have in their hands.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Hon. members have heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, and that the bill be replaced by the one as presently distributed to members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Moved by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde):

That Bill C-102, as tabled yesterday, be removed from consideration before the House of Commons and be replaced by the one presently distributed to members.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the Chair should also note that as a consequential result of the order of business of the House as just transacted, it will be understood that the times applicable to the House order which was passed with respect to the energy bills will be adjusted by the time used by the minister and also the time used by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) on Bill C-102 to date.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): This leaves the Chair in a somewhat difficult position. I believe the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is referring to the block debate time which was allotted to the discussion of the several bills. I am not certain how long ago the debate began. Perhaps we can agree that the time used on that edition of Bill C-102, which no longer exists, is 20 minutes?

Mr. Nielsen: The table is keeping a record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member has suggested that the record will indicate the amount of time and that it will be added to the block time under the previous House order. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: I am even more reasonable than that, Mr. Speaker. I am suggesting that the time already used in discussing the bogus bill be applied to the real bill.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, since we are not going anywhere anyway, I think it pertinent to point out to the Chair that the ultimate disposition of this bill on June 30 will take place no matter what we do in the meantime.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the proposal by the hon. member for Yukon. Is there unanimous consent thereto?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, now that we have been able to clean up the minister's mistake, I want to leave no misunderstanding on the part of the minister or members of the House on any side that members of my party were opposed to the bill as it was introduced by the minister and we are opposed to the bill as it stands today. We believe it is a dangerous bill, that it is one which does not deserve the support of Canadians, and that it is a bill which does not deserve the support of members of this House of Commons.

I think it important to note what the minister has been trying to do. A further comparison could be made. The bill introduced yesterday in the House of Commons was a draft dated March 26. Sometime between March 26 and today the government changed its mind on this question of a negative resolution. The government decided to attempt to make the threshold lower before a negative resolution could be put down.

It is worth comparing this bill to the energy security bill which divided Parliament for two weeks and prevented Members of Parliament from doing their jobs. In that bill there was no provision whatever for a negative resolution on this issue to be put before either of the Houses of Parliament. Instead, there has been a succession of changes of mind on the part of this minister who recognized that if he left this bill the way it stood before it would become apparent to all Canadians that the minister was attempting to do an end run on Parliament.

In the course of my remarks tonight, what I want to do is point out that, notwithstanding the cosmetics and the trappings of parliamentary democracy, which the minister has attempted to introduce here, the minister is setting a very dangerous precedent. He is attempting to undermine the ability of parliamentarians to control the way in which the public purse is used. He is attempting to create a mechanism which will allow for the uncontrolled proliferation of Crown corporations in future.

What does this bill do, Mr. Speaker? The first thing it provides is that the government will be able in future to incorporate an unlimited number of Crown corporations, presumably, and predominantly, in the energy field. But, as I will suggest later, the scope could extend well beyond the field of energy. This policy will allow uncontrolled proliferation of Crown corporations. It is a policy which has been under attack in the past by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, by the Auditor General, by the Lambert commission and by members of Parliament from all sides of the House. I see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) is leaving the House. I do not blame him for trying to slip out discreetly as we get into a matter which falls directly under his jurisdiction.

Within six months, of the Clark government taking office, we tabled in Parliament a comprehensive bill designed to bring some element of accountability and control to Crown corporations. Yet what we find today, more than two years after the Liberal government was restored to office, after two years of assurances from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) that he takes this matter seriously, is that we have yet to see any comprehensive legislation designed to protect the rights of Parliament and put in place the sort of accountability and control suggested by the Lambert Commission, the Public Accounts Committee and the Auditor General himself.

It is not a new problem, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General, back in his annual report of 1976, pointed out how serious the lack of financial control and accountability of Crown corporations was. It is now some six years later, but we are no better off today than we were then. We are no better off than we were after a succession of incidents leading to special inquiries into AECL, Air Canada, Polysar or other corporations where it was felt actions were taken not becoming a Crown corporation. In that time, with the exception of the nine months in which we were in office, apparently nothing of substance has taken place to try to bring some regime of accountability and control to Crown corporations.

We do not even know in any official way, Mr. Speaker, how many wholly-owned Crown corporations there are. The President of the Treasury Board has the responsibility for Crown corporations, and last evening I asked him how many corporations does the government own 100 per cent of. His answer was that he did not know, he could not tell us, he would try to count them.

Mr. Lalonde: He is out there counting now.

Mr. Beatty: Probably the most accurate guess which can be made is that the government probably has 170 wholly-owned Crown corporations at the present time. But that is only a guess; there is no way in which we can be sure. Not all Crown corporations are even listed in the schedules to the Financial Administration Act, a point made often by various groups looking at this particular issue. There is no way that this Parliament knows how many are wholly owned by the Government of Canada, and what does that say for the ability of members on any side to discharge their responsibility on behalf of their constituents? It says that we have been seriously weakened in our ability to protect the interests of Canadians, to protect the integrity of the taxpayers' dollars, and to do our job in reprepresenting our constituents on these matters of public concern.

The first thing this bill will do, Mr. Speaker, is to allow the creation of an unlimited number of new Crown corporations. That is something which apparently the President of the Treasury Board approves of. How will this be done? First of all, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will go to three of his colleagues and ask them to sign an order in council. The signatures of four cabinet members will constitute the authorization for an order in council. That will give all the necessary authority for the minister to put the machinery into effect to create yet another and another new Crown corporation.

The next measure is a new one introduced by the minister in the new draft of the bill. That order in council will be tabled in Parliament and brought before us. Members of Parliament and Senators, whether it is 50 and 30, or 15 and 20, will have the ability to sign a negative resolution, put it before Parliament, and ask that a vote be held. This is the minister's token concession to parliamentary democracy. He sees this as the role of Parliament in controlling Crown corporations.

An hon. Member: Wonderful scheme.

Mr. Beatty: We will be allowed to put down a negative resolution and have a three-hour debate in the House of Commons. Assume for a minute, Mr. Speaker, that the minister wants to spend $1 billion of the taxpayers' money to buy a new company and incorporate it as a Crown corporation. How would this be done? First of all, by an order in council giving him authority and by tabling the order in the House, and if members objected we would have three hours to debate the government's intention. This would be done without any legislation being put before us, without spelling out in any way what the mandate of the Crown corporation would be, without putting any limitations upon the authority of the government to act in this way. We would only have three hours to debate whether or not the taxpayers' money should be used in this way.

Assume, Mr. Speaker, that in those three hours a majority of members of the House raised concerns, convinced their colleagues and voted that this order should be nullified, that we should strike it down and deny the government authority to incorporate a new Crown corporation to spend perhaps $1 billion of the taxpayers' money. What would happen then? Mr. Speaker, according to the bill, the motion which we passed in the House would be sent to the other place, where the senators would be given a similar time to consider it. If a majority of senators concurred in the decision made by a majority of the members here that the government should not be allowed to spend public funds in this way, then the order would be null and void. It would be struck down and they would not be allowed to continue. But—and here is the interesting wrinkle—if the Senate decided they did not agree with members of the House, the government would have the authority on the strength of the Senate's failing to concur in the motion moved in the House.

This is an interesting constitutional question, Mr. Speaker, and one which the minister would be well advised to look at very closely. We would have a situation where the government would be going to the Senate to seek the parliamentary authority necessary to spend hundreds of millions, possibly billions, of tax dollars. I would suggest to the President of the Treasury Board and to the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources—

Mr. Huntington: Who is not here.

Mr. Beatty: —that there is serious doubt as to the constitutionality of this measure. What they are attempting to do is something which the Senate is specifically prohibited from doing: authorizing public moneys to be spent. If this goes forward, it is entirely possible that the courts of Canada may strike it down and say that the government is attempting to do something for which it has no authority. It is attempting in this bill to give authority to the Senate which it does not have today.

Even if that were not the case, Mr. Speaker, even if there were not serious doubts as to the constitutionality of this measure, the principle would surely be odious. Instead of coming to Parliament with a bill in which they spelled out the mandate of a Crown corporation, allowing it to be debated and go into standing committees of the House where witnesses could be called, instead of allowing us to vote on the measures and defeat them if we decide they should not go forward, they are reversing the onus and saying that Parliament tonight, if we pass this measure, is granting to the government for all time carte blanche to do whatever it wants unless a majority of both Houses of Parliament put themselves on record as saying in a specific case: no, you cannot do it.

I wish you had been there, Mr. Speaker, when I had the opportunity to have an exchange with the President of the Treasury Board. I asked him whether this measure was one he accepted as the minister responsible for trying to bring in a regime to enhance the accountability of Crown corporations and plug Parliament back into the picture. We have been left out, as the Auditor General has pointed out, and as members here have pointed out on numerous occasions. I asked him if he agreed that Parliament's role as envisaged in this legislation was satisfactory. He said yes, on two grounds. One is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources could not unilaterally incorporate a new Crown corporation; he would need the consent of at least three other members of cabinet. That would be hard to get, no doubt. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, he said Parliament is giving its consent. If we pass Bill C-102 tonight, we are saying for all time that if the minister wants to incorporate a new Crown corporation, that is okay with us. The minister says: that is satisfactory, it means Parliament has been sufficiently plugged into the process again.

If that is satisfactory to the President of the Treasury Board, if he believes it is adequate and Parliament is discharging its responsibility when we simply write a blank cheque to the minister, then I ask him: why are we debating other pieces of legislation? At the beginning of each parliamentary session, why do we not simply pass a bill delegating authority to the government to do whatever it wants? It sounds ludicrous, does it not? It seems to be an odd thing to even discuss. Yet that is precisely what we are doing in this instance.

Mr. King: Disgusting!

Mr. Beatty: We do not follow that procedure because we believe that Parliament has the responsibility, not simply to give a broad granting of power to the government to do whatever it wants, but the responsibility, on behalf of our constituents, on behalf of the people of Canada, to examine specific measures which are brought before Parliament by the government and to closely question the government, to make amendments and to make suggestions for improvements before the government goes ahead and acts on that authority. That is the serious flaw in this bill. The President of the Treasury Board cannot be expected to be taken seriously by anyone if he says that the regime of accountability here, if the procedure is followed to plug Parliament back into this bill, is satisfactory to ensure that Members of Parliament will do their job.

Mr. King: Are you listening, Donald?

Mr. Beatty: One might say that even if Members of Parliament do not have the ability to vote on a bill spelling out what the Crown corporation is to do, surely this is something that is desirable. Your Honour will recall that VIA Rail was created as a Crown corporation by using a dollar vote in the estimates. In two successive annual reports, the President of VIA Rail has said that one of the most serious problems of his corporation is that its mandate was never spelled out. The corporation does not know what is expected of it by the government and by Parliament.

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has recommended, in more than one report, that the government come back if it wants a rail passenger corporation to become a Crown corporation. The government could come back to Parliament bringing legislation spelling out the mandate of the corporation. We will not be allowed to do that in the energy field in the future. That is to be denied Parliament. Surely, the next question we must ask ourselves is, well, if the government is to spend funds on a Crown corporation, if it is to buy one in the private sector, does Parliament not have the authority to question the minister about the expenditure of those funds, to hold him accountable, to demand that he give some adequate explanation? The answer is, no. It is not apparent from reading Bill 102, as it stands. Your Honour must look at it in the context of the energy security bill, Bill C-94, now withdrawn, now dismembered, now being introduced by its various parts. When this section allowing the creation of unlimited Crown corporations is juxtaposed with the Canadian ownership account provisions of Bill C-94, Section 65.26, one finds that the government, through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, is permitted to spend money from the so-called Canadian ownership fund, to take tax dollars which have been taken from Canadians, and hold them in a separate fund. That money can be spent to acquire the shares in a new corporation. Section 65.26(3)(b) states:

—subject to the approval of the Governor in Council and in accordance with such terms and conditions, if any, as he may, on the recommendation of the Minister and the Minister of Finance prescribe, such amounts as are from time to time required by the Minister for investment in shares, debentures, bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of any person in order to increase Canadian public ownership of the oil and gas industry in Canada through share and property acquisitions and to repay loans or expenses incurred for that purpose.

If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wants to create or buy another multi-billion dollar oil company or company operating in any other energy-related field, all that he need do is to reach into the Canadian ownership fund to take money to use at his own discretion to purchase this new Crown corporation or he can simply go out and incorporate a new Crown corporation under the terms of the Canada Business Corporations Act.

What this means is that once again, in the expenditure of conceivably billions of the taxpayers' dollars, Parliament is being cut out. Parliament is being denied the opportunity to protect the tax dollars of our constituents which are held by us in trust on their behalf. We are being prevented from discharging our responsibility there. This is the minister's idea of plugging Parliament back in, ensuring that Parliament can discharge its responsibilities. Well, what are its responsibilities? We do not know. When the Lambert commission, the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, looked at the whole question of control of Crown corporations, it was quite explicit. On page 333 of its report, it states:

Ideally, Parliament should approve the mandate for every Crown corporation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: It goes on to state:

—as indeed the case where individual constituents acts are used to establish a Crown Corporation. Involvement of Parliament at the moment of creation provides no guarantee, however, that the mandate will clearly define the nature of the task, the objectives to be met, and the powers to be delegated.

The commission further stresses that point. On page 334, it states:

Parliament should give prior approval, in the departmental or constituent act, to permit a minister to recommend to the Governor in Council the incorporation of a company under the Canada Business Corporation Act.

The Lambert commission recommended a similar regime to apply to subsidiaries of Crown corporations. If the President of the Treasury Board were speaking this evening, he would say, "That is surely what we are doing tonight. We are saying in this act that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be able to do precisely that". I would invite the minister to speak to Mr. Justice Lambert and ask him whether, when he discussed the need for Parliament to give prior approval, he meant that the prior approval would come in the form of a blank cheque to be drawn on the account of the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. King: Totally irresponsible!

Mr. Beatty: The government is making a serious attack on the ability of Parliament to protect the public purse. It is worth asking ourselves, where could the public purse come into risk? After the minister has bypassed Parliament in the creation of these new Crown corporations, after he has bypassed Parliament in financing them through the Canadian ownership fund which does not come into the estimates of Parliament and does not have to be voted upon by Parliament, that is surely where the liability of Canadians ends. However, that is not the case. If one reads Bill C-102, one finds that Clause 1 will add Section 6 to the Energy, Mines and Resources Act, and Clause 6(3) will read as follows:

A corporation is for all purposes an agent of Her Majesty and its powers may be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty.

It is rather arcane language, but not something which the average Canadian would feel is particularly objectionable. What does it mean? It means that a Crown corporation is being created for which the taxpayers of Canada will be responsible if the government acts in a way which is irresponsible. The people who will have to pay the bills at the end of the day are the taxpayers of Canada. All the debts incurred by those Crown corporations set up under this bill will become liabilities of the Government of Canada. Consequently, they will have to be paid for by the taxpayers of Canada.

Therefore, once again, we find that without Parliament being plugged in, the taxpayer gets stung. What is interesting is that these Crown corporations will be incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act. However, the decision to grant the agent of Her Majesty status goes directly against one of the principles in the Canada Business Corporations Act. That is the principle of a corporate veil. If Your Honour incorporated a private company today, and if it went bankrupt, the shareholders of that company would not be liable for the debts of the company. The principle of a corporate veil is included in the Canada Business Corporations Act. There is a difference here. The shareholders of those Crown corporations, the people of Canada, will be responsible for every penny of liability incurred by these new Crown corporations acting as agents of Her Majesty.

Therefore, we find yet again that Parliament is making commitments in its name, in the name of the people of Canada, without being directly involved, without having the opportunity to fully debate and without having the opportunity to amend and make specific proposals. Surely, as if this were not bad enough, we should also ask ourselves, was the minister correct? Was he factual? I will choose my words carefully. Did he factually inform the House when he said in his remarks earlier that these corporations would be limited to the energy field? If one asks the minister that question, he will refer you to the bill, to Clause (1), paragraphs (c), (d), (e) and (f). He read them out. All of those deal with the energy field. His argument is that these new Crown corporations will be expected to confine themselves strictly to the energy field. Is it true? Mr. Speaker, it is not true. The Crown corporations, because they will be incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act, will have the powers of a natural person. That means that they will have the ability to go into any field they like such as private energy or transportation. They can buy an airplane company, they can set up a radio station, they can purchase a newspaper. If they want to control supply, they can go and buy a pulp and paper mill. All of this is allowed under the Canada Business Corporations Act. The sections in here which list the various broad-ranging powers in the energy field that can be exercised by these companies in no way limit the scope of these companies to get into new areas.

What we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is giving carte blanche for public funds to be spent to purchase and create new Crown corporations of an unlimited number, not just in the energy field but corporations which will have the authority to move into any field in or out of Canada when they so desire. That is what this bill will do. I would suggest, with due respect, that when the minister says to the House that the bill would be restricted to the energy field, he should consult with his legal advisers, because that simply is not the case. Is that the sort of legislation, Mr. Speaker, which the House of Commons should be approving? I think not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Surely if we are discharging our responsibility, we have the job on behalf of our constituents, to demand that the minister indicate what Crown corporations he wants to set up, what will be their responsibilities, what will be the cost to the taxpayers, what will be the limitations on their powers. We do not know. It is carte blanche which Parliament is being asked to give tonight.

What if the new Crown corporations that are being created want to keep the spirit of what the minister said? What if someone refers to Hansard and finds, even though we know what the Canada Business Corporations Act said, the minister said that these corporations will be restricted to the energy field, the incredibly broad-ranging powers within the energy field. Is he going to do that? What then can a Crown corporation do if it wants to stick to the energy field but it wants to be involved in other areas as well? What can it do? It can incorporate a subsidiary. Under the Canada Business Corporations Act, this Crown corporation can go out and create a subsidiary in any field whatsoever. The minister says, here we have control. The President of the Treasury Board was so impressed with this last evening.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources cannot create a new Crown corporation without the consent of the governor in council. Is the governor in council's consent required when these new Crown corporations incorporate subsidiaries? It is not. The bill is mute on that. Under the Canada Business Corporations Act, any number of new subsidiaries can be set up. Is Parliament to be consulted? Will the order, which did not exist be laid before Parliament so that we can have a debate in Parliament as to whether or not it should be allowed? No, there is no order. It cannot be laid before Parliament. You cannot have even the very limited powers of a negative resolution which has been proposed by the minister.

These subsidiary corporations can be involved in any field, they can incur debts in the name of Her Majesty, they can go well beyond any scope that was considered by Parliament. Parliament will not have the power to intervene.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Beatty: Parliament cannot intervene because it will not come up before Parliament. It will not come back to the President of the Treasury Board to be considered. He will not have the opportunity in the case of the subsidiary, to be one of the three other ministers of the Crown who join with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in signing an order in council—because there will be no order in council.

How can Parliament be expected to approve a measure of this nature? Is that adequate? Are we discharging our responsibility? Is the President of the Treasury Board, after two years of being charged with the responsibility for drawing up comprehensive legislation, to bring some element of accountability to Crown corporations, doing his job?

An hon. Member: No! He ought to be ashamed of himself.

Mr. Beatty: When the President of the Treasury Board was a private member, what was his responsibility to Parliament? He was the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. And what committee of Parliament has been more active than the Public Accounts committee in putting reports before Parliament and saying to Members of Parliament that action must be taken to bring in a regime of accountability for Crown corporations? That was when he was a private member; that was when he was allowed to have ideas of his own. Now he is a member of the cabinet, he is not allowed to express those ideas. He is responsible now for defending whatever the cabinet decides. He is the one to whom the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave the responsibility for a regime of accountability by Crown corporations. And this is the regime of accountability, this is the way he believes Parliament should be involved.

An hon. Member: He ought to be ashamed.

Mr. Beatty: This is the way in which he feels he should protect the moneys of the taxpayers of Canada. Surely we are entitled to ask, Mr. Speaker, what he has done over the course of the past two years.

The minister did not spell it out. When he spoke to us a few minutes ago, he did not indicate what his intention was, what sort of Crown corporations will be created. Will the President of the Treasury Board be getting up in this debate to tell us that they have had a full discussion in cabinet and that they know what Crown corporations will be created? Does he know? If he does, surely he should share that information with Parliament? If he does not, how can he conceivably be expected to be taken seriously by Members of Parliament when he asks us to support this bill?

It is just impossible, Mr. Speaker, to understand how the President of the Treasury Board does not feel that he has direct responsibility.

What more do we need, other than the evidence of the behaviour of some Crown corporations in recent years, to recognize that what Mr. Lambert talked about, what the Auditor-General talked about, and what the Public Accounts committee talked about, is essential. Do we need more evidence than the questions which have been raised in the House of Commons of recent days about Uranium Canada, a shell corporation, and agent of Her Majesty, acting on behalf of the Government of Canada, which has been charged with crimes by the Government of Canada because of the creation of an energy cartel a corporation which is pleading that it cannot be prosecuted because it has a Crown immunity? What better indication do we need as members of Parliament to convince us that we do not do our jobs properly unless we supervise the actions of these Crown corporations?

What more evidence do we need, Mr. Speaker, than the AECL incident to indicate that members of Parliament were not doing their job in properly scrutinizing the activities of that Crown corporation, that we needed the authority to do that?

An hon. Member: The Polysar case.

Mr. Beatty: What more evidence do we need than the Polysar case, or the Air Canada case? I believe that in the Air Canada case there was a new Crown corporation set up by the directors of Air Canada which cost the taxpayers $9 million. What more evidence do we need that Members of Parliament, if they are to discharge their responsibilities, must be given a role to play and must be able to have some regime of accountability on how this money is being spent.

I asked the President of the Treasury Board what more evidence did he need to have than Consolidated Computer, which I believe—and he can correct me if I am wrong—was wholly owned, ultimately, by the Government of Canada, a corporation for whose liabilities the Government of Canada certainly is responsible up to, I believe, $100 million.

An hon. Member: $105 million.

Mr. Beatty: Yes, $105 million. What more evidence do we need, then, to suggest that when public funds are being used the Parliament of Canada should have some role in ensuring that they are being properly used? What more evidence do we need that the President of the Treasury Board or the ministers of the Crown should have the ability and the responsibility to discharge a public trust and ensure that public funds are properly spent?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: When the members of the government ask us to support this measure, when they ask us to allow unlimited tax dollars to be spent in the future without parliamentary scrutiny, when they ask for the unlimited proliferation of Crown corporations, let them discuss Consolidated Computer with their constituents who are losing their farms or losing a home or losing their businesses or their jobs, because the Government of Canada says they do not have enough money for them to help out. What are they going to say to justify the $100 million that was lost in Consolidated Computer because of the government's mishandling of the Crown corporation?

An hon. Member: One hundred and twenty-five million.

Mr. Beatty: It is $125 million, my colleague says. How are they going to tell their constituents that the money is not available there to help them because the government has spent it, has dropped it down the sink, in Consolidated Computer?

An hon. Member: They do not care.

Mr. Beatty: Surely no minister should be allowed to come before the House with a straight face and ask us to pass a measure like this with that effect upon Canadian taxpayers? It would seem, Mr. Speaker, that the measure before the House is a dangerous in-run on Parliament. What they are doing is creating a rule which will enable the government for all time, if anyone questions the legitimacy of these Crown corporations, to say that Parliament approved it. They can say that Parliament said it was all right. They can refer us to Bill C-102, the blank cheque we have written for the government. For all time they will be able to say that Parliament approved it. Surely we should ask ourselves before Parliament approves it how that authority will be used in the future.

• (2120)

What is incredible, if you have watched the Prime Minister defend ministers of the Crown on various issues is that he likes to say the minister was discharging his responsibility, doing what Parliament asked him to do when Parliament gave him the power. He has used that example in an number of instances. No doubt in future when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources incorporates new corporations and runs up new debts on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada, his response will be that that minister was doing his duty as laid upon him and required of him by Parliament.

Parliament imposes no duty on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tonight. Parliament simply writes a blank cheque for him to spend tax dollars as he sees fit, to extend the control of government into areas where today it is not involved directly without further parliamentary approval. If we do that, we have been very negligent in our responsibility.

When the parliamentary impasse ended a couple of weeks ago after two weeks of the bells ringing and Parliament being in a position where it was impossible to conduct business, the first order of business placed before the House was the issue of parliamentary reform. You were present in the Chair, Mr. Speaker, when members on all sides of the House got up and said that they support Parliament. They believed it was essential that we have reform of this institution to ensure that they could do their job on behalf of those who sent them here. It was said that it is meaningful when on election night people in Thunder Bay elected my colleague as he had some role to play, when people from Vancouver elected my colleague and when people from Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe elected me. We said that exercise of their franchise would be meaningful and amount to something and that Parliament would be able to discharge the responsibilities expected of it by our constituents.

We all paid lip service to Parliamentary reform, to responsibility and to our duties to our country and our constituents. What sort of parliamentary reform can the government be talking about when the most important reform is to put in place a legislative end-run on Parliament for the future? It is giving itself a blank cheque, allowing itself to do virtually whatever it wants in terms of Crown corporations in the future. It is ensuring that Parliament, which is impotent today, will be more impotent tomorrow.

We are simply giving away what authority has not already been taken away from us by the members of the executive. That is their idea of parliamentary reform. It is their idea of what members of the House of Commons and the Senate should be doing. It is their idea of what their backbenchers should be doing, that they have no authority to look into matters of this sort.

Members on all sides of this House had a chance to participate in that debate. All of us went on record saying that we wanted to strengthen Parliament, make it more meaningful, make it a place where decisions were made which are crucial to the future of Canada.

The onus is on everyone who participated in that debate and on every Member of Parliament who reads this bill, to search his soul and ask himself whether we are serving Parliament and the people who sent us here when we give away that power for all time. Should we pass this measure which is probably unconstitutional, a matter which is definitely unparliamentary? It clearly evades the spirit of Parliament and clearly undermines the role of Parliament. It flies in the face of the recommendations of parliamentary committees, a royal commission, the Auditor General, and statements of repeated governments, not just the Conservative government but the Liberal government as well, the Liberal government prior to 1979 and the Liberal government of today of which the President of the Treasury Board has the responsibility for Crown corporations.

Surely we have to ask ourselves whether we are doing our job if we allow this to go forward. When the vote is taken on this issue, members on this side of the House will be voting against this bill. I suggest that members on any side of the House who are concerned about Parliament and their responsibilities to the people of Canada will join us in saying that this measure must not be allowed to pass.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to participate in this debate tonight. I congratulate the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) on an excellent speech. Like his party, my party has no intention of supporting this measure.

Frankly, there are certain things in the measure that intrigue us. For example, we like the idea that we should have a Crown corporation to do a number of things that are outlined in Clause 1, such as explore, develop, produce, gather, refine and process in the energy field. We like the idea of the distribution and marketing of energy conservation technology. I do not see how anybody could be against that. The only question is whether the government should be involved and have a piece of the action or whether a private corporation should have it in its entirety. It refers to acquiring and holding shares of an activity referred to in the previous paragraphs, and all the rest of it. However, as the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe said, the bill goes much too far. We like it for those things I just outlined. We like it because it discusses the possibility of new corporations in the alternative energy field and in the conservation field. How could anybody object to that since we need incentives in that area?

It means the government might even be contemplating increased support for renewables and conservation. I hope so. The record so far in this area has been dismal. This afternoon the minister said that EMR has directed $500 million into it. Compare that to what is going to be put into PIPs, the petroleum incentives program, and you balance $500 million as opposed to $6,000 million. You can see where their priorities are. The government is four square on the supply side regardless of the consequences, economic, social, environmental or otherwise. They are certainly not determined to limit demand.

As the minister said, it is important for Crown corporations to compete and complement the private sector. It is important, provided they do that, but I am not certain they are going to do that. I would like to think they are going to do it. How can we be certain?

If we are going to require that sort of openness accountability and freedom of information for public corporations and Crown corporations, the same rules should apply to all private corporations, that are on the dole, that is receiving tax expenditures. I refer to CPR, Dome Petroleum, Chrysler Corporation, Massey and all the private oil companies.

If we are going to ask of Crown corporations complete openness and accountability for public funds, we should ask the same when public funds and tax expenditures go into private corporations. We should be doing that. There are some things we like about this bill. I have outlined some of them. We feel that the public sector has a real role to play in the energy field.

In many ways the minister copped out. Probably he was wooed with the siren song of Esso. Sometimes I think the minister is "Esso-teric".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: However, there are some things we do not like. I would like to outline some. They were detailed extremely well by the previous speaker. We object to the myth and the blank cheque approach. We object to the method by which they could create any number of new corporations and present them to the House without any further discussion. Is the expression ipso facto—

• (2130)

Mr. Waddell: That is what the lawyers say.

Mr. Rose: They should be ashamed of themselves. A separate bill is no longer required. A new corporation is not created the way Petro-Canada was. The minister simply announces it, and unless 30 or 50—I do not know what the numbers are, it was 50 last night and 30 today, I hope it will be 10 tomorrow—but a number of members must stand up to object, which is, in effect, a negative motion.

Does that mean that a bill comes here so we can proceed from its second reading stage to committee to examine expert witnesses? No, not at all. What has occurred is that we are presented with this piece of legislation, and unless many people object to it—when it goes to committee my party will move that the requirement for 30 members of the House be reduced to 10 in accordance with the Tory administration act—are we able to call expert witnesses to explain what is contemplated by this bill? No, we cannot. Instead of a five-hour debate, we will have a three-hour debate, and then the matter is finished. The members opposite will steamroll over us. They will have performed their function as voting machines in support of the government.

An hon. Member: To govern.

Mr. Rose: Those members cannot govern at all. They are voting machines. The 30 members in the cabinet are the ones who govern. Do not try to convince us that we elect a democratic government, because I know what happens.

Mr. Waddell: He knows very well.

Mr. Rose: The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain) knows very well what happens. What we see is a potential steam roller effect where future initiatives to be taken for alternative energy could be killed.

As was said previously, parliamentary accountability is necessary. We must have that because there are too many horror stories like that of Consolidated Computer. Even though it was not a Crown corporation, it made off with $125 million. On my way from the airport I saw a sign on the street for Nabu Corporation which obtained CCI for $800,000. It is worth $125 million. That is an example of parliamentary accountability.

We have never needed parliamentary accountability more than today, and the minister has the audacity to walk in the House with a bare-faced grab for power to change the manner in which Crown corporations are instituted.

This government has certainly proven in the past that it is either unwilling or incapable of taking initiatives which I believe are very important. It is our party's view that the whole approach to the energy question, regardless of the established Crown corporations which I will not get into again, is quite simply headed in the wrong direction. We believe that the government is doing it all wrong and we have evidence to prove that.

I had occasion to be on the parliamentary task force committee which was set up by the government. We spent a year examining methods by which Canada might ensure its own energy self-sufficiency. Its recommendations were completely ignored, which is another matter I will come to shortly.

The government has certainly proven that it is unwilling or incapable of following through on any initiatives to relieve our energy crisis, even in the middle run if not the short run. I will give some examples to illustrate why I believe that. The government introduced the PUSH program with great fanfare. That program was the demonstration of solar heating technology in government buildings. The government announced in 1978 that it would spend $125 million on PUSH over a five-year period. We are now into the fourth year of the program and you would be ashamed and shocked, Mr. Speaker, to see that it has spent $23 million out of $125 million. That is mere tokenism.

A year ago, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources announced a super-insulation demonstration program. It was supposed to provide grants up to $5 thousand per unit to cover design and construction costs of super-insulation projects. It has been over a year and nothing has happened. The government is still negotiating with the builders. It has displayed a complete lack of action almost to the extent of being criminal.

There is the task force report to which I referred earlier. The report of that task force, which was under the capable chairmanship of the hon. member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), was tabled almost a year ago. The report contained 65 recommendations. I would like to read the guidelines which were developed by that excellent task force, which was made up of an all-party committee, including the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin). This report was described as little short of outstanding. This committee, cost approximately $800,000, and not a word from the minister—

Mr. Lalonde: It was your expense.

Mr. Rose: We did not hear a word from the minister. There is no money for health or housing. We see great amounts of money being spent to bore holes in the Beaufort Sea.

The committee made seven recommendations. First, we should make every effort to reduce energy demand by practising conservation. The minister is completely occupied with the supply side of the energy question. All that he can think about is Hibernia and drilling more holes in one area and causing more environmental risks somewhere else. He does not give much attention to trying to reduce the demand. We are told by many people, including people in his own department, that if he injected the same amount of money into alternatives and substitutes he would be much better off. But he ignores that advice. He walks into the House with this inadequate bill tonight and expects us to accept it. We cannot do it.

I think these suggestions are worth looking at as guidelines for development which were made by a parliamentary committee, including a majority of the minister's own members, to suggest where we should be heading. Either this committee was correct democratically or it was all wrong. The second suggestion of the committee was that, in the long term, energy should be derived primarily from renewable or inexhaustible resources of energy. What does the minister do with respect to the second question? He spends $6.5 billion on the PIPs program. What does that accomplish? That only provides for the exploration and discovery of finite and non-renewable resources.

The third suggestion was that the production of the primary energy we require should be achieved with as little environmental disruption as possible. What will happen when there is a blowout in Beaufort and Hibernia or off the coast of Labrador? An environmental atrocity could occur, but it is of no concern because it relates to the supply side of energy. There is no consideration for smaller automobiles, less gas or conservation by giving a grant equivalent to what is being given to PIPs. We are concerned only with the supply side.

Fourth, we must achieve a greater diversity in Canada's energy mix. Is the government giving incentives for propane, transport fuel, or electrifying our railways? Some of those alternatives should be considered. I do not believe that we can completely get rid of the megaprojects, but certainly there must be a better balance to what the government is doing.

The fifth suggestion states that we must recognize regional differences in energy resources and in energy requirements. This would make oil and gas exploration sensible, along with substitution in Atlantic Canada. It may not make sense in other parts of Canada, but since we are very rich in resources we must achieve a mix and take care of things that are non-renewable.

Sixth, we must address strategic concerns in formulating energy policy. How do we solve the problem if we are suddenly cut off? The minister says to give more money to the oil companies to do more drilling in Hibernia or offshore. That may be part of the solution but it is onesided.

The final suggestion was that we must consider the social implications of bringing about major changes in Canada's energy system. What will the social implications be? I will outline two or three. First, it makes sense to decentralize our energy systems. Does it really make more sense to send a welder up to the Beaufort Sea than to provide a manufacturing base for that welder in conservation techniques in Waterloo or Vancouver or somewhere else? What about the social and family disruption? What about the environmental disruption?

We had a committee which looked at Canada's energy problem from a very loyal and perhaps even a nationalistic point of view. We looked at the Canada energy system for approximately a year and heard from expert witnesses. It is a little disappointing that its recommendations have been almost completely ignored.

The committee called for a minister of state for conservation and renewables. Why would we do that? We did that for the same reason a minister of state, was appointed in charge of mines under the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources. We need someone whose main task would be to look after certain things which are considered important, such as conservation. Everyone tells us it is far cheaper to conserve a barrel of oil than to find a new one. At marginal prices the cost would be about one-quarter to one-half the cost.

We could go into solar. We have not provided incentives for solar. We have subsidized electricity, gas, petroleum and a number of other conventional hard path energy systems. The government pay anywhere from 10 per cent to 50 per cent of their actual value, yet we expected solar to stand on its own. That is not practical, and yet we know that the solar industry is capable of tremendous expansion. With a minimum of $250 million over a five-year period we could provide up to 100,000 jobs at the rate of about $2,500 in public funds per job. In a country which needs energy and in a country which is filled with unemployed, why do we not try some of these things instead of constantly being caught up with the same old habit pattern of finding more oil to burn in more gas guzzlers to provide more money for the multinationals to export to their home state? We are asking the government to look at a few things like that.

Mr. MacBain: Look this way, Mark. We are watching. We want to see you.

Mr. Rose: My friend, the hon. member for Niagara Falls, was on the alternative energy committee, and he knows why we did what we did. But what he does not know—and if he does, he has not said so—is why the government has not moved to implement the recommendations of that committee after more than a year. Why do we not have something in line with that excellent report? Why is that?

Mr. Waddell: It is a Lalonde power grab.

Mr. Rose: If we really want energy security we should not be bothered with the kind of nonsense which comes in this one bill or the eight other bills. It does not matter; energy security for Canada can be found, at least in part, in the alternative energy committee study and recommendations, and yet it has been ignored. There has not been one official statement about the whole thing.

This afternoon in debate on an earlier bill the minister beat his breast about Canertech. He said it is a tremendous thing and will do everything for everybody, including people who live in foreign countries. What money was provided for Canertech? For alternatives and conservation $20 million was provided and perhaps $15 million to spend overseas.

Mr. Waddell: Six thousand five hundred million for PIPs.

Mr. Rose: Let me put this in perspective. The cost to Mobil for drilling one dry well off the coast of Labrador was $30 million. What the minister is prepared to put into Canertech is roughly equal to Mobil's one dry well. That points out to me the bias toward the supply side.

Why are we not doing these things? Why are we not putting more money into alternatives, conservation and renewables? The answer is that we are suffering from megamania. Marc's megamania: that is the objective. That is the policy of the government, from Senator Bud Olson right on down. First there is oil megamania. The government is throwing money at the multinationals to develop tar sands without even demanding equivalent equity for the investment. We can talk about Syncrude, Alsands or strikes by the oil companies. It does not matter; the government will put up the bucks. The people of Canada will put up the bucks, and the multinationals will get the equity. If the model is Syncrude, we can see that is what will happen. The problem now is that the price of oil has fallen. There is an oil glut, and all the big high rollers are bailing out because 19 per cent is not good enough for them.

The next is nuclear megamania. Whether we are underfunding solar programs, PUSH and the super insulation program, there is a great grab bag of strange cabinet ministers going all over the world trying to sell the Candu reactor to "democracies" such as Egypt, Argentina of recent fame, Kuwait and Korea. And with loan financing; it would make the average house buyer turn green. We are giving it to them at 7 per cent or so.

Mr. Fulton: Two per cent.

Mr. Rose: Effectively 7 per cent. No. The government borrows money at 16 per cent and gives it to Mexico for 7 per cent if they will only buy our reactor, which they will not. Nobody will. I think the total we wrote off last year was $800 million to AECL debt, and this year we are continuing that crazy budget of two-thirds of our research budget in energy going to nuclear. In total, we have spent over $4 billion on the nuclear program.

I could mention coal megamania in British Columbia, where the federal government is going to put up $1 billion. It puts up $20 million for Canertech but $1 billion to Northeast Coal or 1,000 million.

Mr. Fulton: Subsidizing the export of cheap coal.

Mr. Rose: Subsidize anybody; that is their middle name.

Mr. MacBain: Mark "Subsidize".

Mr. Rose: We could call him "Marc Subsidize Lalonde".

Mr. MacBain: I was talking about Mark Rose, by the way.

Mr. Rose: We subsidize practically every form of energy there is. I have here a little study entitled "Energy Reference Cost Premiums—A Draft Working Paper". I am glad the hon. member brought this up. This was a study undertaken in 1980 for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The study attempted to show the real cost of oil, natural gas and electricity as opposed to the cost the consumer was actually paying. The author of this paper came to the conclusion that for every dollar of oil products Canadians bought at the pump in 1980 the actual cost should have been $1.65. The people in my riding do not object to that because if they have to drive miles and miles to work, they are rather pleased their cost is subsidized.

The study also talks about natural gas. We are probably paying about one third of the actual cost. If we want to talk about electricity, the cost depends on the province involved, but the price is probably 20 per cent to 50 per cent of the cost. We do not object to the subsidizing of energy, but if we are going to subsidize energy—and I did not even talk about nuclear energy—let us subsidize all forms of energy, including solar, so that we can create many more jobs. We need to commercialize solar now. We need to move from the beginning, experimental to the manufacturing stages. Do hon. members know what the sales over last year in active solar in the world were? They were something like $4 billion. Are we in on that? We are in on it very little, but that is the way we should be going.

What I am saying is that there is not enough money to develop the alternatives. The hon. member for Niagara Falls will recall that no province in Canada will see by 1990 more than 5 per cent of its energy coming from any kind of alternative, so in spite of this window we have between, for example, 1990 and 2000 and in spite of the time we have to prepare the oil sands plants, gasohol plants, methanol plants and all the other alternatives, we are not doing anything nearly enough to balance Canada energy systems. We are still spending all our money on PIP programs and running around poking holes in the bottom of the sea, regardless of the consequences.

I think the government has ignored the benefits we can get from conservation and renewables. Why should we prefer the alternatives and the renewables, Mr. Speaker? First of all, because they are benign; they are decentralized; they do not pollute the air or water as do coal and thermal plants, and they are labour intensive. For about $100,000 or about $50,000 they can provide a job, compared with the almost $1 million it takes to produce a permanent job in the tar sands plants. There is a regional distribution of jobs. People can work on the spot and not have to travel to and fro or live in some trailer camp far away from their homes and families. There is little social disruption. Renewables and conservation do not impinge on the native rights or lifestyles. There are a lot of attractive sides to the proposition, and we should be moving in that direction.

We cannot shut off the pump, as was done in Quebec yesterday, and say, "We are not going to sell any more gasoline". No one is suggesting that we should get away from the internal combustion engine. We are suggesting, however, that our energy policy is lopsided, if not wrongheaded. It is going in the wrong direction for the twentieth century. The population of the world today is ten times what it was in our grandparents' time.

Earlier today the minister spoke about helping the developing countries. But Mr. Speaker, there are, for instance, 15 million people in Kenya and within 10 years they will run out of fuel. That does not mean oil and gas for their cars, or nuclear power or whatever. They do not have any power grids so they are not concerned with nuclear energy. They are concerned with wood, and their forests will be gone in 10 years.

We do not seem to realize how our energy appetites have changed, Mr. Speaker. The use of non-renewable energy is a relatively new practice. Coal was discovered and began to be used in fair amounts in 1780, only 200 years ago; natural gas in 1820; oil in 1870—and we are nearly out of that source already. Of course we will hunt for more, but everyone knows that it is finite. We did not discover hydro until 1890 and nuclear energy until 1950.

As a nation that is absolutely loaded, absolutely spoiled with resources, we should be giving leadership to other countries on how to turn the energy mix around. I do not think that this bill or any of the bills in the package, is designed to do that. It is designed to carry on our energy gluttony like a drunken sailor. We are continuing to consume vast amounts of energy for reasons we probably cannot defend in a world of over three billion people. I would ask hon. members to think about that.

I do not know whether we convince anybody with our speeches but I do know that if we do not change our ways they will be changed for us. I think we have almost 20 years to do something about this. It would be a mistake to lust after the same kind of energy system that we have had for the past 30 years. We should be doing more in the realm of conservation and alternatives while we have the chance.

We like some of the things in this bill, Mr. Speaker, but we deplore the lack of accountability and the way the minister is proceeding. We like some parts but we do not like others so we are not going to vote for it and we will continue to speak against it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes available to me I should like to make some comments on the bill before the House. I think that the government sometimes becomes unduly complacent about the activities of Crown corporations and specifically about Crown corporations that seem to become almost sacred cows or pets within the government organization itself.

I need only cite the case of Consolidated Computer Inc. Most members of the government will shudder at that example of mismanagement. Only a few months ago we learned for the first time that the people of Canada would be required to write off a further $94 million of indebtedness. Until then, there had been no disclosure of that type of liability.

I mention that example because the bill before us tonight would give unbelievable power to the government of the day to create more Crown corporations virtually at will. I think that we must press the government on two points, Mr. Speaker. If it feels that parliament should empower it to create such Crown corporations, then I believe there should be a suitable Crown corporations act which would ensure that in future they are administered properly. The possibility of such legislation has been discussed at length in the House and in committees, and from time to time the government has given lip service to the concept. We have yet to see such a bill, and in fact there is every indication that the idea has at best been stalled or perhaps even killed. There is little likelihood of it being presented in this parliament, apparently.

I suggest that the absence of such a bill warrants every member of the House saying to the minister that he refuses to give the minister authority to bring new Crown corporations into existence until a bill is produced that will ensure better administration and control of them in the future.

Is it not odd that we are being asked to approve legislation which would give the government virtually carte blanche to create Crown corporations when it is not even clear that they would be included in the schedule to the Financial Administration Act as is the normal practice? That is another deficiency in the bill, or at least it is a deficiency in the legislative program offered by the government to the House.

I remember when this party was in power, Mr. Speaker, that I was startled by the answer when I asked how many Crown corporations there were. The public servant I questioned answered with a straight face, "Frankly, we cannot tell you." First of all I thought he was joking and meant that we had better start counting them. But he was not joking; the previous government had literally lost control to the point that it did not know what Crown corporations were being incorporated at will by various departments. Now the government is asking us to pass a bill that will authorize it to continue creating Crown corporations as it was doing, rather quietly and secretly, within its departments.

Let me give you an example of how that was done, Mr. Speaker, connected with Consolidated Computer Inc. In that case the government decided it needed a finance vehicle, so it incorporated the company. The shares were actually given to three hospitals in Toronto, which were never even informed that they were the beneficiaries.

Let me continue with my remarks later, Mr. Speaker.

• (2200)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier I had consultations with House leaders and we agreed to revert to introduction of bills in order to allow the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to introduce an act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act. Therefore, I seek unanimous consent to revert to the introduction of bills for that purpose.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. minister have unanimous consent of the House to revert to introduction of bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say on behalf of my party that we have had discussions and that we give our consent. I think this is the third time tonight we have had to do this to patch up mistakes on the other side. In the interest of co-operation, as always, we agree.

Mr. Waddell: Of course we are perfect and never make mistakes, so we will agree.

Mr. Pinard: Therefore, the minister is ready to introduce the bill. It is not a mistake; it is to render a service to the opposition.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) referred to a mistake earlier tonight. I was informed by the Table officers that there was no mistake on the government side. I expect the Speaker will clarify the situation. It may be that my colleagues on the other side made a mistake in grabbing a bill which was not the right one.

Mr. Andre: No, no, no!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—NEGOTIATIONS OVER IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE MANUFACTURED VEHICLES. (B) REQUEST THAT CANADIAN CONTENT REGULATIONS BE IMPOSED. (C) LENGTH OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my statements this evening are based upon questions which I put to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) on March 25, 1982, concerning Japanese automotive imports into Canada and the government's negotiations with Japan. The statements could just as well be made in relation to questions of mine and my colleagues of last week, last month, and indeed over the last two years, because basically the answers are always the same. The Minister of State for International Trade and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) continually say they are not concerned with what is happening, that negotiations are still underway or that they have succeeded in negotiating with the Japanese, again and again.

This situation has been ongoing for over two years, during which time tens of thousands of jobs in the Canadian automotive industry have been lost and tens of thousands of indefinite lay-offs have taken place within this very important industrial sector of the economy. Obviously this can no longer continue to happen.

My questions to the government are very simple. How much longer is the government prepared to continue to negotiate unsuccessfully with the Japanese, whether in regard to voluntary reductions, quotas, Canadian content, Japanese investment in Canada, or a variety of other factors which come into play? How long will this go on before some unilateral action is taken by the government? The thousands of unemployed Canadians who are suffering as a result of lack of action by the government and the thousands of unemployed Canadians who are suffering as a result of the obvious failure of both the Minister of State for International Trade and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in this area, can no longer tolerate this situation. If we are to trade fairly with the Japanese, it is obvious that the government must take a much tougher stance.

The minister just a half hour ago in committee was asked, "Do the Japanese practise fair trade?" The minister replied, "No, they do not practise fair trade." We are trying to practise fair trade with a nation that is not practising fair trade, as admitted by the minister. It is time for the minister and for the government to get tough.

The same minister of international trade just half an hour ago in committee stated again that he was quite concerned with the fact that only 3 per cent of our manufactured goods are shipped to Japan. Yet in contradictory statements in this House he has said, "if there is going to be any form of protectionism, it will hurt our trade with the Japanese". We only export 3 per cent of our manufactured goods to Japan, yet many of our natural resources being shipped there. We are not doing ourselves any favours by selling Japan our natural resources. They need our natural resources. We are selling them at very low prices; prices even lower than those of Australia and New Zealand.

Why is it that Canada is virtually the only nation in the industrialized world with absolutely no control over the auto industry? Let me put a few examples on the record. Australia has 85 per cent local content in its imports. The United Kingdom has a 10.8 per cent share of Japanese imports; Germany has a 5.7 per cent share of Japanese imports; France has a 2.2 per cent share; Spain has 63 per cent local content; Venezuela has 51 per cent, and Brazil has 95 per cent local content. The list goes on and on.

Canada is the only nation in the whole industrialized world that has not had the guts to take a positive step in this regard. As a result, Canada is losing tens of thousands of jobs right across the country. The automobile industry is responsible for one out of seven jobs in Canada. It is responsible for one out of six jobs in Ontario. How much longer does the industry have to wait before some unilateral action is taken? When will the government come up with a specific policy, and what will that policy be? When will it be implemented? Are we going to have Canadian content regulations? Will we have incentives for the Japanese to invest in Canada and manufacture cars here, or will we simply allow the automotive industry to disappear totally from the face of this nation, ruining the industrial base in this country? These are very simple questions.

In closing I must say that the time is long overdue to end negotiations, to take a much tougher stand and come up with some of the answers to my questions, and those posed by the industry, the Canadian auto parts manufacturers, the UAW, the province of Ontario or the big three. This government must come up with answers before more jobs are lost.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) has answered the hon. member on several occasions. The minister was in Japan from March 16 to March 19 and met with the Japanese minister of international affairs. He indicated that he put forth three positions to the Japanese.

First he would want an extension of the so-called "weather forecast" system for passenger cars, which means virtual restriction and prohibition. Second, he wanted the extension of that system to cover commercial vehicles. Third, he wanted meaningful discussions with the Japanese leading to an agreement vis-à-vis Canadian content. The hon. member knows that the Japanese government has turned down these three positions although not entirely. The Japanese did agree to continue negotiations and we will be negotiating with them.

Mr. Jelinek: Further negotiations? It has been two years now.

• (2210)

Mr. Irwin: There are no free rides, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member should know this. He is talking about the automobile industry today, but let us look at the textile industry. In 1979, because we have tariffs, it cost the Canadian consumer—someone pays—$467 million. In the next five years Biggs and Wood estimated that because we have tariffs and quotas it will cost the consumer $2.5 billion.

Mr. Jelinek: Have you ever heard of duty remission?

Mr. Irwin: Whether you call it duty remission, restrictions, or quotas, it will always cost someone something.

Mr. Jelinek: Not if you have duty remission.

Mr. Irwin: Pehaps he wants to look good today, but two years from now he will be saying the same thing about the automobile industry as he is now saying about the textile industry. Whether we are considering Sysco, Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson, or a Malibu, it is not restrictions or prohibitions which count, but, rather, it is the quality of the product sold on the world market for a profit.

We are traders, Mr. Speaker, and I remind the hon. member that the Japanese are good customers. In 1980 we sold them over $4 billion in goods, and only purchased $2.7 billion from them. There was a balance in our favour of $1.3 billion. What does he suggest that we buy from the Japanese if we do not buy automobiles? There are no suggestions because he does not know. While he is at it—and there are no Liberals in western Canada—I would like to know what westerners think about his position on the sale of their goods to Japan which he is now saying should be restricted. What does he say about that? Does he want a restriction on those sales? If so, he should stand up in this House and say what goods in what areas and in what constituencies, rather than trying to look good to the automobile industry here in Ontario and, at the same time, failing to point out what constituencies in western Canada would be affected. He does not have the courage. He does not know. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kempling: That will look good in Windsor.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS—URANIUM PRICE FIXING TRIAL—QUERY RESPECTING CROWN IMMUNITY. (B) INSTRUCTIONS TO COUNSEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight in connection with a question I posed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on March 25 of this year. It concerned a situation which, on the basis of documented evidence and questions in this House, involved a very clear question of cover-up on the part of this government with respect to its involvement in the uranium cartel.

If we look back at the record of this government with respect to its involvement in that cartel, Mr. Speaker, it is clear there has been an admission by the Prime Minister that indeed the government was involved in a price-fixing scheme, or cartel. This is quite different from a situation, such as international trade agreements, where there is disclosure, publication and full public knowledge. In those cases the people of the countries involved, indeed their legislative bodies, will involve themselves in arrangements respecting the setting of floor prices, or prices in general, of commodities. There are a lot of examples of quite proper international agreements on floor prices. The international wheat agreement is one which comes to mind. However, those kinds of agreements are always in the public view. They are not concluded in secret smoke-filled rooms in a capital of one of the countries involved. This is the situation which existed with respect to the uranium cartel. It was a secret agreement. There was no public knowledge.

• (2215)

The government has admitted that it has been involved in this whole matter. Of course, the question arises as to whether or not this cartel arrangement, which one can describe as a secret arrangement, had consequences to the consumer in Canada. We have been trying to obtain information on the floor of the House of Commons with respect to this agreement. No information has been forthcoming. There was an attempt to thwart the inquiries made by people in opposition, and secrecy prevailed. There was an attempt to cover up any indication as to exactly what transpired.

Let me give hon. members a little history in case they have forgotten the extent to which this government has gone to cover up its involvement in this cartel arrangement. The government issued a gag order prohibiting discussion by any official of any circumstance relating to the alleged offences. In this country, where we take pride in our free speech, a law was passed by order in council of this government which made it an offence for any official to discuss the arrangements made for this price-fixing agreement.

There was a failure on the part of the government to release 60,000 documents relevant to the prosecution of any charged in connection with domestic price-fixing. There was a failure on the part of the government to make public the report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the Bertrand commission, which investigated the domestic price-fixing. It was alleged by the Crown in the right of the minister of justice and attorney general who was prosecuting, that government agencies or Crown corporations were involved. There was a failure on the part of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to take any responsibility for the actions of the government's Crown corporations, Uranium Canada Limited and Eldorado Nuclear Limited, which were charged as co-conspirators after this investigation by Mr. Bertrand. Now there has been an attempt by the government to extricate those Crown corporations from prosecution by allowing them to claim Crown immunity.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has tried to distance himself from this whole sordid mess. He says, of course, that he has no part in this matter and that somehow things are going along without his knowledge or intervention. Indeed, he indicates that this attempt to extricate the Crown corporations from prosecution is really not his idea; rather, it is a matter which sort of developed by magic, and somehow the corporations are winging it in terms of putting in a defence. He indicates that he has no part or interest in this whole matter and that, of course, these corporations are quite apart from the government.

I think we should look at what is being submitted on behalf of the Crown corporation in question, by Uranium Canada Limited, through affidavit and other supporting material. Uranium Canada has admitted that it has no assets except the sum of $9 representing the payment of the qualifying shares of the former members of the board of directors. It has no separate place of business, and conduct of its affairs lies within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It has no employees of its own. On May 1, 1981, it stated that all of the qualifying shares of the directors of Uranium Canada Limited were transferred to and are now presently held by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in trust for Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada.

It is evident by affidavit and submission to the court that the direction and administrative control of the activity of Uranium Canada Limited directly resides with the minister and the governor in council. Uranium Canada Limited has no discretion in the matter. Further, for operational and practical purposes, the company is within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Accordingly, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the governor in council direct the mind and will of Uranium Canada Limited. Finally, it is stated that Uranium Canada Limited is a mere servant of the Crown whose acts are directly and completely controlled and determined by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well as the governor in council.

Let me explain. The "governor in council" means the cabinet of this country. The company enjoys the status of the Crown. It is the submission of the company that it is directed by the minister, but the minister refuses to accept ministerial responsibility in respect to this matter and continues to cover up. Today I want some answers from the parliamentary secretary as to precisely what the government is trying to cover up. What has it got to hide concerning this whole sordid mess?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should say at the outset that I am somewhat appalled by the substance of the remarks by the hon. member, for his assertions are completely ridiculous. It is mere witch-hunting, and his innuendo is certainly not acceptable.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am taking it right out of your own documents.

Mr. Dingwall: When this question was initially raised by the hon. member on March 25, my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Peterson), replied that the government has always proceeded in accordance with the laws of this country and has done so in this particular litigation proceeding.

Later on during the question period on that same day a similar question was directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) regarding the immunity of the Crown in this case. The Prime Minister replied by saying that since the matter is before the courts it would be improper to answer the question.

• (2220)

On March 29, when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) raised a question relating to the Uranium price-fixing trial, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), stated that, as far as he knew, no instructions had been given to Uranium Canada. He continued to say that the company was being prosecuted, with other companies, and that presumably those lawyers defending Uranium Canada are using all the arguments that they can to defend their case.

On March 30 an opposition member asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to instruct Uranium Canada's counsel to withdraw the technical defence of Crown immunity, allowing Uranium Canada to partake in the same kind of trial its co-defendants are subject to. In response to this, the minister pointed out that this matter was before the courts, and that it is improper to bring before the House of Commons quotes from arguments used by counsel before the courts. He pointed out that it is a long established rule that Parliamentarians abstain from commenting on a particular case which is before the courts. The minister also took the opportunity at that time to reiterate what he had said the preceding day; that he had never given any instruction to Uranium Canada or its counsel and he had no intention of doing so in the future.

On April 1, the opposition was still posing questions on the Uranium Canada trial. At that time the minister repeated what he had said on numerous previous occasions, that he had not given Uranium Canada any instructions in relation to the court case and he would not interfere with the judicial process or in the operations of the board of directors of the Crown corporation.

I suggest respectfully, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member take note of these comments and not continue with his innuendo, his witch-hunting and his ridiculous assertions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POLITICAL PARTIES—FORMER AFFILIATION OF MANITOBA ATTORNEY GENERAL

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): I raised a question today, Mr. Speaker, as I did on March 29 in this House, reported in Hansard at page 15901, in which I asked the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada and Minister of State for Social Development (Mr. Chrétien), in his capacity as Attorney General of Canada, whether members of provincial cabinets had a security check done on them prior to their entering cabinet. There was a somewhat lighter side to it. I believe I did not use my words quite correctly at that time, and I think I had the Attorney General of Canada just a little concerned that the accusation I was making was directed at him. In no way was that the case.

The question arises from the past membership in the Communist party of the Attorney General of Manitoba. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the time I asked the question, that it is a sensitive matter, that it is not a new revelation I am making public, but that it is a matter which has been in the public domain for many years. In fact, that past membership had been confirmed by the Attorney General of Manitoba himself.

Recent revelations from United States authorities show that the Manitoba Attorney General is still on a restricted list of persons who might wish to enter that country. That revelation was made as recently as March 23, 1982, in a front page story in the Winnipeg Free Press. In that story, a spokesman for the department of immigration and naturalization service of the United States department of justice, indicated to that paper that the Manitoba attorney general, if he should wish to enter the United States, would be required to have a waiver and is still listed as an undesirable visitor.

When a member of this House joins the federal cabinet, the leader of the party forming the government, the prime minister, has the option to ask for a security check of members entering that cabinet. I am not saying that that has been done by all prime ministers or that that has been done in all cases, but it has been done at the federal level. For those of us who entered the cabinet, for instance, in 1979, that was a criterion. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that for a person who entered the cabinet at that time and took his responsibilities seriously, it did give a person a certain sense of confidence that that security check had been done. One felt that at least there was no impediment to fulfilling one's responsibilities to the people of Canada and to the House.

• (2225)

My question is straightforward. I am not on a witch-hunt. I am not trying to accuse someone of anything that has not been in the public domain. However, because attorneys general sit down with the Attorney General of Canada, or the Solicitor General of Canada, at different periods of time and sensitive information could in fact be passed from one level to the other, it is important that two questions be answered tonight by the parliamentary secretary. Was a security check done specifically on the Attorney General of Manitoba whom I mentioned earlier? Is it a general practice of provincial government in general that certain security checks are done before members are invited into their cabinets?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, following the election of the present government in Manitoba late last year, Mr. Roland Penner was appointed attorney general of that province. It is our understanding that he is a well-known former professor specializing in labour law at the University of Manitoba law school and that he is no stranger to the public eye, as the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) indicated. He was the first chairman and a strong defender of Manitoba's legal aid program. Often maintaining a high profile on controversial issues, he is apparently known for his wit, intelligence and hard work.

Mr. Penner's association with the intellectual and political left has been well noted and goes back to his family and early days in north Winnipeg. His father, Jacob Penner, was an active Marxist. After service in the Canadian armed forces in World War II and an undergraduate degree earned in 1949, Roland Penner spent ten years operating what was called a left-wing bookstore in Manitoba.

It is our understanding that he gave up his membership in the Communist party in the early 1960s, although following his graduation from law school he practised law with Joe Zuken, a long-time member of Winnipeg city council who is considered by some to be one of western Canada's leading left-wing politicians.

In the early 1970s the NDP government in Manitoba awarded Mr. Penner a Q.C. His most recent appointment, of course, has been as attorney general in Premier Pawley's New Democratic Party government. In a recent interview, Mr. Penner was asked whether he felt that in relation to his political views he has been misrepresented. His answer was as follows:

> What I have always resented from the past is the notion of a label, for anybody. This person is a communist, therefore it follows that this person must believe this. . . . I resent labelling in any area and I simply want to be defined by what I do, rather than by what I was or even by what I say.

In response to the two specific questions raised by the hon. member for Provencher, I would like to say first that I have no knowledge of whether the hon. provincial attorney general is the subject of any security files. Second, as far as this government is concerned, it continues to do business with the government of Manitoba in exactly the same fashion as it will continue to do business and has done business in the past with other provincial governments.

SUGGESTED REOPENING OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND ON OFFSHORE RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, yesterday the people of Newfoundland, with a loud and clear voice and with over 60 per cent of the popular vote, which almost wiped out the Liberal Party, supported the reasonable proposition of shared management and revenue sharing for the offshore oil and gas. The only response from the Government of Canada was from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) who accused the premier of Newfoundland of "outright lies" and said:

—the election results mean nothing as far as the federal government is concerned.

I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That this House directs the Prime Minister to reopen negotiations with Newfoundland on offshore oil and gas, using as a basis for negotiations the compromise proposal put forward by Newfoundland on March 16, 1982, whereby both governments would set their ownership claims aside and become co-owners of the resource, both governments would be equal, both governments would receive their share of revenues directly from a joint agency, and arrangements could only be changed with the consent of both governments.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUMMER HOLIDAY FOR "JOURNAL" PROGRAM STAFF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, CBC-TV management, having approved the spending of millions of taxpayers' dollars to create its current affairs show, "The Journal", is now allowing the program to go off the air for nine weeks this summer. The incredible reasons given for this vacation are that the staff involved need the time to recover from the day-to-day pressures of the job, and the break is needed to maintain the supposed high quality of the show. Given that their counterparts on daily newspapers and at radio stations obviously manage competently and professionally to cope with exactly the same pressures, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm):

That the minister responsible for CBC-TV order its management to explain to the Canadian taxpayer just why such high-priced staff, unable to handle the job, were hired in the first place, or to dismiss these poor, exhausted employees and replace them with professionals capable of handling the pressures.

This might not solve the problem of quality, but it would give an indication of effort toward that goal.

FOOTWEAR—IMPORT QUOTA ON LEATHER SHOES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of national importance, under Standing Order 43.

[Translation]

Whereas the government's policy to remove import quotas on leather footwear is contrary to the recommendations of the report of the Anti-dumping Tribunal and has already caused nearly 7,000 lay-offs since December 1, I move, seconded by the member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That import quotas on leather footwear be set at 38 million pairs over a period of five years, thus enabling the Canadian footwear industry to hold 50 per cent of the domestic market.

I would like to give the member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) the last shoe manufactured in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion presented by the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

MINISTER'S REPLY TO PETITIONERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in this House undertook publicly to write in person to every one of the 135,327 Canadians who petitioned their opposition to the mandatory imposition of the SI metric system. A form letter does not constitute a personal letter. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House urge all Canadians in every province and in every walk of life, especially the shopkeepers and their customers, to write directly to the minister, postage free, with copies to their own Member of Parliament so that every citizen may be sure to receive the minister's personal justification for the needless, costly and confusing program which threatens to rob Canadians of their freedom to choose.

SUGGESTED UNIFORM GASOLINE PRICING STANDARDS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion respecting the serious matter of oil-pricing discrepancies that exist among the oil companies in Canada. Gasoline prices vary as much as 40 cents per gallon from one station to another, and retailers blame this on the lack of a uniform pricing formula and the fact that oil companies and the federal government are taking too large a share of the retail price of gasoline and oil. This has resulted in a province-wide strike of gasoline station operators in Quebec, and threatens to spill over into Ontario. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

• (1410)

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources take immediate steps to work out uniform pricing standards for oil companies to their wholesalers and retailers and that the minister direct Petro-Canada to desist from its policy of undercutting other gasoline retailers by offering better prices and terms than are offered by private sector companies.

FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS' RESEARCH PROGRAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that many post-secondary institutions face funding cuts as a result of changes to the Established Programs Financing Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner):

That the government appoint a parliamentary task force to report on the state of fundamental and applied research done at Canadian post-secondary institutions and to suggest alternate means of funding so that current research efforts can be continued and hopefully expanded.

Under present Treasury Board regulations, contractors bidding for government tenders must submit a certified cheque with the bid. However, certified cheques drawn on credit unions are considered to be unacceptable. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

workers in that city. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

CALL FOR STUDY OF GOVERNMENT FISCAL POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the continual flight of capital, both Canadian and foreign, out of Canada, has caused the Bank of Canada to try to protect the value of the Canadian dollar by keeping interest rates significantly higher than in the United States. The result is increasing lay-offs, more unemployment and more distress. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner):

That a special committee of this House be established to inquire into the overall fiscal policy of the government to determine what can be done to reverse the extraordinary outflow of capital from the country, including consideration of reversing completely the National Energy Program, reversing completely the thrust of the foreign investment review program, and reversing completely the anti-entrepreneurial, anti-investment provisions in the November 12 budget.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONSIDER ALTERNATIVE POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. Yesterday Mr. Bouey's speech held out little hope for Canadians that interest rates will be coming down. Yesterday the Minister of Finance agreed with the consensus of economists that the economy is in its worst shape in over 30 years. Today Statistics Canada has said that the few signs of recovery evident in the economy in December vanished in January.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister, and I would appreciate if the Prime Minister would answer it. Can he give Canadians any hope that the government is considering alternative economic policies in order to avoid this dismal outlook?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in his comments yesterday the Minister of Finance indeed referred to the fact that the recession is deeper than we expected. In his speech the Governor of the Bank of Canada gave Canadians some very good advice, and I think it would be worth while to draw this advice to the attention of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre. The advice follows up the answer given by the minister yesterday and is as follows:

Our markets for goods and services both at home and abroad are no longer conducive to rapid price and wage increases. It is now in the interests of both business and labour that they respond by moderating price and income increases in order to protect employment and output.

OUTFLOW OF CAPITAL

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In other words, Madam Speaker, there is no hope for Canadians to avoid the dismal outlook that is evident today.

There are alternatives, and I would like to refer to them. There are a number of them. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. A number of knowledgeable observers have recently drawn attention to the unprecedented outflow of capital as well as Canadian savings from this country. The outflow is about six times the level of the 1970s. If that money had stayed here in Canada it would have been used to create jobs here, not in the United States, not in Australia, and not in the Far East. Since that amount of money is more than equivalent to the cost of all the housing investment in 1981 and clearly would have created a number of jobs in that industry, and new housing units, what steps is the Prime Minister proposing to reverse that capital outflow and create jobs here, not in the United States?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question underlines the need to pursue directly the policies outlined in the budget. He indicates that there is a heavy outflow of capital. Every week the Bank of Canada and the government have been telling the hon. member that we have to maintain our interest rates to keep ourselves attractive to that very capital and to maintain investor confidence in our battle against inflation.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to the fact that the outflow increased in the last quarter of 1981, after the budget was brought down by his government. That is what has been caused by the government. That is what is causing the outflow of capital. If that money had been invested in Canada with Canadian industry, it would have created over 200,000 jobs in this country, more than the level of the unemployment in the construction industry and the automotive industry combined.

Again I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister explain to those unemployed construction and automotive workers why he persists with policies which are forcing capital out of the country, creating jobs in the United States and Australia and not here in Canada?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we will have jobs and we will be able to bring some recovery to some of these industries as soon as we are able to beat inflation and as soon as we are able to indicate to investors that their investments in this country are safe. Again I would refer the hon. member to the speech given by the Governor of the Bank of Canada yesterday which contained some lessons he would be well advised to learn.

FINANCE

OFFICIAL'S TELEX ON PROCESSING OF INCOME TAX RETURNS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In his absence the Minister of Finance denied that any confusion has arisen regarding the processing of tax returns as a result of his failure to bring budget bills before the House. Yesterday I drew the attention of the House to a telex sent by a Revenue Canada official in Ottawa instructing the Vancouver district office not to proces tax returns filed on the basis of the budget. As a result the refunds of thousands of Canadians could be delayed indefinitely.

In light of the tremendous confusion that seems to exist, and the hardship that could be created if Canadians do not receive the refunds they are entitled to, is the minister prepared to change those instructions from Revenue Canada's Ottawa office so that all returns can be processed?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Epp: Welcome back!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: You did a great job.

Mr. Rompkey: The noise is an indication of the confusion that exists on that side of the House. Indeed, that is where it does exist.

The hon. member read from a telex, but she did not read the complete thing. She read from an older telex, not the most recent telex, that is, the instructions to our people. That is point number one.

We have encouraged taxpayers to file on the basis of the budget proposals. We anticipate no real problem in the provision of refunds. Already this year we have given out almost two million refunds, and this is well ahead of the record for last year. No refunds are being held up and no tax refunds are being stockpiled. The confusion that exists is only on that side of the House. I regret that the confusion is being spread to taxpayers across the country.

REQUEST THAT IMPLEMENTATION DATE OF BUDGET BE CHANGED

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. Revenue Canada officials have confirmed today that they plan to process some taxpayers' returns three times in order to get around the problem of the delay in getting refunds out. Apparently they are going to process the same returns under the old system before the budget, under the new system based on the budget, and a third time, if necessary, if the budgetary provisions are changed in some way in regard to taxes.

In view of the fact that Revenue Canada has said that only a minority of taxpayers' returns are affected by the relevant provisions in the November, 1981, budget for the 1981 tax year, would the minister not agree that it would be simpler and cheaper for the government and for taxpayers if the effective date of the budget were changed so that it does not affect any taxpayers in the 1981 income tax year?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I really have to repeat my last answer. With regard to the holdup of refunds, I have to repeat to the hon. member that there is no holdup in refunds. Almost two million refunds have been issued so far this year, and that is well ahead of last year. There is no holdup in refunds and there is no stockpiling of refunds.

Miss MacDonald: That is wrong.

Mr. Rompkey: The Department of National Revenue is acting according to the law. We are encouraging people to file on the basis of the new provisions and to put notes on their tax returns signifying where the new provisions will apply to them personally. There is no delay at all.

STATEMENT BY GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA ON INCOME OF WORKERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister and, because it deals with broad policy matters, I hope he will answer. He is shaking his head. His miasma must be bothering him again today. I will put the question to whomever is responsible or cares about finance matters over there.

Given that the average industrial worker in Canada earns $19,000 per year, and a typical family living at the minimum wage level lives below the poverty level in our cities, does the Prime Minister agree with Governor Bouey that these workers need to reduce their income in real terms in order for the country to deal with inflation?

• (1425)

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, Governor Bouey did not say that they should reduce their incomes. He said that they should not play games with catch-up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: John Evans would not have said that.

GOVERNOR'S ANALYSIS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to come back to the hon. member who is today actually accepting the responsibility which the Prime Minister should be accepting, and point out that the question concerned income in real terms. Governor Bouey said that workers who have had a net decline in real income for four years in a row should be prepared to stay in that condition and that they should not go after, to use the hon. member's term, a catch-up. We on this side of the House think it is time that the average Canadian worker got a fair deal in the country, and we blame the government for not giving it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I repeat, does the government agree with Governor Bouey's analysis that workers at the minimum wage, or average industrial workers, must take a decline in their real income in order for the government to deal with inflation in the coming year?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all I thank the leader of the NDP for putting me in such good company.

Mr. Clark: You will not be there long.

Mr. Fisher: Second, I remind him that the governor gave the same message to corporations to reduce their profits and to all of us to hold our costs down. We are doing no worker, whether he is on the minimum wage or above it, any favour by renewing a vicious inflationary spiral. That is the message that we all must get out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNOR BE DISMISSED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my last question is directed to the Prime Minister. Governor Bouey indicated that ordinary industrial workers must accept a decline in their real standards of living. He also blamed farmers who organized marketing boards for inflation, even though their real incomes are expected to go down 15 per cent this year. In so doing, he clearly demonstrated complete insensitivity to ordinary Canadians wherever they may live. If the Prime Minister is concerned that the plight of ordinary Canadians be understood and sympathized with, will he take some concrete action by firing an insensitive Governor of Bank of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think the suggestion of the leader of the New Democratic Party is a very positive contribution to the future of the country. The governor is merely pointing out what everyone in the House really knows in his or her heart, that we cannot expect Canadians collectively to take out of the economy more than they are putting into it. Governor Bouey was not singling out the worker, certainly not the worker at the minimum wage, as the leader of the New Democratic Party suggested. He was telling Canadians—workers, businessmen, investors, Members of Parliament and everyone—

Mr. Broadbent: He mentioned the minimum wage.

Mr. Trudeau: —that we cannot expect to continue increasing our economic progress at the same rate as we did before the OPEC crisis, before the massive economic strife which has hit the western industrial world, or before the high unemployment which exists in Canada, but which is even higher in the United States to where capital is moving, to quote the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre. If we try to hide this from our elaboration of economic theories and remedies, we are misleading the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: So what is new?

Mr. Trudeau: I am not doing that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Not now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: What about 14 cents a gallon and no wage and price controls?

Mr. Kempling: You are an expert.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members on the other side seem to think that everyone can keep up to inflation—all of us; Members of Parliament, workers, shareholders and so on. It is certain that if we all try to keep up to inflation, inflation will not come down; it will stay where it is or continue going up. We know that if we want to remain competitive with the other producers in the western industrialized world, we have to lower our costs, which we cannot do if we keep increasing our revenues and our profits.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT RECOMMENDED INCLUSION OF LEATHER SHOES IN GLOBAL QUOTA

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. For the tenth time, Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a question concerning an industry we still consider to be very important, namely the footwear industry. Once again, a number of hon. members have been reminded of this fact by the presence of industry and union representatives. The minister is aware that his policy is now causing the industry to lose 6,000 out of a total of 20,000 jobs. Could the minister inform us whether today, he would be able to announce a decision to include leather footwear in the global quota, as being the only way to ensure the survival of this industry? I do not want to hear about new programs. Could the minister tell us today, in the interests of the industry, whether he is prepared to include leather footwear in the global quota?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, a few weeks ago, I had a very useful meeting with spokesmen for the footwear industry and the union, and my cabinet and caucus colleagues have also had some very useful meetings. I have drawn the attention of my cabinet colleagues to the representations that were made, and we are now reviewing them. We are taking this very seriously, in the light of the present economic situation, since the economy is a factor, and not just the quota system as is claimed by spokesmen for the industry. Although my hon. friend does not want me to talk about new programs, I want to point out that we have established a major modernization program with a fund of $17 million, which proves we have a real interest in the industry and its employees.

REQUEST THAT QUEBEC WORKERS BE REINSTATED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): What the minister did not say is that several millions of these dollars will be allocated to retraining and pre-retirement pensions, which is, in fact, welfare in disguise. Can the minister give the industry and its thousands of workers, many of whom are employed in my own province and other areas in Canada, the assurance that he is prepared to ensure the survival of the industry and its 15,000 workers and thus enable the 6,000 employees who have lost their jobs to go back to the industry and make a living in Canada? That is the question which the minister has failed to answer with his temporary, stopgap measures.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): We created the modernization fund because we have a positive interest in the industry—

Mr. La Salle: You are letting them die!

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, that is why we have maintained quotas on non-woven footwear and added a quota on canvas shoes, something which was not in previous quotas. So we do take a positive interest, and we are taking the interests of the industry and its workers very seriously.

Mr. La Salle: Prove it, that is not enough!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—SANCTIONS IMPOSED BY EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday the European Economic Community gave encouraging support to Britain in the Falkland Islands dispute. It is considering bans on key imports from Argentina along with trade and financial sanctions which would be the most extensive the EEC has ever undertaken. West Germany, for example, has already cancelled an $850 million warship contract with Argentina. Is the Canadian government considering any comparable measures?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, the only countries which have taken stronger action than Canada are the United Kingdom itself and New Zealand. The measures which the hon. member relates with respect to West Germany are exactly parallel to the measures that we have taken here.

EMBARGO ON MILITARY SHIPMENTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Monday the minister told the House the following:

> We are placing an immediate embargo on all military shipments to Argentina—

A phone call to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce yesterday elicited the information that exports to Argentina of military weapons, ordnance and parts, in 1981 amounted to $15,647.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKinnon: Does the minister really believe that cutting off this amount of military shipments accomplishes anything other than making him look ridiculous?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: The amount represents one fifty-thousandth of 1 per cent of our export trade. This mouse's attempt to roar so far is only a barely audible squeak.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will check on those figures. But the important fact is that there is some trade in military materials between Canada and Argentina. I believe there are some additional materials which are double purpose requiring an export permit but which might not be classed as military material according to the hon. member's information. I will be glad to check into that and inform him in due course.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL AID GASPÉ UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION VICTIMS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In the riding of Gaspé, there are over 400 families—about 2,000 people—who are affected by urea formaldehyde foam insulation. More than twenty-five families have already left their homes, and others are waiting to do so. I have medical certificates stating that children must leave their homes for accommodation that is not insulated with UFFI. My question is as follows: Could the minister inform the House whether he intends to continue his representations to the provinces, in order to persuade them to grant direct assistance to owners of homes insulated with UFFI, and does the minister intend to increase the federal contribution, which is already set at $5,000, or is he going to urge the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to help these homeowners through its RRAP program?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the concern shown by the member for Gaspé for home owners who are victims of UFFI. I would urge the hon. member to make sure that these home owners are registered with the Canadian centre here in Ottawa, in order to be eligible for federal assistance, up to a maximum of $5,000. Unfortunately, despite our urgent representations to provincial authorities during the past weeks, actually the past months, none of the provincial governments intends to give direct financial assistance to UFFI victims, and I think this is most regrettable. To answer the hon. member's question about using the RRAP program to finance repairs to these homes, I may remind the hon. member that the legislation governed by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation does not provide for such measures. It would be necessary to amend the act, and I am not so sure that this kind of loan would be preferable to the $5,000 direct, non-taxable grant available to UFFI victims who are homeowners.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA FISH PLANTS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Two hundred and fifty shore workers in Prince Rupert are going to join 400 other colleagues from Port Edward and 200 colleagues from Oakland Fisheries in Victoria on the bread lines as a result of corporate decisions to shut down fish plants. These are among the same corporations that have been at the public trough for a number of years, namely, George Weston Limited, Merubeni, and H.B. Nickerson and Sons Limited.

In view of the minister's attempts to prop up the unemployment insurance contributions from fishermen again, would he go to British Columbia with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, meet with fishermen in Prince Rupert, meet with the council in Prince Rupert, the people who are going to suffer a tremendous loss of income, and see if we cannot bring some sense to the employment situation in Canada by keeping plants open and workers working, rather than paying unemployment insurance premiums to the workers of British Columbia?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am not exactly sure of the purpose of the hon. member's question. I do sympathize with the situation which the fishworkers on the island are facing. I would remind the hon. member that I was on Vancouver Island just over a month ago at which time I met with a number of woodworkers there. We will be in British Columbia with the western affairs committee on April 23 and I will be very happy to take representations at that time.

Might I say to the hon. member that the whole point of the unemployment insurance program is to provide income security for workers who are laid off their jobs during downturns in the economy. That is the purpose of the program and that is how it is being used. I do not think it serves any purpose to criticize the program when in fact we do provide that basic support and foundation for workers who are facing temporary loss of income.

CRITERIA GOVERNING GRANTS MADE TO PROCESSORS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has been responsible for many of the DREE grants to fish processing plants, particularly in Atlantic Canada, as well as to B.C. Packers and Weston's corporation. Workers do not want to collect unemployment; they want to work. Therefore, will the minister reconsider the criteria under which grants are made to processors in Canada so that the Canadian government has some commitment from those processing plants to stay open and keep workers working? If not, will he consider the option of taking some equity in processing plants which the government is so generously funding?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to examine my hon. friend's suggestions. Obviously we want the maximum benefit for workers, their communities, and our country from programs like DREE, and his suggestion with respect to commitments is certainly something I would be happy to examine.

ENERGY

NEGOTIATIONS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND ON OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Referring to the offshore dispute with Newfoundland the Prime Minister said on May 5, 1981:

> We consistently maintain that ownership is not the important issue and that reaching a negotiated agreement on shared management is the vitally important issue . . .

That was the Prime Minister's position last May. Is he now prepared to say to the government and people of Newfoundland that, consistent with his statement last year, his government is prepared to set aside the question of ownership and sit down and negotiate with Newfoundland on the basis of the very reasonable compromise proposal which was accepted by 60 per cent of the population of Newfoundland who voted yesterday?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must remind the hon. member of something I told him in this House a couple of months ago. My answer is still the same, that the position I expressed in 1981 I had been expressing all though the 1970s. We began sitting down with the Atlantic provinces as early as 1969 or 1970, if my memory is correct, and we adhered to the proposal that we set aside the question of ownership and try to negotiate an agreement, as we have been able to do with the government of Nova Scotia, and as we had been able to do in 1978 or 1979 with the governments of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. The only government which has never wanted or been able to reach an agreement acceptable to other provinces is the province of Newfoundland.

I have not been pressing for the settlement of the question of ownership; I have been pressing for a negotiated political settlement. The government of Newfoundland has been saying no for all those years, and it is that government which first brought a reference to the courts to settle the question of ownership. I find it rather strange that they now say we should not want to settle the question of ownership when they are the government which brought that question to the courts rather than continue negotiations.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REOPEN NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that statement is just not consistent with the facts because it was his government which insisted on having this matter brought before the Federal Court on the SIU case, and that is what set off the breakdown in negotiations. The Prime Minister knows that to be a fact.

Now, Madam Speaker, the government of Newfoundland, supported by the people of Newfoundland, has agreed to a reasonable compromise proposal which would call for joint management and revenue sharing. That is a reasonable proposition, and I ask the Prime Minister if he is prepared to be reasonable—

Mr. Lalonde: That is what we offered.

Mr. McGrath: —because we cannot expect any reason from his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the Prime Minister prepared to be reasonable and say to the people of Newfoundland on the basis of that compromise proposal, which was accepted by the people of Newfoundland in a democratic election yesterday, that we are prepared to sit down and negotiate so that we can get on with the development of this resource not only for the people of Newfoundland, but for the people of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I really cannot accept the interpretation which the hon. member put on the SIU case, as though we had started a reference to the court. It is quite clear that for a decade we tried to reach a negotiated settlement. In very recent times the matter went to the courts in two ways: first, the SIU took it to the courts and raised an issue of ownership where the governments were dragged, if I may say, into that issue; second, the government of Newfoundland made a direct reference to the Appeal Court of Newfoundland.

Mr. McGrath: You brought it in the back door.

Mr. Trudeau: So how can the hon. member say that my statement is not in accord with the facts?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—ROLE OF COMMUNIST ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As many of us feel it is very important to get a correct perspective of the tragic events now taking place in Central America, especially El Salvador, and the role played by Socialist International with respect to these events, would the minister indicate if it is true that the general executive body of the communists in El Salvador, known as DRU, has a fighting arm called FMLN which co-ordinates guerrilla activities in that country, and that DRU in turn has been working with the Socialist International associated group of Mr. Ungo, known as MNR, under an umbrella organization known as FDR which presents a side of leftist terrorist activity designed to arouse world sympathy—

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Stevens: —while it disguises the true nature of the Communist International infiltration?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: You dont't know what you are talking about.

An hon. Member: Did you get the question, Mark?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not—

Mr. Broadbent: He is out of his tree, Mark.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, I am not sure I caught the whole of that alphabet—

An hon. Member: Alphabet soup.

Mr. MacGuigan: —but as I understand the situation, the Communist Party of El Salvador, PCES, is one of the constituent parts of both the military and civilian grouping of rebel parties which together make up the DRU. So the DRU is not only communist, it includes communists—

An hon. Member: Christian Democrats.

Mr. Broadbent: And Conservatives.

Mr. MacGuigan: —on both the military and civil side. One of the groups which is part of DRU is the Socialist Party of El Salvador headed by Mr. Ungo—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: No, Ed Broadbent.

Mr. MacGuigan: —which I believe is reported to have only 30 to 40 members. It is that party which is a member of the Socialist International.

ROLE OF SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, is the minister aware that the guerrillas, who are now co-ordinated under FMLN, which is associated with DRU, have estimated they themselves are responsible for the deaths of some 5,000 people in the past two years, and has he been informed that last September the Socialist International in Paris spoke glowingly of the alliance of FDR with the guerrilla control group FMLN? If so, has the minister informed Socialist International, perhaps through their vice president who sits in this House, the hon. member for Oshawa, that such help for terrorists is either wittingly or unwittingly—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: —being delivered, and is certainly ill advised and contrary to our democratic traditions in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is too bad the rules of the House do not encourage the putting of questions by the hon. member directly to the hon. member for Oshawa.

An hon. Member: Same party.

Mr. MacGuigan: I am not able to confirm all of the points raised by the hon. member. It is my understanding that the hon. member for Oshawa was chairman of the recent meeting of Socialist International dealing with the El Salvador question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Unbelievable.

• (1450)

Mr. MacGuigan: There was considerable difference in the Socialist International over El Salvador and over Nicaragua, because the parties in these countries which are close neighbours of El Salvador do not take as strong a position as the hon. member for Oshawa has publicly stated.

Madam Speaker, I now have the figures that were asked for earlier by the hon. member for Victoria and I wonder if I might just take a moment, while I am on my feet, to give them.

In 1980, we exported military equipment worth $5.5 million—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC PERCENTAGE OF GASOLINE TAX IS GREATER THAN PERCENTAGE COLLECTED BY ALBERTA

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the present situation in Quebec with respect to gas and gas retailers, many Quebecers are wondering what share of the price of gas at the pump goes to the province of Quebec, and I would therefore like to ask the minister for details about the percentage collected by the province of Quebec, and whether it is true that the percentage collected by the province is higher than that collected by the province of Alberta.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the difference between the price of a litre of gas in New Brunswick and Ontario and the price of the same litre of gas in Quebec is now approximately seven cents, which means that in Quebec, a litre of gas costs about seven cents more. Regarding the percentage collected by the province of Quebec, it is not only more than that collected by the government of Alberta, it is more or less equal to the sum of the percentages collected by the government of Alberta and the federal government. In March, the government of Quebec was collecting 27.7 per cent on the price of gas, while the government of Alberta and the federal government collected a joint total of 28.2 per cent. Therefore, the government of Quebec is taking a very sizeable share of the price per litre. In fact, this percentage is higher than that taken by any other province in Canada.

INCOME TAX

COLLECTION OF DEDUCTIONS AT SOURCE FROM FISHERMEN

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. I realize that today may not be a very good day to ask him for favours.

Mr. Nielsen: He is cantankerous?

Mr. Gass: My question to the minister concerns the policy announced by the government of income tax deduction at source as it applies to fishermen, and the fact that the fishermen are the only small independent business persons who are asked to pay income tax in advance when they sell fish to the packers.

We met for two days last week with groups of fishermen from all over Prince Edward Island. Their main concern was income tax deductions at source. I want to ask the minister has there been any recent discussion on the mandatory policy of income tax deductions at source as it applies to fishermen in Atlantic Canada.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, that is a budget provision. The Minister of Finance announced it in the budget, as you know. The reason for announcing it was that I, among other people, had requested that he review this. The reason I did that was that a request came from the fishermen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: Fishermen had encountered some difficulties, Madam Speaker, as a result of income tax not being deducted at source. To offset that, it was felt much better to pay on a regular basis, so that a great amount of income tax would not accumulate. Indeed, that meant putting fishermen on the same basis as everybody else in the country. I met with fishermen as recently as this past week in my own constituency and they are perfectly happy with the measure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: All the members from the fishing constituencies can be heard, Madam Speaker. If the hon. member has something to say, the time to do it is when the legislation comes before the House.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DISCUSS POLICY WITH MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, we were advised by the fishermen that that is exactly what the minister would tell us, that they said they were in favour of it. I am sure there is not one fisherman in P.E.I. that is in favour of mandatory income tax deductions at source. Not one. Will the minister assure this House that he will discuss this policy with the Minister of Finance and see that some changes are made, so that it will not be deducted at source on a mandatory basis?

Mr. Nielsen: Write him a letter.

Mr. Gass: There may be some fishermen who said they would volunteer, but they are against the mandatory policy that this government is trying to force down their throats.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I have to say again that all across the country people have their income tax deducted at source. That is all across the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: As I said before, it seems to me that doing it on a regular basis is much preferable to having taxes accumulate. If the hon. member has points to make to the contrary, he will have a chance to do that before the House.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NEGOTIATION OF NEW NORTHLANDS AGREEMENT WITH MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. As the minister knows, there have been a number of attempts to negotiate a new Northlands Agreement. The last agreement, which lasted for five years, was worth $155 million to the people of northern Manitoba. I understand the minister has agreed to meet with the provinical minister of northern affairs, Mr. Jay Cowan, at three o'clock today. Would the minister guarantee that there will be a new agreement, and would he also guarantee that that agreement will provide at least as much money as the previous agreement did?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I said in Winnipeg when I met there with Mr. Cowan, the provincial minister, some weeks ago, my objective was to have concluded negotiations in a successful way that would lead to both of us being able to recommend to our respective cabinets a new Northlands Agreement which could carry on the very good work of the existing agreement which has very substantial federal participation. I think there has been considerable progress made in the negotiations for a new Northlands Agreement. With the very active support and assistance of my colleagues, the Minister for Employment and Immigration and the hon. member for St. Boniface, I look forward to further progress being made on this before too long. I also look forward to a brief meeting this afternoon with the Manitoba minister, in the company of my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

QUERY WHETHER ARDA AGREEMENT WILL BE RENEWED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the minister has in fact agreed to have a meeting. Lest the minister should feel he has been acting with some haste in this matter, I would remind him that the last agreement expired one year ago and that there has not been an agreement for the last year except the interim agreement, which has provided only a small amount of money for people in the north.

My supplementary question, Madam Speaker, is with regard to the special ARDA agreement which is also between the province of Manitoba and the federal government. I would like the minister to guarantee that the agreement will be again renewed for a full five-year period at this point, after the Manitoba government has already agreed to a five-year extension, based on the negotiations between the province and the federal government, and that at this late date the federal government is not going to change the ground rules and try for a shorter time for a further agreement.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am glad my hon. friend has confirmed that although the initial Northlands Agreements' term formally ended only a year ago the federal government agreed to make an extension for a year, which has enabled us to carry on discussions which I hope will result in a satisfactory conclusion before too long.

With respect to the matter of special ARDA, this is a federal initiative covering all the western provinces as well as the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I am discussing with my cabinet colleagues the future of this agreement. I look forward to being able to make some positive statement in that regard before too long.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF NICARAGUAN REFUGEES IN HONDURAS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, on Wednesday, March 31, 1982, Mr. A. H. Mayne, the first secretary of the embassy and I met in Honduras with aboriginal Nicaraguan refugees known as the Miskito people. The Miskito refugees alleged that they are victims of gross human rights violations by agents of the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. Given these and other similar allegations, will the minister announce his intention in the House today to initiate an investigation into these alleged abuses, either to disprove them or ensure that this matter is brought to international attention and justice?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we are aware of the problems in Nicaragua concerning the Miskito Indians. One must distinguish between those who are still in Nicaragua and those who have fled to other countries. With respect to those remaining in Nicaragua, we have made representation to the Nicaraguan government recently. The head of CIDA, Mr. Massé, will shortly be visiting Nicaragua and will carry an additional message to the Nicaraguan government about this minority.

• (1500)

With respect to those who are refugees, we have been giving on a generous scale to the organizations which have been looking after the refugees. We are the third largest donor to the UNHCR for Central America refugees. We also give money to the International Committee of the Red Cross. Through those organizations we have been doing our best to help the plight of the refugees, the Miskito Indians and other refugees in Central America.

REQUEST FOR HUMAN RIGHTS INVESTIGATION

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, the minister has heard from different parties in this House many concerns expressed regarding human rights abuses by both the extreme right and the extreme left in this region. What specific initiatives does he plan regarding an international human rights investigation of all of these allegations which are at the root of basic instability in this region? What does he plan to do to bring initiatives forward in this area?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we do not have the right to go into another country, in Central America or wherever, to launch a human rights investigation. We have verified that many of the problems the hon. member referred to exist. With respect to the group of Indians still within Nicaragua, we have made protests to that government and will continue to do so. With respect to those outside, they are mostly under the supervision of the UNHCR. We have to accept guidance from them as to how best to help them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—SHIPMENTS OF MILITARY MATERIALS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, a moment or two ago the hon. member for Victoria asked a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure the hon. member in good faith used figures provided to him by the department, probably erroneously. It now seems the minister has a complete answer to provide, not only to the former minister of national defence but also to the members of this House and the distinguished press gallery. Can the minister now be allowed to give the figures that he has?

Mr. McKinnon: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I cannot entertain a point of order during question period. I will gladly entertain it later.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, any difference in statistics may be accounted for by the method of categorization used, but what we have banned is the shipment of military materials of any kind, whether they are double purpose or whatever. On that basis, the exports from Canada to Argentina in these categories were $5.5 million in 1980, $1.9 million in 1981, and more than a million dollars worth of permits were issued in the first quarter of this year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING EASTER RECESS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have had consultations with my colleagues across the way. As we all know, tomorrow will be an opposition day. Provided there is no vote, and I understand the official opposition has given notice under Standing Order 58(11), I think there is unanimous consent for the following:

That tomorrow the House will sit from twelve o'clock noon until six o'clock, at six o'clock we adjourn and that the order read yesterday allowing a break at Easter still stands but mutatis mutandis this order will apply to the House order made yesterday.

Question period will be at 12.15 following motions under Standing Order 43.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): That is agreeable to us, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): We also agree, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its consent to the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HAWKES—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT OF MR. LALONDE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) may have inadvertently misled the House during question period when he indicated that Alberta benefited from the gasoline taxes in Quebec. The House will know that gasoline sold in Quebec for the most part is imported.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Discussion as to facts and statements does not constitute a question of privilege. The hon. member is trying to prolong the question period. He should know that is not possible.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McKINNON—ANSWER GIVEN BY MR. MacGUIGAN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding the third attempt which the minister made to try to answer one of my questions. The figures he gave include figures for non-military stores such as twin-otter aircraft, repairing engines of those aircraft—

Madam Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member's desire to debate this question, but he can do that at another time. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Without intending in any way whatsoever, Madam Speaker, to reflect upon the actions of the Chair, the events of today might be re-examined in the light of the intervention by the hon. member for Saint Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) which gave the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) the opportunity to get up on what in effect was an extension of the question period. I thought at the time that that should not have been allowed and the answer should not have been allowed. All that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) wanted was to do precisely what was allowed the hon. member for Saint Denis and the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Saint Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) was recognized at about three minutes after three o'clock. It is true it was a few minutes past the time at which question period normally is terminated. It happens that sometimes for certain reasons I extend it for two or three minutes, especially when I feel that answers, for example, have been longer than usual. Sometimes it is very difficult for me to interrupt a minister in the course of some lengthy answer, and obviously hon. members want the information. Of course, some answers are more complicated than others.

I interrupted the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) during his answer. I felt it was too long, so I interrupted him. I also felt that given this information, he probably could have answered the question the first time it was asked. I assumed he would have another opportunity to give this information to the House.

I recognized the hon. member for Saint Denis on a question which was quite legitimate. When a question is asked during question period, an answer is allowed. That is exactly what happened at 3.03. I do not feel that in any way it has been a departure from custom.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I rise on a very short question of privilege. I want this House to be assured that at no time was Madam Speaker in a position to know that my question was going to be on the same subject.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to debate this. I think it is quite clear that I do not know in advance what the questions will be. That is obvious to all members.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, on a point of order. You mentioned that you want us to have all the information. Surely we should have all information and not just part of it.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORT OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Tuesday, April 6, 1982, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PETRO-CANADA

TABLING OF 1981 ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table copies of the annual report of Petro-Canada for 1981, in both official languages.

My friends on the opposition side will be very happy to see that it shows black ink and not red ink, as they noted yesterday.

Petitions

PETITIONS

MR. WRIGHT—COMPANY PAID PREMIUMS ON HEALTH CARE AND DENTAL PLANS

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents in Calgary North. The purpose of this petition, signed by 449 citizens of Calgary, is to indicate to the government that the citizens of Calgary North protest the November 12 budget proposal as it affects company-paid premiums on extended health care plans and dental plans. The nature of the petition is to demand that this government review its proposal of the budget and withdraw it from the budget. The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency and desperation of their concerns and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to have this matter referred to the appropriate committee.

• (1510)

MR. HEAP—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have the honor to present a petition on behalf of the citizens of the city of Toronto requesting Parliament to request the Prime Minister to refuse to allow the testing of this new generation of weapons, the Cruise missile, on Canadian soil.

MR. DOMM—IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM—REQUEST THAT PETITION BE READ

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I have a very brief point of order arising out of petitions presented in the House. I realize that I am appealing under Standing Order 67(8) that the petition may be read on request at the discretion of the Speaker. I advised the Speaker on this same point of order that on April 5 I sent a letter to Dr. Koester, Clerk of the House, which stated very briefly:

> Please be advised that I intend to present the petition on Tuesday, April 6, 1982, during routine proceedings and before introduction of bills. May I ask that the petition presented to the House on April 6 be read by the Clerk according to Standing Order 67(8) upon your tabling of the report of the Clerk of Petitions.

I request at this time that the main body of the petition be read into the record.

The second point for which I would like to ask your consideration is that because of the urgency of the matter and because of precedent Citation 695 in Beauchesne, I would like to move, on your ruling of acceptance, for unanimous consent to have this petition referred, because of its urgency and the way it is affecting jobs and business in Canada, to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in order that we might be able to call witnesses from across Canada to discuss the urgency of this petiton that now totals 180,000 signatures collected over a period of 12 months.

I plead with the Chair to give consideration to this matter, due to the number of citizens from coast to coast who would urgently request the House to refer this petition to the appropriate committee in order that witnesses may be called and a proper assessment of the seriousness of the situation can be made by this government.

Madam Speaker: We had received notice from the hon. member that he was going to present a petition. In fact, we received several notices. I would remind hon. members that we appreciate receiving notices as a matter of courtesy to the Chair because it makes the Chair better aware of the fact that several members will rise at the time petitions are called. I thank the hon. members for sending me those notices.

Now the hon. member would like his petition to be read. I just remind the House that this can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Therefore I ask the House; is there unanimous consent to the proposal by the hon. member that the petition be read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): David Smith said no.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—READING OF PETITIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I have raised before. In submitting to you that the Standing Orders are clear that obtaining unanimous consent is not the only way that a petition can be read. I have submitted to the Chair previously—and I believe the Chair has agreed with me—that the discretion lies with the Speaker. If the Speaker chooses to exercise it by requesting unanimous consent, that is a discretion that is properly within the jurisdiction of the Chair. However, I submit to you that obtaining unanimous consent is not the only way in which the Chair can exercise that discretion. If the Chair chooses to do so, as it has done today, and seeks unanimous consent, that is one way of exercising its discretion, but I would not like to establish the precedent that the only way of doing it would be by unanimous consent.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the Standing Order there is no discretion except in the case where a petition claimed some personal grievance requiring immediate remedy, in which case the matter contained therein may be brought in for immediate discussion.

From what I read in the Standing Orders and in Beauchesne, there is no discretion on the part of the Speaker. The Standing Orders are quite clear. I will read standing order 67(7) to the hon. member which says:

> On the next day following the presentation of a petition, the Clerk of the House shall lay upon the Table the report of the Clerk of the Petitions—which I have done.

—upon the petitions presented and such report shall be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day. Every petition so reported upon, not containing the matter in breach of the privileges of this House—

That is what the report had said, that they were in order as to form.

—and which, according to the Standing Orders or practice of this House, can be received, shall then be deemed to be read and received.

Therefore, the petition is deemed to have been read and received and therefore it is not for the Speaker to determine that the petition should be read.

I would like to quote from Beauchesne, Citation 695.

A petition having been presented, and being in order as to the form, may, with unanimous consent, be ready by the Clerk, and may thereafter, with unanimous consent, be referred to a committee.

There are some references there which I have not consulted but which I assume to be precedents in this respect. Therefore, as I read the Standing Orders and the interpretation in Beauchesne, I feel that I have no discretion to decide to have the petitions read, unless the House so desires and expresses that desire by unanimous consent.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not intend to pursue the matter at this time since there is other more urgent government business to come before the House. But I do intend to pursue it further.

As the Chair knows, I have raised the matter before. I might put back-to-back with Beauchesne's Citation 695 which has been cited, Citation 694 which states:

While a member has clearly a right to ask that a petition be read, it is a privilege, like many others, subject to the approval of the House itself. In case of opposition, the Speaker will put the Member's motion, "that the petition be read", formally to the House.

As I say, I will not pursue it further today. I will go back into Hansard to see where we have had this exchange before and determine if we can get the matter straightened out. I do believe it is important not to set an undesirable precedent here, which I think might be happening.

Madam Speaker: I read Beauchesne's Citation 694 as well. I have the feeling that it refers to older practices of the House because there is an obvious discrepancy between that one sentence and the Standing Orders. When Beauchesne is not too clear I suppose the next reference for any member of the House would be the Standing Orders.

I appreciate the hon. member's concern. I also appreciate that he will want to look into it, as I will myself.

Introduction of Bills

UNIFORM EDUCATION STANDARDS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-651, an act to provide for uniform education standards.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Flis: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish a council whose main function it would be to encourage uniform education standards which, at present, vary from one province to another in Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

NUCLEAR LIABILITY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING LIMITATION PERIOD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-652, to amend the Nuclear Liability Act (limitation period).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to introduce in the House of Commons today a private member's bill to amend the Nuclear Liability Act. The purpose of my bill is to provide a fair limitation period from the date a victim becomes aware or should reasonably have become aware of an injury or condition such as cancer that is caused by exposure to radiation. This would be done by an amendment to Section 13 of the act which would delete the present ten-year limitation. With this amendment victims would have three years from the dates of discovery of their injuries or damages to take legal action.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has indicated that he supports the intent of this amendment, and I look forward to its speedy adoption by all members of the House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I request the consent of the House to return to tabling of reports. I would like to table a report which has just come into my hands, and that would only be possible with the permission of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: You should have stayed awake.

Madam Speaker: Does the House unanimously consent to reverting to tabling of documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peterson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank hon. members.

POSTAL SERVICE

Question No. 1,891—Mr. Towers:

1. (a) By province, how many Canadians receive (i) door-to-door (ii) general (iii) post office box (iv) roadside box (v) neighbourhood box mail delivery service (b) in each of the past five years, what was the aggregate and percentage rate of increase in service in each category?

2. During the next five years, does the Post Office Department have any plans to expand door-to-door and roadside rural delivery and, if so, for each province, what are such plans?

3. How many Canadians, by province, do not have either door-to-door or rural roadside mail box delivery service?

4. How many applications are pending, at this time, from individuals or communities who wish improved postal delivery service?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): On the date this question was asked, an answer was not readily available. This information has now been compiled as of March 31, 1981.

1. See tables below.

2. Yes. Plans are on a national basis in response to service needs.

3. On March 31, 1981:

Newfoundland	107,481

POSTAL RATE INCREASE

Question No. 3,189—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the government announce a postal rate increase and, if so, did it take into consideration the disastrous effect that this might have on charitable organizations such as the Christmas Seal campaign, the Easter Seal campaign and the United Way, since these groups use the postal service quite heavily for solicitation, the receiving of donations and the sending of receipts?

2. Will the government take immediate steps to change any proposed increases to exempt such groups from postal charges that might greatly hinder their essential work on behalf of many persons?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes. Representations were received from interested parties, including charitable organizations, and were given Canada Post's full consideration.

2. It is not Canada Post's intention to effect any changes at this time concerning postal rates.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Question No. 3,271—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In each of the past ten years, what was the amount of foreign capital invested in Canadian industrial or business enterprises?

2. Is there a breakdown of the total amount invested by each country and, if so, what is the breakdown?

3. Is there an estimate of the number of jobs created in Canada by the inflow of such capital and, if so, what is the estimate?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned:

1. According to information compiled by Statistics Canada, the gross inflows of foreign direct investments invested in Canadian industrial or business enterprises from 1971 to 1980 are as follows:

1971	$1,735 million	1976	$1,723 million
1972	$1,444 million	1977	$1,871 million
1973	$1,636 million	1978	$2,683 million
1974	$1,850 million	1979	$2,645 million
1975	$1,777 million	1980	$3,400 million (estimate)

2. No.

3. The government does not have a reliable estimate of the number of jobs created in Canada as a result of the inflow of foreign capital.

INTELPOST SERVICE

Question No. 3,607—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does Canada Post Corporation operate certain trucks bearing their name along with an advertisement that the corporation is providing "space age" communications and, if so, is this intended to inform the public that postal service is fast?

2. Does the government receive frequent complaints about slow postal service?

3. Is it government policy to determine the reasons for any breakdown in "space age" communications and is any breakdown due to letters being sent by satellite that have been lost somewhere up in space and, if so, what steps, if any, is the government taking to bring these down?

4. Has the government received any complaints from any sources whatsoever about space being cluttered with undelivered Canadian mail?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. The Canada Post Corporation receives favourable correspondence as well as complaints.

Order Paper Questions

3. The Intelpost service is continually monitored for its performance.

4. No.

FOREST RESEARCH AGREEMENTS

Question No. 3,716—Mr. Herbert:

1. Did the government sign an agreement concerning the co-ordination of forest research and, if so, with which provinces?

2. Were there provinces where no agreement was signed and, if so, in those provinces, what action was taken to (a) avoid duplication of effort (b) initiate forest renewal programs (c) enhance forest research programs?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. Yes. A memorandum of Understanding concerning the co-ordination of forest research was signed by the Minister of the Environment and the British Columbia minister of forests and came into effect November 24, 1981. The Canada-Ontario joint forest research agreement, which served as the model in developing the above memorandum has been in place for over 20 years.

2. Yes. Memoranda of Understanding have yet to be signed with the remaining eight provinces. Their status is as follows: Awaiting provincial acceptance for signing: Alberta, Nova Scotia. Under development: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland. Discussions to be initiated: Quebec, Prince Edward Island.

(a) The staffs of the Canadian Forestry Service's regional Forest Research Centres work closely with their provincial counterparts to ensure the most efficient use of forest research resources available so as to minimize duplication of effort.

(b) Responsibility for forest renewal on lands within provincial jurisdiction rests with the individual provincial governments. Discussions are now being held to consider proposals to enable a co-operative approach by the federal and provincial governments to facilitate the initiation of forest renewal programs.

(c) The federal forestry sector strategy for Canada, approved by cabinet in September, 1981, called for a greater emphasis on forest research. To implement this strategy, discussions have been held with the provinces to clarify the roles of the federal and provincial governments, and to encourage the provinces to increase their contributions in this regard.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 3,753—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What was the total amount at credit in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account as at March 31 (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981?

2. During (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981, what rate of interest did the government pay for the use of this money?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the account during the fiscal year ending on March 31 (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981?

4. For the same period, by year, what was the total amount (a) paid into the fund by servicemen and women (b) paid out of the account?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence):

1. Balance in the Canadian Forces superannuation account as at:

FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN TOURIST INDUSTRY

Question No. 4,052—Mr. Crosby:

1. Did the government commission a study respecting investment in the tourist industry by foreign investors?

2. Is the study being conducted by Hickling Johnston Ltd. and, if so (a) what is the estimated cost (b) how many persons are involved?

3. Is the government's position to ensure that key sectors of the economy are Canadian owned and controlled and, should the study conclude that foreign investors are welcome in Canada, would such investment run contrary to that position?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. No. The government commissioned a study respecting investment in the tourist industry by all investors.

2. The study is being conducted by Hickling Partners. (a) the cost is $42,800.00. (b) eight.

3. The government's objective in commissioning the study is to determine how to attract investors who could contribute to the development of tourism in Canada. The study is not concerned with foreign investment per se. However, the government welcomes foreign investment which is, or is likely to be of significant benefit to Canada.

CHARGE FOR DELIVERY OF MAIL

Question No. 4,065—Mr. Herbert:

What is the charge, if any, per apartment dweller for the delivery of mail into postal boxes in the lobbies of apartment buildings?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): None.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 4,082—Mr. MacKay:

1. Is Air Canada in the midst of negotiations to service the requirements of British Airways at Terminal 2 at the Toronto International Airport and, if so, on what date will the negotiations be completed?

2. Is there a contrary view being expressed by Department of Transport officials and/or Mr. Walter McLeish that the Airways ought to be serviced or confined to Terminal 1?

3. Is Terminal 1 overcrowded and are there substantial delays to international carriers being serviced at Terminal 1 and, if so, what are all the details?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. A letter of intent has been signed between the two airlines and a contract is currently under review by Air Canada's legal branch. British Airways are expected to commence operations in Terminal 2 with Air Canada on May 17, 1982.

2. The transfer of international traffic from Terminal 1 has been one of Transport Canada's traffic management objectives for some time. It is proposed that additional international facilities be constructed in Terminal 2 by 1983/84 to permit such transfers to take place. British Airways' arrangements with Air Canada are, therefore, complementary to the department's initiatives.

3. Terminal 1 frequently experiences periods of congestion and delays to passengers. The problems occur in the public concourses, baggage claim areas, and parking and curb facilities. A construction program is underway in Terminal 1 to increase the size of the international baggage claim and associated sortation areas as well as the public area on the arrivals level. No immediate relief is foreseen for parking or curb facilities.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

JAPANESE EXPORTS TO CANADA

Madam Speaker: I have a notice from the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) under Standing Order 26.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the unilateral refusal of the Japanese government to negotiate a reduction in its automotive exports to Canada or to make a commitment that the Japanese will produce automotive products in Canada equal in value to their sales in this country, thus ensuring a deterioration in this sector, which already has 20,000 permanently displaced workers. Such a grave situation demands immediate government action in the form of emergency surcharges or quotas on all Japanese automotive products until an equitable agreement has been reached.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have considered the hon. member's application with considerable care and, unfortunately, I must conclude that the motion proposed by the hon. member cannot be put to the House. The matter is, of course, a very serious one, but it does appear to be of a continuing nature and cannot be considered as a sudden emergency in the country. I remind the hon. member that the matter has been—

Mr. Nielsen: It is also the subject for tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: —consistently raised in question periods from the end of January until even yesterday when the question was raised. As a matter of fact, the question has been raised practically daily—

Mr. Lewis: By us.

Madam Speaker: —since March 19 last.

There is another aspect which cannot be overlooked, and that is that negotiations are still continuing concerning this particular matter, so I must say I cannot accede to the request of the hon. member because Standing Order 26(16)(a) provides that a matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency. Previous Speakers and I have considered this necessary to justify setting aside the business of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Of course, it could also be pointed out that this is the subject matter of our opposition day tomorrow, as has already been filed and tabled.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order raised by the House leader for the official opposition, it has to be pointed out that until five o'clock today tomorrow's subject matter is not necessarily the subject matter put down by the Conservative Party.

Mr. Nielsen: That is a pretty fine hair.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 87 in the name of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski)?

[Text]

Motion No. 87—Mr. Korchinski:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence and communications, including telephone submissions, regarding the application by Cargill Grain Limited for a grant from DREE towards construction of an Oil Seed Crushing Plant at Melfort, Saskatchewan.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Shall the notice of motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Motion stands.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. WADDELL—DEBATE ON ENERGY BILLS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order in relation to the tabling and debate of the energy bills. I wonder if I might raise this point now. This morning Bill C-103 was printed—

Mr. Smith: On the point of order, Madam Speaker, I request—

Madam Speaker: I have one point of order. I cannot hear two at the same time.

Mr. Smith: Can the hon. member wait until the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) gets here?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, this is a serious matter because of what has happened around here in the last few weeks. The point concerns the timing of the energy bills and the debate. A draft bill with respect to energy security was tabled about a year ago. Seventy-five changes were incorporated in that bill, which became a new bill, Bill C-94, with which Your Honour is familiar. Then there was the bell-ringing episode in the House. The bill is now divided as a result of an all-party agreement. One would have thought that Bill C-94 would have been split into eight bills and that we would have known what would be in them and then would simply debate them. But that is not the case. There have been changes in the bills as they are split.

• (1530)

This morning we received a bill, so we have had it for about three hours. It is a most complicated tax bill containing about eight different tax changes. There are discrepancies not only between that bill and Bill C-94 but between it and the previous budget bills. When we have had an opportunity to examine it we may find that there are also discrepancies between it and the Ways and Means motion which was tabled a couple of days ago. Without going into detail, already I have picked up discrepancies in the area of the Canadian ownership charge, the transportation and fuel compensation recovery charge and the Canadian ownership account.

It is very difficult for the opposition to prepare for second reading debate properly when the bills are dropped upon us just about two hours ahead of the debate. We will debate this bill just after the vote this afternoon, at about 4:15 or 4:30 p.m. That does not give us enough time to prepare properly for debate on the bill.

In the interests of fairness and procedure, I would ask the minister to consider the wisdom of dropping these bills on the House without giving adequate time for members to consider them. The committee is meeting at the moment and through this afternoon will continue to meet. How can the energy critics of the various parties attend the meeting of the special committee while debate on second reading of Bill C-103 takes place in the House?

I bring these matters to your attention and to the attention of the government, Madam Speaker, to point out the difficulties the opposition has in preparing for debate on a complicated bill with only one or two hours' notice. I hope that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) will take this seriously. I think the government would want to be fair to the opposition and give it a chance to prepare properly before speaking on these bills.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I sympathize with the points raised by the hon. member but I should like to draw to his attention that the so-called discrepancies he has referred to that occur between Bill C-94 and the Petroleum Administration Act that was given first reading yesterday, are all in the Ways and Means motion that was tabled on Monday. The hon. member should not claim that he has been taken by surprise at the changes in the figures that relate to particular taxes. As a matter of fact, the official opposition drew attention to these changes yesterday afternoon.

As far as the bill itself is concerned, it was tabled at ten o'clock last night and was given first reading with the unanimous agreement of the House. This came after consultation between the House leaders and with their agreement that we could proceed in this way so that the opposition would have as much time as possible to debate the bill and have it referred to the committee as early as possible. The modifications in the bill were contained in the Ways and Means motion which was published last Monday.

Perhaps my hon. friend's House leader has not been in touch with him in this regard; I do not know about that. He says that the bill may come up for debate as early as 4.15 this afternoon. We finish at six o'clock today and I do not believe that we will be through with the bill by then, so we will most likely come back to it later.

As far as I am concerned, if the hon. member wants to speak twice on the bill, and if the House agrees, he is welcome to do so. If not, he may put someone else up to speak or he may wait until we come back to the bill. In that case he may have a couple of weeks to get ready so he will not do as he did yesterday, that is, read the wrong speech.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I would point out that we are bound by a House order on these matters. With respect to the suggestion of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), I would point out that the block time that is allotted to the NDP may be used as that party chooses. The provisions of Standing Order 31 are suspended, so if the hon. member wishes to speak for an hour or for the whole seven, he can do that.

I find it strange that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) would not have the moxie in regard to parliamentary proceedings to have read the Votes and Proceedings for last Monday where, as the minister pointed out, he would have found the full text of the Ways and Means motion. I do not know how he can now claim to be surprised. I cannot understand why he should be whining about more time. We are ready and we have been ready for some weeks to discuss this measure. It has been improved in a very small way by the minister—he still has a long way to go—but we are prepared to enter into discussion of any of these measures at any time. We do not need any further time to prepare.

I would suggest to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that he might like to have a study period with his colleagues in order to familiarize himself with the provisions in this and the other energy measures that have come down. If he wishes our help, we will be only too happy to co-operate with him.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I do not need the rather outworn suggestions of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). As far as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned, I notice that even when he has the carrot in front of him he still resorts to the stick.

The point is that a Ways and Means motion does not contain all of the bill. It is part of the bill, but there are other parts that were not in the motion.

My examination of the bill has indicated a few changes. I will not go into them in detail but I want to point out to the hon. member for Yukon and to the minister that, for example, the Canadian ownership charge was $25 per cubic meter or $4 per barrel in the draft, and it has dropped to $7.25 per cubic meter or $1.15 per barrel. That is a crucial change in the government's concept of nationalizing companies and how we pay for that.

I will not get into the debate here, Madam Speaker, but I will take the minister up on his suggestion about further speeches. I will decide whether I want to go into debate this afternoon, but I am putting the government on notice that we want some fairness in the way these bills are dealt with.

I can tell the former minister of public works, the member from—where is it—Yukon—that if he wants to debate energy with me any time, I am ready.

Mr. Jarvis: That would be cruel and unusual punishment.

Madam Speaker: I sympathize with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway but of course all this is being done under an order of the House and pursuant to the negotiations that took place between the leaders of all parties, so there is not much I can do for him. I sympathize with him, but there is a House order and we have to comply with it.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I have a brief question to put to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) about Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers. I was on my feet at the time you called the last three points of order.

I wonder if the hon. member could inform the House when Motions Nos. 62, 63 and 64 which have been on the Order Paper for the last ten months, will be brought before the House?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have conveyed the request of the hon. member to the minister involved on previous occasions. I will be happy to convey his request again.

Madam Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 6, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-102, to amend the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I notice that the minister is running out of the House as we commence further debate on this bill. As we know, he just tabled the Petro-Canada annual report and said that he was very pleased that there was black ink in the report rather than red ink. I have had a few moments to review the annual report. I can understand why the minister would hightail it out of the House before this matter could be reviewed and discussed. As we take a look at the annual report, it is very clear how the government has been able to arrive at the so-called black ink.

I direct the attention of hon. members to certain highlights in the report. For example, on page one it is pointed out that net earnings before preferred share dividends of a subsidiary owned by Petro-Canada were $203 million. This sounds very impressive until we calculate what those earnings are a percentage of in terms of total sales, and we find that the earnings figure is actually a little over 7 per cent on total sales of $2.7 billion. This compares with last year when the government had less of a finger in this operation and on sales of $1 billion it earned $163 million or 16 per cent pre-tax. The fine hands of government and of the minister have already reduced the earnings ratio in terms of sales with respect to Petro-Canada from a 16 per cent return on sales in 1979 and 1980 to a mere 7 per cent return in terms of sales in 1981.

That is only part of the story. As we all know, when we are dealing with government Crown corporations and their annual reports and statements, it is important to read the notes to the statements because that is where auditors feel they must disclose some of the shenanigans of the government in order to make what appear to be red figures black figures for public consumption.

I refer hon. members of the House to notes 8, 9, 10 and 11 in particular which appear on pages 38 and 39 of the Petro-Canada annual report. I am sure many people in the country who are now inflicted with interest rates of 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20 per cent with respect to business activities will be interested to know that as far as Petro-Canada is concerned the government allowed it to go into a preferred share issue where the interest rate last year was approximately 9 per cent per annum. Think what business people could be doing in this country with money at their disposal at 9 per cent per annum! I am not talking about any small amount of money. I am talking about $1,250 million which was made available to Petro-Canada at 9 per cent per annum, according to the auditors, for the year ending December 31, 1981.

But again that is only part of the story. If we read further notes, note ten in particular, we find that the government has doctored-up something they call a convertible note. Convertible notes are in fact government loans to Petro-Canada. This is what the auditors say:

> The notes, which are non-interest bearing, will be converted into common shares of the corporation. Interest on the revolving-term loan has been reflected as deferreds interest pending conversion of the notes which will create contributed surplus against which the deferred interest will be charged.

Here again we have the typical doctoring which goes on when the government gets its finger into commercial business activity. For obvious political reasons, the government does not like to show the true colours of its operations. Consequently, we doctored statements, such as the ones we see in the annual report of Petro-Canada tabled in the House by the minister just a few minutes ago.

Of course many of us are dazzled by the billions and billions of dollars which the government has launched us into as far as the activities of Crown corporations are concerned. As we know, it is proposed in another bill that the government increase the capitalization of Petro-Canada to something in the $6 billion range. How many of us realize that even now the government is a very active participant in Crown corporations without the bill that is before us today, without other pieces of legislation.

I am referring to the fact that in total the government has Crown corporations with assets totalling something like $30 billion at the present time. We did a fast calculation because frankly we were somewhat curious to see what was the rate of return of the Crown with respect to the $30 billion investment in commercial activities. As I said, the commercial activities have a wide scope. They include things such as the production of pop in competition with Coca-Cola. They are in the fashion business and in a wide range of activities. If I have a chance, perhaps I will read into the record some of the rather startling names of companies which have been incorporated by the government to further commercial activities. On the question of the total impact of the activities, the $30 billion invested, we find that the rate of return of the government is 6.3 per cent.

This is what they are doing with money which they have to go out on the street to borrow at interest rates as high as 19.5 per cent. Hon. members will recall the last Canada Savings Bond issue. That was the going rate the government has to pay for money at that time. The net result is that the sheer loss in interest income over the rate of return on the $30 billion of investment in various Crown corporations at the present time is something like $3,072 million or $130 for every man, woman and child in Canada in the last year alone.

Let me put it into perspective. In terms of assets, what does a $30 billion investment really mean? If the government wanted to put it into this context, it would be equal to the government owning all of General Motors of Canada, all of the Ford Motor Company, Imperial Oil, Shell Canada, Gulf Canada, Hudson's Bay, Massey-Ferguson, Texaco Canada, Simpsons-Sears and MacMillan Bloedel combined.

Notwithstanding the fact that the government has already picked up that magnitude of investment in the commercial sector, it is saying, "we crave more", to the point that it even wants the bill we are now debating passed so that the minister, at will, can not only incorporate new companies to go into the commercial field but can start gobbling up other companies already in that field, with only a secondary recourse to Parliament in the form of the negative resolution spelled out in the bill. That is the magnitude of what we are talking about. Basically, the government has lost all perspective. The government somehow feels that its job is to run business, as opposed simply to creating the atmosphere for business to operate within.

I have never understood the statist's approach which the government seems to like so much, and of course, in which it is encouraged to take by the socialists to my left. The truth is that I believe they like it because they clearly misunderstand how business works and feel it is a great area for more and more patronage and pork-barrelling in which the government, in particular, loves to engage. I say that because, when you think of it, government that stays out of business has everything going for it. First, it does not have to invest any money, although it can create the atmosphere for investment. Government can entice other people to invest. But if government stays out of business, it does not have to get involved in management. Governments do not have to make the kinds of mistakes such as those which occurred in the Consolidated Computer matter. In that case, the people of Canada had to absorb $125 million in total loss as a result of this government's mistakes in running a commercial activity which it should never have got into in the first place. Above all, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that when government stays out of business it does not run that ultimate risk of losing an entire investment, such as was done in the Consolidated Computer Corporation matter.

Again, when government stays out of business, think of what government does. In effect, it says, "You in the private sector put up your $1 million or your $10 million and if you win, half of your winnings will be taxed. However, if you lose, that is your problem. Go bankrupt, but we hope you will try again."

When you think of it, government has it made. Yet this government is so confused that it believes somehow or other it is in the public interest not to create the atmosphere for business, not to tax business—basically to stay out of business—but to jump into business with both feet to the extent of $30 billion of public funds.

Again, what I think is totally misunderstood about government getting into business is the fact that government is supreme. Government can tax at any level it sees fit, provided it can get that kind of measure through the House. Government is supreme. Why does government then want to take the responsibility of running a business itself? That is the tough part. I suggest it can be shown that every time government has to meet the competition of the private sector it cannot compete as effectively as the private sector.

In that connection, it is very interesting to read the statement made by the minister on why he wants this legislation put through. He says, among other things, that he wants to be able to create these new "children" or entities to compete within the public sector. Do hon. members notice that he does not say, "To compete with the private sector"? He says that it is his longing to have two, three, four or five "children" all competing with each other in the public sector. Does that really make sense? Does it really make sense to divide up this country where public corporations compete with public corporations and presumably private corporations compete with private corporations or with the public corporations? I am not sure what the minister has in mind.

In short, it seems to be bureaucracy gone amuck. It is simply a concept out of control. Rather than have what at one time looked horrible enough which has now become such massive government intervention through the 26 corporations to which I have referred totalling $30 billion, the government actually wants the blanket power to create more and more corporations to compete with the corporations already out there in the public sector.

I know that most of us want to get to vote on this bill fairly early this afternoon, but I felt it important for us to draw back and ask ourselves, as I indicated last evening; are we really equipped to handle the type of proliferation of new Crown corporations which the government is asking us to okay through the passage of this bill? We have no Crown corporation legislation in this country. We have no mechanism by which the activities of Crown corporations can be reviewed in depth by an appropriate committee of the House. We have no minister responsible for Crown corporations in general. The responsibility is spread all over the place. Take your pick, Mr. Speaker. Ask any of the ministers to report to the House concerning one or more Crowm corporations under his or her jurisdiction and I think you will be shocked at the lack of knowledge ministers have concerning the activities of the Crown corporation chosen.

In short, we are asking the government from this side of the House, from the official opposition, to draw back and reconsider. The government does not need the bill now before us. The government does not need the power to create more and more Crown corporations. The government has demonstrated well that it does not know how to run the Crown corporations under its jurisdiction now. Let me give one example of that. When we were in power, we had an opportunity to review in depth the internal operation of a company called Canadair. Canadair was acquired in 1974 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) through another government. In 1974 the House was told the acquisition was only a temporary transition. The government wanted to pick up Canadair with the hope that it could get the corporation back into the private sector without delay. But when we had an opportunity to take a look at this matter, we found that it was reasonable to expect, judging from what management told us in 1979, that Canadair's total exposure to a debt and equity commitment from the Government of Canada would be about a $200 million item, and that in any event most of the debt would be paid off by 1982. Canadair then would be in an earnings position, having about $38 million per annum profit starting in 1982 which would increase thereafter. That is what we were told less than three years ago. We now find through miscalculation, mistakes and error, that the total government exposure with respect to Canadair is not $200 million but $1.35 billion. What a colossal miscalculation! Instead of that corporation being in a profitable position at present, we are told very frankly that if the government had not capitalized the various items it chose to capitalize, there would have been a loss of $140 million. That is government in action. That is the government which made a former colleague and minister, Jean-Pierre Goyer, vice-chairman of that corporation. That is the patronage and pork-barrelling to which I have referred in which this government loves to engage when it gets entities at its disposal.

Tragically it is your money, Mr. Speaker, it is our money and it is the money of the average Canadian which the government is earmarking for this type of activity. Someone in the House sometime down the road will have a colossal mess to clean up as a result of the reckless, irresponsible, poorly managed commercial activities of this government if this bill now before us is passed.

We are virtually giving the government a blank cheque to create more of this activity in future with even less control by the people of Canada through the good offices of the House of Commons. Surely it is time for members to say they have had enough. Let us stop the minister right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1600)

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it very clear from the beginning that this party will vote against Bill C-102 for a wide number of reasons, although not the same reasons as outlined by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). I would like to start with two of the rather important and startling principles which the minister has introduced in this piece of legislation.

The first is the creation of Crown corporations by order in council. What can happen is that five members of cabinet can get together late one night and have researchers and members of various departments write up some background papers on a Crown corporation. The five of them can pass the order in council, it will come in and be put on the notice paper and it might say: Gopher Gulch Crown Corporation. It might seem innocuous to those of us in the House, but we have a limited period of time in which to respond. If 30 members of the House sign a motion to the effect that the order be revoked, then we have a negative resolution which will come before the House for a maximum three hour debate. The really peculiar thing, which was touched on by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) last night, is that after the three hour debate, even if every member of this chamber voted against it, it could still become law. What could happen is that it would go over to the other place; and if they do not concur in the negative resolution, it becomes law. I think all members of the House should be aware of this because it is a crucially new and unique way of abusing the House of Commons. Clause 8 of the bill says:

> Where a motion taken up and considered in accordance with this section is not adopted by the House in which it was introduced . . . but is not concurred in by the other House, the particular order to which the motion relates comes into force immediately . . .

I find it astonishing, Mr. Speaker, to see the minister put this kind of legislation before the House, legislation which will completely underride the concept of democracy. Even if every member of the minister's own party voted against it, it can still become law. How can we possibly represent not only the partisan interests of our own party but the interests of Canadians when the only chamber in Canada whose members are elected from all regions can vote against something and it still becomes law? I find that extremely peculiar, and I will come back to it later this afternoon.

Mr. Riis: It makes a mockery of Parliament.

Mr. Fulton: It definitely makes a mockery of Parliament. The second point also makes a mockery of Parliament because it is a negative resolution—even with all the fancy sounding sections referring to 30 members signing, and the minister changed it from 50 last night to 30, and from 20 in the Senate to 15 and so on—with time restraints, and has a mandatory guillotine in it. Therefore, rather than reforming this institution, about which we had eloquent speeches from all parties a couple of weeks ago, we have the minister introducing a bill which slides completely around Parliament. Regardless of Parliament's view, the most we will have is three hours on the floor. Even if we were all to vote against it, in comes the guillotine and it becomes law.

Those two principles alone, Mr. Speaker, should shock every member of the House who has any concept of democracy. We are faced with the possibility of having to vote for something which does so much to undo the very constitutional foundation of this country.

Mr. Riis: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-101 concerns new energy corporations. One would think that such an innocuous sounding piece of legislation would quickly find support in the House, perhaps from all sides. However, what is buried in the few meagre pages of this bill is another blow to the already reeling institution of the House. The long fingers of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), grubbing it seems for additional powers, have left their grimy prints all over this legislation. The stamp of executive power is visible throughout the bill to those few Members of Parliament who will actually take the time to read and honestly address its contents. The minister has obviously convinced his colleagues in the Liberal Party that he requires all the extraordinary powers spelled out, not only in this bill but in its predecessor, Bill C-48. Who knows what the ultimate scheme is? However, it is clear that the Liberals have chosen to put Canada's future in jeopardy by pursuing only oil and gas megaprojects at the cost of alternate energy, manufacturing, agriculture, forestry, and fisheries. As you may have surmised by now, Mr. Speaker, almost all of Canada's economy is being thrown to the winds, along with the people who work in industries outside of the petroleum industry.

The drive behind this legislation and Bill C-48, and the bulk of the Liberal policy on energy in this session, is narrowly designed to maximize tax revenues to Ottawa at the cost of the public interest, regions, wildlife and environment. I might remind the minister of what he said to me in the House on third reading of Bill C-48 where I put forward a proposal to have a definition of a "spill". Hopefully we will not have a spill, but if we do, at least there would be some way that those people who lost their livelihood, had their beaches damaged or endangered, could obtain redress in the courts. The minister said that my proposed definition of 100 litres was perhaps too high, that he might want to support ten litres. So the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) and I promptly informed the minister that we would support ten litres; we thought it was a good idea to go lower. Mr. Speaker, such amendment was not supported by that side and was never put forward by the minister. He shied away from even something as small as that to protect the public interest, all in the name of having the power in the minister's hands and within the bureaucracy.

Mr. Lalonde: Not ten litres—one drop!

Mr. Fulton: The minister would now like to have it down to one drop. That is not in Bill C-48, and that bill is now law.

Mr. Lalonde: It covers everything, including one drop.

Mr. Fulton: Well, the minister has perhaps not read the provision as carefully as I have, but I note that many of the expert witnesses who came before the committee, people who are far more expert than he or I, indicated there was a requirement for a spill definition.

The drive behind this bill, and Bill C-48, is an attempt to move into the jurisdiction, not only of the offshore areas but north of 60. It is both a geographical grab in Bill C-48 and a jurisdictional grab in this legislation now before us. Bill C-102 is based on the concept of a negative resolution procedure, that is, the delivery of power to cabinet where, by order in council and without notification to Members of Parliament, Crown corporations large and small can be spawned. If the process is to be seen as and is to be democratic, it must be reversed. Proposals for new Crown corporations must first come before the House, not after they have been designed and delivered. If the minister wants to have the capacity to create speedily Crown corporations or anything else, the rules of the House need to be changed. I find this institution almost impossible to operate in because it moves so ponderously and slowly.

Mr. Lalonde: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: It is no longer capable of responding to the interests certainly of my constituency, which is the same size as France. I have to serve 100,000 Canadians in 350,000 square miles, and I know what their interests are and I know how to put it together in legislation. I know the government cannot deliver there; the vote at the polls demonstrates that where they now get less than 20 per cent of the vote. So what the minister is opting for, obviously supported by the Liberal Party, is to make this end run around Parliament, bring in the guillotine and have the right to pass legislation against the will of every Member of Parliament. I think we have to look at it very carefully, Mr. Speaker, and I know the House has to vote against Bill C-102. Anyone who votes for Bill C-102 is voting against democracy in Canada.

Mr. Riis: And for tyranny.

Mr. Fulton: The paranoia of the Liberal Party becomes highly visible with the inclusion of closure or the guillotine in Section 7, subsection (4), making a debate of three hours on a corporation which might well be financed to the tune of billions, as we saw with Petro-Canada yesterday, increased financing of $6.5 billion. It could be in a very vast field, Mr. Speaker. We have no way of knowing that the Crown corporation set up under the Canada Business Corporations Act under any of these sections, whether it is to explore, develop, produce, gather or refine, process, purchase, sell, import, export, distribute, store, transport, or otherwise deal in all sorts of fuel and energy, or to produce, distribute, market, and so on. And so it goes on.

One thing that we all know is that once a Crown corporation is set up under the Canada Business Corporations Act, even if it is done under Bill C-102, once it is in operation, it may operate for one minute in the energy field, as the minister tells the House it will. But then it could go into any purview that it desires. So what this really is, and it must be seen for what it is, is a cornerstone, a tip, a toe, allowing the government to set up, against the interests of the House, against the interests of the nation, Crown corporations in any field that are financed solely by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources making a phone call to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). That is what it is, and it is completely unacceptable.

Three hours, Mr. Speaker, that is the maximum that we will get to debate a Crown corporation that might be vastly larger than Petro-Canada.

This bill is the kind of parliamentary support for parliamentary reform. I guess it is supported by the Liberals. Number one, administration by order in council, which can override all of Parliament. That is the first strike against democracy. Then the mandatory guillotine, which is strike two. Then there is the three hour limit, which is strike three.

Let me make it quite clear that we in this party are not opposed to the creation of Crown corporations, be they totally public or of a mixed public and private nature.

There are areas in Canada's economy and social fabric where Canada's collective social goals and aspirations would be most rapidly and purposefully achieved through public ownership and Crown corporations.

But we on this side of the House—and I solicit support from members on the government side—object to the methodology of this proposal. Let them answer why proposals, if they are sound, accountable and in the public interest, cannot be brought first before Parliament and with some expedition put through the House. How are we to know, as I said before, what Gopher Gulch corporation really is when it is simply on the notice paper? Is it a $10,000 corporation, or a $1 billion corporation, is it for exploration, is it for pulp and paper? How are we possibly to know, Mr. Speaker, with the way this has been set up? We have no access to the government reports done on it, we have no idea where the design of government is going with any particular Crown corporation or grouping of Crown corporations.

What if the minister, after passage of this bill, were to list 100 corporations on the notice paper, how is the House to know which ones to debate? And even if we debate them all for three hours and we lose them all, the minister still gets them all. I find it passing strange. At times I think that I might be in Argentina or in a chamber in some other area of the world where such potential for legislation is perhaps more acceptable.

Bill C-102 is open to abuse by a very small group within Parliament—to be exact, only five members of cabinet—backed by unlimited bureaucratic resources for design and analysis, reports that would never be available to us in the House, information we would never have access to in judging the viability or need of such a new corporation.

So it is designed in secret, it is introduced by order in council by as few as five members of the government. Within 15 days the House requires the tabling of the notice of creation, and 30 days later it comes into force unless before the twentieth sitting day a resolution requesting revocation, signed by at least 30 members or 15 senators, is filed. Even then, with no support, without one member standing in support, that can still become law.

Why 30? I am puzzled. Yesterday it was 50, today it is 30. Yet to adjourn the House of Commons, as the Tories tried with the bells ringing for a couple of weeks, requires only two members. It only requires five to force a vote. And under the Petroleum Administration Act it only requires ten. Why would we not follow some kind of parliamentary precedent in terms of the number of members? Why is the minister so interested in making it so difficult to bring in a negative resolution? Why has he set it up in such a way that even if we do negate the idea of a particular corporation, after only three hours of debate, it can still be passed by the other place.

I think we should be puzzled, Mr. Speaker, and we definitely should not pass such a piece of legislation. Then, within six days, there will be a debate of three hours maximum, followed by a vote. However, even if the House votes to revoke the new Crown corporation, it can go to the Senate and be passed. Here, as the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe pointed out last night, is a serious constitutional question. In theory, all members of the House could vote against the proposal; or we can reverse that and see it in the Senate, where exactly the same thing can occur. So we have seen a destabilization even of the awkward system of the House and the Senate that we have so far. That is under Section 7, subsection (8).

I think we have to puzzle, Mr. Speaker, as to where the Liberals are leading the House. I am no longer confident that there are many on the government side who truly understand democracy.

In reference to the other House, it too has the mandatory 15 day passage and the three hour guillotine. So, what do we have? A bill that can spawn Crown corporations of every known variety, without prior notice to the House. As duly incorporated businesses they do not have to stay in the energy field one day or even one minute, and they can draw down unbelievable debts directly on to the taxpayer.

As was pointed out last night, there is not even a veil of security that corporations have that are incorporated in Canada, where the shareholders have some protection. The problems that are being put on to the taxpayers by this administration with Consolidated Computer were brought up many times in the House, where before they finally came to their senses $125 million of the taxpayers' money had flowed away.

Now the government says there is not enough money for medicare and not enough for post-secondary education, that there is no money to help farmers or to help small businesses. But there is enough money around to have such poor auditing and such poor planning, and yet not one head has yet rolled over it. That $125 million can be lost in four years, and what does the taxpayer get back? A 100,000 bucks. It is pretty fantastic.

Bill C-102 represents a dramatic rearrangement of the rules of the House. Without properly addressing and reforming the rules of the House it instead introduces a new style of legislation, which is so far-ranging, so totally contrary to our traditions. How can these Crown corporations be accountable to Parliament? When can they be formed? Why can they be formed? And they can be formed against a majority and in fact a total negative vote of the House of Commons.

The history of Crown corporations in Canada is a long one, beginning in 1841 with the formation of the Board of Works. It was soon followed by the Nova Scotia Railway Company in 1859 and a number of harbour boards, long before Confederation.

Only this party, the NDP, and before it the CCF, consistently fought for the role of Crown corporations in Canada. However, no New Democrat in Canada would support this bill. It is truly a Trojan horse, with happy little Crown corporations on the outside, the Liberals almost not knowing what is inside the Trojan horse. But what is inside is no semblance of democratic principles or accountability.

The Conservatives I have listened to in the most recent speech generally like to attack Crown corporations—but for all the wrong reasons. They seem to forget, Mr. Speaker, that it was they who set up the CNR, the CBC, the Bank of Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board. Need I go on? They set up Ontario Hydro. The Conservatives love to attack Crown corporations, saying they are unaccountable, they are dangerous, they take business away, they destroy the business climate of Canada, they open the pork barrel. They do so, even though they know only too well about the pork barrel. It is one of the problems that the party on the government side has had difficulty in controlling—the desire to put every party member's defeated candidates on to boards, when they have no track record and no history whatsover in relation to the field that they might be going into, whether it is energy or the National Parole Board or anything else. They have created a nest that it is very difficult to sleep in.

• (1620)

I wish to go on for a moment to something that has been raised time and again in relation to this bill. It is a concern the House should have when the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) cannot tell Canadians how many Crown corporations there are. I have a letter here dated February 8, 1982 from Treasury Board signed by H. J. Mullington, assistant secretary, Crown Corporations Division, to Michael J. Graham of the Library of Parliament. He indicates that as of February this year, the list of corporations in which the government has an interest records 306. I noted last night the Conservative member from Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe indicated there were about 170 Crown corporations.

To give the House some idea of why this bill is not required at this time when the minister is interested in Crown corporations to handle things in the energy field, let me remind the House of some of these subsidiaries of Petro-Canada which are Crown corporations.

There is Canertech Limited, Petro-Canada Consulting Corporation, Petro-Canada Exploration Inc., Asher American, Inc., Big Eagle Oil and Gas Ltd., Aquilla Holdings Ltd., Fifth Pacific Stations Ltd., GMI Co. (Bahamas) Ltd., Merit Oil Co. Ltd., Cal-Jet Holdings Ltd., Pay-N-Save Gas Stations Ltd., Opal Oils Limited, Commodore Oils Limited, Pacific Exploration Inc., Pacific Petrochemicals Ltd., Pacific Petroleums Espanola, Pacific Petroleums, Inc., Pacific Pipelines, Inc., Pacific Petroleums (Overseas) Limited, Petro-Canada Norway, Petro-Canada Petroleum Inc., Petro-Canada Products Inc., Petro-Canada Resources Inc., Petro-Canada (U.K.) Limited, Petrofina Canada Inc., Arctic Islands Resources Ltd., Petroleum Transmisssion Company, Petron Petroleum Ltd., Rocair Limited, Tri-Mountain Petroleums Ltd., Value Serve Stations Ltd., Venezuelan Canadian Oils, and Venezuelan Pacific Petroleums.

Just listing those should give members of the House some idea that it is preposterous for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to come before the House with this bill, particularly with the undemocratic principles within it, and to tell us that he wants it so that he can set up Crown corporations to handle exploration, development, production, gathering and so on when there are already pages of Crown corporations. Perhaps the boards are not big enough so that he can appoint all his buddies. Perhaps that is why it is being set up. Frankly, I cannot believe when you have that many subsidiaries in one large corporation in the energy field that you would come before the House of Commons with such a badly drafted and incredible piece of legislation that could not possibly be supported by anyone who understands democracy and takes the time to read the bill.

I will certainly be watching carefully members on that side who speak on this bill and then stand up and vote for it. I intend to make this bill an election issue in British Columbia. I will point out the sheer hypocrisy of anyone in British Columbia, if not anywhere in Canada, voting for a piece of legislation that takes away the right of the vote of every Member of Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I might indicate that if the minister is rising to speak, that will close the debate. Is the minister rising to intervene in the debate? If so, I will have to recognize another two members who want to intervene.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some very brief remarks on this bill. I am not necessarily in accord with the manner in which the Crown corporations are going to be formed. I want to say something about the need for additional Crown corporations in this field.

For about eight months I sat discussing Bill C-48 in relation to the 25 per cent share of all federal Crown lands that will be assigned to either Petro-Canada or some other Crown corporation. Let me say in the House what I said in committee. I would find it very disturbing if all the holdings or ownership shares in partnerships and private companies that are going to be active on federal lands would be assigned to Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada today is so large that it does not know its front from its rear end.

The oil industry will be growing substantially on federal lands, the Labrador coast, Hibernia, Sable Island, the Beaufort Sea, the Mackenzie region, and on the west coast and in connection with the oil sands and heavy oils. To even begin to think of the 25 per cent ownership share of all these properties being assigned for administration through the Crown corporation called Petro-Canada would be a fallacy. It would be a terrible mistake.

When we discussed Bill C-48, we discussed the need for additional Crown corporations in this area. We strongly proposed that serious consideration be given to holding corporations taking over the 25 per cent share in some of the areas, holding corporations which do not get involved in the management of the corporation itself in relation to exploration, development and production.

I say this because Bill C-48 is a fact. It is in place. It is there. That 25 per cent ownership share will be assigned in every property to a Crown corporation. Therefore, in offering some advice to the minister and to the government on something that is needed, I again suggest to the minister that he consider very strongly the establishment of holding corporations which do not hire a vast number of government personnel to get involved in the actual development on some of these federal lands.

I wish to say again as I said yesterday, that in the area of the creation of boards for these corporations which will receive 25 per cent of the ownership or holdings in some of the properties in federal lands, every consideration be given to allowing the provinces to appoint a member to the board of directors of these corporations. The provinces could then be involved in establishing energy policy at the earliest opportunity in energy development in Canada. If a holding corporation is established to deal with the Labrador coast with respect to the 25 per cent ownership, I see no reason why some of the Atlantic provinces would not be permitted to appoint a member to the board of that corporation. What would be wrong with that?

The Beaufort Sea is going to be tied through a series of lines in a north-south direction with British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. What would be wrong with those three provinces being given the right to put a member on the board of directors of the Crown corporation that will own 25 per cent of all properties in the Beaufort Sea? What will be wrong with British Columbia putting somebody on the board of directors of the Crown corporation dealing with western offshore properties of which 25 per cent will be assigned to a federal Crown corporation? Indeed, the same would be true for Sable Island and Hibernia. The provinces are desperately interested in the development of oil and gas in these areas and should have a substantial input into policies associated with their development. Maybe the bill is not perfect in form and perhaps the method for dissolving some of these Crown corporations is not the best.

What I am attempting to say is that I favour the creation of some Crown corporations which will be assigned 25 per cent interest in some property on federally owned land. I think it would be wrong to assign that share of ownership in every case to Petro-Canada which, as a single corporation, would not be capable of managing that area of such vast diversity and complexity. That is my basic point and I simply say that it is a point I made very strongly when we discussed Bill C-48. I just repeat it for the record here.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak very briefly to Bill C-102. While many Canadians had grave reservations about the two-week "Gong Show" which tied this place up for two weeks not very long ago, that demonstration, for all of its faults, focused the attention of many Canadians on some of the details of the National Energy Program which otherwise may have escaped their attention.

As was said a number of times by the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), we in the NDP agree with much of the National Energy Program. However, we certainly do not agree with all of its contents. We disagree with it, as do members of the opposition party to my right, but in different areas.

I was asked on many occasions during that two-week gong show—the battle between the dingbats and the ding-a-lings that went on across the country which seemed like forever—to try to explain what the issue was all about. I described it basically as follows, that when the opposition parties wanted the bill split, the Conservatives wanted it split so that they could vote for the $6.5 billion more to the big oil companies and vote against the expansion of Petro-Canada and real Canadianization. The New Democratic Party wanted the bill split so we could vote for Petro-Canada and general Canadianization and vote against an extra $6.5 billion for the big oil companies. The Liberals wanted one undivided bill so they could give $6.5 billion extra to the oil companies and still masquerade it as reform. That was basically what the entire issue consisted of.

I am glad that at least the "Gong Show" was able to bring to the attention of Canadians the various motivations and objectives of all the parties during the consideration of this very important program.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) discussed the miserly allocation of funds within the program for renewables and alternate energy and illustrated the overemphasis placed on megaprogects with their high cost of drilling rigs and exploration in Hibernia, Beaufort, Alsands and the other areas. He talked about the great expense involved in developing those resources which are very difficult to reach, if in fact some of those resources are there at all. He related these expenses to the fact that if a small amount of that money was applied to developing conservation, renewables and alternate energy, the country would be much better served not only in terms of energy security but in terms of employment which couid be diversified across many regions of the country. This should be done instead of boosting the economies in a few local areas with high inflationary costs which sometimes are associated with megaprojects, which are concentrated in those areas. We have experienced this situation in Canada before.

Perhaps it is time for the government, as well as Canadians, to take a long, hard look at some of the available options and realize that we should be diversifying some of our efforts and expenditures in order to serve ourselves and future generations far better than we are today.

One of our concerns is accountability. The hon. member for Mission-Port Moody raised this concern yesterday. When other facets of the program are debated later, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) will discuss mechanisms for providing accountability for Crown corporations in much greater detail. That issue is one which perhaps is the key to the main social and political question which will have to be answered by Canadians and politicians not only in Canada but in the United States and throughout the industrialized world in the next few years.

This question does not only concern accountability in Crown corporations; it concerns accountability in the mechanics of Parliament and the whole question of parliamentary reform. As well, we must consider accountability for all those large corporations, private or public, which make many of the key decisions that closely touch the lives of the vast majority of Canadians.

It is rather astounding and somewhat alarming that the procedures for accountability which exist for agencies of the Crown are in many cases not much better presently than those for the private sector. While the minister and the government seem intent on holus-bolus creating perhaps dozens more instant Crown corporations—piggy-backing them on this bill or the rest of the NEP—I urge them to think seriously about the fact that not only will we have to develop better measures for Parliament to be able to hold the government and its Crown corporations to account, but we should attempt to structure into those corporations, when they are set up, positive input from their employees, communities or regions. This input should exist within the internal management mechanisms so that Canadians and Members of Parliament will not just be in the position of trying to remedy mistakes many years after they are made, because with that input things might be done somewhat differently.

We must look at it from both ends of the spectrum. I appeal to the minister and his government to ensure that they will serve some public wellbeing and purpose before they rush headlong into forming hundreds of new corporations. Last year, the government did not even know how many corporations it had and now, hell bent for leather, they are trying to create more without developing any appropriate accountability or management mechanisms.

It is important for us to be cautious about the sort of regulations which will apply. It should not only be an adversary system, whether involving unions, governments or oppositions checking on what the government corporation does. We should make sure that there are institutions in place on some of these giant rigs which will be working off all three coasts of Canada, to ensure that the type of attitude such as I read in a book review in The Globe and Mail on Saturday, March 13, does not occur here. The review refers to a book called "The Other Price of Britain's Oil", by W.G. Carson and the philosophies stated by one unrepentant oilman, who seemed to be very representative of that industry. It was in reference to laws and regulations regarding the exploration and discovery of oil and gas in the North Sea. He said:

> "We break your . . . laws every . . . day; if we didn't, you wouldn't have one . . . hole drilled in your . . . North Sea."

From the information I have received from people who have worked in and around that industry, that kind of operative philosophy is not unlikely to appear in Canadian exploration areas. We will have a very difficult time ensuring that the lives of Canadians and Canada's environment and economic future are secure. People who make statements like that in industries that are infamous for having that kind of attitude will not do us any favours unless we have some very ironclad agreements as to how they will operate.

• (1640)

It worries me, many of my colleagues, many people in the work force throughout this country, and many in the democratic organizations which represent workers, that it will be virtually impossible to have organized workers working on some of those rigs which will be in place off Canada's coasts.

I do not know if any hon. members here have seen the movie I saw a while ago when I was stranded in Calgary. Other people do not mind being stranded in Calgary, but I was stranded in Calgary on my way to my riding because my plane was not flying. I went downtown to kill some time and saw a movie called, I think, "The Outlanders". It was somewhat like "High Noon" in outer space, with Sean Connery playing the sheriff at some mining camp up on an asteroid. It was a fictional movie, but in the movie workers' food contained chemicals and drugs to induce more productivity.

Mr. Keeper: A Liberal conspiracy!

Mr. Kristiansen: That was fiction, but what is to stop any company or organization in that same type of absolutely isolated and controlled environment—which is exactly what exists out on the rigs—from making itself the law?

When we consider the kind of operative philosophy I quoted in that very timely book about North Sea oil exploration and development, we have to wonder just what kind of nightmare world we will create on some of those rigs. The people on the Ocean Ranger found out. People on other rigs off our coasts seem to be very worried about the same kind of thing happening today because of the same kind of dereliction of responsibilities. People feel threatened when they see 35-foot, 40-foot and 50-foot waves breaking along the Atlantic coast.

We had better be sure of what we are getting into. I am concerned not only about the issue of accountability but also about the whole range of issues respecting public priorities and public spending which must be taken into serious consideration before we rubber stamp the type of piggy-back bill the government is presenting in Bill C-102. For that reason and many others I oppose the bill before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) on the understanding that he will close the debate.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be short. I listened with great attention to the various speeches which have been made on this bill. When I listened to some of the speeches I could not help wondering whether the speakers were talking about something quite different from the bill that is before the House.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) made references to democracy, and I appreciated the comments of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) on accountability.

What this bill does is take a step forward in terms of the control by Parliament over Crown corporations. The hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) complained about two corporations, Canadair and Consolidated Computer. I was tempted to remind him that those two companies have been the subject of government involvement without the opportunity for Parliament to debate the principle of those corporations at any time except when it came to debate the estimates of the various departments concerned.

If we look back over past practices by all governments since the beginning of the century, we find that governments have created Crown corporations by using the Canada Business Corporations Act and the acts which preceded it without any reference to Parliament. It was enough for a minister to get authorization from the cabinet to set up a company under the Canada Business Corporations Act, and that company was in operation. If public moneys were required, when estimates time came the matter was considered as an item in the estimates; but in many instances large numbers of Crown corporations in the past have been created by ministers resorting simply to the Canada Business Corporations Act.

What we are doing is giving Parliament two opportunities to look at any additional Crown corporations which might be created in the energy field and to debate those additional corporations and their activities. Rather, I should say there are three opportunities because there is also the bill now before the House asking Parliament for authorization to create those corporations.

Assuming this bill is approved by Parliament, what would happen? If at any time the government decided to create an additional energy corporation, there would be an opportunity for a debate in the House and in the Senate, if members of Parliament so wished, and a vote. In addition, if public moneys were required to make this corporation work and operate, that would be part of the estimates. The matter could be debated in the relevant committee and in both the House and the Senate.

While I understand the references made about the concept of democracy by the hon. member for Skeena, I argue that this bill indeed represents very significant progress from the previous situation and the previous practice. It would ensure several opportunities for both Houses of Parliament to have a say and to intervene when the government decides to create a Crown corporation in the energy field. In the past this has not been provided for and, as I indicated, one could go back and find a large number of corporations which have been created under the Canada Business Corporations Act without Parliament's ever having an opportunity to debate the creation of such institutions.

I argue that this bill constitutes very significant progress from old and established practices which existed previously. Indeed, it brings more accountability of the government to Parliament and brings the democratic process into play more than ever before.

I agree with the hon. member for Skeena that we could have even more involvement. I suspect he found the answer himself when he said that what we need is rule changes in this House. I wholeheartedly agree with him, but this bill relates only to Crown Corporations in the energy field; it does not deal with the question of parliamentary reform. That question is the responsibility of other ministers and, I submit, involves the three parties in this House; but I would be one member of this House to speak very strongly in favour of parliamentary reform and more efficient rules.

I remind hon. members that when it came to creating Petro-Canada, I think it took over a year to get this House finally to pass the Petro-Canada bill. If I am not mistaken, we had to impose time allocation or closure to pass the bill because the Conservative opposition mounted a filibuster in relation to the creation of something which has proved to be of great value to this country. We came very close to losing that bill because it seemed as if it would never come out of the committee, and it could have disappeared through prorogation, the beginning of another session and so forth.

What we are doing with this bill is providing not less but more control to Parliament compared with previous practice. I urge my hon. friends to reflect upon this. We will have an opportunity to debate this issue further and to discuss it in detail in committee. I will be very happy to hear the views of my friends again in the committee and to discuss the matter, but I think it is important at this stage to stress that what we are doing with this bill is bringing more control to Parliament and not less as in the past.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

April 7, 1982

Madam:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 7th day of April, 1982, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Jacques Noiseux,
for Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

Energy, Mines and Resources

ENERGY ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-103, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and to enact provisions related thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am honoured to participate once again in this most important energy debate. This is the third bill which we are considering in the past two days, and I appreciate the speed with which members of the House have dealt with them.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-88, an act respecting loans to farmers—Chapter No. 92;

Bill C-89, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act—Chapter No. 93;

Bill C-97, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977 and to provide for payments to certain provinces—Chapter No. 94.

It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until twelve o'clock noon tomorrow, pursuant to order made earlier this day.

At 6.04 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 8, 1982

The House met at 12 noon.

THE ECONOMY

DEMAND THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Liberal government's high interest rate policy, designed to reduce inflation, is not working. In fact it is inducing inflation as well as being the main cause of hundreds of bankruptcies and the loss of homes and farms. Industries and businesses are closing down, and more than a million people are looking for jobs. In fact high interest is largely the cause of the present Liberal depression, but still the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) refuse stubbornly to bite the bullet. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House demands that the government take action immediately or resign.

Hon. members on this side of the Chamber will not sit on the sidelines much longer and see this country go to wrack and ruin.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT

OUTREACH PROGRAM—CONTRACT WITH WOMEN'S CAREER COUNSELLING SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, last week the Women's Career Counselling Service, a highly successful Outreach project in Ottawa, finalized a one-year contract with regional officials from the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, yet this week that contract was cancelled by officials in the minister's office. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House demand that the Minister of Employment and Immigration accept the advice of his regional officials to enter into a new contract with the Women's Career Counselling Service so that they can resume their excellent service of finding jobs for women who are out of work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

PROPOSAL TO PUT FUNDS AT DISPOSAL OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

After being staggeringly subjected to the childish farce that was perpetrated this week by the Official Opposition, when they submitted a long list of petitions requesting that implementation of the metric system, the international system, be withdrawn, and whereas the first person to ever propose introducing the system in Canada was the Conservative Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, followed by the other Progressive Conservatives including the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker and the Hon. Robert Stanfield, and lately the Right Hon. Joe Clark, I move, seconded by the member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais):

That a sum of money be set aside for the members of the Official Opposition, to pay for plastic surgery that would sew up one side of their mouths and so prevent them from speaking out of both sides at once.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented by the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, the unemployment figures released today show that, despite our country's wealth and resources, officially over 9 per cent of our labour force cannot find work. Yet Saskatchewan, which just a few years ago was a have-not province, has now the lowest unemployment rate in Canada. Through sound management of its resources and the economy, the government of Allan Blakeney has provided economic stability, steady growth, and a balanced budget, at a time when the rest of the country is experiencing an economic depression. Saskatchewan has led the way in pioneering new social programs and is now a leader in economic planning and management. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That the House recognize the success of the Saskatchewan government under Allan Blakeney in managing its economy and that the Government of Canada follow the lead Saskatchewan has provided.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT INTEREST RATE POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, earlier this week the American T-bill rate dropped over 40 basis points. Yesterday our T-bill rate went up eight basis points, and this week alone our interest rates have risen a further one half per cent over American rates. Liberal interest rates more than any other single factor are causing massive unemployment. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That the government forthwith cease its Liberal high interest rate policy and cease supporting our dollar by driving business and labour into bankruptcy with higher and higher interest rates.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

NEED FOR IMPROVEMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the problem of Seaway capacity, especially at the Welland Canal, is a major concern. At least $150 million worth of improvements is necessary. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the Minister of Transport immediately start work on improvements both to boost Seaway revenues and to provide much needed jobs for some of the 1.2 million Canadians unemployed as a result of the abysmal planning of the Liberal government.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has stated that the air force base at Chatham, New Brunswick, has "a permanent status in Canada's national defence plans," and he vowed it would never close as long as he was the Prime Minister of the country. It is projected that the closure of CFB Chatham will withdraw some $30 million annually in earning and purchasing power from the communities of Chatham and Newcastle. Already 15 to 20 businesses have shut their doors in anticipation of the closure. Many more have given their notice of leaving in the future. In view of the economic strangulation which will be brought about by the closure I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the government prevent the region from becoming a maritime ghost town and that it grant Chatham permanent status as a defence base in accordance with the Prime Minister's hollow promise.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FALKLAND ISLANDS—SUGGESTED AIRLIFT FOR CANADIAN CITIZENS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter which I have discussed with the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) and with the office of the external affairs critic for the official opposition.

• (1210)

In view of the fact that my office has been in constant communication in the past few days with the Department of External Affairs in attempts to arrange transport out of the Falkland Islands for a constituent from the Queen Charlotte Islands, British Columbia, and in view of the fact that commercial air traffic into Port Stanley on the Falkland Islands has of today been shut down, and since the 200-mile marine zone around the islands has been declared a military zone wherein local Argentinian marine traffic is open to attack by British nuclear submarines as of next Monday, making exit by boat impossible, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make arrangements immediately for the charter of an aircraft from Comodoro Rivadavia, Uruguay or Buenos Aires to airlift the 10 Canadians stranded in the Falkland Islands.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

GOVERNMENT URGED NOT TO INCREASE TOLL RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, due to the MacEachen recessionary times and increased competition from U.S. rail lines, some 20 per cent of our Great Lakes fleet will not leave port this season when the St. Lawrence Seaway opens, another 800 people will not be employed this summer due to the fact that shipping has already been sharply reduced by the government's policies, and as there is now only a one cent difference on a per bushel basis between shipping and U.S. rail charges, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the government be satisfied with the 100 per cent increase in Seaway tolls put through between the years 1978 and 1980 and not introduce further toll increases which will simply drive more business to U.S. railways and will further aggravate our already scandalous national nine per cent unemployment rate.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, high interest rates remain the main problem for small businessmen and farmers. The hon. member for Mississauga South has just pointed out that yesterday interest rates in Canada went up, while in the United States interest rates came down. There appears to be no relief in sight from the government's high interest rate policy. Since the small business bond provisions introduced in the November 12 MacEachen budget are not working, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the government restore the original provisions of the Small Business Development Bond so that the banks can proceed with issuing these bonds to help farmers and small businessmen who desperately need this mechanism in order to survive.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

POWER RATE CHARGED TO RESIDENTS OF FIELD, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Northern Canada Power Commission has notified the residents of Field, British Columbia, that their power will be cut off on April 18 because these people have been withholding payments as a protest, in view of the fact that these people are protesting the fact that their power rates are four to five times higher than comparable communities in British Columbia, and in view of the fact that the Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment is negotiating a rate reduction for the community of Field, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

That this House instruct the Department of the Environment and the Northern Canada Power Commission to stop this drastic action and negotiate a rate for the community of Field similar to the rates enjoyed by other communities supplied by this utility.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—RECOMMENDATION TO RE-INCLUDE LEATHER SHOES IN GLOBAL QUOTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Being aware that at this very moment, the unemployment situation has become disastrous, and realizing that the exclusion of leather footwear from the global quota would deal a fatal blow to the footwear industry, I move, on behalf of the 20,000 workers in this industry, seconded by the member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That this House unanimously urge the minister responsible to reinstate leather footwear as part of the global quota before April 30, 1982, otherwise it will be too late for the industry and for thousands of qualified workers.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

DELAY IN PASSAGE OF BILL C-43—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of Communications has stalled on proceeding with Bill C-43, the long overdue legislation dealing with access to information, on the basis that provincial attorneys general want a uniform act, and in view of the fact that it is now clear that a majority of provincial attorneys general are refusing to co-operate in this stalling device and will not agree to a uniform act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

• (1215)

That this House calls upon the Minister of Communications to appear immediately before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and deal expeditiously with the long over due legislation, Bill C-43.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW OR AMEND BUDGET

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I know he will be aware from the statistics this morning that the unemployment rate now stands at 9 per cent. That is the highest level of unemployment the country has suffered since we started keeping monthly records, indeed the highest level since World War II. Also the minister knows that all but one of the major economic indicators indicate a decline, and I am sure he was not surprised to learn from the statistics this morning that there are 166,000 fewer people working this year than last year.

We all know that the minister has been consulting with economic leaders across the country and these statistics ought not to be a surprise to him. In light of this disastrous economic news, will the minister advise the House whether he intends either to withdraw his budget or bring in substantial amendments to it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the unemployment statistics which are very serious indeed. The hon. member suggested that I consider withdrawing the budget. I wonder whether he is including in that question the thought that I should withdraw from the current monetary and fiscal policy which is being followed by the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. MacEachen: If that is his proposal, then I think I should like to hear it from him directly.

* * *

INDUSTRIAL LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, of course my question was a simple one. I just asked the minister whether he would either withdraw his budget or change it. In the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, perhaps I should direct my supplementary question to his parliamentary secretary, his acting minister, or to the Minister of Finance. Indeed, it is a specific question; perhaps the Minister of Finance can help.

Mr. MacEachen: I will try.

Mr. Crombie: A year ago the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program was established to deal with those areas of the country which were hardest hit. The program itself has been characterized more by public relations announcements from the minister than any activity on the street. I have three specific questions. How many jobs have been created by that program in Sydney, Cape Breton Island, where the unemployment rate is 22.4 per cent? How many jobs have been created in the Eastern Townships where the unemployment rate is 18.2 per cent? How many jobs have been created in McAdam, New Brunswick, where the unemployment rate is 15.1 per cent? All three of those regions have applied. I should like the minister, or whomever he can call on, to tell those people and me how many actual jobs have been created.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am glad the hon. member referred to the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program under which the Government of Canada allocated $350 million to help industry and labour to adjust more effectively to current economic circumstances. Unfortunately I do not have the specific projects for each of the designated areas.

I know, for example, that the industrial adjustment committee in Sydney, Nova Scotia, has been working diligently, and so valuable did it think the program that it requested that labour benefits be extended to the longshoremen of North Sydney and Newfoundland. This past week the cabinet decided to extend the benefits to these affected workers. That is one evidence for the hon. member to appreciate that the program is working effectively. Also I know, for example, that quite a number of members, who represent areas with difficult economic circumstances, have asked that the benefits of the program be extended to their communities. We have been designating communities, as justified, in order to take advantage of this very important program.

• (1220)

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF LONG-TERM JOBS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, the people affected in these areas, hearing the minister, know the air of unreality that has been with us since November 12. I asked the question because you cannot get information. The program was indeed announced. It is worth $350 million and it was started over a year ago in January. But there is no information because there has been no delivery of the program, or very little. The minister calls it effective with 22.4 per cent unemployed in that area. That is effective? When will the minister and his economic colleagues in the cabinet come forward not with public relations programs but with real live long-term jobs with which people can have some hope for the future?

Mr. Darling: Let's hear it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised the hon. member describes the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program as unreal. The fact is that each community which is designated establishes a group of community leaders who are then charged with developing projects and undertaking the necessary steps to create jobs. I believe that in quite a number of communities a large number of applications have come forward.

Mr. Crombie: Lots of applications.

Mr. MacEachen: For example, I know that in the city of Brantford where there was a designated community that a large number of applications have been received. I am hopeful that it will be possible to fund the projects there. The government has made available $350 million to communities that are hard pressed by problems at the present time, permitting them to develop projects and permitting them also to take advantage of these funds. This program is a very important one. I wonder whether the hon. member has a better one in mind.

Mr. Crombie: Twenty-two per cent unemployment is very effective?

Mr. MacEachen: I remember his leader stated some time ago that whatever options his party had to improve the economy would be kept under wraps until election time.

SITUATION OF WOMEN WITH FAMILIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The unemployment scene in Canada today is a downright tragedy. Some 51,000 women who are heads of single-parent families are unemployed. That is an increase of 25 per cent over the situation a year ago. These women are struggling to provide food, shelter, and clothing for their children. They find prices are up while the number of jobs available is down. Can the minister explain to these people why they must accept the worst of both worlds, that is, higher prices and loss of jobs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the question asked by the hon. member is justified. People are wondering why is it that we are going through such difficult economic circumstances, and indeed we are.

An hon. Member: It is the Liberal government.

Mr. MacEachen: An hon. member opposite says it is the Liberal government. There is not a Liberal government in the United States—

An hon. Member: Thank God!

Mr. MacEachen: —which has the same unemployment rate that we have. The United States reached a 9 per cent unemployment rate at the time of its last economic statistics. We reached the 9 per cent rate today. It is not a Liberal government that prevails in France which has a higher unemployment rate than Canada. It is not a Liberal government that exists—

Mr. Mayer: There isn't a Liberal government in the world.

Mr. MacEachen: —in the United Kingdom where there is a higher unemployment rate.

Mr. Howie: There won't be a Liberal government here after the next election.

Mr. MacEachen: I am citing these facts to explain to the hon. member, who asked me a serious question, that we are going through these difficult circumstances because we have a world-wide recession which is affecting every industrialized country. It is unfortunate that is the case. Our duty is to do everything possible to bring Canada and the other countries out of this difficult recession. That is the main question which the hon. member has asked me and I have attempted to address it in a reasonable way.

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): My question is for the Minister of Finance. To repeat an earlier statement, he knows the unemployment statistics are at a 40-year high today. They would be tragic enough in themselves if they represented the end of a trend, or the last step. However, the fact is that our high figures today are simply one more step in a long march into a recessionary trend. The human tragedy and suffering resulting from these figures must be stopped. Today's official figures show that there are 1,228,000 unemployed Canadians. What is the minister's and the government's bottom line? How many people must be unemployed before the minister admits that there is a serious problem and, therefore, is prepared to bring in serious programs to combat the situation?

• (1225)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have recognized for some considerable time that there is a serious economic problem.

Mr. Riis: Bottom line!

Mr. MacEachen: There is a serious unemployment problem, and there is a serious inflation problem.

An hon. Member: What are you doing about it?

Mr. MacEachen: Again and again I have stated that the cause of high unemployment, not only in Canada, but in many other countries that I have mentioned earlier, is because we are experiencing such high inflation. The only job creation program which makes any sense in the long term is a program which addresses inflation, not only in Canada but in every other country affected at the present time by high unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Scattered applause.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—ADVICE TO GRADUATING STUDENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I could not agree more with the minister that we must have a program which fights inflation, but I suspect that the present monetary program is not doing that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: There is no indication of it.

My question to the Minister of Finance deals with a very specific group of the figures that we received this morning, that is, concerning the youth of Canada. The youth of Canada are experiencing an unemployment rate of 18.4 per cent, officially. In Quebec it is 23 per cent, and in British Columbia it is 20 per cent. In the next two weeks, hundreds of thousands of college and university students will be flooding the job market in an attempt to find employment so that they can continue their education this fall. They will have troubles, but the most important sector comprises the hundreds of thousands of young Canadians graduating from secondary school who will be seeking jobs for the first time and will not be able to find any jobs.

My question is directed to the minister and to his colleagues. When you go to speak at the graduation ceremonies across this country in the next eight weeks, Mr. Minister, what good advice will you give the young people of Canada, which will provide some hope for the future?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that I would attempt to reason with the students of the universities, as I attempt to reason with the Members of Parliament and with the country, and try to establish the causes of our economic difficulties. I will also try to explain how the policies that we have put in place will help to get us out of these economic difficulties, and how mistaken they would be if they fell for the rather false proposals coming from the New Democratic Party. I would also go on to tell them—

Mr. Deans: Which one?

Mr. MacEachen: —that for 1982-83—

Mr. Deans: Which one are you talking about?

Mr. MacEachen: —$1 billion will be put aside by Government of Canada to help the training needs of the young people of this country. As recently as March 11, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced additional training initiatives, bringing the total up to $1 billion for 1982-83. The government will support training initiatives for general industrial training, higher-skill institutional training, and will support the occupational growth and adjustment funds.

Mr. Deans: Where will they work after they finish their training?

Mr. MacEachen: These training funds and these training programs will be of particular benefit to young people under 24 years of age.

An hon. Member: Might as well teach them how to shoot pool.

Mr. MacEachen: So, that is the beginning of the speech that I will make when I am invited to address students this spring.

• (1230)

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR AND OF MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the minister's reaction reminds me of a doctor giving aspirin to someone in intensive care requiring serious surgery. No one is going to believe that particular statement, because the people who graduated last year do not have jobs.

Two years ago, Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance fobbed off his responsibilities to Governor Bouey, whose sole interest is monetary policy at the expense of bankrupt and unemployed Canadians. Is the minister now prepared to resume his responsibility of economic and financial leadership and ask for Governor Bouey's resignation? If not, is he prepared to give us all an Easter present today by submitting his resignation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if I thought Mr. Bouey's resignation or mine would improve the situation—

Miss MacDonald: It would.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: —I would be prepared to consider that situation.

Miss MacDonald: Lord Carrington did it on principle.

Mr. MacEachen: I know the hon. member's leader from time to time has extolled the virtues of the new socialist government in France, and I wonder if he would ask for the resignation of President Mitterrand or his finance minister when he next goes to the Socialist International, because there is now 9 per cent unemployment—

Mr. Fulton: Canada, Allan. C-a-n-a-d-a.

Mr. MacEachen: —in France, where it was 7.5 per cent before the socialists came into power. Would that justify calling for Mr. Mitterrand's resignation if it justifies calling for mine? Would he tell me that?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. McDermid: Get rid of all the socialists.

THE ECONOMY

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL INTRODUCE MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have only one question for the Minister of Finance, considering the disastrous situation we are in today. I think the minister should be held responsible for these record levels of unemployment in Canada—particularly coming from a province that has itself set a new record—in collusion with the seventy-four members opposite who supported the economic philosophy of the Minister of Finance. In the circumstances, is the Minister of Finance—who is reluctant to hand in his resignation—willing to introduce, at least for a province such as mine, any new measures or any new policy, or could the Minister of Finance find it in himself to tell the House whether he is convinced that he will be able to turn around the Canadian economy, although every action that has been taken is ample proof of a yet unheard of failure? Will he do the honourable thing and resign or at least introduce measures that will actually create jobs?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I stated earlier, every industrialized country in the world—

Mr. La Salle: Speak about my country.

Mr. MacEachen: —is struggling with this unemployment problem. I believe most Canadians understand that the economic situation we have in Canada is heavily influenced by world events. May I address the hon. member in the way that I addressed the hon. member for the NDP, and remind him that with a Conservative government in the United Kingdom unemployment is now 11.8 per cent in comparison with 9.9 per cent a year ago.

Mr. La Salle: We are in Canada; the problem is here.

Mr. MacEachen: They are part of the world, too. Madam Speaker, I am trying to remind hon. members and the country that these problems are deeper than the political interpretation that hon. members opposite give to every unemployment statistic. They come from sources deeper than political labels and political rhetoric.

REQUEST THAT NATIONAL CONFERENCE BE CONVENED

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance. As the minister still appears to be reluctant to resign, and appears to be empty of policies to deal with some of these crucial issues as evidenced by unemployment levels today, would he at least give consideration to holding a conference where provincial, labour and business leaders might meet with him and his colleagues in order to put fresh ideas to them as to how this nation can get back on to an even keel with people working and prosperity restored, as opposed to letting us drift more and more into this new Liberal depression?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked that we consider calling a conference to find fresh ideas. Presumably he is admitting that there are no fresh ideas in his party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —that he wishes to put forward.

Mr. Stevens: You won't take them.

Mr. MacEachen: However, putting that to one side for a moment, Madam Speaker, we had a first ministers' conference some time ago and the principal idea—it was not exactly fresh—which came from the provincial premiers was to take a very deep devaluation of the currency in order to reduce interest rates. That was not a very good idea, because the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre called it a policy of desperation. Therefore I am not sure if we had another meeting with the premiers that they would come up with the type of fresh ideas the hon. member has in mind, because the idea they brought forward the last time was rejected by the finance critic of his party.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEASURES TO ASSIST YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I, too, wish to address my question to the Minister of Finance who seems to be filling in for the Prime Minister and other ministers who could be responsible.

Miss MacDonald: And not doing a very good job of it.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I do not recall the sponsor of the National Energy Program to be Mitterrand, Schmidt, Thatcher or Reagan; the sponsor was Lalonde.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Oberle: It is the NEP which crippled the energy industry, and cost hundreds of thousands of jobs and a billion dollars of investment.

Has the minister made himself aware of the hidden horror story in today's unemployment statistics regarding youth? Over half the unemployed are under the age of 25. Government statistics tell us that in April 220,000 people will be leaving universities, and another 348,000 will be leaving our high schools in June, swelling the statistics to almost two million people.

What are the minister and his government doing in the short term to assist the resource industries which normally hire these students in the summer? Never mind his utopian long-term dream. What is he doing to bring in some programs in the short term to ease this crisis, instead of stubbornly insisting that all our problems are brought upon us by the rest of the world, when they are not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe the hon. member has raised a good point in asking what we are doing to assist young people, especially those who will be on the labour market this summer. I think he ought to be aware that the minister responsible recently announced additional funds totalling $20 million for the Summer Canada Program.

Mr. Huntington: What about Alsands?

Mr. MacEachen: Those additional funds will enable about 10,000 more young people to obtain summer jobs under the program, bringing the total number employed under Summer Canada to 53,000.

Mr. McDermid: It was 70,000 last year.

Mr. MacEachen: I would go on to add, Madam Speaker, that even though we are attempting to operate under a program of fiscal restraint, we have put aside $120 million for this summer in order to help young people get jobs.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The minister will know that in Bathurst in 1976 the Prime Minister stated that the Chatham air force base had "a permanent status in Canada's national defence plan" and that that base would not be closed as long as he was Prime Minister of the country. True to form, he then sanctioned its closure.

An interdepartmental committee was formed late last fall by the minister to make recommendations by the end of January, 1982, on the future of the area. On February 3 the minister reported that the committee was working very hard on the future of Chatham. On Tuesday of this week he stated that a new committee had been formed to look into the matter.

My question to the minister is this, and I would appreciate no mumble jumble about any meeting with the premier yesterday: what are the findings and recommendations of the old committee, why a new committee, and when is the new committee supposed to report?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would like to expand on the fact that it is indeed true that yesterday I met with the Premier of New Brunswick and we had a very interesting conversation. Some alternatives were suggested to us, and considered, as well as our alternatives suggested to us by our own department and also by the interdepartmental committee. The reason we formed a new committee, as the hon. member has mentioned, is that before consideration of all these alternatives that were suggested to us we do want some of our senior people to look particularly at this Miramichi area so that we can find solutions which will give the people of the Miramichi the alternative whereby they can keep the employment and the economic activity that they already have.

ASSURANCE SOUGHT ON FUTURE OF BASE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my supplementary obviously is to the Minister of National Defence. I wonder if the minister would make clear to the House that he has not announced that the base in Chatham will close, and that he has said that in fact the economic benefit and the level of employment will be retained, so that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal will stop spreading that falsehood.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the hon. member from Miramichi is absolutely right. The commitments are there, so the base will not be closed as an economic activity. We are finding some alternatives to make sure that all the area will benefit from the government's decision.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED TAX REBATE ON FARM FUEL

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. The minister will know that farm fuel costs are a major expense to farmers. He will also know that presently we are experiencing higher costs for farm fuel in Canada than are the Americans. We are in the process of having a further increase this year. At the same time the federal government is taking between 40 and 60 cents a gallon on that same fuel. I asked the minister back in January whether he would consider increasing the rebate. I would ask him again if he would consider it, and I do not mean a long time away but that he would give serious consideration immediately to increasing the rebate so that we can pay lower prices for farm fuel. That would do two things. It would help farmers and give them some hope to stay in business. That would help the job situation. It would also hold out some hope for lower food prices to help the consumer fight inflation.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I understand the interest of the hon. member. However, every step, every proposal he has made, will cost the treasury more and will add to the deficit. In those circumstances I do not know how hon. members can ask me to take an anti-inflationary position and at the same time ask me to add more and more to my expenditures or to the revenue losses.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON, N.S.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. While unemployment has reached record heights right across the country, people in hard-hit regions in Quebec and the Maritimes are in truly desperate straits. In the minister's own riding in Cape Breton, if we count those receiving unemployment payments as the measure of the level of unemployment, rather than the Statistics Canada figures, the unemployment rate jumps to 30 per cent. As the representative of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, at what level of unemployment will the minister recognize the need to change his economic policy and stimulate the economy to create jobs for all?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will submit my performance as a member of that constituency to my electors.

Mr. Keeper: And that submission will not be unopposed, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my supplementary to the Minister of Finance is this. Quebec unemployment has jumped to 14 per cent this month, up from 12 per cent last month and 11 per cent last year. Even this province-wide figure is unheard of. Yet in hard hit regions of Quebec it is even worse. For example, in the St. Laurent-Gaspé region—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. Today's questions are really inordinately long. The hon. member does not seem to be making any exception to that. I would urge hon. members, if they all want to get into question period, to be shorter.

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Unemployment in the St. Lawrence-Gaspé region has reached 25 per cent. Just how high will unemployment have to reach in these hard-hit regions before the minister recognizes that people are hurting and that they need economic policies that will create employment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I just want to say that I regard that really as a rhetorical question. The hon. member knows perfectly well that there is no one in this House who is not very deeply concerned about unemployment, that every unemployed person is a matter of concern. We do not have a certain figure that unemployment will reach in the future where we become concerned. We are concerned now, and we are doing everything within our power to assist, through the various programs that have been announced in the past month by various ministers. In housing, we have increased rental units financing that will create an additional 40,000 jobs. We have expanded the operation of Sections 37 and 38 of the unemployment insurance fund that will help probably an equivalent number of workers in the country to have jobs.

Miss MacDonald: 1,200,000 unemployed.

Mr. MacEachen: Through the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans we have established programs that will provide employment for, I think, about 25,000 to 40,000 jobs in that industry.

Miss MacDonald: This is the rhetoric.

Mr. MacEachen: We have increased our training programs up to a sum of $1 billion in order to meet the training needs of persons in Canada. We are doing everything possible within the means at our disposal to assist the unemployed people of Canada. We will continue to do that and we are not waiting for some figure in the future that will oblige us to take action. We are taking action now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NEGOTIATIONS OVER IMPORTS OF JAPANESE VEHICLES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. He should know that one third of all automotive assembly employees in Canada have either lost jobs or have been laid off. And he should know also that 40 per cent of Canadians working in the auto parts sector have lost their jobs as of today. Yet the minister has failed to curb the flow of Japanese imports into Canada; he has failed to negotiate a fair deal with Japan; he has failed to negotiate fair Canadian content regulations in offshore imports into Canada.

How much longer does the government intend to continue to negotiate, while jobs are being lost in Canada? How many more lost jobs will it take before the government takes the necessary unilateral action to stop the flow of Japanese imports into this country and save Japanese jobs?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member meant to say "save Canadian jobs", not Japanese jobs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: Madam Speaker, the hon. member will be the first member to know when we strike a very positive relationship with the Japanese concerning the automobile industry.

INDUSTRY

RATIONALIZATION OF RUBBER PRODUCTION FACILITIES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. For more than three years, the minister has been dealing with a plan to allow the rubber industry to rationalize production in Canada. I am particularly interested in a plan put forward by Firestone Canada that would allow them some limited product rationalization.

The minister promised in 1980 and 1981 that this matter would be resolved. Is the minister prepared to announce a date when he will approve Firestone's plan? Is he prepared to recognize the millions of dollars that this company has spent to bring this new production facility into being by stating exactly when he will announce the decision on Firestone's application? If he is not prepared to give that date, is he prepared to see several more thousands added to the more than 1 million unemployed?

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question. At the present time, the department is looking into the latest data on rubber production and should very shortly, through the minister, be able to clarify the situation and propose measures to satisfy the requirements of the entire industry.

THE ECONOMY

LAY-OFFS IN NORTHERN MANITOBA

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance whose economic policies have been an absolute disaster. His defence for this is other countries. In our country we have 24 million people and opportunities in every part of it—resource based, agricultural based—yet his defence is other countries. Because of the number of job lay-offs in northern Manitoba—Flin-Flon, for the first time in its history, INCO is looking at lay-offs in Thompson, Ruttan Lake has lay-offs—what guarantee can the minister give these Canadians that they will have a job by this summer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am not in any position to guarantee the exact job possibilities several months from now in any particular industry.

I would contradict the hon. member in his understanding of the situation. He is of the view that what happens in the rest of the world does not affect Canada. I travelled in the west last week, both to Calgary and Vancouver. I found that the people there very clearly understood that the ability of Canadian exporters to sell in markets abroad depended upon the recovery in other countries. There is no possibility of improving the situation of certain exporting industries until a recovery, for example, takes place in the United States. The hon. member, with all his devotion to Canada, which I share, must understand that we trade and sell abroad, and when markets weaken there they affect us and the jobs in our country.

PIPELINES

DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF NORMAN WELLS PROJECT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since he has held this portfolio for northern development, development in the north is at an all-time low. For example, the delays he has imposed on the Norman Wells oil field and pipeline project, have resulted in massive unemployment in my constituency in the north. Not only that, he is directly responsible for hundreds of steel workers being laid off in his own constituency in Hamilton because of this. I want to know when he will take the shackles off this project and let it proceed quickly, forthwith?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member must be either negligent or totally unaware of the majority sentiment in the north which does not agree with him at all. The fact of the matter is that the majority of northerners, certainly all the native leadership and the northwest territorial government applauded the decision when I approved Norman Wells and imposed a two-year delay. It was the first time that the companies, the Northwest Territorial government, the leadership of the natives and a majority of the native people who make up a majority of the population of the Northwest Territories ever came to an over-all consensus that this project should be approved in the way it was approved. I would suggest that the hon. member, who represents half of that territory, get in touch with the majority of his constituents.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY RESPECTING MEASURES TO ASSIST FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In his absence, I will put it to the minister's parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Manicouagan.

Since November 24 last year, import quotas on leather footwear have been removed, and according to representatives of the footwear industry in my riding whom I met yesterday, this has caused serious damage to the Canadian footwear industry. Also on November 24, the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board announced that a special budget of $17 million would be set aside for the footwear industry, a budget which is now proving to be inadequate—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a question? If he does, I would like him to ask it now.

Mr. Lapointe (Beauce): My question is whether the parliamentary secretary could ask the minister whether the CIRB or any other body will soon be announcing additional measures to help the Canadian footwear industry.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I wish to thank the hon. member for Beauce for his question. Yesterday, a number of cabinet ministers and myself met with Mr. Maheu, the president of the Shoe Manufacturers Association of Canada and the government officials responsible for analysing this policy. We listened with great interest to the industry's complaints, and we are already looking into what different or additional measures could be taken to help the manufacturers, while also serving the Canadian consumer.

RAILWAYS

CROWS NEST PASS RATE—OPPOSITION TO CHANGE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I am sure you are aware, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister have been saying that there is a consensus for changing the Crow in western Canada. I have before me a confidential briefing book which was given to the Prime Minister prior to his visit to Saskatchewan on March 19. I find in this confidential document that the Prime Minister's staff say that there is tremendous opposition to changing the Crow on the prairies. They say, among other things, that "the mood of the rural community in the province is generally one of anxiety and indignation". In light of that, will the Minister of Transport tell us why he is misleading the Canadian people by saying that there is a consensus for changing the Crow? Why is he so intent on tearing this country apart by putting one region against the other?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, consensus is always very difficult to assess.

Mr. Epp: Especially when it is not there.

Mr. Pepin: When you ask someone in western Canada, particularly a farmer, "Would you look forward to having the best transportation system in the world?", he says yes.

An hon. Member: That has nothing to do with the Crow.

Mr. Pepin: When you ask him, "Would you accept an increase in the Crow rate?", he hesitates, of course. I found that when you put the two questions together the answer is usually that, "Yes indeed; if I was assured that the railway transportation system for grain would be much better, allowing me to make savings and produce more, I would look at the possibility of paying more." This is really the gist of the matter.

The group led by Dr. Gilson is trying to put together a framework that would give the western farmers that assurance that the western rail transportation system would meet with the criteria and the expectations of the farmers. If the hon. member wants to wait for another two or three months, I am sure this will be done and then he will be satisfied that there is a consensus on bridging those two desirable matters, that is, the best transportation system and the payment of a slightly higher rate for the transportation of grain.

COMMISSIONING OF POLL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I wish the minister would respond to the question of why he is misleading the Canadian people. Why is he treating this issue so cynically?

In the same confidential document which I have with me, I have found out that the Government of Canada has taken a poll. The Liberal staff says this about the poll, "According to a poll conducted before the announcement . . . " and listen to this, " . . . westerners are misinformed on the basic economic and historical issues." Such arrogance! I ask the minister whether or not he can make that poll public, and tell us who paid for that poll. And finally can he assure us that he will not proceed to change the Crow rate in any way against the wishes of the people of western Canada, the people he is supposed to represent as Minister of Transport in this country?

• (1300)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, with respect to misinformation, it is generally agreed that the perception of many in the west about the Crow, its origin and its true meaning, is wrong. One of those who contributed to that was my hon. friend, for example, in a speech he made a week ago. If we were to believe what he said, we would believe the Crow was part of the British North America Act as part of the confederation system.

Be that as it may, with respect to the poll which has been conducted, the policy of the government is well known. The poll was conducted, obviously, to get more information on public opinion on that subject. We have that now, and it is used to devise the best possible approach to the resolution of the problem.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I listened to his answers earlier with respect to programs the government has brought forward including manpower training, work sharing, and a whole host of other programs. The fact of the matter—and it is becoming clear to the country—is that all these programs have thus far shown themselves to be inadequate in terms of a real attack on unemployment and other problems facing Canadians. There is, for instance, 11 per cent unemployment in eastern Ontario and western Quebec, and if we add Ottawa-Hull the 29,000 people represented by that figure becomes 56,000 people, so there is a failure.

The minister has just rejected the suggestion of a conference involving all the economic players, including business, labour, and government. He has rejected that. Given his rejection, and given the failure thus far of the government's programs, what new initiatives does the minister plan? The House of Commons and the people of Canada are tired of the fluff he has handed us during this question period.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I replied to a question from the hon. member for York-Peel in which he suggested a conference of premiers, trade unionists, and the private sector. I referred to the value there might be in a meeting with the premiers at this stage in view of the fact that we have so recently had a first ministers' conference.

However, I did not have the opportunity in my reply to refer to the additional fact that the government is presently undertaking a series of consultations with the private sector, not only to discuss the medium-term economic developments prospects for Canada but also to secure the views of the private sector on the current economic situation. I have had at least six consultations already in various parts of Canada, and I propose to continue that throughout the month of April. In that way I am fulfilling, at least in part, the suggestion made by the hon. member, namely, consultations with other players in the economy in the hope that out of the discussions fresh and better ideas might be brought to bear on the very difficult situation we have at the present time in the country.

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by hon. members on Wednesday, April 7, 1982, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday and the House recessing until April 19, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council might give the House some idea as to the order of business for April 19 and April 20.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, when we return to the House we will be dealing with energy-related bills, and the sequence of the first three would be Bill C-106, which is energy supplies; Bill C-104, which deals with petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership; and Bill C-107, which deals with motor vehicle fuel consumption standards. We would be dealing with those bills on the first two days after the House resumes.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKINNON—ALTERATIONS TO REMARKS OF MR. LAMONTAGNE IN COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. You may recall that a few days ago I attempted to raise a question of privilege concerning the report which has just been tabled and the evidence given supporting that report. I was somewhat encouraged when, in reply to my House leader, the House leader of the official opposition, on March 22 Your Honour said:

> The hon. member is quite right. If at a later time this grievance is reported to the House, then it can be discussed in the House.

The report is now in front of the House, and my understanding is that now is the time when I should present my question of privilege, a summation of which I sent to Your Honour on March 22. This question of privilege concerns the altering of minutes of a meeting of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

I draw to Your Honour's attention the Nineteenth Edition of Eskine May at page 141, where it states:

> It is a breach of privilege to present or cause to be presented to either House or to committees of either House forged, falsified or fabricated documents with intent to deceive such House or committees or to subscribe the names of other persons or fictitious names to documents intended to be presented to either House or committees of either House, or to be privy to, or cognizant of, such forgery or fraud.

Further on, and perhaps more closely related to this point, Erskine May says:

> —to falsify or improperly alter any records of, or documents presented to, either House or committees of either House will constitute a contempt. Standing Order No. 78 of the House of Commons specifically provides that no document received by the clerk of a select committee shall be withdrawn or altered without the knowledge and approval of the committee.

When giving evidence before the committee on February 25, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) gave evidence, clearly heard and factually reported in the electronic transcript, which was altered before the minutes were printed.

The first offence, which was of a minor nature, was when the minister introduced two separate members of his staff as both being one Mr. W. M. Beckett, director of arms control policy. The other gentleman was in fact Mr. Mathewson, the chief of policy planning. This was, as I said, a minor alteration, although his chief of policy planning might consider it surprising that he is unknown to the minister. However, the minister went on with his unusual naming, showing a much more serious lack of knowledge of who's who.

At one page of the transcript the minister referred to a Mr. Khrushchev suggesting a disarmament policy; and, incidentally, he used the present tense. In the minutes of the meeting "Mr. Khrushchev" has been deleted and "Mr. Brezhnev" substituted. To indicate that this was no mistake, Mr. Khrushchev, who has been dead for ten years, makes three more miraculous visitations in the minister's testimony in the transcript, only to turn into Mr. Brezhnev in the minutes.

• (1310)

Madam Speaker, it is no minor matter when our Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) is unaware of who is in charge of the mightiest conventional forces in the world; but we are not here to judge the minister's acuity. A lack of acuity is not an offence under the rules of Parliament. Changing the records of a committee is, and the records of that committee were changed, without the permission of the committee.

The members of the committee have been apprised by the chairman of the committee of what happened. We are now informed that a Mr. MacKay, an assistant to the minister, who appears to have a job somewhat analogous to the man with a wheelbarrow and shovel who follows the elephant in a circus-parade—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It took me some time to check into the notices that had been given to me to find out exactly what the hon. member was referring to. I have to point out to the hon. member that he is speaking of alterations to the minutes of a committee, which alterations, he is saying now, were discussed in the committee but not reported to the House.

At first I thought that perhaps the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) was referring to a report of the committee as tabled in the House, but as tabled in the House does not report on the alteration of the minutes of which the hon. member is now speaking. This question, therefore, obviously had to be dealt with within the committee. Since it is not before the House and has not been reported to the House, I am afraid I cannot deal with it.

The recourse which I think the hon. member followed, which was to bring up the question at the committee meeting, has been taken. I know he is not satisfied with the results of that recourse taken in committee, but I am afraid that since it is not before the House I cannot help the hon. member.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, there is no doubt about what has transpired. This has not been discussed in committee because since that time the committee has been meeting in camera to discuss the report. The alterations were made when the committee was meeting in public, before the report was written.

I was informed by Your Honour that I could not present this matter to the House until the report had been submitted to the House, which is the case now. If you rule that I have no question of privilege, I will accept your ruling and will consider that any member of a committee can change the records of that committee at any time without breaching the privilege of anyone.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member cannot assume that. As he is demonstrating by his further remarks, the Chair cannot deal with things that take place in committees. It is true that I told the hon. member that when the report was tabled he might bring up this question; it has been tabled and it does not refer to the matter which he is now discussing. It is not before the House, therefore, and that is why I cannot deal with it.

CHANGE IN FORM OF GOVERNMENT

Question No. 2,061—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has anyone in the Prime Minister's office or the Privy Council office conducted a study of the procedures that would be required to change the Canadian form of government to that of a republic and specifically to eliminate any connection with Great Britain or a constitutional monarchy and, if so, what are all the details including the names of the persons involved in the study?

2. Has the Prime Minister or his office caused to be investigated, methods of creating a presidential system in Canada and, if so (a) has a list of persons to be considered as the first president been drawn up and does this list include the name Pierre Elliott Trudeau (b) what title does any study recommend to be bestowed upon a head of state under such a system?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable.

SOVIET NEWS MEDIA PERSONNEL

Question No. 3,031—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names and addresses of all Soviet news media personnel accredited to work in Canada by the Department of External Affairs and, in each case, which news agency does he/she represent?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Foreign news media representatives in Canada are not accredited by the Department of External Affairs. Accreditation of the individual as representing a particular publication or broadcasting organization is by his or her employer in the country of origin. Canadian recognition of the status of Soviet news media representatives resident in Canada is accorded by the granting of an appropriate visa by the Department of Employment and Immigration. In October, 1977, the Canadian and Soviet governments agreed, in accordance with the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act, that each country would grant to resident media representatives of the other country (and to members of their families) multiple entry-exit visas valid for one year. The validity of the visa is subject to extension.

At present, there are four Soviet news media representatives resident in Canada. They are: Mr. N. I. Bragin, representing Pravda; Mr. R. L. Kurkin, representing the Soviet State Committee for Radio and TV; Mr. A. O. Melikyan, representing Tass; and Mr. A. V. Sandakov, representing Novosti. As explained in answer to question No. 3,030 tabled this day, the department does not make public the private addresses of individuals without the express permission of the person concerned. All resident Soviet media representatives live in Ottawa, however, and can be reached through the press office of the Soviet Embassy.

EDUCATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE PROGRAM AT MILLHAVEN

Question No. 3,456—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Are inmates at the Millhaven Institution near Kingston permitted to take part in educational correspondence programs from such institutes as the University of Waterloo and, if so, when they write a written examination at the end of each term, does a "proctor" supervise the writing of the examination at Millhaven on behalf of the educational institute?

2. Did government employees at Millhaven act as proctors at any time for such examinations given by any educational institutes and, if so, which employees and was the name of Mr. C.W. Greaves included?

3. Were there cases when Millhaven inmates were not attended by a proctor during the examination but where those appointed to act as such from the Millhaven staff absented themselves, while at the same time pocketing the fee for rendering such services, and, if so, what were all the details and the names of the persons involved?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. The educational program at Millhaven Institution is supplemented by correspondence programs from outside North American recognized educational agencies including the University of Waterloo, and all written examinations in these courses are supervised or proctored at all times.

2. All written examinations pertaining to outside educational agencies are "proctored" or "supervised" by the Supervisor of Academic Education, Mr. C. W. Greaves.

3. No examination to date has been unattended or unsupervised. The examinations are personally delivered to the inmate-candidate on the appointed date, time and place and in accordance with the instructions issued by the particular educational agency. Supervision is maintained throughout the examination and at the end of the three-hour writing or the surrendering of the paper by the candidate, whichever comes first, papers are collected, sealed and mailed to their destination.

With respect to fees for proctoring examinations, none of the educational agencies, with the exception of the University of Waterloo, pays any fees. The University of Waterloo pays $23 per half day for supervising examinations but most of its examinations must be written on a Saturday since the university requires its examinations be written sometime during the weekend (Friday evening to Monday morning) and be mailed first thing Monday morning. Mr. Greaves does not request overtime compensation or travel allowance for his proctoring attendance on such occasions. The examinations are mailed to his home.

INSTALLATION OF DRYDOCK AT HALIFAX

Question No. 3,493—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Did the government accept a tender by the German company GHH-MAN for the installation of the Panamax drydock in Halifax and, if not, for what reason?

2. Would the drydock purchase from the German company have been completed at a price that would have saved Canadian taxpayers at least $16 million?

3. Did the government engage Marine Industries of Sorel-Tracy, Quebec, to build the drydock and, if so, for what reason?

4. Does the company have the experience and facilities to build the drydock in one piece and to transport the dock to Halifax?

5. Did the government refuse to accept industrial benefits offered by GHH-MAN Canada, Inc. that would have made possible the purchase from Walbar Machine Products of Canada, Ltd. of turbine and compressor blades and, if so, for what reason?

6. Did the government reject the offer by GHH-MAN to build a diesel engine plant in Nova Scotia as part of its industrial offset and, if so, for what reason?

7. Did the government make arrangements in its contract with Marine Industries to protect the government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada from any overrun costs of Marine Industries and from any bad workmanship and bad building which might be caused by Marine Industries' lack of experience in building Panamax drydocks and, if so, what were the arrangements?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

1. No, because the GHH-MAN tender was not recommended by the province of Nova Scotia (a requirement of the federal-provincial agreement) for approval by the federal minister after detailed evaluation by consultants.

2. No.

3. No, the federal government approved a province of Nova Scotia request to enter into a contract with Marine Industries Ltd. of Sorel-Tracy, Quebec, to build the floating drydock.

4. No, the specifications approved by the owner, province of Nova Scotia, and the intended operator, Halifax Industries Ltd., stated a preference for a sectional pontoon type of floating drydock similar to that provided, with federal assistance, on the west coast. Individual pontoons can be detached and docked inside the remaining structure for maintenance. This is not feasible with one piece construction.

5. No, the tender documents required that non-Canadian content over $10 million be offset with acceptable purchases in Canada in order to remain eligible for the contract. GHH-MAN complied with this requirement and the evaluation of bids took into account the fact that their offer was accompanied by this offset business in Canada.

6. No. An offer by GHH-MAN to build a diesel engine plant in Nova Scotia was not included in the offset purchase package offered for the floating drydock contract.

7. Not applicable. The contract is between the province of Nova Scotia and Marine Industries Limited. However, the Government of Canada is satisfied that qualified and experienced inspectors are on the site. These include Lloyd's Register of Shipping surveyors who will be certifying the floating drydock upon completion. Marine Industries Limited have launched three to four ships per year of the last eight years and although they have never built a floating drydock, this construction is considered simpler than shipbuilding.

AMOUNTS SPENT FOR SERVICES OF VICKERS AND BENSON

Question No. 3,500—Mr. Beatty:

1. Since March 1980, by month, what amount was spent by the (a) government (b) Canadian Unity Information Office for goods or services provided by the advertising firm of Vickers and Benson?

2. Does Mr. Patrick McDougall carry out responsibilities for the Canadian Unity Information Office and, if so (a) what are they (b) on what date did he join and until what date is he expected to work for the office (c) was he hired through Interchange Canada (d) is he expected to perform work for Vickers and Benson or any of its associated companies when he leaves the office?

3. Have arrangements been made to avoid any possible conflict of interest between Mr. McDougall's work for the government and his responsibilities in the private sector and, if so, what were such arrangements?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Justice and Supply and Services as follows:

1. (a) Since March 1980, by month, the values of payments made to Vickers and Benson by the Department of Supply and Services on behalf of customers departments are as follows:

1980		1981
March	None	January	$1,557,169
April	None	February	$ 276,159
May	None	March	$ 506,839
June	$2,111,471	April	$ 292,145
July	None	May	$ 349,686
August	$ 116,975	June	$ 315,627
September	$1,447,552	July	$ 603,645
October	$ 115,011	August	$ 290,332
November	$ 272,517	September	$ 148,434
December	$ 76,138	October	$ 193,581
		November	$ 106,321

(b)

1980		1981
April	None	January	$ 53,495
May	None	February	$ 27,885
June	None	March	$194,152
July	None	April	$167,431
August	None	May	$181,514
September	$153,788	June	None
October	$ 58,580	July	$ 44,970
November	$ 61,754	August	$ 650
December	$ 56,963	September	None
		October	$645,208
		November	$ 30,116
		December	$ 29,609

Note: Payments in part 1(b) not included in part 1(a).

2. Yes. (a) Mr. McDougall has assumed the position of Director General, Professional and Information Services. He provides highly specialized expertise in communications strategic planning, research, and marketing including different phases of media communications such as television, radio, print and expositions.

(b) The period of employment is June 22, 1981 to June 22, 1983.

(c) Mr. McDougall was hired through Interchange Canada.

(d) A condition of the Interchange Agreement stipulates that "as required by the regulations governing the Interchange Canada program, it is agreed that Mr. McDougall will return to VOBCO Management Inc. upon termination of the assignment and that no offer of continuing employment will be made to Mr. McDougall by the Canadian Unity Information Office."

3. No specific arrangements were made, since neither the position held by Mr. McDougall nor any other position at the CUIO is involved in the allocation of advertising contracts. That task is undertaken by the Advertising Management Group which reports directly to the chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Communications, a fact that is public knowledge.

SOVIET ESPIONAGE OPERATIONS IN CANADA

Question No. 3,574—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the government aware that the first department of the KGB's First Chief Directorate runs Soviet espionage operations in Canada and, if so (a) for how long has this been known to the government (b) how many Soviet agents are estimated to operate under this direction (c) is the government taking any action and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): (a) to (c). It is not in the public interest to answer this question.

[English]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 3,030 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 3,030 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ACCREDITED JOURNALISTS FROM U.S.S.R.

Question No. 3,030—Mr. Cossitt:

Are accredited journalists from the U.S.S.R. required by the Department of External Affairs to request permission before leaving the national capital area and, if so (a) what are all the details of the procedure involved (b) what is the name and address of each journalist who applied for such permission for as far back as records exist and, in each case (i) which news agency did he/she represent (ii) which places did he/she visit and for what purpose?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its chronic failure to implement policies to support the development of a sound industrial sector for Canada, and for the resulting lay-off crisis in every sector of the economy and every region of the country, which has had particularly severe consequences for the auto industry, the resource industry, the energy projects and the producers of consumer goods and appliances.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the debate today, particularly when the statistics published this morning by Statistics Canada indicate that we have an unemployment rate which is higher than it has been at any time in recent memory and, indeed, higher than it has been since soon after World War II.

An article in The Globe and Mail on April 7, 1982, which reported on an interview with Governor Gerald Bouey of the Bank of Canada as follows:

"I am sometimes asked how high does the rate of unemployment have to go, how many foreclosures have to occur, before the bank will give up its policy of monetary restraint," he told a Canadian Club audience of businessmen sprinkled with top civil servants.

"Since surrendering to inflation is no answer to our problem, one might better ask how long will it take Canadians to respond realistically, to take the financial discipline our situation requires—"

How long will it take Canadians to recognize the importance of financial discipline, Mr. Speaker? I do not know how Governor Bouey sees the world. He may see it differently if he is talking to people who make substantial sums of money and top civil servants who also make substantial sums of money. When he talks about telling Canadians that they should be more realistic and impose upon themselves a financial discipline, I am interested to know—and the report did not cover this—which Canadians he is talking about. Where do they live? Who are they?

Surely he cannot be referring to the 1,229,000 on record as being unemployed. They are obviously already exercising financial discipline. Perhaps he meant the three million Canadians who live below the Statistics Canada poverty line—that's 12 per cent of our population. I do not think he meant them either.

Nor do I think he meant the 42 per cent of high school graduates who are looking for work and cannot find it. They are obviously exercising some financial discipline.

Maybe he meant the part-time workers in Canada who need and are looking for full-time jobs and cannot find them. There are 45,000 of them in Toronto alone. Maybe he meant that they should exercise financial discipline.

Perhaps he is talking about the quarter of a million unemployed employables that the Assistant Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare talked about two days ago. They are the "unemployed employables". I am sure he did not mean they should exercise financial discipline.

Maybe he meant the 500 people laid off yesterday by Eaton's in Toronto. Maybe he meant the 6,200 people laid off in the shoe industry. Perhaps he meant the 1,500 International Harvester workers who will be laid off by May. Perhaps he meant the third of the industrial work force in the automotive industry. Perhaps he meant that those people should be exercising financial discipline.

Perhaps he meant that the 600,000 senior citizens who are living below the Statistics Canada poverty line should be exercising financial discipline. Perhaps he meant the farmers in the country who will have 15 per cent less income. Who was he talking about? It cannot be all of those people; it cannot be any of those people.

The fact of the matter is that when it comes to the financial discipline index, people are joining in the thousands every day. They may not be the top public servants of whom he spoke the other day. It might be helpful to everyone if Governor Bouey, and those he serves on the government side, made clear from whom they want financial discipline. Why are all these people being forced, while others are not, into such financial discipline?

The formulation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is clear and simple. He said that the problem is inflation and that the answer is unemployment. He said that if we use unemployment as the solution to inflation, we will get recovery. That is the position of the government. No matter who is hurt, the government members say that inflation is the problem, unemployment is the solution, and that is how we get recovery.

All government members may not take this position. A number of ministers of the Crown like to ingratiate themselves to any audience. They are willing to say whatever needs to be said in order to gain a friendly crowd. That is particularly the case with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). I should like to read carefully the comments made by the minister in Paris, France, because I do not think the Minister of Finance had an opportunity to review what he said outside the country when he wished to cut a finer figure in a foreign land. On page 2 of his release he said this:

> It is often argued by our colleague ministers of finance that restrictive monetary and fiscal policies are necessary to dampen inflation and that reduced inflation will somehow miraculously lead to future growth.

Those comments sound as if they came right out of the mouth of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Employment and Immigration continued:

> But no mechanism by which future growth will be assured is articulated. We are asked to take it on faith that growth will follow. However, we all know, and it is well accepted by all, regardless of political and economic persuasions, that we can have non-inflationary growth only if we augment the capacity of our economies to produce. This means increased investment in plant and equipment—investment which can be encouraged by lower real rates of interest.

This is exactly contrary to the position taken by the Minister of Finance day after day in the House.

The sense of unreality of the Minister of Employment and Immigration is such that he holds a press conference the day before the worst record of unemployment in recent memory, certainly since World War II, is released. He knows, just as night follows day, that those statistics will come out; but every time he holds a press conference the day before, he shoves out some numbers which have no reality on the street and does not show up in the House for questioning the next day.

I should like to talk about the Minister of Employment and Immigration a little longer, because he is the one who has taken on the public relations role for cabinet. The cabinet has nothing to say to ease the economic pain of Canadians, but it embarked upon a fairly energetic public relations program. Of course, the Minister of Employment and Immigration stars in that role. After the minister's meeting yesterday with recipients of the work sharing program, after meeting with his rented audience, as reported in The Globe and Mail, he said that he does not understand why business and labour do not like work-sharing. He said that they were "almost Pavlovian". I do not know what he meant by that, but he went on to say that it was "a kind of psychosis on the part of Canadians to get down on everything". He said that those who have critical comments about work sharing suffer from this phychosis. He is so enamoured of the program that he wants to make it a permanent program to deal with unemployment. He has received an enormous amount of publicity on the program.

It is worthwhile mentioning that the total program covers almost 14,000 people, in relation to an unemployment problem which is in the order of 1.3 million. Also it is worth while looking at the people who have opposed the work-sharing program and why they did so. First, traditionally the work sharing program was opposed by the advisory council to the unemployment insurance fund and by officials within the minister's department. Also it was opposed by the Canadian Labour Congress, the president of CLC and Mr. Clifford Pilkey, president of the Ontario Federation of Labour. It has been described as "sharing the misery". It was opposed by Mr. Stan Roberts when he spoke for the business community as president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. It was rejected by most countries in the western world. For example, in Germany, where they have had the program for some time, they are desperate to get out of most of it if they can. There are good reasons for the opposition.

Let me tell the House what the minister has to sell, what he keeps flogging. Everyone would rather have half a job than no job at all; every company would like to stay alive rather than have to go under. The minister is on solid ground when he says that the people who get it like it. That is for sure, because the alternative is nothing for the worker and bankruptcy for the company. This is why they like it, but there are problems with work sharing. This is why even those who have said "go", have said it cautiously.

The program should only be temporary, if we have it at all. It begins to institutionalize work sharing so that it becomes part of the way in which people see the economy. People become accustomed to the idea that having half a job is about what they can expect. It creates a distortion for the unemployment insurance fund, the purpose of which is to provide a financial bridge when people go from one job to another. It is a clear misuse of the original intention of the fund.

Also it is unfair to those who cannot collect unemployment insurance. There have been many debates in the House concerning the fact that people have to qualify for unemployment insurance. If one happens to be one of the lucky 14,000 who will obtain the benefits of the program for a short time, it is fine; but if one is a labourer and not one of the 14,000, one will not receive it. You could work three days a week and not get unemployment insurance because you have to abide by the waiting period. It is not fair to all, and being fair is the purpose of the fund. Indeed, the fund is not the government's fund; the money comes from workers and from businesses. The program not only distorts the fund, it not only gets people used to the idea that they are only entitled to half a job, but it distorts the government's real task. It masks and creates an illusion around the real task of producing an environment for investment so that full-time, long-term jobs can be created. That is the final problem.

The minister, whenever he makes an announcement, should be reminded, and he should remind himself, that all he is doing is putting up a stop-gap solution for people who cannot help themselves. They get a half a job for three or six months and that is all. Basically the minister is saying that that is the way we are going to deal with unemployment in this country. The minister is making a political career out of the misery of people who are caught in a bind. It is one thing to have to do it, but a little more humility on his part would be more in keeping.

The work-sharing program is an example of what the government is doing. It is an example of the government saying to itself and to the Canadian people: "We have nothing to offer. Basically the problem is inflation. We cannot do much about it. We will have to wait until the Americans do something and maybe we will get involved with the Americans." That has been the program and the policy of this government. The recovery which the minister keeps talking about, whenever we get rid of inflation, is not something that will happen automatically. If we are to have a recovery, we have to be prepared for it. The preparation has to be done now, but the government is not preparing. That is why our motion condemns the government.

First, we condemn this government because it brought in a budget that took the guts out of the investment system in this country, the system which creates jobs. We condemn the government because it continues to refuse either to withdraw the budget or to change it. The government has received representation after representation from ordinary Canadians from one end of the country to another, yet it will not change the budget. The government stands in the face of need on an ideology that is mystifying to anybody who hears it. That is our first reason for condemning this government with respect to lack of jobs and employment opportunities in this country.

The second reason we condemn this government is because if we are ever going to have a recovery and if we are going to prepare for it, some sense of co-operation between labour, management and government has to take place. Rather than pursue that course, a course which Canadian governments of one sort or another have had to pursue for 150 years, this government chooses the reverse. Not only does it choose to try to separate, divide and take advantage of the splits between labour and management, but it even takes advantage of splits in the labour movement to try and split the labour movement itself.

In this connection I have an example to give. Three and a half years ago, the Canadian Labour Congress and the Business Council on National Unity, representing the business community, made a proposal initially, I believe, to the then minister of labour and the then minister of employment and immigration. Things went along fairly well for about a year. In the last two years nothing but stalling has taken place. If hon. members speak to representatives of the Business Council on National Unity and representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress, they will learn that the program is being stalled by this government. What is important about that is not specifically the program itself, which would monitor the need for specific kinds of skills to be developed in Canada and so create an environment for the production of programs for the learning of those skills—not an unimportant matter—but the opportunity it provides for business and labour to come together. They do not come together very often or very easily, but they did decide to come together on employment need. This government has been diddling them for two years and has paid no attention to them. The situation will get worse because, in the end, both the Canadian Labour Congress and the Business Council on National Unity have found out what the government is up to. They do not trust the government any more.

Third, we condemn the government for the lack of job opportunities and for high unemployment. While the federal government is trying to split labour, trying to split labour from management and both from government, it has also done this before on issues involving the federal government and the provinces of Canada. The government has tried to pick off the provinces one by one and divide them. That is true with respect to training programs. The Minister of Employment and Immigration brought forward a training program. He announced it first. The day before he announced it he took aim at the provinces. He blamed the provinces for everything. He therefore ensured that the training program which is so badly needed in this country would have to be discussed in an atmosphere of animosity and not in an atmosphere of co-operation. If there is ever going to be any kind of a training program or an industrial economic strategy in this country, it must be brought about in an atmosphere of co-operation. This government finds that the only politics it knows is to divide. This government is bereft of solutions. The only thing it knows how to do is to make sure there is division, which enables it to pick off the parts one by one.

Finally, we condemn this government because it has had absolutely no sense of urgency nor has it given any sense of purpose to Canadians during the time it has been in office. This morning I thought about a book written by Jean Vanier, the son of the late Governor General of Canada. The book is entitled "Community and Growth". It is a book that I would recommend to hon. members on the other side. In his book, Mr. Vanier made the point that to become a community there must be concern for everyone in it and Canada would only become a community when there is concern for all of the people in it. Mr. Vanier writes that a community becomes one when all the members of that community and the government have a sense of urgency. He goes on:

> There are too many people in the world who have no hope. There are too many cries which go unheard. There are too many people dying in loneliness.

What grates most people is the lost sense of purpose and the lost sense of urgency, as though there were nothing else left to do in this country except wait around for the Americans to deliver what the Liberals cannot. Maybe the Liberals should be reminded that there are forests and lakes to rejuvenate; there are houses to construct; there is land to cultivate; there are roads to pave; there are railroads to build; there are resources to explore; there is steel to forge; there are pipelines to build; there is land to develop; there are towns to expand; there is technology to discover; there are ships to construct; there are factories to remodel; there are bridges to erect; and our vast northern wilderness is yet to be tapped. And the most previous thing which this country has is its water resources, which await development. None of those things is being done. They are not being done because we have a government that is stuck with its own ideology, one which it is unwilling to discard even in the face of the pain it is causing Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the Conservative Party in condemning the government for the foolishness we have been witnessing in this country for the better part of the last two years.

I have wondered a lot about unemployment for at least the last half dozen years, watching as industries close in various parts of the province of Ontario initially, and then when I came here to Ottawa watching as those closings spread from Ontario right across the country. There can be no more difficult time in people's lives than when they lose their job. I do not mean simply being laid off. Many of us have been laid off for short periods of time because of a downturn in the industry we work in. I am talking about the hardship and heartache which is experienced and felt by individuals and their families when a plant closes its doors for the last time.

As I look at many of the people who come into my constituency office to speak with me, I can imagine the upset they feel when, having spent five, ten, in some cases 15 or 20 years working for a particular industry, they find that all of that effort and involvement is for naught. Their industry is no longer required in this grand scheme of things designed by that government in concert with many other governments around the world. Individuals give of their very best, work diligently and make every conceivable effort to produce the things they were asked to produce to the very best of their ability, only to be faced through no fault of their own with the prospect that not only can they no longer return to work in that plant, but as they go to Manpower offices and visit other plants they discover they are not an isolated case. They discover they are but one of tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of people in the same situation.

Then, Mr. Speaker, they find that if they are to survive they must consider moving, to another community nearby if they are lucky, or somewhere else in their province if they are less fortunate, or perhaps to some other part of the country if they have a marketable skill. Some even have to consider uprooting their families and moving away from Canada altogether in order to earn a living and provide for their families. To do that willingly is one thing, although it is a difficult decision at any time; but to have to do it at a time when you have been rendered literally destitute and you had no plans to do so is mind destroying, to say the least.

I put to the government and the minister—one of only two government members here at the moment—that the government has a responsibility for what has happened in this country. The government cannot simply say, as it tends to want to say, that what has happened in Canada has happened all over the world and there is nothing it can do about it; that it is really the fault of the United States because most of our markets are there; or we are in the midst of a worldwide recession and therefore all Canadians must be willing to accept that the recession will out of necessity deprive Canadian workers and their families of a fair opportunity to earn a living.

I reject that because I happen to believe today, as I have believed for years, that it is possible to create in Canada job opportunities by building those things Canadians need. I believe it is possible to use the resources we have in such abundance not only to build the things that Canadians need, but to provide at reasonable cost those same products to people in other parts of the world. I think the reason we are faced with these problems is not because of an inability of Canadians to do the job or generate the need; it has to do with the inability of the government to separate out those things required for domestic consumption from those things influenced directly by international affairs.

I went back, Mr. Speaker, and thought of the hope we had of only two years ago. I looked at the Speech from the Throne and read some of the suggestions the government was making through the Governor General at the time regarding what Canadians had the right to expect from their government. The speech said:

> Canadians expect much of this Parliament.

> —to promote a national development policy that will provide jobs, stimulate growth, build upon regional strengths, and increase Canadian ownership and control of our economy;

I ask you, where are those initiatives today when they are most needed? Where are those initiatives Canadians were led to believe they could expect when we find close to two million people looking for work? Where are these initiatives to promote and develop a national policy to provide jobs, stimulate growth, and help build regional strengths?

The throne speech went on to say in its nice little way "my government", that being the government of the Governor General because it is certainly not my government, I will have you know, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Not the government of the people.

Mr. Deans: It goes on to say:

> . . . my government will be guided by the two main principles at the core of the program my ministers placed before the people.
> The first is that Canadians will accept sacrifice to meet the economic challenges of the 1980s, but they will not accept injustice.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that there can be no greater injustice than that of a man or woman, who want to work but cannot find a job, being asked to shoulder the burden of the economic madness being pursued by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and his cohort, the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Is it not an injustice that people should lose their home because they cannot find a job in a land of plenty? Is it not an injustice that people who have worked all their life should find that, because of this government's policies, they are unable to continue to work in order to earn a living and provide for their families?

• (1350)

Is it not an injustice when a select group within society comprising those two million unemployed is to be asked to shoulder the burden while so many others at the upper end of the scale, such as the banks and the financial institutions, are able to reap such monumental rewards as the result of this government's economic policies?

The government went on to state that Canadians recognize the need to live within their national means, and that they understand the state cannot meet every demand in so doing. I want to say to Your Honour, who knows this fact as well as anyone, that there is no Canadian who expects the state to meet every demand. All that Canadians are asking for is a fair chance to put their labour on the line, a fair chance to go to work, to earn a living and to produce the kinds of products that their friends and neighbours need. There are few, if any, Canadians who are asking that the state look after them daily. There are few Canadians who are suggesting for one moment that they would rather sit at home and do nothing than to go work. Even to suggest that that might be in the minds of a significant number of Canadians is to do the people of Canada an injustice.

Then, of course, the throne speech went on to state that one of the essential objectives of this government is to put more people to work. I say to Your Honour, to hon. members of the House of Commons who are listening here and to anyone else who happens to turn on the television and see this debate by accident, that if that were one of the objectives of the government in April of 1980, then it has failed. It has not only failed, but it has failed miserably in the pursuit of that objective. It has failed, not because of the actions of others, but because of the pursuit of its own economic policy of high interest rates which has greatly destroyed the manufacturing sector in this country.

There is a hardly a community in any part of the country, no matter where one goes in any province from coast to coast, from north to south, in which one will not find people who are unemployed as a result of the high interest rate policy being pursued by this government, and by the governor of the Bank of Canada on behalf of this government. The government had the effrontery to suggest on April 14, 1980, that one of the essential objectives of the government was to put more people to work. However, it then systematically set about to make it impossible for those self-same people to find employment, to make it virtually impossible for those self-same people not only to find employment, but keep the employment they already had. For the government to do this was to make a mockery of the direction and the suggestion that this government brought forward in April of 1980.

The government went on to state that it would establish a national trading corporation. Well, so much for that commitment! We know that the government thinks of that now.

Mr. Thacker: It's just a shame you guys don't put it back in, though, isn't it?

Mr. Deans: Then, of course, more recently we find the government's statement that when we come out of this period of our economic cycle, we will find ourselves crowded out on the world markets by products from countries which have been able to control their costs. For some reason or another, the Minister of Finance seems to think that high interest rates and high rates of inflation do not go hand-in-hand. I know that Your Honour understands what I say, but for the benefit of the other hon. members I want to say that there can be no question in anyone's mind that the higher the interest rate charges which are levied against the cost of any product—whether it be during its manufacture, whether it be during the time that it is carried in inventory, or whether it be after the purchase while it is being paid for on the never-never plan of credit cards or other types of credit—the higher the cost of the product.

Mr. Thacker: That is right.

Mr. Deans: There can surely be no doubt left in the mind of the Minister of Finance that to continue to escalate interest rates can only have a detrimental effect in the battle against inflation. It can only have a detrimental effect! It is such a substantial part of the cost of every single product, of every single commodity, that it matters not whether one is considering the farmers, the small businessmen, the medium-sized manufacturers in this country, or whether one is considering the auto industry, the farm implements industry or the housing industry. In every single sector, in every single part of this land, high interest rates contribute more significantly to the over-all cost of the product than any other single factor when one takes into account the fact that those interest rates are added in on a variety of different levels and are compounded at every stage.

Therefore, it stretches one's incredulity to hear the minister suggest that somehow or other one can have high interest rates, better productivity and lower costs. It is impossible for any reasonable, thinking individual to come to that conclusion. I find it difficult to believe that the Minister of Finance believes for one moment that it is possible to have a high interest rate policy of the type that he is pursuing while bringing down the cost of all the necessities of life. Surely, common sense tells us that if it costs less for interest, then it costs less for the product. By reducing the interest rate, we can then, of course, reduce the over-all price of whatever it is that we must buy in order to survive.

Your Honour sees the frustration of this whole matter. I do not doubt for a moment, and I feel confident that it is true, that every single member of the House of Commons would like to see the unemployment rate come down, the interest rates come down and reducing inflation levels. They would like to see families once again able to go out into the marketplace to purchase homes at prices they can afford, with payment schedules which would enable them to pay off their debts in their lifetime. Most, if not all, hon. members would like to see the country in a position where the automobile industry, manufacturing a good product, would be able to make a recovery.

I say to Your Honour in closing, since I have obviously come to the end of my allotted time, that the biggest problem confronting this government is its own inability to understand the needs of the people of the country and to institute the kinds of policies which would bring about what we are all striving for—a place where people come first. The government be dammed with its theories! Let us put people first for a change!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the last hon. member to speak would permit a brief question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The allotted time of the last hon. member has expired. This can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the last hon. member gave a very fine speech as to—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: —how the government is bereft of any ideas concerning how to cope with this situation and the dramatic effects of high interest rates. I am sure he realizes that during the brief Clark administration, interest rates were 2.5 per cent below American rates, because the one thing that this party understands is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not give the hon. member permission to make a speech at this point. If he wants to ask a question, he should ask his question.

Mr. Thacker: My question is: Which party passed the motion that put those mental midgets in power across the way?

An hon. Member: Don't even answer that!

Mr. Deans: I find that to be a very interesting question. The question, I suppose, is that when one is measuring mental midgets, one must find some new measurement which would measure the mental midgetry of a government which would allow itself to be defeated after only nine months in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening very attentively to the comments made by the member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

After listening to these two speeches, I must admit I am somewhat perplexed, especially since we are extremely lucky in our parliamentary system to have what are known as opposition days. We on the government side of the House are still hoping against hope that some day, the members opposite will have the courage of their convictions as well as the intelligence to produce solutions to the questions they are raising. I hoped this would happen this morning, especially considering the personalities of the two members who spoke earlier.

As I said before, I listened attentively to the member for Rosedale who deployed a vast amount of rhetoric in an attempt to prove that the government was doing nothing about the unemployment problem in Canada, that we were obsessed with inflation and that our only solution was unemployment. Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is unworthy of any member who has given the slightest thought to the economic situation to profer such falsehoods. In trying to recall what the member for Rosedale said, all I can remember is an enormous void and comments that were partisan and lacked any consideration for the real problems confronting Canadians in these difficult times.

As for the member for Hamilton Mountain, he made an excellent speech which reflected a real interest in, and awareness of, the personal problems caused by the economic situation. I agree when he says we want all Canadians to be able to have access to employment and we do not want Canadians to worry each month about meeting their payments, and we would like to see all industrial sectors operating at full capacity, so as to provide more and more jobs in the Canadian economy.

However, the member for Hamilton Mountain needed a scapegoat, and so he said that interest rates were at the bottom of all our ills.

Mr. Speaker, it is sad that once again, despite this very important mechanism in Parliament, namely, opposition days, there is a void, because our colleagues opposite have either forgotten or lacked the necessary courage to say what they would do and what they would like the government to do.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, we were not waiting for this to happen, and we have been trying to find ways of solving these very complex economic problems. On this side of the House, we are aware that our economy is not entirely isolated from the effects of the world economic situation, that we have trading partners with whom we must do business, and we are also aware of a very simple principle of economics, namely that as soon as demand for our products drops, there will be a direct impact on industrial activity in a number of regions in Canada. Unfortunately, the impact is often quite sudden.

Mr. Speaker, what we are trying to do is to create conditions that will make it possible to turn around the Canadian economy, and we are doing so in close collaboration with our major foreign trading partners.

What programs have we developed to promote such conditions? First of all, I would like to remind the House that the government has set aside $365 million for the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program or ILAP. As everyone knows, this amount will be used to promote industrial reorganization, manpower training and labour mobility. It is specifically designed for those industrial sectors most affected by technological change or international competition. We have already designated 10 Canadian communities and identified two industries under this program. For the information of the House, these 10 communities are Tracy-Sorel, Port Cartier, Sept-Îles, Schefferville, Asbestos in the Eastern Townships, all in Quebec, Sydney in Nova Scotia, Windsor, Brantford, Chatham and Kitchener in Ontario, and McAdam in New Brunswick. The two industries specifically identified under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program are the automotive parts and home appliance industries. As concerns home appliances, hon. members will be aware that, in the last three weeks, the designation of this industrial sector under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program has enabled Inglis to take over Admiral, thus consolidating and creating 960 jobs in communities which greatly needed them, including one with which we are very familiar in Quebec, the community of Montmagny.

In addition to this $65 million program now under way, the government has announced the creation of a new adjustment program to ensure the viability and competitivity of the Canadian textile and clothing industries. When we announced this policy and the creation of the CIRB, or Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, we allocated an operating budget of $250 million to the CIRB to provide assistance to the textile and clothing industries and to the communities where they are most concentrated and which now have a high rate of unemployment because of industrial reorganization. We later announced that $17 million would be added to this $250 million envelope for plant modernization, training and manpower mobility in the footwear and tanning industry. Mr. Speaker, we are trying to gear our capacity for action to those sectors and communities which are most affected, in order to solve the specific problems mentioned by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). As this period of economic difficulty affects some sectors more directly than others, we want to direct our action towards those sectors.

[English]

In respect of automotive products, the government has designated so far Windsor, Chatham and Brantford under the ILAC program, the one I explained earlier. Furthermore, the government has announced a special $25 million fund for independent auto parts producers. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we have negotiated agreements with Chrysler, Ford, Kaydee, Volkswagen, leading to expected new direct investments of over $1 billion and creating over 15,000 direct jobs in these companies.

• (1410)

We also sponsor all through the year 25 to 30 major trade fairs and missions and provide export opportunities to individual Canadian firms. In addition to that, some $50 million in loan guarantees and recoverage contributions have been made available to auto parts companies over the past two years through the enterprise development program and the defence industry productivity program. Finally, purchases under the automotive components remission orders now run at about $115 million a year.

The extent of federal activity is unprecedented. It represents a very substantial effort by the federal government to ensure that the environment within which the industry operates is conducive to sound business decisions which will result in increased investment, production and exports and lead to increased employment opportunities for Canadians.

[Translation]

In addition to the special programs I have announced, and our particular commitments to the automotive industry and export promotion—I mentioned the PEMD program which aims at helping Canadian businesses find new markets,—we established the special mixed funding program last year with an allocation of more than $900 million to help Canadian businesses compete on foreign markets. That program has enabled us to win contracts which are of prime importance to this country's industrial development. I am referring in particular to the Mexico subway contract, that will allow public transit equipment companies to develop new technologies, penetrate new markets and create jobs at home. In addition, we are committed to the development of every region. For the current fiscal year 1982-83, the main estimates of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be $772 million to promote regional economic growth during this year. This includes over $167 million for grants and $116 million for programs such as the comprehensive plan for Prince Edward Island or the special plan for the development of Magdalen Islands and special ARDA agreements.

Our concern for business throughout Canada will become apparent in the new aspect the programs will take on, once the integration of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion is completed. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced earlier this year, when referring to government re-organization, the emphasis will be hard on industrial regional development. The merging of the regional offices and programs of DREE and Industry, Trade and Commerce will give Canadian businessmen and women over the coming months better access to the economic programs of the Canadian government and also the opportunity to avail themselves more fully of the business expansion programs, which are centered on innovation.

Mr. Speaker, while recognizing the problems now facing the Canadian economy, the government is quite confident about the potential for economic development of this country. Thus, the Defence Industry Productivity Program, the DIPP, as is commonly called, promotes the economic growth and technological capacity of Canada through the development and production of defence equipment and related products in Canada. In practical terms, what does DIPP mean in the every day life of the workers? It means research grants such as those given for example to the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft of Canada Ltd., in the Montreal area, to Canadair Co., to the de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. in Toronto or to Rolls Royce in the Montreal for the area purpose not only of developing advance technologies, but also of making sure that our large manufacturing companies are in a position to maintain their present employment level, to meet international competititon and to find new markets, because we want our country to be a leader in advance technologies and skilled jobs.

Hon. members might remember that during the last fiscal year, we managed twice to increase the DIPP budget, the first time by $20 million and the second time by $27 million, so that the estimates for 1982-83 will be $129 million strictly earmarked to assist companies in developing new technologies or new products and in seeing that highly skilled jobs are made available to Canadians.

Hon. members will also recall that earlier this year, sometime during the third or fourth week in January, the government announced a program to assist greater productivity by technical means. That program is known as STEP. It will help the Canadian industry to take advantage of the outstanding possibilities offered by the electronic revolution. The new program will provide $87.5 million from the former special electronic fund plus an additional amount of $52 million over a three-year period, to help promote the manufacturing and use of electronic and high-technology equipment in the Canadian industry, with the view to improving its productivity and competitiveness in world markets. In other words, additional funds have been provided for the establishment of four new microelectronic centres in Canada, so that each and every Canadian province will now have at one of its universities a high-technology research centre, in the field of microelectronics. In addition, the program also provides for the setting up of an investment fund specifically for major projects in the electronic and equipment industry. Moreover, this program includes a special research and development fund for the manufacture of advance technology production equipment, such as robots and computerized manufacturing equipment.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Support for Technology Enhanced Productivity program, or STEP, provides new assistance to businesses in every industry using such products and technologies so that they can get the information they need on electronics and put these technologies and products to good use. Time does not allow me to dwell on the subject but other speakers on this side of the House will have the opportunity to add to my comments later today. However, hon. members do know the significance we attach to the industrial fallback of the megaprojects in every region of Canada, and these fallbacks and their geographic distribution throughout the regions is a priority objective of this government. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that Canada's vast natural resources and the related secondary manufacturing sectors, as well as manufacturing activities in the areas of engineering, aerospace science, communications, computer science and urban transport equipment will remain the main moving forces of industrial growth in Canada. Innovation in the development of new products and processes will provide new trading opportunities to the Canadian industry on the domestic and foreign markets. However, perhaps for the first time in the history of Canada's economic development, every region will have an opportunity to play an equal role in these developments.

[English]

We recognize, of course, that the resource sector and other sectors in the economy, such as some industrial sectors, are experiencing lay-offs and we do not deny that this distressing situation has fallen particularly hard upon some regions in Canada like the forest industry sector in British Columbia and Quebec. Most of these downturns arise from economic conditions prevailing in the foreign markets of the Canadian forest industry, and the situation will not be alleviated until these markets recover. I point out that as a trading nation this is Canada's lot, because without the potential of foreign markets, and if those foreign markets are not open to our products, we cannot expect to be able to weather the storm completely during this difficult period.

• (1420)

The fact is that positive government action has restructured the important forest industry into a position of fundamental strength, whatever its short-term situation. The amount expended under the pulp and paper modernization program has been $276 million, and this has led to further provincial assistance totalling $241 million and private sector investments estimated at between $3 billion and $4 billion, raising industry productivity by 18 per cent. Efforts through DREE to strengthen and expand the resource base through forest management totalled about $91 million last fiscal year. Energy programs developed and implemented by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and DREE have helped forestry to reduce its energy consumption by the impressive total of 20 per cent. New overseas markets for Canadian products are being obtained through a variety of effective trade initiatives. In this sector I think the story is a strong one.

Positive steps have also been taken to create and sustain jobs directly.

[Translation]

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) recently announced the allocation of $140 million to a job creation program aimed at hiring people now receiving unemployment insurance benefits, to work in reforestation and fishery projects. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) referred to the work-sharing program with an irony which is incongruous in view of the situation, but considering that the government has announced nearly $350 million of new programs aimed solely at job creation in the last six weeks, to say that these are just bandaid measures, as the hon. member for Joliette told me behind the curtains, is somewhat of an exaggeration.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the charges of chronic failure made by the hon. member for Rosedale. The programs which I have just listed and the great economic potential of our country encourage us, on this side of the House, to meet today's economic challenge optimistically. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to give a brief summary of the policies developed by the government of Canada to meet that challenge. I could also have described in fuller detail all the job creation programs we have implemented, but others will have the opportunity to do so this afternoon. However, as the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) pointed out at the end of his speech, we on this side of the House also believe that people must be our first concern and that our policies must be aimed at promoting the welfare of Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to dwell today on the abysmal failure of this government nor the frightening statistics with which we are continually bombarded. It is my intention to attempt to bring a positive note to this debate.

In my own life I have always found that one of the major keys to success in business is to learn by example. You seek information and use ideas from those who are successful and incorporate them in your own venture. The government of this country does not seem to appreciate this simple principle. It does not even seem to be able to learn from the example of failure. In this respect I am thinking in particular of Great Britain, the economy of which has been sliding downhill for a number of years. We seem to be only a few short steps behind that once proud and industrious nation in its headlong plunge to economic ruin.

Why cannot we—as a country or, more specifically, as a government—take a look at countries which are successful in today's world? Let us look at Japan, for instance. Every Canadian knows that Japan is presently in much better economic state than we are. Can we not learn why and make use of this information? What allows Japan, a resource-poor collection of islands, to outstrip Canada, a country virtually floating in a sea of valuable resources?

Japan has the most formidable economy in the world today, second in size only to that of the U.S.A. While our economy sluggishly plods along under the burden of declining productivity, a huge national debt, high interest rates and double-digit inflation, the Japanese economy defies world trends and continues to move ahead by leaps and bounds. We live right next door to our major market; the Japanese have to ship across the Pacific Ocean. Our economy was left intact after the Second World War; that of Japan was devastated as a result of its war effort.

What does account for the difference between our two countries? When viewing statistics it soon becomes clear that Japanese productivity outstrips that of any other western economy. In 1979, Japanese productivity rose by 13 per cent and in 1980 by another 9 per cent. At the same time this was happening, the west saw unit labour costs increasing, in the U.S. by 11 per cent, in West Germany by 5 per cent and in Great Britain by 20 per cent. This past year Canada was racked by labour unrest, which will undoubtedly show up as a further decline in our productivity.

It was long assumed that Japanese workers were paid comparatively low wages. This may have been true in the 1950s and 1960s, but it is now estimated that by the 1990s Japanese per capita income will be almost twice that of its American counterpart. It is evident that labour cannot shoulder the full responsibility for declining productivity in Canada. No, the source of the Japanese phenomenon goes deeper than that. It is profoundly concerned with the basic attitudes of government, management and labour.

To deal with government first, the Japanese government operates quite differently from what Canadians experience. Although the political structures are similar—both are parliamentary democracies—the role of government is an interesting study in contrasts. Japanese government bureaucracy is small in relation to the population and the size of the Japanese economy. The reason for this is that government, like all sectors of the Japanese economy, is output oriented. In Canada it seems that government is growth oriented.

In addition, we are currently going through a phase in which the government is intervening to an ever greater degree in the private sector. Proof of this is evident in policies such as the National Energy Program. It is likely that in the 1980s we will see a continued and unprecedented assault on other sectors of the economy by the federal Liberal government.

As an example of differing attitudes in government, it is worthwhile to examine how government involves itself in the private sector in Japan and here in Canada. In Japan the ministry of international trade and industry only supports industries with long-term growth potential. The Japanese see the death of an industrial sector or a company as part of the natural life cycle of the economy. But what do we do here? We bail out companies like Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson and Cape Breton Steel. Once we start to prop up an ailing industry, we are stuck with it forever. It becomes parasitic, sucking the vitality out of our economy.

In this respect we need only look as far as England to see the devastating effect this has on western economies. British Steel, for example, drained $1.5 billion out of the British economy last year. That was $1.5 billion for one industry. The Japanese would have spent that money on growth industries, which would have created long-term, productive jobs. Basically the Japanese government looks ahead; ours looks behind. Japan spends 25 per cent of its gross national product on government; Canada and Britain spend 40 per cent plus of their gross national product on government. That comparison alone speaks volumes about the state of our economy. We are an expensively overgoverned society. We look at multi-levels of government for support at any excuse, and seem to feel more secure with bureaucrats dogging our every move. Government has invaded every facet of our life. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, Parliament is even now in the last throes of a complete loss of control over the bureaucracy. Once it becomes uncontrollable, it will be the end of private enterprise in this country.

• (1430)

In Japan, government seems to work side by side with business and not as its antagonist. When people talk about the Japanese economic miracle, the ministry of international trade and industry is always mentioned. There is no question that this ministry has continually been behind the thrust pushing Japanese industry to the forefront. In Canada, the government seems to see industry as profiteers and exploiters of the Canadian worker rather than a source of employment and income. Business is constantly under attack. I need not mention more than the November MacEachen budget.

A recent example of government attitudes occurred in Ontario. The Volkswagen company wanted to set up a plant in Barrie, Ontario, partially as a result of government incentives. Barrie was the ideal location for Volkswagen because it could purchase an already developed site and it would be close to major markets. The federal government, however, decided that it wanted the plant in either Montreal or Windsor. Coincidentally, all Montreal seats are held by Liberals and three Liberal cabinet ministers come from Windsor. The government declared that if Volkswagen did not build in one of these two cites, then funding would be withdrawn. So Volkswagen said: "Okay, we will set up a plant in the U.S.". Finally the government relented and allowed Volkswagen to build in Barrie. So you can see that even before the plant was set up, the government was taking a confrontationist stance with the company. You can be assured that other companies will consider the Volkswagen experience when thinking about operating in Canada.

This is only part of the problem with our style of government involvement with industry. In Japan, research and development lies at the heart of productivity increases and ultimately is the foundation of the economic miracle. In general, Canadians seem to fear change. They look at advances like robotization of assembly lines and think of job losses. What they do not realize is that whether they lose their jobs to robots or whether they lose them because they are no longer competitive, they are still unemployed. The difference is that if they lose their jobs to technological advance, there will likely be other jobs available. As hundreds of thousands of Canadians can attest today, being uncompetitive simply leaves them collecting a UIC cheque or welfare.

Retraining would allow workers to escape the drudgery of boring and repetitive jobs and allow them to move on to higher levels of skill that have the potential of being much more rewarding. The point to remember is that in Japan, the level of unemployment is significantly lower than in Canada. No one should fear change when obsolescence is the enemy.

In Canada, we spend about 0.9 per cent of our GNP on research and development, while Japan has already exceeded 3 per cent. Japan has 36 research and development workers per 10,000 population, a figure 50 per cent higher than the United States. More than any other single factor, this accounts for Japanese productivity and the strength of her economy.

In Canada, we have yet to recognize and act upon this fact. We rank only above Iceland and Ireland in research and development spending. The government offers little incentive to private industry to expand research and development facilities. The Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) recently set 1.5 per cent of GNP by 1985 as a goal for research spending, but this assumed massive private sector input which is unlikely to appear, especially in light of recent budgetary measures. That would leave us just slightly above our peak of ten years ago. Proposed cutbacks in funding for post-secondary educational institutions will further worsen the situation.

What is required is a co-ordination of research and development efforts by the universities, government centres and the private sector. Combined with this co-ordination of effort must be at least a doubling of current funding from all sources. This would still leave us about 1.2 per cent below Japan, but at least we would be approaching the levels of other industrialized nations. To skimp on research funding is false economy.

Also, if Canadians hope to succeed they must co-operate with each other. In this country labour is set against management, the public sector is fighting the private sector, and the federal government wars with the provinces. Government should work with business to develop opportunities which will in turn create jobs and strengthen the economy. Japan has thrived on this sort of co-operation.

I would like to outline briefly the sort of progress Japan has made as a result of this approach to economic development. Right now in Japan some 50,000 university students are studying various aspects of micro-electronic technology. In the United States there are perhaps 2,500 students in this field many of whom, I would bet, are students from Japan. I hesitate to think about how many we have in Canada—perhaps 50 or 100?

Let us examine the result of this emphasis on micro-electronic technology. Japan has 80,000 robots, nearly three quarters of the world's total. While we scramble to introduce robots to our auto assembly lines—probably the most basic level at which they would be used—the Japanese are using robots to produce more robots. As a matter of fact, the Japanese view the auto industry as a dying sector to be passed on to less developed nations—such as Canada, no doubt. Ten per cent of Japanese robots are rated as intelligent because they can sense an object, grasp it and place it where it belongs with a precision requiring more than simply mechanical movement.

The Japanese are presently working on a factory run by computers and laser beams. Depending on how the computer is programmed, the material that goes into the processor will come out as anything from a home appliance to a child's toy or a car muffler. Who is developing this process? It is the Japanese ministry of international trade and industry. It suggests that this process, known as flexible manufacturing, will soon allow small factories to turn out a large variety of products without requiring humans to leave their control rooms. The ministry will pass this technology on to the private sector. This is how to create jobs, not through a system of grants that create positions simply as a political response to unemployment statistics.

In the field of computers, five Japanese manufacturers now have 40 per cent of the world market in random access memory chips. Two Japanese companies are now laying claim to having the fastest computer in the world, thanks to new semiconductor technology. Soon they expect to have computers that respond to voice commands and are able to read charts and graphs.

Not only do the Japanese want to transmit information quickly, they also want to move people and material quickly. The famed "bullet train" is definitely old hat in Japan; it only travels at 200 kilometres per hour. The Japanese have already had a test train at Kyushu travel 10 centemetres above the ground at up to 514 kilometres per hour, or about 320 miles per hour. By the late 1990s, these trains—riding silently on a super-conducting magnetic levitation railway system—will be in regular operation. What is more, the Japanese borrowed this technology from the Germans who are well aware of the value of research and development.

So why does the government have this negative attitude, this approach that obviously destroys economic growth? The first reason is the one I have already mentioned—it fears new technologies. The second has to do with its socialist tendencies. The government is more concerned with distributing wealth we do not have, then in creating wealth that is our life's blood. We allow government programs to take priority over growth initiatives. Programs that would create wealth are downgraded. Social programs are important; we have a real and growing responsibility to help the elderly, the disabled and the handicapped. No one will argue with that. Encouraging business to expand would reduce unemployment while at the same time increasing the tax base, so that we could afford needed social services.

Finally, I should like to discuss Japanese management techniques. Canadian labour and management could take a few pointers from their counterparts across the Pacific. In Japan salary is closely connected with productivity, while Canadian labour tries to tie wage increases to the rate of inflation. The former technique would actually dampen inflation while helping workers to identify more closely with the success of the company. This raises company morale, which in itself is a productivity booster. Connecting wage increases to the CPI is ludicrous because it fuels further inflation, and a measure derived from price increases of a general basket of goods has little application to a specific industry.

In Japan bonuses make up 30 per cent or more of a worker's wages. Wages increase as years of service to the company accumulate. These measures provide a real incentive to workers to stay with their job, thus reducing employee turnover in the company. With wages getting largely determined by productivity, workers become eager for technological changes which will improve their per capita output without requiring an increase in worker input. Absenteeism declines significantly under this system.

Japan is not a perfect state but there is much we could learn from the Japanese. Instead of setting up trade barriers which encourage the continuation of obsolete industry, we should work with the Japanese, learn from them, and compete with them at their own game. This is precisely what the Japanese did to the West. Instead of complaining about unfair competition, we should realize the incredible potential of Canada. Others are following in Japan's footsteps; Korea, Singapore, Taiwan and Hong Kong are all stars on the rise. We will have to compete with them or be left behind in a self-imposed morass of economic and social problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, we are discussing a subject that is extremely important to all Canadians, namely, our typically North American economy with its usual ups and downs. We are also discussing what the government has done and will continue to do to stimulate this country's economy, how our many politicians can do their share, whether they are in the opposition here in the House, in the various legislatures or the National Assembly, or members of the provincial governments.

I was listening to the member for Caribou-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) when he was referring just to Japan. It is common knowledge that Japan has developed its economy at a fantastic rate over the last twenty years, and it is also true that the mental habits prevailing in Japan are based on a very strong sense of discipline. For instance, it has long been an accepted concept in Japan that an employee's ties are with his company rather than with his job. And, furthermore, after the Second World War, Japan was in a situation where it had to start again from scratch, which is not the case in Canada today. Certainly, some Japanese concepts could be applied in Canada, but, on the other hand, there are many negative sides to Japanese society which the hon. member did not mention. I do not intend to go into this at length, but I would like to point out that if we consider basic freedoms and opportunities for individual improvement, I feel that Canada is still far ahead of Japan, and will remain so for a long time yet. To prove my point, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Japanese government if confronted with such an occurrence tomorrow morning, would never stand for a separatist party bent on separating part of Japan from the rest of the country. Here in Canada, it has become a fact of life and we are more or less stuck with it.

To get back to the motion presented by the member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), I am amazed that the House should blame the government for not having implemented policies to support the development of an industrial sector. We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that the government of Canada is spending $3 billion annually on assistance to companies in the form of tax credits, research grants, capital input, and manpower training. There is a host of programs that have been set up to help Canadians use their natural leadership and enterprising spirit to develop profitable industries in our country. All the policies we have developed and improved over the years have produced fantastic results.

During the seventies, Canada was by far the largest creator of jobs of all the countries in the western bloc. It has given its citizens by far the best opportunities for free enterprise and implementing their ideas both imaginatively and commercially, and its objective has been to build a new society, a dynamic land of opportunity. Today, the Canadian government is being criticized for introducing policies that have failed to support industry, or for not introducing them at all. I am amazed, because at this very moment, a tremendous amount is being done in this country.

Earlier, I heard the hon. member for, I forget which riding, tell the House that Volkswagen has just decided to establish facilities in Barrie with the help of the Canadian government, and this is a very recent development.

Just now, the minister responsible for small and medium-sized businesses was telling the House that KHD, a company that manufactures diesel engines, is planning a big factory in the Montreal area which will provide more than 1,000 jobs. This is very recent, Mr. Speaker, and the project is being subsidized by the Canadian government, I want to make that clear. Canadair Limited, which in 1977 had 1,300 employees, now has more than 6,000. This company is different, in that it was purchased, and entirely developed, financed and subsidized by the government of Canada. And there are many others.

A tax data centre is being built in the Saguenay Lac-Saint-Jean area, which will employ 300 people by 1983 and provide between 600 and 700 temporary jobs annually. This is the only substantial job creation project in my riding sponsored by either government. Of course, I would have liked the government of Quebec to do the same, by decentralizing some of the large departments which are located and will continue to be located in Quebec City and Montreal, because anywhere else would be out of the question. Obviously! They say our problems are the result of high interest rates, the situation is a disaster, etc., etc., and do they take a positive attitude, make any proposals for solving these problems? Not a chance: Mr. Lévesque or even our friends on the other side here in the House are certainly the last people we should ask to make constructive proposals. I invite anyone to read the motion now being considered in the House, and if they find any positive elements, please let me know! I read the motion in French, I read it in English. My English is not that good, so I read it again in French, but there is nothing in it. It is just a lot of whining and whimpering. Complaining is easy, but it doesn't help matters any. Unfortunately, these are some of the things we have to put up with. I would like to pursue the matter further, because in addition to the fact that the economic situation is worse than it ever has been, there are aspects that have a special impact on people from the province of Quebec.

In Quebec, the present conditions are perhaps worse than in other Canadian provinces. From time to time, we are inclined to wonder why. There are two easy answers that are always trotted out by the Quebec government. The federal government, interest rates or the depression are to blame. Those are the stock answers. During the five years when things went from bad to worse in Quebec, the federal government was to blame, and now, when you hear a PQ minister somewhere, the word depression is never off his lips. It is all very well to frighten everybody, but it does not solve anything. This is a large part of our problem. But seeing all this, I say: In a province like mine, and I think about my Lac-Saint-Jean riding, probably the finest or one of the finest in the province—no offence meant to my colleagues—in 1982, the Canadian government has decided to invest $2.2 million in community development projects. I agree that Parizeau will say these are only band-aid programs. He is not interested in putting to work 600 of my constituents. This grant will entitle them to enjoy many other opportunities after completing their manpower training courses and so on. Parizeau couldn't care less, because for him, it is only a stopgap solution. He would have liked to have those $2.2 million to distribute among those on the cocktail circuit in France. He would have liked this money to go the 120 cocktail bibbers in the Maison du Québec in Paris. The longer I look at all this, the more I say to myself that Quebec's problem at this moment and in the last 20 years can easily be summarized in two words: Jacques Parizeau. This man, who may now be seen everywhere in public, has worked in the shadow of the Lesage and Johnson governments in the sixties, and later of the Bourassa government. Now he is in the forefront. Year after year with him driving from the back seat, the deficit has increased, the hole has deepened and the situation has worsened.

Since he has become a public man, we are witnessing something new. There is no longer just a deficit in Quebec. The province is losing money, to the tune of $1 billion one year and $500 million another year. No one knows where the money goes, but it is wasted. Then the Quebec government turns around to us and says: "There is a problem in Quebec and it is caused by the interest rates". I agree that there is a problem which the Canadian government will solve thanks to the recommendations made by the members of the Canadian Parliament. I am referring to the interest rate problem. Once our economic structure becomes strong enough to support the dollar and once we are capable of having interest rates set in Canada and not forced upon us by the international market, we shall probably do it. However, I would like to ask those who say there is nothing to fear about the dollar going down by 20 cents as this increases our sales, whether we lived any better when the Canadian dollar was worth $1.03 a few years ago. The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. Today, the dollar is worth 82 cents and life is bleak. Methinks that if it goes down to 60 cents, life will be a bit bleaker still. Is our economic situation any better than when our dollar was worth $1.03? I am not so sure about that, but I think not. Before we let the dollar fall any further to reduce interest rates, I have to ask myself this question very seriously because my constituents have told me that interest rates are too high. I agree. I have to ask myself whether such a policy is worth while before I can decide to recommend it to the government. It would be very risky for us to make such an attempt alone instead of with partners who follow the same policy. The risk would be enormous.

Coming back to Quebec's problems, let us look beyond this question of interest rates and consider the basic economic structure of the Quebec community. For the past 10 years, there have been people in Quebec playing around with separating large and small capital, promoting economic nationalism, giving us a fine sounding language, opening "maisons du Québec" in Paris, in Belgium and around the world, staffing them with cocktail sippers and increasing expenditures to such a level that next year, 52 per cent of Quebec's budget will go to paying salaries. Do not ask to whom! I am not talking about the vast number of contracts granted left and right by these people who call themselves the government of Quebec. What I want to say is that Quebec has forgotten something very basic, and this is what I find painful when I sit in this House and try to represent my constituents. People now find it strange in Quebec that a Member of Parliament should try to bring $1 million or $2 million to his constituency to create temporary employment. He must be a tax chaser! That is very strange! Who will be interested in such programs? No, in Quebec they aim at something loftier than that, Mr. Speaker. They want collective freedoms, they want a strong state, they want a country with a big name with some sort of president to govern it and manipulate everyone. And then people will be surprised that the economic situation in Quebec is worse than anywhere else.

The greatest disappointment for a politician today is to realize that when the people he represents are asked to elect a provincial government in Quebec, they are given two alternatives. They are told that they have to choose as their premier between a representative of the Parti Québécois, who wants to make a country out of their province, and the leader of the Liberal Party, who while he wants to remain Canadian would still put the state, the province and the government of Quebec ahead of the people of Quebec. That is unfortunate. At the present time in Quebec, there is no longer any mention of individual freedoms and basic liberties.

For years, we have heard about nothing else but the powers and the rights of the Quebec government, Hydro-Quebec, Quebec, but never have we been told what happens to Quebecers in the process. I come from an area where the Minister of Finance just slapped a 30-cent tax per gallon of gas on us "blueberries" from Lac-Saint-Jean who voted for the PQ government. We elected five MNAs, but other Quebec residents do not pay such a discriminatory tax. Do you think this is an economic benefit for my people? I run around like crazy to try to find programs to help people that are unemployed at home. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion gave grant after grant to the Lac-Saint-Jean area. We helped create huge businesses such as the Donahue firm in Saint-Félicien. We helped upwards of 100 businesses locate in the city of Alma over these last few years, and to what avail? To see our transmission lines carry our electricity down to Montreal, where they can sell it at the same rate as it is sold in the Lac-Saint-Jean area. Power that is carried hundreds of miles away and on top of that, they slap on us a 30-cent tax per gallon of gas that people in the Ottawa area do not have to pay. So much for Quebecers. That proves how much Mr. Parizeau is concerned about Quebecers. He thinks only of Quebec. To the Quebec government, Quebec's budget is everything.

I am all the more unhappy as my own party, the Quebec Liberal party, of which I am a member, is currently under the firm rule of someone who has also decided to give Quebec powers top priority, and this makes me sad. I say quite honestly before my constituents that this makes me sad, because I am anxious to have Quebecers offered another alternative. I am anxious that we go back to Quebecers, that we start speaking of Quebecers once more rather than of Quebec. I also was born there, as were six million others, and I do not understand why a government in Quebec asks me every day to show that I am a Quebecer. I do not have to prove I am a Quebecer. I was born in Quebec, I pay taxes in Quebec, I live in Quebec and I will die in Quebec. I have my roots there, as well as my fellow Quebecers, and I have nothing to prove. Neither does anyone else in my constituency. But that government that takes pleasure in wasting money dares accuse us, the government of Canada, our government, that in the last ten years through agreements has forced the provinces to spend in areas such as mine. I could go on listing projects in my constituency, the Plein-Air Base, Saint-Gédéon, Pointe-Taillon, Mont-Lac-Vert, Mont Valin and so on, several tourist, industrial and agricultural projects.

Had it not been for those agreements the Canadian government forced on the provinces, they would never have spent a cent in our area. So it is across the land. Those people will say that if there are economic problems in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, the Canadian government is responsible. No, thank you, Mr. Speaker! Let them tell me instead where the lost billions have gone. Let them tell me what they do with my taxes, and for the benefit of my colleagues opposite who may not know it, in Quebec car insurance costs twice as much as anywhere else. Provincial taxes are 21 per cent higher. We have the highest sales tax on gas, and why, Mr. Speaker? Because the Minister of Finance, Mr. Parizeau, after his last collective agreement, rose in the National Assembly and stated while holding his jacket tight: we just signed for peanuts. Mr. Speaker, such peanuts are of a choking nature. I would not like to swallow too many. So much for the choice we now have in Quebec.

• (1500)

What I want more than anything else in the world, and I intend to expend more and more energy to that end is an openmindedness on the part of Quebec politicians that will lead them, especially on the provincial scene, to become increasingly more concerned with the wellbeing of Quebecers. Let us stop talking about structures, let us stop talking about Quebec itself, and let us look at what is happening to the Quebecers. True, I am being denied the right to send my child to an English school if I should so desire. He may find a way of learning the language elsewhere, I agree. Many English-speaking people live around us; still I have been denied that right. Be that as it may, I can cope with it for the sake of keeping a culture alive; I can accept that. But, on the other hand, when for instance my pockets and those of my electors are being rifled, and then billions of dollars are being wasted year in and year out, without our being told where the money goes, that I refuse to put up with! That the Public Accounts Committee did not sit in Quebec in six years, that I will not accept! And if people think I am going too far in saying this, I say it is not true. It is not so, because their obvious administrative bankruptcy is increasingly being blamed on the federal government.

But, to return to the motion before the House. I am surprised that the Progressive Conservatives are not making any positive suggestions by way of this motion because one fact remains, amongst other problems: we are stuck here with a party that has forgotten the progressive part of its name, that is in no way progressive but merely conservative. I can mention several examples of that, like the metric system they will not accept despite the fact that it has been taught in Ontario for ten years now, despite the fact that at age 15 I was already learning about litres, millilitres, milligrams, then grams and kilograms. They are regressing on that score. They are against our legislation on bilingualism: that is what is written here in an advertisement published by the Progressive Conservative Party in the riding of Simcoe South. They reject everything. They do not want their children to be bilingual; they do not want them to use the metric system; they do not want them to speak to the rest of the people. I shall dwell no longer on people like that. We have no need of them. Canada has grown without them and will continue to do so without them. I trust their electors will continue to give us positive ideas while they continue to waste their time squawking about matters that would set us backward instead of making us go forward.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity, just before Easter, to speak in a debate that I feel is extremely important, considering the present situation. Considering the unemployment statistics published this morning, Canadians will not be feeling very festive this Easter if they give any serious thought to the situation confronting us today. I shall comment very briefly on what was said by the member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel). As a Quebecer, I think many people will not be terribly pleased to hear his comments, and I also think the majority of his remarks had no connection with the motion we are debating today. However I would like to remind him that he is hardly in a position to criticize people who are running up deficits in this day and age, because the government he represents is also an expert in this field and now has a debt of $137 billion, which is costing Canadians, who are listening and watching us today, $2 million per hour for servicing the debt alone. No, I do not agree with the hon. member's example, and again, I do not think the member for Lac-Saint-Jean is in a position to accuse anyone in this respect. I do not have the impression that Mr. Parizeau has had any influence on the federal administration during the past fifteen years.

I was also listening to the Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe). He faithfully repeated for the benefit of the House, on the basis of the statistics he was given and press releases which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has been giving us during the last two or three months, a number of programs aimed at correcting the difficult situation in this country, all of which I consider to be unprecedented failure on the part of the Canadian government. Most people would agree that we are in an impossible, unbelievable and unacceptable situation, and in mentioning these retraining, pre-retirement and training programs for various industrial sectors, the minister was unable to give us the assurance that in twelve months there will be jobs available for the people who have been retrained. The pre-retirement program will cost millions of dollars and inviting thousands of workers to retire at fifty will certainly not help build a prosperous country. I do not believe that the Canadian people expect this. These are of course band-aid programs. They are emergency programs brought about by a situation which has been allowed to deteriorate to such a degree as to become unacceptable, discouraging and a major cause of concern.

This is a situation for which this government must accept full responsibility because, in the last fifteen years, it has governed badly, mismanaged the economy and lacked foresight. I listened—this will be my last comment—to the hon. member for Lac Saint-Jean who spoke about Quebec and tried in some way to relate this debate with the situation in Quebec. I do not believe that Quebec should be singled out. All the Canadian provinces—I would like to hear someone pretend the opposite—are completely dissatisfied with the situation and the way this government has governed this country.

I believe that three years ago, we made some valid suggestions which could have prevented all this hardship. I believe that if the Canadian government after the election of February 1980 had at least accepted to give homeowners the assistance we had suggested, we could see that this program would have had very positive results by promoting the recovery of the construction industry and allowing thousands of Canadians to become homeowners, which would undoubtedly have led to the purchase of thousands of refrigerators and furniture sets. Thus, the small and medium-sized businesses would have been able to stay in business much more easily than is now the case. In addition, with regard to the profits generated by energy products, we had suggested a program which could have helped thousands of small wage-earners in Canada, but the government rejected all that. It opposed our mortgage tax credit program because it did nothing for tenants. What has happened in the last three years? Nothing has been done for home owners, and even less for tenants, who now have less money available to pay their rent even though rents have become very expensive. All that is the result of a policy which promotes confrontation with some provinces.

We all know quite well that if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), who is in the House, had signed an agreement with Alberta, we would not be facing the same problems with the Alsands megaproject. We know that billions of dollars would have been invested in Canada, which would have strengthened our Canadian dollar. I am not saying that we would not be facing any hardship. I am saying that our hardships and difficulties would not be as great and that we could be in a much better position than we have been until now.

Then when we refer to deplorable bankruptcies, to difficult conditions, I think that we are perfectly justified because in every sector, in every region and in every province, including mine where there is record unemployment, and the present Canadian government in responsible for their record unemployment in Canada. I think that Canadians must be aware of that bad administration. It is our duty, I believe, to severely condemn this government and its team of men and women gathered under the various Ministers of Finance whom we have known, including this one, who try to promote a philosophy which is unable to provide the remedies and policies that are needed to straighten out the situation. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the harm has been done and Canadians are now suffering and will continue to suffer. If the few measures which I put forward three years ago had been taken the ones which we had suggested like a different economic orientation, a chance for private enterprise to do what it can do better than the government, I think that we would have bypassed the problems which we are now experiencing.

And speaking of failures, the minister responsible for small and medium-sized businesses has amply shown a while ago that the need for emergency measures, for the millions of dollars that are now being expended, is proof enough of a huge failure on the part of a government which is to be blamed and which does not deserve the confidence of Canadians.

The motion clearly does not condemn the government for its investments. They have made some bad choices, and because of the present situation, they must take a piecemeal approach and try to correct a situation which they themselves allowed to deteriorate. Under the circumstances, I must nevertheless remind the House that, as an elected representative of the province with the worst unemployment record and as the member for Joliette, I am not the only one to condemn the government. During a FPU meeting held last week, farmers by the thousands severely condemned the government for leaving them at the mercy of interest rates. As I said earlier this week to the Prime Minister, I hope they will not blame high interest rates on the Quebec government. I think this is clearly a federal responsibility and is due to the government's high interest rates policy which is affecting adversely farmers, small and medium-sized businesses and contractors.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that if the government had shown a little sensitivity to the needs of these major industries, it could have easily favoured these key industries, thereby averting the current problems and distress. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) was right when he compared the programs announced by the government to misery-sharing. The government is trying to maintain and stabilize poverty through programs. Canadians will be offered a 4-day week, with paid leave on the fifth day, as well as early retirement at age 50. Mr. Speaker, you doubtless know just as well as I do that this is not the way to build a country, to make it strong and able to withstand any attack against its security. This is unthinkable. Because of its bad administration, the government is clearly stuck and it keeps on announcing investments by hundred million dollars in an attempt to correct a situation in which it placed Canadians and alleviate a bankruptcy which is surely unacceptable to the Canadian people.

So, when Quebec farmers complain, other industries are involved. The government is being condemned for its lack of policy planning in the automobile industry, the tremendous problems facing small and medium-sized businesses as well as the construction industry, and the measures introduced are not likely to help the economy recover. If it had provided home owners with the assistance we suggested, thousands of those who are experiencing mortgage renewal problems would be in a much better position, and thousands of other Canadians would have become home owners, thereby saving a great many jobs, something members opposite are perfectly aware of. As far as the soft industries in my province are concerned, Mr. Speaker, we know the difficulties they encounter on a daily basis, but the government allowed these industries also to deteriorate. If the minister responsible were honest, he would confess that in spite of the steps the government has taken for the footwear industry, for instance, through retraining or early retirement programs, he has completely given up on its future survival. It has been clear for the past three or four weeks that this industry will disappear unless steps are taken to include leather shoes within the total quota system.

The minister's answer is overdue. In fact, 6,000 jobs have been lost, 15,000 workers are still worried today. I do not know how many questions I have put—often with the tacit support of some Liberal members who did not dare rise in this House—politely to a parliamentary secretary about what was going to happen. I think they have a responsibility to demand that the minister take action and ensure the survival of that industry. The same could happen in the textile industry, and a number of others. That is the kind of situation we are now facing, and we know thousands of young people are discouraged and worried because they have not yet found a place in the labour market. How can we ensure this country's future with such gigantic failure?

Mr. Speaker, I know other members want to speak on the issue. But I think the time has come to ask members opposite, be they from Quebec or elsewhere, to stop that hypocrisy. Let us demand, as those members have a responsibility to do, that ministers and especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) change course. As I said, Mr. Speaker, the damage is done. No political group in 24 hours could correct the damage done by this government over the last 15 years. It would have been possible as late as two years ago to avoid the worst. This government failed to respond to the direction and proposals we set and which would have proved very valuable to save this country from catastrophy. This government is the main culprit, because of its lack of management and vision, its stubborn determination to take the place of private industry and deceive Canadians into believing that fighting inflation will reduce unemployment. I have been hearing that same old cliché for 15 years but we now have both unemployment and inflation. This is utter failure. I will never insist enough on this point.

Today the Minister of Finance gave us another proof he has no compunction about his gigantic failure. He did not even give a hint he will change course or philosophy. And those hon. members opposite keep absolving and supporting him. In my view those people have responsibilities and should in the circumstances, prevail upon the government to change its attitude. We, the official opposition, are convinced, as thousands other Canadians are that this government erred, this government led the country into the doldrums, because thousands of people now suffer and beg this government to show leadership and alter its policies.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the present government will rely on the same philosophy to lead the country out of the doldrums. It will fail. My submission may be pessimistic, my colleagues opposite may say I am being too gloomy. This may not be too encouraging to the thousands of Canadians who are listening, but unless the Minister of Finance completely changes his philosophy, the unemployment rate will increase further. And it is my belief that my warning will prove true in the short term. This government led us and keeps leading us astray but apparently does not give a hoot about the thousands of Canadians facing problems because of the current economic situation. Relations between provinces should resume, and at once. Enough stubbornness. Certainly, they will say this comes under provincial, not Canadian or federal jurisdiction. But in my view, men and women should rise to the challenge and reopen negotiations. That at any rate could prove beneficial for the Canadian people as a whole. Despite suggestions of politicking from all parties, I feel we have a responsibility to brace up and together with our provincial partners try to find a way out. But as long as the Minister of Finance—although he indicated this morning, that if he thought this could help the country, he would be prepared to resign. One of the services he could render this country, if he does not want to change his philosophy is to resign, and the sooner the better. He has proved his incompetence and mismanagement. We have here, before us, and especially from my province, 74 out of 75 hon. members who are in cahoots with so inefficient an administration, and are lacking courage under the circumstances.

I dare hope, once again, that the few remarks we are making today on our side of the House will bring this government to reflect seriously upon the hardships and the wrongs it is now inflicting upon the Canadian people, and upon the discouragement that will ensue every day with regard to the future of Canada. The fact remains that the present government is responsible, not so much to exercise power, but to ensure greater wellbeing for Canadians; but it has proved that it is incapable of doing so, for a long time now, and of achieving what this illustrious Prime Minister had promised: a just society. He is now left with two choices: either to change his economic philosophy that does not fit the situation, or simply, honestly, recognize his incompetence, his inability and resign, giving others a chance to do better.

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment and Minister of State for Science and Technology): We have been treated this afternoon, Mr. Speaker—and particularly by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken—to a great deal of indignation and emotion. I suppose indignation is the professional responsibility of the opposition—a great deal of heat with very little light. When I listened to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), I thought for a moment that he had joined the New Democratic Party. He was showing such a self-righteous concern that only he had compassion for those who are unemployed and those who are suffering from our economy. I thought he has verily established his qualifications for joining those who are self-righteous in the ranks of the New Democratic Party.

The question is not self-righteousness, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you and I can assure all members of the House that the members on this side of the House show as much care, as much concern, as much compassion as ever has been indicated by the members sitting opposite. The question is not who cares most, Mr. Speaker; the question is what are the problems that face us, what are the solutions for dealing with them, what are the alternatives presented to us in responding to those challenges?

The motion of the official opposition alleges a chronic failure. A failure can take place only in the context of the opportunities, the challenges and the problems that confront us.

There is no doubt, there is no denying—and there is no lack of concern in care for them, on this side of the House of Commons—that Canada faces difficult economic problems and challenges. But it is fruitless, it is pointless, to contend that those problems stem simply from policies of this government without a recognition of the international context within which Canada's economic policy must be rooted. As long as we are a major trading nation, as we are, and as long as we have capital needs, as we do, we will not be able to escape the impact within our economy of the general world economic situation. We can do better or we can do worse, confronted with any specific situation, but inevitably in Canada we will have to live with the consequences of the economic health of our major trading partners.

The question is, what kind of economic policies should Canada adopt to confront those admittedly difficult and challenging world economic situations? That is exactly where the hon. member for Joliette and the members of the official opposition have fallen down in their responsibility to describe for us some coherent alternative that would make sense to the kinds of policies that this government is pursuing. Quite clearly, this government is pursuing a policy of fiscal and monetary restraint. Is the official opposition suggesting we should abandon that policy? I can say, as a result of a variety of discussions and communications I have had with the private sector, that on the whole the private sector very much wishes the government to maintain fiscal and monetary restraint.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: Does he wish lower interest rates? How is he going to have lower interest rates without the imposition of exchange controls or a greatly reduced value of the Canadian dollar? Is that the policy which the official opposition wishes us to pursue? Do they wish us to undertake new programs to combat the social consequences of those economic difficulties that we face? If so, do they intend that we should pay for them through increased taxes or in the expansion of the federal government borrowing requirements?

They are strong in indignation, they are strong in heat, but there is very little in terms of light as to what alternative they would have us choose. Yes, Mr. Speaker, these are difficult times in the Canadian economy and there are hard choices, but they are not hard choices imposed on the people of Canada by the will of the government, they are imposed on us by the international economic situation. Those difficulties will be faced within the Canadian economy as long as we are engaged to the extraordinary degree that we are in world trade, as long as we are the advocates, as we are, of freer trade—I say freer, not necessarily freee trade—and as long as we have the kind of capital need that this country requires.

Nevertheless, though I am disappointed in the degree of constructive suggestions flowing from the official opposition, I welcome the presentation of this motion. I hope it will lead some further opposition to some precision in what alternative policies he should have us adopt. They are fearlessly opposed to inflation; they are very brave in saying we should not have unemployment; they are courageous in objecting to high interest rates; but they have not put forward any coherent or constructive policy for responding to those problems—different from the basic over-all economic and fiscal strategy the government is following.

I welcome this question put before us, Mr. Speaker, for another reason. It gives me an opportunity to discuss the long-term economic development strategy which was brought forward by the government last November and which, has not in my view been looked at sufficiently by Parliament or by the public. It is perhaps understandable that, in the controversy surrounding the budget, not as much attention has been paid to that document as I think it deserves. I stress the importance of that long-term economic development strategy because the NDP, the Conservatives and we—all of the members in this House, I think—know in our heart of hearts that yes, the Canadian economic situation is largely influenced by the economic health of our trading partners.

I suspect that almost all of us also know that the only way to fight effectively both inflation and unemployment is by enhancing productivity in our economy. If there is any magic wand in economics—and I doubt that there are magic wands—if there is any approach that really makes sense if we are to tackle those twin evils, it is by pursuing policies which enhance productivity within our economy, to make us more competitive, to provide employment, to provide for increased productivity and the ability to counter the effects of inflation.

It is within that context that the economic development strategy was brought forward in November. It is not a blueprint. It does not lay down some sort of nuts and bolts plan that must be followed in every detail. But it does give an indication of the path which the federal government believes should be pursued if we are to maximize the economic potential which the country undoubtedly has, if we are to maximize the growth of our economy.

If I were to single out the aspects of it which I think are particularly important and that warrants the attention of the public and the attention of the House, they are three in number. The first that the strategy suggests is that there are key sectors or key areas in which both government and the private sector must focus their efforts if we are to maximize the potential for our economic development. Those key areas are described at the very beginning of the document with emphasis, of course, on resource exploitation because Canada has international competitive advantages in the resource area.

Unfortunately, I think some have interpreted the document as being overly concerned with resources and megaprojects. Undoubtedly, resources are one of the most important base of competitiveness and enhanced productivity within the country. But the strategies do not confine or focus itself simply on the resource base. It goes on to describe other areas of key importance—and these are not in order of importance—such as manufacturing. The high technology industries and the development of technologies themselves.

The importance of the document is, first, that it attempts to describe those areas in which the federal government believes it should concentrate its efforts since they promise the maximization of productivity and growth in the return over the long term. The second aspect of the document which I think is of great importance is the rather new approach it takes to regional development. Regional development policies in the past have been largely, but not exclusively, defined in terms of the need for strengthening slow growth or disadvantaged areas of the country. The conclusion of the government, which is represented in this document, is that within each region of Canada there now are great opportunities and potential for regionalized development. A regional development policy can now effectively combine the need for balanced regional economic development and the support of the key sector strategy for the country. In other words, a regional development policy and economic development policy can go hand in hand. By reinforcing our strengths within the Canadian economy we can maximize growth and at the same time respond to the needs for regional development.

The third aspect of the economic development strategy which I believe deserves attention, because it has not been seen—certainly by members of the opposition—is that it indicates and advocates what the government wants, which is a constructive partnership with the private sector in the development of the Canadian economy. For instance, if one turns to page 11 of the economic development strategy, the section on the government and the private sector, one finds it makes clear the predominant role that the government believes the private sector must play in economic expansion. It emphasizes that it is markets, demand or potential demands which must drive the investments and development of productive capacity within the Canadian economy. It is an emphasis on the fact that it is the private sector which is the engine for economic development with the country.

I have said that what the document expresses clearly is the desire for a constructive partnership between government and private sector. I say "partnership" advisedly. While it is certainly true that the private sector must be the motor force in the exploitation of commercial opportunities which face the country, it is equally true that the government must play a positive and constructive role in that process, particularly in the expenditure of its investments for the strengthening of the infrastructure of the country in manpower training, education, transportation and export development assistance.

There is a variety of areas where the government is necessarily active and where those activities must be designed to focus or create a context of support for the kind of private sector development which will provide the country with the growth that it needs. A desire for a constructive partnership between government and the private sector is the principal motivating force which has led this government to undertake an intensive consultation process with the private sector about the ways in which these development objectives can best be met. Indeed, it is a consultation process for the examination and discussion of those objectives to make them more precise so that the private sector and the government together can make sure that their efforts are in harmony, that they are yoked together rather than playing at cross purposes.

I commend the economic strategy to all members of the House. It is not a blueprint or a nuts and bolts design but it is an indication of the direction the government should follow to maximize our economic potential. Indeed, it charts the way the government has already begun to act.

This can be seen in the redefinition departmental responsibilities for economic expansion and in our external conduct of our economic affairs. For example, it can be seen in the renewed and strengthened emphasis that the federal government is giving to the support of the forestry sector in Canada. It can be seen in the emphasis on high technology development which has been reflected by recent decisions of the federal government to increase funding and support for the space industry by something close to $500 million between now and 1985. It certainly can be seen in the kind of support the federal government is giving to the strengthening and enhancement of science and technology and research and development within our country.

I recommend the economic development strategy to hon. members opposite and to all members of the House. I think hon. members opposite would be surprised to discover how much they agree with that strategy if they would only take the time to read it.

I have mentioned the question of research and development policy and I wish to spend a few more moments on that. It was a subject dealt with to some degree by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) who spoke just a few moments ago. I welcomed very much his intervention and discussion of those issues. I only wish that he could have been a little more carefully informed so that he would have had knowledge of the facts. The undoubted fact of which he does not seem to be particularly aware is that the effort, both in terms of funding by the federal government and the effort which has been made within the private sector since this government took office, has moved us considerably closer to the achievement of major objectives in research and development. I would urge the hon. member before he speaks again in debate to look at the brief description which was sent to him a little over a week ago outlining what has happened over the past two years in the research and development area. It is, as my colleague behind me says, a great story of success and accomplishment, but it is not, however, one about which we should be complacent or smug. There is a great deal to be done yet. We are certainly very much on the path to a greatly improved performance, not only on the part of government but on the part of the private sector as well.

Although it can be somewhat tedious to refer to statistics, I would like to cite three of four paragraphs in this report, given the concern expressed by the hon. member opposite. The report entitled The Government of Canada's Investment in Science which, as I said, appeared just over a week ago indicates how well the country is doing compared with the situation we faced two years ago. Statistics Canada has recently estimated that Canada's gross expenditures on research and development have increased by 34 per cent since 1979. That is from something well over $2.5 billion to $3.5 billion in 1981. That means the percentage of our gross national product devoted to research and development has increased in that period from something over 0.9 per cent to 1.07 per cent. It falls short of the objectives that we hope to achieve by 1985 and which I believe we will achieve. It falls short of what would be an ideal objective for us to achieve downstream from that. The important point is that the downward trend in the proportion of expenditure in research and development as compared to the proportion of the gross national product which was evident throughout the 1970s has been arrested and reversed.

The hon. gentleman questioned the degree to which industry was successfully pursuing increased research and development. The fact is that investment in research and development in that industry during that same period of time has risen by 43 per cent to close to $500 million. That is it has risen $1.034 billion to $1.481 billion between 1979 and 1981. In other words, over a 20 per cent growth rate was achieved in 1981. In real terms, these growth rates are higher than in any period since the early 1960s. That is the performance in the private sector.

Federal government expenditure increases have been significant as well. They have increased by some 34 per cent, close to $500 million, over the same period of time. It has been the objective of our policy, clearly described, that the largest increases should be in the private sector, exactly for the reasons upon which I touched earlier in my discussion of an economic development strategy. We want to see the private sector expand its efforts very considerably because we believe the most effective research and development is that research and development which is guided by the demand opportunities, the market possibilities and the capacity to exploit the market place by those who are commercially sensitive.

In one last comment on this matter, perhaps I should touch upon the fact that the federal government clearly has attached great priority to the research and development side, and that is evident when we compare increases in federal expenditures on research and development with other uses of federal government funds. During the last two years research and development expenditures in the natural sciences increased by almost 40 per cent. In the same period the government's total operating and capital expenditures for all departments and agencies increased by about 22 per cent. In other words, expenditures directed toward research and the exploitation and enhancement of science and technology are roughly double the general growth level of government expenditures.

Our concern has been clearly demonstrated. Well over a year ago—in January of 1981—when the five-year spending framework of the federal government in relation to science and technology was presented, we established and described the objectives we hoped the university sector and the private sector would achieve. All that was done in January of 1981. Spending targets were established, and spending objectives for the private university sector were, admittedly, ambitious. Some said we would not be able to attain them. The fact is that over the past two years we have generally met the targets and the critical path of expenditure we described at that point.

As I said earlier to my friend, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), there is no reason for us to remain smug or complacent. I have recently gone to the cabinet with proposals to strengthen our policies which would encourage or entice the expansion of yet further efforts on the part of the private sector. I am happy to be able to say to hon. members that the cabinet has approved the general recommendations we presented and that an action plan for the implementation of those proposals will be worked out over the next few months. Good as the private sector performance has been and good as our support has been, we still believe there is room for improvement in engendering even better private sector performance than there has been to this point.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, today is yet another sad day in a series of sad days because of the announcement by Statistics Canada that unemployment has once again reached a record high level. That level is 9 per cent, or 1,228,000 Canadians out of work. Today is doubly sad because we are not at the end of the trend, we are in the middle of the trend. If one were to look at the economic situation in this country, one would realize that there is not even a light at the end of the tunnel. We know that unemployment will increase next month, unfortunately, and it will do so the month after that and so forth, unless some action is taken.

I was somewhat surprised by a statement made by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Roberts). He mentioned that the government's objective is to enhance productivity. He talked about opportunities and about the private sector. He talked about wanting to expand the efforts of the private sector in order to expand productivity in our economy. It is strange and ironic for a Liberal cabinet minister to utter such high-sounding phrases when it is the present Liberal government which has thrown obstacles in the way of every opportunity to enhance productivity.

The present Liberal government has been in office not just for the last two and a half years but for the last 14 years, and its lack of policies and efforts has strangled opportunities in the productive industrial sector, the manufacturing sector, the agricultural sector, the small business sector; and the list goes on.

One need not look too far back to see how some of these problems developed. One has merely to go back to the November 12 budget to know that as a result of the policies enunciated in that budget nothing but obstacles have been thrown in the way of progress in a country which has all the opportunities the minister just mentioned. We have better opportunities than most nations in the world. Per capita we are the wealthiest nation in natural resources, in human resources and in technological know-how. We should not be comparing ourselves with other nations which are not blessed with these resources and with the potential productive forces we have in Canada, yet what has happened after years of attempts by this government to get the economy moving? Unemployment has reached a staggering level in this country of opportunity. I will cite just a few well-known figures. The current account deficit is $6.6 billion. The deficit in fully manufactured goods—the minister alluded to manufacturing and productivity—is $20.7 billion. Interest and dividends paid to other countries amounted to $7 billion net in 1981 alone. The government spent half a billon dollars in the last month-alone to defend the staggering Canadian dollar. Corporate profits were down 44 per cent in the last quarter of 1981. Manufacturing is operating at its lowest level in 20 years. The list goes on.

Why? It is not because, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said on numerous occasions, the free market or free enterprise system no longer works. It is because the policies, philosophies and programs of this Liberal government do not allow that free enterprise or free market system to operate freely. They strangle it with directives, controls, regulations and a paper-work burden on small business until they strangle and bring the whole economic system and the whole economic base on which this great country of ours was built to their knees.

I repeat that we do not have to go any further for confirmation than that "tremendous" budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) last November 12. Every group of individuals and every organization, be it apolotical, Conservative, New Democratic or Liberal, has condemned the budget. It did not take a step forward to help the employment situation in Canada. Indeed, it took a giant step backward.

Something is wrong when 1.25 million Canadians are unemployed and the government is looking around the world to import labour. Last year 20,000 people were brought in to do special trade jobs, while over a million Canadians were unemployed. There is no program or policy of the Liberal government to deal with the unemployment situation. But worse than that, the programs which exist in specific sectors are not only damaging to the economy of the country but are also fueling unemployment.

If I may, I would like to deal briefly with one very important sector. It is a sector I have been following very closely for the last couple of years. I refer to the automotive industry. In this country the automotive industry is responsible, directly or indirectly, for one out of seven jobs from coast to coast and one out of six jobs in Ontario. In the last year one third of auto assemblers in this country have either lost their jobs or have been laid off and 40 per cent of auto parts manufacturing workers have lost their jobs in the last year. That is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker and it is a typical example of the inaction of this administration. The same holds true for the appliance manufacturers, the textile industry, the show industry and small business, which is probably potentially the largest employer in any economic sector.

What is the government doing about the auto industry, Mr. Speaker? It claims that it is only the opposition that recommends some sort of action. I am not a protectionist, Mr. Speaker, but when one out of seven jobs in Canada is threatened by the virtual demise of the auto industry, then I think the government must take action.

For two and a half years the government has been negotiating with the Japanese, the Americans and the others who are taking over the industry in this country. Any time my colleagues and I raise this question with the ministers who are responsible, they reply that they are still negotiating. They were negotiating two years ago, and one year ago and last month when the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Lumley) went to Japan, they were negotiating. When he came back he said that he was not concerned that the Japanese did not agree with his proposals because they agreed to negotiate again. In the meantime, tens of thousands of jobs are being lost to that industry in this country. There are ways to get around the problem, Mr. Speaker. There are solutions. Nearly every industrialized nation in the world has found a solution.

We all know that the Japanese have taken over a large part of the North American auto market. In fact, 28 per cent of the Canadian automotive market has been taken over by the Japanese, yet this is virtually the only nation in the industrialized world that does not have some sort of agreement with them. Australia has an 85 per cent local content rule for imported cars; the United Kingdom has a limit of ten per cent on Japanese imports; France has a three per cent limit on Japanese imports; Italy has a limit of only 2,000 units; Spain has a 63 per cent local content rule; Brazil has a 95 per cent local content rule, and the United States has just signed an agreement which will hold Japanese imports to a certain level for a three-year period.

All this government is doing is negotiating, Mr. Speaker, but negotiating what? It is just as if a patient were ill in a hospital and the doctors took time to talk about what they would do with him, but in the meantime the patient died. All the talk in the world will not help him then. What a patient needs is immediate action. The government has not taken immediate action, Mr. Speaker. It has been talking for two and a half years. We saw this coming two and a half years ago, Mr. Speaker. The government saw it coming two and a half years ago and the industry saw it coming two an a half years ago.

I am not the only one nor is this party the only party to claim that there are ways the problems can be eliminated or reduced. The Canadian Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association has made very positive recommendations, as has the United Auto Workers Union. I have in my hand a list of resolutions put forward by various town councils, but I shall only put a few on the record. On March 22, 1982, the city of Port Colborne passed a resolution requesting the federal government to limit foreign vehicle imports and to negotiate an agreement to provide for Canadian value-added content of not less than 85 per cent; the city of Oshawa had the same thing as did the town of Lincoln and the city of Thorold. The list goes on and on, Mr. Speaker.

In the city of Windsor where the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) and other member of the government come from, the commissioner of finance was reported recently as admitting that unemployment in the automotive industry was virtually bankrupting the city and saying that the city could no longer afford capital expenditures.

The government has received all these recommendations, Mr. Speaker, yet when the minister and his officials went to Japan they pussyfooted around. The Japanese are good, tough negotiators and they are also good auto manufacturers. This country must take a stand, Mr. Speaker and not be powder-puffed back and forth across the ocean without taking specific action. When negotiations have failed after two and a half years and unemployment is as we see it today, then the government must take unilateral action.

The recommendation being made and followed in virtually every other industrialized nation is that, if need be, the local content of foreign vehicles must be set by legislation. Some may claim that this will increase the cost of the car to the consumer. But that need not be the case if a duty remission is granted. I am not speaking of setting a precedent, Mr. Speaker, because the government already made such an agreement with Volkswagen. A duty remission was given to the German company in return for Canadian content of 85 per cent over a period of four to five years. The only problem with that deal is that Volkswagen has only four per cent of the market in this country. The programs is a good one but it does not mean much in that particular case. It should be applied to the Japanese market as well.

Another approach is to give an incentive to the Japanese to invest in Canada. Oakville, where the Ford Motor Company is situated, is in my constituency of Halton. Tremendous lay-offs and unemployment are being experienced at that plant. As the member for Halton and as a citizen of Oakville, I would not care if a Honda or a Toyota plant were built right next to the Ford plant. As long as Canadians were provided with jobs I would not care. It would help create a healthy economy.

The excuse given by the government is that if it took unilateral action against Japanese imports, then the Japanese would stop buying our natural resources. That is utter hogwash, Mr. Speaker. The Japanese need our natural resources. In fact, many are being sold to them already and they will continue to buy them. When the Australians set the 85 per cent local content—and Australia and Canada are the major suppliers of natural resources to Japan—Japan did not reduce its purchases of natural resources by one cent. Neither would it reduce its purchases of natural resources from Canada, so that is not a problem. In fact our natural resources are creating jobs, productivity and a healthy economy in Japan. Then, more often than not, we turn around and buy at inflated prices finished products which were made from our natural resources. There is something wrong. The government is not taking advantage of our natural resources and coming up with incentives for secondary manufacturing in Canada. If we continue to float aimlessly along the lines of the government as far as the economy is concerned, we will no longer have a productive base and we will lose anything we ever had. A typical example is the automotive industry. I believe that Canada cannot affort to lose the automotive industry, just as it cannot afford to lose the shoe industry, the textile industry or any other industry which makes the economic complex work. We are in the process of losing those industries because of lack of action on the part of the government.

• (1600)

The other day in the standing committee the Minister of State for International Trade admitted that the Japanese were not fair traders. They are not fair traders because they have more regulations and controls on imports into Japan than any other country in the world. Perhaps this is why Japan is so successful. I am not suggesting that we regulate our import situation along the same lines as the Japanese have done. If the minister agrees that the Japanese are not fair traders, how can he continue to negotiate with them? Surely he must take some positive action by taking unilateral steps in Parliament to implement legislation which would disallow or slow down the influx of Japanese automobiles into Canada and save jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jelinek: I thank the House for its unanimous consent. At the outset of my remarks I said that it was a sad day because of the high level of unemployment with which Statistics Canada came out today. I close my remarks by reiterating the fact that it is a sad day indeed for Canada and for Canadians. As the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) asked in his remarks today, have we done everything we can in this country? He went on to indicate that there are forests and lakes which must be rejuvenated, that there are houses to construct, that there is land to cultivate, that there are roads to pave, that there are railroads to build, that there are resources to explore, that there is steel to forge, that there are pipelines to build, that there is land to develop, that there are towns to expand, that there is technology to discover, that there are ships to construct, that there are factories to remodel, that there are bridges to erect, that there is a vast northern wilderness to be tapped and waters to be tamed. To echo what he said, none of these things are being done. With 1,288,000 people unemployed in the country, all these things could be happening. This would employ people and create a healthy economic base for which the country was so famous in the 1950s and 1960s. I urge hon. members of the House and Canadians in my riding and elsewhere to continue to put pressure on the government to take the necessary steps, to bring in incentives, to bring back free enterprise, and to allow the country to grow and prosper again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is the second time in less than a week that I have risen in the House to deal with the economic situation in Canada. I am quite pleased to deal with it, because I think it can be done quite positively, while recognizing that the situation as a whole is not altogether ideal. Just before I rose in the House a while ago, I read once more the motion moved by the opposition and condemning the government for failing to implement all the policies necessary to support directly the shoe and appliances industry. To make sure that I am well understood, I should like hon. members to read again with me the motion presented by the opposition, because I should like to refer constantly to it in my argument. The motion reads, and I quote:

> That this House condemns the government for its chronic failure to implement policies to support the development of a sound industrial sector for Canada, and for the resulting lay-off crisis in every sector of the economy and every region of the country, which has had particularly severe consequences for the auto industry, the resource industry, the energy projects and the producers of consumer goods and appliances.

It is interesting to note that the hon. member's motion seems to suggest that the government has implemented no policy until now and that its failure to act in spite of the economic crisis was the result of a definite political decision on its part. To tease the opposition a little, however, I should like to announce today that the government has selected seven new designated areas for commercial and industrial development under the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. I am in a position to announce today these new designated areas. They are as follows: Trois-Rivières, Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Grand'Mère, Shawinigan, Drummondville, Victoriaville, Plessisville, Sherbrooke, Magog and Valleyfield in the province of Quebec, as well as Cornwall and Hawkesbury in the province of Ontario. Seven communities designated for industrial renewal.

The interesting thing about the opposition motion is that we are now doing precisely what it asks. We are implementing programs that will provide, not short-term job creation, but long-term job creation based on the processing of our raw materials, the development of our natural resources, in order to build what the previous speaker spoke of a moment ago, that is, bridges, railroads, highways; in short, to build the country. I am sure all members, including the cabinet and the people of Canada, are agreed on the ideal proposed here, that is, to get our country under construction, to put our people to work. But what is surprising about the other side is that, when we decide to build for the generations to come, the service facilities required to develop the economy, the railroads, the airports, the wharves, which all require additional expenditures, they complain about the deficit. So, on the one hand, they say: Hurry up and bring our economy into the twentieth century, hurry up and invest. On the other hand, they say: do not increase the deficit. Now, if one truly wants to build, not for the next election, but for future generations, one naturally has to borrow because those facilities, those economic tools we are about to build will be useful and practical for a period of one to four generations. Their cost, the cost of that economic infrastructure, that industrial revival must therefore be spread over a period of several years. That obviously explains the deficit. What matters here, which everyone recognizes, is being able to control the deficit, making sure that it is not useless and accumulated merely for the fun of spending public funds. That is what really matters and we all agree. What does cause concern and worry, however, if when opposition parties, strictly for partisan purposes, try to block the programs that are being offered the people merely for the sake of blocking them. Some very substantial amounts of money have been released and are now only starting to be used to help workers.

• (1610)

I come from an area in deep economic trouble. The economy there depends on the iron ore industry, whether in Schefferville, Gagnon, Fermont, Port-Cartier or Sept-Îles. The situation there is extremely difficult and, let us make no secret of it, there are people who are experiencing tragedies because of those difficulties. Last week I told the House that even if the government were willing to invest huge amounts of money in those companies for modernization or expansion, it could not put back on the rails industries based on iron ore, on raw material mining, because world markets are scarce, and I refer again to the Iron Ore of Canada, the Sidbec North Mine, the Wabush Mine, and the Quebec Cartier Mining Company. Everybody knows the companies' presidents are not to be blamed for the slack, nor the government, as north shore industries happen to be extremely modern and efficient, and their productivity is fantastic. Telling Canadians they can always rely on the government for solutions is a deceit. It was still worse when the resolution was introduced. The motion now under consideration has been proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party. In the iron ore industry, I had the opportunity to work with the president of the Iron Ore company and I can vouch that none of the plans which could be brought forward could have satisfied that company, not because the company or the workers rejected them, but because world economic conditions were practically impossible. And those are economic and financial facts of the economic market.

Evidently, there are other sectors, which I shall deal with presently, but I wanted to give an example to show that regardless of the means available, you have to wait for an improvement in world conditions. And to pretend the contrary, is literally to deceive people. We are very sensitive. That area on the north shore was one of the first to be designated and the government made considerable grants available to many companies. In Port-Cartier, the ITT company closed when the Progressive Conservative Party was in power but I will not say that party is to be blamed for the closure because it is not so; nor is it on account of us that it is still open. We should be honest in such discussions, but hon. members opposite systematically like to pile it on. Despite the fact that large subsidies were made available to enable other companies to take over the plant, only two were interested. Once again, when the financial analysis is completed, the federal and provincial governments will have to co-operate very closely to ensure the recovery of that mill. Once again it is a matter of supply and demand and whether you belong to the Progressive Conservative, New Democratic or Liberal Party, it is necessary to work with all the economic powers involved. However, you should not suggest that there was no program to restore economic conditions in Port-Cartier or to help mining industries in northern towns—such programs do exist—but you should also admit that politics as well as economics have their limitations. The other side would like us to believe that if they were on this side or we on the other, they could completely change the entire situation. I listened earlier to the hon. member of Joliette (Mr. La Salle) as he lamented the situation, but made no concrete proposals. On the other hand, earlier today, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) gave some examples of concrete ways in which the government is trying to bring about an economic recovery, and more important, to find an approach to industrial renewal.

He talked about Sorel-Tracy, which is included in a designated area along with Sorel in order to give a new impetus to shipbuilding. He talked about Port-Cartier-Sept-Îles for its pulp and paper industry, about Schefferville's ore, as I mentioned a moment ago, about Sydney, Nova Scotia, for its metal primary processing, about Windsor, Ontario for its automotive assembly lines and parts, about Brantford, also in Ontario, for its farm equipment, about Chatham, also in Ontario, for its automotive parts, about L'Islet-Montmagny, for its leisure vehicles and home appliances, about Asbestos, for its mining and about Kitchener-Waterloo for its automotive assembly lines.

Those are not temporary jobs only. With the industrial renewal well under way thanks to incentives and programs designed to update those industries, there will be job opportunities for the young, the old and the natives—for the members who have some in their riding—because it is imperative to find ways of enabling them to develop in society with the same advantages others have. I have just given a list of concrete measures and designated areas, but it is impossible to ensure a recovery of this nature in only two or three months' time. A somewhat longer period is needed. It is important to keep those factors in mind when talking about economics. It is argued that nothing is being done. Today, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion made an announcement regarding a factory in Moncton. The department has given a $65,000 grant to help Co-op Atlantic Feed Mill in Moncton update their facilities, thus allowing 47 jobs to be saved. That is a concrete measure. But, of course, it bothers people to hear about concrete situations; it is always more interesting to chase theoretical problems, to try to forget what works and emphasize what does not. That is politically more profitable, and besides, it is quite fair. It is important for the government to show there is another side to the one presented by those opposite.

In St. Quentin, in Quebec, a further amount of $140,000 is provided to promote marketing. This program will permit the creation of new manufacturing and processing facilities. What the country needs is a more modern, efficient economic structure to put more people to work and help the economy. The programs are there and, once again, it is clear in the motion from the opposition that what I have just told you is literally denied. It is clearly indicated, and I quote:

> That this House condemn the government for its chronic failure to implement policies to support the development of a sound industrial sector for Canada—

The opposition denies what I have just pointed out. Other elements could say more. The work-sharing program in the Department of Employment and Immigration has been implemented since March 25, 1982, it involves $220 million. The program was announced at the very beginning of the year and by April 2, 1982, 536 applications from companies had been approved, and this will enable 29,292 workers to keep their jobs on a shorter working week basis, and even more important this program prevented 12,805 more workers from being laid-off. Many other applications were sent to the department, and they are being processed.

• (1620)

Twelve thousand people were able to keep their jobs as a result of the implementation of a flexible program under which they can work a shorter week while still getting full pay. This program is interesting because it is optional, which means that you are free to accept it or refuse it. It is also open to discussion which makes consultations and adjustments possible. These are important elements which I should like, as time is running out to compare with what happens in Quebec. Under their present government, Quebecers often complain that governments do not do enough for industry and often blame the federal government for all their problems. For example la Société d'amiante du Québec which is now owned by the Quebec government is neither a private company nor is it run by the federal government. Is it in good shape? Not at all.

This asbestos plant which was bought by the Quebec government has temporarily ceased its operations because of a glut on the market, of stocks piling up and because this material is hard to sell on world markets. However, it is a government-owned company. In Port-Cartier, SIDBEC which is 51 per cent owned by the Quebec government has difficulties finding markets for its products. Yet the federal government has nothing to do with it. The Quebec government in good faith took over a company called Tricofil, which folded up due to the lack of demand. It is a matter of competition. It is a different problem. The fact that a company is owned by the government does not make it necessarily more profitable nor does it open up new markets. The only factor involved is the cost-output ratio in a world situation which should normally be positive. These are significant factors to consider for an understanding of this phenomenon.

Training young people is another factor, as I explained again last week, and the various governments have an obligation to see that training programs are implemented to enable the young people to be really employed, because at the present time, in spite of a 9 per cent unemployment rate in Canada, we are importing labour from abroad. Why? Because we do not have enough skilled workers here. Why? Because, to a large extent, our provincial training programs are not adapted to the labour market. However, it is somewhat ironic that we do have such high unemployment in Canada and that this government has to import labour. Those elements have to be considered within the whole problem. Sure enough, everyone, and we in particular, is suffering from high interest rates. I think that no one would deliberately want to maintain those rates. But ask the experts; there are many differences as to how to set interest rates and at what levels.

Just look at what happened in England or in France, in spite of a so-called socialist government. Unemployment is rising. The value of the French franc has considerably decreased on the exchange market. Of course, if we consider the Canadian problem as such, there seems to be no way out, which is bad enough, but if we compare it with other countries, we see that this problem is less serious and that we have many more alternatives than other countries. And this is the important point. On the other hand, if the government did not do anything, the opposition parties and the people would be justified in demanding programs and more specific job creation programs.

However, we have programs under way and for observers of the political and economic situation, Canada offers very concrete projects that will be implemented shortly, as the opposition is well aware. The opposition is constantly whining. It is as if a surgeon, after making his diagnosis, started to cry over his patient's illness instead of gripping his scalpel firmly to operate. After convalescing, the patient will thank him for having had the courage to do so. In fact, it takes a lot of courage for this government to implement the measures that we have taken, but we know very well that the health of our country depends on it and that a few months or a few years from now, the people will be very glad that the government showed courage when required. On the other side, they cry over the present sad state of affairs. On this side, we have made a diagnosis and we are trying to find a way of making our country feel better. So, Mr. Speaker, I shall simply conclude by saying that as a parliamentary secretary and a citizen of this country, I share the concern of the opposition parties regarding the economic problems, but we have short-term and long-term measures that will be much more beneficial than all their whining, and I am convinced that we shall continue to build this country in spite of our differences.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am glad the motion before us today deals with the question of the economy. It says quite categorically that this House condemns the government for its economic policies. Clearly, if there is any time when a government should be condemned for its economic policies, now is the time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? Well, as everyone knows, today the unemployment statistics were issued by Statistics Canada, and for the first time, certainly that I can remember, when we look at the real unemployment statistics which include those people who are discouraged and no longer seeking employment, we now have 1,913,000 unemployed in Canada, almost two million people, and if there is any justification for condemning the government's economic policies, that is it.

In additon, if we look at the unemployment statistics on a regional basis, the unadjusted unemployment rate in every province of Canada has gone up. It is not only the unadjusted rates which have gone up. The province of Newfoundland is one exception in which the seasonally adjusted statistics for unemployment fell by some five tenths of 1 per cent. However, we find that the seasonally adjusted rate still remains at a high of 14.2 per cent in all other regions, from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia. The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment in this country has gone up. If we look at unemployment by age groups, for example, we find the unadjusted rates for those between the ages of 15 and 24 have gone up, reaching a high today of 18.4 per cent. For those over the age of 25, the unadjusted unemployment rate has gone up to 8 per cent.

If we break down the population in the country on the basis of sex, even these statistics demonstrate that all unemployment rates are going up. For example, with regard to unadjusted unemployment rates for men, the rates have risen from 10 per cent in February to 10.8 per cent in March. For women, the unemployment rates have risen from 9.2 per cent in February to 10 per cent in March.

If we look at the seasonally adjusted statistics on the basis of sex, just to give the government a chance to see whether we are playing with statistics or revealing the social reality, we find that unemployment rates have risen to 9.5 per cent for women and to 8.7 per cent for men.

Mr. Heap: It is shameful, however you look at it.

Mr. Keeper: If one looks at the statistics today for regions which are hardest hit, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, we find that real unemployment rates—that is, those rates which include people who have given up on the job market and have given up on government policy—range from 21.2 per cent in Quebec to a sky-high rate of 31 per cent in Newfoundland.

The fact is that real unemployment statistics today show that there are two million unemployed people in this country. This is reflected in all regions of the country, in all sub-groups, whether by age or by sex, and in all provinces. This is not a specialized phenomenon. This is not simply a matter of some opposition members playing with statistics. This is a true, tragic reflection of a social reality which, in large part, has been brought about by the insane, insensitive and stupid economic policies of this government.

As a result of the economic statistics which became available today, I took the opportunity to challenge the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in the House with regard to unemployment. I merely wanted to know from him just how high unemployment must go before the government recognizes the folly of its economic policies, changes those economic policies, and seeks to stimulate the economy so as to create jobs for all Canadians. His response was sad. He said that the question was rhetorical. He said, "We are doing everything within our power to assist." He gave specific examples. He mentioned the housing industry in which he claimed that the government was creating 40,000 jobs. He mentioned the use of the unemployment insurance fund, in which he once again claimed an equivalent number of jobs were being created. He mentioned the announcement of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) that the government has created 25,000 to 40,000 jobs. If we are very generous with the government and accept those statistics as face value, we find a total of 120,000 jobs created, in the words of the Minister of Finance, at a time when the statistics clearly show that almost two million people are unemployed in this country. The response of the government is clearly inadequate and weak, and it simply does not meet the needs of Canadians.

The minister went on to say in his response, "We are doing everything possible within the means at our disposal to assist the unemployed in Canada." That was an interesting statement from the Minister of Finance and the chief economic architect of the Liberal government. Why on earth is he able to say, with almost two million people unemployed, that the government is doing all that it can when, using his own response, it has created 120,000 new jobs at the most? Why is he able to say that? Why does he believe that? I am sure that the minister is an honest man. I can only conclude that it relates to the way he sees the world and the economy, and his economic philosophy. I think that that economic philosophy was quite readily reflected in recent statements by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey. In the issue of The Globe and Mail dated April 7, 1982, Mr. Bouey's sentiments were expressed. The article quoted Mr. Bouey as saying that Canadians must be prepared to take a cut in living standards to combat unemployment, inflation and recession. Yesterday, Bank of Canada Governor Gerald Bouey said:

> I am sometimes asked . . . how high does the rate of unemployment have to go, how many foreclosures have to occur, before the bank will give up its policy of monetary restraint.

His response was very much like the response given to me by the Minister of Finance. They will stick by their economic theories and philosophies. They refuse to do anything to help Canadian people when they need help and jobs. Why? It is because of the central economic philosophy, and the governor is quoted quite clearly in The Globe and Mail. In fact, he is quoted as having listed the following to be detriments to the creation of employment: government regulation, marketing boards and the minimum wage. He quotes these as being anti-market culprits. Therefore, what he is really saying is that he is a believer in the unregulated market and believes that the unregulated market will somehow create wealth and jobs for Canadians. That is clearly not working today. These are not the times for believers in economic theory. These are not the times for the Friedmans and Reaganites of the world, the people who, through some unexamined belief in an economic theory, continue to steer the ship of state into troubled waters and to abandon Canadians without care. They are operating on the basis of a belief in an economic theory rather than on the basis of social reality.

If only they would look at what is happening in the economy, if only they would look at what is happening to people and if only they would read the statistics produced by their own government departments which demonstrate the fact that unheard numbers of people are unemployed today, they would find that a change in economic policy is required in order to get those people back to work. They must re-examine their belief and take some pragmatic, caring action in order to meet the needs of Canadians. However, instead of a rational, humane, objective, openminded look at economic matters, what we get from this government is not only statements of philosophical commitment from the Minister of Finance, but the public relations exercises of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) as well. He has now become the front man for this Liberal government. What has he done as the front man? Quite simply, he goes around setting up smokescreens and he does this by holding press conferences every couple of weeks in which he announces some new "job creation" measures.

• (1640)

Mr. de Jong: He announces them every time.

Mr. Keeper: And he goes on reshuffling existing funds. When we look closely at some of the announcements we find this. In one he has said there will be a $200 million effort. That was $200 million for job creation. When we look closely, what we find is that there is only $20 million in there which had to do with direct job creation, one tenth of the figure announced.

A couple of weeks later, he made another $200 million announcement with regard to mining and forestry. When we examined that closely, we found there was only some 50 million new dollars in that package over a two-year period. These are inflated announcements. They are attempts by the government to set up a smokescreen behind which it can hide so that it does not have to face the economic realities which ordinary Canadians have to face in their day to day lives.

But this is not the end of these public relations gimmicks. Yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration held a national conference on work-sharing in which he was expressing his enthusiasm and his feelings that work-sharing was a success. That is like saying that unemployment insurance is a success because there are so many people on it. The fact that people need help is a demonstration of the failure of the economic policies of the government, and not of their success.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: The work-sharing, using the minister's own figures, has been able to help 13,600 people to retain their jobs. Well, I am sure that for those 13,600 individuals that is a welcome measure, but for the other real, though not official, two million Canadians who remain unemployed, it is a pitiful response, inadequate and insensitive. It is simply a public relations gesture, it is not an economic response, it is not a compassionate response; it is an attempt to use the media to protect the government from the anger of Canadians at a time when that anger is justified.

Mr. de Jong: Right on.

Mr. Keeper: While we have the Minister of Finance making his philosophical statements and the minister of employment engaging in his public relations exercises, what is going on in the economy, what is happening in Canada? Well, if we look at it closely, Mr. Speaker, we can see quite clearly what is happening. I am going to quote from some objective sources. I will quote from The Globe and Mail of Tuesday, April 6, 1982. The picture that we find is that Canada is suffering from the worst economic crisis since 1947. The Conference Board of Canada recently did a survey of the findings of economic forecasters. I quote from The Globe and Mail:

> Canada is gripped by what is probably the worst recession since 1947 and unemployment will remain at near record levels for the rest of the year, according to a survey of 18 economic forecasters.

The report in The Globe and Mail goes on to say:

> The Conference Board of Canada survey found most forecasters much more pessimistic about 1982's economic rate and unemployment prospects than they were last fall yet no more hopeful about the chances for bringing down inflation.

The significance of that last phrase is that every action by this government is justified in the name of fighting inflation. Clearly, inflation is not going down, their policies are not working, so why do they not re-examine them and why do they not consider the people who need work now?

It is not only the Conference Board of Canada that draws this picture of the economy for us. We go to a government agency, Statistics Canada. They indicate quite clearly that there is no end in sight to the recession in the following statement:

> There is still no end in sight for the current economic recession, according to the government's chief statistical agency. In fact, the few indicators that surfaced in last month's report suggesting that the economy might improve have practically vanished.

I go on to some solutions they suggest:

> One way the government could pull the economy out of the recession is by lowering the value of the dollar hence making exports more competitive on the world markets.

A little further on, report says:

> The Bank of Canada has warned that it will not relent on its tight money policy, that it will not allow the dollar to decline, it has pushed up its lending rate slightly to 15.40 per cent from 15.32 per cent.

They are not willing to accept or consider changes in policy but they are willing to push up the interest rates and thereby up the inflation rate and thereby put more people on the unemployment rolls.

It is not just the members of this party here who are drawing a gloomy picture of the economy. It is objective agencies of the government and the community who point out that we are in an economic crisis. But is this economic crisis one that is as the Minister of Finance described it, an international crisis under which we have no influence or no control? Must it always be and is it an act of God? Is it an act of fate? Is it an historical inevitability? Must we continue in this sea of troubles with no hope for relief?

We probably must, if we share the economic philosophy of the government, if we believe, as the government seems to believe, in an unregulated free market economy.

I believe somewhat differently, Mr. Speaker. I believe in a mixed economy but I also believe that the government can take hold of the economy, can make the economy serve the needs of the people and can provide employment. That is not only a philosophical position that I take in saying that, it is also a philosophical posture that can be translated into practical proposals.

I want to refer to a comprehensive proposal that was made by the leader of our party recently, which is described as "a new employment option for Canada". There are five parts to it. Quite simply, it is a practical, humane suggestion to the government as to how we can get the economy moving again and get Canadians back to work. I will describe it fairly briefly and quickly, but I would like to get the essence of it across to the government so that it can realize that it is possible to do something about the economy and to do something now.

The first point focuses upon the domestic Canadian economy and really says that what we have to do in Canada is be willing to negotiate production agreements in key economic sectors such as machinery and transportation. We have to negotiate production agreements with multinational corporations. We have to say, "okay, if you want a piece of our market"—and that is why they are here, they want a piece of our market—"then you have to do a fair share of the manufacturing in Canada, you have to provide Canada with a fair share of the jobs."

Mr. de Jong: That would be a good start.

Mr. Keeper: If they are not willing to do that, then we have to be willing to use some lever in order to convince them that we are serious in these negotiations, that we are prepared to look at measures such as emergency surcharges, look at measures including subsidies and various kinds of tax measures in order to convince the multinationals that we are serious about providing employment for Canada and that when we enter into negotiations for jobs for Canadians, we mean it.

Mr. de Jong: And make them for the autoworkers.

Mr. Keeper: Exactly. The second point of this New Employment Option relates to the export market and it points out that countries like France and West Germany provide all sorts of assistance for their export industries and that we need to do a similar kind of thing here in Canada. We have to underwrite the risks faced by our exporters and, we have to provide a comprehensive coverage of production, credit, accident, commercial, exchange rate, inflation and market development risks. In other words, we have to use the government to put our export industries on a competitive footing with the rest of the industrial world. The third point in this new employment option relates to tax cuts. We want to provide an immediate tax cut for low and middle-income Canadians.

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I understand that the hon. member may wish to continue, but his time has expired. I would have to seek, on his behalf, the unanimous consent of the House to permit him to continue for a moment or two. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will wind up very quickly. The third measure in this employment package relates to tax cuts. The fourth measure relates to housing. The fifth relates to interest rates. I will not go into the details of these measures now because my time has run out.

Quite simply, I wanted to point out that rather than adopting these sort of practical proposals and putting them into action, what is happening in Canada is that more and more Canadians are on the welfare rolls. In fact, today there have been estimates that 250,000 of those Canadians on the welfare rolls are, in fact, employable Canadians. What we have in Canada today is a policy of putting workers on welfare. What we need is a policy for putting workers back to work. We must get the government to start working on the economy so Canadians can get back to work and earn a decent living. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting listening to the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) speaking on the economy and what government must do in order to create conditions for a fast growing and highly productive economy. However, I think the hon. member must realize, as all of us must to a great extent, that this does not depend entirely on the government. The government cannot make the economy work by snapping its fingers or by saying that it should work. It requires co-operation from all the players in the economic system. It takes co-operation from labour, from the business community and it certainly takes co-operation from governments.

In some cases in the past, government policies at the federal and provincial level have not been as effective as we would have liked them to be in promoting growth and development. Governments have recognized that fact and have attempted to modify policies in order to try to improve them.

For example, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Roberts) indicated earlier that we realize that research and development in Canada is below what we would like to see it, below what other nations have achieved and below where we think it should be. Indeed, the government has brought forward policies to try to improve the situation and increase the amount of research and development. There have been many initiatives taken recently to try to improve research and development.

Since I am from Ottawa I know for a fact that those policies are in place and have been of assistance and are, indeed, creating an environment in which research and development can grow much faster than it has in the past. Although we do not necessarily like the term, people from outside of Ottawa have called it "silicone valley north", referring to the Ottawa Valley with its high technology industry which has grown from virtually nothing. It started out of the Bell Northern research labs and the Bell Canada research labs which were located here. People who worked in those labs spun out of that industry and developed their own companies like Mitel, Gandalf, Nabu and other companies.

Mr. de Jong: What about the west?

Mr. Evans: They have developed in the west. There are Bell Northern labs and there is other high technology research and development and production happening in Saskatoon. It is happening in New Brunswick now with Mitel which has just built a new plant in a high unemployment region. We are seeing growth and development in the high technology industry and government policies are indeed assisting. Telidon is a good example as well as Telesat, the Canadarm, the space program and all kinds of initiatives being taken by the government to build for the industries of the future.

What we are hearing today is a paranoid fear of the future and a fear for the status quo, for the here and now. If all we can do in the House is attempt to find ways to protect the status quo and not turn our attention to how to build a better future for Canada and how to redistribute the resources we have from the status quo to plan for the future, we will always remain where we are now and not improve. We will not see rising standards of living in Canada. What Canadians want are rising standards of living, and it seems to me that the debate today has not focused on that question. It has not focused on how to change gears and shift ourselves into the new areas for the future and what the future will be.

One of the hon. members opposite who spoke earlier today talked about the automobile industry and Japan. I think one of his comments was very telling. It was that the Japanese consider the automobile industry to be an industry of the past. Where are they going from there? They are going into microprocessors and high technology industries. I believe that comment was made by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) who, I might say, gave a very good speech on high technology. He is quite knowledgeable about research and development. That is the area which the Japanese and French are developing and it is where we should be heading. In fact, we are moving in that direction, but we must move faster.

This means that we will need resources. If we spend all of our resources and the wealth which the government has available to it—that wealth which comes from the pockets of the taxpayers—on protecting the status quo, we will not have that money to inject into the industries of the future in order to build for the future. I can guarantee you that over time the standard of living in this country will go down instead of up.

Mr. de Jong: They have been going down.

Mr. Evans: We heard the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) talk about the automobile industry. The impression he gave me was that the plight of the automobile industry is entirely the government's fault and if the government would do something different, do this or that, then the situation of the automobile industry would improve overnight. Obviously, that is nonsense.

The reasons for the plight of the automobile industry are complex. Its costs are out of line. They have not modernized their plant equipment or kept up with world competition. Certainly there are some problems and perhaps there are regulations on the automobile industry which make it unable to adapt as well as it might if some of those regulations were not there. If that is the case, I would like to hear it. However, we have not heard about it today.

Where is the responsibility of the management of those companies and indeed where is the responsibility of the labour unions whose salaries and wages are very high relative to other industrial workers in Canada and certainly to those who work in automobile industries in other countries?

Where is the responsibility of the Canadian unions to respond to the difficulties of the North American auto industry, as their brothers in the United States have responded? Do we not have a responsibility in Canada to look realistically at our problems and try to do something about them? It certainly seems to me that we do have that responsibility. This problem is not being viewed realistically by labour and management. What is being asked for through quotas or tariffs is simply that all Canadians reduce their standard of living a bit in order to protect that industry.

We hear hon. members talk about protection. I believe that the hon. member for Halton indicated that he was not a protectionist, but indeed he is because that is what he was talking about.

One of our great faults is that we do not read our history. It may be due to time pressures that hon. members do not read their history, but if we remember our history and ask why the depression of the 1930s occurred and what kept the fist of depression at the people's throats, you find it was protectionism. That is how the depression of the 1930s started and that is why it took so long to emerge from it. We did not at the time recognize what a terrible effect protectionist policies have on economic development. We are a trading nation. We are one of the greatest trading nations in the world. We of all people should know the detrimental effects of protectionism.

• (1700)

Mr. Manly: What is causing today's depression?

Mr. Evans: The Smoot-Hawley tariff in the United States is an example. The depression of the thirties has been attributed in large measure to the introduction of the Smoot-Hawley tariff, which cut off trade with other countries and caused their economies to fall as a result of not being able to penetrate the U.S. market. Then U.S. manufacturers did not have markets in which to sell their products because of the depressed nature of the other economies. The whole system spiralled downwards.

Now we are hearing the same thing. We are hearing cries from the United States, cries from this chamber and cries from European countries for protectionism. We are being told that that is the way to preserve jobs here in Canada, in the United States or in France. What will happen is that the whole system will spiral downwards.

Mr. Manly: That is what it is doing.

Mr. Evans: If we want a much more serious recession than we have now, we should just keep calling for protection, because that is how to do it. There can be no doubt about that. We are all better off and our standards of living rise when we have openness and trade among nations. "You do what you do best, we do what we do best and we can exchange", and we will all be better off for it. That is totally obvious.

Mr. Manly: And you go downhill.

Mr. Evans: We do not have to go downhill. Members of the New Democratic Party are absolute pessimists about the ability of the Canadian economy to respond to economic reality. We have done exceptionally well over the last 30 or 40 years.

Mr. de Jong: How come we are in the mess we are in?

Mr. Evans: We have done very well in adapting to market realities, and we will continue to do so.

Let us look at Canada in the world context. We are having difficulties. No one denies we are having economic difficulties, but the difficulties we have in Canada in most cases are not as severe as they are in most other nations in the world. That is the fact of the matter. We should not debate our problems in this chamber as if we were isolated in our own shell when in fact 30 per cent of our gross national product is traded with other nations.

I was in Vancouver last month talking to the Council of Forest Industries, senior executives of all the major forest product companies in the west, and the Council of Mining Industries, senior mining executives in the west. I asked them what the government could do in fiscal and monetary policy to make their lives better and what the government could do to obviate lay-offs and shutdowns.

Mr. Parker: Ask the workers.

Mr. Evans: Do hon. members know what their answer was? "Not a thing". There is no action the Canadian government could take right now to prevent lay-offs and shutdowns because the markets we sell into outside this country have closed down. If we cannot sell our forest products in the United States, there will be lay-offs and shutdowns, and there is nothing the Canadian government can do to prevent that.

Mr. Parker: Build some housing in Canada.

Mr. Evans: If we cannot sell our zinc, our copper, our lead or our aluminum into the United States and other markets, there is nothing the Canadian government can do; there will be lay-offs. If we sell 80 per cent of our automobiles into the U.S. market and the Americans are not buying cars, there is nothing the Canadian government can do to prevent lay-offs.

Mr. Keeper: Lay yourself off.

Mr. de Jong: If you can't do anything, resign.

Mr. Evans: These obvious point-blank and blunt facts of life have to be recognized by members of the House, and certainly by members who sit in the corner opposite.

There are some very serious and difficult questions facing this country and other countries, but I suggest in a non-partisan spirit that the main issues facing us are not economic in a monetary and fiscal policy sense. The real underlying and fundamental problems in this country are not interest rates, unemployment or inflation. Contrary to what hon. members opposite believe, I, along with people in the economics profession, business people and political people, know the mechanics of how to come to grips with our problems. Those mechanical solutions would work. We could eradicate inflation overnight and bring interest rates down overnight, but the nub of the issue is distribution costs. The costs, in terms of human lives, associated with getting inflation down fast and with getting interest rates down fast are extraordinarily high, and the gut-wrenching issue with which politicians here and in the legislatures across the country have to come to grips is how to make those distributive decisions. How will we come to grips with the issue of how to distribute the costs of the transition from an economy that is sick to an economy that is healthy and growing fast? There will have to be redistributive decisions. How can we come to grips with the problems we all know we face? We know we have unemployment and labour shortages at the same time.

Mr. Keeper: Elect the NDP.

Mr. Evans: How can we come to grips with the issue of high unemployment in the maritimes and labour shortages in the west without asking people to uproot their lives and move across the country?

Mr. Keeper: Elect the NDP.

Mr. Evans: How can we come to grips with the problems of a person who has worked for 30 years and has certain skills but the industry in which he is working is dying? How should we help that person move from a dying industry into a new trade or a new skill?

Mr. Keeper: Elect the NDP.

Mr. Evans: Those are the gut-wrenching issues with which we have failed to come to grips in the debates we have had on this subject. We have not talked about those issues, and until we do we will not be able to solve our problems. We have to have some way to come to grips with how we are to help people adjust to the future.

Mr. Keeper: Elect the NDP.

Mr. Evans: How are we to put an equitable tax system in place which ensures that all Canadians bear their fair share of the costs of government and the costs of assisting industries to move from where they are now to where they certainly will have to be five or ten years from now? Those are the issues. We can sit here and argue about inflation and interest rates, but we have to come to grips with those distributive issues, and we have to find out how we can help people.

The individual person is the person about whom we are all concerned, and nobody in the House has a corner on compassion. We are all here because we want to do something for our constituents. We want to do something for Canadians. We want to give something of ourselves to make life a little better in this country. If we did not want that, we would not be here. No one has a corner on compassion. The issues with which we must come to grips are the distributive issues. In a debate like this we should be talking about those issues. What is the best way to help people? My friend spoke earlier about Victoriaville. My wife's family is from Victoriaville, Quebec. The amount of unemployment there is enormous. The rate is 60 per cent or 70 per cent. Victoriaville is a town with a textile industry which is going under. It is a town with a furniture industry which has faced great difficulties. I hope hon. members will comment on this issue. I am sure the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) will.

Mr. Wright: I am waiting.

Mr. Evans: The answer to the problem is not to protect or to try to protect an industry which will face competitive pressures year after year. Those pressures will become more intense. The question is how we can help the community and the people in it.

Mr. Keeper: Elect the NDP.

Mr. Evans: How can we help them adjust to the new realities and the industries of the future? How can we help people move from low-paying jobs in certain industries, which are fading and dying, into jobs with a future, high pay and better standards of living? Those are the issues that we should be discussing, Mr. Speaker. We can rail at each other about inflation and high interest rates, and say, "You blame us, we blame you", and when the day is over nothing is accomplished, or we can try to come to grips with the real issue, that is people issues, Mr. Speaker. People issues are not solved by throwing more money at them.

• (1710)

I do not want to be unfair to the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James or to accuse him of saying things that he did not say, but it seemed to me that he was saying that government could solve a problem by throwing more money at it. I can guarantee that will not solve a problem, Mr. Speaker. That would only lead to bigger deficits, higher interest rates, higher inflation and reduce our competitive position. It would mean that we would not be able to trade effectively in the world and would bring about declining standards of living. That is not what he wants, it is not what I want and it is not what any Canadian wants. The government is trying to take a more medium-term outlook at our economic situation and to come to grips with the economic issues.

I beseech hon. members opposite to try to make a positive, useful contribution that will help us with these problems. I ask them to think about these distributive issues and help us develop policies that will result in Canadians becoming better off, not worse off.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, we all know now how insensitive the Liberals are when a member can actually stand up in the House and tell us that unemployment and high interest rates are not a problem. It makes some of us wonder what we are doing here.

There are no other issues, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member can talk all he wants about adjusting to the future and about fear of the future. The hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) gave us the typical "on the one hand and on the other hand" approach.

We all recognize the problems that exist across the country, Mr. Speaker. If we go to Newfoundland we find that up to 50 per cent of fishermen are unemployed, but the hon. member for Ottawa Centre says that is not a problem. If we go to New Brunswick we find that 50 per cent of people in the forestry industry are unemployed, but the hon. member for Ottawa Centre says that is not a problem. If we go to Quebec we find that over 30 per cent of the manufacturing industry is unemployed, but the hon. member for Ottawa Centre says that is not important. If we go to Ontario we find that at least 30 per cent of the automobile industry is unemployed, but the hon. member for Ottawa Centre says that is not important. He says that is not the issue, that things are far more complicated than that.

If we go to the prairies we find that the agricultural industry is on its knees because of the policies of the government. We find people in the pork industry going bankrupt and people in the beef industry going bankrupt. That is not important, says the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. If we go to B.C.—

Mr. Evans: You are misleading the House.

Mr. Wright: —we find 50 per cent of people in the forest industry unemployed, but the hon. member for Ottawa Centre says that it is not important.

Mr. Evans: That is not true. I said it was important. You are the one who is saying it is not important.

Mr. Wright: The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is not here this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to draw attention to some misleading information that he gave to the House on another occasion. The estimates for 1981-82 showed that $120 million would be spent on summer student programs. Actually, in 1981-82 $100 million was spent. Then the 1982 estimates showed that the government was going to spend $100 million on that program. That is when the minister said he was going to create $20 million worth of summer jobs for students. He claimed that was an increase, but in fact he will not spend as much as he spent last year when there was close to eight per cent unemployment in the country. That is the type of thing we have to put up with, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is not in the House this afternoon either. I lived in his riding 25 years ago and at that time the unemployment rate was 25 per cent. It is still 25 per cent, Mr. Speaker. Just the other day he told the House that he would let his record stand. Statistics show that the highest number of government grants—and Liberal MPs get most of them—have gone to his riding. He provides grants, subsidies and promises to his constituency, but little else.

I should like to deal with a rather contentious issue now, Mr. Speaker, namely, the life insurance industry. The Minister of Finance stated in the budget that he was going to tax accrued income on life insurance. The industry took him to task and asked him to produce the figures that this proposition was based on. He said it was based on a typical life insurance policy and that he could back up his figures. I wrote to him and asked whether that typical life insurance policy was a participating or a non-participating policy, what insurance company rate book was used, what year it was compiled, if it was a Canadian or a foreign company, and so on. Mr. Speaker, there is no typical life insurance policy and the minister cannot produce one. The life insurance industry has been trying to get the information for three months, and I have not received a reply to my letter of March 1. The minister cannot produce a typical life insurance policy, and that is only one of the many things that was completely false about the budget.

The area in and around Trenton, Nova Scotia, has approximately 25,000 people, one thousand of whom are unemployed because the Minister of Finance refuses to help. It is not a Liberal riding. The car works at Trenton has been there for 70 or 80 years, but the minister does not understand its importance.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) has said that he will help people who have to renew their mortgages. He is not going to help very many but he is going to provide some help. He is going to provide some help to the rental construction industry, but not much help. He is going to provide some help to those who are renovating homes, but not much help. It is interesting that he is not going to provide any help for first time home owners. How can someone who is going to purchase a home for the first time, and perhaps just qualifies for a mortgage at 18 or 19 per cent, also face the uncertainty of a variable interest rate mortgage? Surely the minister understands that the average person cannot face that situation. That is why very few people can purchase a home for the first time. It is a sad fact that the Minister of Public Works never addressed the problems of high interest rates and unemployment.

Turning to the housing industry, the average starts for 1982 will amount to approximately 160,000 units. This is down from 178,000 last year or a decline of 10 per cent, which in terms of jobs represents 35,600 lost jobs. Yet the Minister of Public Works says that he is helping the unemployment situation in Canada. We know that 210,000 housing starts are needed, but it is estimated that only 160,000 units will be built. This difference of 50,000 units translates into 100,000 lost jobs, yet the minister is saying that he is helping the unemployment situation with Bill C-89. Unfortunately those 100,000 lost jobs translate into $2 billion in lost income to the economy, or to put it another way, $400 million of lost government revenues.

The government does not understand what is going on. Productivity in Canada has gone down. Now it takes approximately 286,000 more people to produce the same goods and services which were produced in Canada last year. In 1976 when the government revised its monetary policy, on an annual basis 113,000 less homes were built in Canada, which translated into 223,000 jobs.

Is it any wonder that there is high unemployment? It is because of the insensitiveness of government. We have heard an answer to unemployment and high interest rates from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). At present 350,000 barrels of oil per day are shut in in western Canada. This translates into tens of thousands of lost jobs or $1 billion worth of equipment which has left the country. The Liberals can laugh at these facts because they do not have any members out west. Approximately 40 cents of every dollar spent on energy in western Canada ends up in Ontario and in Quebec. We are paying the price. Canadians are paying 24 cents more per gallon for gasoline at the pump than they should be paying because of the policies of the Liberal government.

Now I should like to turn to the area of high interest rates. We have high interest rates in the country because of the policies of the Bank of Canada and the fiscal policies of the federal government. We should not let the NDP fool us; the policies of the Bank of Canada are dictated by the government. The deputy minister of the Department of Finance sits on the executive committee which decides the monetary policy. The Bank of Canada is not an independent body. Moreover, the NDP would like us to think that the banks are responsible for interest rates. But we must remember that the banks have no authority to raise or lower interest rates without the approval of the Bank of Canada. If they dare to raise or lower interest rates or lower interest rates without the agreement of the Bank of Canada, the Bank of Canada can step in and withdraw funds from the banking system.

Mr. Evans: Nonsense!

Mr. Wright: I hear the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans); it is not nonsense.

Mr. Evans: The Bank of Canada does not dictate to chartered banks.

Mr. Wright: The Bank of Canada can sell bonds to the banks, which it does every day, withdraw money out of the system and put it into the Bank of Canada. This is done all the time. It is done to smooth fluctuation in the value of the dollar and in the rate of interest. The Bank of Canada is one of the biggest participants in the Canadian money market. It was a passive investor until 1975. Now it is an active investor in the market and it initiates the market. It no longer responds to bids and offers by investment dealers. It is dictating to the market, and let no one think otherwise.

We have high interest rates in the country because over the last two years there has been a dramatic outflow of long-term capital. In 1981 it approximated $10 billion and in 1980 it was $8 billion. This capital was replaced by short-term foreign capital. In order to attract short-term foreign capital, interest rates must be raised above what they are in other countries. Basically that was the problem. Short-term interest rates are high in Canada. Sometimes they are higher than long-term rates, but the point is that we cannot drop our interest rates because of the policies of government. The government said that it would discourage investment in Canada, and it has. Canadian and American companies have left Canada to go to the United States and to Australia. Unless we change those policies, we cannot lower interest rates.

The Bank of Canada uses money supply, what we call M-1, to indicate whether or not the supply of money in Canada is increasing at a favourable or at an unfavourable rate. Many economists and specialists have said that the bank does not know what it is doing. As interest rates rise, people tend to transfer funds from demand accounts to interest bearing accounts. Thus, the M-1 no longer qualifies as a good gauge as to whether or not the money supply is accurate. Liberal members have supported the Bank of Canada in the last few years, but most experts agree that they are wrong.

Mr. Evans: Name your experts.

Mr. Wright: Nuala Beck, an economist at Pitfield, MacKay, Ross described the outflow of capital as a hemorrhage and said that it resulted not simply from a search for higher returns but from a fundamental investment decision to move long-term capital out of Canada. Greenshields said in equally strong language that the national energy policy and the investment policy of the government led to a large amount of outflow of money from the country. Numerous experts have said the same thing. Unfortunately I do not have all their names here, but I could easily find two dozen.

I should like to refer to an article in the April 7 edition of The Globe and Mail by Ronald Anderson, an economist and consultant, who said that while the political objectives of the national energy policy were attractive, the economic objectives were never really determined. The economic cost to Canadians is considerable. I referred to that in more specific terms earlier.

We have watched the national energy policy cause a deterioration in this country's economic development. As a result of this policy, capital has left the country. It has also contributed to higher interest rates. The situation has to change. We have watched the Minister of Finance and we have seen the similarity between what he does and what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources does. They are both afraid to back off policies which are not only unpopular but do not work. Many of us have given the ministers examples of how to correct the economic situation. On the one hand we could encourage investment capital instead of discourage it. I do not think anyone could stand here and say that the Canadian government has been encouraging investment capital. If we could encourage investment capital and if we could encourage the export of commodities, it would be a step in the right direction. We in Alberta are aware of the fact that approximately $2 billion worth of sales in natural gas could be made to the United States. This kind of a sale could contribute dramatically to the support of the Canadian dollar and we would not have to keep interest rates as high. If we did those things, we would be able to reduce interest rates. We would be able to allow the dollar to float and to find its own level. If we did those things, we could even have a fixed bank rate. Because it is a floating rate, it contributes to the instability of Canada's economic situation.

Why do we lend $1 billion to foreign countries? What about the $100 million that was lent to Algeria for the construction of a monument; the $24 million that was lent to Belize for a sewage system which apparently is sinking into the sea; and the $200 million that is being lent to Trinidad and Tobago for an airport? One must wonder about these loans. Foreign aid is up at least 20 per cent this year, but help for employment and immigration is down.

I have listened to the Liberals talk about the economic problems in Canada this afternoon. Quite frankly, I consider them little more than a sanctimonious bunch of windbags. The policies the Liberals have espoused are simply socialist policies, little more. I find it very sad that the New Democratic Party was responsible for putting the Liberals into power. They are partly responsible for the policies that we have now.

Mr. Manly: The people of Canada did it.

Mr. Wright: The New Democratic Party was responsible in no uncertain terms for the policies which the Liberal government has now. I recall about one month ago the Minister of Finance standing in the House saying, "If I did nothing to help unemployment in this country, and if I did nothing to help high interest rates, I would be known as a scoundrel". A scoundrel he is for doing nothing.

We will continue to speak out against the socialist-economic policies of this government that are not working, which we say and which we have said for some time will never work.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the debate this afternoon. I will not repeat literally the litany of sadness and figures which have been quoted by any number of speakers here today. Many members have pointed out the unemployment rate and government spending excesses. But those who do not read history are oftentimes doomed to repeat it. I want to talk a little bit about why we are in the situation we are in, and how we got there.

If we go back to the 1950s there are literally hundreds of examples that could be used. I have selected a few that will explain what has happened and why we are in rather tragic and sad circumstances today. We find today aging out of date industrial plants throughout eastern Canada and southern Ontario in particular.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We have an aging government, too.

Mr. Cook: During the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s, the tax policies of this government were such that it did not pay the small company, or the large company for that matter, to carry out research and development, or to replace equipment which in some cases dated from the 1930s, the 1940s, some even from the 1920s. There was no incentive. One could look at the development of almost any Canadian industrial plant for evidence of the situation. A good many have gone out of business because they could not develop or renew their equipment. There was no incentive to do so. The tax policies were such that companies continued to make a dollar and went along on that basis. But we are reaping the whirlwind of that kind of policy today.

We seem to have developed in Canada the kind of businessman who wants a protected market. If you look at the history of a good many of the small manufacturers in Ontario you will find that they were prepared to accept the "Golden Triangle" as a market and, because of favourable freight rates, they shipped their goods, whatever they might be, to the rest of this country. They really had no interest in attempting to do what this country must do to attain the desired standard of living; that is to export goods.

I remember a vice-president of a trading company in Hong Kong telling me that Canadians were the worst traders in the world. When he wanted to buy something for China or for Hong Kong, right away a salesman would be in from Australia and two from Japan. As far as Canada was concerned, six weeks later he might get a letter from a Canadian firm saying, "Send us the airfare and we will think about sending a salesman to talk to you." I am very much afraid the Canadian businessman has developed that kind of a reputation. Why has that taken place? Canadians are not aggressive enough. In many cases they are just not hungry enough.

Over the last twenty years there has been gradual erosion of incentive and motivation. Is it the businessman's fault? In many cases I think not. I do not know how many dozens of businessmen have said to me, "Chuck, why should I work any harder? Why should I build a larger business? Why should I put 12 or 15 hours a day into my business when most of the time from here on in I am working for the government?" That feeling is accurate. Our tax policies have been such that we have not really wanted anyone to expand. We have really not wanted the country to develop. We have allowed our entrepreneurs to go so far and then have cut them off at the pass.

Entrepreneurs are the most productive people in the country. I suspect every member of the House of Commons knows several businessmen who have, shall we say, dropped out of the business world because of our taxation policies and because they have not had a chance to keep a sufficient portion of what they earned. With that kind of a climate, no wonder the industrial plants of Ontario are aging. It is no wonder these companies cannot compete. This situation goes back to what transpired in the 1950s and 1960s when things were a little easier and they could get away with that attitude. No longer is that the case.

Let us take a look at the situation regarding education in Canada. Certainly this is a provincial responsibility. I find it shocking, shameful and sad that in the next year we will be bringing 100,000 tradesmen into this country at a time when we have over one million people unemployed. If this government at any time in the last 15 years had realized what was happening, taken the initiative and worked with, instead of against, provincial governments, an apprenticeship program could have been developed. We would then have those 100,000 trained workers. Instead, we will import skilled labour, and we are still not training our own labour. I honestly do not believe we can blame the unions or all of the provincial governments for this, although part of the blame is theirs. However, we can certainly blame the federal government and a bureaucracy which have provided no leadership in this area, whatsoever.

We talk about technology of the future and where the jobs are to be found. I like what the government has done regarding Telidon. However, that is one small matter. This country could have been a world leader in pay-television. There were a number of companies here who wanted to go ahead, and could have been world leaders. But what happens in Canada? The CRTC just killed them. They studied it, thought about it, could not make up their minds. This went on and on to the point where these companies were not been able to do that well. They will admit that they lost out due to the failure of this government and its commissions to deal with reality.

There is another example of this, Mr. Speaker, in my own part of Canada, and I speak about the Port of Vancouver. In the last ten years the Port of Vancouver has lost a substantial amount of shipping to the Port of Seattle. To be fair, that is partly because, when unloading a lot of material for the U.S., it is better to go to Seattle than Vancouver. However, there is a contrast in business attitudes.

In 1950 Seattle was a very poor port; very little was going on. The people of King County and Seattle decided they wanted to be the major port on the north west coast, so they got the money together, issued bonds, built the port and they now have something like 18 cranes for containerized cargo. In Vancouver we have three. I might add that the container cargo concept originated in Vancouver, so you would think we would be the leader in the area. That is not the case.

To sharpen the contrast, if someone wants to ship a million widgets into Seattle they can call a board of directors meeting and a decision on the rate to be charged can be made in the course of an afternoon. If you go into Vancouver and do the same thing it will take you probably six weeks to get a rate out of Ottawa, 4,000 miles away. Even then the people making the decision will have no concept of what is involved.

However, I think there is one more important issue here, which goes to the root of the problem in our country today. The philosophy in Seattle was: We will build our port and go out and attract the shippers because we have the facilities. The National Harbours Board attitude in Canada is: when the demand develops sufficiently, then we will consider putting the facilities in. That difference in attitude and emphasis is the difference between Canada and some of the great trading countries of the world. It exists today and will probably continue to exist.

I do not want to be totally negative. What do we do to correct this? How do we change attitudes in Canada? How do I convince my colleagues opposite of some of the things they perhaps can do to really get Canada moving again? Let me say, frankly, I find it difficult to blame the Liberal Party for much of the problem—not totally difficult, mind you, but a little bit. The blame does not really, fall entirely on those gentlemen who sit opposite me, but on the bureaucrats. The government has run this country in such a way it has allowed the deputy ministers to take over and run the departments. There are many examples of this.

What is a first rate senior civil servant? Chances are he is an academic with many years of university. Chances are he has been trained in public administration, grown up and developed in the civil service. If you look at all these pooh-bah civil servants who really run this country you will find very few who have had much experience out in the real world of the marketplace. They do not know what happens to the 50-year old vice-president of a company when it starts to go down the drain and he has to either produce or go. There are an awful lot of those vice-presidents unemployed today—good men, but business has changed. That does not happen to civil servants.

I do not want to deal with all the things wrong with the National Energy Program, but I do want to deal with how it was put together in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Let me give you an example of how the bureaucracy has run the country. They sat there in that department and said; well, there are 480 drilling rigs operating in western Canada. How much profit should we allow them to have? They worked at the figures and did all the academic things, and said; all right, we will allow a rig to make "X" amount of dollars. That is good enough. That became part of the NEP. What they forgot was that the operators had options. They forgot that if the operator did not like the profit he was allowed to make, he could pack up and head south to the Colorado play, or the Montana and Louisiana play. That is exactly what they did, by the hundreds. It never dawned on anyone in the department that that would happen when they tried to almost socialize and cut back on these operators. That is a mere example of the kind of thinking which goes on in the bureaucracy.

Does anyone really believe that the National Harbours Board in Ottawa, 4,280 miles from the west coast, has any concept of the competitive nature of port usage on the west coast? Do they really have any knowledge of what we are trying to do out there, or what are the competitive factors? I doubt it. All we have to do is look at what has happened out there to realize that. I think you could go through many government departments and find the same type of thinking.

When did all this start to happen? I did a little investigation and found that basically it started around the Pearson years. That is when politics became such a big game that ministers spent their time flying about the country making speeches, sitting in cabinet and in this House doing what we can almost call 99 per cent political work.

• (1750)

Prior to that time, in the C. D. Howe era, back in the days of Mackenzie King, when a minister of the Crown was given a department to run, he ran the ruddy department. Most of a minister's time was spent in his office running that department, riding herd over the civil service and making sure the decisions were right and that the department ran properly. If a minister did not do that, he would have caused so much embarrassment he would have been replaced.

However, the amount of time an individual minister of the Crown now spends on departmental activities within his department is not what it once was, and neither is the country. This is the result of allowing senior bureaucrats to take over and totally run departments.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is a wiley old fox. I will say that as a compliment, and I mean it. He is perhaps one of the shrewdest, most intelligent people who has ever sat in this chamber. If anyone can honestly say to me that he really contemplated and considered the budget of November 12 and knowingly brought it in that way, then we obviously have a difference of opinion. He did not know what was in this budget. He has changed the budget 22 times since then, and he will make more changes. If he had studied the budget, and it had been his budget rather than that of a group of finance civil servants who had no understanding of what it meant in terms of the business world, it would have been a totally different document. It was not.

Let us talk about the future. Hugh MacLennan talked about two solitudes. We do not have two solitudes in this country now. We have the solitude of Newfoundland, we have one in western Canada and we have one in Quebec. I do not believe this particular Liberal government can excuse itself or deny that it must take a tremendous amount of blame for what I would call the solitudes which exists in this country. We have the matter of confrontation and a question of fighting for power, one against the other. I believe that a different attitude on the part of this particular government could bring this country together much more rapidly than can be attained by the type of activities and statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) these days regarding the west, Quebec and Newfoundland. This country can only stay together by consensus. It can only stay together if there are good feelings on all sides. It can only stay together if everyone feels they are being relatively fairly treated. That is not what exists in the country today. I lay the entire blame on the Prime Minister of this country and his excessive statements in all parts of it.

That is really enough of what I would call negative thinking. I do have a dream for this country. Someone said that the twentieth century belongs to Canada. The twentieth century obviously will not belong to Canada. One can go through the litany of sad statistics we have heard today. This motion is one of the most important subjects that has come up in this House for some time. I hope people will start considering what is involved in the motion and will understand why so many of us can speak so vehemently on the issue.

The real answer to our problems lies in a little word called "productivity", much of which we have lost. We are not competitive in this country in a world sense. Our workers are not sufficiently productive. Is that the fault of the labour unions? I do not think it is. Is it the fault of management? I do not think so. I think it is quite properly the fault of the third member of that triangle which operates the country—it is the fault of government.

There have been no incentives, they do not exist now, and I do not see them coming. I do not see why this government cannot realize that creativity, in terms of products, in terms of giving businessmen the opportunity as well as the incentive to move ahead, would work. Only government can create the environment we need in order to burst from our chains and relieve our tears of today. Only the government can do that. Little programs will not help. This requires a major effort. If the ministers were to get back and run their departments much of the problem could be cured. I have hope for the country. I also have hope in the sense that, perhaps, after the next election we can throw the sad rascals out and begin anew in this country. We have a great country, but, by golly, we are not giving it the proper opportunity of today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, speaking as a rascal, I should like to say that it is a pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon. One of life's great pleasures is to find oneself suddenly and unexpectedly thrust into the debates of the House. I am pleased to have been thus propelled into a debate of such importance this afternoon.

Almost everyone to whom I have spoken in the last several months has asked me what the government will do about the sad state of affairs of this country. That attitude is not unexpectedly revealed in the debates of the House this afternoon. Almost every hon. member opposite has stood up to ask, pointedly, vigorously, and sometimes passionately, what will the government of this country do to help solve the economic problems that so bedevil us today? My instinctive response to that criticism is to ask, "Why do hon. members automatically assume that the only response which can be made is by the government?"

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Because they create the atmosphere.

Mr. Kelly: I would argue that inflation, unemployment, high interest rates, all of the things that none of us like, are in fact a product of the way in which all of us have lived over the last decade.

Mr. Neil: Fostered by the government!

Mr. Kelly: I think that before many citizens ask what the government can do, they should ask themselves what they can do.

Mr. Keeper: Elect a new government!

Mr. Kelly: Since all of us are a part of the problem, surely all of us are a part of the solution. For example, if a family in Oshawa goes out and buys a Toyota or a Volkswagen, they should not be surprised if the breadwinner next door who works in the GM assembly line is laid off. If a family goes out to buy a Sony television set, they should not surprised if the man across the street is out of a job when Admiral closes in Ontario. If a family goes out and buys Italian shoes or Taiwanese shirts or underwear, they should not be surprised if the breadwinner who lives at the corner and works at a textile mill or in a shoe factory is put out of a job.

Mr. Bosley: You have an English sports coat, Norman!

Mr. Kelly: I do not understand how the Canadian consumer can change his buying patterns and then express surprise at the widespread unemployment which results. I cannot understand why that consumer then believes it is the sole privilege and responsibility of the government to right the wrongs induced by those changed consuming patterns. The first advice I would give to anyone in this debate is to tell Canadians as consumers that they could make a very real contribution in the near future to solve many of our problems. They should buy Canadian cars, buy Canadian shoes, buy Canadian television sets. If many of those people bought Canadian, Mr. Speaker, there would be a lot of people put back to work in Canada. I think that the first step in solving our problems is the realization of the degree to which Canadians are part of that problem. Once we do that, Mr. Speaker, I can go on to explain how the government can make its contribution; but I will leave that for a later debate at another time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to order made on Wednesday, April 7, 1982, proceedings on the motion have expired.

The House stands adjourned until Monday, April 19, 1982, at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

May I, on behalf of Madam Speaker, extend to hon. members, and to the staff of the House, best Easter wishes. From myself, I express the wish that the bunnies be kind to all.

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE ECONOMY

CALL FOR NEW GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the policies of the Liberal government are killing the initiative of Canadians, and scores—perhaps hundreds—are thinking seriously about leaving the country because of high interest rates, the national energy policy, the November 12 budget, the imposition of metric, etc., etc. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House urges the government to withdraw the budget, stop grabbing every cent it can get its fingers on, and replace its totalitarian concept of imposing policies on Canadians by reflecting the thinking of the people.

The new Constitution will be a hollow mockery if we do not have a Canada to govern.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY "THE ROAD TO PATRIATION"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, last week the CBC presented a documentary called "The Road to Patriation". The program elaborately described the role of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), and the news media, while the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) received perhaps a five-second voice-over. The parliamentary committee was not even mentioned, and Parliament itself was made to appear irrelevant to the process. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the CBC be requested to document the role of Parliament, the parliamentary committee and the opposition, or else the committee to elect Jean Chrétien as the next leader of the Liberal Party be billed for the production costs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

PROVISION OF RENTAL ACCOMMODATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter which is becoming more urgent and more pressing each day. As reported in Saturday's Le Devoir Ms. Anne Warren, an economist with CMHC, stated that the program of the government in support of rental accommodation construction is totally insufficient in light of the present policies of the government encouraging high mortgage rates. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House agrees with the CMHC economist who says the government is failing in its support of rental accommodation and, in light of the inevitable crisis which will flow from this inadequacy, this House urges the minister responsible for housing to accept the responsibility vested in him and take immediate steps to provide Canadians with affordable rental accommodation which at the same time will stimulate the depressed construction industry and the related forest industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRIBUTE TO PERSONNEL INVOLVED IN PATRIATION CEREMONIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Because of all the basic work, organization, security measures, maintenance, logistic duties, etc. which went into making Saturday, April 17, 1982, a very memorable and successful day in the history of Canada, which resulted in the final act of the patriation of the Canadian Constitution, which relates to the lives of all Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That the House of Commons go on record as extending our sincere thanks and deep appreciation for a job well done to the Speaker and Sergeant-at-Arms and their respective staffs, the security staff, the restaurant and cafeteria personnel, those who performed maintenance work, logistic support employees, transportation workers and the traffic division staff, and that the House of Commons also go on record as extending the same sentiments of gratitude and appreciation to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, members of the Canadian Armed Forces, personnel from the Department of Public Works, Secretary of State personnel, and all others not named but who participated.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the House will want to show its appreciation by applauding.

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, Canada's Constitution has come home, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that this is just the beginning. One of the cornerstones of a free and democratic society is the right to own and enjoy private property. This right has been left out of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. All thinking and freedom-loving Canadians desire to have this right contained in Canada's Constitution. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the agenda at the initial meeting of the First Ministers of Canada to discuss amendments to the Constitution contain a recommendation that Section 2, headed "Fundamental Freedoms", be amended by adding after "(d) freedom of association" the following new section: "(e) freedom to own and enjoy property and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law"; and that all Canadians urge the Government of Canada and their provincial governments to accept this amendment to Canada's Constitution.

PARLIAMENT

NECESSITY FOR REDISTRIBUTION LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. The 1981 census figures have been released. These population statistics indicate that there should be an additional five representatives of the people of British Columbia and an additional six representatives of the people of the province of Alberta, not to mention the ten for Ontario. It is hoped there will be a federal election long before the dilatory, time-consuming and lengthy process can be finished under the present compromise legislation. The people of western Canada are likely to be left underrepresented in the next election despite their growth in population. If you are going to do it, get it done fast; if you are not, let it go. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan north (Mr. Dantzer):

That this House urge and instruct the government to bring in immediately a new redistribution bill that will speed up the process and ensure that the next federal election will be fought on a basis giving western Canadians the new seats the west so richly deserves.

TREATMENT OF DREDGING CONTRACT CONSPIRATORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In 1979 two former dredging executives, Harold McNamara and Sydney Cooper, were convicted of conspiracy in rigging bids on federal government dredging contracts, and sentenced to five-year jail terms. In view of the fact that both businessmen were released after serving only ten months, or one sixth of their sentences, and put on day parole to be served in their own homes, and in view of the fact that Cooper was allowed, while on day parole, to fly down to Florida and the Caribbean for a Christmas holiday, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House condemns the National Parole Board and the Solicitor General for this vivid illustration of the fact that there exists one law for the rich, powerful friends of the Liberal government, and another law for the poor.

ENERGY

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, the government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have implemented a national energy policy that has patently proved to be a disaster for the development of oil and gas recovery in Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. More recently it compounded this failure by encouraging the importation of foreign oil as a direct result of its import compensation scheme. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House condemns the government for its negligence in failing to rationalize the import compensation scheme to current energy realities and invites the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to resign because he has proved incapable of producing an energy policy which will benefit all Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PRODUCTION OF WESTERN CRUDE OIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, the Alberta government recently announced sweeping changes to its royalty system in order to stimulate the conventional oil industry. However, benefits will be restricted until there is full production of shut-in crude oil from western Canadian fields. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the federal government take measures to ensure the production and sale of this shut-in oil and to encourage the export of such shut-in oil until such time as imports are eliminated or until all shut-in crude oil is being produced.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CALL FOR RESOLUTION OF CASE OF DONALD MARSHALL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, in 1971, Donald Marshall, then 17 years old, was convicted of murder by a jury of his peers in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, notwithstanding his protestation of innocence. For 11 years this native person languished in prison, but now his guilt has been questioned. The Minister of Justice has the legal power and authority to resolve the case and remedy any injustice. Accordingly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That this House direct the Minister of Justice, who allegedly advocates civil rights for all Canadians, to consider the civil rights of one real Canadian and resolve forthwith the case of Donald Marshall and remedy any injustice done to him.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

BANKS AND BANKING

CALL FOR REVERSAL OF INTEREST RATE POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Last week the president of the B.C. Council of Forest Industries predicted "significant additional lay-offs and forest company bankruptcies" in our already hard hit lumber industry unless there is soon a stimulus to housing starts. Meanwhile two major Canadian banks announced last week unjustified one quarter per cent and one half per cent increases in their already high mortgage interest rates, thus killing the desperate hopes of our number one industry. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis):

• (1415)

That the Minister of Finance immediately change course, call in the presidents of these chartered banks, together with Mr. Bouey, and demand that these industrial saboteurs cease and desist their fifth column activities, reversing their usurious and destructive high interest rate policies in order that Canadian home builders and woodworkers can get back to work and put our economy back on the road to recovery.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

THE BUDGET—QUERY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is now obvious that the minister's budget of November 12 is proving to be a disaster for the Canadian economy. As far as businessmen, farmers and the average taxpayers are concerned, it is creating nothing but confusion and uncertainty. It is complicating their ability to plan for business and to file federal income tax returns.

The minister has now admitted to yet another mistake by backing down on the application of the sales tax proposal, which, incidentally, now results in some 30 to 40 changes to his budgetary provisions. The original proposal involved some 163 technical amendments to the Income Tax Act.

What does the minister propose to do to end this continuing uncertainty and confusion? Is the minister planning further changes? Is he planning to proceed with the implementation of the budget as is? If so, can the minister indicate when the necessary legislation will be introduced in the House? Or will the minister show some courage and common sense, withdraw the budget, and bring in a new economic program so that we can get the country working again?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, one would need to be participating in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne in order to cover the waterfront which has been laid out by the hon. member in his question. Just let me deal with one point in the hon. member's question. With respect to the decision to delay the implementation date for the manufacturers' sales tax, that suggestion was made weeks ago by the hon. member for Edmonton West. It has subsequently been made by various business groups who wanted to have more time to examine this major change.

Mr. Clark: Why did you put it in there in the first place?

Mr. MacEachen: It seems reasonable to me that one ought to accommodate that type of reasonable request.

Mr. Huntington: Why was it in there?

Mr. Wilson: Just another blunder.

Mr. MacEachen: I would expect that the hon. member should give some marks for the willingness to take into account representations received from some hon. members and from the business community.

Mr. Nielsen: Why did you put it in there in the first place?

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ASSIST OIL AND AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, that in no way alleviates the confusion and uncertainty. That change, as well as the 30 or 40 other changes which the minister has proposed, simply adds to the confusion and uncertainty. Added to that, the combined effects of the minister's budget and the National Energy Program are cirppling the agricultural and energy industries, particularly in western Canada. Oil production in the west is shut in. In the meantime Canada is importing some 500,000 barrels of oil a day, causing layoffs, bankruptcies, and further aggravating our balance of payments. In the agricultural area, the huge increases in the price of fuel and fertilizer caused by the National Energy Program and the minister's budget are crippling that industry.

What positive measures is the minister proposing to take to alleviate these difficulties and to get these two major and very important industries in Canada working again? Will the minister take some positive steps now or in the next few weeks to alleviate the hardships imposed upon those two very important sectors?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member again has covered the waterfront in his question. Let me just take one point and remind him that it is rather common for hon. members in the House to attribute difficulties that are being faced in the oil industry, for example, and the energy industry, either to the National Energy Program or to the budget provisions. He might look around the world, into the United States, for example, and ask how—

• (1420)

Mr. Clark: That is where all the rigs are.

Mr. MacEachen: —the Canadian budget could possibly affect conditions there. Canadian rigs, having gone down there, so it is alleged by hon. members opposite, do not find the amount of work they expected in the United States. Hon. members ought to realize that there are more things at play at the present time in the energy industry, including a rapid fall in world demand for the product, and falling world prices. It seems to me that these are the underlying factors which are influencing the situation, not the National Energy Program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSUMER CONFIDENCE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, it is rather strange that the minister is so short of answers today. During the election campaign of 1979-80, he and his Prime Minister said that they would manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would come down, because the economy would be administered in a sound manner. Where are all the answers now? They had the answers then, but he has not been able to answer one question which I have put to him. I have asked him to bring forth some explanation to alleviate the uncertainty and confusion.

Since increased consumer spending is the key to economic recovery, and since the Conference Board of Canada indicated that consumer confidence in Canada is "incredibly bad", what specific measures will the minister take to restore consumer confidence, something which his current policies have in fact destroyed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in the last few weeks I have been consulting with a wide variety of private sector organizations. I have not found a single representative of these organizations who did not support the notion that the main cause of uncertainty in the country at the present time, including—

Mr. Nielsen: Is the government—

Mr. MacEachen: —declining confidence, is the high rate of inflation. To fight inflation is the policy which is required in present circumstances to be implemented in order to improve confidence in the country.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. It is supplementary to a question which the hon. member for Vegreville just put to him. Departmental officials have advised me that draft legislation on tax provisions in the budget will be brought forward in about a month's time, following which there will be consultation with the private sector, and that the final legislation is not expected to be put before the House until autumn. Would the minister confirm whether in fact that is his intention?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I want to bring in the draft legislation, the comprehensive Ways and Means motions, just as soon as the drafting is completed. An all-out effort is being made in the department to produce that legislation as soon as possible. It will be made public just as soon as it is finished. Then I would like, as I indicated earlier, to have an opportunity for the public, for interested groups, to make comments on the draft legislation before it is brought into the House as a formal bill. That will be done as soon as possible. I am not in a position to put any firm time schedule on that process today.

EFFECT ON SENIOR CITIZENS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, departmental officials are advising many people of this. I was giving the minister an opportunity to try to relieve the obvious uncertainty that the rumours emanating from his department are creating. Let me focus on one very clear area of uncertainty, that is, the impact of the budget on pensioners or on senior citizens. There are seven individual items in the budget which can result in increased taxes for senior citizens. Would the minister today relieve the uncertainty of these people on fixed incomes by saying that the bill show some compassion and make some changes in these seven items in the budget in order to avoid these increased taxes on senior citizens when he brings forth the draft legislation?

• (1425)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I dispute the statement of the hon. member. There have been a number of questions raised over the past several months with respect to pension effects.

Mr. Wilson: Read your budget.

Mr. MacEachen: As I recollect, in each case I gave a positive and sympathetic answer, including the questions which were raised by the member for Halifax soon after the budget. I think that the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre is very late in raising these matters which, as far as I am concerned, have already been dealt with in question period.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PATRIATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. On the weekend, we finally patriated the Constitution and at long last achieved legal independence in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Simultaneously, Canadians have noticed a series of advertisements across the country with reference to the Constitution stating that the future belongs to us.

Considering that 53 per cent of our manufacturing and 63 per cent of our mining is foreign controlled, will the minister assure the people of Canada that the Government of Canada will embark on the serious task of patriating the Canadian economy which has much more relevance to the daily lives of most Canadians than does the Constitution?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, here again the proposals of the government with respect to the oil and gas industry were laid out in great detail—

Mr. Waddell: Too little, too late.

Mr. MacEachen: —in the National Energy Program more than a year ago. These still are the valid objectives of the Government of Canada. I would hope that the New Democratic Party could give us some support on the implementation of the National Energy Program.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, as usual, the minister is not informed correctly. We voted on the one matter of substance, which was the expansion of Petro-Canada.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that on the weekend one Canadian out of three expressed the disturbing view that he or she thinks they may lose their job because of a general insecurity about the economy, and considering that government documents produced last fall show the government is aware that foreign-owned firms in Canada are responsible for the loss of thousands of jobs, precisely because they do more sourcing abroad than do Canadian firms, how does the government justify backing down on its commitment made in the 1980 election campaign to expand the power of FIRA over foreign corporations operating in this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I must say that I am increasingly surprised at the line of questioning being followed by the leader of the New Democratic Party. He is advocating job creation and greater investment in the country and, at the same time, he is undoubtedly raising questions which would have the very serious effect of adversely influencing much needed investment in this country. I cannot think of a worse contribution to make in present circumstances than to advocate additional interventionist measures in the economy which would have the effect of creating even greater discouragement and disincentive in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The minister cannot have it both ways. In his first answer he cannot say to the House that the government is interested in dealing with foreign-owned corporations and say in the second answer that the government is not interested at all. That is the kind of hypocrisy we see too often in the Liberal government.

ACTIONS OF FOREIGN OWNED CORPORATIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, will the minister deny an assertion made in the government's own documents that we are losing thousands of jobs in Canada because foreign-owned corporations here source more out of our country than do independently Canadian-owned firms? If he does not deny that, why does the government not move ahead and exercise authority over these firms to ensure that they produce more jobs in this country?

• (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, what I said to the hon. member in reply to the second question was that the government does not plan any additional measures at the present time. In the National Energy Program we have laid out a very ambitious series of steps in order to increase Canadian participation and ownership in that important strategic sector of the Canadian economy. That is our policy, and we continue to support it. However, it was also stated in the document tabled at budget time, entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s", that it is not the present intention to extend that policy to additional sectors of the Canadian economy.

Mr. McDermid: Thank God for small mercies.

Mr. MacEachen: That is not having it both ways; rather, it is moving in a timely way in order to achieve the major objective of the government at the present time, namely, concerning the field of oil and gas in the country.

METRIC CONVERSION

BUSINESSMEN'S REFUSAL TO ADOPT SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the minister responsible for the Metric Commission, and several of his colleagues, are on record as saying that the government does not intend to use heavy-handed tactics of fines, seizure of equipment and even imprisonment to force its mandatory metric conversion orders in several sectors of the Canadian economy.

I have been advised that very shortly names and signatures will arrive in this House, attached to a petition from over 100 businessmen which states:

> We refuse to convert our business operations to metric measurement as long as the compulsory features of the (Weights and Measures) Act are in force.

What does the minister responsible intend to do then? Does he intend to add refusal to go metric to the dozens of government-caused reasons for Canadians going out of business in droves, or does he intend to put Canadians in jail for using Canadian measurement?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Madam Speaker. I think the hon. member should know that the reason that aspect of the program has become compulsory is because of the request of the industry itself. It is the industry which has recommended that it be done in this manner.

Mr. Siddon: Talk to the little guy.

Mr. Ouellet: We have said before that we do not intend to send people to jail. We are very confident that, in fact, a large majority of the population will recognize that this convention is in the best interests of Canada, in terms of our economic situation with regard to sales not only in Canada but also abroad. I have every reason to believe and hope that citizens will follow the law and will not disobey it.

JUSTIFICATION FOR CONVERSION PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, if the minister had done his homework he would know that the sector dealing with grocery stores asked the minister not to implement metric at this time since the United States decided not to move. In that case, the minister will be glad to know that the little group which he deems to be fanatics—those opposed to metric—now includes not only the governments of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, but will shortly also include the new Progressive Conservative government of Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: How can the minister possibly reconcile the costly and needless federal program which is so much at odds with a steadily increasing number of provincial governments, not to mention the dozens of firms and industries which oppose it, and the hundreds of thousands of ordinary Canadians whose appeals so far have apparently fallen on deaf ears, at least on the other side of this House?

Mr. Nielsen: Deaf ears and fat heads.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, from the hon. member's words it is clear that even he is qualifying people who are against metrication as conservatives. The hon. member obviously prefers to live in the past instead of looking ahead. He refuses to acknowledge that metrication is in the best interests of Canada and that the decision to go metric was made not only at the request of Canadian companies but also following a federal-provincial conference where the Government of Canada and the ten provincial governments supported metric conversion. It was a unanimous decision by the 11 governments.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST THAT SUBJECT OF PROSTITUTION BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. I would like to point out to him that we may now have a Constitution and we may now have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but in many major Canadian cities, residents cannot go to the corner store or go to church, or take their children to daycare centres, without being hassled by hookers and their customers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: The minister has given me a written commitment that he has referred this issue to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The steering committee has instructed the minister's parliamentary secretary to discuss this issue with him. Since the minister agreed to refer the matter to the justice committee, and since the justice committee is prepared to discuss it as soon as possible, when will the minister present a reference to the House which gives the justice committee the authority to examine this matter and suggest amendments to the Criminal Code to deal with this problem?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, a long time ago I said that I wanted the committee to study the problem at the same time it studies Bill C-53. I do think that we are making our best effort to refer it to the committee and authorize the committee to make some suggestions while studying that bill. However, it is the hon. member in the other party who does not want to make that compromise, who insists on having a—

Mr. Paproski: Svend Robinson.

Mr. Chrétien: No, no. It is the hon. member in your party, Sir and Madam, who is insisting that there be a formal reference. If hon. members do not want to do it in the normal way in the committee while discussing a bill related to that type of problem, I will certainly try to get a formal reference to the committee. However, I thought that the hon. members opposite would offer themselves the opportunity while studying Bill C-53. However, the hon. members of your own party, Madam, are the ones who have become too sticky on procedure and have not wanted to deal with the substance of the matter.

Mr. Paproski: I thought it was Svend Robinson.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE AMENDMENTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice, who has made allegations against hon. members of our party who are unfortunately not in the House today. However, I know that it was our justice critic who moved the motion in committee to set up a sub-committee on prostitution. Therefore, since it was our party which moved the motion to ask the committee to deal with this subject, we are hardly in the position of obstructing it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The very simple fact is that in spite of two years of waffling on this matter by the Minister of Justice, he made a commitment to the residents of the West End in Vancouver and to two B.C. cabinet ministers that he would bring in the necessary amendments by the fall of 1980. This is the spring of 1982. Therefore I would ask the minister if he is prepared to deal with this matter in the justice committee. His answer certainly confuses me. It is not at all clear whether he will discuss it in the justice committee. If he is not prepared to deal with it in the House of Commons, will he honour his commitment to bring in amendments to the Criminal Code?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, I think that if the hon. member feels so strongly about the matter, she should take the time to go to the committee to see what is going on there.

Miss Carney: I have been.

Mr. Chrétien: I must say that in January I made an offer in writing to the justice critic in her party. He is the one who has always insisted that there be a formal reference, while the subject matter is already discussed in Bill C-53 in broad terms. However, if he continues to nitpick and insists that there be a formal reference, I will try to organize it. However, the procedures of the committee are the responsibility of the committee, not of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Clark: Not the reference.

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, if the hon. members want to use this type of tactic, I want the problem to be discussed in the committee. I felt that it would be nice to deal with it through Bill C-53. If hon. members want to have another reference to further delay, I will give them another reference.

Mr. Clark: Good!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The Tory party will have once again utilized procedural technique to ensure delay, because if it wanted to deal with the problem in Bill C-53, it could be dealt with right away.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DISASTERS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL HELP EASTERN TOWNSHIP REGIONS AFFECTED BY FLOODING

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council, who is also responsible for emergency planning in Canada. In view of the flooding that has affected a number of towns in the Eastern Townships on the weekend, and I would mention especially Sherbrooke, Lennoxville and Richmond, and the considerable damage caused by the flooding, which is estimated at several million dollars according to preliminary estimates, could the minister inform the House whether the areas affected by this disaster will be able to obtain some form of assistance from the Canadian government?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we are of course quite aware of the situation prevailing in the area described by the hon. member as well as in other areas. I can assure the hon. member that under its program for compensation in case of natural disasters, the federal government will, as soon as the province of Quebec so request, provide compensation and take appropriate action to assist the areas affected.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON TAXATION OF NORTHERN ALLOWANCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On March 30 of this year he met with representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress and listened to a request by them that there be an extension of the remission order on the taxation of northern benefits until the government comes up with a policy on what kind of tax benefits people in northern Canada should have. He also promised that he would get back to the representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress once he had met with other cabinet ministers who are on the cabinet committee concerned with the matter. Does the minister have an answer for the millions of workers across Canada who are very concerned about this taxation policy?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Madam Speaker. I do not have an answer to many of the submissions put to me by the Canadian Labour Congress the other day, outside of the initial response I gave, namely, that many of the recommendations were already being seriously considered, that they parallel those in the mining community, that that study would require some considerable time and during that time we would be getting back to them for further refinement of their views and exchanges. That process is going on. The meeting with them was only three or three and one half weeks ago. It is premature to have a decision at this time.

EXPIRATION OF TAX REMISSION ORDER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my concern and the concern of a number of other people who live in northern areas is that this taxation policy was announced years ago. It was again announced in the budget of last November. The minister just responded that it will take a lot longer before the government has its own policy in place. The remission order on taxation of the benefits expires this year. Those people in the various unions in northern Manitoba have to know what they are going to be negotiating this year. If the government does not come up with the policy soon, how can the workers know what to negotiate when their collective agreements expire? The cost of housing there is high. The cost of transportation there is extremely high. They have to know what the hell the government is going to do.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As the hon. member knows, Madam

Speaker, in the hope of being helpful we have extended this remission order each year pending the finding of a solution that is more equitable, in other words a solution that will assist those northerners who do not have benefits that are non-taxable. Many who do not have collective agreements do not have benefits. The remission order does not help them one iota because they do not receive any benefits. That is obviously inequitable and unfair.

While we are considering submissions from those such as the CLC, the mining companies and others, for the extension of the remission order or some other policy that will help those employees who receive benefits, we are also under an obligation, as a government, to try to help all those northerners who are not even fortunate enough to receive any benefits. That takes some time. We are trying to find an equitable means to do that. May I say that some of those people who receive no benefits do not have the benefit of any organization whatsoever to speak for them. It is a complex matter. I fully realize more notice or as much notice as possible is required for collective agreements. We will try to have a solution as soon as possible.

PRESS CONFERENCE CALLED TO ANNOUNCE MEASURES AFFECTING NORTH

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question with respect to the taxation policies of the government in northern Canada. An announcement has been made that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be holding a joint press conference this afternoon at 3.30 for the purpose of announcing what they term new energy initiatives in the two northern territories and in other northern parts of Canada. I assume part of that announcement will include the extension of the subsidization program put in place by the previous administration. What other new initiatives are going to be announced at that conference by either the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development? I would hope the minister would take Parliament into his confidence and tell us prior to 3.30 this afternoon.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I would advise the hon. member for Yukon that part of the reason for the timing with respect to these announcements is to accommodate the media with respect to disseminating the information—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: Parliament does not count any more.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —with respect to accommodating the media as it serves northerners. If the hon. member wishes to be consistent, I think he will be the first to agree that news of this kind, which has such a tremendous impact on the north, should be communicated first to northerners rather than hear it in the south—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —again putting northerners in the position where they are the last to hear about policies wich affect them. That is something we would like to avoid. I am sure the hon. member for Yukon would agree.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE POLICY ANNOUNCEMENT IN PARLIAMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, there is a northern member here from Yukon, one from Western Arctic, and one from Nunatsiaq. The media in the north are up. It is now almost 12 noon in Yukon. It is one o'clock in the Northwest Territories; in the eastern Arctic it is two o'clock. I wonder if the minister could answer my question and inform not only the pure northern members but those members on all sides of the House who represent northern ridings in the provinces throughout this country. Will he take the House into his confidence and tell us what he is going to do?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I strongly suspect that the hon. member for Yukon may very well know what is in the package, mainly from the point of view that this government has involved itself in a policy where we brought into our confidence the members of the Yukon government and the territorial government in a task force to study the whole energy question. The policies we are announcing now reflect that type of input.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the northern portions of the provinces?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The last I heard, it was a Conservative government in the Yukon. In terms of avoiding unnecessarily offending any of the members of this House, I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, would agree we would be more than happy to get the press kits with all the details over to hon. members as quickly as possible before the press conference. I reiterate that I think they are well aware of what is in the press kits.

REASON FOR NOT MAKING ANNOUNCEMENT IN PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is to the acting Prime Minister who, I assume, takes responsibility for this determination to hide from Parliament information—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —hide from Parliament information which will be made available to the press outside Parliament, denying the opportunity for questions later this day. A question has been put regarding a policy that has already been set and published. The only question is whether it will be made available to the elected representatives of the people of Canada here in the House of Commons of Canada, or whether Parliament will again be avoided. Will the acting Prime Minister tell us why this government insists on avoiding the House of Commons on this question?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the government obviously does not avoid the House of Commons. It is on deck every day dealing with questions raised by members of the House. We do it day after day, week after week, and the opposition takes full advantage of that opportunity. A question has been put by an hon. member to the minister, and he has answered fully in accordance with the practice and the rules of the House.

• (1450)

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSED ANNOUNCEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the detail of what he is going to be announcing to the press and what his colleague refused to announce to Parliament? Will he tell the House of Commons now what he proposes to tell the press at 3.30 p.m.?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, indeed I would be very happy to announce what my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, will announce. It is very significant, a major program for help to remote communities and particularly northern communities. That program involves the expenditure of some $24 million for energy studies and demonstration programs in remote communities. Out of this there will be at least $10 million for the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, you see, that was not difficult, was it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF MR. PIERRE JUNEAU AS PRESIDENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me put another question respecting Parliament to the President of the Privy Council. The President of the Privy Council has spoken about his interest in parliamentary reform and his determination to have this institution play a more prominent role in public business in the country. I wonder if he would agree to take a step in that direction by referring to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture the proposed appointment of Mr. Pierre Juneau as President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in order that Parliament can, in this instance, begin the practice of confirmation hearings on important public appointments.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): There are many steps, Madam Speaker, that we are prepared to take, but we would like to take them in the right direction. I can assure the right hon. member that all suggestions relating to improving the functioning of Parliament will be considered very seriously. He knows we are now having discussions at the level of House leader, on the substance of changes that could be brought to parliamentary procedure. It that does not work, we will see what we can do in due time. In the meanwhile, if he has steps to suggest, we will consider whether they are in the right or in the wrong direction. I would hope that he has better suggestions to make than the one he has made now.

PARLIAMENTARY DISCUSSION OF APPOINTMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the President of the Privy Council explain why the House of Commons, why members of this Parliament, should not be allowed to discuss the appointment of the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, before that appointment is made?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has been asking me questions about parliamentary reform and he is now asking a supplementary regarding an appointment by order in council. That is the prerogative of the Prime Minister, who, I am sure, can provide every justification for the appointment of Mr. Pierre Juneau, a person who enjoys considerable respect throughout Canada, and we are in fact delighted with his appointment as President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. As for the procedure to be followed with appointments by order in council, that is the responsibility of the Prime Minister, and it is a matter of government organization, not a parliamentary matter.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

CANADIAN TECHNICIANS IN ARGENTINA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Government of Canada has applied economic sanctions, for example halting credit for exports, against Argentina during the Falkland Islands crisis. Atomic Energy of Canada has 71 Canadian specialists who now are finishing the Candu reactor in Argentina. Has the government recalled these experts?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Non, madame le Président.

An hon. Member: Why not?

REQUEST THAT TECHNICIANS BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, the minister is aware that a senior official to the Argentinian president, Dr. Ussher, admitted to the American writer, Amory Lovins, that the Candu reactor was chosen for "military and strategic reasons." Not only that, but Dr. Ussher said that Argentina has two plutonium separation facilities—and not one as we were led to believe—meaning that Argentina will soon have weapons-grade plutonium enabling it to produce its own nuclear weapons. In other words, we will have another big bang from Argentina like the one we got from India. Will the government stop being hypocritical, offering peacekeeping on the one hand, and supplying material for nuclear weapons on the other hand? Will he now order the withdrawal of the 71 technicians from Argentina?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, if the quote from this particular Argentinian is correct, I would advise my hon. friend that Argentina has certainly made the most stupid decision ever made—if they bought a Candu thinking that would help them for military purposes, because it is the most expensive and circuitous way of achieving military purposes. As far as the other point raised by the hon. member is concerned, he is very much in the same category as the Argentinian commentator to whom he has referred.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SALMON FISHING REGULATIONS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As the minister will remember, last week I was able to send to him letters on two matters in British Columbia. The first was the recommendation for a net-buy back provision and compensation for Fraser River fishermen, in view of the fact that they will not be able to fish. I would like the minister to respond on whether that will be accepted by the department.

The second point concerns salmon licence regulations which were passed last year and only referred to last year and do not refer to this year. Yet the department has notified fishermen that if they do not have a licence—which they cannot legally apply for—they will be prosecuted and their equipment seized. Would the minister straighten up these difficulties?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I have received the hon. member's note and I have asked that information be assembled for an answer. On the second point, I am told that there was an error in the draft regulation but that it is being corrected now, if that has not been done already. I know that I have signed the order.

QUERY RESPECTING FUEL SUBSIDIZATION FOR TUNA FISHERMEN

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the minister could tell us whether as a result of the discussions which were held earlier between the minister's officials and fishermen on the west coast interested in getting into tuna fishing and who have requested that the government consider oil subsidization, fuel subsidization, in order to take these very efficient boats from the badly depleted salmon stocks over to the tuna, any decision has been made by the government with respect to that? That decision, of course, would be primarily a conservation decision and probably would be supported by most Canadians.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the reaction to the suggestion of fishing for tuna was very positive. We have had discussions with the fishermen's group and we are trying to come up with a solution. If we can move that way, it will be a good conservation measure for the Chinook salmon, which are in rather difficult shape.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

ALBERTA ROYALTY REDUCTIONS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The fact that the National Energy Program is more than a disaster is recognized by almost everyone in Canada, with the possible exception of the minister and some of his officials, and apparently the Minister of Finance. In an attempt to mitigate some of the disastrous results, last Tuesday the province of Alberta announced some very important royalty reductions. While most observers feel that the Alberta changes are important and useful, they also feel that it will be necessary for the federal government to match this reduction in royalties by reducing the PGRT and NGGLT in order to enable this industry to get back on its feet. Will the minister act as responsibly as the government of Alberta and make similar arrangements on behalf of the federal government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind my hon. friend that under the National Energy Program we have achieved a rate of conservation of energy and a rate of substitution in favour of natural gas and electricity and other forms of energy, which is as high as had been forecast and we have met with great success. In the area of Canadianization under the National Energy Program we have succeeded in reducing foreign ownership by as much as 6.5 per cent in a space of a year, and in the area of pricing we have achieved an agreement with the government of Alberta which will mean cheaper prices to the consumer than would have been the case under the Conservative government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: These, Madam Speaker, have been achieved under the National Energy Program. I would like to remind my hon. friends that a study by the United States Department of Commerce came out in the last few days indicating that the United States affiliates in Canada in the energy field are going to increase their expenditures in 1982 compared to 1981 by 28 per cent, while they are going to increase their expenditures in other countries only by 18 per cent. That is the kind of show of confidence that has arisen out of the National Energy Program and the agreements we have had with the province of Alberta, the province of Saskatchewan, and the province of British Columbia.

• (1500)

I suggest to my hon. friend that he look at reality and at comments in today's press saying that the industry expects a very bullish year and a very, very active year in 1983.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Then I wonder why people in Detroit can buy gasoline cheaper than people in Windsor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, as a result of the National Energy Program half of this country's petroleum drilling industry has left the country. Thousands of people have been laid off. Dozens of companies have gone into bankruptcy and receivership. Three hundred thousand barrels of Canadian production per day are shut in. Seventeen billion dollars of capital has fled the country as the result of the National Energy Program.

The government of Alberta has recognized something is wrong. It has moved to take action. It has taken some important initiatives. Will the federal government act as responsibly? That is the simple question.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the government of Alberta has acted in response to a commitment it gave when we reached an agreement last September. The government of Alberta agreed to review its royalties. Alberta recognized that something had to be done with respect to its royalties, and I expect the government of Saskatchewan and the government of British Columbia will follow soon. What the government of Alberta has done had been to honour the commitment it made under the agreement.

In the meantime, we have gone even further than required under the agreement with regard to taking measures to reduce the amount of shut-in oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan by expanding the price for new oil to categories of oil which were not covered under the agreement. These are things we have done, and they have meant significant benefit to the industry. I invite my hon. friend to look at them.

PETITION

MR. HARGRAVE—NATURAL GAS TAXATION POLICY

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege and, indeed, my duty to present a formal petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of this petition, signed by 12,689 citizens of my home city of Medicine Hat and Redcliff, is to indicate to the government the crisis now being experienced by every home owner and resident due to the natural gas taxation policy of the National Energy Program. The nature and purpose of this petition is to demand that the government's budgetary policy respecting these punitive natural gas taxes be reassessed in view of the ensuing hardships and illegality of these natural gas taxes.

My constituency petitioners hope and pray, Madam Speaker, that you will find their petition in order and that you will note the urgency and desperation of their plea due to more than a 100 per cent increase in their utility bills, and that you will allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible date.

Order Paper Questions

OLD AGE SECURITY

Question No. 3,621—Mr. Herbert:

1. What is the maximum amount that a person receiving old age security pension may receive in earned income and still be eligible for the full guaranteed income supplement?

2. At what level of earnings does this person lose all payment under guaranteed income supplement?

3. What is the maximum if the income is from investments?

4. What are the comparable figures for a married couple who both receive the old age security?

5. What would be the estimated cost if the basis for reducing the guaranteed income supplement payments were changed to one dollar deducted for three received?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. For a single pensioner, the maximum guaranteed income supplement is payable as long as yearly income is less than $2,400. This means any income apart from old age security benefits, whether the income is from earnings or other sources. For a married old age security recipient whose spouse is not eligible for either the old age security or spouse's allowance benefit, the maximum guaranteed income supplement benefit is payable (in the quarter January to March 1982) as long as the combined yearly income of the couple is less than $2,780.76. This amount increases quarterly in line with increases in the old age security pension.

2. For a single pensioner, eligibility for a guaranteed income supplement, in the quarter January to March 1982, would cease when yearly income reaches $5,496. In the case of a married old age security beneficiary whose spouse is not eligible to receive either the old age security benefit or spouse's allowance, the guaranteed income supplement would no longer be paid when the combined yearly income of the couple is $13,724.76 or more. The income level at which entitlement ceases rises every quarter in line with increases in the maximum supplement.

3. Same as 1 and 2 above.

4. For a married couple who both receive the old age security pension, the maximum guaranteed income supplement would be paid to each spouse if their combined yearly income was less than $4,800. A married couple, in the quarter January to March, 1982, would continue to receive at least some guaranteed income supplement until their combined yearly income reached $8,496.

5. If the basis for reducing the guaranteed income supplement were changed to one dollar deducted for three received, it is estimated that program expenditures would increase in the order of at least three-quarters of a billion dollars per year.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 4,100—Mr. Herbert:

With reference to the answer to question No. 3,721, are there offices in the province of Quebec with large numbers of employees that might distort the figures on the percentage of English and, if so (a) at what locations and how many English and French language employees are engaged at the locations (b) what would be the percentage of public servants working in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in Quebec who indicated English as their first official language, if such locations were excluded?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: Yes.

(a) At the Technical Field Support Services Division of EM and R in Hull, Quebec, there are 22 employees who indicate their first official language as English and 18 employees who indicate French as their first official language.

(b) It is 18.5 per cent.

ENERGY MONITORING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH PETROLEUM MONITORING AGENCY AND TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-106, respecting energy monitoring and to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I rise today to speak about the legislation before us, I want to take a moment to reflect on the historic steps this Parliament is taking.

We have just received our Constitution from Great Britain. The Canada Act, which is ultimately a modern expression of the commitment to nationhood we made more than a century ago, now rests where it belongs. It does, in a legal sense, provide a certain formality to the independence we have enjoyed for many years. But, more importantly, it signals to all Canadians that we are truly, and in all ways, a sovereign and independent country. I look forward to seeing a heightened pride among all our citizens, and a new era of national enthusiasm.

Historians will undoubtedly decide that the Constitution was the major achievement of this Parliament. But they will also surely decide that the National Energy Program marked a significant step forward for Canada as a strong and rigorously independent nation. A significant portion of this program is now before us as proposed law.

Much of the legislation on our parliamentary agenda this spring, including this monitoring bill, was tabled last June as draft legislation. The revised version is the result of extensive consultation with the industry and its associations, provincial governments and major financial institutions. Their advice has been seriously considered and taken into account.

The legislation follows a commitment made by the leader of our party, the current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in a speech in Halifax during the last election campaign. It was during that speech that he unveiled the National Energy Program, including the promise of a petroleum pricing and auditing agency. The agency was to keep a watch on industry costs, profits and operations. We followed that by referring to the agency again in the last Speech from the Throne as a device not only to monitor industry revenues and expenditures but the levels of Canadian ownership as well.

[Translation]

Let us now consider for a moment the raison d'être of energy enterprise monitoring. Once again I would refer hon. members to the goals of the National Energy Program. We want at least 50 per cent Canadian ownership of oil and gas production by 1990, because the oil and gas sector is vital to this country's economy. To achieve this goal, we must obtain information on the industry and on the manner in which it is developing our oil and gas resources. We want to be sure that there is a real increase in the number of Canadian participants and not merely concentration of power in the hands of a few large companies operating in Canada. Canadian ownership through Petro-Canada, for instance, will balance the range of ownership in the industry.

The Petroleum Monitoring Agency was established in August, 1980, for the purpose of collecting this information. In the National Energy Program, its role is defined as follows, and I quote:

—to monitor and report on the activities and financial performance of the petroleum industry in Canada ... It can ... carry out its duties and provide advice to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It will also provide independent comment on information that is essential to the Government's energy strategy and to the public's understanding of energy issues ... The Agency will receive information secured under the Petroleum Corporations Monitaring Act concerning costs of production, profitability, research and development efforts, and reinvestment behaviour. It will also monitor and report on ownership and control in the industry. The Agency will issue reports on a regular basis that will permit the Government and the Canadian public to be assured that the revenues resulting from higher oil and gas prices are being used in ways that enhance Canada's energy security".

Before bringing in the National Energy Program, the government had already realized that it needed timely and accurate information on the industry, an information requirement emphasized in a document called "Energy Strategy for Canada", published in 1976. How else could Canadians judge whether government policies on management of Canadian oil and gas resources had positive results? Clearly, a monitoring agency is of vital importance. The agency in question has the authority to monitor about 120 major oil and gas companies.

Indeed, our country and Parliament need to be informed and must have all the data on activities being carried out in this major sector of our economy, the oil and gas industry. The energy monitoring bill now before the House is aimed at expanding and further developing the role of the Petroleum Monitoring Agency. The agency advises and reports to the minister, but may also publish its own reports.

Only enterprises with gross oil and gas revenues or assets in excess of $10 million must file a report. Previously, companies with assets of $5 million came under the jurisdiction of the agency. This amount has been increased to avoid burdening smaller companies with the administrative work involved in filing returns.

Companies will have to provide information on their revenues and exploration expenditures according to the type of petroleum or gas being produced. Data will have to be provided not only on ownership and control but also on subsidies obtained from the government, oil-derived funds leaving the country, research and development projects in the industry and production levels. The companies will also have to provide accurate tax data which will be used to evaluate the impact of future tax changes on the industry's operations and their cost.

• (1510)

[English]

The agency will also monitor the oil and gas activities of individuals, trusts and partnerships that meet the financial thresholds of $10 million per year in revenues or $10 million in assets. As well, public sector participation in the industry will come under scrutiny. The structure of the industry is changing and for a complete picture to unfold through the Petroleum Monitoring Agency, these additional players in the industry had to be added.

The government is anxious to minimize the reporting burden faced by the industry. It is sensitive to the costs that can be involved in supplying all of the information governments seek to collect. It is for that reason that information supplied to the monitoring agency will be made available to the Department of Finance and to Statistics Canada. The Department of Finance will get information solely to formulate or evaluate energy taxation policy. By judiciously sharing this information, we can make it possible for companies to report only once and still meet the data collection requirements of a number of government departments and agencies.

The industry, of course, is anxious that some of this information be treated confidentially—and it will be. To ensure the confidentiality of this information, restrictions against disclosure will also apply to the two other departments along with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that can receive the information.

Should the need ever arise, we want the government to be in a position to monitor other sources of energy, namely coal, uranium and thorium. It is impossible to know today what quantities of these three commodities will be needed to supply energy in the future. We cannot predict with certainty the structure of energy supplies in the decades ahead. But we can plan for the future, and so we have included these three potential candidates for monitoring down the road, depending on the use we make of them and the nature of ownership and control patterns within each. We would be shortsighted indeed if we did all of the work we are doing to increase Canadian ownership and control in the petroleum industry but ignored those factors in other resource areas which some day could be far more important.

This legislation includes two lesser groups of amendments. The first concerns the Energy Supplies Emergency Act. A number of housekeeping changes are being made, covering everything from definitions to the board's authority to delegate its workload. Second, we are amending the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act, largely to enable us to meet our obligations under last November's agreement with Alberta to expand natural gas markets. The agreement includes incentives to undertake sales and promotional activities and we have to broaden the authority of the legislation to do that.

I will not take the time of the House now, Mr. Speaker, to describe the legislation before us in any more detail. We still have a great deal of work to do before it can be finally approved and members will want detailed information at the appropriate stage of legislative consideration. But I do not want to take my seat without emphasizing the importance of the principles involved here. The National Energy Program will create the conditions that will enable Canada to achieve energy self-sufficiency and security. Canadians have shown their strong support for this goal. In Parliament, we took an important first step with the Canada Oil and Gas Act, which established the ground rules for petroleum development in our exciting frontier areas. We are now about to continue that work. The energy monitoring act will give us the tools, through the already established Petroleum Monitoring Agency, to gather the information we need.

The act has been drafted in such a way as to avoid imposing reporting requirements on small firms; but in the interest of gathering the complete story, reporting requirements must be extended to the large new players in the game and must draw out facts and figures on a wide variety of subjects.

The energy monitoring bill is an important part of the legislative package before us. It will enable us carefully to monitor progress toward the major goals of the National Energy Program.

With these words, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by hoping that the legislation before the House can be disposed of efficiently and expeditiously.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by saying that I am sure members on all sides of the House share the minister's hopes for a happy future in Canada and would like to mark the milestone that was achieved on Saturday with that thought. I should add very quickly, though, that on this side of the House in particular, we hope that the kind of future we see for Canada is not the one which the minister and the government would give us with the sort of legislation presented today and the economic and energy planning we have had over the past two years. I do not think Canada can stand much more of that kind of planning if we are to have a future. I hope the government's successes will not be along the lines of the kind of legislation which has been passed to date over the last several years.

Bill C-106 is before us now. It is an interesting sequester from Bill C-94, the omnibus bill with which we were presented first. We might call this bill a "minibus" because it is really the bottom of the barrel. It has three different, separate and distinct parts to it, any of which in their own way could have a significant impact on the energy scene. I think each needs to be dealt with individually and looked at reasonably closely.

With each day the number of Canadians without jobs rises, with continued high interest rates and an increasing number of bankruptcies, all of which points to the lack of competence on the part of the Liberal government. The National Energy Program which should be called the Liberal energy program because the real question is whether national interests are being served by the program as it stands now.

Many difficulties have been created and not solved by this program in different regions and provinces. Most Canadians, if they had a chance to get an insight into the consequences of this whole program, would have serious reservations about it. Reservations about the oil industry have been there over the years with consumers feeling ripped off, etc. The main activator in the oil and gas industry has been the amount of exploration and development that has taken place and is a reason why western Canada has flourished. But this industry is feeling the first impact of the National Energy Program and is now being presented with yet another piece of legislation which will influence directly the amount of control the federal government has over its day-to-day activities.

The first part of the program is the energy monitoring act. This bill as described by the minister will ostensibly allow the government to look at what is happening in the industry. But through a number of devices, it goes much further than that. I think there can be no argument that the federal government should know what is happening as far as energy related activity in the country is concerned. The real question is how much control will fall into the hands of the federal government. What is the government going to do with the information it receives? What will Bill C-106 accomplish?

What we have seen so far up to 1981 in terms of government involvement is the loss of 8,000 jobs in the energy exploration area in Alberta. I do not know if we have figures for the last several months but we can assume that trend will continue, at least for a while. That not only affects the people of Alberta but the economy of Canada as a whole. All this has been a direct result of the legislation thus far brought in—legislation which has also had a severe impact on consumers across Canada.

The National Energy Program has resulted in energy prices arrived at by the federal government, including large increases in federal taxation, that have caused a substantial increase in costs to consumers. These costs will continue in the years to come under the provisions of the bill so far described.

Let us look at the effect this monitoring agency will have. What has happened since the first part of the energy program came into being? The most recent figures show that oil well completions have dropped 25 per cent, exploration drilling has dropped 19 per cent and development drilling has dropped 28 per cent. All of these things have occurred because of increased government involvement in, and influence on, the oil and gas industry.

The minister spoke about the government not wanting to do anything but look at what was happening in the industry. But two specific things will happen. First, this bill requires any energy related industry in Canada—specifically oil and gas, although the minister has indicated that coal, uranium and thorium are also included—to give full disclosure of all activity, including financial statements, etc.

The amount of regulatory and other control which might come out of this process is of very great concern. There is provision in the bill for some smaller industries to be excluded, but that is not written in stone. The suggestion is that any industry could be required to conform. The amount of extra paper burden and work required by the industry in order to live up to the regulations provided by this type of bill are of serious concern to the industry. They are yet another blow to the ability of the smaller enterprises to continue. They are a very real concern to businessmen who would like to carry on business activity in Canada and be able to do it relatively free from the kind of government involvement implied by this bill if it goes through.

In looking at this bill there is another concern; that is, the definition of Canada for the interpretation of the bill. It includes a definition of Canada, the federal government, with a 200-mile control area beyond our coasts. I wonder whether it is really appropriate for that definition to be included in a bill like this in view of the lack of co-operation between the federal government and provincial government of Newfoundland and the fact that the matter is before the courts right now. Obviously the 200-mile limit is a contentious point with the government of Newfoundland. It is a point, I think, which should be reconsidered by the minister.

Not only are the producers, the so-called bad men in the oil industry, being affected by this bill but also the dealers and distributors. These are the local people, many of whom are friends and neighbours who are involved in carrying on economic activity in towns or villages. These people too are susceptible to this type of regulatory control. They can be required to provide the kind of documentation the minister says he needs in order to maintain control. This is another serious imposition on the conduct of free business activity in a favourable environment in Canada. For the above reasons my party has very grave doubts about this bill, and I do not think we can see ourselves supporting it without some significant restriction on the amount of actual power and control which the minister may have if this bill is passed in its present form.

Another point is that the minister again provided himself with many discretionary powers. Of course, this is one thing about which we have grave concerns. Many things are possible through ministerial discretion and orders in council which individual Members of Parliament will not have an opportunity to scrutinize. These matters are of continuous concern. There are many examples in the bill of how that power will be implemented and used. Questions should be asked of the minister as to how far he will go in carrying out these discretionary powers. How many more orders in council can we expect in trying to implement this control?

The second part of Bill C-106 attempts to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979. It is interesting to note that there is not much difference in the present amending process, but the act itself should be considered to find out whether or not other amendments are appropriate and whether the act will actually provide the security about which the minister spoke so fondly a few moments ago. With or without the amendments, the act itself is of little benefit to the security of Canadians who will be faced with energy shortages, especially those east of the Ottawa Valley, if there is an international crisis or difficulty in securing energy supplies from other countries.

It was not until the 1970s that the government seriously considered the situation. It was increasingly clear to most people in the country that the situation in the Middle East was very volatile and that we could be facing difficulties in terms of supply sources from the area at almost any moment. Discussions took place and arguments continued. Finally in 1978 a government document was prepared, which was followed in 1979 by the Energy Supplies Emergency Act. The act provided definitions as to how energy would be allocated, what was of prime importance and what was of secondary importance. Also it provided a rough distribution system in the event of a crisis and a shortage of supply. Now we have just an explanation of the allocation process wherein the Canada Post Corporation is defined as the system which will distribute the rationing coupons and wherein the government is described as being able to affix whatever price is necessary to the actual coupons.

The question is whether we have moved any closer to security of supply in the event of an emergency. The minister made reference to the National Energy Program, but if we take a look at it and at what has happened to date, we will realize that there is no better day than today to look at what is happening in the western and eastern parts of the country. In the west today at least 80,000 barrels of oil are locked in. By this summer there will probably be 200,000 barrels locked in because they cannot be distributed. In reality we have not gone any farther toward providing security of supply for eastern Canada. In fact we have taken a giant step backward in that we have the production capability but are not able to distribute in a reasonable manner to the eastern part of the country.

This is costing Canadians a lot every day. It is costing them about 16 cents per gallon for unleaded gasoline at the pumps. It is costing the country because we are spending $18 per barrel in compensation charges and giving this money to other countries. We are still very vulnerable, almost totally vulnerable, on the eastern coast to international situations. We have a distribution coupon system through the revisions to the Energy Supplies Emergency Act in order to distribute resources that we have either not developed or that are locked in. We cannot distribute supplies reasonably to the eastern part of the country.

Interestingly this holds true for natural gas as well. We have talked a long time about extending the pipelines to the east coast so that we can distribute natural gas, which is very plentiful in western Canada, into markets that we know exist in Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. The difficulties have been partially created by the federal government and its energy program. We are just as vulnerable today as we were ten or 12 years ago. It will be a long time into the future before we are in better shape.

Another question is why we have been paying compensation charges and going through the whole energy program. Do we really have anything to show for it? Do we have the security we should have? In 1981, compensation charges cost about $4.5 billion. The government collected over $5 billion in compensation charges, but we still do not have security or the reservoir of 140 million barrels of oil which the Americans have put away for use in the event of a crisis. Where is ours? We have talked about caverns and storagability, but what have we done about them? Not much. We are dedicating ourselves to maintaining good relations with companies and countries with which we are bargaining for imported oil supplies. When a crisis comes about or there is an emergency, we know we will be vulnerable to allocations through the International Energy Agency. For what are we paying? Is it really to our benefit to maintain such relationships or to continue such activities? I think not.

The amendments to the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act are contained in the final part of the bill. The act has two major sections. There is conversion from oil or the oil substitution program, and the so-called DSEP, which is an extension of the services for taking laterals and distributing natural gas or other supply lines into smaller communities.

There is no question that the first part of the program has been successful, probably more successful than the government could have hoped for in the first instance, but it has created problems. One reason for its success has been the fact that the management of the conversion program is left to the utilities when it involves electricity and natural gas. Much of the administrative work has been carried out efficiently and effectively. This is all well and good. On the other hand, there has been great difficulty with conversions other than to electricity or to natural gas. These have fallen within the purview of the federal government.

It has taken the government a long time to get its act together. It is lagging behind, and there are many difficulties in the program. We all hope that many of those administrative problems will be worked out, but there is a real question as to whether or not in terms of improving the balances the objectives are being achieved so far as renewables and other alternatives from electricity and natural gas are concerned. I think that is a debatable question. I believe there can be much more effort applied in that area to improve those balances and to provide as many conversions as possible in those areas which are indigenous either to a region or a province. This should be done in a manner which is equitable to all Canadians.

Alberta is an excellent example. In many cases, people cannot take advantage of programs such as this because there is not the necessity for energy sources other than gas. Therefore, they do not benefit from this program which was meant to benefit all Canadians.

Since the Northwest Territories do not have natural gas or electricity, this program will not benefit them. While I appreciate that they have additional opportunities, many more steps could be taken to improve conversions in that area.

The DSEP program which was announced in March of this year has two main problems, which were created, partially due to delays, and also by the limitations which were placed on the program when it was introduced. The program as it now exists will likely serve only urban interests. The rural parts of Canada which were unable to be supplied with natural gas will still probably not be serviced by gas companies and public utilities. The reason is that the amount of the contribution to these companies to put these laterals out and extend services into smaller communities is so limited that they will only be able to service areas within a mile of their trunk lines or the areas they now service. Obviously, that is a severe restriction and will result in very few rural areas in either Quebec or Ontario obtaining service. Although this program marks a beginning and steps have been initiated, these deficiencies must be considered. The program will have to be improved in order to accommodate the needs of many people in rural parts of Canada.

Another problem concerns the lead times which were given to the companies to submit their programs and suggestions. The time is so short that many companies may not be able to comply within the time period which has been set by the government. Both these areas should be improved, but at least we have a beginning. Both programs are supported by this side of the House.

One of the main questions when studying the amendments to the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act is whether or not the emphasis has been changed. If the minister reads Section 4 on page 16 of the bill, a question which he might answer concerns the way in which it has been defined. While on one hand it might be argued as being very beneficial, the question is whether indeed there has been a change in the emphasis of the whole program. The way in which the amendment reads, it stipulates in most cases "other than oil". In many cases it has excluded electricity and gas but has not defined or stipulated any other energy source or activity. The question is whether, by exclusion, the minister is suggesting that he will not consider other alternatives to the same extent as gas and electricity. I believe that is a reasonable question to ask the minister. I can see some advantages in how this definition is worded, but at the same time there are some reasonable doubts which warrant a more detailed description.

Another question to be considered is: How does a piece of equipment, such as a heat pump, fit into this program? The heat pump is becoming an increasingly viable and valuable option in terms of energy, and when one reviews this description, I am not sure whether it can be included or whether it is meant to be included under "other energy sources" or other types of energy transmission. One of the main concerns we have when reviewing the whole energy program is that there never has been a basic understanding of the need to define what alternatives or options would be in the best interests of Canadians in the long term. This concern is not only raised by Bill C-106 but is seen as a common thread throughout the whole legislation, whether in research and development, or in specific energy activities we see within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, or in the Department of Finance when making its revisions to the taxation regime.

For example, in terms of conservation, if we look at the measures in this bill to convert away from oil, if we convert massively to electricity—which has happened in many areas of Canada, such as in Quebec and Ontario—and create another set of problems for ourselves, we would have given ourselves a short-term solution but an increasingly long-term problem. These areas have never been defined accurately or considered intelligently. The entire question of efficiency, which is important and necessary in the relationship of different energy activities, has not been described.

The minister will know that the special committee that reported to the House as well as to him made many recommendations on how to deal with the meaning of conservation in a comprehensive way. Apart from the negative implications created in the minds of people when we talk about conservation, the fact is that conservation is an efficiency which could benefit not only the lifestyle of Canadians but Canada as a whole. These facts are continually overlooked when individual departments do separate studies in isolated and unco-ordinated ways.

I would strongly urge the minister to undertake to study some of these basic questions and deal with them in a comprehensive way so that we may look forward to a future which would not be left with a crisis such as we have now as we attempt to deal with our energy needs in Canada.

In conclusion, the basic question we have concerns the direction in which we will head in managing energy affairs in Canada. The course the government is obviously following with this measure, which was initially included in the omnibus Bill C-94, is a course which means an increasing and continuous government involvement in all levels of the energy sphere. While this may be reasonable and debatable in some areas, in other areas, particularly where business activity is involved, the government has proven, through its daily demonstration of its management of its own affairs and that of the country, that it cannot and should not have the confidence of Canadians and should withdraw from many of these areas to allow those individuals who are knowledgeable and capable of making their own choice to become involved in the sort of activities which will generate economic wealth for all of Canada.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on an act respecting energy monitoring which will also amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act. I wish to put that on the record so that the minister will be sure I am speaking to the right bill.

One thing that I think I have learned—some members may suggest it is the only thing—during the last two and a half years I have been in the House is that the Liberal Party will never do anything by halves which can be done by quarters. This act is an outstanding example. I would not give it such an exalted title. I would call it the "Powder Puff Act". When the Liberals have a problem, they want to study it. If it is a bigger problem, they will monitor it. As long as one can continue to study and monitor it, one just kind of hopes that the problem will go away. It is called the Mackenzie King theory of government, and it is ably practised by the party across the aisle.

• (1550)

This agency is like the chicken monitoring a den of foxes. It is really kind of useless. It reminds me that in many speeches in this House, in Saskatchewan and elsewhere, Tommy Douglas used the line about everything being equal. It is capitalism, every man for himself. He said it is similar to what the elephant said when he was dancing among the chickens. This bill is like having one lone chicken dancing among the elephants. I want to tell the minister why. I hear the minister yelling across from me. I want the minister to look—

Mr. Lewis: Tell us about oil.

Mr. Waddell: If the hon. members to my right would just listen for a moment, I might show them something they may be very interested in.

Mr. Lewis: Doubtful.

Mr. Waddell: I have in my hand an excerpt from a Liberal campaign ad. I know how much the Liberals like these ads. In The Globe and Mail of February 2, the ad stated:

> To ensure fair costing, there will be a petroleum pricing and auditing agency.

Does the minister remember that? It continued:

> A new permanent petroleum pricing and auditing agency would be established to investigate and report on industry costs, profits and operation.

Mr. Lalonde: Right.

Mr. Waddell: It continued:

> This will also see to it that money earned in Canada will be reinvested in Canada to find new sources of energy.

It seems to me that in this bill the Liberals are downgrading the concept of a strong, independent monitoring agency. In fact, the ad of the Liberal Party gave the impression during the campaign that this would be a pricing agency to ensure fair costing. It is far from that. It merely gives a statistical survey of the industry. That is what it does. It is a toothless tiger. It is a powder puff. That is why I called it the powder puff bill.

Therefore, what I am saying to the minister is that during the 1980 election campaign he and his party gave the impression that they would do something about industry rip-offs. Had not the Bertrand commission at least alleged that the industry had ripped off something like $12 billion in price-fixing over a period? It is an example of the government pretending it would do something with a tough monitoring agency. It really did not do anything.

The gist of my opposition and the crux of our party's objection to this legislation is that it is really a toothless monitoring agency. If we had the chance, which we may hopefully have in the future, we would set up a commission on oil prices and profits. We would call it "COPP", because it would act like a good cop and it would have the power to investigate prices and profits. It would have the power to roll back unjustified prices.

Nowhere in this bill is there power given to the Petroleum Monitoring Agency to do what I suspect people would really like it to do, that is, to examine oil prices and, if there were rip-offs, to roll them back. My friend the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) will speak a little later for our party on that aspect of the Bertrand commission and the present rather farcical hearings into oil price fixing which are now being held across the country.

Once again, the Liberals study a matter, monitor a matter or hold hearings. I see that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is present. After he deflected Mr. Bertrand, he deflected the Bertrand report into these hearings going on across the country. I appeared before the commission in Vancouver and advocated that it recommend a petroleum monitoring agency which would have some real powers, unlike the one in this bill. That commission has just announced that it will not consider the rip-offs that have occurred in the past; they will look only into the present circumstances. So we can just forget about all of the past rip-offs. It is a perfect example of the minister getting out from under the tough duty of rolling back prices. That is really the gist of our criticisms with regard to this bill.

I want to deal with some of the background notes in the bill and make some comments about some proposed amendments. When we come to parts of the bill which I think are good, I will say so. Never let it be said that we do not congratulate the government when it brings in something good. It is simply that we are prepared to criticize the government when it brings in something which is as Mickey Mouse as this, something which is a powder puff or a toothless tiger, when there is really a job to be done out there.

According to the notes put out by the government, the new Energy Monitoring Act will replace the Petroleum Corporations Monitoring Act. It will enable the federal government to obtain, on a regular basis, complete information on the activities and financial performance of enterprises which have more than $10 million in oil and gas revenues or $10 million in assets. The new legislation will require enterprises above the threshold size to file additional information, as I understand it, such as the following: first, revenues and operating costs of producers by type of oil and gas, by method of production and by geographical location; second, ownership and control of companies; third, petroleum incentive payments and tax-related benefits to the industry; fourth, research and development activity of the oil and gas industry; fifth, value and volume of production statistics; and, finally, the flow of funds between Canada and other countries.

I have no objection to the government requiring this information provided it obtains it by the least bureaucratic method possible. Presumably, this information will enable the federal government to monitor and assess the impact of the various components of the National Energy Program. It will apparently also give the government the means to formulate ongoing energy policy. I understand that the information collected will be confidential, subject to certain exemptions. Perhaps more could be said about this in committee with respect to how the freedom of information legislation would fit in, if we ever get that legislation.

I understand the minister will make the information available to the department for policy formulation and to the Petroleum Monitoring Agency for analysis, and that the regular publications of the Petroleum Monitoring Agency will provide Canadians generally with an overview of the activities and financial performance of the petroleum industry in Canada. That is fine. I think we do need an overview of the activities and financial performance of this industry because it is a strategic industry. It is a strategic industry which, as Your Honour knows, is, by and large, controlled and owned by foreigners. No other industrial country like ours would permit such a strategic industry to be so controlled by forces outside the country. Certainly, Norway did not do that when it opened up the North Sea. Certainly, the United Kingdom would not go for that. Indeed, the person who originally advocated a government window and some government direction to a strategic industry like oil was Sir Winston Churchill. I do not hear my friends to the right heckling me when I say that. It was Churchill who advocated a role for the British government in petroleum after the First World War. That is why that country became involved in British Petroleum.

The Petroleum Monitoring Agency was established under the Inquiries Act on August 1, 1980. We have this agency and now the act is bringing it in. It is sort of ex post facto. The original agency is going to be continued in name under the Energy Monitoring Act. The agency will consist of a chairman appointed by the government and two members appointed by the minister. It will monitor the industry, advise the minister upon request, publish reports, conduct special studies and inform the general public on industry related matters.

That is fine as far as it goes. It does not do anything about rolling back unjustified price increases and so on. The Canadian people are not interested in monitoring; they are interested in action if there has been some wrongful pricing.

There have been some changes from the draft bill which preceded Bill C-94 and this bill. The government has been more lenient in its requirement of what companies have to report to the Petroleum Monitoring Agency. Originally companies with $5 million in assets were required to report. Under this bill, the ceiling has been raised to $10 million. This obviously means that fewer industries will be scrutinized by the Petroleum Monitoring Agency. We intend to move an amendment to restore the $5 million ceiling. If you are going to monitor, you might as well monitor completely.

Also, the size at the Petroleum Monitoring Agency has been reduced. In the draft bill, the agency consisted of a chairman and up to six members. We must undestand that there was a draft bill last year. Then there was bill C-94, the Energy Security Act, the omnibus bill. Then the bills were split into eight bills. This is the sixth, C-106. Under this bill, the size of the Petroleum Monitoring Agency has been reduced to two members besides the chairman. Is the government downgrading the concept of a strong, independent monitoring agency by reducing the number of members on it? We can examine that in committee, presumably when the chairman of the agency is there.

I made reference to the Liberal campaign ad. The campaign ad gave the impression that there was going to be a rather toothy agency that would do something with pricing rather than just monitor. The ad also said that money earned in Canada will be reinvested in Canada to find new sources of energy.

That ad was published February 2, 1980. It is interesting to note in the latest petroleum monitoring agency report that for the first six months of 1981, capital expenditures by the oil industry increased by 55 per cent, from $429 million to $663 million. In 1980 investment abroad increased by 63 per cent. So much for the promise that money earned in Canada would be reinvested in Canada. It is nothing new for the country or this House when the Liberal Party does not keep campaign promises. However, it is our duty to keep pointing out the list of broken campaign promises. I would like to reiterate our objections to the Petroleum Monitoring Agency, how it has been operationg and how it highlights the profitability of the industry by emphasizing the net income after tax, which includes deferred tax which will never be paid.

The PMA is underestimating the true profit picture of the industry. A more accurate estimation of profit is profit after income tax only, as was done by Energy, Mines and Resources prior to establishing the Petroleum Monitoring Agency. It seems to me that the PMA underestimated the profit picture of the industry in 1980 by $1.5 billion.

That is a serious matter because if we cannot get a toothy agency with a little power to roll back prices if need be, at least we can get a monitoring agency that will monitor properly. I say that the Petroleum Monitoring Agency is not monitoring properly. That is another aspect that has to be examined in committee.

My friends to my right talk about the difficulty the energy industry is going through in terms of profit picture and so on. I agree that small Canadian companies are having difficulty. We have to look back over the past three or four years at the profitability of the industry. We must do that properly. It is very instructive when you do that. For example, I learned from looking at those figures that one of the central problems the industry now has is this: the industry was making so much profit in 1980-81, and perhaps 1979-80, that it was unlike other industries in Canada. This can be seen if you read carefully the National Energy Program. A building block or basic premise of the National Energy Program was that the industry was doing so well that it could take all its cash flow and reinvest it. That is where its investment came from. Other industries such as manufacturing were not so lucky; they had to go to the bank to borrow and raise capital when they wanted to reinvest. They could not take it entirely from their cash flow.

What happened was that under the National Energy Program taxes were being put on the industry. That had to be because windfall profits were being made. The industry kept right on trying to invest from its cash flow. When it did not have the cash flow, it went to the bank.

The industry in the west is in the same position today as many small businessmen and ordinary people in Canada. They have real problems borrowing money from the banks. They are in hock to the banks. Members might want to look at this pattern of investment in the oil industry in order to really understand what is going on.

The point I raised with respect to the Petroleum Monitoring Agency looking at the industry's accounting method is important. I wish to put on record a letter I wrote to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) on September 10, 1981, regarding this problem. I wish to put it on record so that when this bill gets to committee Mr. Renouf, the chairman, or whoever appears for the agency, will have an opportunity to read it and comment. I quote from the letter:

Dear Mr. Lalonde:

I want to draw to your attention an underestimation of the true profit situation of the petroleum industry as described in the Petroleum Monitoring Agency's report for 1980. This is the first annual report by the new agency and it has chosen to change how it reports the industry's profits. In 1979 when the monitoring survey was conducted by the financial and fiscal analysis branch of your department, the profitability of the industry was stated in terms of cash flow and profits after current income tax. In the PMA report of 1980, profits are defined as net income after tax which includes deferred taxes. Consequently the PMA underestimates the profitability of the petroleum industry by $1.5 billion had the same methodology been used as before.

The Canadian Petroleum Industry Monitoring Survey 1979, under the title "Highlights—Profitability and Sources of Finance" stated that profits after current income tax rose 53.8 per cent to $4.7 billion in 1979 . . . " Net income is not highlighted as it is in the 1980 PMA report.

The 1979 report states under the heading "Profitability" on page 17 that:

"This section endeavours to estimate rates of return for the petroleum industry. However, this is difficult because the resource industries in Canada enjoy certain tax advantages and follow accounting practices which are different from those in other industries. As a result of certain tax advantages, the petroleum industry has a higher proportion of deferred income taxes to total income taxes than other industries.

● (1610)

Moreover, many petroleum companies expend some of their exploration and development investments. Both of these factors have the effect of depressing 'book' net profits, even though the cash associated with these items is available for investment and, to an extent, for distribution purposes. A more accurate picture of profitability requires that they be taken into account."

And again the 1979 report states on page 4 that

"due to the nature of petroleum operations and associated accounting methods used, it is customary and more meaningful, in analysing the industry's performance, to use internal cash flow rather than net income."

The 1980 PMA report portrays deferred taxes as a liability thereby reducing income after income tax. In reality these taxes are interest free loans which will never be collected. Hence a more accurate reflection of profits is the income after income tax has been deducted, but before deferred taxes have been deducted.

Therefore using the more realistic 1979 report's methodology instead of the PMA's, the 1980 assessment of the industry's profitability should have stated that profits (income after income tax) rose 30 per cent to over $6.2 billion, not 31 per cent ot over $4.7 billion.

I would also like to object to the decision by the Chairman of the PMA, Mr. Harold Renouf, to delay the release of the 1980 report until after the federal government and Alberta energy negotiations had been completed. I consider this deliberate obstruction of the Government's and public's right to know the facts. The decision to withhold publication raises serious doubt about the independence and impartiality of this agency.

In view of the above I ask you to instruct Mr. Renouf to use the previous methodology of your department as in the 1979 report in stating the industry's true profits, and that he not again delay publication of his agency's reports.

I never got a satisfactory answer to that letter and I propose to press on until I do get a satisfactory answer. If I can translate that into English, Mr. Speaker, it means this, that in 1979 the department had a way of looking at industry profitability which was different from what the monitoring industry did in 1980. If it had used the 1979 way of looking at it, the industry profits would have been $1.59 billion greater. Why is that important? It is important because if we are going to have a monitoring industry it might as well work and it might as well have an accurate picture of the industry. I set that out, Mr. Speaker, for more argument in committee.

This bill also deals with amendments to the Energy Supplies Emergency Act; and the hon. member who last spoke dealt with this matter. I note the report states that:

The technical amendments to the Energy Supplies Emergency Act have been made to ensure that there is clear authority for the steps necessary under that act in the event of an emergency that would warrant use of this legislation.

For example, the present act enables the Energy Supplies Allocation Board (ESAB) to make regulations to authorize banks to perform functions relating to the issuance of rationing coupons.

This must be one of the only requirements that this government has ever brought out about getting tough with the banks. If there is some energy emergency, it may force the banks to issue rationing coupons. I note that this report continues:

With the amendments, this responsibility now is extended to apply to trust companies as well.

As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, these amendments are non-controversial and can be supported.

The third act, Mr. Speaker, which is amended by this bill is the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act, which was enacted in 1981. That act provides the government with the means to implement a number of oil substitution and conservation measures proposed under the National Energy Program.

We heard the minister, in answer to a question from the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) today, say that he felt that there had been some success in Canada in terms of substitution. Now, there had been success, but I wonder whether it is because the government has run the economy into a recession that we are having conservation, or is it really because the government has brought in wise measures that have forced Canadians to conserve? I am not sure. I think it may be the former rather than the latter.

In any case, as a result of the Canada-Alberta energy agreement in September, 1981, the Alberta government agreed to pay moneys to the federal government in order to assist programs for expanding markets for natural gas in the provinces east of Alberta. The amendments to the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act provide clarification of the necessary authority in respect of such programs.

We generally support the substitution away from oil, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that the government program is incomplete here in two ways. One is that there is incredible pressure on the government, and there will be soon again, to export natural gas. I sometimes feel I am the only one in the country who seems to be noting that there is this great pressure all over the country to export our natural gas. I draw the government's attention to this problem. If we pass a bill like this, it will encourage substitution of natural gas—which we are supposed to have in abundance—for oil, which we sold out shamelessly in the late 1960s and in the 1970s when we were at one point exporting one-half of our daily production. Let us not do the same thing with gas. Let us not build a series of pipelines and connections to people's homes for natural gas and then turn around in 15 years and say there is a natural gas shortage. That would be a real tragedy. That is what we did with oil. People have said that it cannot happen again. It happened with oil and it could happen again with natural gas. It is important that this be pointed out.

This was one of the bases, Mr. Speaker, of our trust in the pre-build of the Alaska pipeline. We said "Do not pre-build a section of this line and export a lot of natural gas forever through it; hold out for the whole line to be built up to Alaska and be careful with natural gas exports." There are other ways in which this problem can be handled of shut-in natural gas and the demand for cash flow from small companies that have found natural gas. Let me suggest two. One is a natural gas vent, a suggestion of mine which I think was taken up in the National Energy Program. I have not seen much happen to it since it was announced, until now.

Mr. Lalonde: A suggestion about the National Energy Program. It was too late.

Mr. Waddell: The second suggestion was that they might consider a proration system of gas in Alberta so that the small gasoline companies can share in some of that market with the big boys. That might alleviate their cash flow problems and therefore perhaps fine down a little bit their demands for the export of our gas.

This bill will make reference to COSP, which is a substitution program that pays people to substitute. In committee, it might be useful if we examined this program. I know that we do not have time for very many questions in the House of Commons, and if we ask them we are liable to get insulting answers anyway. There need to be more questions put and answers obtained in committee as to why it is taking so long for the government to get applications from people for conversion to natural gas and so on. Why is it taking so long for these applications to be processed and why is it taking so long for the government to get cheques out to people? I think we can pursue this in committee.

The government released what they call a DSEP background in which they talked about the Canada oil substitution program and the conversion assistance program and the distribution system expansion program. In Ottawa one has to be an expert in all these terms—COR, PIP, DSEP, COSP and so on. One has to be careful about what they all mean!

I noticed on the DSEP background, page 2, something which I find rather interesting:

• (1620)

In addition to contributing to the off-oil goal of the NEP, DSEP expenditures this year will generate new jobs and economic spin-off benefits as expansion projects proceed. Economists predict that direct employment, primarily in construction, will reach 2,000 person years. It is estimated that total employment, including indirect and induced will reach 7,500 person years. This includes the spinoffs that will come from the purchase by utilities and their suppliers of required raw and refined material.

We have been trying to make the point throughout this grand debate on energy security that the government should emphasize conservation and alternate energy much more than it has. For example, the government is spending $6.5 billion on PIP grants to private industry. It is spending $35 million to upgrade its alternate energy corporation, Canertech. There is a tremendous gap between what the government is prepared to pay on the supply side and what it is prepared to do on the demand side to reduce the demand for this resource. What the passage I quoted made me realize is that there are many more jobs—and this is an issue we really must debate further in the House of Commons—in connection with conversion from oil to gas and other alternate methods of heating, the insulation of people's houses, the provision of rapid transit, conservation and so forth.

Instead, what we have talked about almost every day in this House when we—and the press as well—have talked about energy is that Alsands should go ahead at a cost of $13 billion, Cold Lake should go ahead at a cost of $10 billion and the Alaska highway pipeline should go ahead at a cost of $40 billion. We talk about these megaprojects and jobs on these megaprojects, but if we really analyse the situation, we see that there are many more jobs in projects of smaller scale, including conservation and alternatives. That is something which has never really been debated enough in this House.

The hon. member who spoke previously mentioned the report of the all-party committee on energy alternatives. It was a fine report but it was simply ignored by the government. I think we will have to debate that in the committee.

I want to state again very briefly our position on this matter. The monitoring agency which is the heart of this bill is really a paper tiger. It monitors, collects statistics and looks around, but it has no teeth when it comes to being able to roll back prices if there are rip-offs. The hon. member for Comox-Powell River will speak about what is happening in relation to combines legislation and in relation to prices.

This monitoring agency is like a person wearing a blindfold. It hears no evil and speaks no evil; it just reports. That is not good enough. We want a monitoring agency we would call COPP, a commission on oil pricing and profits. We felt the name "COPP" would convey to people what it would do; it would have some real teeth and real power not only to monitor but also to take decisive action if decisive action was required.

I will conclude by saying what I said in opening my speech. I have learned that the motto of the Liberal government is quite clear: do not do anything by halves if you can do it by quarters. If you can give an agency teeth, do not do it. If you have a Bertrand report, just shuffle it off. If you have problems with oil company profits, just set up a monitoring agency. If you have problems with northern energy, just study it, monitor it, look at it, shuffle it and put it off, but never act. That is the position of this government, and that is why we in the New Democratic Party oppose this bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—Energy—Nova Scotia offshore development. (b) Measures to assist development; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman)—External Affairs—Plight of Nicaraguan refugees in Honduras. (b) Request for human rights investigation; the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin)—Energy—Inquiry whether representations will be made to Quebec to reduce impact of gasoline retailers' strike.

ENERGY MONITORING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH PETROLEUM MONITORING AGENCY AND TO AMEND CERTAIN ACTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-106, respecting energy monitoring and to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in participating in this debate at second reading of Bill C-106, which relates to energy monitoring, supply and conservation, is to underline the special interest and concern of Atlantic Canada and those areas of eastern Quebec which do not now have access to Canadian oil and gas supplies.

It is quite obvious to residents and governments in Newfoundland, the maritimes and Quebec that we have both a special problem and a clear vulnerability with respect to energy supplies. This special status is reflected in the cost, in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, of electrical energy. The consumers in those provinces pay the highest electric energy costs in Canada. It is the hope and aim of the government of the province of Nova Scotia, for example, that energy costs can be kept at a level equal to the average across Canada and, in trying to carry out that aim, the government of Nova Scotia has experienced cost-deficits in the area of $100 million just to maintain electric energy supplies to consumers at a cost equal to the average enjoyed by other Canadians. It is a very difficult and very serious problem on the east coast of Canada and in the province of Quebec, brought on by the lack of access to Canadian supplies. We view the matter of energy monitoring, mergency supply of energy and conservation from a very special base.

Let me review very briefly the history which has given rise to this special problem. First, in the 1960s the far-sighted government of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker wanted to develop the Canadian petroleum industry and, in order to do that, Mr. Diefenbaker's government had to encourage Canadians to make use of Canadian oil supplies. In order to bring about that situation, industrial and other consumers in effect had to be forced to use Canadian supplies in the sense of having been cut off from cheap foreign sources of energy in the form of Middle East oil and other sources of foreign crude oil. In those early 1960s there was established a line across Canada known as the Ottawa Valley line beyond which Canadian oil supplies had to be used. This system worked very well and had the effect of developing the Canadian petroleum industry in the face of the unfair competition of foreign oil supplies which were available at much less production cost.

This policy worked well until the early 1970s when the OPEC cartel was formed and the price of foreign oil was artificially raised to a point where it was much greater than the cost of Canadian oil. At that point it was too late to take any immediate action to make Canadian oil available beyond the Ottawa Valley line and particularly to the maritime provinces and eastern Canada. The only position the government could take to equalize the situation across Canada was to embark upon a program of subsidization. Over the years, since the early 1970s that has imposed on the Government of Canada and the taxpayers of Canada a tremendous dollar burden which has, in turn, affected the whole financial well-being of Canada in the sense that it adds on an annual basis to the already overburdening deficit we have in Canada.

Just to put the matter in clear and more up-to-date terms, in 1978, when the revolution occurred in Iran and overnight, there were two million or three million barrels of oil a day lost to the world market. The price of energy rose even more dramatically so that the world price for oil greatly exceeded the Canadian price, to the point were it imposed a great hardship on those Canadians who were forced to utilize foreign supplies of oil at world prices. The statistics I have indicated show that in the late 1970s and early 1980s the price differential between world oil and Canadian oil was in the area of $43 a barrel for foreign oil and $17.75 for Canadian oil. The burden on the government, in order to subsidize that difference so that all Canadians would have oil supplies available at relatively equal cost, was close to $5 billion annually. Consumption at that point in those areas where there was no Canadian oil available amounted to 450,000 barrels a day.

When we look at statistics like that, we realize what a serious problem there is, not only for consumers and those who do not have Canadian oil supplies available, but also for the treasury of the national government, which must take steps to alleviate this difficulty. It is in the context of our knowledge of the dangers of exposure to foreign oil prices, bearing in mind the OPEC cartel, and in the context of being assured of a continuing supply of energy at reasonable prices, that we on the east coast view legislation relating to energy.

The program that was announced by the government in 1980, the National Energy Program, had as its aim and goal self-sufficiency in energy for Canadians. In simple terms, self-sufficiency involves two important aspects: the first is security of supply; the second is price. Once the supply is secure it must be available to all Canadians at a fair price. To the extent that the National Energy Program had the rightful goal of sufficiency in energy with security of supply and a fair price, it could be endorsed by all Canadians. We have come to question whether that is really the goal and aim of the National Energy Program, however.

It included another concept which has caused a great deal of difficulty on the east coast, and that is the concept of Canadianization. Who in this House or anywhere in Canada would find fault with the concept of Canadianization of our industries, particularly such a vital industry as energy and petroleum? But is that really what the government intended? Has the Canadianization process taken place in the sense that we are turning control of our energy industry over to Canadians as individuals and as investors, or are we turning it over to the Government of Canada? In my view, that would not be Canadianization but would be nationalization; that is to say, making our energy industry a simple department, branch or agency of government.

I do not believe, and I am sure most members of the Progressive Conservative Party and indeed most Canadians do not believe, in the government's policy. This country embraces the principle of free enterprise. It was built on the principle of free enterprise, and if it is to succeed it will be on the basis of that principle of free enterprise. I want to highlight that point in my remarks because we have to consider the basic principles of our Canadian system if we are to assess Bill C-106.

There is a principle that is new to the Canadian government, and that is the principle embodied in the Constitution Act which was adopted at the weekend with much fanfare at an event which was graced by the presence of Her Majesty the Queen. Such events appeal not only to our sense of nationality but to our sense of tradition, which is based on our British ties and our involvement with the monarchy. The principle in the Constitution Act and in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is that of equalization and the removal of regional disparities. The Government of Canada, through the Constitution Act, embraces that concept of equalization across Canada and accepts the removal of regional disparities as a challenge and a goal to be achieved.

How can the government do that unless it has the goal and aim of establishing fair energy prices for all Canadians? If it is going to sacrifice that goal of fair energy prices for all Canadians on the altar of a concept it has created and which is known as Canadianization, then it is not going to work to the benefit of people in eastern Canada. I want to warn Canadians about that.

What is Canadianization, Mr. Speaker? Basically it involves the specific goal of 50 per cent ownership of the Canadian energy industry as announced in the National Energy Program. According to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail of Thursday, May 28, 1981, Professor Donald Daly of York University believes that, in the decade which began in 1980, Canadianization could cost Canadians $56 billion. At a time when Canada cannot muster the resources to launch the Alberta tar sands project or to explore the Atlantic offshore for the energy supplies we know are there, how is it going to muster $56 billion to buy into the Canadian petroleum industry? What does the government do in order to achieve this objective? It buys a private concern at a cost of $1.4 billion. And where is the money for the purchase to come from? It will come from Canadians through the price they pay for gasoline.

On the east coast and in the maritimes the problem is that the price of energy is too high, whether it be in the form of gasoline for transportation fuels or oil for home heating. That is the problem, but will that problem be solved by adding to the price of energy supplies at the consumer level in order to buy back the industry and get control of it? There is no real evidence that such control will benefit the people of Canada and there is no real evidence that the present practice is against the interests of Canadians. All we are going to do is buy back an industry that is now available to all Canadians—make Canadians pay for it and then force them to subsidize the industry because our resources have been exhausted through buying it back.

I know I am going around in circles, Mr. Speaker, but so is the Government of Canada. What gives it the right to do this? It was elected on a platform of keeping the price of energy, and particularly of gasoline, to the consumer at a lower level than that proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party. In fact, I have here an election campaign folder issued by the Liberal Party of Canada in which it made the promise that, if elected, it would keep the price of gasoline at the consumer level below the level proposed by the Progressive Conservative government. That promise was made at a time when the price of gasoline was less than $1 per gallon, but today, Mr. Speaker, no Canadian on the east coast can buy even the cheapest kind of gasoline at less then $2 per gallon. That is how the Liberal Party keeps its promises on energy. Now it asks us to approve new energy legislation to monitor energy companies and to provide for security of supply.

The fact is that the people of Canada have lost faith in the government delivering on its promises. They are not really interested in monitoring the petroleum industry and they are not really interested any more in the Canadianization of the oil industry because they know it is going to cost them more money. Who is going to pay for monitoring the oil industry? How is it going to be paid for? Where are the funds going to come from to pay for the inspectors, the boards, the commissioners, the inquiries? The money is going to come from the Canadian people, through the price they pay for gasoline, home heating oil and other energy supplies. It is as simple as that, Mr. Speaker. There is no way around it. All the costs of carrying on the business, all the costs of monitoring the business, all the costs of government intervention in private industry have to be borne by the Canadian consumer, who is going to fork it over in the form of a tax on gasoline and energy supplies at the retail level. We would be failing the Canadian public and this House if we did not make that very clear when we talk about monitoring the petroleum industry.

The minister spoke of making plans for emergency energy supplies, but this too will be paid for by Canadians, Mr. Speaker. The price of Canadianization is great and it is unfair that the government wraps its aims in a nationalistic spirit which we all want to embrace. Every Canadian certainly wants the nation to grow, to advance, and wants the economy to become perfected. But at what price and for what purpose? In this respect the government is trying to fool the Canadian people by masking its mistakes in new programs, new concepts, new ways of doing things. These approaches are not new at all but are simply revisions of past policies. Each time the government runs through this exercise the cost to the consumer is increased, yet Canadians on the east coast and in eastern Quebec still do not have access to Canadian oil supplies and so are forced into the world market to obtain energy. As a result, they have to go begging to the Government of Canada for help.

I can say with some pride, Mr. Speaker, that I rose in this House at a time when the consumer price of gasoline in my constituency of Halifax West, Nova Scotia, was in the area of 75 cents per gallon. I said on that occasion, February 15, 1979—and hon. members can find my remarks in Hansard for that day—that if the government did not take prompt and effective action it would not be long before Canadians would be paying $2 a gallon for gasoline. How right I was. Today, Canadians are paying $2 a gallon for gasoline and more. The unfortunate part is there is no hope for any reduction in price in the future. At the same time, however, our neighbours to the south in the United States of America who had exactly the same problem we had moved to correct their problem. They are now paying less for gas in the State of Maine than we are in the maritime provinces.

• (1640)

That is the kind of effective action the Americans have taken. I have an article here before me which indicates the Americans have their problem well in hand and are winning the energy battle. That is the difference. The Americans are using the free enterprise system. They are using the resources of the people of the United States to win the energy battle. On the other hand, we are using the resources of the federal bureaucracy and the Government of Canada in a nationalization program which is causing us to lose the energy battle. That is why we have to resort to this kind of flim-flam legislation and all this nonsense about monitoring and alleged security of supply.

We are losing the battle and I can give one example. Through the National Energy Program, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), backed by the Government of Canada, told the maritimes people that they would have natural gas in 1983. The year 1983 is only a few months away and we do not even have natural gas in eastern Quebec. How will natural gas be delivered to the maritimes by 1983? Natural gas will not be there by 1983, 1984 or 1985. I doubt that this government will ever be able to deliver natural gas to the maritimes. Again, this is just a charade; going through this exercise of trying to fool the people because this government will not face up to the facts. This government will not face up to the fact that in Canada you have to rely on the resources of the people. You have to rely on private industry to get things done. If you do not, Mr. Speaker, you are in a great deal of trouble.

I just wanted to put those few remarks on the record. I want to warn the Government of Canada again that it should become realistic about its approach to resolving problems in Canada. It should not rely on myths but on substance. It should not rely on theories such as Canadianization. It should be relying on the capability and capacity of Canadians to resolve the problem. If it does not do that, then the government is leading us down that long road which the Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker said has no ash cans. That is the road we are on today with Bill C-106 that is before us; we are going down a long road that has no ash cans. That is no solution to this problem.

The solution to the problem is the capacity and capability of Canadians. That is what we have to rely on. We should not rely on a bunch of government bureaucrats who claim through the purchase of Petro-Canada and the reversal of policies on offshore development that we can lighten the energy problem. We cannot. There is all kinds of evidence to show that this government does not know what it is doing. What about the oil rigs that are leaving the east coast exploration grounds and returning to the shore and not going back? Just this week in Halifax a most important energy exploration program to be carried out under the auspices of Shell Oil involving $200 million was delayed for four months because the government's Department of Energy, Mines and Resources did not sit down with the officers and engineers of Shell Oil and come to some sensible arrangement and agreement on how the exploration is to be carried out.

That is illustrative of the burden Canadians will have to bear under this kind of legislation and government interference, which goes against the principles of the free enterprise system and the principles of Canadian industry. It will have no good result.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, one of the rare treats in the House of Commons is to hear a Tory member speak. What is said is generally anything but informative. The previous speaker has probably given one of the best examples that I have heard in a long time. The report entitled "The State of Competition in the Canadian Petroleum Industry" does not exist for the Tories.

It is interesting to note that in that report there are a number of factors which stress the benefits of the free enterprise system, the unregulated free enterprise system. I want it clearly placed on the record that the previous speaker has come out in support of one of our primary movers and shakers in this country, namely Imperial Oil. This report brands Imperial Oil as one of the prime movers in restricting and stifling competition in this country and failing to give a fair break to consumers.

The hon. member suggests that we should provide more deregulation of that industry. There is Shell Oil, Texaco—

Mr. Crosby: What about the State of Maine?

Mr. Skelly: —and there is Gulf Oil, the group that has been criticized for involvement in an uranium cartel in other areas. So there again is the question of competition legislation. I am convinced, after listening to the previous speaker, that unregulated free enterprise under a Tory government would perpetuate the kind of rip-off that resulted between 1958 and 1972 in the removal of $12 billion from the Canadian consumers' pockets. That is the kind of policy the Tories and the gophers of the oil companies are advocating in this House of Commons.

Second, the Liberal government, literally their partners in crime, have always recognized the problems but never had the jam to come forward and really meet the needs of Canadians.

It is unfortunate that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is not here any more. We are talking about protecting the Canadian consumer which, in the final analysis, is everyone's goal. But there are a few items here in which the minister of consumer affairs would be interested. He is the minister charged with protecting the interests of consumers and trying to maintain in the pockets of working Canadians, senior citizens and those on fixed incomes some reasonably fair share of the income they struggle to make in this high interest, heavy inflation period.

One interesting feature of the costs we are looking at is the dramatic increase in the price of gasoline and home heating fuel. Hon. members to my right are quite correct in saying that here is a government, during this very serious economic crisis, removing more money almost in an incongruous way from the pockets of consumers while we see prices dropping in other areas of the world.

Mr. Waddell: That is exactly what the Tories plan to do.

Mr. McDermid: Are you promising lower gas prices?

Mr. Skelly: Let us go back for a moment and look at what should be happening. As a result of a number of individuals coming forward and indicating they were suffering at the hands of what appeared to be monopolistic practices in the oil industry, a report was issued. A number of points were dealt with in this report. The first covered the importation of oil in which the parent company transferring oil from multinational companies in Canada was found to be ripping off Canadians on the transfer price. A recommendation ensued which stated that legislation be enacted to prohibit the payment of artificially high transfer prices and that legislation be enacted to grant the appropriate authorities the necessary power to obtain information that is stored abroad by the parent or affiliated company of a Canadian company. Another recommendation in the report pointed out that one third of the domestic crude oil supply in Canada was held by the same gang of four that had concentrated control over Canadian energy supplies. Also, the control of the pipelines by the same group blocked access of new entrants into the field, those which the Tories would see us bring onstream and which may be of great assistance.

But what is advocated in that report is action. Again we find recommendations that all petroleum pipelines under federal jurisdiction be actively regulated to ensure that anyone seeking to ship special or batched streams of crude oil receives non-discriminatory access to pipelines in a fashion that ensures that communications between crude oil shippers regarding pipeline operations are reduced to a minimum. Also the report recommended that legislation be enacted requiring all major integrated oil companies to divest their holdings in existing pipelines which are subject to federal jurisdiction, and that no major oil company be permitted to acquire a controlling interest in any such new pipeline.

The Alberta petroleum marketing commission modified its limitation on the number of eligible purchases to Alberta crude oil. Then it dealt with the area of refining. Recommendations developed from there that legislation be enacted requiring that all refiners operating in Canada obtain the approval of the National Energy Board for all refinery supply agreements affecting interprovincial and international trade and exchange. Before approving such agreements, the board must consult with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as to the likely effect of the agreement upon competition. We have a minister in charge of energy, mines and resources who is governing energy aspects in Canada, we have four major oil companies which seem to be controlling the entire industry, and we have a Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who has done absolutely nothing to protect Canadian consumers.

Perhaps 1971 would be the starting point. At that time there was an attempt in the country to introduce a competition policy. Of course, the onslaught from the business community, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the oil companies ensured that the competition was buried very deep, along with the minister of consumer and corporate affairs of the day. There were several more attempts to bring forward effective competition legislation to govern the activities of oil companies and ensure that they did not destroy competition or other enterprises coming into the field with their market power. Those pieces of legislation went down under the juggernaut of Canadian business—the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, banks and major oil companies—and of course the support of the Conservative Party went with them. This put away forever an opportunity for competition legislation.

In 1979 when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was interviewed in Business Week magazine, he said that the business community should have no fear because competition, as far as the Conservative Party was concerned, was a backburner issue. I guess that was the last statement of the Conservative Party on the issue. Perhaps it would still see the concentrated efforts of major oil companies controlling Canadian business and exploiting Canadian consumers in the manner outlined inn the report on the state of competition in the petroleum industry.

Today we have the situation where we are looking for competition legislation in the House. For the last two years the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been suggesting that he is interested in protecting the Canadian consumer. At one point he said in the House that if there were agreement on bringing forward the legislation, he would have it in the House within two weeks. The minister is nothing but talk. Canadian consumers will be left out to dry, because essentially the Liberal Party has no more intention to control the big four than the Conservative Party has.

As far as the interest of the government in protecting consumers is concerned, it is interesting to note that the report "The State of Competition in the Canadian Petroleum Industry," was dragged out until Bill C-48 was placed before the House. The report was ready for delivery months before it was presented. By presenting or even making that information public there is a certain amount of restraint placed upon the blatant activities of the companies. A certain courage has developed within those who have been exploited to come forward, to complain and to demand action. Presumably the minister, with the support of Cabinet, decided to delay it. We watched week after week as the Conservative Party went insane in the House, screaming and hollering about inequities of Bill C-48, and then suddenly defending oil companies from one week to the next. Then we saw the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs dropping this little jewel, the report on the state of competition in the oil industry, square on the Tory program of supporting the oil companies. Of course, it dropped them to their knees for several days.

This group of people in the House of Commons supported and advocated the benefits of more freedom of activity for a group of companies which essentially ripped $12 billion out of the pockets of Canadians consumers between 1958 and 1973, but only for two days. They managed to cover their tracks, tear the report to pieces and quickly move on. Rather than do anything constructive about the report, looking seriously at taking Imperial Oil into the Petro-Canada group and making it the strongest and most dominant oil company in the country, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did nothing. Before doing anything serious about implementing any of the recommendations, the great jellyfish, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, turned around and handed the report to a travelling road show to lose somewhere in the backwoods of Canada. This is exactly what happened. The Restrictive Trade Practices Commission has been touring the country, thumping the drum and having a whale of a time. There is no one in the House who seriously believes, when the report comes back from the commission that anything will be done. The minister used it as a hammer to flatten the Tories, and then got rid of it before it ricocheted and flattened them.

In spite of the lack of resolve on the part of the government, an effective competition policy should be placed before Canadians. It is incredible that the government could watch concentration coming into the energy industry which it no longer controls. We listen to stories about control of our resources which indicate that we have enough for 900 years; then we hear stories which indicate that we are running out of oil quickly and that the prices should be jacked up. If the government had an ounce of resolve to protect Canadians, both those in business and consumers who depend heavily upon that material, we would have had competition legislation in the House long before now. I think the government knows for whom it dances—the banks and the oil companies. Literally we have seen examples of this in the Thirty-second Parliament. This is probably one of the most serious failures of the government. Also we had the Kent commission on concentration in the newspaper industry, and we lost that report. Rather than turning the petroleum inquiry out to the public, it was lost. This is an extremely serious problem.

There are a number of general policy goals in the energy monitoring act. One is to increase Canadian ownership. Another is to increase control in the oil and gas industry. The government should look at a method of increasing benefits to Canadians and ensuring that our resources maximize benefits to Canadians. This is the purpose of monitoring the activities of these companies and the industry; this is the purpose of Petro-Canada.

I have heard the Conservative Party criticize Petro-Canada by saying what a poor job it is doing and that it cannot be trusted. Can we trust the Liberals to run anything? A good job could be done.

An hon. Member: That is the point.

Mr. Skelly: My hon. colleague has conceded the point. What we are basically looking for is an assurance of Canadian benefits through this legislation.

• (1700)

We have heard many discussions in the House about major projects, megaprojects and the tar sands and how this area will be the one which will bail us out, employ Canadians and start the economy moving again. There are opportunities in offshore development. A subject we have talked about many times in the House is the need to monitor the activities of energy companies in Canada with respect to offshore development. There has been no attempt in Canada to develop a marine industrial strategy which would utilize the development of those resources to guarantee benefits, jobs and additional income for Canadians. We have seen companies like Dome Petroleum in the oil resource sector turn around and sell access to the oil in the Beaufort Sea to the Japanese. We have seen one quarter of that oil given over. We have watched the Japanese, in anticipation of obtaining that oil, build one of the world's largest icebreaking oil tankers. We are seeing opportunities going to the Europeans and the Japanese for sourcing the equipment required for projects such as the LNG, the Arctic pilot projects and the Rim gas project. Of course, jobs flow out in that direction as well.

With respect to coal, Federal Commerce and Navigation are building their ships in Europe and the Orient. This is all free enterprise in action. Where are Canadians? Are the Conservatives standing up in the House demanding that they stop doing this? Where is the monitoring of the activities of the energy companies involved in coal, gas and oil while the benefits seem to be going abroad?

Whenever we ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Gray) what he is doing about jobs for Canadians shipbuilders, he stands up and tells us to look at the Burrard dry dock which cost $50 million. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, it was built in Japan. What about the floating dry dock that went into the Beaufort Sea for Dome Petroleum? Of course, that was built in Japan too. We are literally paying, through incentives and subsidies in this country, to send jobs for shipbuilders offshore. We are failing to develop one of the most advanced marine industries in the world by not capturing those benefits.

We are failing to do this through the energy monitoring act, monitoring the activities of those energy corporations and their organizations, monitoring the financial transactions to ensure that we capture the benefits and ensure that Canadians maximize those benefits. When we talk about maximizing benefits, we mean ensuring that the environment is preserved and enhanced and that social benefits accrue to Canadians—not just to central Canada and the major centres but to those traditional smaller and rural communities as well. That is vitally important. The hon. member from Atlantic Canada who just spoke I am sure would agree that there are many communities there which would want to share in that last bang at the resource and be left with a permanent and positive legacy.

The monitoring agency, the Canadian Oil and Gaslands Administration, has virtually left a vacuum in attempting to ensure that social and economic benefits are captured, retained and enhanced in Canada. With respect to the industrial benefits office, we listened to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources swear up and down before the committee to trust them. What a joke. "Trust me, I am from the government and I am here to help you", he said. That is the call of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Throughout Bill C-48 we found nothing but ministerial discretion and nothing in the history of that government since its inception on which any trust could be built. Nevertheless, the majority rammed it through. We were promised an office of industrial benefit comparable to the British offshore supply office which helped to ensure effective monitoring of what those energy corporations were doing and that there were transactions between the British free enterprise companies and those multinational oil companies. It helped to ensure that those products which were developed were British in origin and were effectively exported. There are thousands of people in that office who are specialists and engineers.

Our agency is a joke. It is not the fault of the people involved who are working hard and with commitment; it is a result of the absolute lack of commitment by this government, in terms of person years and financial commitment to that office, to make sure that Canadians capture the benefits to be derived from a marine industrial strategy. It is an extremely sad situation. I do not know who in the government can take responsibility for its monitoring policies but there is nothing but inter-departmental chaos. It is an extremely sad situation where one department fights with another, with Transport, Finance, Industry, Trade and Commerce and National Revenue all working at cross purposes to each other.

It is vitally important that Canadians capture a full measure of benefits from this last bang at a major resource. I am sure all members of the House want to maximize those benefits for our children and future generations. The very clear message at the bottom of this is that it cannot be done at the destruction of the environment of many traditional communities, whether it be the east coast, north coast or west coast of this country. Those benefits must remain in Canada and the traditional communities must receive an enhancement.

Another question which must be resolved is where we must proceed with our monitoring policy and protection of Canadian consumers. If the government is going to proceed with this series of energy bills, it must bring forward companioned and coherent legislation. We must look at maximizing benefits and developing effective requirements, even if they are regulatory, and dictate how companies should deal with our resources. Basically, the theme should be the capturing of benefits and maximizing those benefits for Canadians. As well, we should have companioned or coherent legislation which would see effective competition policies in this country which would stop the combination activities of companies like Imperial Oil, Shell, Texaco and other multinationals such as we have seen between 1958 and 1973, and even continuing from then to the present. There are some officials in the government who say that those activities are still occurring today. We need the companion activities which go with this legislation and we need a strong commitment by both the government and the opposition to ensure those benefits come to Canadians and that we do not sell out this opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde), which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I declare the motion carried. Accordingly, this bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is no bill before the House. I do not believe this situation is covered by any particular procedure; it is covered by House agreement. Therefore, I suggest that the House adjourn until eight o'clock and that we take the regular dinner hour, following which we can continue the debate.

As I understand it, the agreement covers only bills before the House. There is no bill before the House under the energy umbrella. Therefore, we should take our regular adjournment until eight o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would read the agreement, he would realize that he is entirely mistaken. We have an obligation to sit through dinner time, but in the heat of the debate, it was agreed by the House leaders present that we would be guided by both the letter and the spirit of the agreement, and it was indeed agreed to use the time at our disposal to maximum advantage.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I think we may be caught by technical circumstances here. Certainly as the government House leader has said, the spirit of the agreement was as he stated it. But my understanding of the House order is, from a technical point of view perhaps, more in accord with the hon. member who raised the question in the first place. Certainly the vote was not called until after six o'clock, nor was it completed until after six o'clock and no energy legislation was before the House at that time.

Without having the House order before me, my recollection of it was that the extended sittings between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. were to apply when energy legislation was before the House. It is a matter in the hands of the Chair, but I think, in the strict interpretation of that House order, the Chair might find itself bound by the technicalities of the situation and be required to adjourn until eight o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): For the benefit of hon. members I might point out that there was a House order on March 22. It set out that if energy legislation was before the House, the House would forgo the six o'clock to eight o'clock adjournment. We have forgone that adjournment now and it is my understanding and my interpretation of the agreement that we have energy legislation before us and we should proceed with it.

An hon. Member: Where is the bill?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask what energy legislation was before the House at the conclusion of the vote after six o'clock?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we accept your ruling and we are prepared to proceed. I would also draw the attention of my hon. colleagues to a paragraph in the agreement that says that all parties should endeavour to ensure that the eight bills are disposed of as soon as possible. According to the spirit of the agreement there is certainly no doubt that you are absolutely right in ruling as you did.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel with what the government House leader says. But I would put the question to the Chair for clarification. What legislation was in fact before the House at the conclusion of the vote after six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I do not believe I said that there was energy legislation before the House after the vote. There was when we cancelled the adjournment at six o'clock. Therefore, it is the understanding of the Chair that we are now sitting until 10.30 p.m. tonight. That is the Chair's understanding and interpretation of the House order. I am in the hands of the House if hon. members want to debate this point, but that is my interpretation.

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-104, respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to open debate on this very important piece of legislation, Bill C-104, respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act.

One of my hon. friends on the Conservative side this afternoon asked what we would do to help the industry with some of its difficulties. One of the best answers to his question is contained in the bill which is before the House for consideration at the present time. Indeed, it is estimated that once the bill is passed and has received assent by Parliament, it will provide for payments to the oil and gas industry of close to $1 billion in grants during the course of the current year. This will significantly help the cash flow of the industry which at the present time is facing short-term financing difficulties.

I truly regret the amount of time lost by the House over the past few weeks. It could have been better spent studying proposals for energy security rather than ringing the bells. The delay created nothing but continued uncertainty for the industry. I think the uncertainty was best described last month by a leading member of the oil and gas industry from Alberta, Mr. John G. McDonald, chairman of Ranchmen's Resources (1976) Ltd., an Alberta-based independent oil and gas company. In a telex to members of Parliament dated March 16, 1982, Mr. McDonald said:

> It is my duty to advise you on behalf of our shareholders that I consider the Tory boycott of debate on a motion of adjournment of the House of Commons that they introduced irresponsible. Our company is largely owned by Alberta investors, but a substantial number of our shareholders reside in Ontario and Quebec, and over 100,000 of them are workers represented by 25 Canadian pension trusts which have supported our collective effort to increase Canadian investment in Canada's petroleum industry.

He addressed the following to members of the Conservative Party:

> Your caucus action is now costing our shareholders $5,000 a day in interest charges on unpaid petroleum incentive payments receivable for exploration drilling costs paid out in 1981. The longer you play political games, the less support you will receive from our shareholders. I am astounded that Tory Members of Parliament from Alberta, including your leader, are supporting this charade in the House.

This was just one of the messages I received from people in the petroleum industry who were angry and concerned about the Tory boycott of Parliament. They were angry and concerned that the millions of dollars we promised the industry in petroleum incentives would be delayed indefinitely, creating untold and irreparable harm to their businesses. The actions of the party opposite were inexcusable and very damaging, not only to Parliament but to the Canadian oil and gas industry. Fortunately, as events turned out, we now have assurances by the House that all legislative proposals contained in Bill C-94, the former energy security bill, will be approved by the end of June. We must now put that regrettable incident behind us and get on with the task of providing energy security for all Canadians.

Since last June when we first released the energy security bill in draft form, we have undertaken extensive consultation with the oil and gas industry, with financial institutions, with Members of Parliament on both sides of the House, and with provincial governments. As a result of the consultative process, I believe we now have an improved energy security package, of which this bill concerning petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership legislation is one of the most important elements.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Canadianization bill can be seen as the climax of all the measures taken by this government to establish a strong oil and gas industry, Canadian-owned and Canadian-controlled. It is another in a series of steps toward establishing a permanent framework for achieving the goals defined in the National Energy Program, which are: energy security, opportunities for Canadians to share in the development of their energy resources and the establishment of a fair system for all Canadians. In addition to helping Canadians become masters of their own energy future, this legislation will also enable the government to meet a formal commitment made to this country two years ago, namely to provide it with a comprehensive energy program that would enable it to meet all its energy requirements.

Mr. Speaker, we have taken steps to meet this commitment, starting on the day we introduced the National Energy Program. We have made encouraging progress towards achieving each of our energy goals, and Canadians have shown very clearly that they want these goals to be achieved in the fullest sense of the word. We firmly intend to do so with the help of this legislation, which is essential to the success of our plans. In addition to generous subsidies for Canadianization, the bill also contains provisions for Canadian ownership and control determination. The aim of these provisions is to ensure that the subsidies benefit Canadian-controlled companies, other Canadian investors and foreign companies who wish to collaborate by allowing increased Canadian ownership of their enterprises. According to the provisions of the bill, certificates will be issued establishing the Canadian ownership rate or control status of applicants wishing to obtain subsidies. The certificates will also enable holders to benefit from other advantages provided under the National Energy Program. There are, of course, strict rules for determining ownership rate and control status. However, the subsidy program will be effective only if it succeeds in benefiting the Canadian investor. We must do everything within reason to ensure that eligibility is determined on the basis of real ownership and actual control. In the case of control status, the criteria are based on definitions taken from the Foreign Investment Review Act. However, we have realized that, especially in the case of smaller enterprises, it is desirable to simplify administrative procedures, which may be a considerable burden.

Regarding the Canadianization legislation, it should also be pointed out that we are introducing two amendments to two sections of the Foreign Investment Review Act. I wish to stress most emphatically that the amendments are in no way aimed at granting additional powers to the Foreign Investment Review Agency. The changes are minor and technical, and are aimed at clarifying the interpretation of relevant provisions of the act, the agency has implemented since it was established in 1974.

[English]

Let us look at the problem we found with respect to foreign ownership. In 1979 nearly 72 per cent of the upstream revenues of the oil and gas industry went to foreign-owned companies. The percentage was even higher when measured on the basis of foreign control; it was 80 per cent. Much has been made of the fact that Canadian ownership was increasing during the 1970s, but that progress was slow and might well have been reversed in the 1980s. This was because of the dominance of foreign-owned and foreign-controlled companies in the frontier regions of Canada. The percentage of Canadian ownership was destined to drop as conventional oil and gas from the western provinces accounted for less and less of industry revenues. That represented a totally unacceptable prospect for Canadians and for the government of Canada.

• (1830)

We designed the petroleum incentives program to encourage exploration and development and, at the same time, help meet our objective of gaining a higher proportion of Canadian ownership of our energy resources.

Rather than relying solely on takeovers by private and public corporations of foreign holdings in the Canadian energy industry, the Canadian government has chosen to encourage the growth of a significant Canadian component in the energy industry through exploration and non-conventional oil development.

We could encourage this growth in two ways. First, we could have continued to fund exploration and development solely through tax incentives. However, the previous tax incentive system, including the super-depletion allowance for frontier exploration, favoured large and usually foreign-owned firms which could write off incentives against their existing taxable income. Thus, we had a system which unintentionally discriminated against small Canadian-owned firms and newcomers to this attractive sector.

To solve this problem, in tandem with an already generous fiscal system, we offer special incentives to stimulate investment by Canadians in their own energy future.

The petroleum incentives program provides direct incentives for oil and gas exploration and development, and tertiary recovery projects for Canadian-controlled companies with at least 50 per cent Canadian ownership. For oil and gas exploration in the Canada lands, where the tax incentives of the former system had their heaviest impact, the Canadian government will pay for 25 per cent of all approved expenses for all companies, whether they are Canadian or foreign owned. Depending on Canadian ownership rates, however, payments to Canadian-controlled firms can go as high as 80 per cent of exploration costs in the Canada lands.

Foreign-owned companies continue to be welcome in Canada to explore for oil and gas and produce what they find. Thanks to the pricing and fiscal regime established in agreement with the producing provinces and our attractive resource potential, they can anticipate prospective returns which are competitive with those available in the United States, for instance. This point was a central issue in the debate on the Canada Oil and Gas Act. It is important for members to be assured on this point. We make available to all investors on the Canada lands a regime comparable or superior even to that available in oil producing nations such as Norway, The United Kingdom or the United States.

We continue to offer an excellent pricing and fiscal regime on provincial lands also. For example, let us consider the case of an established foreign-owned producer in Alberta. Taking into account both federal and provincial incentives, that company's net costs per dollar of exploration would be as little as 28 cents. Suppose, instead, the company were to explore in Texas. Its net costs there would be 54 cents on the dollar. Clearly, we need to make no apologies for our commitment to increase our oil supply and, at the same time, to make the oil and gas business in Canada more Canadian.

The return we offer for successful exploration is generous in that essentially world level prices are provided for new oil. Certainly, we have in place a combined tax and royalty regime that in the provinces is more onerous than that applied in the United States—the basis for most comparisons. However, as most analysts have pointed out, Alberta offers a five-year royalty holiday for a considerable proportion of its new oil, and that province recently announced royalty deductions for conventional oil and gas. I hope that the governments of other provinces will follow the Alberta example.

The result is that in the crucial early years of production when the company is looking for the payback of its investment, the fiscal burden is light. The after tax netback in Alberta in these years is well above that available elsewhere. Thus, the economics of new oil in that province are highly competitive. In the Canada lands, both the incentives available to oil explorers and the fiscal regime for production are at least as good as elsewhere. This fact, which has not been refuted by the industry, is critical to our deliberations of the new incentives available to Canadians to help them enter the petroleum arena.

We do not deny the preference that we have built into the petroleum incentives program for Canadian-owned and controlled firms. Despite some charges that the petroleum incentives program is too generous to the petroleum companies, we think it is necessary in order to achieve energy security for Canadians.

The basic issue is whether, having provided attractive incentives to all explorers, it is reasonable for us to provide special additional incentives aimed specifically at Canadians. I believe it is. We are correcting and making up for the distortions of the previous system and stimulating Canadian private investors to help us achieve our modest goal of 50 per cent domestic ownership of the oil and gas industry by 1990.

Canada is certainly not the sole country to adopt policies which favour its national firms in some special sectors. Many OECD countries have found it necessary to introduce measures at variance with the concept of "national treatment" in order to achieve essential domestic social and economic goals. There is, to my knowledge, not a single OECD country that has allowed its key sectors to be dominated as heavily by foreigners as our oil industry is.

In pursuing our energy security and Canadianization objectives, we intend to implement our programs, including the petroleum incentives program and the Canadian ownership rating, in a fashion which is in keeping with our international obligations. We have repeatedly emphasized that this is a strategic sector for Canadians, with priorities and needs not characteristic of other sectors. It is special to us and there is a national consensus that we must Canadianize the industry.

[Translation]

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the Petroleum Incentives Program is the key factor in the success of the National Energy Program. It stimulates new Canadian investment in the industry and makes it attractive for new partners to work together with foreign companies on the cost-intensive development of Canada's oil and gas potential. This new program has already led a num=r of foreign companies, owning substantial amounts of land with excellent prospects, to conclude agreements with Canadian-owned and Canadian-controlled companies wishing to invest their money and that of Canadian taxpayers in the development of oil exploration projects.

The National Energy Program is a viable solution, not only because it has taken an effective and timely approach to the country's energy problems but also because its goals are supported by the Canadian people. In all provinces, Canadians want the industry to become more Canadian. For instance, the Alberta government will implement and finance the Petroleum Incentives Program in the case of expenditures made by the industry in that province. Since the eligibility criteria for the subsidies are to be laid down in the bill, this is clearly a matter of some urgency to the oil industry in Alberta.

Increased Canadian ownership, which will enable us to achieve our energy security and ownership goals, will also ensure that the benefits of industrial expansion are distributed more fairly. In fact, there is a fundamental consideration that we often tend to forget, namely that a fair share of the revenues and a fair-pricing system are essential in view of the massive contributions Canadians will be required to make as consumers, investors and taxpayers in order to ensure the development of this essential sector of the Canadian economy in the years to come.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the Canadianization bill now before the House will enable us to deal with and resolve many of the problems Canada is facing in the energy field. It will help this country become self-sufficient in energy by the end of this decade. It will help Canadians to achieve control of the industry. The legislation is a key element in the government's series of measures on energy security, and it is extremely important as it provides for the payment of substantial financial incentives that are needed by the Canadian oil and gas industry. There is an urgent need for this measure. The bill will enable us to meet our commitment to those Canadian companies, institutions and private individuals who are dynamic and forward-looking and are taking very seriously the National Energy Program's goal to increase Canadian ownership in the oil and gas industry. They have made plans and, in many cases, have made investment decisions based on the immiment availability of subsidies under the Petroleum Incentives Program.

We must meet our commitments as soon as possible. We already have tangible proof of the desire of Canadians to use our incentives to play a more decisive role in the oil and gas industry. In less than a year, Canadian ownership has increased by more than 6 per cent, and the prospects are very good for realizing our goal, which is to achieve 50 per cent Canadian ownership in the industry by 1990, if not sooner.

[English]

This bill keeps another promise, a promise to the producing provinces, particularly Alberta, with which we signed those vital energy agreements last autumn. Incentives for developing petroleum supplies and Canadian participation and fairness in pricing and revenue-sharing are all there in those agreements, and they are here before us in this important legislation. Furthermore, with this bill we are keeping a promise to Parliament, a promise implicit in the passage of the Canada Oil and Gas Act last December. We told Your Honour that frontier exploration and development would be stimulated by a powerful new incentives system to complement the provisions of that act. We are now delivering the bill which will establish that system. Of course, there is no promise greater than that of Canada's rich and diverse energy resources. It is the promise of a secure energy future with a wide range of economic benefits for all regions of this country. Our petroleum incentives program will play a vital role in keeping the promise of our energy future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to put some facts on the record concerning this piece of legislation, the National Energy Program which gave birth to it, and the real objectives of the government in its pursuit of what is widely recognized across this country as an absolutely disastrous program. Indeed, I was watching a television program last night in which a reporter from Le Devoir said that a high official in the Government of Canada described the November 12 budget as a disaster. The adjectives that the official used to describe the National Energy Program could not be repeated because it was a public television program. Therefore, if the November 12 budget is a disaster, the National Energy Program is far, far worse.

The minister has cried for the third or fourth time about the battle of the bells and the fact that he had to break up his highly desired, large package, Bill C-94, into eight bite-sized chunks. Well, I certainly have no apologies to make for moving the adjournment. I have no apologies to make for that battle. The fact is that we were right on the principle and we were right on the issue. We enjoyed the support of the public. It was pathetic to hear the minister read out one telegram in support of his position. I certainly think that my colleagues and I could easily bring forward 30, 40, 50 or 60 telegrams supporting our position.

The minister could have seen this bill passed through all stages by now if he had responded positively to my letter to him dated December 21, 1981. In that letter I specifically stated that the PIP program and the COR program were the only parts of the National Energy Program which had any time urgency and that if he would separate them, I would recommend to my caucus that the bill containing those programs be given expeditious treatment in the House of Commons. I made that offer in writing on December 21, 1981. His reply was a flat no.

The reason I made that offer to the minister was not that there was any political advantage to me or my party in assisting the government with its legislative program—far from it. However, I was aware that various officials in the government had promised the PIP and COR programs as long ago as April, 1981, a year ago. I was aware of some junior Canadian-owned companies which, on the basis of the assurances from officials in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, had gone out and expended considerable sums of money through loans from the banks to undertake exploration programs. They did this because they were promised by the Government of Canada that the PIP program would be in place and that they would be reimbursed for their expenditures. When they were not reimbursed, and when interest rates went up to 18 per cent, 20 per cent and 22 per cent, they started hurting. Their bankers started knocking on their doors and they started to consider bankruptcy as an alternative. They were concerned. They got precious little sympathy from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). They got some sympathy from me. That is why I made that offer to the minister. But his reply was a big, fat no. He was not interested. He would take it in his fashion; we would have one big bill, and that was it.

Mr. Lalonde: Be honest. Be honest, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: The minister says, "Be honest". That is exactly what happened. I wrote and made this offer, and he said, "No".

Mr. Lalonde: Read your own quote in Hansard.

Mr. Andre: You should read my quote in Hansard.

Mr. Lalonde: You will see that what you are telling me is not correct.

Mr. Andre: The fact is that I had a discussion with Mr. MacLaren. He thought it was a good idea and said he would recommend it to you, but you told Mr. MacLaren, "No".

Mr. Lalonde: No, you read what you said in Hansard. You said that I had agreed to having the whole bill treated with dispatch.

Mr. Andre: I am sorry, but you misread Hansard. I never said that. I said that I talked to MacLaren.

Mr. Lalonde: Well, read Hansard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Remarks should be addressed to the Chair, not to other hon. members.

Mr. Andre: The minister would not recognize the truth if he saw it. His letter of January, 1982 states, quite specifically, "No". If he had, in fact, thought differently, why did he not put it in the letter?

The National Energy Program, when announced, made three great promises. It promised self-sufficiency, fair revenue sharing and Canadianization. Who could disagree with that? Who could disagree with those three noble goals? It would certainly not be this party.

• (1850)

Since the OPEC crisis, the Middle East war of 1973 and the resulting shortage, we have been solidly in favour of Canada becoming self-sufficient so that we are not held hostage to political events in other parts of the world over which we have no control.

Certainly we agree with fair revenue-sharing. How could anyone oppose that? Governments need funds to operate and to do so-called good works. Industry needs enough money to justify carrying on, to reinvest, provide jobs and so on. Obviously fair treatment is required. I must add that the consumer should expect to receive fair treatment when purchasing the products of the energy industry. No one is opposed to that.

I really wonder whether fair revenue-sharing is what we have. The great election promise said, "Vote Liberal and we will keep gasoline prices down". Prices in Canada are supposed to be less than the world price. That is what the minister says. Anyone who crosses the United States border and fills up his tank will find that it is cheaper to buy gasoline in the United States than in Canada, and the United States is at world prices.

How can that be? It is very simple. In Canada, in addition to the crude oil tax at the wellhead, when the consumer fills up he must pay the petroleum compensation charge, the Canadian-ownership charge, the petroleum and gas revenue charge, the natural gas and gas liquid tax, federal sales tax and federal excise tax. I believe I have forgotten one.

By the time the federal government has laid on all of its taxes, when a consumer buys a dollar's worth of gasoline, two-thirds, and more in the case of Quebec, is in the form of tax. This is from a political party which said that an 18-cent tax would be an outrage, that it would not do such a thing. We were told that if we vote for them, we will pay $1.35.

Mr. Ferguson: You are way off. In Ontario it is not two thirds.

Mr. Andre: It is 66.2 per cent. The hon. member has been reading the minister's press releases again. He should look at the truth. In Ontario, 66.2 per cent of the petroleum dollar goes to governments.

Mr. Ferguson: You are thinking of Saskatchewan and the insurance tax.

Mr. Andre: I am thinking of Ontario. That is not fair taxation. It is not fair revenue-sharing. It is a rip-off, a broken election promise from a political party that cannot be trusted, and certainly a minister who cannot be trusted based on his record.

The National Energy Program called for increased Canadianization. The goal was to be 50 per cent Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry by 1990. That is a worthy goal. It is a modest goal. In fact, it should be a higher percentage of Canadian ownership.

It is dishonest not to examine how we got to the stage we are at now. We should consider undoing some of the things that brought us to this point of such a high level of foreign ownership and see if in fact the Canadian-ownership percentage could be increased by undoing a few things.

In 1971, before I became a candidate in the 1972 election, I attended the founding meeting of and joined the Committee for an Independent Canada in Calgary. I joined because I was outraged about the fact that over 90 per cent of the oil and gas industry, the major industry in my city, was foreign-owned. I was particularly outraged because it was foreign-owned as a result of federal government policy. At that time an American could invest in Canada what amounted to pre-tax dollars. A Canadian could not. At that time an American could borrow money to make an investment in Canada and deduct the cost of interest on his loan against his income in the United States. A Canadian could not do the same in Canada.

The reality was that an oilman in Calgary, wanting to put together some funds to explore for oil and gas, was faced with the situation of finding investors in Canada who would invest with after-tax dollars or going to the United States to find somebody who would invest with pre-tax dollars. That was the situation that existed. Obviously someone in Calgary wanting to raise money would fly to Toronto and change planes for New York, Zurich or somewhere else. There was no use talking to Canadians.

This infuriated and outraged the people in the oil and gas industry. They came to Ottawa and pounded on the doors of Liberal ministers and the Liberal government. They said it was absurd that they could not compete with Americans in their own country for investment in this country. The Liberal government said it did not care who owned the industry as long as they could tax it. That was the reply from the great Canadian nationals, the Liberals. They did not care about the oil and gas industry. It was an insignificant industry in western Canada. Who cared? It did not count for anything compared to the important industries in the rest of the country.

Successive groups of Canadians from Calgary and other parts of the west came and petitioned the federal government for some equity. In return, all they got was a big, fat no. Colonials should stay in their place. What right did they have to come knocking on the doors of the great masters in Ottawa asking for treatment similar to the treatment the United States gave its citizens? As a result of that, by 1975 the industry was over 90 per cent foreign-owned, totally because of that reason.

The pressure continued and, to give credit where credit is due, finally the Hon. Donald Macdonald was able to convince those idiots who frequented the bureaucracy of the Department of Finance that maybe the tax should be changed. They were not willing to make a permanent change. As a temporary measure, however, they did introduce that change. In the next four years, the degree of Canadian ownership went from less than 10 per cent to well over 20 per cent.

In the next five years, it was the Canadian companies that provided the growth. They provided the impetus that resulted in most of the wells being drilled. Canadianization was going on full blast from 1975 until October 22, 1980, when the National Energy Program was brought in. That program, more than anything else, has put an end to the Canadianization. The sad fact is that the National Energy Program, supposedly introduced to Canadianize the gas and oil industry, has in fact helped to de-Canadianize it. The National Energy Program with its horrendous new taxes—$8 billion brand new taxes from this one industry this year alone, an incredible tax load—while hitting all of the petroleum sector, is in fact hitting hardest the Canadian-owned independent oil and gas companies. It is the Canadian-owned oil and gas companies that paid the biggest price. The proof for that is available in the monitoring survey of 1981 for six months in the Petroleum Monitoring Agency. This monitoring agency, to which we voted earlier to give more power, showed that in the first six months of 1981 foreign-oil companies suffered a 28.5 per cent income drop in their Canadian operations compared to the first six months of 1980, while Canadian companies suffered a 52 per cent income drop for their Canadian operations, that is to say, foreign-oil companies, 28 per cent; Canadian-oil companies, 52 per cent. The reality is that the National Energy Program, in the name of Canadianization, has devastated the Canadian-owned oil and gas companies.

The consequences are that many of these companies are in deep trouble and most of those that are not have transferred most of their activities to the United States, to Australia or to other countries.

The Petroleum Monitoring Agency again indicates that comparing the first six months of 1981 with the first six months of 1980, Canadian controlled—these are Canadian-owned and controlled companies—increased their foreign exploration budgets by 247 per cent. So the National Energy Program caused the Canadian-owned oil and gas companies to leave Canada, to increase their foreign exploration by 247 per cent. And furthermore, the trend continued to accelerate.

That is just one example. Another is Ocelot Industries, a Canadian-owned company with a spectacular growth rate, one of those companies that was able to earn money as a result of the tax change in the fall of 1975, a spectacular growth in those five years, a real performer, a company that Canada should be proud of. In 1982, they are planning to spend 82.5 per cent of their exploratory funds outside of Canada. This is a Canadian-owned and controlled company, planning to spend 82.5 per cent of its budget outside of Canada this year as a result of the National Energy Program brought in by the minister because he said he wanted to Canadianize the oil and gas industry.

The fact of the matter is that the nationalizing program is Canadianizing Williston, North Dakota; Denver, Colorado; Dallas, Texas; and a host of other cities. There are more Canadian-oil companies with offices in Denver, Colorado—that is, Canadian owned—than there were Canadian owned companies with offices in Calgary ten years ago. That is what we have done. We have Canadianized Denver with this marvelous Canadian-ownership program. That is the absurd thing we have done with this program.

The National Energy Program was based on the premise that the oil and gas industry was the big, fat cat that needed to be taxed. Well, this Petroleum Monitoring Agency shows that for the first six months of 1981 the petroleum industry earned 9.4 per cent on capital employed, in comparison with the manufacturing industry, which we all know is hard hit because it is located here in central Canada, an industry that earned 11 per cent on its capital employed. The petroleum industry earned 9.4 per cent; manufacturing, 11 per cent; and yet the petroleum industry is supposed to be the big, fat cat that can afford to pay the $8 billion worth of taxes that are being extracted from that industry this year.

It is simply too much, Mr. Speaker, for one industry to cope with. As a consequence of that, we find 400 people laid off at Gulf; 600 laid off at Turbo; 150 so far from Dome—scads of companies which depend on the large companies, which service them, which depend on them, which are now out of business. Three quarters of the businesses in Nisko Industrial Park south of Calgary, which service the oil and gas industry, have gone out of business.

The busiest people in these communities are the trustees in bankruptcies. There is carnage as a result of the National Energy Program. But it is "out there", it is miles away from those geniuses sitting over there in Tunney's Pasture saying, "We know what is good for the oil industry, we know what is good."

Because it happens in Brooks, in Drayton Valley, in Red Deer, little towns like that do not mean a whole lot to these super-intelligent gurus in their palace at Tunney's Pasture. It does not get attention, and the minister can do as he did earlier, stand up and claim what a wonderful thing he is doing. Well, I wonder how many of those 150 who got their lay-off notices from Dome Petroleum think he is doing a wonderful job. And how about those 170 young engineers, geologists and geophysicists who had job offers from Dome that they expected to take up in about two weeks when they finished their examinations, only to find they were withdrawn at the last minute? I wonder how many of those young Canadians are going to say: "Gee, you are right, Mr. Minister, you are doing such a great job for us and for Canada." How many of those are for Canadianization?

The minister read his telegram, Mr. Speaker. Let me read a letter. It is not a letter addressed to me, actually, but to Mr. Norman MacLeod, President of the Liberal Party of Canada. A copy was sent to me. A copy was sent to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well. Gane Petroleum Corporation Ltd. is the name of this company. The president is Dr. Norman Fischbuck. He says in his letter:

> Your Party has had ample opportunity . . . to Canadianize our oil industry as was demonstrated by concerned citizens in 1973-1976 when the Committee for an Independent Canada submitted a petition of over 700,000 names for Mr. Trudeau to take action before oil prices rose. What was done? Nothing. Now when oil prices are astronomical the taxpayer has to foot the bill for Canadianization through nationalization.
> As our Company scrambles around to stave off bankruptcy by drilling in the U.S. we see our Alberta reserves, that are shut-in of course, shrivelling in value daily. On the one hand we see . . . Petro-Canada receive concession after concession and on the other hand big government takes a bigger and bigger slice of our meager earnings. The ultimate result is obvious—our oil industry will soon consist of:
>
> (a) one or two large Canadian companies,
>
> (b) the multinationals (they always survive because of lobby-power and by shifting money from one country to another),
> (c) Petro-Canada, and
> (d) even more direct intervention by the Government itself.

The president of this company, Mr. Speaker, Dr. Norman Fischbuck, was chairman of the Calgary section of the Committee for an Independent Canada. His credentials as a Canadian nationalist are as good as those of anyone in the House. He believes in Canada, he believes in Canadian ownership, he proved it by getting involved in an organization ten years ago that tried to do something. He feels offended, enraged, to find this Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources standing up, destroying his company, in the name of Canadianization. Canadianization has become a swear word to a man who considers himself a Canadian nationalist and who wanted to see something done about the high degree of foreign ownership. He has been abused, he feels abused by this country. The minister says: "Ah, we are doing great things for Canadianization."

Let me read you this little story, from The Calgary Herald of April 3, 1982:

> A Canadian oil company which has operated almost exclusively in Alberta for 11 years is moving its entire operation to the United States—and government energy policies are the main reason for its decision.
>
> "We don't see the economic and political climate here to be conducive to our investing money in Canada," Larry Krause, vice-president of Seaward Resources Ltd., said Friday.

• (1910)

> Even though Seaward is 80-per-cent Canadian-owned and qualifies for maximum government incentives in Canadian drilling programs, Krause said, the U.S. is still a more attractive place to do business.
>
> "The thrust of Canadian policies is in the frontier . . . areas . . . It doesn't do anything for an independent company."
> "We feel at least we can market natural gas in the U.S. and there is a spirit of co-operation between the government and the industry."
> Seaward was prompted to shut down its Canadian operations after operating a U.S. subsidiary, Seaward Resources Inc., for three years.

The program the minister is touting as a great panacea to help Canadians and to Canadianize our oil and gas industries has driven these Canadians out of Canada. How does that benefit Canada? How do we benefit from this small oil company's being driven out of Canada? Would somebody please explain how a Liberal can stand up and say we are Canadianizing the oil and gas industry when the evidence is overwhelming that we are de-Canadianizing it? Hon. members opposite are chasing Canadians out of Canada—out of western Canada, albeit, and maybe that is the difference. There is just plain, bloody ignorance about what is happening.

However, it is not just western Canada that is hurting through losing its companies and through losing some of its brightest and best. They are going to places where there is opportunity and where the government says they are welcome. From coast to coast we are all paying the price, and it is a very big price indeed.

In an article in a magazine dated October 2, 1981, William Mackness of Pitfield MacKay Ross said that the Canadianization program has set off an unprecedented exodus of Canadian capital, and that it is questionable that the Canadian economy can stand it. He said the method of calculating capital flow is not perfect and is subject to error but, nevertheless, he said, there is overwhelming evidence that the outflow of capital from Canada amounted to $17 billion in the last 12 months. In other words, from the date the National Energy Program was announced until a year later $17 billion of Canadian capital left this country. And this is supposed to Canadianize the oil and gas industry! Chasing out $17 billion is supposed to Canadianize the oil and gas industry. If that $17 billion had stayed here, it would have been used to buy pipe from Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie and trucks from the truck plant in Ste-Thérèse, Quebec. A few weeks ago the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) was abused in Ste-Thérèse by unemployed auto workers because the truck plant there has laid off its employees since it can no longer sell trucks. If that $17 billion had not gone south, some of those auto workers in Ste-Thérèse would be at work. That $17 billion would have kept a valve plant in Orillia going. It would have kept untold suppliers and manufacturers right across this country working rather than being unemployed at this point in time.

We are told this is all great because it is part of Canadianization. We are told we are Canadianizing the oil and gas industry, that that is marvellous and that we should applaud the minister for what he is doing. Mr. Roger Hubley of the Conference Board of Canada estimates that by 1990 the minister's version of the Canadianization program will cost Canada $56 billion, $2,300 for every man, woman and child in Canada. That is an incredible cost. What kind of immoral, irresponsible government would permit that to happen? What kind of mentality allows backbenchers of the minister's party to say, "Aye, sir, aye, we agree?" What prevents them, for goodness' sake, from standing up and saying, "No more, we are not going to hurt this country any more by going along with these stupid policies?" What needs to happen to have common sense prevail?

Unfortunately, some people are saying that the Western Canada Concept is the only alternative. Unfortunately, some people are saying they have no alternative but to look at separatism. They are saying they have no alternative but to break off from these knuckle-heads here in Ottawa who would perpetrate this atrocity in this country we love which is being destroyed and ruined by that kind of behaviour. In desperation and frustration people are turning to the very negative and mean alternative of separation. They do not want to, but they feel they have no alternative.

Last year the minister reported with great pride that his Canadianization program was working. I saw several of the householders produced for Liberal backbenchers proudly announcing that Canadianization was working. Those householders listed a number of foreign-owned companies which had been bought out. There were little flags to show companies which formerly were American but now were Canadian. Those householders were beautiful pieces of propaganda produced by those Orwellian bureaucrats at Tunney's Pasture. They listed such marvellous things as Sulpetro taking over Candel, Dome Petroleum taking over Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, Husky Oil taking over Uno-Tex, Drummond Petroleum taking over Union Texas of Canada, CDC taking over Aquitaine, Turbo taking over Merland and before that Merland taking over Consolidated Natural Gas. Hon. members opposite have great pride in their Canadianization program, but the interesting thing is that almost every one of those companies is in deep trouble today. Almost every one of the companies I just named is in deep financial trouble. The minister and his officials telephoned those companies and telephoned the banks and said, "We want you to take over some foreign companies. We want to show the people of Canada that our Canadianization program is working." Unfortunately for many of those companies, they said, "If the Government of Canada wants us to do it and the bankers want to lend us the money, why not?" Now they are wondering if they can survive. We read about Dome Petroleum in the newspapers. How many hundred people do not now have jobs because Dome Petroleum accepted the blandishments of the minister? We read in the newspapers about the problems of Sulpetro, Drummond Petroleum and Turbo Resources.

We saw the height of hypocrisy when CDC took over Elf Aquitaine. That happened in June of 1981. The minister announced with great pride that the Canadianization program was working. CDC had taken over Elf Aquitaine, a 75 per cent French-owned company. Then in January of this year the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, speaking to the Canada-France Chamber of Commerce in Paris, said, "We welcome French investment, particularly in energy projects in Canada." The behaviour of the minister boggles the mind, and he does not even blush. I wonder what it takes. Perhaps pride gets in the way of the minister admitting that the National Energy Program is a disaster. I plead with hon. members opposite to lobby the minister and to lobby other cabinet ministers and get him to swallow his pride and make those accommodations for the sake of Canada. The program is not working and the country is paying dearly. Surely at some point members of the government have to say that the country matters more than one man's pride and that we all have to take our responsibility to this country seriously and demand changes.

This Canadian ownership rate program and the petroleum incentives program are ways in which the government goes about promoting Canadianization. It will provide grants to companies based on the degree of Canadian ownership, but the real motive of the programs is to put the bureaucrats from Tunney's Pasture in direct "hands on" control of what is going on.

If someone has to come to an official with an application form and ask for approval in order to get some money so that he can stay in business, then he is someone whose political behaviour can be predicted and controlled. Once people have to go to Mr. Edmund Clark or Mr. Mickey Cohen and beg for grants so that they can proceed, we know darn well that they can no longer publicly criticize the policies written by Mr. Ed Clark and Mr. Mickey Cohen. That is a nice state of affairs if you do not believe in democracy and it is a nice state of affairs if you do believe in Big Brother and in manipulation. The government that spends $70 million on advertising obviously believes in all that.

If that sounds unfair in terms of characterization, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the House of a speech made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in Sherbrooke, Quebec, on October 22, 1981, when he said that a greater threat to Canadian unity than nationalism is the growing wealth in Alberta; that the threat is real and that it is necessary that we show our teeth. That is what the minister said, and it is an incredible statement. With his chosen few, the pointy headed bureaucrats in charge of that industry and that wealth, perhaps he can prevent the threat from harming the country.

What has been produced, Mr. Speaker? The result is absolutely incredible. There are 27 clauses in the bill which deal with Canadian ownership and determination, and they are all very complicated. Then there are guidelines about how the act is to be interpreted. There are guidelines respecting the effect of informal equity in the measurement of Canadian ownership rights. There are nine pages and 14 clauses of these guidelines. Clause 13 provides that the review requirement and measurement responsibilities of an applicant for the purposes of the consideration of informal equity will be subject to the general audit provisions of the proposed COCD act. You would need to be a Philadelphia lawyer to understand this, Mr. Speaker. Then there is the Canadian ownership and control determination regulations which consist of 53 pages and 44 clauses. Clause 43 provides as follows:

—for purposes of the first application or an amended application filed in substantial compliance with the act and regulations in the first year after the act comes into force, a trust that is a primary investor that does not own a large block of any publicly traded class of formal equity or does not own half of one per cent or greater of any other class of formal equity may elect that its Canadian ownership rate shall be—

A Philadelphia lawyer might be able to help with that one.

Then there are the interpretation notes for the Canadian ownership and control determination act, and the meaning of Canadian control status for partnerships, consisting of eight pages and 17 clauses. Then there are the interpretation notes for the Canadian ownership and control determination act, and the meaning of Canadian control status for corporations, consisting of eight pages and 21 clauses. Then there is the Canadian ownership and control determination act guide to application forms, which consists of 68 pages and 65 clauses. Then there are the Canadian ownership control and determination act forms. There are only 26 different forms to be filled out. Then there are assorted other minor documents that have to be filled out in order to get a Canadian ownership rating.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that this material is produced by a government that actually has among its agencies an office for the reduction of the paperwork burden. It actually claims that it is in favour of reducing the paper work burden. It actually claims that it is in favour of deregulation. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) has an agency which every month or so sends me a newsletter about the wonderful things the deregulation agency is doing for us. What was it doing when these yahoos produced this mess? To try to help people through this mess, the government has been holding seminars throughout the country and has invited lawyers, accountants, geologists, engineers and others to appear.

I spoke to an oilman who attended one of these seminars. He sat for two days then walked out saying, "There ain't no way! I will move my operations to the United States. There is absolutely no way I am going to get tangled up with this lousy mess. What would happen is that instead of looking for oil and gas, which is the business of the oil and gas industry, I would be filling out forms." He said that if he had wanted to be a lawyer or an accountant rather than an oilman, he would have been a lawyer or an accountant, but that he wanted to find oil and gas. What did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources give him to help him do that? He gave him forms to fill out. Of course the minister is a lawyer, so his own profession has done very well out of this.

That is only the half of it, Mr. Speaker. You have to comply with the Canadian ownership regulations by filling out 26 forms and going through the incredible array of regulations, clauses and so on. Then, if you want to apply for a PIPs grant, you read the 34 clauses, 16 pages of the petroleum incentives programs act and the regulations that flow from it. Like all legislation it has clauses which say "and the minister shall do whatever he wants" by way of regulation. There are 44 clauses and 71 pages with how many schedules and how many forms attached at the end? I cannot count them all. It takes 21 different forms to get a PIP grant. If you are confused about how to fill out the forms, they have a handy-dandy guide which makes the income tax guide look like child's play. This from a government which says it believes in reducing the paperwork burden, to simplify things. I sincerely hope the program works, Mr. Speaker, but in all honesty you have to conclude it is going to collapse as a result of the paperwork. This program is one of those marvelous academic schemes dreamed up by those brilliant people over at Tunney's Pasture, but unfortunately it is just not going to work. I have talked to a lot of people who have gone to these seminars, and you are going to have to pay $200 an hour for legal and accounting help with these forms. By the time you finish, there will be no money left to drill for oil and gas.

Another thing this government is doing that is unconscionable, immoral and indicative of the mentality of the minister is that the financing for PIP, at least as announced in the National Energy Program, was going to come from the petroleum and gas revenue tax. They said they would let companies net the PIP grants against the petroleum and gas revenue taxes. The only problem, Mr. Speaker, is that they are on different parts of the balance sheet. The tax comes off revenue, leaving net income; the PIP grant applies to capital, it has nothing to do with the revenue stream. The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants said it was not permissible to net PIP grants against the petroleum and gas revenue tax. To use that magic phrase which appears in audited financial statements, that would not be in accordance with accepted accounting principles. Well, you know what this great democratic minister said? He did not care what the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants said was right or wrong; he intends to change the regulations by order in council to permit this type of accounting in violation of the considered opinion of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. You have to wonder, Mr. Speaker, what kind of jackboot, brownshirt mentality would induce one to say: "I don't care if the accounting profession says this is the way it is supposed to be done; we are government and we are doing it this way. To heck with you guys and your professional standards, to heck with accepted accounting principles, we are doing it this way." I hope, Mr. Speaker, the accountants can stop that kind of mad behaviour. Someone has to prevent them from cooking the books that way.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, is long overdue. But as I indicated in my letter of December 21, 1981, if this is the way the government wants to proceed, then they should bring the legislation forward and let us get on with it, although it is certainly not the way we would proceed. This party is 100 per cent behind the goal of increased Canadian ownership. We believe that in fact Canadianization was occurring at a dramatic rate, but the effect of the NEP is in fact to abort what was a tremendous growth in small Canadian companies, which companies have in the last ten years drilled 75 per cent of the exploratory wells. These companies were providing the creativity, the ingenuity, and they were discovering those new fields which brought excitement to the industry. They were making things happen, and they were clobbered by this minister and this program. Perhaps the PIP grants will help revive some of them, perhaps they will help some of them keep part of their operations in Canada rather than deserting the country totally. Perhaps it will prevent more people from joining the unemployment line. I sincerely hope so, Mr. Speaker, but I have serious doubts. I hear mutterings over there from the socialist who stands up and says that government is outrageous, therefore what we need is more government. I have never been able to understand that logic, if it is logic.

We will be voting against this legislation, Mr. Speaker, because of the way they have approached it. We think it is a bad precedent and a mistake to put bureaucrats in control the way they are here. We think the country is going to pay a tremendous price for that. Our concern is that the program is going to be unmanageable due to its complexity, and certainly the accountants and lawyers are going tc get rich implementing it. If the government is going to go this way, they have a right to be wrong and we will permit them to do it.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, there are times in this House when we all get carried away by our own rhetoric. However, I am sure the hon. member would like to keep the record straight. Am I correct that he referred to the actions of the minister as immoral and accused him of cooking the books?

Mr. Blenkarn: Absolutely.

Mrs. Appolloni: As I was trying to say despite the rude interruptions from across the way, if my contention is correct, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member did use those phrases, I submit to you that they are at least unparliamentary, undemocratic and absolutely baseless.

Mr. Andre: I would just add that they are the truth.

Mr. Taylor: It is even worse when they are the truth.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would have the record show that the minister was not in the House to defend himself. Perhaps you would be good enough, Mr. Speaker, if the minister finds it necessary, to allow the minister to defend himself at the first available opportunity against those absolutely abominable charges.

• (1940)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, since when can one member start raising a point of order for another member? If the hon. member's conscience is hurting her, fine, but she cannot raise a point of order for another member.

Mr. Blais: The hon. member raises a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on a point of order. Is the hon. member rising to speak?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is a suggestion before the Chair that has not been put into those words by the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni). It deals with a formal notification being given to the Chair that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) may find cause to seek the attention of the Chair by way of a question of privilege concerning certain language used. I will deal with the objection raised by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) in that regard. If there is indeed a question of privilege with respect to the remarks made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the tradition is that the hon. member or minister who seeks redress against such vocabulary or expression has the right to raise the matter as soon as he returns to the House. Until such time as he does arrive in the House wishing to seek some redress for the remarks, his right to bring a matter of privilege to the attention of the Chair remains untouched and is in no way lessened by the fact that he is not present at the moment.

The Chair was about to recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) to continue the debate. Is there another hon. member wishing to rise on a point of order? If the matter is in order and we are prepared to go ahead with the debate, I will now recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party on this important part of energy security. I listened very closely to what the minister said. It is too bad the minister did not stay to listen to what some other members had to say.

I will continue when I have some quiet, Mr. Speaker. As I said, I listened very carefully to what the minister had to say. We could summarize what he said into two parts. Simply, the petroleum incentives program is not too generous. The minister said it was necessary to provide energy security for Canadians. PIP gives $6.5 billion to the oil industry over five years. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask Canadians who are listening and watching this debate and who are paying some attention to the substance rather than to the clowning, the hijinks, the ringing of the bells and the reactions, is this really the way to have energy security in Canada? The minister said "PIP is necessary to provide energy security for Canadians." He is saying that more money should be given to oil companies, to be precise $6.5 billion, of taxpayers and consumers money is necessary for Canadian energy security. I do not believe that. I do not think that very many people in Canada believe that. The minister also said that not a single OECD country, that is the more industrialized developed countries, would permit an energy industry to be foreign controlled. But let me ask, who permitted that in the first place? It was the Liberal Party and government who for years have had it as a matter of policy. The same people who brought the tragedy and the situation are trying to take us out of it. Another point made by the minister was about Canadianizing the industry. How are we going to Canadianize it? We all want to Canadianize. But the minister wants to Canadianize the oil industry by giving $6.5 billion to the oil companies.

Mr. Blenkarn: Some oil companies.

Mr. Waddell: I am concerned the minister is not here. I am concerned that this debate is not being paid the attention it should be by the press and the public, if it is not served by the press. I am concerned that there are so few members in the House. Accordingly, I call a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has called a quorum, somewhat to the surprise of the Chair. I shall indicate to hon. members what the rules are with respect to a quorum.

Some hon. Members: Just count.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Then we will follow those procedures. There are no points of order and no other points whatever can be accepted during the call for a quorum. I will ask the officer at the Table to count the members present. Any member who is in the House will be counted regardless of what seat he is occupying. Any member may enter the chamber during the count. Any member may leave the chamber during the count. The Chair will make a count. At the conclusion both the officer at the Table and the Chair will check the figures to make sure they are accurate. If there are 20 or more members in the House, including the occupant of the Chair, there will be deemed to be a quorum. There can be no points of order. There can be no questions of privilege. There can be no points of any kind raised once the call for a quorum is made.

I will ask the officer at the Table, the assistant deputy clerk, to count the members present.

And the count having been taken:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There being 25 members present in the chamber, not including the occupant of the Chair, accordingly, there is a quorum present and debate will continue.

There is another matter of concern to the Chair. It is whether or not the hon. member who called for a quorum would ordinarily again be recognized to continue debate.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais). While the minister speaks the Chair will take counsel as to whether or not the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway should continue his comments in the debate.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to rise on a point of order to indicate to you that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) did in effect leave the House when the count was being taken for a quorum. Under those circumstances, having relinquished your sight, he can not now be recognized once more to continue the debate. As Mr. Speaker well knows, an hon. member cannot get the floor unless he or she is recognized by Your Honour. While the Clerk was counting the number of members in the House, Mr. Speaker could not recognize a member who, for any purpose, was not in the House. If Your Honour could not recognize him for the quorum count, how could you now recognize him to resume debate? Under the circumstances I suggest that the next hon. member to be recognized should catch Mr. Speaker's eye and be recognized. I understand the hon. member of the official opposition who rushed into the chamber has now recovered his breath and is ready to rise as soon as I have concluded.

• (1950)

Mr. Blenkarn: I have been here all the time.

Mr. Blais: The hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is always full of breath and of course is able to receive the recognition Your Honour will grant him at any time. Whether he will advance anything of worth is the question which must be determined.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in reply. Of course the minister does not have to tell the hon. member what he is; he is full of hot air and bafflegab. If he checks the rules he will find under Citation 210 that a member need not remain in the House after giving notice that there is no quorum.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Hon. members should listen. There is a difference between recognizing myself as a member on a quorum vote and recognizing myself to speak. I submit that I do not lose my right to speak and that I can continue since I was recognized previously.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, when an hon. member calls a quorum in the process of speaking and leaves the House, clearly he has terminated his remarks. This is what happened with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). He cannot have it both ways. He could have remained in the House and suggested to Your Honour that there was lack of a quorum, but he would have had to remain in the House in order to retain his turn as a participant in the debate. I have no quarrel with an hon. member who was not speaking rising to call for a quorum. If any hon. member who did not have the floor had stood and called for a quorum, it would have been a different matter; but the hon. member who was in the process of addressing the House called for a quorum and then left the chamber.

When an hon. member sits down in a debate or leaves the chamber in a debate, he has indicated to the House and to Mr. Speaker that he has finished his remarks. I see no conceivable way that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway could now continue his participation in second reading debate. He has had his opportunity. He relinquished his position in the debate. Of course he will have an opportunity at further stages in the debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think Your Honour should bear in mind in coming to your judgment that when the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) left the chamber, he took his fellow partymen with him. In other words, his manoeuvre was to try to close down the House. I find that deplorable. In fact the last time this happened was when the then hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre some time ago during private members' hour brought the House to a standstill because there was not a quorum. I do not think the hon. member should be allowed to continue his remarks. Having left the House, he has no right to continue to speak.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: You were not in the House.

Mr. Skelly: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was certainly in the process of addressing the House of Commons on an extremely important issue. The number of participants dropped to nine, two from the official opposition and an equivalent number from the government. This is unwarranted attendance in a debate on an extremely important piece of legislation such as this.

On the other side of the coin, when the hon. member called a quorum I noticed that Your Honour responded by rising and the proceedings were suspended. When they were suspended while the Chair took count of the members so that the House and the hon. member could continue speaking, he resumed his seat. Until the Chair completed the procedural function of taking the count, the hon. member's obligations were terminated for a temporary period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: He left the House, and it strikes me that there should be an opportunity once the procedural function is complete for him to resume. He is now in his seat looking for recognition. It strikes me that the fair thing to do would be to allow him to proceed now that we have a quorum.

Mr. Waddell: Surely the principle of a quorum is that we demand attendance and interest in the House. That is why we have a quorum rule.

Mr. LeBlanc: But you left.

Mr. Waddell: If we drop below a quorum in numbers, in legal terms we lose the jurisdiction of the House. Any hon. member is entitled to call for a count. If the House is able to respond, as it was in this instance when hon. members came running in from the corridor and became involved in the debate, the hon. member is quite justified in doing so. That is the principle of a quorum. I am clearly permitted under the rules to leave the House. That is why the rule is there. The rule on the quorum is there so that the hon. member who is speaking, or any other member of the House, can demand that the House give him the minimal level of attention and jurisdiction he should have. None of the hon. members have raised any substantial rulings indicating that I should not get the floor. They just want to punish me; they do not want to give any real logic.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether leaving the House in the middle of a speech is any worse than finishing a speech and disappearing as does the minister every time he makes a speech. Perhaps we should bar him as well.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I draw to your attention the fact that if any member of any party were allowed to call for a quorum and then have his party vacate the House, it would certainly be possible to call for a quorum virtually any day of the week. Having vacated the House after calling for a quorum, it seems to me that he could thereby create no quorum, as did the hon. member—

Mr. Waddell: No, no!

Mr. McCain: If that is permissible, the chaos which would result in the House as a result of this procedure would be absolutely unbearable and intolerable for his or any other party in the House.

Mr. Blais: It is nearly as bad as not showing up for your own vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has sought any and all assistance from hon. members. All members present will recognize that no hon. member rising on this point of order quoted any precedent which might be of assistance to the Chair. I would like to think that the essence of the problem faced by hon. members and by the Chair is that when the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has the floor and chooses to call a quorum, he has every right under the Standing Orders to do so. I would think once the motion for quorum has been called and the Chair has followed proper procedures that we would return to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who had the floor. My problem, and this is why I made reference to that immediately, is that I think normally when an hon. member calls the quorum, his concern for the presence of members in the House would indicate that he himself would also remain to contribute to the quorum. The difficulty the Chair faces is that the Chair did observe that the hon. member first called the quorum and then left the chamber. Once the hon. member left the chamber the Chair is in a difficult position to decide whether or not his return constitutes an unbroken right to continue with the debate.

• (2000)

A proceeding intervened, a motion for a quorum, and during that proceeding the hon. member was not present. I have sought consultation and I have yet to find a precedent that covers the matter.

Some hon. Members: Make one.

Mr. Kempling: The House is with you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The inclination of the Chair is to say that the motion for the Chair is to see whether or not there is a quorum is a right of any hon. member at any time, and whether he may or may not be present during the quorum call, I think, should leave matters undisturbed. At the end of that intervening proceeding, which is a very special proceeding, the Chair would return to wherever matters were previously. I am not content with the idea that there can be a call for a quorum, that the hon. member can leave and then can come back and take the floor again. However, to me, the logic is that if we are going to return to the state of proceedings where we were prior to the motion for a quorum, then I have no choice but to recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, without prolonging the debate, I think that your ruling is very just. I hesitate to apologize that I put Your Honor in a difficult position but I did. I do think that perhaps the onus was on my hon. friends who took the other view to bring the proper precedent, and no doubt they may do that next time. Before I continue I would point out that there are many more members in the House and there is even someone in the press gallery.

I would like to continue and discuss the matter of the petroleum incentives program.

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: Hypocrite! Hypocrite, with a capital H!

Mr. Waddell: All right, just a few words in French.

[English]

I would like to deal with the petroleum incentives aspect of the energy bill because this is the most crucial part of the Liberal Canadianization program. This is what consumers are being asked to pay for every time they go to the pump. If there were an election called today this may be one of the main issues in the election and may very well be an issue in a future election. The government has said that it wants to Canadianize. The Canadian people want the government to Canadianize and, in my view, they are even prepared to forgive the government for not starting Canadianization in the years past.

As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) said a moment ago, the government permitted the oil industry to be more foreing-controlled than did any other OECD nation. Canadians are prepared to forgive them for that.

But are they prepared to pay money at the pump to give $6.5 billion more to the oil companies? That is the case that the government must make and it is a case which I do not think Canadians will accept.

The minister talked about energy security. He said that it is necessary to introduce these PIP programs to provide energy security for Canadians. Those were the words of the minister. My question is, energy security for whom? It is not for the consumer and not for the taxpayer because I believe that we are continuing to get hosed for this. What the government is proposing is to give money to its friends in the oil industry whose history it has been in the past to say that there is an energy crisis, "give us a tax break." The minister said, "No, we will not give you a tax break but we will give you a grant." The industry agreed to take a grant which it was supposed to use for exploration for oil. It then said that it had to export oil, and the government permitted it to do it. The industry then says that there is a shortage, another crisis, and must go back to the government for more grants or tax breaks. That is a pattern which has been followed in Canada. I challenge any member in the House to argue otherwise historically.

During the early 1970s we exported one half of our daily oil production. What is the energy crisis in Canada today? We have enough hydro, coal and nuclear power. We have enough natural gas but we do not have enough oil.

It is not sufficient for any Conservative members to berate it. Their policy in the Clark government was exactly the same and, as a matter of fact, it was worse. I hope that some Liberal members will stand up to take part in this debate—now that they are all here—to say how the policy announced by the Clark government was worse.

I do not want to have to give the facts and figures because that is up to the Liberal members, but I can tell them where to find those facts. The Liberal policy is bad enough but the Conservative policy was worse. Hon. members can call me names but I suggest they look at the figures and at what the Crosbie budget proposed and what the deal with Alberta was, if there was one.

Mr. Domm: You do not even know.

Mr. Waddell: I suggest that those members review the convention resolution where the member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and, I believe, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) took the position that the price should be 85 per cent of world prices.

Mr. Taylor: Since when was a resolution a law?

Mr. Waddell: A resolution of a Tory convention is never law. Nevertheless it was there. What I am suggesting is that we review this Canadianization policy in detail. I propose a much simpler and more effective way to achieve Canadianization. Instead of putting $6.5 billion into a convoluted scheme, as the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) pointed out very well in his speech, we should take that $6.5 billion and give it to Petro-Canada to buy Imperial Oil. In this way we will get 15 per cent more Canadian ownership and no blackmail from the industry.

An hon. Member: Where will you borrow the money?

Mr. Waddell: The money is coming in. The government is just about to give $6.5 billion in grants. That is where it will come from. If you take that money to buy Imperial Oil there will be no need for PIP, COR or any other layer of bureaucracy.

We are not suggesting a take-over of the whole industry but that we should take a leading direction similar to that of Norway, Great Britain and many other countries. Those countries have indicated that in the tough world of international oil—not just a small company buyt the seven sisters—you must have a directing force, and this must be the predominant role of Petro-Canada.

You can ask anyone who has experience in the international realm of the oil companies. You can ask that of Bill Hopper. I believe that a policy such as that would make sense. Since it would not cost $6.5 billion to purchase Imperial Oil, you could invest the remainder of the money in conservation and alternate energy. That is where our energy security lies.

During recent debates we discovered that $6,500 million, that is $6.5 billion, will go to the oil companies over five years as a result of this bill. However, $35 million will go to Canertech, the government's energy corporation in Winnipeg. When we see that imbalance, if more money were put into conservation and energy alternatives instead of going to megaprojects through giveaways and blackmail, we could create more jobs and achieve real energy security for Canada.

Perhaps you have read the words of Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn when he said that it must be obvious to any village greybeard that a dozen worms can only gnaw at one apple for so long until it is all gone. I see my friend laughing, but I believe it is a very philosophical and intelligent statement. What Solzhenitsyn was saying was that we cannot keep using renewable resources or they will go. Canadians understand that.

• (2010)

As the minister said today in reply to a question from the hon. member for Calgary Centre in this House, there have been some successes in the NEP, one of them being that people are starting to conserve. They understand and they will conserve. With this $6.5 billion we could set up neighbourhood energy programs modelled after programs with which we have experience, such as the Neighbourhood Improvement Program, of a few years ago, under which local citizens improved their neighbourhoods. That was a program of this government. It was a successful program. It worked, and it would work on a neighbourhood level for energy. We could get some real conservation.

The government would then not have to give $8 billion to Shell to delay another month on the tar sands or $40 million to Imperial Oil to delay a few months on Cold Lake. It would not have to put $13 billion into this consortium to develop the tar sands which private industry will not touch. It would not have to do that. It would not have to put $60 billion into the Alaska pipeline.

There is another way of doing this. I am not saying that conventional oil cannot be developed. We must develop that. I would suggest we must go to Hibernia. I think the government is smart in earmarking Hibernia for development. I know there are tremendous technological problems, but there is oil out there which we can use and which we need. I am not saying we do not need oil. What I am saying is that we do not have to give $6.5 billion to Dome Petroleum and Nova for oil.

There was an interview of Jack Gallagher, the chairman of Dome Petroleum, on "The Journal" program. It was a most revealing interview in which Mr. Gallagher said, "We will develop the oil," and he will be one of the biggest recipients of these grants. He said, "We will develop the Beaufort Sea." He was asked, "What will you do with the oil?" He said, "Well, we will export it to Japan." It is the same pattern, "Give us more money, we will find the resource and then we will export the resource."

Many hon. members in this House have said the industry can be regulated. It is the most over-regulated industry in Canada. However, if we look at the history we find that the industry can manipulate the regulator. The industry has had no problems manipulating the National Energy Board or the Government of Canada.

I feel sorry for a man I once knew years ago, Joe Greene. He was manipulated and misled by the industry. He stood up in the House and said, "We have enough oil to last 300 years." We are now told that we have enough conventional oil to last nine years. That is why we must go to the north and give grants, and why we must develop the tarsands. One sees that it is the same pattern. Now everyone talks about the late Joe Greene as the minister who stood up and said, "We have enough oil for 300 years." Poor Joe Greene. That is his legacy and it should not be his legacy. He was manipulated.

However, I would say something further about Canadianization and the way these PIP grants work. If we could get this message out to average Canadians, they would be appalled. The way the grants work is that a percentage of each dollar of exploration in Canada lands is returned to Canadian companies. However, this can be manipulated. Defining a Canadian company is like the old shell game. Look at the way Dome suddenly emerged as a Canadian company. These grants will be manipulated and there will be groups of companies which will say they are Canadian. They will get minor Canadian partners, but they will really be dominated by Imperial, Shell and so on.

A Canadian company, one that is Canadian owned, not Canadian controlled, can drive a truck through these COR provisions, as we have demonstrated in the committee and at other hearings. Some hon. members opposite have demonstrated this in relation to Bill C-48. At a minimum, there is a real danger that companies will be able to get around the Canadian provision. They will be able to say they are Canadian owned when really they are not. A Canadian-owned company receives 80 cents on the dollar, and if it pays income tax, it receives another 13 cents. Therefore, it receives 93 cents on the dollar for drilling. That is all for the poor oil companies, 93 cents on the dollar. What do we get back? We get back a 25 per cent equity. This is a pretty bad business deal. That is a pretty rotten deal. I do not know any businessman who would enter into that kind of deal, but the Government of Canada will enter into it. It says it is a radical program.

This Saturday I have to go to my constituency office on a working class street in Vancouver. People come into my office who are receiving pensions of $300 a month. This weekend I must deal with a case of a man who applied for a disability pension of a measly $350 a month, but he cannot get the pension. He is 58 and cannot work because of an injury. What does he get? He gets nothing from this government.

What does Dome get from this government? Its president earns $625,000 a year, and the government is about to give a big chunk of the $6.5 billion to that company. That is disgraceful, it is obscene. Those are the kinds of things being done in this country. The ministers say that there is public support. There is not public support for that in this country. There is public support for Canadianization.

I suggest the government look at the work of the committee on Canadianization. That committee was originally supported by this government. It came to Ottawa and met, I suspect, under the auspices of this government. Someone allowed its members to use the old railway station, the Conference Centre and it came up with some resolutions which I would like to quote.

In a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the committee wrote:

—the majority of Canadians will support a determined and effective program to bring our energy resources under Canadian, particularly public, ownership and control which ensures that these resources are developed and utilized in the best interests of the nation—

Again, on January 24, 1982, it wrote:

—Canada's goal must be increased to at least 75 per cent Canadian ownership of the vital petroleum industry by 1985 with Petro-Canada the largest oil company in the country—

That is not what the minister proposed tonight. Does Your Honour know what the largest Canadian-oil company in the country is? I ask you, Mr. Speaker, as you are from British Columbia and are well-acquainted with the affairs of the world, what is the largest oil company in Canada? Right now, the largest Canadian-oil company is Imperial Oil. The largest Canadian-owned company is Dome Petroleum, not Petro-Canada. People see the Petro-Canada signs in the east. Petro-Canada took over Petrofina in the west when it took over Pacific Petroleum, and the people think we have a real Canadianization program. They think that Petro-Canada is predominant and that we are doing something. However, that is not the case at all. As a matter of fact, Ambassador Towe, the former Canadian ambassador to the United States, speaking in New York said, "The government will not become involved in any more public ownership. It is finished." Therefore, Petro-Canada will not expand.

The committee to Canadianize, representing some really top people across Canada, urged the Prime Minister to achieve 75 per cent Canadian ownership of the vital petroleum industry by 1985.

I suspect that when the government listens every day to my friend, the Conservative energy critic, and to some of these other energy critics, it will get the wrong impression. There is support in the country. What I am trying to tell the government is that it should do more, go farther and seize this opportunity to make it of great concern. If René Lévesque were the prime minister of Canada, Mr. Speaker, do you know what he would do? He would take over the oil industry and make Petro-Canada the predominant owner of the oil industry. He would get this country together by doing that. That seems an odd thing to say, but consider what Lévesque and some of the Quebecers did with Quebec Hydro, and there was public support. This country is waiting for that kind of leadership.

The committee to Canadianize said, "We strongly urge the federal government to acquire one of the four major controlled companies as a new Crown corporation." It did a Gallup poll on that subject. I tell my Liberal friend, who follows the polls like a dog, that the poll conducted by Gallup on this very question indicated that 64 per cent were in favour and 23 per cent were opposed. One does not get that impression when one listens to the Conservative opposition. It says some good things about small Canadian-oil companies. However, when it knocks the general thrust of the National Energy Program, it is way off base. Concerning government take-over of one of the big four, 55 per cent said yes and 28 per cent said no. Canadians are way ahead of their government. Instead, what does the government give them? Does it give them a commitment to 75 per cent? It gives them a commitment to 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990. Mr. Trudeau promised that in 1972.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Waddell: It is too little. The Prime Minister promised that way back in 1972. It is too little and it is too late, according to the Canadian public. The people want more. They say that what the hon. member suggests is kind of radical, that he is just a socialist. I suggest they look at the Wednesday, March 24 edition of The Globe and Mail, an article by Jeffrey Simpson where he talks about the oil industry in Norway. I quote from that article:

• (2020)

—Norway has never had trouble attracting foreigners to the North Sea. Despite tax levels and government involvement undreamed of in Canada.

Where there is oil, the companies will go. There is oil in the Beaufort Sea, in the Arctic and the offshore. Members who take an interest in energy are well briefed on how much oil is thought to be there. I again quote:

The Norwegian government tax take, for example, is 85 per cent. In addition, Statoil automatically gets 50 per cent of any oil project in the North Sea, and the corporations participation can go as high as 85 per cent. It can also raise its share above 50 per cent at any time. Put simply, every concession awarded in the North Sea by the government gives at least half the action to Statoil. And the corporation has a bigger stake in all the most promising projects.

What does the Government of Canada propose? It proposes to give the oil companies 93 cents on every dollar for drilling and exploration and take back a 25 per cent equity. The position of the New Democratic Party is like that of Norway. If you are going to put that kind of money in, you should take equal equity out. You should take at least 50 per cent control, as they do in Norway.

There is another interesting quote from Mr. Simpson's article. Referring to what was said by one of the chairmen of Statoil, who has vast experience in the whole oil business in the North Sea and other places, he writes that—the logic of dealing with multinational oil companies demands that Statoil always be in the driver's seat.

The logic of dealing with these companies demands that Petro-Canada always be in the driver's seat. Time and again the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) has made the point that if you want to have industrial spin-off, you cannot trust a big American company in there, because it will take it and go to Chicago or New York, not to the small Canadian who needs help. That is what they found in the North Sea. Britain found there has to be a program. The hon. member for Comox-Powell River almost stood on his head at the committee hearings on Bill C-48 to put these ideas to the Canadian government.

I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in the chamber. I tried to ask him about industrial spin-off regarding coal in British Columbia. As Bob Rae, the former member for Broadview-Greenwood, used to say about the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), it is not like Tinkerbell, you cannot wish it would happen, you have to plan it. We need Petro-Canada in the driver's seat.

This $6.5 billion provision is an obscene provision, at a time when we are cutting back on education and health benefits. We had a debate on this a couple of weeks ago. The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) eloquently put the case for universal medicare and discussed the problems with medicare. With all these demands on the treasury, why give away $6.5 billion?

There is another reason why we should not give it away. I do not think it has been raised in this House other than in one question that I put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The federal government thought it would get a lot of money through this deal with Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. It was really a tax grab, to be collected at the pump from the consumer. The governments of Ottawa and Alberta thought they had it made through this deal with Alberta.

The international price is falling because of a glut in the oil market. It was said we could not have anticipated that, although I am not sure. The Government of Canada now has a real problem. It is not going to get that money. It will lose something like $22 billion. Where will the government get the money for the $6.5 billion in grants to the oil companies? It will get it out of the hide of the Canadian consumer. That makes the system even more obscene. It is the same old pattern.

Tommy Douglas used to say in the House of Commons that the money is taken out of people's pockets and put in other people's pockets. In this case, it is being taken out of the taxpayer's pocket at the pump and being recycled through the government to the oil companies. This is the Liberal alternate energy policy. It is called recycling. You hose them at the pump and give the oil companies $6.5 billion. That is scandalous.

Let us look at the figures. For 1981-82 it is $940 million, 1982-83 $1,040 million, 1983-84 $1,150 million, 1984-85, $1,480 million and 1985-86 $1,850 million, totalling $6,460 million. That is $6.5 billion from 1981 to 1986.

I am sorry the minister is not in the chamber. I have his exact words from this evening's debate. He said it is necessary to provide these PIPs to obtain security for Canadians. He said these PIP grants are not too generous. They are not too generous? They provide 93 cents on every dollar, $6.5 billion to an industry that is one of the richest in Canada. I wish the public could understand. I do not think they do. What will Liberal Canadianization mean? It will mean we will replace the Rockefellers with the Blacks and the Blairs, buddies of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Blais: The Blacks?

Mr. Waddell: Just look around. Look where they give their campaign contributions. Look at their friends and associates. Look at the connections. Look at who is supporting the National Energy Program in Alberta.

You, Mr. Speaker, and I as westerners know what the National Energy Program was. It was a move to get around Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia and go up north to explore. That is where the federal government is the colonial power. It is not necessary to deal with premiers Lougheed, Bennett and Blakeney. The federal government can call the shots. That is ludicrous. We should be drilling for oil in Alberta and developing the Lloydminster area, enhancing the heavy-oil recovery there. We should be giving money to Saskatchewan for an upgrader for its heavy oil. That is the kind of program we would have if we had a sensible energy policy. I warn members opposite that they are dealing with a six-foot Napoleon. That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is. I watched him walk out of the chamber tonight after the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) spoke. He was arrogant.

If members opposite are interested in energy, they should look at what is going on. In many ways, the oil industry is throwing everything on the government. What can we expect from the oil industry. Big oil companies have always had their own way. They have manipulated the National Energy Board and the federal government for years.

I reiterate, I do not question the thrust of the National Energy Program. I do not question the thrust of trying to get Canadian control of the industry. As the minister said, it is a strategic industry, and Canadians support that, but why do it this way? Why do it with a bureaucratic scheme that is convoluted and unworkable? It is our oil. I quote from page 17 of the National Energy Program:

> —in general, price and tax policies have provided the industry with the cash flow necessary to finance its expenditures. This means that the oil consumer and the Canadian taxpayer have financed virtually all of the substantial expansion of this industry.

I am not an expert in this industry. I have tried to understand the problems of the oil industry. I do not think they are that difficult. For years the industry financed all of its expansion from its cash flow, unlike other Canadian companies, such as those in manufacturing, which had to borrow money from the banks.

• (2030)

The oil companies, because of the PGRT and the taxes, have had to go to the banks, and because of the downturn, the recession, they are experiencing some difficulty. But that is not reason enough for the government to cave in on everything, on the good part of the National Energy Program. What the government should do is get back to Canadianization of Petro-Canada. Within the last year, as a result of the NEP inspired take-over, we spent $6.5 billion, and we have increased Canadian ownership of oil and gas by 6 per cent. The minister said that in the House, and he was proud of it. I figure it was between 30 and 35 per cent.

This country, with its new Constitution, this proud and vibrant, healthy young country, now has an industry that is only 65 per cent to 70 per cent controlled by foreigners. The decisions in the Hibernia case are not going to be made in St. John's or Ottawa, they are going to be made in the boardrooms of Mobil in New York. The decisions on the tar sands are going to be made in the boardrooms of Shell. That is what we are facing.

I think I have clearly set out what alternatives there are, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to conclude by returning to the question: Energy and security, for whom? These bills are all part of a large package bill which was originally called the energy security bill. The Liberal answer seems to be energy security for the oil companies, companies like Dome and Nova. They have been drilling in Ottawa, and they have done very well. Government money is going to pay all the money. What do we get for the taxpayers and the consumers? We continually get holes. I very much think the government is going to face a major rebellion of these taxpayers and consumers when they understand just exactly what the government is going to do with their $6.5 billion.

It is no wonder Canadians are becoming cynical, Mr. Speaker, about this energy policy. It is not what was promised. The Canadian public wants Petro-Canada to be the major player. I think the Canadian public would want this $6.5 billion to go to Petro-Canada for expansion, instead of going to these oil companies. I think the Canadian public wants to expand conservation alternatives, and I think the Canadian public is away ahead of the government, and the opposition. I suggest to the government that it is really missing a great chance and a great opportunity for a real vision of Canada.

I know a little bit about your own background, Mr. Speaker, and I shall close with a biblical quote. You will appreciate that. I cannot remember what part of the bible it comes from, but I am sure you will know. It goes like this: "Your old men shall dream dreams and your young men shall see visions; and where there are no visions, the people perish."

What a vision, what a chance we had with the energy program, to make Petro-Canada the predominant, the major player; to get it into the driver's seat. Instead, we have chosen to continue the old program of giving money away to oil companies. I very much regret that. That is why we will be voting against this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): The member from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) mentioned that this bill was bureaucratic, that it was unworkable, and that it entailed massive expense. I say to him, Mr. Speaker, he is right. He has no idea of how much bureaucratic work there is involved, and not only work for employees of the Government of Canada. There will be a great make-work project here, and a great make-work project for accountants, for the lawyers, for the clerks and the estimators, as we go through the various forms and requirements of determining whether a company is Canadian owned, 50 per cent Canadian owned, 60 per cent Canadian owned or 57 per cent owned, or whatever ratio is required in accordance with Clause 10 of this bill.

I did not rise to speak on this bill in that regard, Mr. Speaker. I rise because I am very unhappy and very sad for Canadians, that we should have a government that, after about two years since the election, one-half years since the budget of October 29, 1980, with all the things that have happened during that period, should continue to press with this legislation.

It has become evident to every home owner, every farmer, every businessman, large and small, that the cost of this legislation and the cost of this program has and will be borne by Canadians paying, on average, 2 per cent to 5 per cent more per annum in interest on every debt they owe. We can tell you that this program is absolutely inane. It is driving foreign investment from Canada, and it is driving Canadian investment from Canada. We are having to correct our balance of payments by bringing in the hot money from around the world. And the only way we can bring it in is pay more and more in interest rates and pass that across the country to every home owner, to every small businessman, to every fisherman, to every farmer, and to you and to me. Sir, the program is deficient, wrong, inept, indeed crazy.

I thought members of the Liberal Party would have seen what has gone on over the past year and one-half as hundreds of drilling rigs have left the country, as people have taken their money from Canada to the United States and to other parts of the world to invest where they think they can trust the government and trust the economic system. As the governor of the bank said, in August, in order to finance the number of take-overs that occurred last year, principally in the oil industry, he had to raise interest rates deliberately by 5 per cent. We are now expected to carry on with legislation that continues to advocate pressing directly on the major business of the country to that end.

I was a member of the Committee for an Independent Canada. I worked on that committee. Like my constituents, I would like to see business and industry owned by Canadians. In 1970, or thereabouts, approximately 90 per cent of the oil industry was owned by foreigners. Prior to this program coming in, about 70 per cent of the industry was owned by foreigners. There was a Canadian take-over, a voluntary takeover, if you like, of at least 20 per cent of the business in that decade. The minister says that a further 6 per cent of the industry has now been taken over by Canadians. Presumably, if the minister is correct, approximately 65 per cent of the oil industry is foreign owned and about 35 per cent is Canadian owned. The take-over by Canadians of investment in Canada would have continued without this program and, indeed, if this program were abandoned it would continue without any cost to anyone at all.

We have only to look at our history, to see a company like the Hudson's Bay Company, financed by traders from London, trading into the Hudson Bay. That company is today totally owned, by Canadians. There may be some foreign shareholding, but who cares, it is controlled, owned and operated here, with its head office in Canada.

Let us take a look at the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was financed totally by foreign investments for a while, aside from some free land it got from the Government of Canada, and perhaps a few dollars. Certainly it was financed and paid for to a large extent by foreign investment. That foreign investment has now been repaid and, by and large, the shares in that company are held by Canadians. That is what happens in business.

• (2040)

Canadians would rather own Canadian companies than foreign companies, all things being equal. If I have money to invest, I would rather invest in my own town of Mississauga than anywhere else. I would rather invest in my own country than in some other person's country. That applies generally around the world. Foreigners do not come to Canada unless they think Canada offers better opportunities than their own countries. Generally speaking, if Canada offers better opportunities, then Canadians will stay and invest in Canada.

Unfortunately, that is not what has been happening in the past year or year and a half. As we have seen, very close to $20 billion of Canadian capital and foreign capital in Canada leaves Canada. That capital leaving Canada has created horrendous balance of payments problems and has meant that every home owner, every fisherman, every farmer and every small businessman has had to pay considerably more for money than his competitor in the United States and, indeed, his competitor virtually everywhere in the world.

Where are we going with this bill? This is a bureaucratic piece of legislation which provides various means of determining whether a company is owned by Canadians and what percentage that ownership is. The bill is presented to us as necessary, because it is patriotic and it is good for Canada to own things.

It has been said that patriotism is the last refuge for the scoundrel. Let us look at the scoundrels who are proposing this bill and at what they are doing to the free-enterprise system. What are they doing? They are not running things in the normal fashion. They are running things by grants from the bureaucracy in Ottawa. Money is paid to companies provided those companies act within the regulations, orders and rules prescribed by the minister at his discretion, as set out in this bill and related statutes. The grants are not for everyone. They are only for those who apply and fulfil the requirements. They are only available if the drilling, exploration or development a company does is deemed by the minister, in his discretion, to be eligible. A company does not necessarily get a grant because it is Canadian owned; it not only has to be Canadian owned, depending on the discretion of the minister in accordance with his very complicated and detailed regulations, it also has to have work which is eligible, in the mind of the minister.

Instead of a free-enterprise society, what we have is a state controlled society in which a minister and his officials in the ivory towers of Ottawa determine what work is to be done in Canada, who is to develop Canada, how it is to be developed, where it is to be developed and when it is to be developed. That is contrary to every concept of the free-entreprise system which has built our nation. This bill is socialism at its worst.

Mr. Waddell: Yes.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am glad the hon. member agrees that this bill is socialism at its worst.

Mr. Miller: Terrible socialism.

Mr. Blenkarn: Socialism would have the government own; here it just controls.

Mr. Waddell: Exactly. You've got it, Don.

Mr. Blenkarn: We have a planned economy, and we cannot support that because we know what is happening and what has happened in other countries which have used the concept of the planned society. The Soviet Union cannot even feed itself, and we have to export grain to every planned country. Poland is an example. Poland used to be a breadbasket for the world. We now have to export food to Poland as a result of it having a planned economy. If we carry on with the philosophy of this bill, we will wind up with further central planning of our economy. It will be done under the guise of patriotism or Canadian ownership. Patriotism is the last refuge of the scoundrel. Under the guise of patriotism, under the guise of Canadian ownership and under the guise of, "We are going to own the oil industry," what we really will be doing is allowing the minister and his henchmen to control the oil industry, just as they wish to control every business activity in the country with their central planning.

We have seen what has been happening with this government. This government has managed to run inflation up. It was 12.5 per cent last year. Perhaps it has slipped back to 11.5 per cent now. We have managed to run unemployment up to over 9 per cent. That is the government's figure. The rate of unemployment is probably well over 10 per cent, if we take into account those people who are no longer deemed to be in the work force, the 146,000 people who all of a sudden disappeared from the work force last year. I do not know whether they went to the gulag, whether they all died or whether there was a run on funerals, but that is the number of people who disappeared from the labour force last year. That is why we have only 9 per cent unemployment.

Mr. Waddell: They are running for the leadership of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Blenkarn: On the basis of statistics long old, I can say that the planned society program of the government represented by this bill is the kind of program against which Canadians should rise up. It is not patriotism. It is not designed to promote Canadian ownership. It is designed to promote government control of our means of production and distribution. It matters little whether that control is by a state company like Petro-Canada or in the minister's office by ministerial regulation and direction.

Let us look at what is happening in the United States. The Americans have opted for the other way. They have opted for de-regulation.

Mr. Waddell: And a windfall profits tax.

Mr. Blenkarn: They have opted to allow people to go out and make profits. My friends says a windfall profits tax. Yes, and they pay ordinary corporate profits taxes if corporations make profits. What is wrong with that?

Mr. Waddell: Windfall profits.

Mr. Blenkarn: But they are allowed to go out and drill and develop and do things the way they want, and things are moving there in terms of oil self-sufficiency. Bit by bit, rapidly, that country is becoming much more self-sufficient than ever before, and certainly this has been so in the last ten years. That is the way we should be going. We should be getting rid of the burden of government. We should be getting rid of the bureaucracy of government, the taxes of government and the people who think that because they happen to live in this city of Ottawa, they know all, can see all and can regulate all. We ought to set the people who produce free from the chains of government and the chains of regulations so that they can do their thing and develop without controls, without grants and without incentive payments, buried, so to speak, under the guise of patriotism and under the guise of Canadianization. I say the National Energy Program should be buried. The National Energy Program has been a disaster for Canada. It has cost Canadians their homes, their businesses and their farms. It has caused monster unemployment and it has been a cause of inflation. Every economic group in the country that analyses such things as the banking industry and other groups that have looked at what is wrong with interest rates, has almost invariably pointed to the Foreign Investment Review Act and the national energy policy as being the two things that have tended to hurt Canada far more than help it.

• (2050)

Under the provisions of GATT we are already under attack by the United States. This bill favours Canadian companies over foreign companies to the extent that it is unfair and will work against us with respect to our own multinationals. We are proud of companies like Massey-Ferguson Limited, Seagram, CPR, Noranda, Hudson's Bay, Inco and so on which trade around the world, yet our own companies with head offices in Canada will wind up being discriminated against in foreign countries if we continue to discriminate against foreign companies in Canada.

That could damage us in two ways, Mr. Speaker. Not only will it mean a loss of export markets for our manufactured goods in particular, but it will mean retaliation and a lack of investment opportunities for Canadians in the country. As Canadians see the government become more and more bureaucratic and dishonest in the name of patriotism, using regulation and control to influence their jobs, the means of production, the means of distribution, the pricing of labour, they will take their money and talents out of the country. This has already been done by a great number of Canadians, particularly in the oil industry, within the last two years or less.

I say to you and members of the House, Mr. Speaker, that we should examine this bill carefully and decide that it is the wrong course for Canada.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, other members of this party have pointed out that we in the official opposition are quite supportive of the concept of Canadians gradually taking an increased ownership and investment interest in the oil and gas industry, as indeed in all sectors of our economy. At the same time, however, we see no urgent need to put the oil and gas industry on such a crisis footing that we would want to exercise the brute force tactics represented by Bill C-104.

It is rather like having lost the keys to the car and going down to the local service station for a sledge hammer to open the door. It might be smarter to look for a coat hanger or a locksmith. We are using a brute force tactic, which is far more severe than the circumstances warrant, with regard to the distribution of equity investment in the oil and gas industry.

Aside from that, however, this party believes that it would be far more desirable to seduce—perhaps I should say encourage—Canadian investors, than to drive foreigners away who would also seek to bring money to Canada, take risks in our future and share in some of the benefits if the risks are successful.

It is ludicrous to suggest that Canadians do not own or control our natural resources. Under the Constitution adopted two days ago, ownership of the resources rests with the provinces. Control rests in the hands of the provincial governments and, to some degree, in the federal government. There are laws and a tax system which can be used to ensure that we direct our economy on a particular course if we so choose. We have bilateral tax treaties, which are to be respected and which can be amended from time to time, if we want to negotiate certain arrangements between ourselves, the United States and other countries.

There is a basic difference of philosophy, Mr. Speaker, ours emphasizes the importance of increasing the means of the production of wealth and the production of wellbeing of Canadians as opposed to the philosophy which is prevalent in the government party opposite—that which focuses on the redistribution of wealth without regard for creating additional wealth, additional employment and opportunities for our young people. That philosophy of redistribution, rather than production, has destroyed the free economies of many countries and has led to the gradual introduction and intrusion of socialism and, ultimately, communism. Like other speakers for this party, I am alarmed at that tendency which we see evolving in our country today.

This party is not opposed to Canadianization but it is certainly openly and vocally opposed to nationalization of the wealth and the means of production which, as we have heard them state, is their ultimate objective of our colleagues to the left in this business. This would reduce the productivity of the country and would destroy the opportunities and freedom so cherished by individuals who came to this country from all parts of the world.

Bill C-104 is the bureaucrat's dream and the businessman's nightmare, Mr. Speaker. It requires forms and paperwork. It will provide work for petty bureaucrats for many, many years. They will be charged with determining what constitutes eligible Canadian asset costs, eligible development costs, eligible exploration costs, eligible persons, qualified persons—in fact, it might surprise some hon. members to realize that somewhere in this bill there is provision for Canadian persons to be controlled. On page 20, clause 38.(5) of the bill provides that where the minister designated to act as the minister for the purposes of the Foreign Investment Review Act has reached the opinion under subsection 4(1) of that act that a person is not a non-eligible person within the meaning of that act, that person shall, subject to subsection (6), be deemed to be Canadian controlled. That is very interesting, Mr. Speaker. I know it is just an inadvertent choice of legal language but we should note that the bill even provides that persons shall be Canadian controlled—not free Canadians, but Canadians controlled by the provisions of the bill and the philosophy of the government.

The dreamer who put together the schedule of eligibility for the PIP grants is much more of a mathematician and academic dreamer than a pragmatist. Clause 10 of the bill on page 7 provides that in 1981 eligible persons must be 50 per cent or more in the majority. I gather that ineligible persons are those who do not happen to live or to have lived in Canada. Persons who are 50 per cent in the majority or up to 65 per cent by 1986 will be eligible for a grant of some 10 per cent of direct development, exploration or asset costs. Of course, if you happen to be an eligible person and comprise more than 60 per cent Canadian content, rising to more than 65 per cent by 1986, then you are eligible for a 15 per cent grant to offset eligible development expenses and eligible asset expenses. If your Canadian ownership rate is 65 per cent or more, rising to 67 per cent in 1982, or 69 per cent in 1983, ultimately to 75 per cent by 1986, then of course you are eligible for larger grants to the extent of 55 per cent on eligible exploration costs and 20 per cent on other costs.

Mr. Speaker, these factors will have to be assessed every time the equity holdings of a company changes in any minor way, within certain tolerances. It will mean that private companies will have to file applications and seek the minister's dispensation every time the investment structure of their company changes in any significant way. Furthermore, there are the onerous record-keeping provisions which provide, among other things, that these records will be held in confidence by the minister and may only be released to the courts if they are required in criminal proceedings related to fraudulent abuse of this act. This will, in fact, invite fraudulent abuse because people can play with this schedule, manipulate the system, falsify information, and ministers and political hacks can exercise favouritism to benefit certain people who have access to friends in government.

This is another reason why the oil and gas and related industries have been alarmed by the provisions of this legislation. It is no secret that the value of oil and gas shares in Canada has collapsed since the introduction of the NEP. We have considerable data to justify that statement. I have a rather interesting quote from a very well known executive, the vice president of PetroCan, Joel Bell, who said in December 1981:

> Let us look at the stock market, as something of a barometer with regard to whether the Canadian (taxation) régime is appropriate. When the National Energy Program was announced in late October of 1980, the stock market dropped. If you take a period of a year, from October 1980 to October or November of 1981, it has dropped by 22 per cent.

In fact, the oil and gas index has dropped on the Toronto stock exchange by some 1,300 points in 1981 as a consequence of the NEP. This program, along with FIRA and PIP grants, is having a tremendously detrimental impact on the industry, contrary to the allegations of the minister who read selectively from a telegram or letter from one company in Calgary which is friendly to him. The statistics show that this legislation is having devastating effects on oil, gas and mineral exploration. Well completions in the western Canadian basin dropped to 7,200 in 1981 from 9,500 in 1980. Canadian investment in the industry has dropped by 25 per cent, with a corresponding increase of 25 per cent in the United States. Wells drilled to the development stage dropped 28 per cent in 1981. And as we have heard many times in the House, some 226 drilling rigs have left Canada for the U.S. since October, 1980.

These PIP grants, Mr. Speaker really represent a supplementary profit to the oil companies fortunate enough to qualify. Because of the uncertainty involved and the typical delays of government departments in writing cheques and processing applications, the successful companies will have to predicate their investment decisions on the assumption they can make their goal without the grant. In other words, they will have to assume a certain profit on the initiatives they take, whether or not they qualify for these grants. They are, in other words, going to be padding out profits from 10 per cent to 20 per cent to enable them to apply for these incentive grants.

In that respect the companies with the inside track, the larger and well-financed financed companies, might well go for the program, but we have to remember that in a heavily regulated economy, in any sector, including the oil and gas sector, these uncertainties will ultimately lead to higher costs to the consumer. That will be the impact of these initiatives. Smaller companies will find, in fact have already found, that the delays and unwieldiness which this legislation represents make the risk just too great to justify the investment. So we will find more and more of the larger Canadian-owned oil and gas companies diverting their investment to the south, as they already have. We will also see the larger companies which have access to the cabinet, those whose presidents can afford to come here in their Cadillac limousines and have lunch with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), will become top heavy and over-extended to the extent they may well collapse in the not too distant future. I do not need to name them, many of us know who they are. And ultimately the taxpayers will pay the cost.

We debated Bill C-48 in the House a few short months ago, and now the threats of more possible confiscation of exploration interests through that bill and other aspects of the NEP will impair, indeed have already impaired, our ability to achieve energy self-sufficiency. Contrary to everything the NDP energy critic has said, self-sufficiency means oil and gas. Energy experts the world over will concur in that. We have to develop our oil and gas alternatives within the western basin, the frontier lands, and the Canada lands north of 60. Because of the negative impact of the NEP we find an increased dependence on imported oil. Because of certain provisions in the NEP we have excessively inflated compensation charges to the refineries who refine that imported oil, even though they can buy it more cheaply. The point we have to realize, Mr. Speaker, is that when governments interfere with the forces of supply and demand, we are ultimately going to pay more. We saw that in the case of uranium where this government openly participated in an international cartel in order to prop up artificially the price of uranium. As a result, our uranium ventures are shutting down and our CANDU reactors are not selling because we pretended that somehow we could control the price, when in fact ultimately, and by natural forces, those prices will always be dictated by supply and demand.

This bill is ludicrous. In fact, it represents another great Liberal fraud being perpetrated on the people of Canada. On the one hand, this government wants to create the illusion of getting tough with the industry. The government has not allowed us to debate in the House the evidence, in whatever form it takes, on the so-called alleged excess profiteering of the oil and gas industry. The evidence has not yet been heard and the decisions have not yet been taken on all of the matters before the courts. But for some reason the government has decided to create the impression that the oil and gas industry is the great bogeyman within our country and not the important dynamo for maintaining our industrial economy which, in fact, it is.

The government has done this in an attempt to impress the public. But again, this is a point made regularly and rightfully by our colleagues to the left that the government wants to hand grants back to the industry through the back door. The government taxes the companies excessively, it gets tough with the industry and taxes the consumer to help pay the price, and then through the back door the government returns money to the industry in the form of grants.

That type of approach, that focus on redistribution, has tremendous inefficiencies associated with it in addition to interfering with the natural forces of supply and demand. Instead of encouraging the production of additional supply, what we are doing is merely redistributing the investment needed to maintain the existing supply of energy sources that we need in this country and at the same time skimming a big chunk off the top. There is no Liberal member opposite who would not agree that the government's ultimate goal is to balance the budget, to try to offset the multi-billion-dollar budgetary deficits which the government has incurred because of squandering and spending on its own foolishness. For example, consider the stupid kit we received in our offices last week which no one in this House authorized. It was a fancy kit to proclaim the new Constitution for which our friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wants to take all the credit even though he had to be bludgeoned by the ten premiers and dragged screaming and kicking to the table of compromise.

I for one was quite offended not to have seen the premiers get adequate recognition last week from the government opposite in spite of the fact that, had it not been for those premiers who compromised and agreed and forced the Prime Minister to change, this country would not have had a new Constitution.

Mr. Taylor: We would not have had a country.

Mr. Siddon: This government opposite likes to talk about the evil doers in the private sector, the so-called profiteers. But in fact it is this federal government, the Liberal Party opposite that has been profiteering more than any other single group in the oil and gas sector and profiteering at the expense of the Canadian economy. We need only look at the breakdown in the price of a litre of gasoline. I will use the measurement of litres out of consideration for my metric friends across the way. We find that out of the Canadian average price of 42 cents a litre of gas, 14 cents goes to the Canadian federal government, or 33 per cent. This goes to the federal government by way of clear profit. It does very little to justify it. By comparison, the producing provinces receive only 16 per cent, less than half of what the federal government receives.

What is this great illusion about the private sector ripping off the people? The ones responsible for the greatest rip-off of all are those in the Liberal cabinet and their so-called friends to my left who condone this type of excess intervention in the private sector economy which is so important to all of us. It allows us to continue to enjoy the prosperity and benefits of this great country. On the one hand, the government wants to take—that is the philosophy of Bill C-104 and the earlier legislation that we have seen pass through the House—bigger and bigger chunks of the revenues without realizing what a mucky job it is to roughneck, what a risk it is to work on one of the offshore drilling rigs, or to put on your boots, set out across the mountains and tramp through the forests with a geophysical crew. The government opposite does not want to do that. The government just wants its 33 per cent profit. Then the government will give it back, but it will be redistributed to its friends and to people who happen to suit the government's definition. Bureaucrats will skim off anywhere from 10 per cent to 50 per cent of the revenue by way of an unnecessarily costly, unproductive rigmarole of the sort this bill represents. That is what this government is doing. The ordinary taxpayer is being asked to foot the bill for all of this. How ludicrous it is. We all know that an excessively regulated economy, as this bill reflects, will only lead to higher consumer costs. That is what we will have to contend with.

Right now I can drive from my constituency 20 miles to Bellingham, Washington and buy gasoline at less than $1.20 a gallon, which is about $1.50 in Canadian funds. But I buy my gasoline in Vancouver at $1.85, $1.90 or $1.95 a gallon. That is what we have achieved because of this National Energy Program, and this spendthrift government believes that only the great gods in Ottawa can do anything right in this country.

I want to say something about a couple of the sectors that are indirectly affected by this policy. One is the Canadian mining sector. I know you will permit me a moment or two to comment on that, Mr. Speaker. In the Canadian mining sector, the junior mining companies at the exploration level have experienced a tremendous lowering of investor confidence and uncertainty because they do not know what the next move of the government will be. The Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) can proclaim all she likes the fact that it is different in the mineral sector because Canadian ownership is somewhat higher. But what about companies such as Inco which is not Canadian owned? What about the Iron Ore Company? When is the next shoe going to fall, and is it going to hit them on the head? While we are at it, if we really want to get into intervention, what about the grocery industry in which some of the major grocery chains are dominated from outside of Canada? What about the department store industry? Some of the department stores on Sparks street here in Ottawa are owned by Canadian investors and controlled by Canadian investors. What about the automotive industry? What about General Motors? Will they be next? Why just the oil and gas industry, Mr. Speaker? I do not understand this, unless it has nothing to do with common sense but is purely an exercise in politics.

The mineral sector, in addition to the concern and uncertainty about where this interventionist Canadian-controlled philosophy is going to lead, is being adversely impacted by the tax policies, as was most notably reflected in the November 12 budget of last year, and by FIRA and the attitude that FIRA is taking in the form of unwritten policy guidelines in denying foreigners and others the right to invest in our minerals exploration sector. If they want to invest more than $200,000 we are told they are not allowed to come to Canada. Or if one American-owned company wants to assign its assets to another American-owned company, we are told that in the mineral exploration sector it is contrary to FIRA policy and cannot be allowed.

What we have is a tremendous lack of confidence in the mineral industry that is very important in regions like Quebec, northern Ontario and British Columbia. This is a direct consequence of the National Energy Program. I should point out that it is not only because of the National Energy Program, FIRA and the budget, but it is because many of these companies are affiliated with oil and gas exploration interests. Those oil and gas exploration interests have found mineral exploration to be a high risk. That is the part that has been closed down first. In the past few months we have seen Kennco Explorations (Western) close down in British Columbia. Shell Canada Resources, Gulf Minerals, Canadian Superior Oil, Norcen Energy and Union Oil have all withdrawn their exploration efforts in western Canada and elsewhere because, and they will state this very clearly, of the impact of the National Energy Program and FIRA.

I should like to quote from a letter which was sent to the Minister of State for Mines by the president of the British Columbia and Yukon Chamber of Mines, Mr. Robert J. Cathro, wherein he indicated:

> Our analysis shows that these federal Canadianization policies will reduce 1982 mineral exloration spending in British Columbia and Yukon from the petroleum companies and the small (junior) mining companies by about $31.4 million (49 per cent below the 1981 levels). This sharp decline is hitting us at the same time that lower metal prices are causing a cutback by major mining comanies of approximately $17.6 million (18 per cent below the 1981 level). The total decline in 1982 is estimated at $49 million (a 30 per cent drop from 1981). This translates into a loss of at least 200 professional positions and over 1,500 field and clerical jobs (including contractors). In addition, it will result in a substantial decline in revenue for aircraft and assay companies, equipment suppliers and the hotel, food and catering industry.

Then he went on to say:

> The lofty aims of FIRA and NEP are resulting in reduced security and opportunity for the mining industry, which strikes us as a grossly unfair and foolish way to share the nation's rich resources.

We wonder why the government would not have considered a more constructive and gradual method to encourage more Canadians to invest in oil and gas and mineral exploration in the country. Why did it not first encourage foreign-owned companies to make more stock available for purchase by Canadians? Why did the government not negotiate a change to the bilateral tax agreements between Canada and the United States if it really wanted to effect a change in this area? Why did it choose to bring in a socialistic, bureaucratic solution to a problem which will ultimately hurt us all?

We must consider the impact of this legislation on Canada-United States relations. I am not only referring to the question of Canada-United States relations in terms of tax policy. I am talking about the over-all relationship with our strongest ally, closest neighbour and best friend—the United States of America. We must consider its impact in a political, economical and social sense. We must realize what we are doing to Americans who have regarded Canada for a long time as their closest friend and neighbour and as a source of secure supply of minerals, natural gas and other energy materials which are essential to the maintenance of their economy.

We are beginning to look like another banana republic to Americans. We have no one to fault but ourselves. One morning they may turn their backs on our country and say, "We will go it alone. We do not need offsets in the auto industry. We do not need concessions in the fishery area. We do not need to worry about how you feel about your water, the Garrison diversion, acid rain and various things, because of the way you are treating our genuinely motivated citizens who wanted to take some risk and make some investment in your country and to share in the adventure and the challenge it represents." Allan MacEachen, or I should say the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), will probably demand next year that the United States change its domestic policies regarding oil and mineral exploration because of the hurt those policies are causing us. Is that not what the Minister of Finance said about interest rates, that Mr. Reagan should solve the problems which his high interest rates are causing Canadians? Is that not ludicrous? Yet, because of the damage caused by the National Energy Program, we will hear the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister saying, "Those dastardly Americans have done it to us again. Why do they not clean up their tax structure and stop encouraging Canadian investment to go south because we need it in Canada?"

The statistics in fact show that investment is flowing south because investment and risk taking is rewarded there. Here it is penalized; the only thing that is important is whether one is a 50, 75 or 52 per cent eligible Canadian. We find that Americans are opening up reserve lands, restructuring their tax policies, emphasizing more exploration in their offshore areas and making it much more attractive than it was previously. They are asking Congress to legislate in terms of geothermal leasing and shale oil development. They are opening up wilderness areas in order to respond to the need to be self-sufficient in minerals and in oil and gas, because they can no longer count on Canada. In some respects one might imagine that there is almost an element of plot to the program, an element of plot against our American friends, and that they will say, "There will be no more security of supply for you, even if it pertains to coal, minerals or other resources which you need as much as we do, as do the Japanese, West Germans, French and everyone else." The government would rather be borrowing from the Saudis and the French, from the financiers of Wall Street and Bonn, in order to finance the patriation of the oil and gas industry. It would prefer to go to those countries to borrow money at secured rates of return with no risk and agree to allow our children to pay off deficits at 15, 18 and 20 per cent rates of interest for who knows how many decades.

It is not only a plot against Americans. It almost smacks of a plot against Canadians. Certainly it is seen as a plot against western and northern Canadians. The provisions of Bill C-48 do not allow the northerners any say or control over the development of resources. No northern heritage fund is being set aside so that the benefits of resources can be enjoyed by northern people for many centuries to come. Certainly it can be seen as a plot against Newfoundlanders and Nova Scotians who want a more equitable resolution of the question of offshore ownership. The great and wonderful government opposite does not care about the cost to ordinary Canadians. It just cares about more bureaucracy, more form-filling and more redundant methods. It seems to assume that one just sticks a soda straw in the ground, sucks on it, and oil comes out. It has no conception of risk and investment costs, the complexity, the weather and the hardship which goes into developing resources.

An hon. Member: What about hot air?

Mr. Siddon: The hon. member will have his turn to speak. The government sticks taxes to Canadian—taxes on gasoline, heating oil and natural gas. It willingly consents to high interest rates, which are a hidden tax that we are all paying. The government is spending more than the country is earning and is driving away foreign investment at the same time. High interest rates are nothing more than a hidden tax on Canadians imposed by the spendthrift government opposite. There is a shortage of capital in Canada. In order to obtain enough to finance the government debt, it pays 19.5 per cent on Canada Savings Bonds. Over $6 billion worth of bond issues will come due next year, $6 billion dollars that was lent out at interest rates ranging from 4 per cent to 8 per cent. These will now have to be refloated at interest rates of 18 per cent. Who will pay for that? These are all the indirect costs of this foolish intervention by the government. In the final analysis it tells the Americans, the West Germans and the Japanese to take their money elsewhere because it does want it and can do very well on its own. How foolish.

• (2130)

The government then goes to the foreigners to borrow money as it did to purchase Panarctic and Pacific Petroleum to start Petro-Canada.

I read in the newspaper that Petro-Canada had a profit increase of 24 per cent in 1981. What is not mentioned is that after it has paid off its obligations under the term preferred shares arrangement with the chartered banks, who then remitted those payments to their foreign lenders, all that Petro-Canada had left was some $64 million on a total equity of about $2.5 billion for a return on investment of 2 per cent. That is what this great Petro-Canada company is earning for Canadians by running all of these fancy gas stations—a 2 per cent return on investment. That figure is not adjusted for inflation, it is the real return on investment. How foolish and ridiculous.

All that I can conclude is that if we cannot get back to providing a system of incentives to private sector investment of the sort outlined in the Crosbie budget of 1979 where, for example, contributions to registered retirement savings plans would be given special income tax status were they to be invested in Canadian common stocks, and where individual Canadians would receive tax benefits to invest in Canadian common stock investment plans up to $100,000 a person, those kinds of incentives which encourage more Canadians to invest and take risks in the development of our country, I fear that our economy will go nowhere but down.

Mr. William Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by making some remarks on the confusion which seems to exist within the Progressive Conservative ranks. I thought that one of the initial demands which they made during the early stages of the bell-ringing occasion was that the PIP program come forward quickly so they could support it and have it passed quickly so they could get the money to their oil friends in Alberta and elsewhere. We now see them rising to oppose this particular program. Hopefully, the next speaker will clarify why there is this great inconsistency in the policy of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Although I am tempted, I will try to resist replying to some of the remarks made by the hon. member who just preceded me. However, in passing, I must say that I have never heard such unadulterated garbage in my life.

Mr. Siddon: The feeling is mutual.

Mr. Blaikie: It would not pass some kind of grade six current affairs test with respect to any accuracy at all as to what might be appropriately called communism or socialism, liberalism or anything else. It is this sort of stupid and inaccurate garbage debate which is polluting and poisoning Canadian politics from one end of the country to the other; the kind of intellectual dishonesty and complete garbage that the hon. member was peddling before. I am no friend of the government or of the official opposition, but I believe that the least we can demand of members is to try to have a smidgen of intellectual honesty when they get up to speak.

Mr. Kempling: Try it yourself sometime.

Mr. Blaikie: Tonight we are discussing the petroleum incentives program act which will replace the super-depletion allowance which was formerly available for frontier exploration and will gradually replace depletion allowances in both federal and provincial lands.

In the past, depletion allowances have permitted deductions from taxable income of 33.3 per cent of exploration, development and certain other costs in addition to the normal full deduction of those costs. Super-depletion allowed an additional deduction of two thirds of drilling expenses for wells costing more than $5 million. This incentive expired in the spring of 1980.

Under the former tax-based incentive system, maximum benefit went to the larger and usually foreign-owned corporations which have larger amounts of taxable income. As a result, they derived greater benefit from these particular depletion allowances. This tended to inhibit the growth of the relatively small Canadian-owned and controlled sector even though this was the more agressive sector of the industry.

It is our understanding that the new system is designed to encourage even more aggressive investment by Canadians, directed at both Canadianization and the petroleum supply development goals of the National Energy Program. It is said that the federal share of the petroleum incentives program is estimated to be $940 million for the fiscal year 1981-82, which is up from the original estimate of $860 million in the draft bill. The government estimates that the PIP grants will total almost $6.5 billion during the five-year period from 1981 to 1986. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said earlier, that is $6.5 billion as compared to the $35 million to be put into Canertech, one of the government's paltry initiatives in the field of renewable energy.

The Canadian-ownership qualifications have been loosened since the program was first announced in the National Energy Program. Originally, a company had to be 75 per cent Canadian owned in 1981 to receive maximum grants. This has been reduced to 65 per cent with a phase-in to 1986 for 75 per cent Canadian ownership. In addition, a new ownership level three has been introduced. In this respect, talk about a bureaucratic nightmare is justified.

Canadian-ownership regulations may also be amended by ministerial discretion. We have no guarantee that there will not be further retreats by the Liberals bowing to industry pressure—in this case, the pressure from oil companies—in the same way that the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has bowed to the pressure from the railways with respect to the Crowsnest Pass rates.

It has been our position that we oppose grants to the richest industry in Canada unless we get more equity in return. Moreover, diverting some of this $6.5 billion to renewable energy development and conservation should be examined and, indeed, should be recommended as being more cost effective. Under this program, for example, even oil companies which drill a dry hole will still receive the grant.

The focus of our criticism on this collection of bills before us now is the petroleum incentive payments. We believe that the government is overly generous to the petroleum industry. All companies, regardless of the degree of Canadian ownership, will receive a minimum grant of 25 per cent of their exploration costs on Canadian land—that is to say federal lands. The grant can range up to 80 per cent of the cost. As taxpayers, we get little or no equity in return. On provincial lands, the federal government will give grants of up to 35 per cent of exploration costs but not take any equity or ownership in the projects. The grants can range as high as 80 per cent of the cost.

When the grants and tax breaks are combined, the result is that a 67 per cent Canadian-owned oil company in 1982 will only have to spend seven cents on every dollar for exploration. Taxpayers will be putting up the other 93 cents. This is a giveaway of immense proportion to what is already one of the richest industries in Canada in return for little or no ownership. What private investor would put up 93 per cent of the cost of a venture and accept a maximum equity of 25 per cent?

The PIP grants should also, in our view, be tied in with the phony Canadianization policy of the national energy policy. The grants are supposed to promote more Canadianization of the petroleum industry and help us to achieve oil self-sufficiency by 1990. The goal is only 50 per cent Canadian ownership, not control. Under the program, the industry can still be foreign-controlled. Moreover, the rules determining what is Canadian ownership are discretionary on the part of the minister and have already been relaxed since they were first introduced. The Canadianization program of the Liberals means more private Canadian ownership rather than public Canadian ownership. There is no evidence to the effect that private Canadian companies will act any differently when it comes to blackmailing the government into higher prices, more tax concessions and more exports of our non-renewable resources, than the previous foreign-owned multinational corporations. Self-sufficiency is an elusive goal when the companies turn around and seek to export more. This is why we in the NDP argue that Petro Canada and other Crown energy corporations should have majority control of the whole industry so that policies can be developed in the public interest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: The National Energy Program is phony. What is so hilarious in the debate is that such a phony program should be the cause of such paronoia and fear on the part of the Progressive Conservative Party. It is phony Canadianization because it leaves most of our energy industry in private hands; Canadian private hands instead of American private hands. Therefore, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said earlier, we are merely exchanging Arthur Mellon for Robert Blair, Jack Gallagher and Conrad Black. It is phony because even where it does involve public ownership, it does not depart from the prevailing energy model. This is what I primarily want to speak about tonight. All that the National Energy Program does, to the extent that it does anything, is to change the ownership of the energy industry in Canada without changing the nature of the energy industry. The National Energy Program is still part and parcel of the old and increasingly destructive and futile policy of finding everything in sight, selling everything in sight and using everything in sight as fast as we can, with no care for tomorrow.

The National Energy Program does not face up to the fact that we need to see changes in our energy policies which go far beyond the debate which rages about private versus public ownership of the energy industry. Indeed, both sides of the argument as caricatured by the Liberals and the Conservatives show that this is a pathetic debate. The Liberals are realizing, far too late in the game, that they have sold the shop, that they have sold out the country. And now they might just be buying the whole thing back, to the extent that they are buying it back, and, as I have already said, that can be argued, when it could also be argued that it is worthless and that in a very short period of time the very companies that they want to replace will be moving on to other areas of concern. They will be trying to get control of other energy scenarios and thus, in a very few short years, they will be only too glad to give over to the Liberal Party their present interests.

Tonight I want to speak about the kind of energy policy that we could have if we had more, yet different, government planning than we are now offered by the Liberal Party of Canada. Our view of the value of public ownership is founded in our commitment to give ordinary Canadians more say in the kind of energy choices which will dictate the quality of their lives and of their children's lives in the future. In this respect, I would just like to make a comment about what we mean when we say that we want to give Canadians more control and participation in their energy industry.

The more I listen to my Progressive Conservative colleagues, the more it becomes clear to me that when they are speaking of more control and participation by Canadians in the oil industry, they mean that very small percentage of people in this country who invest in the energy industry and who buy stocks and that sort of thing. That does not apply to most of the people in my riding. When I speak about giving them more say in the energy future of this country, I am not speaking about creating some kind of tax policy which will permit them to buy what few stocks they can afford in some private Canadian-owned oil company. Big deal! It is absolutely meaningless to most of the people in my riding. They want to have a say in public policy. They do not want to have a few stocks shoved away in a closet somewhere. That is what we mean when we speak about giving ordinary Canadians more say, more participation and more control over the energy policy in this country.

As I said before, our view of the value of public ownership is founded in our commitment to give Canadians more say in the kind of energy choices which will dictate our future. The debate between the Liberals and the Conservatives is really only a debate over which set of bureaucrats will arrogantly and blindly impose their will on ordinary Canadians out of this energy model now before us. I mean, that is what is really going on here. We are not discussing anti-bureaucrats and bureaucrats. We are considering which set of bureaucrats will run the energy future of this country. That is what we are hearing when we listen to the debate between the Liberals and the Conservatives. What would the Conservatives do? They would leave the many, "i.e." Canadians in the hands of a few multinational corporations which have already demonstrated, to anyone with half a brain, that they do not have the public interest at heart. That is the set of bureaucrats which the Conservatives would like to see running the energy industry in this country. The Liberals would put the many in the hands of a few Petro-Canada bureaucrats, or ministerial flunkeys, who would have no more interest than Shell or Imperial Oil in involving ordinary Canadians in the formation of a sound and sustainable energy policy. That is the debate which rages on between the Liberals and Conservatives.

We do not see public ownership as the creation of a large monolithic government bureaucracy which is insensitive to people, insensitive to the environment and insensitive to the future. That is what public ownership means under a Liberal government. These Liberals have done more to give public ownership a bad name than anyone I could possibly think of on this side of the Atlantic. It is no wonder that we have a great deal of anxiety about public ownership when we take a look at what has happened with the AECL, with the secrecy, arrogance and insensitivity shown toward almost anything one could ever imagine. However, let not the Liberals be the example of what is possible—

Mr. Evans: NDP hacks!

Mr. Blaikie: —when Canadians put their minds to having a publicly-owned energy industry in this country.

Mr. Evans: Tell us how you would run it?

Mr. Blaikie: When we talk about public ownership, we are talking about a general name for an approach to our energy future which would take control of our energy future out of the hands of the powerful few, whether it be the powerful few in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, or whether it be the powerful few in Shell or in Imperial Oil, and distribute that control and design over our energy future in a pluralistic coalition of accountable Crown corporations. The one thing we must do if we want to make public ownership a worthy goal in this country is to make Crown corporations more accountable to Parliament and more accountable to people.

Mr. Evans: How?

Mr. Blaikie: I say that we should renationalize the CNR and many other Crown corporations and make them act as they were intended to act. We see public ownership as a coalition of accountable Crown corporations, co-operative enterprises, neighbourhood conservation initiatives and programs, decentralized solar and other soft energy projects, all of which should be guided by certain perspectives, some of which I hope to outline tonight.

Energy sources on which societies have become dependent are being used up. It is as clear as that. In my view, the most obvious indicator of the poverty of the debate concerning energy in this country is that we can actually speak about an oil glut as if this were some kind of reality that we must address. In the long run, there is and can be no oil glut. We are referring to a finite source of energy. When we are talking about a finite source of energy, particularly when we are talking about it within the framework of an economic system that demands infinite expansion as one of its internal dynamics, to talk about an oil glut is just so much mirage, so much illusion. Yet we continue to allow those kinds of mirages to trick us when we are talking about energy policy in this country.

If we are to respond in something more than just a technical way to this reality, we must begin to talk about the ethics of energy use and not just the economics. When we begin to do this in earnest and not just be the prisoners of certain economic arguments, we will find that the two perspectives, the ethical and the economic, are not contradictory but are rather complementary in the long run. They seem to be contradictory in some short-term considerations, but surely if we are here to be responsible, we are here to consider what is the right thing to do in the long run.

Priority in energy use should be given to the satisfaction of basic human needs such as food, shelter, health, clean air and water. Human dignity also demands the widest possible participation in policy decisions which seek to meet these requirements. We must consider not just the consumers of the present but the consumers of the future who are voiceless in this debate because they do not yet exist. Their interests ought to be represented more often than they are.

The other voiceless are fellow creatures, the animals, the birds, the fish, creation in general. In this respect, I would like to suggest some guidelines for an energy policy. The first thing we must say about any energy policy is that it must be safe. It must be protective of the human and natural environment and not threatening irreversible global damage. It must be appropriate to human nature, not requiring infallibility or error-free performance from humans or machines.

It must be flexible, that is to say capable of timely change, even reversibility, during development and use in order to adapt to unpredictable events such as unexpected health hazards. It must be non-destructive of the other necessities of life, for instance not taking good agricultural land out of production or polluting necessary water supplies. It must be resource saving, using renewable energy resources rather than non-renewable resources, for instance water power rather than oil. It must be resilient, capable of absorbing shocks, for instance oil embargoes or severe winters without causing major social disruptions. It must be fair, capable of having its benefits and costs allocated fairly to all, including future generations, for instance, not requiring one group to suffer genetic damage in order that another group may have electricity. It must be comprehensible, capable of being understood, with information freely available, so that those citizens who wish can participate responsibly in energy decisions. It must be non-violent, difficult to use directly or indirectly as a weapon, for instance, not able to be easily made into a nuclear bomb. It must be employment producing, not replacing jobs with energy-intensive machinery, especially in areas of high unemployment. It must be pluralistic, assuring a diversity of options, cultures, lifestyles and opportunities, and encouraging a scale that permits choice and control by the users, by Canadians. It must be appropriate, most nearly matched to the society to be served by any particular energy format, for instance, small scale and local where the need is mainly in small communities, and producing the kind of energy most nearly matched to the work to be done, for instance, electricity for telecommunications and solar for hot water. Finally, it must be aesthetic, pleasing to the senses and enjoyable to work with.

These are the kinds of guidelines we must look at. We must support efforts to conserve energy and to use it more efficiently. Not using energy unnecessarily is the safest and cheapest energy resource that we have. Continued education about the necessity for and practical ways of saving energy is needed. Laws and regulations deterring conservation and recycling of materials should be changed.

We must support publicly-funded energy-conserving projects designed in a way that will provide new skills and jobs for the unemployed. Such projects include winterization and insulation of homes, small scale appropriate energy technologies and public transportation, something promised by the Liberals in every election campaign as far back as we can think of, but never delivered.

We must support programs to limit fuel consumption that do not rely primarily on raising prices, which place an intolerable burden on the poor, the elderly and those on fixed incomes. We must support increased government research and development funding, subsidies and other incentives to expand the practical application of appropriate energy technologies based on energy renewable resources, such as solar energy, including wind and water.

We need to support a national energy policy which in the long run does not rely on long-term large increases in the burning of coal, particularly if it is to continue to be burned by companies that refuse to use existing technologies to scrub their emissions. Besides increased health and safety risks to workers and the general public from using more coal, extensive burning of fossil fuels may cause irreversible damage to the world's atmosphere, changing weather patterns and so threatening food production and the continued habitability of large areas of the earth.

However, we realize that some increase in coal use over the short term will be necessary in order to avoid increased use of nuclear energy and economic dislocation caused by severe energy shortages. Coal can be used as a transitional fuel until such time as we are able to bring onstream more of the soft energy options in a more comprehensive way.

Finally, we must support a national energy policy which will not need to utilize nuclear fission. Secure handing of nuclear wastes over thousands of generations and the safe operation of nuclear plants require that humans and machines operate without error. This is simply impossible over the long-run and is one of the reasons why we must abandon this option. Human beings are not infallible. They will make mistakes, and machines will fail. The result may be irreversible damage to the environment or to the human genetic pool.

These are some of the general guidelines which should be seriously looked at by the government. It should see if it could break out of the energy model which has prevailed in this country over so many decades. If it is nothing else, the National Energy Program is a colossal failure of the imagination. We need to think critically about the ways in which we have regarded energy use, consumption and production. The National Energy Program simply does not do that. It commits us to drilling more holes in the Arctic, ceaselessly and endlessly, trying to find the last drop of oil so that we can bring it to the consumer before the next election campaign. This kind of short-term policy will, in the long run, leave the whole country and indeed the whole globe bankrupt.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT. (B) MEASURES TO ASSIST DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, before I address myself to the question I put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) on April 6, 1982, may I compliment the member from Manitoba who represents the New Democratic Party for so graphically and so forcefully demonstrating in this House why New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland do not have any New Democratic Party members in their caucus. He displayed, for everybody to see and hear, his opposition to coal development, his opposition to offshore drilling, his opposition to the Arctic Pilot Project and his opposition to Fundy tidal power. I hope the people of the maritimes and Newfoundland will hear about this and act accordingly when they are cold and freezing and in the dark. I will make sure that they will get the message.

On April 6, 1982, I questioned the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the status of the development projects in the submarine lands off the Atlantic coast—a coast that, as I have already said, is free of New Democratic members and that will remain so for the rest of this century, I am sure, after that speech.

I asked the minister about the rumour of a delay in implementing the Shell Resources Exploration Project, which involves an expenditure of $200 million and the utilization of the SEDCO 709 oil-drilling rig. For the information again of members of the New Democratic Party, the SEDCO 709 was built in the Halifax shipyards at a cost of $74 million in 1975 and provided many man-years of employment, on that project and on the offshore rigs that followed or preceded SEDCO 709.

We had a marine development in Nova Scotia and in the maritimes before we embarked upon this Canadianization program involved in the National Energy Program.

The minister, when he responded to my concerned inquiry about the delay in offshore development projects, simply said that I was off base or offshore. That was the totality of his explanation. In this House we are used to the flippancy and the lack of concern of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when it comes to the discussion of energy projects in the Atlantic area. What hurt most was the fact that I was correct about the delay. A few days later an officer of Shell Resources announced publicly that there indeed was a delay in the implementation of Shell's offshore development program and that in fact it would be another four months before the SEDCO 709 arrived on the east coast, and that if there were no improvements in Shell's negotiations with the federal government, it was in danger of cancellation altogether.

Unfortunately, that is not the only offshore program which is being delayed or cancelled. British Petroleum earlier announced that they were reviewing the situation. They have cancelled their 1982 program for offshore drilling.

Other petroleum companies who have received permits from the federal government and who are considering the possibilities of offshore development and exploration are now reviewing their plans. The situation at present is one of turmoil in relation to offshore development programs. No one knows whether the programs that were planned for 1982 and subsequent years will be implemented. The reason is not only the National Energy Program but the attitude of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and of the officers of his department towards private entrepreneurs who want to get into the Atlantic offshore to discover and develop our resources there. Unless we get a change in the attitude on the part of the minister and his department, offshore development is in jeopardy. Those development prospects are the hope of Nova Scotia and other Atlantic provinces for the future.

You cannot talk about the Atlantic provinces, Mr. Speaker, without reminding yourself of the drastic unemployment situation that exists there. There are approximately 1.2 million persons unemployed in Canada. A great proportion of those are in the Atlantic area. There are at least 138,000 persons unemployed in Atlantic Canada. Newfoundland has an unemployment rate of 14 per cent, Nova Scotia has an unemployment rate of 12 per cent, compared with the national rate of 9 per cent. We have to consider the plight of those unemployed persons. We have to take advantage of every opportunity that presents itself to launch job-creation programs. The best opportunity for job creation in Atlantic Canada, particularly in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, is offshore resource development.

• (2205)

Let us look very briefly at what Shell Resources planned for the offshore with its expenditure of $200 million. Shell was going to launch a deep-water drilling program approximately 200 kilometres south of Halifax and 65 kilometres from Sable Island at the point where the Scotian Shelf dips into the deep water. This would have been a first, as I understand it, in east-coast exploration. There would have been at least 60 persons employed directly on the SEDCO 709. There would have been additional service vessels employing a number of people in addition to the onshore establishment. This would have involved storage and supply, servicing of the oil rig and a great many other technical services associated with offshore exploration. All of that is lost in this delay and is in danger of cancellation.

I want to record the important point in this House. We on the Atlantic coast had hoped to have offshore developments take place in the future, but now we find that these developments are being jeopardized by federal policies. Unless those policies change and unless we can prevail upon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his officers to change their attitudes, there is a danger that the offshore development will not go forward.

I ask every person in this House on either side, and all those persons in Nova Scotia and elsewhere in Atlantic Canada, to exert pressure on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to change his policy, to stop delaying and hindering development, and to encourage it and to work with those who want to develop the offshore.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the federal government is very proud of the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement of March 2, as it guarantees to the people of Nova Scotia greater revenues, increased employment opportunities, the promotion of economic development and environmental protection. At the time of the signing of this agreement the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) commented that Nova Scotians would be the first to benefit from offshore development. The generous revenue-sharing system established under this accord would give the government of Nova Scotia potential access to revenues equal to, and in fact somewhat above, the national average accruing to provincial governments. With this agreement, exploration and development can move ahead under a unified management regime that is supported by both levels of government, and the resulting increased level of activity will have an important positive effect on the economy regionally, provincially and nationally.

I might mention one very important aspect of the agreement, and that is that it will allow energy reserves to be identified and flow to Nova Scotian consumers within the decade, thereby reducing the province's reliance on imported oil.

With reference to the hon. member's question concerning the refusal of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to approve inter-company agreements and proposals, I would like to point out that under the new Canada Oil and Gas Act all companies are required to renegotiate their federal exploration permits within six months to a year. One reason for delay in these proceedings is that some companies have not yet come to appreciate the Canada benefits requirement of the new legislation as set out in Section 76:

> Before authorizing any work or activity under paragraph (1)(b), the Minister shall require the submission of a plan satisfactory to the Minister for the employment of Canadians and for providing Canadian manufacturers, consultants, contractors and service companies with a full and fair opportunity to participate on a competitive basis in the supply of goods and services used in that work or activity.

Some companies have not yet submitted appropriate documentation in this respect, and the federal government must receive such documentation before approval can be given.

In view of the concern expressed on April 6 by the hon. member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) about the importance of job creation in the Atlantic provinces, I am sure he and all hon. members will recognize the necessity of ensuring that all oil companies meet the requirements of the Canada Oil and Gas Act in the matter of Canadian benefits.

It is worthy of note that the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is not only against coal development in Atlantic Canada but, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), he is also against the production of heavy water in Cape Breton. I want the record to show that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—PLIGHT OF NICARAGUAN REFUGEES IN HONDURAS. (B) REQUEST FOR HUMAN RIGHTS INVESTIGATION

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, here we are in 1982, sitting late at night in the House of Commons of Canada thinking of human rights. Do they really matter? Do human rights really matter at this time when our country faces economic recession, inflation and high interest rates? How does this stand in our priorities? Does anyone really care? I hope someone still cares about these kinds of issues because they have a growing significance. As nations of the world become more nationalistic and more and more isolationist, there are fewer democracies and more repressive regimes on both left and right, and suddenly our freedom is challenged again as earlier generations saw it challenged.

In the generation of this parliament we have seen the genocide of Kampuchea when three million out of seven million people were slaughtered in the name of a better way of life. That seems so far away—30 hours from here by plane. As things occur closer to home they bring a new kind of reality. That is why we find severe human rights abuses closer to Ottawa than is Vancouver. Suddenly we have a new imperative and a new concern as the world shrinks and moves tighter and tighter around us.

Tonight I want to speak about one of those acts of repression that I witnessed personally. I saw an aboriginal group, older than any civilization in North America, fleeing from Nicaragua. I almost find it hard to believe that I am standing here speaking of the abuses I witnessed—and I did witness them—having to bring them to the attention of the House. Who knows of these Kampuchean and Miskito abuses? In a free democracy such as ours, with its humanitarian values and a respect for the sanctity of life, can we leave this in a vacuum? Can we isolate ourselves within "fortress Canada" and be indifferent to the inhumanity that exists beyond our borders?

During the Czechoslovakian crisis of 1938 the British Prime Minister, Neville Chamberlain, stated how horrible it was that Britain was trying on gas masks and preparing to go to war to defend a people in a far away land of which they knew nothing. He was quickly shown why Britain should have been prepared to fight for Czechoslovakia, for soon their problem was his problem and the problem of the world. Our shrinking world is only one reason for concern about people in the not so far away lands about which we know relatively little.

There is another, more important reason, and that is the basic ethic that this House of Commons stands for—that we are in fact our brother's keeper. When our brother is being persecuted we have an obligation to stand up and say that we care, and to demonstrate that we do, by real and tangible means.

As John Donne said in 1624:

No man is an island, entire unto himself;
Every man is a piece of a continent, a part of the main.
If a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less . . .
Any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind;
And therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee

Having heard the testimony of the Miskito people of Nicaragua, it is imperative that I should bring to this House of Commons the abuses that have been brought to my attention and to the attention of the representatives of the government, and call upon the Government of Canada to initiate an investigation at the international and at the Canadian personal level.

On March 31, 1982, I visited a refugee camp at Mocaron, Honduras. Mocaron is located in a mountainous jungle area in the vicinity of the Rio Coco in northeastern Honduras. Isolated within their highlands, aboriginals known as Miskitos have to some degree retained their cultural distinctiveness in a country that is primarily Spanish in language and culture. The refugee camp currently holds 7,200 Miskitos refugees, and the number growing at a rate of at least 150 people per day. The Honduran government, World Relief, Save the Children and U.S. Peace Corps volunteers, assisted by the United Nations, are attempting to alleviate subsistence level, sub-human conditions in the camp.

Miskito refugees allege that they are victims of gross human rights violations by agents of the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. They claim that 33 separate villages have been completely destroyed and homes and churches were burned to the ground; that their crops were burned, animals destroyed and many Miskito people, including the very old and young, the weak and the sick, have been killed. Some observers claim that people were thrown alive into wells; that people had their hands tied behind their backs and thrown into the river. Some were buried alive up to their necks.

Observers have specifically asked for investigation of an incident at Leimus on December 23, or December 24, 1981, where, in the presence of many witnesses, 15 people were lined up in a boat, shot and thrown into the river. A witness who escaped and arrived at Mocaron on March 29, 1982, claims that over 10,000 Miskito aboriginals are currently confined in a camp at Risco de Oro, the location of which I have given to the government, along with the names of witnesses who can be contacted for personal investigation.

It is claimed that in this particular concentration camp at Risco De Oro families are separated into groups of men, women and children and forced to labour in gold mines and on roadways. There are barbed wire enclosures with mines around the gate. There is physical and mental harassment by soldiers, with one plate of food per family, regardless of its size. Many innocent people who have not been charged or found guilty of any crime are being held against their will, and women are being raped by soldiers.

I could go on and talk about Nicaraguan experiments with a socialist democracy, because I do have concerns about what must be happening to cause these people to flee to sub-human conditions in another country. The Nicaraguan government gives me assurances; they say this cannot be happening. That does not seem to add up, Mr. Speaker. If it cannot be happening, why are they leaving, and leaving at an accelerating rate? Obviously they are fleeing repression, like the people of El Salvador, Guatemala and other countries throughout the entire region.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote Jose Esteban Gonzalez, the head of the Nicaraguan Committee for Human Rights, who wrote recently in the Washington Post:

We should stop romanticizing a revolutionary leadership that has turned against the democratic promises of the revolution.

He stated that the human rights record of the Sandinistas is more repressive than that under the deplorable Somoza régime, citing the number of political prisoners and the bloody repression of the Miskito Indians. He also says:

An international campaign for Nicaraguan human rights could have a very significant impact in Nicaragua and elsewhere.

I call on the government tonight to launch an investigation, not to just say it cannot become involved. We must in fact become involved; let us see whether the government's commitment is rhetoric, or whether it will carry it through. I demand, Mr. Speaker, in the name of the freedom and dignity of individuals, and the Charter of Human Rights of the United Nations, that Canada in fact act. To do anything else would not be to play a full role in the community of mankind.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the violations of human rights of the Miskito Indians in Nicaragua, and we have expressed our concern. We have indicated to Nicaragua that our continued aid to that country will be conditional in large part on the proper treatment of the Miskito Indians. Mr. Massé, the president of CIDA, will be there this week and will reconvey our concern. We have no right to go into another country and conduct an investigation, but we are party to many different international groups and agencies which are monitoring the situation.

Apart from what is happening in Nicaragua, many of the Miskito Indians have been forced over the border and into Honduras. The United Nations High Commission for Refugees is the agency mandated to look after refugees. It recently sent a mission to Honduras which is looking into the facilities available to the Miskito Indians. We support that mission. Mr. Massé will also be visiting Honduras to look at the camps. This particular agency is supported financially by Canada.

In 1981, as well as paying our regular dues, we have an additional $500,000, the third highest in the world after the U.S.A. and Sweden. We will continue to monitor the Miskito Indian problem and we will continue to press our concerns.

• (2220)

In closing, I find it passing strange that the hon. member is so concerned about violations in other countries, yet was so unprepared to entrench the very things he speaks about in his own charter and Constitution.

Mr. Wenman: I am protected by common law here.

Mr. Irwin: Protection from harsh and unjust imprisonment, the provision of juries and due process could not be entrenched, in large part, because the hon. member's party did not want them entrenched. That is the situation. While he says, look closer to Canada, as we go from Kampuchea to Nicaragua, I would hope that he looks to Canada and is as concerned about entrenching the rights of the Jehovah's Witnesses—

Mr. Wenman: Aboriginal rights and Indian rights, where are they in the charter? They were taken out.

Mr. Irwin: —unions in Nova Scotia, the Japanese Canadians who were incarcerated, but would have been protected had his party stood up and been counted in his own country instead of looking at a country about which very few Canadians know. They know about their own country. They know that his party did not stand up when the bell tolled for human rights in Canada.

ENERGY—INQUIRY WHETHER REPRESENTATIONS WILL BE MADE TO QUEBEC TO REDUCE IMPACT OF GASOLINE RETAILERS' STRIKE

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on April 5, I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) about the gasoline retailers' strike in Quebec and the resulting inconvenience to highway users from the Maritimes driving to Quebec and points west. In referring to the situation, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources pointed out that the tax on gas in Quebec was probably the cause of the mass protest actions to which Quebecers and inhabitants of neighbouring provinces were exposed, to varying extents.

On April 7, Le Madawaska, an excellent weekly which is printed in my riding, published a detailed story with a number of examples of the inconvenience experienced by travellers from New Brunswick and elsewhere in the Maritimes who wanted to go to or get back from Montreal or Quebec City.

The article said, and I quote:

> —hundreds of travellers between Montreal and New Brunswick are stuck or out of gas . . . one hundred vehicles have slowed down traffic on the Trans-Canada Highway.

The vehicles referred to were those used by gasoline retailers, who, to all intents and purposes, were blocking the Trans-Canada Highway. To quote the paper once again:

> —at Lake Baker-Les Étroits on Saturday, protesting retailers seized jerricans of gas from the trunks of cars, promising to return them as soon as the dispute was settled.

The paper goes on to say, and I quote:

> We note that the roadblock set up by the protesting retailers was illegal and was lifted following action by the Quebec Provincial Police.

Of course I understand why Quebecers are protesting as much as they can against increases in the tax on gas which are really enormous compared to the price of gas in neighbouring provinces. I certainly cannot blame the gas retailers, but I want to use this example, Mr. Speaker, to point out once again the vulnerability of the concept of free movement of citizens, goods and services in this country. Perhaps I may remind the House that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms—I have a copy here—says, and I quote:

> 6. (1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada. (2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right
> (a) to move to and take up residence in any province;

That is the clause that I want to discuss tonight. We cannot and we must not condone either private or government action aimed at preventing the free movement of Canadians within Canada's borders. This is not the first time there have been unfortunate incidents involving New Brunswick and Quebec.

I still remember the case of students from New Brunswick who after several years of practical training in Quebec were turned down for jobs in Quebec because their home address was in New Brunswick. Well, this is also against the principle defined by the Charter of Rights, since Section 6(3) prescribes, and I quote:

> The rights specified in subsection (2) are subject to
> (a) any laws or practices of general application in force in a province other than those that discriminate among persons primarily on the basis of province of present or previous residence;

Of course, the events I just described occurred before the proclamation of the Charter of Rights, but the fact remains that there is a rather disturbing tendency among some provincial governments and more specifically, the government of Quebec, which is taking rather questionable action in wanting to restrict the basic and fundamental rights of Canadians because they are not from Quebec, they are not living in Quebec, and are not Quebecers. This kind of discrimination I find more than disturbing. I see it as a danger to the unity of this country. I realize that Quebecers have a government that wants to divide the country, not to unite it, but it turns out that when measures of this kind are imposed on citizens of New Brunswick, they are usually francophones, since they happen to live in the areas bordering on Quebec.

Quebecers, and especially the Parti Québécois, cannot come to New Brunswick to preach a so-called independence for the Acadians if they also stop them at the border and prevent them from finding jobs in Quebec and use other tricks to prevent the people of New Brunswick, whether francophone or anglophone, to bid for service contracts in Quebec, while New Brunswick gladly opens its doors to Quebecers who want to do business or live in our province. Mr. Speaker, this last example of the gas retailers' strike in Quebec shows how fragile our basic rights and freedoms are and how the governments must agree to take every action required to guarantee that these rights are applied equitably. This is what I expect as a Canadian, on my own behalf and on behalf of my fellow citizens.

• (2225)

[English]

Mr. David Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the issue raised by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) is not only important to the government but, as he alluded, it is also important to the people of New Brunswick.

Since the serious matter of the gasoline retailers' strike in Quebec was raised, the strike has been settled and all gasoline service stations are now in operation. However, this strike was a matter of great inconvenience to the public, inasmuch as it extended throughout the period from April 5 to April 8 and affected a very large percentage of retail outlets in the province of Quebec. It was also beginning to impact on gasoline supplies to the public in the neighbouring province of New Brunswick. When the transportation of people and merchandise is impeded, it does not take very long to have a major impact on the economy of a province, and such effects were being felt in Quebec before the strike was terminated.

• (2230)

As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) noted in the House on April 5, the best way for the Quebec government to have settled this matter would have been to reduce the excessively high tax on gasoline levied by the Quebec government. This ad valorum tax was doubled to 40 per cent on November 18, 1981. As a result, Quebec residents now pay 13 cents per litre on regular leaded gasoline compared with 6.3 cents in Ontario. Even Prince Edward Island, which has the second highest provincial gasoline tax, is far below the Quebec level, at 8.3 cents.

It is unfortunate that this issue had to be resolved through a price increase to consumers rather than a reduction in the Quebec government tax. During the past few days retail gasoline prices have risen by as much as 4 cents per litre in Quebec, with prices now well above those of both P.E.I. and Newfoundland, and, of course, higher than any other province.

Finally, I would like to note that the federal government has no direct jurisdiction over the retailing of gasoline. This is a provincial government responsibility. The number of retail outlets is controlled by licensing authority within a province, and a province may set retail prices.

The federal government is continuing to monitor petroleum marketing in all provinces to ensure the free movement of individuals and goods across the country, but, in the type of marketing situation that developed in Quebec earlier this month, this is a direct responsibility at the provincial level.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 10.33 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, one of the Prime Minister's former finance ministers, Mr. John Turner, was recently quoted as saying that "the Prime Minister, when conflict arose, frequently did not support his minister of finance or president of treasury on expenditure restraint."

In view of the fact that the sixfold increase in government spending since 1968 has been frequently cited as a prime cause of inflation and that the inflation rate has in fact increased from four per cent in 1968, when the Prime Minister took office, to a staggering 12.5 per cent now, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Liberal caucus wrestle the Prime Minister from office rather than subject Canada to his further pathetic economic efforts as well as to his obviously poor choice of Finance Minister.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister today celebrates his 14th anniversary in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I notice he is the only one wearing a rose. Normally everyone else over there wears one on such an anniversary. He can celebrate, but the rest of Canada cannot. Since his arrival on the scene we have seen the unemployment rate rise from 4.5 per cent to 9.2 per cent and, if we include the hidden unemployed, that rate is actually 13 per cent. Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has been quoted as saying that he does not intend to retire while the economy is ailing, and he has said that "it certainly wasn't the government's intention to create unemployment". If in fact he believes that, "the most dangerous thing for the social fabric of a country is when there are a lot of people out of work", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Prime Minister rightfully take the credit for our economic situation and unemployment rate and tender his resignation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, when the Prime Minister took office in 1968, the home mortgage rate was a mere 9.1 per cent. After 14 years of economic mismanagement under his leadership, the mortgage rate is now more than twice as high, 18.5 per cent. Last summer the rate skyrocketed to well over 20 per cent, the highest in Canadian economic history. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House condemn the Prime Minister for embracing policies that have forced many Canadians either to abandon their homes or their dream of ever owning a home.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO PRIME MINISTER ON FOURTEENTH ANNIVERSARY IN OFFICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I would like to draw the attention of all members of this House and of all Canadians to the fact that today is the fourteenth anniversary of the swearing-in of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as Prime Minister of Canada—

S.O. 43

And whereas Canada is particularly fortunate to have enjoyed the leadership—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lefebvre: —abilities of this world statesman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Parent):

That this House offer its congratulations to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and wish him many years of continued service to his country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—CALL FOR EXPANSION OF REMOVAL PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, if all the homes that had urea-formaldehyde insulation in them were located in the same area, we would call it a disaster area and have some truly adequate aid for the victims of the disaster, but because UFFI victims are spread at random across the country they have been unable to get the attention they deserve. Nevertheless, this is an environmental problem which is easy compared to others. We have identifiable victims and identifiable sources of pollution. If the government does not have the moral will to solve this problem, other more complicated problems are hopeless indeed. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House instruct the government to solve this pressing problem for so many Canadian home owners by massively expanding its UFFI removal program to include all UFFI infected homes, and in so doing also create thousands of worth-while and meaningful jobs for the many unemployed who would be able to do this kind of work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in 1968 when the Prime Minister took office the federal budgetary deficit was half a billion dollars per annum; today it is $10.5 billion per annum, a 2,000 per cent increase. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

• (1410)

That the Prime Minister bow his head in shame and apologize to the Canadian public for his unprecedented 14-years' cruel mismanagement of their affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CALL FOR RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, instead of today celebrating 14 years of the Prime Minister's leadership of the Liberal Party, the government should declare a state of mourning for the economic devastation and havoc wreaked by it on the Canadian economy. While small businesses are driven into bankruptcy, workers by the hundreds of thousands are destitute, and home makers are again forced to tighten their belts, this government has escalated its annual spending spree from $12 billion 14 years ago to an unprecedented $75 billion today. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That a breath of fresh air be allowed to permeate these hallowed halls, described by one scribe as "the hot air factory", by Prime Minister Trudeau and his entire cabinet resigning en masse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

FARMERS AFFECTED BY COLLAPSE OF ECON CONSULTING LTD.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, whereas Econ Consulting Limited, a private grain dealer licensed by the Canadian Grain Commission, collapsed recently owing 300 prairie farmers some $4 million; whereas this firm was in violation of the Canada Grain Act by having posted a bond of only $700,000, and by never having filed an audited annual statement with the Commission; and whereas some 30 farmers will have to declare immediate bankruptcy if no federal assistance is forthcoming, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That the Minister of Agriculture commit himself to provide the desperately needed assistance to these farmers, and to take the appropriate action against the principals of Econ Consulting Limited to recover this outlay; and that he establish a commission to investigate all aspects of the Econ collapse, especially the role of the Canadian Grain Commission in policing the statutes and regulations of the Canada Grain Act.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY CONVENTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas recent press reports have indicated that the forthcoming Tory convention in Toronto will be discussing neither the leadership of their party, nor the taking of any clear-cut policy initiatives—

Mr. Nielsen: We want to discuss the Newfoundland election.

Mr. Simmons: —and whereas such obvious ambivalence indicates that members of the Conservative Party cannot decide whether to be blue Tories who want to cut, cut, cut, or red Tories who want to spend, spend, spend—

Mr. Nielsen: Better than a yellow Grit.

Mr. Simmons: —I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Evans):

That copies of the Speech from the Throne be distributed to all Tory members of the House to provide them with some clear-cut and definitive policy options for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, given the fact that on April 20, 1968, the consumer price index was running at a 4.2 per cent rate of inflation, and that a dollar would then have bought you what it costs $2.83 to buy today, or, to put it another way, the April 1968 dollar is now in 1982 worth 35 cents, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the Prime Minister of Canada, who says he does not intend to resign as long as the economy is in bad shape, consider the other possibility—that the best way to bring down consumer prices is to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS TAXES IMPOSED ON MEDICINE HAT, ALTA.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and in view of the very unfair, illegal and increasing natural gas taxes presently being paid under protest by the City of Medicine Hat, and in view of the Medicine Hat citizens' petition tabled yesterday in this House with 12,689 signatures protesting this punitive taxation under the National Energy Program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Minister of Finance reassess the propriety of these taxes and allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible date.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RECRUITMENT OF SKILLED WORKERS ABROAD

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who I see is behind the curtains. I wonder if he might take his seat.

An hon. Member: He is behind the eight ball, too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Statistics Canada confirmed what most Canadians were already tragically aware of, that the unemployment picture is worse than the government has been announcing. Taking into account the 410,000 hidden unemployed, the unemployment rate stands now at 13 per cent. When the Prime Minister took office 14 years ago, the unemployment rate was 4.5 per cent. The minister announced that he plans to import 20,000 to 25,000 skilled workers to meet a perceived demand. Can the minister tell this House whether he intends to adjust the 20,000 to 25,000 figure considering those figures represent estimates given to him last July based on megaprojects proceeding, which have not; a 7 per cent unemployment rate, which is completely false, and do not take into account the hundreds of thousands of unemployed skilled and unskilled Canadian workers?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has previously asked this question. In fact he asked it two weeks ago during a hearing of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. I will take the time to repeat the answer we gave to him at that time. We said that the number of skilled workers was determined after fairly extensive consultations across Canada with employers, unions, and provincial governments. We tabled those numbers in the House, and we are constantly adjusting them.

I pointed out to the hon. member at that time, and I suppose I should repeat what I said, that we already adjusted the figures substantially last December when we put a major restraint on skilled workers coming into Canada to the mining industry, the construction industry and in 24 categories of the manufacturing industry. A major adjustment has, therefore, already been made. We will continue to monitor the situation as part of our over-all employment strategy. That is the answer we gave to the hon. member at that time. The situation has now changed, which shows we are making sure that our immigration policies are in complete accord with the employment picture in Canada.

REQUEST FOR PROGRAMS TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the minister may have restricted entry in one area but he has increased entry in others. The numbers have stayed the same, and that is sweet comfort for those people in skilled categories who are unemployed today. The minister has been advocating, all across the country, an industrial training program as a panacea to cure all. If the minister took the time to visit his riding and left his little comfortable nest here in Ottawa like most of us do—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he must ask a question.

Mr. Lalonde: He does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, if the minister realized the tragedy that is going on in the country then he might be able to be a little more sympathetic to what is going on in Canada. When will the minister openly join those Liberals who are calling for the Prime Minister's resignation so at least we can give Canadians some hope? When will the minister introduce programs to relieve unemployment?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, all members on this side of the House spend a lot of time in their ridings talking to many Canadians. We are very sympathetic to the situation of those who are unemployed. We are trying to respond in a number of ways and it is for that reason that we have substantially improved and increased the training programs to a total of well over $1 billion this year.

We have established a number of programs. With respect to the work-sharing program, we have signed over 700 agreements in the last three months. This means that we have been able to avert 18,000 lay-offs. We have a number of job creation measures that are providing direct employment to over 100,000 Canadians. It seems to me that shows that we do care. Rather than simply engaging in the flamboyant rhetoric of the hon. member, who is becoming a professional crepe hanger trying to make the worst out of the situation, we are trying to do the best we can for the situation with the resources we have to help those people, instead of trying to inflame the situation as the hon. member is obviously trying to do in this question period.

TRAINING PROGRAMS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, averting 15,000 lay-offs is sweet comfort to the 1,700,000 unemployed. The minister again talks about the training programs initiated, yet over half of the unemployed are under the age of 24. How many young unemployed Canadians are involved in those training programs the minister likes to brag about all the time?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it comes as some surprise to me that the Conservative Party is so criticizing of training. As far as most Canadians are concerned, young and old, the ability to get new skills and to adjust to the changing work environment is perhaps the most important asset they can acquire. The fact of the matter is that close to 48 per cent of the people enrolled in our training programs, that is 250,000 Canadians, are under the age of 24.

EMPLOYMENT

INQUIRY WHETHER AGREEMENT WILL BE MADE BETWEEN PRATT & WHITNEY, MONTREAL, AND UNIONS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister is aware of the substantial and generous government contributions and subsidies received by Pratt & Whitney in Montreal. Despite these subsidies, the company has been obliged to lay off over 1,500 employees, and although the minister has set up a new work-sharing program and the unions seem to be very interested, there is still no agreement with the company on this matter. Since the government, in subsidizing this company, has a certain responsibility, would the minister, for the sake of all the employees involved, be prepared to send one of his officials to make a special effort to conclude an agreement between the company and the unions, and thus prevent the loss of thousands of jobs?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the discussions between the management of Pratt & Whitney, the union officials and the government have been ongoing now for several weeks. The whole essence of the work-sharing program is based upon the voluntary co-operation of the three major partners. We cannot compel either management or the union to come into an agreement; it must be based upon their willingness to come into that agreement.

We have signed a work-sharing arrangement with the office workers of Pratt & Whitney. It is really up to the union and management to overcome their own jurisdictional disputes as to who is included in the voting arrangements in order for the work-sharing to apply to the general work force. We are providing a member of our manpower consultative services, a separate division of my department, to try to bring that agreement about. We will continue to work with them at any time, but it is based upon mutual co-operation between the three partners. We would ask the hon. member to use his good offices to help that agreement come about. It would be a very important support and assistance for the workers there, if they could get the work-sharing agreement signed.

[Translation]

PRATT & WHITNEY—REQUEST THAT MEASURES BE TAKEN TO MEET WISHES OF UNION MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I understand the principle the minister has just explained. However, the fact remains that I am referring to a company that practically owes its survival to government subsidies. Since the union—and my information gives me every reason to believe this—is in favour of the program created recently by the minister, and considering that the government has an obligation to show some concern for Pratt & Whitney, could the minister in some way urge the company to be more receptive to the wishes of union members?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, without taking the time of the House to go into the full details, I do not think it is as necessarily clear-cut that one side is in the wrong and the other side is in the right. It is a dispute about who is to be involved in the voting jurisdiction which would apply to the work-sharing agreement. That is really a matter of collective bargaining between the parties. While the government can facilitate, support and encourage, I do not think it wants to impose.

We are using our good offices to try to bring about that arrangement. I know the hon. member from that area, the hon. member for Longueuil, has provided a lot of support in that regard. I appreciate his help and assistance. We will continue to work with them. If the hon. member would also provide his good offices, I am sure we could bring the two parties to that dispute to the table and to an agreement and provide the kind of outcome we all want to achieve.

THE ECONOMY

PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH IN VANCOUVER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday in Vancouver he threatened Canadians that he would stay on until economic circumstances improved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I see the Prime Minister has three supporters behind him, anyway. Since he came to office, unemployment has almost doubled and inflation has almost tripled. I would like to ask the Prime Minister why he thinks the people of Canada would turn for a solution to a man who created the problem? Is it not like asking the arsonist to put out the fire?

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has quoted some figures about inflation doubling, and so on. During that period the wealth of Canada more than tripled. That should be something which could influence some of the people who are interested in knowing whether I am available or not.

Mr. Broadbent: I would suggest that the people of Canada know that the wealth of virtually every country has improved in the last 14 years, but they are more concerned about the million and a half unemployed in this country, which is a direct result of Liberal government policy.

Oral Questions

QUERY RESPECTING PROGRAMS TO COMBAT INFLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, since the Prime Minister finally did join those in the country who have talked about job insecurity for Canadians for a long time by saying that he recognized that unemployment was a dangerous threat to the social fabric of the country, why should Canadians at this point in his political life believe that he is serious about this? Why should they have confidence that he is any more concerned than he was in the past? Does the government today have one new program to announce which will come to grips with the serious level of unemployment in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am interested that the Leader of the New Democratic Party should say that wealth in many other countries has increased as well while wealth in Canada has increased. He fails to recognize that unemployment in other countries has also increased. He fails to see that jobs in Canada during the period in which I have been in office have been created at a rate which far exceeds that of all other major countries. He fails to see that the government which I suppose he supports ideologically—the French government—has higher unemployment than Canada has. He fails to see that the United States has higher unemployment than Canada. He fails to see that Britain has higher unemployment than does Canada. Germany is very close to Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, watch it.

Mr. Trudeau: I am watching it, Madam Speaker. I wish that the hon. member would watch it.

REQUEST THAT NEW BUDGET BE INTRODUCED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the figure that overcomes all those that the Prime Minister has alluded to with its impact is the reality that when he came to office we were the second richest nation per capita in the world. We are now down to about thirteenth or fourteenth. The Prime Minister cannot deny that.

Since the Prime Minister has responsibility for what happens in Canada and not in other countries, and since a report which was released today showed that the number of Canadians in the labour force who were unemployed in 1980 amounted to one in five who were out of a job sometime in 1980—and unemployment was lower then than it is today—such disturbing statistics provide the kind of evidence for the statement that I thought the Prime Minister was making seriously when he said that unemployment can threaten the social fabric. If the reality today is that unemployment is devastating in terms of its impact on families throughout Canada, why does the Prime Minister not say that he will bring in a new budget or some other specific measure designed to turn the economy around and provide some economic leadership to Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, when the hon. member pretends to rank countries by wealth I suppose he realizes that he is classing, for instance, Saudi Arabia and Nigeria—

Mr. Broadbent: And the Netherlands, Norway, Denmark and Sweden.

Mr. Trudeau: —and Kuwait. I understand, but would the hon. member wish to subtract from the list those countries which are infinitely poorer than Canada in every sense? But because of OPEC operations—

Mr. Broadbent: Well, we are ninth then.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party does not want to listen to answers.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—INVESTIGATION OF CAUSE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the—

An hon. Member: Welcome back!

Mr. Crosbie: My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister will have noticed that today the United States Coastguard and the National Transportation Safety Board are commencing hearings in Boston into the sinking of the Ocean Ranger, which sank on the Canadian continental shelf on February 15. He will also know that congressional hearings which have already been held have indicated that the whole tragedy had something to do with the breaking of a porthole in the control room, which affected the stability on the port side. He will also know that in Canada not one agency, not one parliamentary committee, not one royal commission nor any official body has done anything in connection with this matter to give information to the public.

When will the joint royal commission start hearings concerning this tragedy? It was appointed on February 25, two months ago. Do we have observers at Boston who are listening to the evidence that the Coastguard and American authorities are giving? Is it not shameful that we must get our information secondhand from hearings held in the United States, when the tragedy occurred here over two months ago?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I will try to answer the various points raised by my hon. colleague. The joint commission of inquiry has been set up. All the arrangements, administrative and otherwise, have been settled with the commission and with the government of Newfoundland.

The commission is in a position to proceed. It is proceeding, however, with caution and sensitivity, bearing in mind the importance of the issue and the fact that the commission has been given a very broad mandate indeed. It wants to demonstrate great care and concern for those affected by the offshore drilling operations.

I would remind my hon. friend that the investigations to which he is referring are internal investigations of the existing United States agencies. It is obviously much easier and faster to set up such investigations than a joint inquiry of the type we are setting up. As I said, our inquiry has a much broader mandate. However, there is work being done, both by the companies concerned and by agencies of the Government of Canada, in gathering evidence and carrying out studies to be made available to the commission as soon as the commission requests the information.

Concerning the presence of observers before the United States agencies, I am not in a position to advise my friend as to whether there is an observer today or not. However, we have held meetings with the United States agencies concerned, and they have agreed to co-operate with us fully in all respects and to make all their information available to us. We have also agreed to help them in their investigation.

That is as much as I can say. However, Madam Speaker, if my answer was long, the question was just as long.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE CONDUCT INQUIRY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister. The Ocean Ranger was owned by a U.S. company, but the accident occurred on the Canadian continental shelf. Eighty-two people died in the tragedy, 52 of whom were Canadians, 26 from the district of St. John's West alone. Therefore, I put it to the minister that it is shameful that we have not received any public information concerning the cause of this accident. All of our information comes from the United States, not from private, internal inquiries, but from a congressional hearing, and from a public hearing which is going on today.

I would ask the minister, why not have a committee of this House investigate the matter? It is time that this House ceased to be a eunuch and that it had some function and some purpose. Why not at least have a committee of this House make some initial inquiries of the Canadian authorities into what they consider the causes of this tragedy to be? Would he agree to that so that we do not have to wait two, three or four years for a royal commission report such as the McDonald Commission undertook? Would the government consider that?

Will the minister tell the House whether we have made any changes in our regulations or requirements with respect to offshore safety since that accident occurred? Has the government undertaken its own internal inquiries, and have they resulted in changes and more precautions being taken?

I know that it is a long question, but this is a serious matter.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): It is certainly a very serious matter and one to which the government and I attach much importance. If my hon. friend feels like a eunuch, I think that is his problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I do not think that it is a problem which is shared by other members of this Parliament.

Mr. Crosbie: This House is a eunuch.

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the specific questions he has raised are concerned, I want to tell him that steps are indeed being taken. As he knows, the two other offshore rigs which were on the Hibernia field have been brought ashore for full inspection, and the federal agency responsible for the administration of the Canada lands imposed very high and stiff standards and requirements before those rigs were allowed to explore again. The companies have agreed to that, and the government of Newfoundland has also agreed to those particular measures we have taken to ensure the safety of people on board.

As far as the suggestion of the hon. member is concerned, I would suggest to him that we should allow the royal commission, which is a completely independent one, representing both governments, to do its work independently and freely. What is important is that the Canadian public, and the people of Newfoundland in particular, be assured that there will be non-partisan, objective and complete examination of this situation and that they will be presented with all of the facts. It is important that they be fully satisfied they have the full story and that no partisanship was exhibited concerning this tragedy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

DRAFTING OF TAXATION LEGISLATION

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if it is true that the chief draftsman for the Income Tax Act in the Department of Justice has left his post and that the taxation legislation which was to be due in May or June will not be ready for us until November.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have no information on that point at all.

Mr. Huntington: It is rather surprising that the Minister of Finance would not be aware of this and that he cannot confirm the situation.

REQUEST THAT BUDGET BE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I am wondering whether the Minister of Finance is aware of the number of capital projects which are on hold in this country, capital projects which could create many jobs and could put our skilled and unskilled workers back to work. They are on hold until the rules of interest deductibility are stabilized and known. I am wondering if the minister would remove his own ego from being ahead of the plight of the unemployed and hoist the November 12 budget so that some stability could come back into the place of work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seems to be exhibiting a fair amount of ego in the flamboyancy of his question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: It seems to me that we have seen that demonstrated every day by hon. members opposite who are spending more time on rhetoric and personal reflections than upon concrete measures.

Mr. Huntington: What about the unemployed?

Mr. MacEachen: When the hon. member wants to ask about concrete measures, he will get objective replies.

Mr. Huntington: Great answer!

Mr. Beatty: What a smug bunch.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—STUDIES OF HEALTH HAZARDS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, involves some recent revelations by Dr. Nantel, head of toxicology at Laval, and recent reports by the National Research Council which give indications that urea formaldehyde foam is an inherently unstable substance which breaks down and continuously releases more gas, that safety levels of .1 parts per million are completely arbitrary, with no reference to residential environments, and that there is no safe exposure level. There are indications that impacts on health are not just allergic reactions, but also possible long-term attacks on the immunity system. There is also a possibility that other variances of gas are released from the insulation which may affect health.

Would the minister lay before the House a list of medical studies and other studies related to these problems suggested by the recent studies released? Would he elucidate, for the House, all the information pertaining to the government's programs dealing with these health hazards?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker. I should be glad to table at the proper time for tabling documents, a list of the studies now in progress. I am surprised at the hon. member's question, because just before the Easter adjournment I sent all members of the House an information document which included a list of research projects started by the National Research Council of Canada and the Department of National Health and Welfare. I should be happy to send the hon. member some more copies.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONSIDER FURTHER SAFETY PROGRAMS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, the surprise should not overtake the minister considering the amount of fog he has distributed on this subject. Those kinds of questions are being asked by many home owners who are exposed to it. Nevertheless, if there is any substance to those remarks, and there is more and more information indicating that this is the case, is the minister prepared to admit that his program for remediation, based on reducing the concentration of gas in homes, and a grant of up to $5,000, will be totally inappropriate? In future, if the insulation breaks down in those homes, it will create a health hazard and the entire $110 million program will be wasted. Will the minister explain to the House what other options the government is considering when this program fails?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not agree with the hon. member. In fact, I must say, which some reluctance, that the Canadian government seems to be the only government to have offered any concrete assistance to UFFI victims. No other government, either provincial or municipal, has offered any financial assistance to these victims and nowhere else in the world where similar products are sold has there been any effort by government authorities to help these victims. The only government to take any action has been the Canadian government.

AIRPORTS

FUTURE OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Transport and concerns the decision on the Dorval-Mirabel matter, which was promised for May. Could the minister inform the House and the Canadian people whether he is prepared to accept the recommendation made by participants in the economic summit on Greater Montreal, namely, to publish the cost-benefit studies on solution 6 and all other studies relevant to this subject, before announcing his decision next May?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I fully intend to publish these studies—my hon. friend is referring more specifically to the second study, since the first has already been published. I think I will do so, after consultation with my cabinet colleagues, as soon as I will be in a position to announce general guidelines with respect to Mirabel.

PIPELINES

DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF TQM NATURAL GAS PIPELINE

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the delays and significant cost increase affecting construction of the TQM natural gas pipelines from Quebec to the maritimes, will the minister indicate the expected date of completion, and will he confirm that the price of gas delivered to the maritimes will not exceed the citygate price in Toronto?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there has been some delay in the completion of the pipeline in Quebec. As far as I am aware, the plan is still for the pipeline to reach the maritimes some time in 1984. With regard to the guarantee to which the hon. member referred, I want to assure him that this is part of the National Energy Program. It has been announced. It is the firm intention of the government, in order to ensure gas consumption in the maritimes, that the price to the maritime consumer will be maintained at the same level as the price in Toronto.

PRICE GUARANTEE

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. If the distributor cannot deliver gas to maritime consumers at the Toronto citygate price, is the minister in effect saying that his government is prepared to subsidize the difference?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we have taken steps to ensure that this will be the case, that the price of natural gas delivered in the maritimes will be maintained at the same level as the price in Toronto.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAYS IN PROCESSING CLAIMS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It deals with the dramatic increase in lay-offs in the labour force, which in turn has resulted in a comparable increase in applications for unemployment insurance benefits. I am reliably informed that many Unemployment Insurance Commission offices across the country are laying off casual help while the workload in these offices is increasing, resulting in long delays in the processing of benefit claims. In view of the fact that this is imposing an undue hardship on people with no other source of income, will the minister assure the House that he will look into this situation and take steps to expedite the processing of unemployment insurance claims by providing additional staff positions where needed?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I believe I answered a similar question in the House a few weeks ago. I indicated that we have been adding officers by inviting former officers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to come back and work on a temporary basis. In addition, we have been moving staff from areas where the demand is reasonably stable to areas where there is a very high demand. We have been shifting unemployment insurance officers across the country, as well as establishing centralized processing units in each of the areas where demand is high. We have taken a number of steps. We have succeeded in reducing the backlog substantially. From all reports, there are very few areas in which the pressure is extreme. If the hon. member can give me a specific case, I will be glad to look into it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-FRANCE BOUNDARY DISPUTE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. During the course of his meetings with President Mitterrand, did the question arise of the stalemated discussions between France and Canada over the boundary dispute, and the 200-mile limit, with the Island of St. Pierre, which is causing considerable fishery difficulties? I ask the question in view of increased French militancy in enforcing their territorial demands.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question did not arise. The French President came to Canada in the context of his travels to visit other participants in the Versailles summit in June. It was agreed that we would discuss merely summit-related matters. Bilateral matters, including that one, will be raised when the French Prime Minister visits us the day after tomorrow.

Oral Questions

STATUS OF DISCUSSIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House what exactly is the position on the stalemated talks, in view of the spectre of Canadian economic sanctions that was raised in France by the Islands' representative in the French National Assembly? I ask the question because a failure to bring a satisfactory resolution to this problem will cause serious problems for Canada's fishery, indeed potential problems down the road with respect to offshore oil and gas.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the story in the French press about speculation of some kind of weird connection between the St. Pierre and Miquelon situation and the Falkland Islands is indeed of no service to relations between Canada and France. We are negotiating the water boundary in the normal course of affairs with the French. Our discussions have been proceeding. We have been engaged in offer and counter-offer. The situation at the present time is that we are still in the course of discussion. As one would expect, we are putting forward a very strong case on behalf of Canadian interests.

THE ECONOMY

ISSUANCE OF LONG-TERM GOVERNMENT BONDS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As he well knows, his government very recently issued a 20-year bond to yield 15.5 per cent interest rates. Obviously this indicates very clearly that the government, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the cabinet expect that high interest rates and high inflation are going to be with this country for a very long period of time. I would like to ask what caused him, his Minister of Finance and his government to throw in the sponge so early in the fight against high interest rates and high inflation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that a learned member like my hon. colleague would have such an interpretation. Surely he knows that long-term money is hard to come by now and that, in order to get it, you have to offer high interest rates.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Trudeau: The member opposite wants to know why. Because—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry, George, but your colleagues don't want an answer to this kind of question. Maybe it is too difficult for them. Perhaps you and I had better discuss it later.

• (1450)

Mr. Hees: Madam Speaker, I have no intention of letting the Prime Minister off the hook.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: It is a very difficult question that obviously he is floundering on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Does he not realize that the reason he has to pay a high interest rate today is that the people of this country have no confidence at all in his economic ability and that of his ministers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: If he does not believe that we are going to have high interest rates and high inflation over the next 20 years, how can he and his government justify paying a 15.5 per cent interest rate over that very long period of time?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, surely the hon. member knows that these are the rates that are prevailing in the United States and in various European countries, France and so on, and that if you do not offer that to Canadian savers, including I am sure my hon. friend—

Mr. Hees: Twenty years?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, if you want to borrow long term you will have to pay what the investor will lend his money at. I am telling the hon. member that the Canadian can move his money to the New York bond market or to the European bond market and get that kind of rate. That means that the—

Mr. Hees: I think you had better sit down, Pierre; you have run out of steam.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member wants me to sit down. I see the answer is a bit too difficult for him to follow.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—REQUEST FOR SUPPLEMENTARY ASSISTANCE

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I agree that the Canadian government is the only government that has provided some form of concrete assistance to UFFI victims, but I would like to ask the minister whether he is prepared to consider further assistance programs, and if so, is he willing to consider the feasibility of introducing a program of interest-free or subsidized-interest loans to help people who want to remove the foam and do not have the resources to do so, a suggestion that was made by my local riding committee?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that this option was considered before we announced the present program which enables homeowners to obtain, not an interest-free loan but a grant, which is not taxable and may go as high as $5,000. Obviously, this is a far more generous offer than any loan, whatever the amount, because in case of a loan, the amount must be repaid by the home owner. However, in this case, the government is giving home owners up to $5,000. I can see why the hon. member and the members of his riding association would like to have the other method as well. I have always maintained that the offer made by the Canadian government should be matched by provincial authorities. If UFFI victims want to get more from government, they should not go to the federal government at this point but to the provincial authorities to obtain the equivalent of what we are offering.

BANKRUPTCIES

INCREASE IN NUMBER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last month we set a record, a record of which no one can be proud. We had, for the first time, more than 1,000 business bankruptcies in the month of March. Given the fact that we are now seeing bankruptcies of companies which have been in business for a long time, well managed and playing an important role in their regions; given the fact that one of the major reasons, if not the major reason, for those bankruptcies is the high rate of interest with which they cannot live and exist, I wonder if the minister has any idea for braking the high interest rate policy which is leading to the destruction of an increasing number of businesses in this country every month.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, I think the idea is very clear that we can get interest rates down when we can succeed in getting the rate of inflation down; and there is no secret way that I know of, and no one in this House has ever revealed—no secret way to brake the high interest rates until inflation comes down. That is the idea.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, given the fact that the number of business bankruptcies is increasing every month, that it increased in the province of Manitoba by 100 per cent and increased in the province of Quebec by 50 per cent, that every business bankruptcy leads to more unemployment, that in the province of Quebec the official rate of unemployment is 14 per cent and the real rate is substantially higher than that, I wonder if the minister is prepared to see the time when we will have 2,000 bankruptcies in a month rather than 1,000, before he does something to lower the rate of interest which is killing so many businesses.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the question of the hon. member is characteristically vague. He invites the government to do something. Day in and day out I have been explaining that the policy of the government is directed to bringing down inflation in order to bring down interest rates, in order to create more jobs. Every proposal made by the New Democratic Party during the question period, if implemented, would have the effect of driving up interest rates and creating more bankruptcies and more unemployment. That is the difference between us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT FIXED RATE OF EXCHANGE BE CONSIDERED

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Some months ago in a first ministers' economic conference some of the premiers recommended that the exchange value of the Canadian dollar versus the United States dollar be allowed to drop to the 75-cent level, to lower interest rates and stimulate the economy. Since then the Canadian dollar has fluctuated, dropping almost below 81 cents and now almost reaching to 82 cents. Has the minister examined seriously, and is the government actively considering, fixing for a period of time the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar at the 80-cent level or thereabouts versus the American dollar, so that the strength of the pegged dollar may provide some stability and may be used to lower Canadian interest rates and also stimulate foreign investment in Canada, particularly in the megaprojects?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is not the intention to establish a fixed exchange rate.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXAMINATION OF RIGHTS OF PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. On March 26, the President of the Treasury Board endorsed a proposal to give a parliamentary committee the task of trying to clarify the policical rights of public servants and their right of speech. I have not asked him a question since then because I wanted to give him time to consult his colleagues in respect to the matter. Has he yet consulted his colleagues and, if so, what advice can he give the House on whether the government is prepared to go along with the endorsement which he gave to this matter in committee?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I have discussed this issue with a number of my colleagues. The question, as I recall from the member for Nepean-Carleton, arose from the context of the Neil Fraser case, a case which I understand is currently proceeding through the normal appeal procedures. I think it would be helpful to have the decision of the Public Service Staff Relations Board on that case before taking further action.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW POSITION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, if the minister will reread the portion of the committee hearings, he will find that it was not taken in the context of the Neil Fraser case, it was with respect to the problem generally. The position has been endorsed by the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, who felt it was time that this matter be aired by the parliamentary committee. Would the minister, given that representation, which he can check, review his position so that we can have this matter cleared generally with respect to people in the Public Service of Canada, as to their rights to speak and their rights to engage in political activity?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I think it is indeed an important issue. It was raised, if I recall correctly, by the D'Avignon Committee; and it is a matter which has been under review in the context of the government's co-ordinated response to the D'Avignon committee report and the Lambert commission Report. As I indicated in the committee, I will take the matter up with my colleagues to determine whether the procedure proposed by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton—and, I understand, endorsed by the Chairman of the Public Service Commission—would be an appropriate avenue to explore.

PETITIONS

RECONSIDERATION OF GUN CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege and duty to present a formal petition to the House on behalf of some of my constituents. The subject of the petition is private member's Bill C-451, to amend the Criminal Code as it relates to gun control. The expressed displeasure respecting this bill is built around the fact that if such a bill were to be enforced in our country, it would spell the end of hobbies such as gun collecting and sports hunting and the privilege of handing down a gun collection as an heirloom to an heir. This would be a constraint which has not been imposed upon any other facet of our society.

My petitioners pray that not only should this bill not be given favourable consideration by this House but also that reconsideration be given to the already excessive legislation which imposes control upon guns to the detriment of the wellbeing of our society as a whole.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I take great pleasure in presenting a petition signed by more than 100 Canadians in western Canada from the Bow River constituency—around Airdrie and Crossfield—and from British Columbia.

Your petitioners pray that Bill C-451, to amend the Criminal Code respecting gun control, be not passed. The petitioners believe this bill is an infringement of their rights, that it will not stop the criminal element from obtaining firearms, that it will adversely affect sportsmen, gun collectors, rifle and pistol enthusiasts and that it is the first step toward the total disarmament of the people. Through this petition the petitioners are using their ancient right to present a grievance common to thousands of Canadians and pray that this petition will be given consideration by this House.

IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I, too, would like to take advantage of the ancient and honoured right of petitioners to present a grievance to this honourable and distinguished House in the hope that a remedy will be found.

Over 14,000 residents of the city of St. Catharines and its adjacent areas—14,044, to be exact—have signed a "Measure Canadian" petition sponsored by radio stations CKTB and CJQR-FM indicating that they join with many thousands of Canadians across this country in opposition to this government's arbitrary, mandatory and compulsory imposition of the metric system in Canada. The request in the petition is to allow metrication to proceed where determined voluntarily and to be efficient and competitive, but the petitioners strongly protest the mandatory imposition of metric conversion. Those 14,000 names are contained in the bundle I have in my hand.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and pleasure to present a petition on behalf of 156 constituents from the Niagara Peninsula who oppose the enforced use of the metric system in auction markets and other bid buying operations. These Canadians believe that the pace, the degree and the nature of the change to the System International should, and must, be determined voluntarily, especially because of the uniqueness of the instantaneous judgments which need to be made in bid buying where both the buyer and the seller need to be very familiar with the value of the product and the value of the bid.

SEMINAR TO STUDY EFFECTS OF EARTHQUAKES

Question No. 3,276—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence place a $12,000 contract with E.A.C. Amy and Sons to carry out a seminar on planning requirements to mitigate the effects of an earthquake in British Columbia, under contract No. 19ST 57111-0-A233 (OST80-00123) and was this contract in addition to the $29,400 awarded previously to the same company to conduct a seminar on the effects of an earthquake in British Columbia and, if so (a) on what date was the seminar on the effects of an earthquake held and are the results now available (b) on what date will the seminar on planning requirements be held?

2. Does the sum of $41,400 represent the total cost of the seminars and, if not (a) what is the estimated total cost to all government departments for this exercise (b) are the provinces going to pay for the transportation, accommodation and honorariums of the invited federal and provincial emergency planners from across Canada?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Emergency Planning Canada and the particpating departments as follows:

1. Yes, on behalf of Emergency Planning Canada. (a) The seminar was held during the week of October 26 to 30, 1981. The results are being compiled at present and will be available on request to Emergency Planning Canada.

(b) The seminar on planning requirements occupied the last two days of the week (i.e. the October 29 and 30).

2. No. (a) Participating departments: $13,279.03. Emergency Planning Canada: To the extent possible existing federal facilities were used, thus the additional expenses were at a minimum including some administrative costs and travel expenses to three invited participants and an honorarium to one of them. These brought the total federal costs carried by Emergency Planning Canada to $44,635.

(b) There have not been and will not be any federal charges to any of the provinces in respect of this seminar nor any charges to the federal government for provincial participation.

SOVIET CITIZENS WORKING IN CANADA

Question No. 3,560—Mr. Cossitt:

What is a current list of all Soviet citizens in Canada on work permits employed with any organization and, in each case, what is the name and address of the employer?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As of the date of the question there were 74 Soviet citizens in Canada in possession of employment visas. Information related to their employment is considered by the CEIC as personal and confidential.

WORK PERMITS FOR AMERICAN HOCKEY PLAYERS

Question No. 4,064—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is it now the policy of the Department of Employment and Immigration to require working visas for Americans living along the Canada-U.S. border, who play hockey for Canadian teams on the Canadian side of the border but who do not live in Canada and who only cross the border one or two times a week and who are not paid a salary by the Canadian teams involved?

2. To the knowledge of the government, were such restrictions applied in eastern Ontario and, if so, how can such restrictions be justified when the persons in question are not actually working in Canada?

3. Is this present policy causing a great amount of paperwork for the department and is the government prepared to order an immediate halt to such procedures and to leave the matter of entry and exit from Canada to the usual border-crossing questions by the immigration officials?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. When coming to Canada, such persons require employment authorizations (working visas) and in addition, it must be established that their admission will not adversely affect Canadians. While wages are not involved, it must be noted that many of the teams are subsidized in some way by Sports Canada under its Fitness and Amateur Sports Program. The control exercised therefore is to ensure that the money spent in such assistance benefits Canadians first.

3. No great amount of paperwork is generated by this control measure and no consideration is being given to stopping this procedure.

Petroleum Incentives Program Act

EVALUATION OF CEIC NEWSLETTER

Question No. 4,154—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a study evaluating the readership of a departmental employee newsletter commissioned by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and, if so (a) what is its status (b) what conclusions or recommendations were made (c) how were the conclusions or recommendations followed?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes. Approximately 4,000 employees across the country received a survey questionnaire from an independent research firm. The completed questionnaires are now being returned and we expect all answers to be in the hands of the research firm by April 9, 1982. Several weeks later the company will provide us with their conclusions or recommendations and we will look into ways of responding to these recommendations.

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, April 19, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-104, respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to enter into debate on this bill, which basically is legislation designed to bring into effect the federal government's petroleum incentives program.

Members of Parliament come to this House from varied occupations and professions, and there is a strength in that diversity. As elected representatives we serve the Canadians who sent us to this House. We also have an opportunity to serve the professions and the occupations at which we once earned a living. This is one of those opportunities when I as a Member of Parliament have an opportunity to serve my former profession in Parliament. For that reason I intend to be as non-partisan in my remarks as possible.

I also beg the indulgence of the House to outline the background which lies behind my concerns with respect to this legislation.

Twenty-five years ago I entered upon the study of chartered accountancy as a chartered accountant student with my father's firm in Toronto, Horace G. Lewis and Company. I graduated as a chartered accountant in September, 1962. Although I have not practised regularly, I am still a member in good standing of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario.

There are five hon. members in this House who are members of the accounting profession. They are the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) and myself on this side. On the government side there is the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Demers) and the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Desmarais). All of us are proud to be members of the accounting profession.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Canada was formed in 1902. It was first named the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants. There were six provincial institutes at that time, the earliest being the Ontario and Quebec institutes of chartered accountancy formed in 1879. The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants has been responsible for setting accounting standards since 1946.

With that background in mind I wish to address two issues with respect to this bill. The first is the generally accepted accounting principles which are applicable to the treatment of payments under the petroleum incentives program. The second is the position of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the repercussions if that position is ignored.

The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants has an active program of ongoing accounting research which is supported by members of the accounting profession from across Canada. In September 1975, the institute enacted Section 3800 of the CICA handbook to account for direct payments of all types of government assistance. That section was produced as a result of a rigorous discussion and debate of all possible alternatives by members of the CICA accounting research committee, consultation with their associates, exposure of proposed standards to the accounting profession and the business community for comment and consideration of all comments received before the standard was formally issued. Because of concerns as to the proper accounting treatment of the PIP grants, formally known as the Petroleum Incentives Program incentives, the CICA initiated discussions in early 1981 with the oil industry, individual companies, their auditors, and representatives of the federal government.

In April, 1981 the accounting research steering committee drafted a proposed accounting guideline for the treatment of PIP incentive grants. The accounting research committee discussed the draft guideline and expressed agreement with the steering committee's position and proposed course of action. The draft guideline was then circulated to interested parties for comment. Government representatives, including the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), received the draft guideline but did not offer any comments on it.

In January 1982 a final draft of the guideline was circulated by the accounting research committee to the petroleum industry, through the Canadian Petroleum Association and the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, and to other interested parties for comment. None of the recipients expressed objections to the final guidelines. At the same time, government representatives, including the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), were advised of the steering committee's intention to finalize and issue the guideline.

The CICA then issued a formal accounting guideline dated February, 1982 which specified that PIP incentives should be accounted for in accordance with the CICA handbook, Section 3800. Basically, that section specifies that since petroleum incentives are expenditure oriented, they should be taken into income in the same manner as the exploration and development expenditures they support.

Some oil companies have made representations to the federal government as to the acceptability of a different type of accounting treatment. Discussions have taken place between representatives of the oil industry and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which present the possibility of federal action to legitimize an accounting treatment which is contrary to the CICA position and thus contrary to generally accepted accounting principles. The dangers inherent in such actions prompt my remarks today.

One of the most basic of the generally accepted accounting principles is that revenues and expenditures related to those revenues should be matched as closely as possible. The February 1982 accounting guideline issued by the CICA defines the PIP grants as follows:

> The petroleum incentives program provides for direct incentive payments for exploration and development to Canadian taxable and non-taxable corporations and individuals. The objective is to encourage oil and gas exploration by Canadian corporations and individuals.

Therefore, the petroleum incentives should be taken into income in the same manner as the exploration and development expenditures they support. On the other hand, the petroleum and gas revenue tax is a tax payable by corporations and individuals, including federal and provincial enterprises, that receive income from oil and gas production. It is levied on net operating revenue related to the production of oil and gas, including income from oil and gas royalty interests.

The controversy arises because corporations and individuals qualifying for the PIP grants may waive entitlement to the direct payment of the grant and instead receive the benefits by way of a credit against the petroleum and gas revenue tax. It is then suggested that since the PGRT is a current expense, the PIP grant should be included in current earnings by netting or offsetting the PIP grants against the PGRT in the income statement.

The remarks of my good friend, Gert Mulcahy, F.C.A., CICA accounting research director, are most pertinent and succinct. She said:

> The proper accounting for government grants, including PIP grants, is largely a question of timing. PIP grants should be taken into income as the exploration and development efforts they finance result in earnings or the expenditures are written off ... If such grants were to be taken into income immediately, the result would be current overstated earnings for affected Canadian companies and reduced earnings for those companies in the future ... Economic reality is not reflected if a grant for future benefit is included in income for the current year before the results of the exploration expenditures are known.

There is some suggestion that the oil companies are pressuring the minister to allow the "offset" or "netting" treatment. In my opinion, that is not a generally accepted accounting treatment and I would urge the federal government to support the CICA position rather than enacting an order in council legislating generally accounting principles. We can understand the oil companies's concern to present as favourable an income position as possible but I suggest to the government that this can be accomplished through the statement of changes in financial position included in the companies's financial statements.

As suggested in the accounting handbook, the method by which benefits are received should not affect the accounting treatment. It is also suggested by the oil companies that since the PIP grants were instituted by the federal government because of the elimination of the earned depletion allowances and the super-depletion allowances for frontier exploration, the grants should be allowed as deductions from income.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, that argument does not necessarily apply. No government can eliminate apples and replace them with oranges and then legislate the oranges into apples. That is what the government is trying to do.

That concludes my remarks as to the generally accepted accounting principles and the CICA efforts in this case. I now wish to turn my attention to the position of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the possible repercussions of actions contrary to that position.

The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the related provincial institutes take a back seat to no professional body when it comes to professional research, professional independence and professional responsibility. My previous remarks make it unnecessary for me to elaborate upon the ongoing concerns of the CICA with respect to the need for professional research of a high calibre. This is a perfect example of the methods by which the CICA operates and it would be difficult for any profession to find fault with those methods. If the federal government is putting forth a contrary position, it should prove its point through the force of research and logic and through discussion with the accounting profession.

As professionals, chartered accountants guard their independence jealously. Accounts have been lost because chartered accountants refused to bend to the client's interests. Confidence in that independence is reflected in the reported remarks of Henry Knowles, Chairman of the Ontario Securities Commission. He suggests the accounting profession is "a major defender of investor rights" and that if the federal government legislates generally accepted accounting principles "it will destroy the credibility of the accounting profession as a self-regulating and policing organization".

Professions earn respect by being responsible. The easy way out for the CICA would have been to bow to the federal government's wishes and adopt their ideas or accept an order in council legalizing the treatment of PIP grants as an offset to the PGRT. To the CICA's credit, they have not capitulated, but under the leadership of their president, Dennis F. Culver, FCA, they have continued to press their arguments through consultation.

We have recently had an excellent example of the dangers which arise, Mr. Speaker, when government fails to consult industry, labour, or related professions and occupations. The November budget is a perfect example of what can happen when bureaucrats try to legislate tax reform without consultation. The result is chaos. The CICA accounting research guideline is an excellent example of what can happen when a profession takes the initiative and demonstrates professional responsibility. The result is an independent standard which governments, investors, the profession and the industry can look to for guidance. If the federal government legislates a treatment of PIP grants in financial statements which contravenes CICA guidelines, then there are some very real problems ahead. Auditors may be forced to comment upon the treatment in their report, as to whether or not it is in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, as they are known throughout the world. Securities commissions in Canada and foreign countries may require the CICA treatment, thus leading to investor confusion. The self-governing integrity of the CICA would be damaged.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the state may legislate the relevant professional committees of a hospital to ensure a high level of medical competence, but the state does not tell a doctor how to remove an appendix; the profession determines that. The state may legislate legal aid for every accused to ensure a legal defence, but the state does not tell a lawyer how to examine a witness. That is a matter for the profession.

By the same token the federal government may, through this bill, legislate PIP grants; but it is the accounting profession through its committees which should determine how those grants are treated in financial statements.

I close, Mr. Speaker, by urging the minister to adopt the CICA position on this issue because it is in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, and as an indication of the respect of the federal government for the efforts of CICA to maintain generally accepted accounting principles and its professional independence.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Would the hon. member permit a question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Breau): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: Certainly.

Mr. Waddell: The energy critic of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), wrote to the minister on December 21, 1981. In his letter he said that "the parts of the proposed bill dealing with the Canadian ownership rate and petroleum incentives program are long overdue and we would be willing to see two relevant acts introduced and dealt with on a priority basis".

I wonder if the hon. member would indicate why his party, having asked that they be brought forward on a priority basis and having said that they are long overdue, is now opposing the Canadian ownership rate and the petroleum incentives program?

Mr. Andre: Tell the hon. member to read my speech.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I tried to approach this subject as a Member of Parliament with some background in the accounting profession. My remarks were specifically directed to accounting treatment. I also commented that I would try to be non-partisan in my remarks. I think you will have noticed, sir, that there were no references to political positions being taken in my remarks.

The remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), were directed to the bills themselves, and I am perfectly willing to go along with his advice on that. However, what I tried to bring to the House was an understanding of accounting treatment, and an understanding of the importance of having an independent accounting profession. My remarks were simply based on that very important principle.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have you in the chair today. I would like to direct some of my remarks to the hon. member's question as to why we oppose the bill in principle at this time. The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) just spoke with eloquence as to the need for proper accounting procedures. I think we will find many oil companies in Canada will need to acquire many more accountants in order to deal with the petroleum incentives program and the Canadian ownership rate, and the difficulties which will result in the next couple of months as they try to sort out this bill as it passes through Parliament.

At the same time we have seen the tremendous impact the NEP has had on our oil and gas industry. The PIP grants were needed a year or a year and a half ago. They will now do relatively little to assist the industry to get back to the position it was in some while ago. Part of the problem is that by far the majority of people in Canada do not understand the operations of the oil and gas industry. That is a problem which not only Members of Parliament and those people involved in the industry for 40 or more years have to face, but it is also a problem for the industry and its employees. They have over the years done relatively little in the way of educating the public at large as to how their operations work. Then when we are faced with the NEP, faced with a government which has used this industry as a whipping boy for everything that they find people mistrust about capitalism, it is very difficult to put their views forward as to the proper operation of their industry, what alternatives there were to the public Canadianization of the industry, and the kinds of incentives and taxation procedures necessary to take away some of the excess profits of the industry as world prices went up, and yet at the same time not destroy the industry.

The drilling industry, for example, was faced not only with the NEP, but at the same time it was hit with high interest rates. They were drilling at a very high rate and finding lots of natural gas, if not so much oil. They were then faced with an oversupply of natural gas with the resulting low cash flow because they could not market the gas. Then there were the uncertainties involved in a lack of agreement between the federal and provincial governments on taxation. In addition, there was the problem that it has taken over a year to define the National Energy Program by way of legislation. We now find a reluctance on the part of investors, domestic and foreign, to invest in the drilling industry and so we are faced with some very serious difficulties in obtaining the funds to get the drilling industry going again.

Now, in addition to that tremendous lack of knowledge which I spoke of about how the industry works, we have here in Ottawa a group of public servants and deputy ministers along with the minister who, I feel, at that time knew very little about how the industry evolved and how it had been so successful in finding oil and gas. In fact, through natural processes much of the industry was being bought and taken over by small Canadian firms.

That is the way we should have proceeded with a national energy program. But here we had a minister supported and pushed by his public servants to bring in his National Energy Program which has hurt the nation so badly. Think of what has happened to the goal of energy self-sufficiency. Think of the number of jobs lost, rigs lost, the severe damage to small companies, and the increasing number of small Canadian companies declaring bankruptcy. When the program was put in place it affected many more people in this country than the minister or his public servants who supported him could ever imagine. They had no idea of the effect their program would have on this country. Perhaps they were prepared to take the risks because of a feeling that Alberta was doing too well or that the western provinces were doing too well as far as oil and gas revenues were concerned. Maybe it was thought that with drilling taking place offshore on the east coast as well as the Beaufort Sea, some capital should be moved into those areas and by doing that we would have some success and it would all be worth it.

However, that has not come about. The people who have been involved in the industry and the provinces so affected by the oil and gas industry cannot trust this government to put forward an objective picture of the oil and gas industry. Many companies, provinces and Members of Parliament have recognized this. Television and newspaper ads are now being placed by the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, the Canadian Petroleum Association, and other independent companies to show how industry works. These ads show the types of employment the industry creates and the opportunities available to young Canadians for work. There are opportunities to take over parts of companies to a large extent now foreign owned so as to achieve greater Canadian ownership. These kinds of ads and education procedures are continuing. At the same time people are being told about the devastation which has taken place in the industry.

Those of us who represent areas which produce oil and gas are receiving hundreds more calls from people who are being laid off. We are receiving calls from companies that just a year ago were looking at a bright future but are now bankrupt. We realize that we have to do a lot more to educate our colleagues about how this industry works. We have to get across what kinds of alternatives there are in order to see the vision that we wish as far as Canadian ownership is concerned. At the same time we must not create the dilemmas now being faced in the oil and gas industry.

There are alternatives to this bill which introduces the Canadian ownership rate. Some alternatives were put forward in the 1979 budget that was defeated. In it an offer was made to Canadian citizens to invest in oil and gas companies. In return some capital gains relief would be given. There was also a provision for directing the incentives program to the small Canadian-owned oil and gas companies are respecting the taxation procedures to be used as far as profits of the large companies were concerned. Those were the alternatives that were available, but instead the oil industry was used as a whipping boy by this government. It was used to foster Canadian nationalism in the sense of nationalization of companies run by Canadian governments and Crown corporations.

In reply to a question yesterday, the minister in defence of the National Energy Program said that in the last year we have gained 6 per cent more Canadian ownership. That is probably true. If one looks at the acquisitions of Petro-Canada and Dome Petroleum, some large companies were bought out. But what was the cost of doing that? Canadian taxpayers have put over $1.5 billion into Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada itself has borrowed in the billions of dollars in the private sector to buy out some foreign-owned oil companies. They have not found much more oil. All that has been accomplished is the purchase of more oil already discovered.

Another cost of the National Energy Prgram was lost jobs, about which I will go into detail in a few minutes. Also as a result of this program we have seen the loss of service companies and drilling rigs. The program has also caused the bankruptcies of companies. This program has contributed to the high interest rates that we are facing now as much money flows out of Canada. It was necessary to attract American dollars into Canada in order that we could pay our debts to other countries, and for purchasing offshore oil which had to be paid for in American dollars. Our interest rates had to be raised to attract money back into Canada. We have caused severe damage to the small Canadian-owned oil and gas companies and to the people who serviced those companies in many communities across the nation. Those are the costs of this National Energy Program.

Mr. Don Pack, President of the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, which association comprises small Canadian-owned companies, has said:

> The replacement value of the rigs that have left Canada in the past year exceeds $1 billion. You might equate this loss and the impact on a community, to the loss of one hundred $10 million manufacturing plants, each directly employing 52 people. The difference in operating levels this year and last in the drilling industry alone has resulted in a direct loss of employment for over 8,000 skilled rig crew members.
>
> For 1982, we see a further erosion of the Canadian drilling and service fleet with increasing loss in employment. During 1982 approximately 6,000 wells will be drilled in western Canada, a decline of 33 per cent from the peak established in 1980 and by mid-summer less than 200 rigs will be active. For a country importing approximately 200,000 barrels a day of crude oil from foreign producers at a cost of $8,000,000 per day, this is a tragedy.

I think that figure of 200,000 barrels a day of crude oil is rather low. The figure is more like 400,000 or 450,000 barrels a day. Mr. Pack continues:

> The energy balance in the world is finely tuned and vulnerable to disruption and price shock. Disruption in Canada's supply of oil, before we are self-sufficient, is a sure bet.

The following statistics are as a result of the National Energy Program. Drilling activity in Canada is down 25 per cent in 1981 compared to 1980. In the United States in the same period drilling activity was up 26 per cent. A record 78,884 wells were drilled in the United States. That figure increased by 16,000 from the previous year. On the other hand, Canada's figures were down substantially. Our well completions totalled 7,183, down from 9,481 in 1980. Development drilling was down 28 per cent to 4,000 from 5,556 in 1980. Total metres drilled confirmed this decline. The number dropped from 10.27 million metres in 1980 to 7.64 million metres in 1981. This is a decline of 26 per cent.

Since the announcement of the National Energy Program in 1980, 226 drilling rigs have left Canada. At the end of 1981 only 52 per cent of Canada's total of 443 drilling rigs were active and the activities of many seismic crews were down 25 per cent. Many of these people were active in my constituency and in the constituencies of my neighbouring Members of Parliament in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

There are many examples of Canadian entrepreneurs who are suffering the consequences. For example, there is Raydan Transport in Nisku. Statistics do not mean a lot to many people until they are translated into human terms. I have seen the human casualties of the National Energy Program in my riding. Many companies in a once thriving and prosperous area are starting to sell and move rigs to the United States. Many of them are throwing up their hands and giving up, which is helping the Western Canada Concept party.

I should like to cite an example of something which happened approximately two weeks ago. It shows the effects of the National Energy Program on a trucking company which was once prosperous. Raydan Transport of Nisku was a major rig moving company. It began liquidating $8 million worth of equipment assets. It received a little over $2.6 million for those assets, if I have read the bill of sale correctly. Bill English, the president of the company, said that this action was taken as a result of taking a good look at what was happening to the trucking industry. Until last month Raydan operated 75 trucks and back-up equipment and employed over 100 people. Now it expects to need only five employees and will only operate two to five trucks in 1982.

Why has the company lost over $1 million in the last 18 months? Its problems started with the NEP. Before that Raydan would move anywhere from 150 to 200 rigs per year. This dropped to only 35 rigs in 1981. It obviously had the equipment but the work was not there. On top of that situation, there was an increase in the cost of fuel, skyrocketing costs of equipment and labour, maintenance costs and high interest rates. These factors made the prospect of carrying on until there was light at the end of the tunnel very unattractive. In this instance we are looking at a company which is folding. Approximately 95 people will be out of work as a result of misguided government policy. This is happening all over my riding. The Nisku Industrial Park which was based on oil and gas activities has lost many people and firms in the last year.

What are some people saying in regard to the entire situation? One answer came from the provincial government which brought in a royalty reduction plan. It is intending to rollback royalties. It is an answer to many people involved in the industry. Now they can come to the provincial government and say that they desperately need some assistance until changes are made in the federal government. The provincial government brought in a rollback in royalties which will have an effect upon the industry. Most of the money acquired by the rollback in royalties will be needed to pay off debts which have accumulated in the last 1.5 years. We may not see the activity which is necessary to bring back the oil and gas industry of Alberta.

This morning I spoke with some small businessmen in my riding who are involved in the industry. They said that there has been a great improvement in attitude because of the movement of the Alberta government in rolling back royalties, but they warned that it was not enough. If complementary action is not taken quickly by the federal government as far as the taxes in the National Energy Program are concerned, conditions will revert to where they were beforehand.

As I said, in the last year some huge debts were built up by many of these companies. Many small Canadian companies are involved in the drilling and servicing of the oil industry and do not have much royalty income. As a result, these companies which are facing bankruptcies and laying off employees will not obtain much benefit from the rollback of royalties. Additional incentives to the oil industry are needed. I suppose some will be included in the petroleum incentives program, but much more will be needed, especially as world oil prices and consumption drop. Also we must remember that there is the huge shut-in of oil and gas in Alberta and Saskatchewan at the present time. There is a need to help some companies as far as taxes are concerned if we are to remove some of the suffering from the oil industry. They are truly Canadian companies. They are local, they are Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia operations, yet they are being stifled by federal policies which claim to promote Canadian ownership. This points out the grave contradiction between the philosophy of the National Energy Program and its actual effect. The government must look very seriously at making some changes to get these small operations back on their feet and producing again.

According to Wilfred Gobert of Peters and Co. Ltd. of Calgary:

> The retroactive provincial royalty tax credit, imminent Alberta petroleum incentive payments and gas take-or-pay proposals by TransCanada PipeLines Ltd. of Calgary will all mean additional money for the industry this year.

But like other analysts, he expects that the industry will use the additional funds to pay off debts first before rushing into more exploration and development spending. Mr. Gobert went on to say:

> The Alberta royalty changes could mark an end to the slump in exploration and development this year. We may have hit bottom . . .
> The worst of the exploration and development activity could be behind us.

It will need an extra push, and that push can only come from the national government in the form of some reduction in high taxes.

We are feeling the downturn in that industry. We are starting to feel it more than ever 1.5 years after the National Energy Program. The cash flows of larger companies are down between 25 to 40 per cent. There is some belt-tightening which is being felt not only by workers but by many executives. Gulf, Turbo Resources and Dome Petroleum have laid off over 1,150 people in the last week. Even Petro-Canada has felt the pinch and is finding that it must release some of its employees. They are all facing as well a tremendous paper burden which results from the bills before the House and the extra accounting procedures being put in place because of federal and provincial programs.

It was interesting to read the words of United States Congressman John D. Dingell who said that this year more than 12 per cent of the oil and gas exploration in the United States will be conducted by Canadian companies, many of which are from my area, using workers and equipment that have shifted drilling to the United States. If past experience is any indication, they will not return to Canada until the government alters its course. In short, the government's policies are having the exact opposite effect to their stated purpose. Those policies have already shown themselves to be actually injuring the Canadian economy, driving venture capital from the nation and impairing the strength of the Canadian dollar. That American congressman is seeing the same effects of the National Energy Program as we are seeing on this side of the House. They are reaping the benefits of our expertise and our drilling.

Although we may not have had ownership of the oil industry when the National Energy Program was introduced, we did have control and many of us wonder why we did not use that control to determine the kind of taxation policies we could have put forward so as to use the abundant moneys which flowed from that industry to provide incentives to the small oil companies and start the megaprojects operating in Canada, which would have provided employment and spinoff benefits for thousands of Canadian companies and Canadian workers, instead of taking the gamble which the minister was obviously prepared to take when he introduced the National Energy Program. That gamble, which was to divert money from the prairie provinces, Alberta and British Columbia to provide the needed incentives for projects in the north, on Canada lands and on the east coast, should not have killed the industry which was providing the work and the oil and gas for Canada at the same time. That gamble may not have paid off in terms of oil self-sufficiency by 1990.

The Ocean Ranger, which tragically sank off the east coast, has put back the drilling program in that area for some time. The optimism that many of us felt regarding the Beaufort Sea did not materialize during this year's testing. Instead of a well which was estimated to produce some 30,000 barrels a day, it only produced 3,000 barrels a day. It is still our belief that there are substantial supplies of oil and gas in those areas which we should pursue with all effort, but at the same time we cannot kill an industtry which has been so successful for so many years in this country.

We need a response to the difficulties these companies are facing. In Alberta we presently have shut-in oil amounting to approximately 220,000 barrels of crude oil per day. Why is that oil shut in at the present time? Our federal government has done such an excellent job of negotiating offshore contracts that we are importing Mexican and other foreign crude oil at a rate which forces us to shut down our wells in our own country. This causes a deterioration in the amount of cash flow for those companies and causes further difficulty to that industry even beyond the National Energy Program.

I do not know how I can emphasize any more the effects of the devastation visited on our oil and gas industry by this National Energy Program and the actions of this government. If we look at the unemployment statistics in Alberta, a province that has always had the lowest unemployment in Canada, we discover that after running at less than 4 per cent throughout the 1970s and at 3.5 per cent in 1981, today we are looking at an unemployment rate of 6.7 per cent in that province. That is one of the devastating effects of this program.

It is impossible for us to support this bill which is before us now because it will not assist the industry in the manner it needs to be assisted, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to speak to this particular piece of legislation. I would like to begin by saying that we in Canada live in very serious and troubled times. A good portion of the difficulty we are experiencing is a direct result of the National Energy Program.

I think that the most disappointing news we Canadians received today was when we read in The Globe and Mail that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will not retire at the present time while there still is an ailing economy. Most of us found that to be very disappointing news. Many of us thought that would have been one election promise that he would have upheld. But if he fails to fulfil that promise, then I cannot think of one single election promise which he made during the 1980 election campaign which has been upheld. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this remark in the newspaper will add further to the strains on confederation and the difficulties in our economy, to the alienation and division which he has already created in this land.

I cannot think of a more hypocritical statement than that the Prime Minister cannot leave because of an ailing economy. In my view—a view which I am sure is shared by others as well—the Prime Minister has clearly wasted his mandate in dealing with the economy. He has chosen instead to address more mundane issues and has been more prone to pick fights and argue with the provinces and industry, to divide and create chaos rather than deal with the real bread and butter issues in Canada. Those issues concern jobs, interest rates, housing, energy self-sufficiency and creating a healthy and stable economic environment. He has failed to address the real problems which has affected this nation.

According to the review which was cited by various members on my side of the House which reminded the country of the conditions which existed when the Prime Minister took office, unemployment was 4.5 per cent. Today, unemployment is over 9 per cent, an additional 750,000 people unemployed. When he took office inflation was 4 per cent; today it is 11.6 per cent to 12 per cent. The current account deficit was almost in balance when he took over while today it is close to $7 billion. Bank interest rates were 7½ per cent. Today, they are 15.34 per cent. At the time he took office the conventional mortgage rate was 9.2 per cent. It is 18½ per cent today. An average house cost $21,000 in 1968 and the price today is $78,000. With respect to the post office, we could send a letter for 6 cents; today it costs 30 cents. The growth of the government has risen from 360,000 person-years to 500,000 person-years. The gross national debt was $32 billion in 1968; today it is $135 billion. The value of the dollar was 93 cents U.S. in 1968 and it is 82 cents today. It is a very dismal record and the fact that the Prime Minister will continue in office will clearly downgrade confidence in Canada and create even more anxiety and sense of hopelessness and despair.

The fact is that we live in the most difficult times we have experienced in 35 years. These hardships do not only relate to interest rates. The price of fuel would also be an interesting comparison. We know that fuel prices have doubled in the last two years despite all those grandiose promises that fuel prices would be kept down.

But what concerns Canadians the most is that there is a feeling of hopelessness and despair in the country. Dreams are being shattered. People who have invested a lifetime of work in their farms and businesses are having their dreams shattered. Their investment of years of hard work, commitment and dedication is going out the window. There is also a fear that the worst is yet to come. The greatest improvement in confidence would be if the Prime Minister would quietly leave the scene. That action would create the greatest upturn in terms of individual confidence, economic confidence and, I am sure, in terms of international confidence.

Coupled with this economic condition which exists in Canada, we all know that there is a very deep-seated division in Canada. It is unfortunate that during the course of the last ten days when we were to have been celebrating the patriation of our Constitution, and while there was a massive celebration on Parliament Hill, there was bitterness felt throughout the country. There is not the unanimous rejoicing there should be. There is not that spirit of enthusiasm and euphoria that we experienced in 1967 during the year of our centennial celebrations. The fact is that there is deep division in this country. There is bitterness.

• (1600)

Much of this has been the product of this government. For example, in western Canada there is a feeling that this government governs one half of the country while it attacks the other half. That is why a separatist movement is making great inroads in western Canada. There is a separatist movement in Quebec. The statement of the Prime Minister to the effect that co-operative federalism is dead is not helping matters either, because it is part and parcel of his style of unilateralism.

I started out by saying that we are in difficult economic times and that one of the problems is directly related to the National Energy Program. There are some other reasons, and I would simply like to cite them as background to the debate on this bill. As I said earlier, the Prime Minister and his government have not really addressed the very important and fundamental issues facing this country; rather, during the last two years the government has dealt with the Constitution and other matters. There has been heavy emphasis on bilingualism, on metric, on gun control, on North-South dialogue, on building emergency civilian internment camps and things of that nature. In the meantime, the economy has been floundering.

There has also been a policy of confrontation. We know the attitude of the Prime Minister with respect to his unilateralist approach to patriation of the Constitution. We know of his approach with regard to the oil pricing agreement with the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia and of the threat that he would impose the overriding authority of peace, order and good government to force an energy pricing agreement on the provinces whether they liked it or not. We know that the National Energy Program has been a product, not of consultation and co-operation but, rather, of unilateralism. We witnessed the decision with regard to VIA Rail. With a stroke of the pen, 20 per cent of VIA Rail passenger services were dismantled. We witnessed the actions with regard to the changes to or the emasculation of the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. While there has been some discussion, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has suggested—

An hon. Member: What was your position?

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, we have some life over there! We hear the New Democratic Party is now trying to bail out, before the election, the Premier of Saskatchewan who, before the election campaign was very eager to get on with the debate on the changes to the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. That is clearly on the record. A little document was published out in Saskatchewan entitled "Eating Crow". It cites all the very positive statements of Premier Blakeney concerning the Crow and his support for the Minister of Transport's proposals to change the Crow. It is no wonder that the NDP is losing ground and support in western Canada because of the hypocrisy of the positions it takes. It takes one position here and another position out there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I will not be sidetracked. They will be licking their wounds on Tuesday.

The fact is that the Minister of Transport said: "If there is no consensus and if you cannot agree to do it my way, we will do it that way anyway." That is the kind of unilateralism which has not augured well. It does not provide the kind of harmony and good spirit that is traditional and necessary in order for this nation to function.

The third reason we are experiencing these difficulties is the fact that we have a national economic policy based upon the redistribution of wealth rather than upon the production or generation of new wealth. Essentially, we have experienced zero growth over the last five years. There have been no incentives for the private sector or the producing sector to get on with the job of increasing the size of the national pie. If we continue along in that direction, we will not be able to provide indefinitely the kind of support and resources necessary to ensure medical care, old age pensions and assistance to the disabled. We will not be able to provide those kinds of services which would allow Canadians, who are less fortunate than those able to produce, to live a dignified lifestyle. The fact is that we have suffered zero growth and we cannot continue to support those programs under an economy functioning at that level. The only growth we have seen over the last few years has been the growth in the labour force in government. Quite frankly, about one quarter of the total labour force today is employed by some level of government. This is evident, as 42 per cent, 43 per cent or maybe even 44 per cent of the gross national product is now being handled by some level of government. Of course, we cannot indefinitely continue along that path without facing some very serious difficulties.

The fourth reason we are in this period of economic stagnation and difficulty is that government policy has developed along the lines of an economy which is becoming more centrally controlled and dominated. It is a policy which is reflected and endorsed, moreover, by the recent economic development policy outlined in the budget papers. It is quite obvious that, rather than opting for tax incentives and the kind of fiscal regime which would encourage production and growth, a situation has been created in which all the resources and revenue will be recycled through government. The government will decide who the winners and who the losers will be. The government will provide the subsidies and grants and it will pick the winners and the losers. It will establish who will get a grant and where that grant shall be located, whether it will be A, B, C or D, and whether it will be located in region X, Y or Z. However, the government will decide who the winners and losers will be. If we continue to do that, I suggest we will stymie the creativity, productivity and innovation which is so necessary to maintain the growth and generation of wealth we need in this country. Furthermore, I suggest it will certainly stymie our ability to maintain the economic freedom that we want in this country. If we do not have economic freedom, there is no way we can have political freedom.

In my humble estimation, a functioning democracy cannot exist in a controlled economy. We note, with interest, the difficulty that the New Democratic Party is encountering in the province of Saskatchewan. It talks about its family of Crown corporations, some 23 Crown corporations. It refers to it as a big family. I believe the people of Saskatchewan will soundly reject that philosophy. Freedom is the issue—political and economic freedom.

We have a problem in this country which the people of the province of Saskatchewan have witnessed. The people of Saskatchewan have recognized that they can no longer tolerate the years of socialism, the years of government encroachment and the years of government interference which have stymied their economic freedom. That is the real issue in the Saskatchewan election. The people of Saskatchewan own the land. They do not want to be tenants in their own province. The government of Saskatchewan owns some two million acres of farmland.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: You've got them upset.

Mr. Mazankowski: Your Honour can see that hon. members are as upset as the Premier of Saskatchewan. He has acknowledged the fact that the NDP is losing. He says he thinks his party can still get a majority. I think all of its members will be in for a great surprise when they count the votes on Tuesday. However, that is a tribute to the people of Saskatchewan, because the people of Saskatchewan will be the winners, not the Conservative party. The socialists will be the losers. They should be, because they are born losers. That is where they belong.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: Oh, I cannot agree with that!

Mr. Mazankowski: The National Energy Program is part and parcel of the issue of which I speak, the continuing government encroachment, the centrally dominated philosophy that government can make the best decision, or a government organization, structure or board can make the best decision.

• (1610)

I want to say this very bluntly because I have witnessed the effects of the National Energy Program. My colleague from Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) talked at great length. He lives in an area that has been both directly and indirectly affected negatively by the effects of the National Energy Program. The small industries, the small entrepreneurs, have been hurt by this program. The National Energy Program will go down in history as the man-made disaster of the eighties; there can be no question about it.

The NDP support this program. They support the principal aims and objectives of it notwithstanding the fact it has destroyed the oil industry in Saskatchewan. They are so silly, stupid and doctrinaire in terms of attitude, they have not looked at the effect of the National Energy Program on the small entrepreneur, small industry, the welder or the fabricator, and they support it.

What freedom is there for those who are employed by these small companies and have lost their jobs? The program has destroyed that industry. It has not hurt the multinationals. It is hurting the small Canadian firms, the truckers, welders, cat operators, construction workers, service workers, rig hands, drillers, those who build the fences and rights-of-way. They are the ones who are affected. They are all Canadians who work for Canadian companies.

As my colleague said, this program is working in reverse. It is destroying the viable Canadian entreprise that has been associated with the oil industry and has been so successful. Exploration was down 25 per cent to 30 per cent in 1981. It will be down another 10 or 15 per cent in 1982. All of this is in the name of Canadianization. It is not working. It is doing directly the opposite. This is really nationalization.

I listened to a couple of NDP members who spoke last night. They are not concerned about Canadianization. Their bottom line is nationalization. That is what they want. If it walks, breathes or moves, they nationalize it. If it produces, by gosh, they nationalize it double! It just does not make sense.

At the same time, the results of this policy are forcing Canadians to pay for imported oil at the rate of 500,000 barrels a day while there are locked-in supplies in Saskatchewan and Alberta. It is estimated that by the end of April, some 300,000 barrels a day of surplus oil will be locked in, not being produced in Alberta. In Saskatchewan, some 50,000 barrels a day are locked in.

The wells are shut down. People are laid off. We are bringing in oil from OPEC countries, Venezuela and Mexico at $40 a barrel. The taxpayers are subsidizing at the rate of $17.32 a barrel while $23.50 a barrel oil is left in the ground. Our work people are being dislocated. They are out of jobs. Businesses are being closed. Foreclosures and bankruptcies are occurring.

We wonder why there is alienation in western Canada. The NDP will have to answer for it. They are part and parcel of the National Energy Program. They put this government in office and are continuing to keep it there. Let them answer the people of Saskatchewan and the rest of western Canada. There are massive lay-offs in the industry. It is not hurting the multinationals. I will tell you what it is doing, Mr. Speaker. It is further eroding our balance of payments, weakening the dollar, raising our interest rates, undermining investor confidence, creating further bitterness in this land and further division. I quote from an article in the Edmonton Journal:

> It has become a conventional wisdom in Canada's capital that private industry is essentially in the ripoff business and cannot be trusted. Only when industries fail and actually lay off thousands of workers do they gain credibility in Ottawa. If industries succeed, they attract suspicion among academic mandarins who see them as ripe for tax-picking.

I could include my socialist friends to my left in that category.

> And they attract the political sharks who smell money where it is politically cheap to get.

That outlines the current philosophy of this government. It certainly is the philosophy that is shared by those birds over there who have never had to go out and meet a payroll or produce anything. They have been basically living as parasites off the fat of the land.

What has the National Energy Program done to a constituency like mine? In two weeks in the community of Vermilion, a small fabricating firm, Bird Oil Limited, laid off 20 people. They were in the business of fabricating storage tanks for oil. Because of the shutdown of the wells, these 20 people were laid off.

In November, 1981 in Wainwright, Alberta a small firm called Jurassic, according to an article in the Star Chronicle of November 25, was quitting Canada. I quote from the article:

> "It was the hardest thing I've ever had to do."
>
> So says Jim Voll, who laid off 30 employees here and will take Wainwright-based Jerassic Well Servicing's remaining rigs south to Oklahoma.
>
> The decision was taken in the light of federal and provincial policies which continue to destroy the small operator, he said . . .
>
> Government-induced depression in the oil industry here has meant there's just too little work here to remain in business, he says.
> The Wainwright-based company had operated ten rigs from here, but sent six to the Oklahoma oilfields last spring. The final four will follow by the new year, Voll says, and the Wainwright office closed for good.

That is what is happening. In February, four Lloydminster firms went into receivership, displacing some 150 jobs. Petroserv Management, which also owns and operates Weldex Machine Ltd., Midway Oilfield Services Ltd. and G and W Oilfield Services Ltd. is now in the hands of a receiver. Why?

Because of the shutdown of the oil wells and the general depression in the oil industry.

There are hundreds of others, particularly throughout the heavy oil-producing area. These wells are very labour-intensive. They produce 20 to 30 barrels a day. This government with its buying policies would rather buy $40 a barrel oil from Venezuela and the OPEC countries and leave our oil shut in. These people are being forced to close their businesses and lay off people.

We all know of the number of rigs which have left this country; it has been cited many times. Between 235 and 240 oil drilling rigs have left Alberta and Saskatchewan to find work in the United States—in Oklahoma, Wyoming, Texas and other places. In addition, between 100 and 150 service rigs, each employing 40 to 50 people, are gone. It is like little factories being closed in western Canada. I wonder what the people of Ontario would say if they saw this happening before their eyes because of a deliberate government policy. It is a real tragedy that this is being allowed to happen in Canada.

Let us look at some other facts. This is what Bralorne Resources Limited said in its third quarter 1981 report:

> The strong growth trend in our United States operations continued while Canadian operations struggled as drilling activity in the third quarter was down by more than 50 per cent from the same period last year. If anything, the decline recorded in the third quarter exceeded that of the previous quarter. ... As a result, the United States percentage of total revenues has increased from slightly more than 50 per cent in the first three quarters of 1980 to approximately 65 per cent in the same period this year ...
>
> • Reflecting our policy of increased United States involvement, more than 80 per cent of our 1981 plant expenditures have been on United States facilities.

• (1620)

> While United States expenditures this year have more than doubled, Canadian expenditures have been halved as a direct result of current pricing and market conditions.

Let us look at the Houston Business Journal, a very interesting item, Mr. Speaker. It is headlined "Canadian Connection: Energy, Money, Politics Blur Borders". It points out that since the passage of the National Energy Program $2.5 billion of Canadian investment capital has found its way into the United States and much of it into the area around Houston.

In the same paper there is a statement from a Mr. Joe Tondue. He is quoted as saying:

> "Canadian money is moving in droves to Texas. I have joint ventures with three Canadian groups right now where they are paying all my costs and promotions in advance."

Then there is another man, Philip K. Sywden, who is quoted as saying:

> "We have seen quite a bit of Canadian money because of our high profile in Western Canada."

He goes on:

> Hundreds and hundreds of people who have invested left Canada and have invested in the United States. At least two dozen Canadian companies have opened up branch offices in the area around Houston.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I have another quote. It is from Energy Forum which substantiates the case that I am attempting to make. It says:

> —investors have come to believe that Canada simply cannot be trusted ... The record shows that development of energy resources in Canada is falling off, the Canadian dollar is weaker, Canada's economic growth is also being retarded and jobs are being exported to the U.S. All this means a reduced standard of living in both countries (although less so for the U.S.) and a serious injury to a friendship unique between nations.

It goes on to say:

> Joseph E. Seagram & Co. has already refused to repatriate upwards of $4 billion in investment capital to Canada because of the Canadian federal government's policies. This year more than 12 per cent of the oil and natural exploration gas in the U.S. will be produced by Canadian companies using workers and equipment that have shifted drilling to the U.S. and, if past experience is any indication, they will not return to Canada until the government alters course.
> In short, the Ottawa policies are having the exact opposite effect of their stated purpose.

Mr. Speaker, we have capital, men, equipment, machines and expertise flowing south of the border. We need that investment capital here, we need that expertise here, we need the job opportunities here. We must stop that flow; indeed, we must reverse that flow of Canadian investment capital south of the border. We must keep that investment capital here in Canada, invest it in Canadian projects and in Canadian enterprises, so that we can preserve the kind of Canadian economic independence that so many people in this House talk about, but who will really not back it up with positive policies.

The fact of the matter is that even Mr. Gorse Howarth, our distinguished head of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, is quoted in an article in the Toronto Star of April 1, 1982 as saying:

> Despite a dramatically high level of foreign ownership and control of Canadian industry, Canada has to drum up more business abroad if it wants to survive.

He talks about the need for additional investment capital in this country if we are going to be self-sufficient in energy and able to do those kinds of things which will provide a reasonable and decent standard of living for all Canadians, young and old included.

What about the consumer in all this, Mr. Speaker? We all naturally have to be concerned about the consumer, but the fact of the matter is that today, while our energy prices and our gasoline prices are on the increase, prices in the United States are on the decline. Ours are going up and theirs are going down. In the process, the consumer is being shafted.

Based on statistics which I have before me, the national average for the price of gasoline in December 1979 was $1.14 a gallon; that is the national average right across the country. As of March, 1982 it is exactly $2 a gallon; it has almost doubled in two years. That happened during a campaign which was to have promised cheap energy. As a matter of fact, the price for 1980 was to have been kept below 14 cents. We know that the prices have now doubled. So much for that promise as well. The consumer is indeed being ripped off.

Let us look at the producer. The farmers of Canada are now paying 60 cents a gallon for the diesel fuel that they burn in their tractors and in their combines. It has always been traditional and customary that the producers of food get some fair shake, some exemption, because they are not in a position to pass their additional costs along. The farmer pays 60 cents a gallon when he fills up his tractor. That money goes into the federal government's coffers. I call that a massive federal government tax rip-off. It should be examined and the tax be reduced. If we are going to pursue a cheap food policy as this government has said, the farmers of Canada must get a break, and a break they should receive.

What about natural gas prices? They too have doubled. In western Canada we use natural gas to heat our homes and we have seen a doubling in the price of our fuel bill. Natural gas has a direct impact on the price of fertilizer. Our fertilizer prices are up by $25 to $40 a ton, and that will increase to about $70 a ton at the end of the energy pricing agreement, because of the increase in the price of natural gas. And the price increase in natural gas is composed, to the extent of 75 per cent or 80 per cent, of federal government taxes.

There you have it, Mr. Speaker. No one has benefited from the National Energy Program—not the people who work in the industry, the people who own the industry or the people who consume the product. It has been an absolute and total disaster and an absolute and total failure; and, above all, it has been a bureaucratic nightmare, as my colleague from Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) pointed out in his original remarks. The fact of the matter is that the regulations, the myriad of forms and the unwieldy discretionary powers that are given into the hands of bureaucrats in terms of administering this particular program will make it absolutely nightmarish and nothing more than confusion and frustration.

When this bill was introduced by the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), he called it the climax of all the measures having to do with Canadianization. He talked about it being the ultimate in achieving all of those things that unanimously Canadians had endorsed during the election campaign of 1980 and continue to endorse.

All I have to say to you, Mr. Speaker, is that if that is the case why are we experiencing the massive exodus of men, equipment, machines and capital out of this country? Why are we experiencing the bankruptcies, the foreclosures, the shutting downs, the dislocation of employees? Why are we experiencing this frustration, this sense of alienation in western Canada? It is because it is seen that the National Energy Program is a direct attack upon the resources of western Canada. It is not achieving the goal for which it was intended. It is destroying a once proud and once viable Canadian energy industry.

This hodge-podge, bureaucratic nightmare that is supported by the NDP is going to continue to frustrate and destroy until it is withdrawn or fundamentally changed. Hopefully, with the common sense and good, sound judgment of Canadians across this country, we may have to wait only a year or 18 months for an election. I am sure that the resourcefulness and the enterprising spirit of western Canadians will be able to live it through somehow until we can turf out this outfit, that Liberal rump over there. If we can turf them out at the same time, we can get on with the job of building a Canada that is based on equal opportunities. We want to have a Canada in which there is fairness and equity in all regions and for all individuals, a Canada which will be governed equally from region to region rather than attacked at one end and favoured at the other. If we can survive until those changes are put into effect—and I am sure we can—there will certainly be better days ahead.

However, for the time being we have no choice but to condemn this measure because of the government's record in the past. We have no hope that this minister will change and see that he is out in his reckoning. This government is simply determined to forge on a course which has been destructive, and all we can do is point out, on behalf of our constituents and people in the industry, the fallacy of this particular measure. We hope there will be better days ahead, and I am sure there will be because they cannot get much worse than they are at the present time.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to Bill C-104 principally because quite unnecessarily it would give about $6.5 billion to the people in Canada and elsewhere who need it the least and will do the least good with it. The plan over the next five years is to give $6.5 billion to the private oil companies which already have received far too much by way of subsidy from Canadian working people. In this I am speaking particularly for the people of Spadina. There are no oil wells in Spadina, but there certainly are places at which the oil companies are making money. They get their money from the thousands of working people in Spadina and in the rest of the country. Those are the people who are subsidizing the oil companies.

Over the last few years oil companies have committed obvious rip-offs. The previous speaker whined about companies being accused of ripping off, but it has been established by the Bertrand inquiry that oil companies were guilty of ripping off about $12 billion from the Canadian public through rigging the prices of oil products.

Mr. Parker: The Conservatives support that.

Mr. Heap: Of course. The Conservatives support that as heartily as the Liberals. Over about 15 years oil companies ripped off at least $12 billion and, according to the Bertrand inquiry, they are continuing to do the same thing. These are the companies we are now asked to entrust with another $6.5 billion. These are the industries which boosted their assets from about $14.5 billion in 1973 to $54.5 billion in 1980. In seven years those assets multiplied four times, and the industry is complaining that multiplying assets four times in seven years is not enough.

In spite of the whining we hear from the far right in this House, according to government estimates, in general the prices and tax policies have provided the industry with the cash flow necessary to finance its expenditures. This means that the oil consumer and the Canadian taxpayer have financed virtually all of the substantial expansion of this industry. This continued into last year. During the first six months of 1981 a few oil companies took over several other oil companies, to the tune of $5 billion. That was only half a year's worth. At the end of that about 70 per cent of the industry was still foreign owned and 70 per cent was still foreign controlled. So much for the Canadianization program of this government.

The government has not seriously tried to put the industry under the control of the Canadian people. It has simply sought to benefit a few individual Canadians by having Canadians buy the industry a second time after it had subsidized the industry over the past decades. The government has allowed the purchase of Canadian control by using Canadians' money against themselves. Having allowed all this to happen at the hands of foreign owners, the government would now like to force Canadian workers to pay for the industry again in order to buy it back. This is not for Canadian workers who are paying the taxes, but it is to buy the industry back for some hungry Canadian entrepreneurs who would like to be little local Rockefellers.

For example, over the past four years the tax concessions to this sector were worth a total of about $13 billion, yet during those years the industry paid only about $5 billion in taxes. In other words, the industry received back better than two dollars for every one dollar it paid in taxes. That is the kind of subsidy the industry has been given by all the other Canadians who are not owners of the oil industry.

The effective tax rate proposed for the oil industry would be about 10 per cent; that is to say, 36 per cent but down to 10 per cent after we knock off all the gifts the government has been giving and will give increasingly to oil companies. This compares with the married taxpayer with two children and an income of $25,000 who has to pay 18 per cent. If a company earns several billion or several million, it pays only 10 per cent in reality, and the people to the extreme right are complaining that oil companies are being hard done by.

Mr. Taylor: We are complaining that the people are being hard done by.

Mr. Heap: If the tax concessions were ended, the federal government would be about $4 billion better off, and we could do something useful with that money for the people of Canada. We could restore the nearly $1.5 billion which was just chopped out of the annual payments from the federal government to the provinces. We could extend aid to post-secondary education, which is less in this country than it is in the countries with which we have to compete industrially. We could extend the daycare, which certain cabinet ministers keep promising every couple of months they will do but do not do it. We could extend pensions, which they also promise every two or three months to do without doing it. Those would be real benefits to the working people of Canada, but we do not get them because they are carted away by multinational oil companies.

There is another way of reckoning what has happened. In the year 1979 alone, for example, tax revenues from the petroleum industry forgone—that is, tax gifts to the petroleum industry—totalled $3.4 billion, but the industry's taxes amounted to only $1.4 billion. In other words, in that one year all the other taxpayers of Canada were required to subsidize the oil companies to the tune of $2 billion.

Mr. Parker: That is Conservative policy too.

Mr. Heap: That is Conservative policy and Liberal policy. The Conservatives preach it; the Liberals practice it. The fact is that this is being continued and, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said a couple of years ago in Toronto:

> It is true we have imposed new taxes on the oil industry . . . There have been complaints about this by the oil companies since the budget was brought down. But I can honestly say that their position will be no worse in 1981 than it was in 1979, perhaps even better.

He should know. Past tax gifts to corporations have given them far more than they needed. For example, the $2 billion we gave them a couple of years ago—and this is continuing—was not enough to induce them, according to my hon. friends to the right, to go on drilling for oil. My hon. friends would like us to give them $4 billion or $10 billion and then beg them to come back. In fact, there is no reason to suppose that that will get us any more oil, even if it is more oil that we need.

• (1640)

The government's proposal is that for every dollar the oil companies put up in most cases in Canada, the taxpayer would put up $4; but the taxpayer would get only 25 per cent equity in return. It is the only kind of investment where the major investor gets only a trifling equity and a trifling return.

The maximum benefit for a Canadian-owned company would be 93 cents on the dollar, and even for a multinational company the maximum benefit has risen, so that instead of paying 37 cents on the dollar it will now only have to pay 28 cents. All the rest is paid by the working people of this country.

Mr. Parker: That could only happen in Canada.

Mr. Heap: They simply do not need it, Mr. Speaker. They will take it if we give it to them. If we are stupid enough to let them, they will take it away. Countries like Norway do not give it at that rate. Norway will take up to 70 per cent interest in any block of land that it does not already hold if the oil companies find oil on it. That is because the oil belongs to the people of Norway. In Mexico the oil industry has been nationalized for over 40 years and now we see that country moving ahead.

Only a year ago the minister said that "this regime is more favourable to foreign investment than virtually any other country in the world." In that he is stating the truth, or perhaps he is even understating it. In Canada, the return to a taxable foreign company would be 27.7 per cent; to a Canadian company that is taxable it would be 29.7 per cent and to a Canadian company that is not taxable it would be 26.9 per cent. The lowest return on any of these would be that 26.9 per cent. In Norway it is only 18.3 per cent and in the United Kingdom it is 24.4 per cent.

We hear tear-jerking stories about the poor oil rig owners having to take their rigs down to Oklahoma. In Canada they were going to get 26.9 per cent so they went to Oklahoma where they will get only 21.6 per cent!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Nonsense. Get your facts straight. Tell the truth for a change.

Mr. Heap: They are going to get almost 6 per cent less in Oklahoma, but supposedly if we gave them more in Canada they would come back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: The jackals to my right have not told us how much more we would have to give them to bring them back to Canada. The fact is that these companies have now so much cash flow—more than they find it worth using for this country's development of oil—

Mr. Taylor: Complete lies.

Mr. Heap: —that they will probably begin doing what they have already done in the United States. Since they have 30 per cent of the revenue in this country now, they will probably begin doing what they are doing in the United States and unfairly start buying into other industries outside the energy field.

Mr. Taylor: Where do you get that stuff? In fairy tales?

Mr. Heap: Not only were all these tax subsidies given but there is another kind of subsidy that the working people of this country have been giving the oil companies for many years. Although the oil companies do not have any wells in Spadina, they have something more valuable—their head offices. Many of the people in Spadina built those head offices and banks that are the blood brothers of the oil companies—if they have any blood.

There are about 20,000 or 25,000 people who clean buildings in downtown Toronto—the oil companies and other head offices. These are mostly immigrant Portuguese housewives who spend about five and a half hours in the evening, five nights a week, cleaning those buildings. If they are lucky, after their husbands get home from their construction work they leave their families and go out to clean the buildings, coming home after eleven o'clock.

I have seen some of the conditions under which they work. As a representative of the board of health several years ago, I was called down to look into a dispute. The women were being forced to use stinking, used garbage bags that had been filled and emptied the night before. They were being told to reuse them because the contract cleaning company was too cheap to buy more bags. These women earn the minimum wage or, if they are lucky, 10 or 20 cents above.

There are also probably around 5,000 hospital workers in the Spadina area. We will not have up-to-date figures until the government releases the result of last year's census. There are probably another 10,000 restaurant and entertainment workers. I am not talking about the highly paid singers but about the people who keep the establishments going. Then there are about 10,000 workers in the clothing and other manufacturing trades in Spadina. This is without the taxi drivers, the caretakers, the file clerks and servicemen of all kinds. There would be about 50,000 of these workers, almost all non-unionized and almost all on very low pay. Toronto has the lowest minimum wage of any city with over 500,000 population in Canada. In fact, the only other jurisdiction I know of with such a low minimum wage is the federal government, where it is $3.50 an hour.

If we estimate that these workers make on average about $4 per hour and work on average a 40-hour week, then in a year they earn in the range of $8,000. That is not much money on which to raise a family, especially with the housing and rental prices they have to pay in Toronto.

But there is more to it, Mr. Speaker. The work they do as cleaners is recognized at least in one part of the federal jurisdiction, the CBC where there is a union, as being worth $6.50 an hour. So most of these workers are in fact working for about $2.50 less than the fair wage. Add to that the fact that in a year they have to pay about $200 in taxes, about $250 in transit fares and probably $3,500 or $4,000 for daycare, and it all adds up. They may not be able to pay that much for daycare and sometimes what they get is rotten care. I am talking about the value of the work that is done to look after a kid or the value of the work that has to be done later done to repair the damage when the kid is not properly looked after, when his parents have to work.

Altogether these workers are subsidizing their employers to the extent of about $9,000 per year if you consider what they are paid, subtracted from the value of their work and the cost to them of performing their work. Instead of being paid $8,000 they ought to be paid about $17,000 if you calculate it on the basis of a low union wage, the cost of looking after their children, the cost of getting to work and taxes. The average person there is subsidizing these companies by about $9,000 per year, and there are about 50,000 of them. That makes a subsidy of about $450 million which the banks, oil companies and some of their confrères are taking away from the working people in downtown Toronto.

Senator Olson, who of course does not undertake to meet workers and ask for their vote, is appointed to be in charge of economic development and he says these are unproductive workers. A few weeks ago he said we are going to get rid of these industries, we are going to stop propping up unproductive industries such as the clothing industry and so on. What he means is that these workers are low paid, and therefore he calls them unproductive. In fact, these workers are subsidizing his favourite, the oil industry. If there is anything which should be phased out on the basis of productivity or on the basis of who is subsidizing whom, it is not the clothing workers, building cleaners or restaurant workers; it is the oil companies. The only reason in the practical sense why the oil companies continue to receive such gifts from the federal government, whether it is Liberal or Conservative, is that they are so reliable in their gifts at election time.

Mr. Taylor: How much did you get from the labour unions?

Mr. Heap: For example, in just one year the major companies gave $388,166 to the Conservative Party. They gave $332,942 to the Liberal party.

Mr. Parker: They protect themselves on both sides of the House.

Mr. Heap: Of course. They do not know which one will win the election—

Mr. Guilbault: We know you won't.

Mr. Heap: —but they know whichever one it is, it will give them the taxpayers' money. These people attempted to do the usual thing in Spadina last summer, but not all the money of the oil companies and the banks could elect Jim Coutts in Spadina, last summer or any other summer.

Mr. Taylor: You were elected by a minority.

Mr. Heap: The fact is that the working people of this country are fed up with subsidizing the banks, the oil companies, the Tories and the Liberals. Our position is getting more and more support. What we are saying is, do not give that $6.5 billion to the private oil companies. If that money is going to be spent in the oil business by Canadian taxpayers, it should be to take control of companies like Imperial Oil. It would be much better to have the major oil companies in Canada controlled by Canada's elected representatives than to have it controlled by the unelected representatives such as Rockefeller.

With that money we could put control of the oil industry in the hands of the Canadian people, not in the hands of the buddies of the Conservatives or Liberals who happen to be the chief shareholders of Nova, Dome, Imperial and companies like that. We could then bring the revenue back to the people from whom it originally came—the building cleaners, taxi drivers, restaurant workers, construction workers and school teachers, the people who produced that $6.5 billion in taxes. They need it for health care, which this government is helping to destroy, and which the Conservative Party would probably destroy a little faster if it had the chance. The people need it for education, which again this government is destroying, as is the Conservative government in Ontario. They need it to institute daycare for the children of working parents, which is becoming a widespread need in this country as more and more families are forced to have two breadwinners. They need it in order to provide low rental housing, which the owners of the very large development companies refuse to provide.

This $6.5 billion comes from the ordinary working people of Canada. It should be spent on their behalf, not on behalf of the Gallaghers, the Rockefellers, the Blairs, and the get-rich-quick boys who would like to have private ownership paid for by the public. It is public money, it should be under public control and benefit the public.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements—Amount of transfers to provinces; the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges)—Government Annuities—Yield to purchasers. (b) Request that government redeem low yielding annuities; the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—Pipelines—Delay in construction of Alaska Gas Pipeline. (b) Construction guarantees.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-104, respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination and to amend the Foreign Investment Review Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, once again it is my privilege, or my lot, to follow one of my friends on the left. We sometimes call these people socialists, but this was a Marxist-Leninist speech by the hon. member. He told us the workers have no control in this country, and the downtrodden are being abused by Liberals, Conservatives and free enterprisers. I have never been one to make apologies for free enterprise and enlightened capitalism, but I would like to ask the hon. member, who just said the people of Canada are waking up and becoming wise to all the schemes that the Liberals and Conservatives have imposed on them, why it is that in the most recent election in Newfoundland the NDP popular vote dropped from 10 per cent to 3.5 per cent?

Mr. Kempling: The people got wise.

Mr. Oberle: Now, there is a really rich province. There are a lot of workers there who are really rich, yet the NDP popular vote dropped to 3.5 per cent.

Mr. Fulton: What about Manitoba?

Mr. Oberle: These people only enjoy support in areas where there are entrepreneurs, the people that have built this country, that they can leech off of. That is why they have one member from Newfoundland, and that is why they are going to lose the Saskatchewan election a week from now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: Just listen to them. How delightful; if you do not see them, you hear them! What nonsense. Imagine, the cleaning women employed by the multinational oil companies in Toronto are working at a minimum wage. They are all immigrant women and working at the minimum wage. The cleaning women who work for the CBC are paid three times as much as the people working for the oil companies. He has ignored the fact that the CBC gets close to $1 billion of taxpayers' subsidy every year. He talks about subsidies to the oil companies; what about the subsidies to the CBC?

We have a news team which comes on every night after the news on "The Journal", two women who have been there for ten months and they now need a five-month rest. This is exciting, this is wonderful. The hon. member wants to have complete control of every resource company in Canada so that in some magical way they can redistribute the wealth generated by their activities. The question is, who is going to carry out the activity? I would like to ask the hon. member how much control he exercised over Petro-Canada. We own it, it is ours whether we like it or not, and I would like to know how much control he exercised over it when it bought Petrofina for $1.5 billion. We know Imperial Oil would not have bought it. If Imperial Oil had, it would not have bought a single barrel of new oil. Imperial Oil would not have created a single new job or new enterprise of any kind because it was already in existence.

• (1700)

The hon. member tells us that the oil companies are going to earn $6.5 billion over the next five years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kristiansen: It was just sold out yesterday by your friends in Victoria. Ask them.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, is it not delightful to get under the skin of the members of the little red rump of the Liberals? The hon. member is talking about the multinationals, the woodworkers and the oil workers. I do not hear the oil workers who are working complaining. I do not hear them at all. I do not hear them talking about multinational unions and the control that American unions exercise over the workers in this country, or about the disunity that exists. I do not hear these great spokesmen of the workers and the downtrodden talking about that.

Let me return to the $6.5 billion which the multinational oil companies are going to be earning over the next five years. We know, and the statistics bear this out, that the price of a litre or of a gallon of oil is broken down in a way where the commercial value of the product is roughly 32 per cent of the pump price. This means that if the oil companies earn $6.5 billion over the next five years, the federal and provincial governments will earn $13 billion. That is my arithmetic.

Mr. Heap: It is going back to the oil companies.

Mr. Oberle: If the hon. member would sit down and figure it out, he would realize that. Oil companies have to drill for oil, bring it to the surface, they have to refine it, they have to load it on to trucks after refining and haul it to service stations. No matter what day the oil reaches the gas station, the service station operator has to be there whether it is seven o'clock in the morning, eight o'clock in the morning or whatever. The operator puts it in your car and washes your windshield. All of this is done for about 16 cents per litre.

The federal government and the provincial government are earning from the same activity 26 cents a litre. But they get this 26 cents without doing a thing. Not only that, there is a margin of profit in the 16 cents which the oil companies receive from each litre. The government will tell them how to invest and reinvest the small margin of profit that is left. What more controls do Canadians need? Why is it that we have to invest another $100 billion of taxpayers' money to attain the same kind of control that we already have?

Since visiting my constituency I am now in the process of putting together a private member's bill which will make it mandatory under the products labelling act that the price be broken down of a consumer product which is heavily controlled by governments and shown on the package. After all, the components of a product have to be listed on the package, and must be done in both official languages. Why should the price of gasoline not be broken down? It should be shown that 16 cents a litre is the commercial value, that the provinces keep 13 cents or 14 cents for themselves for doing nothing and the federal government keeps 12 cents for itself for doing nothing.

Why should we not list the commercial cost of a bottle of rum? A bottle of rum imported from Jamaica costs roughly $3.10. That rum is sold in liquor stores for $19 or $20. Why should consumers not know what their actual tax bill is?

Workers pay for this tax. So do people who put gasoline in their cars to drive to work. What about the farmers who put gasoline and diesel fuel into their tractors and their cars as part of their job of producing food which is nutritious and plentiful? Why should consumers not know what the government is already up to? That is why I am putting together this private member's bill. I recommend it to all members. If we had these kinds of requirements it would make very interesting reading and the people would know exactly where their money is going.

The National Energy Program was designed to achieve a 50 per cent or better Canadian ownership content. I have mentioned before that Canadian ownership content has to be defined. The socialists in this chamber have not yet done that. It means government ownership. There are no ifs, ands or buts about that. Canadian ownership would mean that purchase of shares in Petro-Canada or any other corporation would be restricted to Canadians only or that only wholly Canadian-owned companies could operate in Canada lands or in the oil patch. That would be Canadian ownership. But Bill C-48, which is the National Energy Program, is designed to do nothing else but give governments complete ownership of this important sector of our economy. The National Energy Program will not give us energy self-sufficiency by 1990.

Oil is not a tool of production, nor is energy, but you certainly need oil to grease the machine used for that production. We know the Marxist theory that the people have to have control of the tools of production. Labour produces wealth. Labour multiplied by the machine produces more wealth. The government has to have control and ownership of the machine. For the life of me I cannot believe that intelligent people here would tell us that all will be well as soon as we have, as this government or any other government has, even a Conservative government, control and ownership of all the tools of production.

Why is all not well in the Soviet Union or for that matter any other socialist country in the world? Governments own all the resources in socialist countries.

Mr. Mazankowski: They cannot feed themselves.

Mr. Oberle: Those are the countries that own all their agricultural lands. It is 63 years since the revolution in the Soviet Union, but the Soviet Union has had 63 consecutive crop failures. The gods must have been really angry at the people in the Soviet Union. Imagine, Mr. Speaker—they have had 63 consecutive crop failures! Those failures occurred immediately following the period when the Ukraine fed all of Europe. Then there was the revolution and 63 consecutive crop failures followed.

I suggest that there is something else at play. There is complete Russian ownership of the oil, of the energy sector, of the lumber industry and of the agricultural sector. In fact, in every other resource sector the Soviet Union has complete ownership. That is why the people in the Soviet Union are starving. That is why the Soviet Union has to import wheat from Canada and from the United States. The Soviet Union will not be importing wheat from Canada much longer if these fellows to my left have too much influence on those opposite. They have already asserted too much influence on them. They seem to believe that the state has to own the tool of production so that everything can be equitably redistributed without knowing whether or not people produce or contribute anything to the economy. We all know what the end effect of that kind of policy would be.

We are not here to make excuses for the multinational oil companies if they have been irresponsible. Some have. It is no one's fault but theirs because we have total control over them. We tell them where to drill for oil. We tell them if they find any. It is very seldom they do. We tell them how much to recover, where to deliver it and how much to charge for it. We set the wellhead price, we set the pump price. We do all that. Why do we have to own it?

• (1710)

The government is acting with such indecent haste trying to get the bill through the House because we are already learning the effects of the National Energy Program. The longer it takes, the more people will become aware of what is happening, particularly when this monstrosity of a bill is in place. Approximately $6.5 billion of Canadian investment capital has left the country for the United States. We realize the effects that this will have on the poor workers of the United States. It has been given back to free enterprise. The people of the United States will be ripped off. In the short period of one year since the NEP was announced and parts of it implemented, there has been a decrease in the price of gasoline in the United States. But our prices are still increasing because, after all, we have ownership in Canada! With that $6.5 billion moved Canadian expertise, Canadian technology and Canadian jobs.

I should like to cite one example. Fort St. John is in my constituency—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: If hon. members listened, they might learn something. The truth always hurts. It certainly hurts those people in the corner. The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) should listen to what I am saying. I do not know why the people of that riding wanted to elect this man to the House of Commons rather than Jim Coutts who had the same theories as he. He wanted to nationalize the farming industry. He did not believe in private ownership of farms or private property. He wanted to do the same things as the hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Heap: The Tories placed third in Spadina.

Mr. Oberle: I do not know why the people of Spadina wanted the hon. member. At least Mr. Coutts would have had some influence on the other side. Perhaps he would have been able to do these things much faster. As we all know, Canadians will not stand for this radical alternative to a time-honoured system which has served our country well. This system has made us one of the leading industrial nations of the world and one of the most industrious and prosperous peoples of the world.

Returning to the effects of the National Energy Program in some communities, one of these communities is located in my constituency. The entire area of British Columbia which produces oil and natural gas is within my constituency. In Fort St. John and the general northeastern area of British Columbia a couple of years ago 120 oil and gas rigs were active. Each one of these rigs had roughly 60 to 65 jobs attached to it. As we all know, there were incredible spin-off effects on service industries. For example, there were mud companies, machine shops, testing companies, water trucks which ran back and forth, welders and trucking companies which moved the rigs. All these spin-off effects have gone. Right now there are 18 rigs working in that entire area of British Columbia. In fact, a couple of years ago there were some Petro-Canada rigs working in northeastern British Columbia, but there are no such rigs working there now.

An hon. Member: They have gone offshore.

Mr. Oberle: They have gone to Senegal and to the North Sea; this is where Petro-Canada is active. Esso Canada is not active in Senegal or the North Sea. It is only active in Canada because multinational companies are active in these other areas and there is no way that Esso Canada can go there.

What are the effects of this massive downturn in the activities of this important industry? The effects are devastating. For example, there have been bankruptcies. We heard some statistics this morning, but specifically there was an increase in unemployment in Fort St. John to 160 per cent from the first three months of January, February and March of 1981 to the first three months of this year. A major car dealer has gone bankrupt. A lifetime of work was invested in this business which was once prosperous and doing well, and the dealer has gone into receivership. He responded to what he heard in the House of Commons a couple of years ago, namely a firm commitment by government that Canada would achieve energy self-sufficiency by 1990. The government indicated that this would require an investment of somewhere between $300 billion and $500 billion, and that all of us would have to use the entrepreneurial spirit for which we are famous to invent new ways to find energy.

My area responded; a lot happened. There was an increase in the number of hotel rooms in Fort St. John from 320 to 1,100 in two years. Now several of the major hotels, including a Holiday Inn, are in receivership. The good local people who invested in motels, coffee shops and machine shops are now trying to find ways to deduct their losses from income tax. This is difficult as they are not paying any income tax, since they have no income.

As I say, the effects are devastating. We will not achieve energy self-sufficiency by 1990. In fact, we will be importing more than 50 per cent of our requirements by 1990 if we proceed with the program. The best we could hope for is that world energy prices continue to decline and that the import compensation which is paid so that people can heat their homes will not be too onerous on us. When I say "onerous on us", I am talking about the government. Of course, the government cannot give anything away which it has not first taken from someone else. I am speaking more about those of us in the west, particularly in the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta, who are paying these import compensation charges, because we are the only "have" provinces in Canada; every other province is in the "have not" category.

It is utterly amazing to sit here in good conscience, knowing the effects of the NEP, assiduously and stubbornly pushing ahead with the scheme. If there were any light at the end of the tunnel, if it were necessary to destroy in order to rebuild, I could understand it. As in other areas of the economy, if it were an attempt to rearrange the attitudes of people to make them more conscious of the realities of the modern world, I could understand it. But that is not the case.

We had a good industry. A good percentage of the industry was already Canadian. There is a great misconception that the oil sector is totally controlled by multinational companies. Although multinational companies have sometimes been very irresponsible in the arrangement of their corporate structures and the behaviour of their corporate bureaucrats in relation to small businessmen with whom they work in the oil patch, they have always known and understood that the best and most productive way to achieve new wealth and to get the job done is through private enterprise. That is why you do not see an oil rig company out there directly servicing an oil rig; they leave that to private enterprise.

• (1720)

Until a few years ago, when they had to react to certain legislation which was brought in by that socialist government on the other side, they always knew that the best way to sell gas and the best person to be the final chain in the link was an entrepreneur. That is why the service station operator is a private businessman. The oil companies knew that this was the best, most productive and efficient way to deliver oil and gas to the producer. The oil companies always knew that and it is unfortunate that this government does not understand it. Instead, this government wants to tear down this industry and replace it with some radical alternative which has never worked anywhere else in the world. It knows what the effects will be but it is so stubborn in its attempts to break the present system apart in order to try something which we all know will not work.

Socialism has never worked anywhere and those members to my left should know that. They can look anywhere in the world where there is a socialist or communist government and see that there are people starving, being deprived and experiencing shortages in the supply of important consumer goods. If those people can obtain some goods they must buy them in the black market and pay excessive prices for them.

An hon. Member: When they are exploited they have to turn to something.

Mr. Oberle: Those members know that people are exploited and workers are exploited by insensitive centralist, socialist government bureaucracies ten times more than workers who have a choice to work in one free enterprise establishment or another.

The answer is not for all Canadian workers to begin working for the Canadian government. In five years the government will not have enough money to take steps to regain its position in world markets—a position which provided a standard of living which was number three in the world and is now twelve or thirteen. The answer will not be found in government ownership. The answer is in the return of the inspiration of the free spirit and the incentives required for individuals to invest in themselves and their country in order to restore in Canadians a confidence in their ability to produce. The first step towards that goal is to instil confidence in Canadians once again. Without that confidence I am very much afraid that we will have to continue to hope that the Americans will emerge from their dilemma and that their prosperity, which was based on these old principles, will once again spill over into our country.

The hon. member also indicated that in the last ten years the oil companies have increased their wealth by four times. What he neglected to say was that the government has increased its size tenfold during the same period. That is a clear indication of where we are heading, which is toward disaster unless we all screw up our courage. I am particularly looking for the backbenchers in the government to screw up their courage and say that enough is enough. They are representing ridings in the great provinces of Quebec and Ontario where unemployment is far greater than the national average. Businesses in those provinces which produced pipelines for the west, equipment for wells and tools used in the oil patch are going bankrupt because there is no demand. Let those Liberal backbenchers screw up their courage and stand up to the people who are determined to replace our time-honoured system with this radical alternative of government control and ownership, centralist control and socialism. Time is running out. It is time for us and for all Canadians to wake up and call an end to this incredible nonsense.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. It is interesting to note that the official opposition, the Conservative party of Canada, are opposed to providing moneys under the petroleum incentives program to the oil and gas industry in Canada. Similarly, it is interesting to note that the New Democratic Party of Canada is opposed to this particular piece of legislation as well.

Unfortunately, a number of events have taken place in the last twenty-four hours, particularly with respect to the words used by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). At best, I think it can be said that his remarks regarding the role of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) in providing a direction for Canadians and the government relating to our energy policy has not only been uncomplimentary but bordering on unparliamentary. He made reference to the "battle of the bells". He stated that he would have prevented that battle if he had been assured that this particular piece of legislation on the petroleum incentives program would be given quick passage. I do not wish to debate the substance of his remarks while that hon. member is not in the House, so I will simply refer him to the remarks made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which were recorded in Hansard on March 1, 1982. I believe that clarifies beyond a shadow of a doubt what transpired between the minister and himself.

By objecting to this particular piece of legislation and voting against it, it is evident that the Conservatives are indicating to the oil and gas industry that they will not provide any incentives for exploration and development. I believe it is shameful that they seem to be speaking out of both sides of their mouths. While they say they support the oil and gas industry, when it comes to providing actual incentives they either do not take a position, or if they do, it is not a favourable one for the industry.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre talked about the goal of Canadianization and how he agreed with that goal. Unfortunately, he did not agree with the process for achieving Canadianization. I suggest to him that there is no easy process to accomplish the Canadianization goal. Canadianization has been talked about for many years in Canada. In order to achieve this we will have to go through some difficult times and address a number of concerns over a period of time.

The hon. member also took the opportunity to greatly criticize the officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I call that criticism a very cheap shot and very unbecoming of a Member of Parliament. I think each hon. member of this House, regardless of on what side he or she may sit, should hold that hon. member in shame for such despicable and uncomplimentary remarks.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre also made a statement of the effect that there are too many forms to be filled out and too many regulations to be complied with. I suppose if the hon. member had his wish the Government of Canada would provide large sums of money to the oil and gas industry, in excess of a billion dollars, without any strings, conditions, rules or guidelines attached. I ask members of the House, is that responsible government? Inevitably it is not. Nor it is the intention of this government.

• (1730)

Of course, representing his party, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), that great mini-giant of the working class people of Canada, came to this chamber and said to the Parliament of Canada that he was very concerned that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was not here while he was giving his speech. Therefore, he wanted to call for a quorum and he called for a quorum last night. Your Honour knows what happened when he called for the quorum. He and other hon. members in his party, each and every one, left the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Dingwall: It was suggested, not by me, that perhaps the reason for calling the quorum was that the hon. member had a more important engagement to attend and that this particular piece of legislation, as it affects energy in Canada, was not a priority with him or his party. I do not know if that is true, but I think the record should very clearly show that the NDP called a quorum. All its members vacated the House of Commons. A quorum was called, we had sufficient numbers, and then we came back and resumed debate. That was shameful conduct on the part of the NDP and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: I will not quote the hon. member, but the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway had the audacity to suggest that perhaps there was an intellectual—I use that term quite loosely—understanding between his party and the government of the province of Quebec, when he referred to Rene Levesque. Is that where the NDP stands? I ask that question quite sincerely.

We have made encouraging progress toward our goal of achieving at least 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990. In the past year, with the changes from foreign to Canadian control of such large companies as Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Limited, Aquitaine Company of Canada Limited and Petrofina of Canada Limited, foreign control declined by about 10.5 per cent to a level of approximately 67.2 per cent. At the same time, the level of foreign ownership of upstream production revenue was 65.5 per cent, a drop of 6.5 percentage points in one year.

While the purchases of foreign-owned oil companies are vital to the government's Canadianization plan; they are not the only means. This bill provides another means by which Canadians can take charge of their oil and gas industry.

There have been some concerns raised by hon. members of the official opposition that the energy legislation, and particularly the bill which is now before us, is discriminatory toward the oil and gas industry in the United States. However, I wish to lay on the record a quote of the former President of the United States, Richard Nixon, who told this House in no uncertain terms on April 14, 1972, that:

> No self-respecting nation can or should accept the proposition that it should always be economically dependent upon any other nation. Let us recognize once and for all that the only basis for a sound and healthy relationship between our two proud peoples is to find a pattern of economic interaction which is beneficial to both our countries and which respects Canada's right to chart its own economic course.

I think that statement tells it all. Mr. Nixon made that statement ten years ago. However, I do not have to tell hon. members of this House that Canada still faces the situation whereby we are still dependent upon other nations. This is particularly true in the oil and gas industry.

The petroleum incentives program is a very positive program—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: —which offers incentives to Canadians to participate in their own industry. I can understand why the New Democratic Party opposes this. It would perhaps prefer that depletion allowances continue for the multinational oil companies. Then members of that party would perhaps have an opportunity to sit on the board of directors of those companies. That is probably what they want.

Mr. Kempling: Like Tommy Douglas.

Mr. Dingwall: This petroleum incentives program is one which we believe will lead to increased Canadian control and less dependence on foreign ownership. Our intent, as emphasized in the National Energy Program, is to mobilize predominantly private Canadian investment in the oil and gas industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more then five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde), which was agreed to on the following division:

MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL CONSUMPTION STANDARDS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-107 respecting motor vehicle fuel consumption standards be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

He said: Mr. Speaker with the legislation before the House at the present time the government is acting on a longstanding commitment to Canadians to address the problem of heavy consumption of fuel by motor vehicles. This legislation, the Motor Vehicle Fuel Consumption Standards Act, was first promised in 1976. Since then, as hon. members know, the government has provided a voluntary program while work on drafting and refining the legislation was carried on by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Transport. During that time we have had an American model to consider but not to follow slavishly.

The National Energy Program recognized that transportation uses more oil than any other sector and that conservation efforts would be crucial to moderating that demand. By world standards we waste fuel in this country, so we need an effective program of managing consumption. That is what is stated in the following section of the National Energy Program:

> In Canada, standards have been voluntary. However, it has become increasingly clear that the automobiles constructed to suit United States legislative standards do not necessarily reflect the realities of vehicle operation in the colder Canadian climate, nor do they take cognizance of the relation between Canadian fuel types, feedstocks and motor vehicle fuel requirements. As part of a general conservation and liquid fuels policy, Canada will develop its own standards.

This legislation comes to grips with a persistent headache amongst conservationists. We are all familiar with North America's love affair with the automobile and how extensive that torrid relationship has become. In Canada the use of automobiles is more than just whim or fancy. Our country's population is flung across an awesome latitude, and transportation is vital to our way of life.

Much has already been accomplished. One would have to be blind not to see the changes that have taken place in car size and horsepower in recent years. The problem is not so easily solved, however. People have to be shown the substitute fuels that exist and they have to be encouraged to ease up on the accelerator and to make trips count when they pull out of the laneway. They also need information that will enable them to choose vehicles that best suit their needs and resources.

This legislation will make that information available and give the government the ability to make sure the choices are as attractive as possible.

To illustrate the progress that has been achieved, let me give you a few statistics, Mr. Speaker. In 1978 we estimate that new passenger cars in Canada had an average fuel consumption of 11.5 litres per 100 kilometres. Last year that had dropped to 9.5 litres per 100 kilometres, and this year we expect it to be down to 8.5 litres. Such progress is encouraging but it is far from enough. We have to do much more to reduce motor vehicle consumption than we have been able to accomplish with this voluntary program so far. Why? Because last year Canadian consumption of motor gasoline amounted to a staggering 225 million barrels.

● (1820)

I hardly need to remind anyone in this chamber of how important this bill is to our energy program. Throughout the NEP the effort to enhance both supply and conservation is evident. Here we are adopting yet another method to cut into oil imports and preserve for as long as we can the petroleum resources available to us. The transportation sector represents a staggering consumption of fuel. There were approximately seven million private cars on the road in Canada in 1980. They burned somewhere between 18 and 19 billion litres of gasoline travelling an estimated 112 billion kilometres. These statistics do not include trucks or cars in commercial use.

[Translation]

More oil is required in this transportation sector than in any other, and although other fuels such as propane can be substituted for gasoline, this is not sufficient, at least not in the short term. Once again, we must save energy. Since substitutes are known, in abundant supply and ready for immediate use, it is the National Energy Program's aim to provide for efficient management of the demand for oil products in this sector. We shall be able to stabilize, and even reduce, the demand for oil products to a considerable extent through the proposed legislation on motor vehicle fuel consumption standards which is aimed at saving our energy resources. This additional authority would make existing voluntary guidelines for fuel consumption standards official and would give force of law to compulsory standards, should they prove to be desirable or necessary in the future. There are already signs of change in this sector, one example being the installation of relatively inexpensive aerodynamic deflectors on tractor-trailers, which help cut down on fuel consumption.

Carpool programs appear to be spreading, and are another way of reducing our transportation fuel requirements. However, not only the drivers' attitude must be changed. Driving itself must be rethought and revolutionized. This bill is therefore proposing a program that takes into account Canadian conditions and requirements on the basis of which the automobile industry will design and manufacture the cars of this decade. In 1975, the American government adopted legislation that set fuel consumption standards for cars. It is up to the manufacturers and importers to ensure that average consumption, weighted by the number of cars sold each year, meets annual standards. Since these standards are becoming increasingly stricter, the industry has been obliged to change the design of North American cars. Increasingly, however, cars manufactured to U.S. standards do not allow for the differences in climate and fuel encountered in Canada. Because of our energy policy, we need a made-in-Canada program. The bill on motor vehicle fuel consumption standards will authorize the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to continue the voluntary fuel consumption program.

The first part of the Act provides that a fuel consumption number will be given to each vehicle sold in Canada. The numbers will be used on information stickers for each vehicle and also to provide data for the Transport Canada transportation fuel consumption guide. The same figures will also be used by the Minister of Transport to calculate the fuel consumption of vehicles sold by manufacturers in Canada.

The vehicle categories covered by the legislation are to be general. For instance, private cars will form one category. The present voluntary program sets average motor vehicle fuel consumption standards for a company for every year up to 1985. Companies can reduce fuel consumption by selling more energy-saving cars or by refining each model in this respect at the design stage.

The government has decided that the program will remain voluntary unless companies fail to co-operate.

[English]

So as to hammer the point home, the authority to set standards and impose penalties is contained in the act. But the government does not intend that these provisions should be proclaimed. Just having written these sections into the law we hope will be enough to accomplish our goals.

We want detailed information for the consumer and for the government. We want to demonstrate to everyone, manufacturers, consumers, and the world that we are truly committed to saving scarce oil supplies and we want to be in a strong position to negotiate with the industry on voluntary standards. Obviously if we cannot achieve all of that without using the legal clout this offers us, we will resort to that approach. But for now the practice of setting voluntary fuel consumption standards will continue along with an improved flow of information.

The primary beneficiary here is not in fact the government but the consumer. We expect automobile manufacturers and dealers to display prominently energy consumption ratings and give the consumer the chance to make intelligent, informed decisions when in the vehicle marketplace. The government will compile the data to monitor the accuracy of the ratings and the progress we are making in getting more kilometres out of every drop of fuel.

We can also get a better idea of what is happening by way of research and how the new technology is performing. Such information is crucial to developing government policy. As the situation stands now we cannot be sure such complete information will be supplied. The consumer will also benefit by having the attention of automobile manufacturers focused on Canadian needs and conditions and on our supplies of gasoline or alternative fuels. Nothing in this bill should cause undue hardship to the industry, which we all know is hard pressed these days. We are really asking for very little additional information beyond what the industry now supplies. This act merely ensures that the information will in fact be forthcoming. The expense will be minor and the benefits potentially great. What it will do is to give us some data and some measurement directly related to the real world that Canadian motorists face. We have to find ways of looking for data which is relevant to the Canadian climate, which we all know has a mean temperature all its own.

If fuel consumption testing does not yield results which are translated into actual fuel consumption when cars and trucks are put into use on streets and highways, it is not of much use. The government needs to be sure it is getting complete and precise information if it is to verify for the consumer the numbers which manufacturers are turning out. We need this legislation to get that data. We also need a not so subtle means of encouraging automobile manufacturers to look at alternative fuels.

Again, this legislation focuses attention on the need to reduce fuel consumption in the face of rising prices and increasingly uncertain supplies. Obviously, one solution is using a different fuel. Hon. members will recall that the government has already taken some steps. We have offered grants of $400 under the propane vehicle grant program for those converting their farm or commercial vehicles to a propane fuel system or purchasing such vehicles new. Our target is 100,000 propane-powered vehicles by 1985. Since the program started last June we have received about 2,500 applications for grants. So far, about 3,650 vehicles have been accepted as eligible to receive the $400. That represents a saving of about 955 barrels a day of oil which would otherwise have been consumed as gasoline by these vehicles. The program has dispensed $1,460,800 so far. But it is more than just our grant program that makes propane gas an attractive alternative for motorists. Propane also offers a fuel that is significantly lower in price than conventional gasoline.

We have as well offered contributions to those willing to convert vehicles to compressed natural gas and help us demonstrate, in actual Canadian driving conditions, the value and versatility of this fuel. We are offering $600 contributions to those willling to undertake the conversion and to commit themselves to report back to us on what improvements they enjoyed in fuel consumption as a result.

The government has promised to hold the price of natural gas below that of oil as far as is possible, and that price differential as well should make compressed natural gas attractive as an alternative fuel. There are already more than 350,000 vehicles in the world operating on compressed natural gas, but we in Canada have little experience with the fuel, the hardware to make use of it or the results that can be achieved by making the switch. Our program started only in January, so it is a little early to judge any statistical results. However, we do know that we have natural gas in abundance and that as a fuel, it is less environmentally hazardous than conventional gasoline or diesel fuel.

We want transport fuel consumption in transport brought down. The transport sector is eating up too much of our limited supplies and we want to be in a position to achieve further improvements if this gentle approach does not work. I am sure that it will work because I know the automotive industry is as interested as the rest of us are in fuel consumption and energy self-sufficiency. If I needed any reassurance of that, I got it earlier this year when I met with the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers' Association. We all showed a great willingness to co-operate at that gathering.

As with other pieces of legislation being put before Parliament this spring, this bill is a means of formalizing the National Energy Program of October, 1980. It is just as important as all of the others, perhaps more so, since it addresses the crucial issue of conservation, the area where the actions of every citizen can mean so much in terms of saving fuel and buying us time against the day, however distant, when oil wells everywhere run dry.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to lead off the debate for the opposition on Bill C-107 respecting motor vehicle fuel consumption standards. If the minister was serious in some of the comments he has just made, I think it would be very sad indeed. He talked about the importance of conserving gas and that the responsibility of Canadian citizens was to ease back on the gas pedal and to conserve, conserve and conserve. Yet when we come into the House for a vote or a series of votes, we see lining up outside the House—it happened at question period today—a series of limousines, each one belonging to a cabinet minister. Every limousine's engine is kept running waiting for the cabinet minister to come out from the vote or to come out from question period.

One evening I made a point of counting the number of limousines with engines running. It was an evening when five votes took place. This took about an hour. Fourteen limousines were outside the House of Commons with their engines idling during the whole period. They were being kept warm for the privileged bunch over there.

The minister tells us that we have to conserve. It is the same old double standard that we hear around here on everything else. We hear that everybody must tighten his or her belt, except for them. We hear that everybody must conserve, except them. If the minister wanted to do something serious, the first thing he should do after this debate would be to go back to his office, dictate a memo to every member of the cabinet and to every other person who has a chauffeur driven car directing them to turn off the engines when not in use and thus conserve energy. Fourteen cars idling for an hour outside the House of Commons burns up an awful lot of gas. How do you expect the Canadian public to accept what the minister says about conservation when that kind of nonsense goes on here every day when the House is sitting?

In 1976 Canada implemented voluntary fuel efficiency standards for automobiles. Likewise in 1976 the government promised to bring forward legislation to put these standards into law. Well, we have finally seen that done. But it took six years after the government made that promise.

The government has never had to pass any of these efficiency standards into law. The government has been able to rely on the powerful American legislation. More important—and the minister realizes it today, and if he were up front with the Canadian people he would admit it—if he passed some regulations concerning fuel consumption for automobiles it would certainly be the tail wagging the dog because we have a North American auto industry and not a Canadian auto industry, so the minister must follow the regulations of the United States.

This is really a phony bill when one thinks about it. The smartest thing for the minister to do would be for him to say that yes, we have to label the cars here in Canada. It is being done now. All the ads reveal fuel consumption. But the simple thing to do would be to follow the lead taken by the environmental protection agency and to co-operate with it and the two levels of government. That would make a lot more sense than going on with this phony bill which says, "We are going to pass the legislation but we are really not going to put it into force unless you misbehave, auto industry". I guess that is a form of blackmail.

We know the Canadian auto market is too small for us to be dictating to the American scene. In the past we have voluntarily formulated standards which are identical to those in the United States. That makes sense. This bill respecting motor vehicle fuel consumption standards continues the conceit of the federal government, except for a new twist. We all remember the former energy minister, Mr. Alastair Gillespie. He pretended that there were standards when there were none. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) now proposes to implement legislation to create standards, but then he pretends he has no real authority to do anything about it. He is not going to have the bill proclaimed. So we are still doing the same thing. The minister just wants to make it appear that he is being the big tough guy, that he will clamp down on the auto people and will make them toe the line.

The minister said that if the voluntary standards fail to work he would bring in compulsory standards and have the bill proclaimed. But this gives the government the authority to set a fuel consumption standard which the industry must meet. There is no mention at all in the bill of voluntary standards. There are really only two ways the government can implement voluntary standards under this bill. The first would be to set the standards by one regulation; the second would be to exempt everyone from them. Perhaps a third would be to set no standards at all. Really nothing at all has changed from Mr. Gillespie's day. What we have is a big facade. The minister is trying to impress the Canadian people with what he is doing, but he is not doing anything different from what has been done until now. The minister is attempting to drag some information out of the auto industry which heretofore he was unable to obtain. Is it because the auto industry would not produce it. I am not sure why he is doing it.

If we take a look at the American legislation, we will see that in 1973 the environmental protection agency initiated a voluntary fuel efficiency labelling program south of the border. In 1975 it passed amendments to the motor vehicle information cost saving in the United States which stipulated the actual fuel economy standard to be reached for each auto manufacturer for 1978 to 1980 and for 1985. Definite goals were set for the manufacturers. The 1981 to 1984 standards could be set by the secretary. Also they stipulated the means by which labels indicating fuel efficiency should be fixed to automobiles, and that EPA must in fact publish a book listing all efficiency ratings, which book must be available at all auto dealers for the benefit of consumers.

The efficiency testing program is a second aspect of the auto emissions testing program. It is interesting to note that the Americans ran their testing program in California. The minister alluded to the fact that their standards may not be realistic for our climate. I agree with him, but he should remember that the Americans have just as severe a climate as ours in some parts of their country. There should be co-operation between the two levels of government in setting those standards. There should also be co-operation in testing because we desperately need research and development in Canada.

In reaching some of the levels about which the minister was talking, co-operation should take place between Americans and Canadians. After all, we are dealing with the North American car market, not just the Canadian market. As the minister said, the testing may be somewhat unrealistic, but I think this can be straightened out with the Americans and with auto manufacturers. In fact we do not need this bill which really does nothing; it does not have much teeth in it. I know it includes a fine of $1 million or five years in jail, but I would be interested to find out who would have to serve the sentence if the law as laid down by the minister was broken.

We are talking about no change at all. The bill is phony. As it does in many instances, the government is using a club to try to achieve goals which have already been set. As a matter of fact, the auto industry is moving toward the standards. For example, at present standards require that the new car fleets of each company average no more than 10.7 litres per 100 kilometres in 1981, which for the benefit of the hon. member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) 26.4 miles per gallon, and that it improve to 8.6 litres per 100 kilometres by 1985, which is 33 miles per gallon. As the minister said, naturally companies can improve on these standards. I think many of them are. There are a number of reasons the auto industry is improving on that. First it is the competition with which the industry is faced. For far too long the governments of Canada and the United States have fooled their people. They had phony levels for the price of fuel which maintained the love affair of North Americans with big cars. The North American auto industry kept turning out these large cars because the governments were misleading people into thinking that gas prices would be kept down and that they could continue driving large cars. Now that the competition is here and now that prices have risen, naturally the auto industry will try to compete with some of the more fuel efficient automobiles we see coming into the country. They are making a move toward improving the mileage of their cars.

The minister talked about setting regulations so that people conserve gas, yet his own department brags about how consumption has gone down recently. Everyone knows why. It is because all levels of government are involved in the "big tax grab" and there are rapid increases in the cost of fuel, which in itself will guarantee less driving as people cannot afford to drive like they used to. They are not piling into their cars for Sunday drives, bumper to bumper, to see their friends in the country. This is not happening anymore because they cannot afford it, so consumption has dropped rather drastically.

The minister said that the government would carry on with the voluntary sector and that in fact it would not proclaim this act unless the industry stepped out of line. It is another slam at the auto industry which is having an extremely difficult time now. There are thousands of lay-offs in the auto parts manufacturing industry and in the auto industry itself. Also, thousands of lay-offs from spin-offs linked directly to the industry are being experienced, especially in Ontario and Quebec. This is just another threat of this big government. It is telling the industry what to do, how to do it and, if it is not done, that it will be given a $1 million fine and plunked in jail for five years.

As a matter of fact I find one section of the proposed act somewhat interesting. I am referring to the one which allows the minister to take a car, or a component of a car, so that he can tear it apart to see what makes it run. Nowhere in the bill does it say that he must put the car back together. Is this a freebee which is being handed to the minister? Does he hand back the car after he is finished with it? How does it work? When I read that section of the proposed act, I chuckled to myself because I could see the minister tearing apart an automobile behind the Parliament buildings to see what makes it tick. I would be surprised if he knew where to put the gas in his car because he never has to do it himself.

In concluding my brief remarks on the bill, I should like to talk about the reality of the situation. The reality is that the minister is not doing anything and that the made-in-Canada energy policy about which the minister talks so proudly is not being changed or improved one iota by the bill. If we look at the campaign promises of 1974 and at the Speech from the Throne in 1976, we realize that the government is making it appear as if it were doing something as part of its national energy policy but is really not changing anything. The goals supplied by Transport Canada to be reached by the auto industry are really meaningless. In fairness to Transport Canada, their rationale is that they must compare their data with the American tests. Only that fact makes sense.

When this bill goes to committee, I invite the minister to explain how he will have a different set of criteria when the automobile market is a North American market. There are many other ways in which the minister could likely achieve fuel efficiency. For instance, the reduction in the speed limit in the United States has had a great effect on fuel consumption there. There are still some provinces—I know speed limitation comes under provincial jurisdiction, I have been around a while, and I am glad the minister is listening—that allow a 70 mile per hour speed limit. I know that the minister does not get along that well with the provinces but perhaps he could use his bubbly personality and smiling countenance to persuade these provinces to cut back their speed limits.

Finally, the bill does not seem to accomplish what the government has indicated it will. I believe that once discussions have taken place in committee and once the Canadian people have seen this bill—the automobile manufacturers do not even know the bill exists—they will see that nothing has changed. Why are we wasting the time of the House with this bill? It is a public relations endeavour by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which in fact will not prove to be an integral part of the energy legislation and should not be lumped in with the National Energy Program because it is such a phony.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I might advise you at the beginning that, like my colleague, it is not my intention to speak to Bill C-107 at any great length. However, there are a few remarks I would like to make.

Like my colleague, I am confused as to why the government desires to create additional regulations. It appears to be creating additional regulations at a time when the automobile industry is facing huge unemployment. It is a concern I would like to address briefly because I believe it is an important part of this issue.

First, I would like to deal with something the minister said in his remarks which I think is extremely valuable to Canadian consumers. I think this must come first and foremost today in terms of our ability to buy the products we make and in order to provide jobs for Canadians. The argument appears to be that Canadians need some type of system to control fuel consumption because it is in their own best interests. According to the minister's rationale—which I think is reasonable—if we are able to persuade Canadians to buy cars which use less fuel we will all be better off in the national sense. I think that this is self-evident. I believe it is also self-evident that it is exactly what Canadian consumers have done because they realize, as I think we all realize, that the price of oil and oil based products will increase owing to the government's deliberately forcing prices up. It is not now the time to comment on the degree to which it will force the prices up. However, I believe that Canadians know the government will force prices up and I believe that Canadians also know that oil will become a scarcer commodity over time.

As the minister pointed out, the fact is that under a voluntary system Canadians have moved toward buying more fuel efficient cars. Therefore, one should perhaps question whether more regulations are needed to achieve that end. The minister suggested they are, but I do not believe that. Canadians have enough intelligence to purchase cars which will get better mileage. The question therefore is, would we ever need the club described by the minister in words to the effect that he needs a not so subtle method of encouraging automobile companies to manufacture cars which would achieve better mileage. My fear is that when we are experiencing unemployment in both the manufacturing and auto parts industry and experiencing a reduction in the world-wide market of cars, and we will be seeing a contraction in the number of jobs on a world-wide basis in a market in which we must compete, another club or direction by the government to the industry will do nothing but exacerbate a problem which is already intense for the Canadian automobile industry.

I say that as someone who is trained as an environmentalist and conservationist and therefore very concerned about our use of oil. I think that the important question to ask the minister in committee is: if the voluntary standards are working as he says they are, why is there a necessity to raise the spectre of another decision by government to interfere in the marketplace at this time?

For instance, the minister said that one of the advantages of his proposal is that because there will now be some certainty about the standards, automobile manufacturers will now be able to plan on a ten-year basis. The industry certainly needs a ten-year span in which to retool and to prepare for the competitive environment which I do not think very many people ten years ago would have predicted would occur today in terms of the share of the market. The question then is, how could you have certainty in planning for the next ten years when the minister says to the industry that it is acceptable for it to comply to voluntary standards, but that if it does not, it runs the risk of his imposing some mandatory standards in which the numbers themselves may change. I find it difficult to accept that this is a state of certainty in which one can plan capital expenditures.

It must equally be borne in mind that while we appear to be moving in a direction of greater mandatory regulations, our major trading partner in North America is, quite sensibly, moving toward greater de-regulation of the automobile industry and its manufacturing sector. I will return to that point because it relates to an area where intense consumption saving could be achieved and which has not been explored enough in the House. It concerns emission control.

For the moment I will say that I do not honestly believe that we need mandatory regulations in order to encourage people to buy more fuel efficient cars. I do not believe that a threat of mandatory regulations will do anything other than to create greater uncertainty at a time when the industry needs greater certainty about its future. Therefore, I assume that the minister is either serious about suggesting that there will be mandatory regulations or a risk of mandatory regulations—in which case I am worried—or he is simply bringing in this bill in order to honour a commitment which he made in 1976. In that case, I suggest that my colleague, the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) was correct when he said that there is nothing to this other than some potential window dressing. I think the minister quite sensibly argued that there is value in providing information to consumers. There is no question that that statement is true. However, the question to be asked is, do you need a heavy-handed law to create information about fuel and consumption standards? I suggest that it is not required, and if one were to simply consider the matter one would find that undoubtedly the existing standards and figures that are developed in the United States are not applicable to Canada. They are not developed for cold weather climates. The minister is quite correct. The suggestion that we should develop numbers for cold weather climates and for Canadian realities makes excellent sense. The suggestion that Canadians should have that information makes excellent sense. Anything that will encourage consumers to know the truth must benefit both the consumer and all of us. However, I suggest that one does not need a lot of legislation about minimum standards to produce that information. Ultimately, all that the federal government needs to do, as it is one of the biggest purchasers of vehicles in the country, is to use its clout as a purchaser to discover, in advance of its purchases, the fuel consumption numbers of all the otpions available on the market, and then publish them. No more than that is needed in terms of providing consumers with the information they require. One does not need to enter into the question of minimum standards or minimum fuel consumption.

Let me now turn to the area that I want to discuss. One of the changes that has recently occurred in the United States since the election of President Reagan has been an entirely new rethinking of the cost benefits relating to emission control. This is an unpopular subject in this country today to some degree. It does relate to the issue of vehicle use of gasoline, and that is why I think it is appropriate to raise it here. An assumption has built up in the minds of Canadians over several years that we are in fact getting substantially cleaner air as a consequence of the emission control standards which have been set with regard to North American cars, largely at the instigation of the Americans. Certainly I thought this was true until I began to research the matter at the encouragement of several of my constituents and a gentlemen who has written me at length on the subject. I assumed that we were benefiting in clean air terms from the emission control standards that we put on automobiles in North America which ultimately led to the use of unleaded gas and things such as catalytic converters with which Canadians are familiar. I began to wonder whether that was true, and I suggest it relates to this issue, when I discovered in my research that the fuel consumption of cars on a unit basis, under a simple relaxation of the control of nitrous oxide emissions, was estimated to improve anywhere from 18 per cent to 40 per cent.

For example, in his notes, the minister referred to the fact that we have dropped our average fuel consumption in Canada from 10.5 litres per 100 kilometres in 1978 down to 8.5 litres in 1980. If one thinks about that efficiency improvement of two litres on a basis of 10.5 litres, one finds that the improvement is less than the efficiency loss created by the emission standards that we have built into cars. It is less. In other words, we are in a situation today where, on the one hand, the government says it will regulate and create emission control standards for the benefit of Canadians in theory, standard which result in inefficiencies in engine fuel consumption; and then, on the other hand, because we need better mileage in our automobiles on a national basis, the government will demand that a better car be built which will somehow effectively return us to our consumption position before emission standards were imposed. If there were, in fact, a marked improvement in air quality, then one could perhaps say that there was value to that.

I want to suggest to the House and to the minister that the time has come to recognize, as the Americans have recognized, that perhaps we went too far in our good intentions in the emission control area. Many studies have been carried out in this area, and it is not my intent to get into this at great length tonight. However, my reason for raising it tonight is that I hope we can persuade the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that it is appropriate to look at this question, considering their admitted desire to improve fuel efficiency. Having faced the fact that they cannot order an improvement in car mileage tonight without disrupting the automobile industry, perhaps this could be done within the next two to three years.

Let us assume for the moment that one believes in the principle that the manufacturers themselves have the greatest self-interest in building a car which actually gets better mileage. It is in their own self-interest to keep cars as marketable commodities for as long as it is possible to do so. On the assumption that we will run out of hydrocarbon product to burn in them, it is presumably in their own self-interest to ensure that we can use that fuel efficiently for a long time. If one also accepts the principle that consumers understand what is happening and will buy cars which are more fuel-efficient then, in fact, one does not need to do anything in terms of the minimum consumption standards other than to let the marketplace have its way.

We should consider ways of improving automobile efficiency without getting into greater regulation, greater burden and greater intrusion. The proposals we have brought into law over the years have meant that we now operate cars at about 25 per cent less efficiency. Again I am assuming that it is possible to relax those standards without damaging the market, and I suggest it is possible as shown by the studies carried out in the United States. If we do this, then it makes just as much sense, if not more sense, to begin to look at what is being done in that area in order to achieve the goal the minister says the government wants to achieve; that is, greater efficiency of gasoline usage.

As well, one must recognize the cost of engineering, producing and putting into cars the equipment which had to be brought on stream at an extremely fast rate in order to meet mandated emission control standards. The consumer is at present paying $1500 to $2000 more for an automobile today than he needs to pay for a car which would be 25 per cent more fuel-efficient and would produce no more damage to the environment. The prices of cars in this country have been driven up by that amount. One starts to realize that one of the reasons the automobile industry in North America is in trouble is not simply that the Japanese build cars more efficiently because they started later. It is not simply that the American and Canadian manufacturers in all the automobile plants need to retool and restructure and must have time to do that in the competitive environment. It is becoming increasingly clear that the reason the industry is in trouble is that the government has brought it on through a hastily-drawn regulation in the emission control area. Obviously, very few of those who drafted it are ready to admit it yet. That makes perfectly good sense. After all, if one were responsible for bringing in the emission control regulations, one would realize what the statistics show. One realizes, for instance, that the emission control standards were brought in exclusively with respect to automobiles and trucks affecting only 40 per cent of the transportation sector in terms of fuel consumption. We should consider all of the other machines which emit pollution into the atmosphere by burning gas. It may seem incredible but it runs right down to gasoline lawnmowers, snowmobiles and the vast number of machines which actually burn gas which are not subject to emission control standards. If one looks at the statistics, one realizes that if all of the emission control standards were taken off, the increase of nitrous oxides released into the air would be one one-thousandth of 1 per cent, according to the most reliable estimates.

It is therefore not difficult to understand why those who drafted the legislation currently in the United States in response to the democratic political intitiatives in 1968 had to be replaced by a different administration before they could admit it was not having the effect everyone claimed it was having in terms of cleaning up the environment. Similarly, it will be difficult for those responsible for the legislation in Canada for the past 15 years to admit that it has not had the effect of cleaning up the atmosphere that we talk about.

As we begin to look at this approach over the next three of four years, we should look for ways to make our automobiles more efficient, which is good, and keeping our people at work which is also good. We must understand that we are saying to Canadian consumers, no matter whether they live in Flin Flon or St. John's Newfoundland, that they must pay $1,500 or $2,000 more for a car than they would normally pay. This is to try and attack a problem that does not exist. If it did exist, it would only exist in terms of major urban centres if there was a geographic conversion problem.

The only city covered by that is Toronto. We must realize that up to 84 per cent of oxides and sulphides released into the air in the Toronto area are now regarded as coming from generating stations on the other side of the lake. We will be saying to Canadian consumers in other parts of the country that they must pay $2,000 more to purchase a 25 per cent less efficient engine because it might affect me and my constituents in Toronto a tiny little bit. We must begin to look at that. We will conclude over time, as least I hope we will, that the single best way to do what the minister says in this bill needs to be done, on the basis of the best evidence today, to improve the efficiency of automobiles and to use less gas is not to discuss some form of quota, additional regulations or mandatory gasoline consumption standards.

As an aside, I would say that either we will have standards adopted through regulation which the manufacturers agree with, in which case we do not need the legislation, or, if the experience of this government in terms of its regulatory power over the last 15 years is to be believed, we will invent standards through bureaucrats in Ottawa that the manufacturers know will not work, in which case we will impose them if the minister is correct.

The consequence of that will be that we will wind up increasingly disrupting an industry, potentially for what? On an annual basis, that difference may only be 0.2 or 0.5 litres per 100 miles of driving. That may be the kind of difference we get in mandated fleet averages. The cost of that disruption in terms of job loss is huge. That is what we now know from the emission control side. We have not achieved major reductions; we have achieved a major loss of jobs.

If we take the time to look at this question, we will inevitably come to this conclusion. The single best way to achieve the objective of reduced consumption of oil in cars is not to talk about mandating industry averages but to begin to review what we have done in a regulatory way in Canada to make the construction of automobiles in this country more time consuming, more expensive and more and more subject to government scrutiny.

I said I would not speak at length. It is not my intention to speak much longer. I will close with this. I hope the minister is correct in his comments on the bill when he says he does not intend to proceed with mandatory minimum standards. I fear that is not the case. I urge all members to look at this question in terms of whether there are better ways to make our automobiles more efficient and to reduce our consumption of gas.

We should look, with the experience of the effect of excessive government regulation over the past 15 years, at better ways of achieving our goal than contemplating additional regulation. As a general rule, we should realize that regulation is useful and important when it serves the public good. For example, no one in the House would quarrel with regulations relating to the safety of automobiles. No one in the House would abandon the idea that automobiles should not be sold in this country unless they are safe to drive. When there is evidence that we must pay more than need be and that energy is being used inefficiently to achieve at best an environmental improvement, if we are to take seriously the issue the minister says this bill is about, I intend to go on urging a review of the regulations, notably in the emissions control area. They are causing job loss, additional cost and cause us to use more oil than need be used for apparently, on the basis of the most recent evidence, no significant benefit. It is only for that reason that I rose to speak tonight. I hope and pray that we will see the wisdom of what transpired in this area in the United States in the last year.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to place some remarks on the record concerning the bill presently before the House.

We must try to develop an effective program for a fuel-efficient automotive industry. As the minister pointed out, the transportation industry consumes an enormous proportion of the energy that we either develop or import into this country. Any savings in that sector, which is a maximum consumer of that worthwhile energy product, is certainly a worthwhile endeavour.

Unfortunately, when proceeding through the bill we find we are in a very typical situation that we find with the entire energy program. The goals as stated are generally sound in the sense that they purport to implement conservation and to proceed in a very rational manner. However, when we go through the material in the legislation, we find that it is not a strong program. In fact, the government is backing away from its commitment to conservation and alternate energy. The bill provides loopholes which permit the industry to avoid what is seen by the Canadian public as acceptable and desirable levels of conservation and, in this case, the conservation of liquid transportation fuels. The previous speaker pointed out that conservation is extremely important. Unfortunately, he and his party are mistaken in many ways in believing that the marketplace alone will provide the correct approach to conservation. He is also mistaken in thinking it will develop the correct and acceptable product to serve the long-term interest of all Canadians. Without some form of guidance, some form of incentive, some form of example, the marketplace will probably provide the cheapest product that will return the greatest amount of money to the producer. That goal is not necessarily consistent with the needs of all Canadians. Unfortunately, the bill, although recognizing the need to conserve fuel through more stringent automobile consumption standards, does not provide the mechanism by which the accountability of those corporations can be ensured.

Our intention is to vote against this particular bill. Those consumption standards are not adequate and are not clearly defined, and a progressive and effective program for fuel efficiency standard has not been developed. There is no opportunity to develop conservation in a voluntary program, a program in which the government intends to try to jawbone or sweet-talk the industry into providing these standards.

A colleague who spoke before me hit the nail on the head when he said that the automobile industry is a North American industry; that this, is not a Canadian industry. The Americans will develop those automobiles in such a manner that they can survive in a very tough and competitive industry at this point in time. In the past, the auto industry, along with other industries with a North American orientation, have bashed the Canadian government into the earth when it has attempted to sweet-talk or jawbone them without putting in place an effective program of restraints. So, by and large, I do not think that the government intends to carry this through. This is certainly another Liberal sweet-talking proposition without enforcement. Clearly we support—and I think it has been supported on all sides—the concept of fuel efficiency standards for automobiles.

Again, as the minister pointed out, there is a need to provide for conversion from automobile fuel systems that involve gasoline and oil fuels into propane natural gas and other alternative fuels. Those programs are largely token, and not serious enough at this point in time.

Another objectionable facet of the bill—and again we take exception to the pasture of the previous speaker—is the matter of emission control. There is a recommendation in the report of the subcommittee report on acid rain that Canadian emission standards be brought down to the point where the United States emission standards are the ones adopted. The current U.S. standards of one gram per mile emission of nitrous oxides are far superior compared to the situation we have in Canada where we have an allowable emission standard of 3.1 grams per mile.

I would point out that with those emission standards, with the development of engines in Canada that do not recognize the important source of contamination of the environment, we are not going to ensure that those engines will curtail the emission of those contaminants, and therefore we will not support the bill on that basis.

In Clause 3 of the bill there is another point that is not acceptable. Throughout the committee hearings on Bill C-48 the opposition complained bitterly that the legislation did not spell out the goals and the mechanism by which we would reach these goals, this state of Valhalla, how we could reach a new effective national energy policy, but it allowed ministerial discretion. It allows the government, by regulation, to set goals and procedure. The unfortunate point is that this particular legislation in front of us today provides the same type of government by regulation, by ministerial discretion. Certainly, that is an offensive feature of this particular legislation.

In terms of the cabinet's ability to make regulations on fleet consumption standards, there appears to be a bit of contradiction on what the government proposed in the past. The background paper to Bill C-107 indicates that the government's goal is 8.6 litres per 100 kilometres by 1985, yet the Department of Transport announced in October 1981 that the desirable Canadian goal for fuel efficiency was 8.6 litres per 100 kilometres by 1982.

Again the government is backing away from a strong fuel efficiency commitment, and once it backs away from that commitment it will make regulations for enforcement, and then the enforcement will be put in place by ministerial discretion. Our party will not be supporting the bill, on the basis that we have had enough of this legislation, legislation through regulation and ministerial discretion, setting the timing of the policy. It is certainly not acceptable to us. The history of this government is that it has failed when it comes to mustering the resolve, necessary to put forward and enforce those goals in the interests of Canadians.

We find time after time that the interest of the oil companies and other major corporations is chosen, at the expense of the consumers and at the expense of small business. That has been the order of the day. This is government fear and lack of resolve. This is the history that has brought us to the sorry state in which we find ourselves today. As other members have pointed out, it is not the Conservative Party and it is not the New Democratic Party that has brought about this chaos within our energy policy, or the lack of an effective conservation program; it is the Liberal government and its lack of resolve in this area.

Another unacceptable feature in this particular legislation appears in Clause 5 in which the auto companies are given three years' grace before the new standards have to be met. That is unfortunate in some respects, but that is probably not the most offensive part of the legislation. If you are going to impose serious fuel efficiency standards on the auto manufacturers, if you are going to encourage Canadian companies or development companies to become involved, certainly there has to be lead time. Lead time for development of fuel efficiency engines is important, and the government must specify very clearly what is expected of the producers, and it must have in place a definition of what is wanted and needed by Canadian people. That is reasonable and just. It shows resolve in bringing about an effective fuel efficiency program. In that way those producers who need the lead time for development know what is expected, they know the targets they are working towards in order to produce the desired results. But when you waiver, when you lack resolve, and say, "Well, we are going to try and sweet-talk you into it," then the ultimate objective becomes the cheapest product possible, the one that will turn the greatest profit. Corporations can then cajole the government out of its commitment to fuel efficiency in favour of the dollar. The three years' period of grace would be an acceptable period and would make sense, if the government were determined to enforce fuel efficiency standards and develop in Canada a more effective conservation program in the utilization of the private automobile. On the basis of the open-endedness of Clause 5, we will not be supporting the bill.

As regards penalties for non-compliance, the minister has said in the House that there will be no proclamation of the legislation, no bringing into force the section on penalties. It is interesting that he said "We are going to let this lie for a period of time, we are going to sweet-talk the companies into voluntary standards for fuel efficiency." The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that the government is not going to last long enough to see the implementation, far less the results or failures of this program.

It is important to those who inherit the task that there be a proper lead time. If standards are to be set, they should be set now. We should let those companies which will be getting involved in research and development into fuel efficiency know where we intend to be down the road three years or down the road five years.

With respect to Clause 11 and the penalties for failure to meet the standards or failure to respond appropriately, it is unfortunate the clause is full of tremendous loopholes. As the previous speaker for the Conservative Party indicated, no company in Canada will every be convicted. No company in North America will ever be convicted of violating this particular provision because, first, I doubt if the Liberal party will be around long enough to be in a position to see the outcome of this legislation, second, the Liberals do not intend to proclaim it and, third, even if it was proclaimed, it is so full of loopholes a company could escape a conviction under almost any imaginable circumstances.

I suppose this bill is not entirely bad. There does appear to be some attempt to use fuel efficiency to shape, or at least protect, small companies with production runs of, I suppose, up to 1,000 automobiles a year. They would be exempt from some of the provisions in this legislation. That seems to make sense, and I suppose it is a recognition that Canada does have some footholds in the automobile industry. There are Canadian-owned operations in which specialty equipment, trucks and other vehicles are developed. As well as protecting Canadian industry and encouraging it, the fuel efficiency requirements might also even encourage employment and development. Contrary to what the previous speaker said, they might provide some opportunity or an expanded opportunity for Canadians to develop a presence in the automobile industry and especially in this specialized area.

I would like to take a few moments to develop the idea that the bill is probably another example of a token approach to what is really needed. Instead of considering this piece of legislation before us tonight and the design of this legislation, I would like to point out some of the shortcomings in the philosophy which underpins our whole system. We in our party have argued that strong legislation and programs should be brought forward, but legislation such as this and other programs the government has brought forward are tokens. Energy demonstration projects are certainly a good idea to move communities off oil and on to other more acceptable forms of energy. Conversion to propane and natural gas is certainly an excellent proposal. Insulation programs aimed at conservation are good, with the exception of the colossal failure of the urea formaldehyde mess. With that exception, these are solid programs which take us in the direction we should be going. They are the ones which ultimately will create most of the employment in this country and the development of long-term renewable alternate energy sources which would have fewer detrimental effects on the environment in the long run. I do not think anyone in this House disagrees with that. Such energy sources will be our ultimate security.

Everyone agrees that there must be a dislocation period during which the need for alternate energy and stringent conservation measures must be recognized. Those measures must be developed and implemented, and it will take time before we actually begin to realize the benefits.

Unfortunately, time and time again over the years we have seen examples of the very shortsighted policy of the government, and there has been a message in that. We have always opted for the most expensive and dangerous projects. Down the road when our children are cleaning up the mess we will have left behind those projects will be viewed as some of the most stupid ever developed.

I will touch just lightly on some hard commitments the government has made while it relies on bills like this and other programs which are token commitments. I listened with interest to the minister today as he spoke about the need for alternate energy and conservation methods. We also listened to him the other day when he spoke about his atomic energy program. The government should be prepared to spend some of the money spent on the atomic energy program on research and development into more efficient fuels for transportation or to assist in research and development into more effective engines for automobiles and aircraft. I have heard my colleagues from Saskatchewan talk about the electrification of railroads. Imagine where we would be if we were serious about alternate fuels for transportation and used some of the money we have dumped into the Candu program over the years for research and development into that. For decades Canadian taxpayers have dumped tremendous amounts of money into the Candu program.

I want to elaborate for a moment on the question of our approach to atomic energy to demonstrate where we will wind up with that approach compared with where we would wind up if we put more emphasis on conservation and alternate energy. We are aware that the Canadian government has made a tremendous investment in the development of nuclear power and the development of nuclear fuels. That investment culminated in 1974, in the fact that India used our technology to explode a nuclear weapon. India became a nuclear power and exacerbated the problem of nuclear proliferation, which is probably the most serious problem human beings have.

Alastair Gillespie was mentioned in the House just a few moments ago. He is a former minister of energy, mines and resources. The previous speaker said much about Mr. Gillespie's contribution to the energy policy of Canada. I have always remembered a statement made by Mr. Gillespie after the Indian government exploded a nuclear weapon. He said he regretted it very much but that Canadians had made a massive investment. He was asked if the Canadian government would stop the production and sale of the Candu reactor, and his answer was no. He said that Canada had made a massive investment in nuclear technology and had a right to expect a return on the investment. That statement stands out starkly in the minds of many Canadians. That is the most blatant gunseller mentality imaginable. Considering the ultimate price of the proliferation of nuclear weapons and the proliferation of nuclear wastes in the environment for who knows how long, there are not many Canadians who want that return on their investment. However, the government does not learn. Instead of opting for tremendous investments in a secure energy future and in technology for energy conservation and developing alternate sources, we continue to plow money into this very dangerous and expensive lemon.

There is now a problem in Argentina. With respect to weapons, wastes and technology failures, Mr. Gillespie's bottom line was that Canadians have a right to expect a return on their investment. That stands as the guiding policy of the government. Perhaps some hon. members opposite will stand and refute that, but the Canadian government sold a nuclear reactor to Argentina for $500 million. It was a great deal, but the unfortunate thing was that it represented a loss of $130 million to Canadian taxpayers. We paid Argentina a large chunk of money to buy a reactor. Canadian taxpayers are paying for that. Instead of investing $130 million in alternate energy to provide Canadians with a secure and safe energy future, we gave that $130 million to the Argentinians, who would not sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. As a matter of fact, their statement on the issue was that Argentina wanted to keep its nuclear weapons options open. The other day the minister stood in the House and said that what the Argentinians had done was crazy. He said that if they had wanted to build a nuclear weapon, they should never have bought a Candu reactor.

On the other side of the coin, the Argentinians seemed convinced that this was the way to travel. There are other authorities who would dispute what the minister said. They would say that probably one of the best investments the Argentinians could make, if they wanted to build a bomb, was in the Candu reactor, especially if Canada was willing to continue to sell the Argentinians uranium to fuel the process. I understand that Argentina is now building two plutonium separators. That is an excellent approach if they want to build a nuclear weapon. Of course, Argentina today is a military dictatorship. It does not have very much concern for the citizens of its own country and is prepared to use military aggression in other parts of the world, and certainly could not be expected to have too much compunction about building a weapon. If that occurs, it will be interesting to see the reaction of hon. members opposite when we have to say again, "We told you so."

• (1940)

Why are we not investing that money in safe, secure sources of alternative energy—not nuclear—and in conservation programs instead? Where did the $130 million go that we spent to build a bomb for Argentina? It went to making a more dangerous world, one that is not safe and secure for Canadians. That is a very sad commentary on the government's policy. We have here a half-hearted bill regarding the conservation of liquid fuels through more fuel efficiency in the automobile engine and, on the other hand, we are making a tremendous commitment to a very dangerous and insecure source of energy.

It has been pointed out many times that we should be moving toward development alternate energy and conservation as our security for the future and that we should be building up the necessary technology. That will not come about tomorrow. There will be some dislocation and problems with putting it in place, but we are not making the financial commitments necessary to do this. This has been remarked upon by backbenchers in all parties except that the government does not seem to have the commitment to carry it out and in the long run we will all suffer.

The nuclear energy example, dangerous and expensive as it is with its lack of security, is not the only example of an insane policy which is being followed, almost in contradiction of the policies that the party opposite has developed.

The offshore oil and gas seems to be the be-all and end-all for Canadians. As in the nuclear case, it is extremely expensive. We have heard many times in the House about the cost of drilling dry holes in the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of Labrador. In the committee hearings on Bill C-48 we heard about the cost of drilling holes in the Arctic Ocean and off the coast of British Columbia. There are enormous costs and enormous risks involved.

Instead of taking the more appropriate approach of guarding and husbanding the resources that we already have in the conventional area and making the conversion as quickly as we can in other areas where we have conventional fields, we are putting all our effort into the development of the frontier and the offshore. This will cost us dearly, Mr. Speaker.

It is amazing to hear Dome Petroleum asking the Japanese to contribute $400 million in return for one quarter of the oil it discovers—if the Canadian government will rubber-stamp the deal. The Japanese are constructing one of the world's largest icebreaking tankers. That is not for getting oil from Viet Nam, Mr. Speaker; it is for getting it out of the Beaufort Sea. In the past, oil companies have agreed to take the risks if our taxpayers will bear the bulk of the cost and if they are given tax concessions and grants and if the price of the oil is set at what the market will bear. Since there is a glut of oil and the companies need a return on investment and an enhanced cash flow, they expect to export the oil.

It is a vicious circle and an expensive drain on the industrial and economic potential of this country. This is not a secure source of energy; it is expensive and it is extremely dangerous. We saw what happened with the Campeche accident in the Gulf of Mexico. An oil platform broke loose and for months and months it pumped oil into the Caribbean. Yet we are prepared to take risks far greater than were taken at Campeche.

It was interesting to listen to representatives of one of the oil companies who appeared before the committee that was considering Bill C-48. They claimed to have planted a fixture on the bottom of the Arctic Ocean and so they no longer needed the rigs. But what if that should break loose, Mr. Speaker? Would we ever be able to stop the flow? Would we ever be able to deal with it under the ice? We are fooling around with one of the most dangerous and most expensive sources of oil. All our money is going into that and we are ignoring the rational, the safe and the secure future that alternative sources of fuel conservation offer.

Our best course lies with the non-conventional fuels. Tonight the minister said he would put guidelines in place in the first phase with some legislation but that he was not going to bring the second part into force or encourage manufacturers to get serious about fuel efficiency in automobiles. Rather, he seemed to hope that their conscience would dictate the correct course to take.

We have a commitment to back foreign-owned oil companies such as Imperial Oil, Shell Oil, Texaco, Chevron and all those beauties of the past to develop our non-conventional fuel sources. We see them moving into heavy oil development in the Cold Lake project and the Alsands project. We watched them perform with Syncrude. This is a complete repetition of the cycle we have always known when the government chooses this course to be carried out by the multinational oil companies as the major players and as we get into the more expensive options, the more risky options involving large deployment of capital. We are not talking about small entrepreneurs or gas station operators here; we are talking about corporations that are completely integrated, from gas pumps to the exploration and support services.

The small entrepreneurs in the oil business—and perhaps the Conservatives hit the nail on the head here—are not just moving, they are being driven out because we do not have a commonsense, safe and secure approach to energy development. Options are being exercised in these non-conventional areas by companies like Imperial Oil.

I have listened to many of my colleagues on the right say what a terrible thing it would be if we took Imperial Oil over. But Mr. Speaker, that would give the Canadian public a greater window on the industry, and more influence in directing the industry in the husbanding and development of that resource. The attitude has always been to let that go in and develop because they have the expertise and they can generate the capital. But all we get from them is the same old routine that we got from them with the development of conventional sources. They said they want to increase the price. They want more tax incentives, more direct contributions from the tax payers. When that was not enough, they said, "Sorry, we are going to shut it down." Ultimately they will want to export it.

● (1950)

We have been on this route before, Mr. Speaker. The unfortunate aspect is that the cycle of energy development, the mistakes and shortsightedness which have brought us to this very sorry state today, are the product of the inactivity of the Liberal government. In the early days we saw Canadian entrepreneurs moving into development of the oil industry with some relative success. From there we moved into a period of takeovers where the multinational oil companies moved in to gain control because the Liberal government ignored the need to protect Canadian consumers and businesses. We now have hit a period of crisis in which the product is in short supply and manipulations occur. Now the Liberal government is moving forward with some fairly drastic changes which could have been brought in before the takeover occurred. The guidelines could have been laid down in the beginning, saying that we want accountability, we want rational development and exploitation of that product for Canadians, not for the multinationals and their shareholders who live in other countries.

It is interesting that for a period of time those multinational corporations in Canada, led by the energy corporations, became an instrument of American government policy working in Canada. That was an unfortunate extraterritorial application of the laws and policies of the U.S. in this country. Not only was the Liberal government abrogating its responsibilities to the people for the protection of their resources but they allowed, by neglect, the American government to impose their law and economic policies in this country. However, we seem to have come to a transition point in the history of our development of energy resources in which the energy companies are spreading out into other areas such as uranium and coal development. I think they probably recognize that the oil era is passing and there will have to be development in new areas. We see them moving into minerals and other energy sources, but unfortunately we do not seem to be laying down the guidelines there and history is going to repeat itself. We are still stressing this dangerous approach of high priced conventional energy, or these equally dangerous nuclear alternatives. It is time that we took a step beyond that and said that we as Canadians are going to begin to develop and capture a technology based on safe alternative sources of energy and conservation. Ultimately that will mean a safer and more effective energy future for Canadians.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of alternative we want to have to the rather insane and, if you will, stupid energy policy put forward by the Liberal government. There are aspects of it which, on the surface, look okay, such as the goals, but certainly there is no commitment to demand accountability from the energy corporations, there is no commitment to protect the resource for Canadians. Unfortunately, the bill before us does not represent that kind of commitment, and we will not be supporting it for that reason.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-105, an Act to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Energy Legislation.

He said: Madam Speaker, the bill that we are now considering is Bill C-105, a bill that amends the Canada Business Corporations Act, a piece of legislation that was formerly a part of Bill C-94, the energy security bill. In essence, the changes this bill will make to the Canada Business Corporations Act will allow federally-chartered corporations to place constraints and, in certain circumstances, to acquire their own shares. This will permit firms to obtain and maintain specific levels of Canadian ownership among the shareholders of the firms in a manner that existing shareholders decide is appropriate.

The National Energy Program proposes a reordering of the energy industry in Canada, particularly in relation to ownership and control. Increased ownership by Canadians will help ensure that Canadian supplies will be secured for Canadian use, that Canadians will have full and fair opportunity to participate in the economic benefits that will flow from the massive investments in equipment and labour for energy-related projects, and that such projects will result in fair prices for Canadians.

[Translation]

Hon. members are aware that the Petroleum Incentives Program and the plan for determination of Canadian ownership rate and control status proposed in Bill C-104, an Act respecting Petroleum Incentives and Canadian Ownership and Control Determination, constitute the framework for a Canadian ownership policy as outlined in the National Energy Program. Criteria are to be established to measure the level of Canadian ownership and control in companies operating in the Canadian oil and gas industry. In fact, determination of the Canadian ownership rate is required for a number of programs connected with the National Energy Program.

The most important of these is, of course, the Petroleum Incentives Program, which will provide funds to companies on the basis of their Canadian ownership rate. The Canadian ownership rate is also an indispensable part of other areas of the National Energy Program. For instance, the Canada Oil and Gas Act requires an applicant to have a Canadian ownership rate of at least 50 per cent in order to qualify for a production licence for the Canada lands. The enterprises themselves decide whether they want to raise their Canadian ownership rate and how they want to go about it. Our position in this respect is neutral. However, in some cases, companies may wish to take steps to increase the number of shares held by Canadians. The proposed amendments to the Canada Business Corporations Act, which governs incorporation of companies at the federal level, will enable these corporations to take the necessary steps to have their shareholders meet the conditions laid down in Bill C-104.

Mr. Speaker, these changes in the Canadian Business Corporations Act were necessary. A company's Canadian ownership rate is very important for certain measures of the National Energy Program, and it would not have made sense to set ownership criteria which the corporations would not be able to observe or maintain on a permanent basis. In reviewing the legal framework within which corporations must operate, and especially the Canadian Business Corporations Act, it became clear that the present provisions of the act were incompatible with the objectives of the National Energy Program. For instance, to achieve a given rate of Canadian ownership, a corporation might wish to buy back shares held by non-Canadian shareholders, assuming that the shareholders would be willing to sell their shares, which would then be offered to Canadians. In its present form, the Canadian Business Corporations Act would rule out these possibilities.

Let us take another example. A company might wish to impose constraints on the ownership of new shares the company is issuing. Our present legislation on Canadian business corporations would not allow this. Furthermore, without the changes we are proposing, once a company's Canadian ownership rate was achieved, it would be at the mercy of financial market transactions. New investments made by non-Canadians might substantially reduce the profits of the Canadian corporation by causing its Canadian ownership rate to drop, thus restricting its access to certain advantages under the National Energy Program or even disqualifying it for certain licences or permits.

[English]

The challenge to us, then, is to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act so that it provides the necessary mechanisms to allow firms to respond to the opportunities offered by the National Energy Program, while at the same time continues to provide protection to shareholders.

As an example, a firm should not be allowed to acquire its own shares unfettered by any restrictions, because this might allow the management of a firm to entrench itself. Neither should a firm be allowed to place any constraint it might wish on ownership. Such a step could allow a firm to eliminate certain shareholders, as an example, for reasons relating to differences of opinion within the company. Clearly, this kind of result would be unacceptable. As a result, the changes this bill will make, although significant in so far as the National Energy Program is concerned, are strictly limited in their effects.

The two major thrusts of these amendments are as follows: to permit firms to acquire their own shares in accordance with specified terms and conditions, and to give firms the authority to place constraints on the ownership of new classes of shares and to enforce those constraints by permitting the firm to enforce the sale of the shares of a shareholder who contravenes the ownership constraint.

To ensure that shareholders' rights are protected, we have also proposed an amendment to the act in order that these new powers will not be abused. In fact, these amendments are applicable only, and I repeat, only when a firm wishes to qualify for incentives, grants, permits, licences and the like—as an example the petroleum incentives payments—that have been established under a prescribed Canadian or provincial law, conditional on levels of Canadian ownership. I stress, they cannot be used for any other purpose. We believe these amendments continue to provide shareholders with the kind of protection they have a right to expect under Canadian business law.

First, a corporation cannot acquire its own shares if they are subject to ownership constraints. Further, if a firm acquires shares, that firm can only hold them for two years. If it were to hold them beyond that period, such shares, as is normally the case under the Canada Business Corporations Act, would be effectively cancelled. We regard this period as an adequate time in which any such shares can be resold to new owners.

• (2050)

Second, a firm holding its own shares cannot vote those shares except in the narrow situation where, although it holds the shares, it is the legal representative for someone else. And, third, if a share bears a constraint, that fact must be shown clearly and prominently on the share certificate.

I should also mention that shareholders are also protected if a corporation decides to enforce an ownership constraint. The corporation will be required to notify a shareholder before taking any action to enforce ownership constraints and to give the shareholder an opportunity to sell his or her own shares before the corporation acts to sell the shareholder out. Notice provisions are to be set out in the regulations.

In considering the changes that we are proposing to the Canada Business Corporations Act, there are some points that require emphasis.

I believe that the changes that we are proposing to the Canada Business Corporations Act are fundamentally fair—fair to companies wishing to participate in the development of Canada's energy future, and fair to all investors who have, and who will provide, the capital that allows these firms to grow and thrive.

It was in that spirit, after additional discussions with industry, that we concluded that the provisions allowing for the application of ownership constraints to outstanding classes of shares—as were contained in Bill C-94—were no longer essential.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Since there was little indication that firms would use this provision, and because of concerns, however unjustified, that had been raised in the investment community with regard to these provisions, the amendments in this bill have been revised to remove ownership constraints on outstanding issues of shares.

By limiting the imposition of ownership constraints to new shares, I believe we will ensure that there will be no misunderstandings among investors as to whether or not a share is constrained. By allowing firms to place additional constraints only on new classes of shares and by requiring full disclosure of such constraints, the existence of those constraints will be clear to all investors. We will thereby avoid widespread uncertainty in the capital markets that could affect the standing and value of many other stock issues, if ownership constraints could be applied to outstanding classes of shares.

By ensuring that the changes in the Canada Business Corporations Act allow companies to take Canadianization measures only under specific circumstances and for specific reasons, I believe that we have shown once again that the National Energy Program can be, and certainly is, sensitive and responsive to the needs of the Canadian business community and the need that Canadian business has to gain access to the capital markets of the nation and of the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I am always amazed how a minister of this government can stand up and express, in what appears to be such innocent terms one of the most ominous and offensive pieces of legislation that any government has ever brought into the House.

It would be better to entitle this bill if you would, the predatory practices act, because in fact what we are being asked to endorse here is a piece of corporate legislation which literally will let some of the foxes in the business community of this country into the chicken pen.

Let me explain this. The minister has indicated that the bill's thrust is strictly limited. That is what he said, that it is limited in its effect in that, on the one hand, it will permit companies to buy their own shares under certain circumstances. He then went on to state that it will also allow companies, in effect, to buy shares that are outstanding at certain times and in that way, literally confiscate the shares of a shareholder as the directors from time to time may see fit.

Granted, Mr. Speaker, there are certain requirements that must be met before they can do that; but what I think is particularly important for us in the House to consider is what the precedent is that is being set here.

To suggest that the directors of a corporation at any time should have the right literally to buy out, or sell to others, shares, notwithstanding the fact that those shares may be owned by foreigners or otherwise, is something that is totally offensive to the concept of corporations and corporate law generally.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Securities Commission and certain other regulatory bodies have already expressed grave concern over this legislation. They have indicated that they believe that many individual shareholders will be victimized by those who may, through the boards of director's resolution approach, simply decide to sell out those shareholders, presumably against their will.

Let us put it into focus. Let us put into focus what the minister is really saying here. If we take a look at Bill C-105, we will find that the offensive provisions start on page 4, where it is stated that:

> A corporation that has constraints on the issue, transfer or ownership of its shares of any class or series in order to assist the corporation or any of its affiliates—

And here are the interesting words, Mr. Speaker, where it says:

> —to qualify under any prescribed law of Canada or a province to receive licences, permits, grants, payments or other benefits by reason of attaining or maintaining a specified level of Canadian ownership or control may, for that purpose or for the purpose of attaining or maintaining a level of Canadian ownership or control specified in its articles, under such conditions and after giving such notice as may be prescribed, sell, as if it were the owner thereof—

That is, Mr. Speaker, a corporation through its directors may sell a person's shares as if the corporation owned the shares. It continues:

> —any of such constrained shares that are owned, or that the directors determine in such manner as may be prescribed may be owned, contrary to the constraints.

Then they go on to say that the directors must at least do it somewhat fairly and they must watch that they do not:

> —unfairly disregard the interests of, the holders of the shares in the constrained class or series taken as a whole.

In short, what is being proposed is that the directors, who are normally—bear this is mind—looked upon as some kind of a trustee on behalf of the shareholders, are going to be empowered now, notwithstanding their trustee relationship to those shareholders, to check off individually and buy out certain of those shareholders if the shareholder is deemed to be somehow in a position contrary to the constraints position.

I noticed that the minister skirted around this. But in the press release accompanying this bill he pointed out at that time that he thought he had watered down the provisions a little. Obviously he was feeling the sting of some of the opposition that had already been voiced by such bodies as the Ontario Securities Commission. The minister suggested that the amendment that has been made, compared to the comparable provisions of Bill C-94, that aborted bill, the amendment that he had seen fit to make, really would take away any particular problem with regard to existing shareholders.

• (2100)

Presumably he is referring to the new provision put in at page 9 which says that one of the paragraphs which I have referred to:

> —does not permit a constraint on the issue, transfer or ownership of shares of any class or series of which any shares are outstanding unless the shares are already subject to a constraint permitted under that paragraph.

This is what I find to be so devious about this government. It plunks in that provision, puts out a news release to throw people off guard and, in effect, tries to get the Canadian public to buy the proposition that whatever people were worried about as far as amendments to the Canada Business Corporations Act are concerned, they need worry no longer, the government has amended it and it does not affect existing shareholders any longer. Mr. Speaker, you have been in this House long enough to know the tricky nature of this government. You have known the lengths to which hon. members opposite will go to deceive the Canadian public. We know how they deceived the Canadian public simply to get elected back to the government benches of the House back in 1980. Whatever hostility from the Canadian public hon. members opposite are sensing, it has not dissuaded them from trying to deceive the Canadian public once again with Bill C-105.

I know the reason. The little amendment the government put in covers the possibility that a shareholder will have his shares sold out from under him, notwithstanding the fact that he is an existing shareholder, but it does not cover the possibility of somebody now taking advantage of this act, if it is passed, and taking advantage of the provisions of the Canada Business Corporations Act to incorporate a new company under the Canada Business Corporations Act. Under that new company there would be share provisions which would be constrained, and then they move in like the old fox in the chicken house. They make an offer to take over the poor subject company, be it provincial—and let us not forget that—or federal. Once they have at least 51 per cent of that poor subject chicken company, then they can remove the directors of that company, cause those directors either to agree to a wind-up of the company in favour of the parent or to sell the assets of that company in favour of the parent, and guess what they are going to offer in exchange for what you owned up until then? They are going to offer you these constrained shares which this act would permit the directors to gobble up and sell to their Liberal friends—or guess who—in contravention of the Canada Business Corporations Act as it now exists.

The minister says this is a very innocent little provision and that all it is designed to do is to allow people who think they would like to share in the petroleum incentive payments somehow to put their houses in order and look after any of those foreign shareholders who might be out there who somehow or other are beyond the Canadian ownership rating that they may desire.

Let us not be fooled. There are many companies in Canada under federal laws which somehow or other have Canadian ownership requirement tests to meet. I will read out various acts, but I can tell hon. members that if they were incorporated and needed some type of licencing or other arrangements under any of the following acts, they would be subject to the provisions we are being asked to rubberstamp in the House this evening. Acts which have Canadian content requirements are the Aeronautics Act, the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission Act, the Broadcasting Act, the Bank Act, the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, the Investment Companies Act, the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Canada mining regulations, the Canada oil and gas land regulations, northern mineral exploration assistance regulations, the Fisheries Act, the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, the Canada Development Corporation Act, the Telesat Canada Act, regional development incentives regulations and the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Those are acts passed only under the federal jurisdiction which have requirements within them which say that if you want to get a licence, you have to meet certain Canadian ownership minimum requirements. That would apply to those who want to utilize that "innocent little provision" that the fox over there is attempting to get this House to endorse.

I have in my hand a volume covering all the provincial acts which would be subject to the same provision. For the benefit of those who have forgotten the wording used by the minister, he covers not only federal laws but also provincial laws. The bill states:

> —to qualify under any prescribed law of Canada or a province to receive licences, permits, grants, payments or other benefits by reason of attaining or maintaining a specified level of Canadian ownership or control.

It is intended to catch not just those federal companies which have to qualify under the acts to which I have referred but also provincially incorporated bodies which wish to do things which require licences.

The list of statutes I have in my hand is broken down by province. Perhaps hon. members from provinces other than mine would like to know some of the statutes in their provinces which will be affected if this legislation goes through. The following is a list of the statutes of Ontario which we will have to watch from now on, if the fox gets his way: under "financial" there is the Business Corporations Act, the Collection Agencies Act, the Insurance Act, the Loan and Trust Corporations Act, the Mortgage Brokers Act, the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act and the Securities Act. Those are all Ontario acts requiring licencing. In the energy sector the Ontario Energy Corporation Act would be affected. Under "land" there is the Land Transfer Tax Act and the Public Lands Act. Under "publishing" there is the Paperback and Periodical Distributors Act and the Theatres Act. Under "transportation" there is the Ontario Transportation Development Corporation Act. There is also the Co-operative Corporations Act and the Liquor Licence Act. All of those are Ontario acts requiring some type of licencing to include a Canadian ownership requirement. If the provision we are being asked to consider passes—it is certainly a unique provision in corporate legislation in Canada and possibly in the world—all those Ontario acts cover companies which require licencing only after there is a certain COR rating, and a predator, as I said earlier, could use this new Canada Business Corporations Act to move in on you, gobble you up and give you the shares that he in turn, if a foreign element was involved, could sell out at whatever price the directors felt was fair.

I hope hon. members will not take this lightly. The government has shattered our oil and gas industry dramatically through the National Energy Program. This was discussed, for example, in the April, 1982 edition of Executive magazine.

Mr. Lalonde: Don't believe that.

Mr. Stevens: The minister says, "Don't believe that". If he has read it, I am sure he wishes that much that was written had never been written. Leave it to him; he would try to shut off that kind of free press.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: This is what one columnist had to say in that magazine about the minister's National Energy Program under the heading "Canada's Collapse Began with the NEP":

• (2110)

Before NEP, the strontly rising volume of investment in oil and gas exploration and development had been driving the whole economy forward. Every dollar invested by the petroleum industry multiplied two to three times through the economy in purchases of equipment and services.

Since NEP, the industry's investment here has been drastically reduced, by 30 per cent to 40 per cent through 1981 and by at least that much again this year. These are not now recoverable funds. They have either been committed outside Canada or absorbed by government.

Mr. Lalonde: He has got his facts wrong.

Mr. Stevens: The minister says he has got his facts wrong. I would challenge the minister to stand up and debate the question that John Meyer is referring to and show us what he believes is wrong about Meyer's statement.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to rise to the challenge and bring to the attention of my hon. friend a report issued by the United States Department of Commerce last week. I will not quote a Canadian document because the Conservative party does not believe in anything done in Canada or in Canadianization, so I will go to the Americans and quote the document prepared by the United States Department of Commerce. It foresees that in 1982 the subsidiary companies of American corporations in Canada in the oil and gas business are going to increase their investment by 28 per cent compared to last year. That compares with increases of an average of 18 per cent in the rest of the world by the same corporations. American investors have more confidence in this country that the Conservative opposition does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I thank the minister for helping to make my argument, but he missed the point. John Meyer said that investment had been reduced by 30 to 40 per cent in 1981. The government is now collecting figures from the Department of Commerce in Washington that show investment will be up by 18 per cent—

Mr. Lalonde: Twenty-eight per cent.

Mr. Stevens: —by 28 per cent over last year. But having fallen 30 to 40 per cent last year, if the minister is correct, they are still not back to where they were in 1980!

Mr. Lalonde: Try again.

Mr. Stevens: The minister has demonstrated that there has been a slowdown as far as the National Energy Program is concerned and that it has affected our economy.

Let me go on and quote what John Meyer said, quite accurately, in other parts of his column. He said:

For the better part of a decade, government has been reaching out to capture key elements in the economy, to transform them into instruments for implementing its vision of the corporate state—that is, one in which political authority is assured by control over investment and production.

How relevant that comment is in relation to Bill C-105. I have dealt generally with the effect Bill C-105 would have and the fact that it would allow companies to become very predatory in the corporate field. But it will also apply to government owned companies, to those that the minister claims he wants to have incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act. I can see the possibility that not only would private concerns be taking advantage of these confiscation provisions that the minister wants us to accept, but Crown corporations will be going after other companies in this country.

John Meyer gives figures to demonstrate the deterioration of our economy, faulting the National Energy Program and pointing out that it is this state interventionist type of approach that is causing such dramatic deterioration in our economy. For example, he states as follows:

Many explanations for Canada's fading economic performance were given through the 1970s. The most persuasive was that having passed through its development phase, the economy had now reached a maturity in which policy emphasis should be on the redistribution of wealth rather than the creation of new wealth.

That, unfortunately, appears to be the government's main thrust—do not create something new but concentrate on redistributing what others have built up in the form of wealth.

I would emphasize that this provision is unique. It will set the precedent of allowing the directors of a company literally to have the power to sell out shareholders because those shareholders have, somehow or other, been deemed to have contravened certain share provisions.

Let us not forget the traditional role of a director as far as a corporation is concerned. In England, directors are treated as a profession. They are invited, as professionals, to join a board, and it is clearly understood that their duty on behalf of the shareholders is to supervise, control and regulate the officers of the company so that they will work in the best interests of the shareholders. It is a trustee-shareholder relationship. They find the more Americanized type of approach very strange where officers of a corporation actually sit as directors.

Perhaps if we turned to some of the text books on corporate law we would get a better understanding of how important it is to preserve this fiduciary relationship between shareholder and director. In Fraser's Handbook on Canadian Company Law, Sixth Edition, 1975, which is edited by Horsley and Sutherland, there appears the following passage on page 1:

Among other advantages of incorporation is the control which the shareholders can exercise over those who manage the company's undertaking, viz., the directors. The latter are special agents and have only such powers as are given them by the governing statute and the regulations of the company.

That has been the corporate law, and the tradition up to the present time. What the minister, in his devious way, is attempting to do is basically to change the whole corporate approach in Canada. He is now suggesting that those directors, after having been elected by shareholders, should have the power, in certain circumstances, to sell out the very shareholders who may have voted to put them in power. It is like setting up a trust and, having appointed various trustees to handle the affairs, in turn giving them by statute the power to sell out the beneficiaries because they do not meet certain tests that the directors feel should be met because they want to apply for some licences or get into some other activity. That is what I feel is grossly unfair in the government's approach in this bill.

The same attitude is taken in another text book entitled Canadian Business Corporations, edited by Pilkington and Prichard. At page 286 there appears the following statement:

> Since directors and officers are entrusted with the management of the property and assets of the corporation, which in turn is owned by the shareholders, they are subject to fiduciary duties.

That is the essence of what we are talking about. It is not right, through a statutory provision, to allow those directors to literally defeat the fiduciary relationship they have been put in.

The reason that it is important that we persuade the minister to back off his intentions is that not only will it have consequences in Canada on Canadian investment—it may set a very nasty precedent that will be adopted in other statutes—but it is going to advertise to the world that Canada is no longer a country where you can have the economic freedom that people in the western industrialized nations have generally expected.

Mr. Blenkarn: He wants to make us a banana republic.

Mr. Stevens: It will put us in the position where investors from other countries, before they put their money at risk in Canada, will draw back and say that it is a rather peculiar country we have there. At least their government on occasion has empowered people literally to buy us out at some price to be determined by them, selling to some person to be determined by them, and from then on we will have no further rights other than to claim whatever money they deem to be appropriate with respect to our investment. How would you feel if you were thinking of making an investment in New York State or California and your lawyer told you that under certain circumstances you may be sold out with absolutely no control over the proceeds from your initial investment? That is what this minister is proposing.

These proposals are not only with reference to the resource field, as he says. He is proposing a basic change to the Canada Business Corporations Act which will affect any corporation which desires to be licensed under a federal or provincial act, and I have referred to some of them. They need to show a certain Canadian ownership level. That is what he is proposing. That is why I think it is time that we in the House said, "No, Mr. Minister. You may want to help your friends"—and we know the friend he is trying to help—"but you had better find another way rather than changing the whole corporate law of this country." In short, if he feels he has difficulty in allowing people to comply with whatever regulations he is putting in place with respect to Canadian ownership, that is his problem and his friends' problem. It should not only every federal company but, indirectly, every provincial company as well.

There was an interesting article entitled "A Survey of Economic Freedoms" written by Lindsay M. Wright, a research associate with the Comparative Survey of Freedom. He discusses various aspects of democratic freedoms, including economic freedom. He points out:

> In order to determine their personal and collective economic destinies, individuals and groups must be able to enjoy certain economic freedoms that protect them, within the limits determined by society, from arbitrary and illegitimate interference by others in their economic activities. The four basic economic freedoms considered below are (1) freedom to have property, (2) freedom of association, (3) freedom of movement, and (4) freedom of information, as these relate to economic activities.

Hon. members will note that the first one listed is freedom to have property. It is that freedom which we are taking away tonight if we agree to go along with the minister's suggestion that under certain circumstances property can be confiscated in the way he is proposing. Bear in mind that once you detract from economic freedom, you will have an equal detraction from political freedom. In short, this is something which must be resisted, and I only hope that members who feel there is already too much government encroachment in Canada, too much statism, will stand up and be counted on this issue. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I could not help hearing the groans from my colleagues behind and around me as the hon. member who just spoke so well went on and on and on. It reminded me of a book I used to read in law school on company law. I suppose some of my colleagues can thank God they never went to law school.

In speaking to this bill I want first to deal with some remarks of the minister and then with some of the points made by the last speaker. I would then like to go into some of our detailed criticisms of the bill. The minister said a few minutes ago, "Increased ownership by Canadians means Canadian energy supplies will be secured for Canadian use". One has to ask, Mr. Speaker, increased ownership by whom, by how many Canadians? The answer is, by few Canadians, by shareholders. Most of the people in my riding do not own shares of companies. As a matter of fact, very few people in the country own shares, considering the total population.

In spite of the rhetoric about property rights we heard from the previous speaker, basically what the government proposes is a Canadianization program through private shareholders. That has been quite clear in the last few days in the House. It will be achieved by the PIP and COR programs, by giving $6.5 billion in grants to private Canadian companies. So the question is, I suppose, if we give control to these shareholders, if we give ownership to these few Canadians, can we have energy security? That raises the question of whether they will act any differently from the way shareholders, directors and officers of oil companies have acted in the past, that is, foreign-controlled oil companies, because you will recall that this is a country which has let its oil industry be foreign-controlled to the extent of about 70 per cent or 75 per cent. No other OECD country would permit that, as the minister pointed out the other day.

We have to look, Mr. Speaker, at the history of how private shareholders of Canadian energy companies and the private companies have dealt with our energy security. I think most Canadians can understand that history, because you do not have to be a historian to understand that. There is a tremendous pressure to export energy when it is found. I was just reading an article by Eric Kierans, a former Liberal minister, entitled "The Day the Cabinet was Misled". He talks about the pressure on cabinet, about the invasion of Ottawa by hordes of industry and association representatives and lobbyists. He talks about how cabinet was misled into authorizing the export of half our daily production of oil and a great deal of our natural gas. Canadian energy companies have always wanted to export because they want to make a buck, and that does not necessarily square with the energy security of Canadians. I think this is the point which perhaps my friends to the right miss.

In addition, history shows that these companies tend to invest a lot of their money abroad. That does not square with the energy security of Canada either. When they do not like taxes, they take the rigs out of the country. We have heard that cry for the last year in the House by spokespersons for the industry. If they do not like the taxes, they go on strike. They will not build the Alsands project or the Cold Lake project. So whom is the minister kidding when he says that increased ownership by Canadians through this fiddling with shares—because that is what it is—means that Canadian energy supplies will be secured for Canadian use? The minister is not kidding the Canadian people nor is he kidding us in this corner of the House.

• (2130)

The key to making energy supplies secure for Canadian use is to put Petro-Canada in the driver's seat. Petro-Canada should be the predominant company in the industry and should direct the exploration and use in the marketing of Canadian energy supplies. No one in the House will go that far. I submit that is what the Canadian people want. That is what any Gallup poll taken in the last few years has shown.

Mr. Blenkarn: Don't be too sure.

Mr. Waddell: My friend says "Don't be so sure." I refer him to a poll taken by the committee to Canadianize the industry in Canada. That poll showed that 70 per cent of the people wanted to make Petro-Canada the predominant company. I know my friends to the right wanted to get rid of Petro-Canada. I do not think people liked that. As a matter of fact, my friends backed off four times. They had four separate policies.

There is one difficult aspect of the debate to get across to the Canadian people. In a committee hearing today, Joel Bell, vice-president of Petro-Canada answered the question: what is the leading oil company in Canada? The answer is, Imperial Oil is. It is controlled by Exxon of the United States. What is the leading Canadian company, Mr. Speaker? Is it Petro-Canada? No, it is Dome Petroleum. Petro-Canada is about fifth on the list.

The goal of 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990—not control but ownership, which is easier to achieve than control by the government is too little too late. This pathetic piece of legislation will not change that situation very much. The minister caved in on that legislation. Contrary to what the member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) said, this legislation is really nothing now. It has been gutted. I will enlarge on that in a few minutes. The minister said, "It is no longer essential"—which is an understatement, to put it mildly—"that the legislation contain provisions that existing shares be affected". In other words, this legislation does not affect existing shares. The whole thrust of this legislation has been cut out. I cannot understand the hon. member for York-Peel. I know he is a genius. It takes a genius to bankrupt a bank these days.

Mr. Stevens: Who did you have in mind?

Mr. Waddell: I know he is that kind of corporate genius.

Mr. Stevens: Who did you have in mind?

Mr. Waddell: The Conservatives tried, by ringing the bells and so on, to oppose certain aspects of this bill, not only to break it up, but to oppose certain aspects of the whole energy security bill. One of the aspects they opposed, especially in the negotiations to break up the bill, was this very provision affecting existing shares. Pardon the vernacular, but this is what they are all uptight about. This is what they are really concerned about. The minister caved in on this part. That is why I cannot understand my friend standing up and snatching defeat from the jaws of victory. As I say, it is not logical that he should find what I think are rather extended means of opposition to this bill. I cannot see it. If you cannot sell out existing shareholders, why is it so different if you are talking about future shares? As long as you protect existing shares, you would think the hon. member would be happy. This is not a radical bill by any means.

I want to deal with the bill a little bit. The amendments in the bill are to provide a mechanism whereby corporations will be able to obtain and maintain their Canadian ownership rate required to qualify for the PIP grants. As you know now, Mr. Speaker, the government's method of Canadianization—unlike the method that we would propose, which is to make Petro-Canada the predominant company by taking into public ownership swiftly and fairly, but solidly and soon one of the major foreign-owned oil companies—is to go to a very complicated scheme, I think unworkable, of PIP grants, the COR ratio, with legions of bureaucrats and a lot of paper work. This is what the amendment to the Canada Business Corporations Act deals with.

Last year a draft of the energy security bill was prepared. Then we had Bill C-94. That was subsequently broken up into a number of bills. We are dealing with one of these bills tonight. Originally, Bill C-94, the omnibus energy security bill, allowed Canadian oil companies to buy back, cancel or reclassify the shares held by foreign investors even if the foreign investors objected. The foreign investor would have been reimbursed. But now the government has amended Bill C-105 from the original version, Bill C-94. The addition of Section 168(1) found on page 9 of the bill prohibits a company from constraining existing shares held by foreigners. In other words, companies will only be allowed to constrain future share issues. Foreigners holding existing shares are protected from having to give back their stock.

This is what the minister meant when he said "That is no longer essential." He just gutted his whole bill. This backtracting by the Liberals indicates how they bowed to the pressure of foreign investors, particularly in the United States. The Liberals continue to talk a good fight on promoting Canadianization, but their actions are speaking louder than their words. There is a tremendous lobby behind the scenes by the American government, by industry and by members of the Conservative party in the House especially, to get the government to back away from the thrust of the National Energy Program. The lobby is having some success. The government is backing off. What would you expect of the Liberal Party, because when it comes right down to it, in spite of the occasional outbursts of creation like that of Petro-Canada or the original thrust of the National Energy Program, the Liberal Party is still a party which finds its roots and finances in big business. You should not forget that. It is also a party without a philosophy. It can get buffeted about in the pressure of the day. It is, as Eric Kierans said before he quit the cabinet in disgust, easy for the cabinet to get misled. He gave some instances of the cabinet being misled by hordes of industry and association representatives and lobbyists. They have far more power and influence than the ordinary person in Canada has. That is perhaps the great tragedy in the country and in the democratic system. It is those with money, power and influence who have that kind of ability to change government's views and to make government backtrack when coming out with progressive policies.

Had the government stuck by the original draft of this bill, we might have been prepared to support it, but this backtracking is part of a pattern.

I have brought along some clippings. If you follow the government's activities over a period of time, you can see some of the backtracking from the original National Energy Program. In the Alberta report for February 27, 1981, we find the heading "NEP changes make it easier to Canadianize." It reads:

• (2140)

Boasting of his "flexibility and willingness to help the petroleum industry," Ottawa's Energy Minister Marc Lalonde last week announced changes to the National Energy Program he had unveiled with considerably more fanfare in October.

In this particular change they were talking about the new dispensation for the Canadian ownership rate required for maximum grants of 80 per cent for frontier exploration and 35 per cent elsewhere. It was changed from the requirement that the company be 75 per cent Canadian-owned, to 60 per cent Canadian-owned. Also, the Canadian ownership rate will be easier to prove. This was on February 27, 1981.

An article appeared in the February 28, 1981 edition of The Globe and Mail entitled, "Ottawa Plans to Modify Ownership Rules Again". It read:

Harold Renouf, chairman of the federal Petroleum Monitoring Agency, said the Canadian ownership rate . . . rules will be modified to clear up some of the tricky questions arising from stockbrokers, pension funds and nominees holding shares of oil companies.

The pressure was on!

Another article appeared in the October 23, 1981 edition of The Globe and Mail entitled, "PMA Relaxes Canadian Ownership Rules". It reads in part:

The Petroleum Monitoring Agency has relaxed several rules on Canadian ownership to help oil and gas companies qualify for federal and provincial exploration and development grants.

It continued:

Mr. Renouf said the PMA is still reviewing other changes—

In the "Report on Business" which appeared in the February 10, 1982 edition of The Globe and Mail, under the headline "Altered Ownership Rules Held Less Burdensome", the following was reported:

Modified Canadian ownership regulations will lift the administrative burden for a "signifcant" number of small oil and gas companies, according to a federal energy official.

Those are just some examples. There are many more which I could cite, such as the ones on February 27, 1981, February 28, 1981, February 23, 1982, and February 10, 1982. They were all changes with respect to Canadian ownership rules.

Here we have the latest change in the original intent to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act by allowing directors to force foreign shareholders to sell. Now that will not be done. They will only deal with future shares. This is why I call it a pathetic bill. There is nothing in it. The hon. member for York-Peel need not get all excited about it because there is simply nothing in it.

With the approval of two-thirds of a company's shareholders, a company could change the classification of its stock to constrained shares so that only Canadians could own them. As well, the company could buy back some of its shares on the open market and reissue the same number of constrained shares within two years. As a rule, companies are generally not permitted to deal in their own shares. Moreover, a company could issue different kinds of shares, some owned by Canadians only and others by all investors. Probably very few companies will make use of these provisions to bolster their Canadian ownerships levels.

Smaller companies which for the most part are not involved in exploration on federal lands have no incentive to do so because they do not qualify for the lucrative grants associated with Canada lands exploration; nor are the large multinationals likely to constrain shares. For example, if Gulf Canada bought back all its foreign-owned shares, except those held by the parent corporation, it would still not qualify for the next higher level of incentive payments. Gulf Oil United States owns 60 per cent and foreign shareholders own 20 per cent of Gulf Canada, so why would Gulf want to use these provisions to buy back shares? The simple answer is that it would not.

These are technical amendments to the act designed to allow Canadian energy companies to increase their Canadian share ownership. I have already said that I think they will have very little effect and that they have been gutted of their real power because they do not apply to existing shares. We in the NDP will vote against the bill because it is mainly cosmetic. It will have little influence on the over-all degree of private Canadian ownership. Rather than tinker with share percentages of private companies, we advocate a greater role for public ownership and stress a greater roll for Petro-Canada.

I should like to expand on this just briefly. In the last 1.5 years, $6.5 billion has been spent to increase Canadian ownership of oil and gas production by about 4.5 per cent, to about 30.5 per cent. As I said, anywhere from about 65 per cent to 70 per cent of the industry is still foreign owned, and perhaps 70 to 74 per cent foreign controlled. This is a strange method of Canadianization. People want Canadianization. Why have this strange method of grants to companies which will pretend to be more Canadian?

Mr. Fulton: It would lose its donations from oil companies.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps that is correct. If it really wanted to offer Canadians a vision of patriating the oil industry as it patriated the Constitution, it could do so. I think Canadians want it.

The nominal corporate tax rate for the petroleum industry is supposed to be 36 per cent. However, because of the tax concessions given to this wealthy industry, its effective federal tax rate has been only 10 per cent for the period from 1974 to 1980. This compares with a federal income tax rate of 18 per cent in 1980 for a married taxpayer with two children who earned an income of $25,000. Some of my colleagues are required to return to their ridings and face average taxpayers such as married persons with two children paying effective tax rates of 18 per cent. These people see oil companies paying an average rate of 10 per cent, with parliament agreeing to give $6.5 billion to oil companies this afternoon. This is pretty obscene from the standpoint of an average taxpayer. We have to sit here day in and day out listening to hon. members, especially those in the Conservative Party, screaming, shouting and crying for the poor, poor oil companies. Our hearts bleed for them.

One should look at how other countries handle foreign ownership and control. For example, in Great Britain, the British National Oil Corporation has first claim on a 51 per cent share of oil production, and its purchase is negotiated at market prices. BNOC may offer participation to joint-venture partners including foreign-owned firms, but it retains control of all projects. It does not have just a 25 per cent equity, it has control. In Norway, Statoil, the government oil company, can take up to a 70 per cent interest in any block of land it does not already hold. Statoil takes this interest after a find, but before development, and it makes no payment for past exploration expenditures.

There was another change to the original National Energy Program. When industry was up in arms about Bill C-48 at the hearings, the minister said that the government would pay them for past exploration expenditures. The government caved in on that, but it did not cave in on native rights or environmental changes. It caved in to the big companies which wanted Petro-Canada or the government to pay.

Mr. Taylor: What about property rights?

Mr. Waddell: My friend refers to property rights. He should look at the giveaway of property. He should remember who owns the oil and gas in the country. Canadian people own the oil and gas in the country, and he should not forget it.

In Australia, foreign companies are allowed to explore, but only Australian and naturalized foreign investors can produce energy resources. To qualify as "naturalized", a foreign company must have 25 per cent of equity owned by Australians and a majority of Australians on its board of directors, and a public commitment to increase Australian equity to 51 per cent.

• (2150)

If you remember what I said about Eric Kierans in his article, he said that Ottawa was terrorized by Washington. He said that he thought of Ottawa in two ways; the capital of his country and the breeding grounds of fears and haunting visions of what Washington may do. Those constant bureaucratic nightmares make Ottawa less of a capital and Canada more of a satellite of the United States. That was not said by a screaming socialist but by a former minister of that government.

The industry in Mexico has been nationalized since 1938. What is the situation in Canada? Here we are seeking 50% Canadian ownership by 1990 as a goal. That is almost laughable. It is too little to late and it is too slow and unimaginative. Although there is a larger role for Petro-Canada, it is not the predominant role. It is the fifth oil company in this country—not the first, but the fifth. There is a requirement for 50 per cent of Canadian ownership but not control. This means that you can still have control in New York or Dallas to obtain a production licence on Canada lands. We give Petro-Canada a 25 per cent carried interest in Canada lands only. Previous owners are to be compensated for the back-in.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) told the Globe and Mail on June 20, 1981:

> The new regime is more favorable to foreign investment than in virtually any other country in the world.

There it is. Through their past policies the Liberals have put us in this mess of foreign control of our energy sector. They are now proposing to get us out of it by this half measure. Petro-Canada will play second fiddle to the Domes and the Novas. It will leave the petroleum sector to be controlled by private companies. This is not in Canada's energy security future and it is not in the public interest. In the near future a few large Canadian oil companies will be so prosperous that they will begin to take over non-petroleum interests and expand into other areas of the economy such as coal and solar energy, and other areas like shipbuilding and so on.

In 1980 the oil industry's profits alone represented almost 30 per cent of all profits earned by the non-financial sector of the economy, giving the industry a commanding position in our country's economy. As we pay more at the pump it represents a massive transfer of wealth from consumers to producers. Every time we buy a gallon of gas we are transferring more money. Given that Canadian consumers and taxpayers have and will continue to finance the growth of this industry, our only guarantee for a fair return on our investment in terms of retail pricing and security of supply is to have control of the petroleum industry rest with publically-owned Crown corporations such as Petro-Canada. It seems to me that this is too important a sector of the economy to be left in the control of the private sector, which will continue to hold the nation up for ransom for higher prices, more tax concessions and more exports of this precious non-renewable resource.

What does the government of Canada propose in the face of that evidence, which I suggest to my friends on the other side is solid and incontrovertible? I ask them to respond to that. The government comes up with these hokey PIP and COR programs which are complicated, convoluted, bureaucratic and unworkable. Even when it introduced this amendment to the Canada Business Corporations Act to allow directors of companies who have foreign shareholders to force the loosening of those shares in some way, it backed off and did not even deal with existing shares as a result of the outcry from the Conservative Party and the industry. This is a sham. There is no way that this party could support this bill.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to learn something from the energy critic for the NDP during his remarks on Bill C-105. I heard him talk about Eric Kierans. I heard him talk about taxation and I heard him talk about Petro-Canada five or six times, but I would like to bring it to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that these bills are being debated under special House rules adopted on March 22 and I suspect that the NDP by now has used up more time allocated to them than the Progressive Conservative Party during this debate.

I suspect that they have very little time, if any, to deal with the tax measures which will come before the House because, to my understanding, at this point they are well into their six hours of the total allocation of seven hours for second reading debate.

I suggest that the NDP energy critic should learn to speak faster and to say something when he speaks rather than just use the time of the House as he has done.

It is important that we study this bill and understand that it does not just comprise technical amendments to the Canada Business Corporations Act. This is a serious bill which alters the framework of corporations in Canada. It is not an energy bill at all. It masquerades as part of the National Energy Program because it does not deal specifically with energy corporations. Indeed, it deals with corporations in general where the percentage of ownership or control of those corporations may in some way entitle a corporation that was Canadian owned or had a certain portion of Canadian ownership to have special privileges in accordance with the laws of a province or the federal government. The corporations could be involved in the manufacture of tractors, liquor or, indeed, in any commodity. Little by little, piece by piece, a province could stipulate that a corporation must have a certain percentage of Canadian ownership, and if that corporation was incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act where part of its operation involved a benefit to have constrained shares or shares owned only by Canadians, the provisions of this bill would then come into effect.

Therefore, I suggest that we are not dealing with a measure involving energy security. We are not dealing with Canadian ownership of energy companies in Canada. We are dealing with a very dramatic amendment to the way corporation law exists in Canada.

I say to you and to the House, Mr. Speaker, that when we deal with the basic fabric of the corporate law of Canada we must do it very carefully. We need to understand where we are heading and how Canada works in the capital markets of other countries. We need to know how shareholders and investors in other countries, and indeed other governments, view business conditions in Canada. We must regard the way financiers and lenders and those who buy the shares consider the business organization arrangements in Canada.

There are countries which have massive controls on the ownership of shares where companies can only be incorporated if there is a high percentage of that country's nationals who form the shareholders of the country. If you look at those countries which have imposed these restrictions, you will find that they are primarily undeveloped, have a poor gross national product and do not grow.

The hon. member spoke about Mexico. I am told that the gross national product of the state of Texas is well in excess of the gross national product of the entire country of Mexico. When we regard it in those terms, it becomes evident where we are headed. A free enterprise, open and private market society must be operated with as few restrictions and controls on corporate and business activities as possible.

Before geting into the details of the bill, having in mind the time, perhaps I should call it ten o'clock. I will go into those details tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been made.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS—AMOUNT OF TRANSFERS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, on March 19, I had a question on the amount of transfers under the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. Under these arrangements, the Government of Canada will be paying Quebec $35.2 billion. Considering the total population of this country, Quebec is receiving one-third of total transfers to the provinces. Quebec will therefore be receiving $14.6 billion more over the five-year period 1982-83 to 1986-87 than it received during the period 1977-78 to 1981-82. I asked this question because quite frankly, when I hear a speech by the Premier of Quebec, he is always talking about cutbacks. I feel that it would be an excellent idea to set the record straight once again. For instance, for health services Quebec will receive $13.6 billion over the next five years, which represents an increase of $5.8 billion over the $7.8 billion Quebec received during the past five years. During the next five years, the Government of Canada will be transferring $5.8 billion to Quebec for post-secondary education, representing an increase of $2.5 billion over the past five years. I repeat, from $3.3 billion to $5.8 billion.

Under the item of equalization payments alone, Quebec will be receiving $15.8 billion between 1982 and 1987, compared to $8.7 billion over the last five years, representing an increase of $6.9 billion. This adds up to an average increase, over the next five years, of 10.8 per cent, or a total increase of $15.2 billion. That is why I asked my question about the amount indicated in the federal estimates, and in answer to the question I put to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), I received a reply on February 22, indicating that the amount budgeted last spring in 1981 for the equalization program for Quebec was $1.7 billion, and because of changes in the votes this was increased to a total of $2.1 billion at the end of the year, which means an increase of $400 million over the past year.

The Premier of Quebec has never mentioned this increase. And this year, with an increase from $2.1 to $2.5 billion, will bring another increase of $400 million. I should like to obtain confirmation from the parliamentary secretary regarding the amount, which I believe to be accurate, to make sure there are no discrepancies in the figures I used this evening.

• (2205)

[English]

Supplementary estimates C for last year show fiscal equalization for Quebec at $268 million, and Supplementary estimates E list Quebec at $9 million, for a total of $277 million.

I would like an explanation from the parliamentary secretary to clear up any doubt, since I have referred to an increase of $400 million for last year. Because I want no misunderstanding as to the accuracy of the figures I have read for the current year, the year just beginning, the parliamentary secretary might like to explain the reason for the discrepancy to which I referred in the question which I put to the minister on March 19 last.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by complimenting the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for correctly underlining the size and the importance of federal transfer payments to the province of Quebec. The hon. member has quite rightly pointed out the significance of these payments to the ordinary people and the quality of life in that province.

There is an increase of $340 million in Quebec's 1981-82 current year entitlement. That represents the difference between the first official estimate of January 14, 1981, which was $1,780 million, and the latest or third official estimate of December 29, which was $2,120 million.

For any given fiscal year, three estimates of current fiscal year entitlements enter into the determination of the actual payments to an equalization receiving province with respect to that fiscal year. Other calculations of prior years' entitlements are also completed during the course of the year and the results of these re-estimates can also have an impact on the actual size of the cheques which are sent to the provinces.

As this information from the current year and prior years becomes available, the remaining payments to the provinces in that fiscal year are adjusted and the next available set of supplementary estimates are used to tell the House of the changes to the cost of the equalization program.

Therefore, starting with the main estimates current year entitlement for all equalization-receiving provinces of $3,627 million, if one then adds the amount in supplementary estimate C of $358 million and supplementary estimates E, $105 million, one arrives at the third official amount of $4,135 million for 1981-82 current year entitlements.

As for the province of Quebec, which receives by far the largest portion of equalization payments, if one adds to the main estimates the amount of $1,842 million, the increase of $268 million listed in supplementary estimates C and $9 million in supplementary estimates E, one arrives at $2,119 million, the level of payments which that province will receive in 1981-82 for the current year.

I again congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil for taking the time to bring to our attention this very sizeable payment from the federal government to the province of Quebec.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES—YIELD TO PURCHASERS. (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REDEEM LOW YIELDING ANNUITIES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, April 1, as reported at page 16042 of Hansard, I questioned the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) regarding the current yield to purchasers of government annuities.

• (2210)

Like many holders of these annuities I am concerned with the fact that since 1976 there has been no increase in the yield from these annuities, in spite of the 1976 recommendations by the minister's department that returns from these investments would be adjusted to reflect the cost of living increases and increases in interest rates. The minister's answer was that he and his department were aware of the situation and that he would be discussing it with the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

However, there are several questions that remain unanswered. Positive answers would go a long way to help satisfy the legitimate concerns of annuity holders across Canada. Such questions would encompass why there has been no increase in the yield in these annuities since 1976, in spite of the promise made at that time that such increases would be made to reflect the higher interest rates and the cost of living.

The minister's answer to me indicated, as well, that a study would be made in this regard, and that he would be reporting to Parliament the result of this study. We can only hope that such a study will recommend that some positive action be taken.

I would recommend to the minister, in light of questions raised by several of my constituents who hold government annuities, that consideration be given as well to a possible retroactive increase in the yield, to reflect the upward spiral in the cost of living since 1976.

When the minister is setting up the study, he should be aware as well of the disparity between the rate of return on investment between the government's annuity plan and private annuity plans. Mr. Speaker, a 7 per cent return on investments, which is the return received today from government annuities, is completely inadequate, especially when we compare it to that from comparable policies in the private sector which offer at least double that amount. The government return of 7 per cent may have been a realistic figure back in 1976, but with interest rates and the cost of living at record-setting levels, the policyholder's savings are eroded very quickly.

I would ask that the government realize this injustice and remedy it as soon as possible, so that these Canadians who invested in their government in good faith will receive a more realistic return. Otherwise, their investment for retirement will wither away to nothing in the face of double-digit inflation.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question put by my hon. colleague, I may remind him that on June 25, 1981, the then parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), told the House that after assessing the situation, the conclusion was that there was no reason to increase the yield of government annuities. He pointed out that government annuities were long-term, contractual agreements and that their yield could not be compared to the rates of interest payable on short-term financial instruments, because of their fundamentally different nature. He went on to say that it was important to bear in mind the contractual nature of annuities and the potential effects of a change to the terms of these contracts on other financial instruments, both in the public and private sectors. He concluded that the only viable solution to this difficult problem lay in the pursuit of monetary and fiscal policies that would serve to reduce inflation and thereby reduce interest rates for all Canadians.

The remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre are as valid today as they were last year. We shall solve the problem by taking steps to moderate inflation and thus bring down interest rates, an objective to which the government is firmly committed. Considering the concerns expressed by many hon. members, both this evening and during the past months, and in view of the fluctuation of interest rates during the past year, the minister is prepared to order another study on the yield of government annuities. Officials of the departments concerned will commence the study within the next few months and will make a decision on the basis of their conclusions.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the recommendations made by the hon. member, including those concerning a retroactive increase and the disparity between private and public annuities will certainly be considered by the officials who will undertake this review.

Questions concerning redemption of the annuities are also asked occasionally. The policy of the government is to reimburse the amounts paid plus any interest if the annuity amounts to less than $10 a year at maturity. In addition, except if otherwise provided by a particular pension plan, the annuity holder can redeem it if it amounts to less than $120 a year. If not, the Government Annuity Act prohibits redemption by the annuity holder. The only authorized exception is contained in Section 17 of the government annuity regulations, which authorizes the holders of collective annuity certificates who contribute to a federal or provincial employee pension plan to transfer the amount payable to the new pension plan. I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that a solution which my hon. colleague will find acceptable can be found as he himself noted in his comments, since the minister has already undertaken to make a review of the system.

PIPELINES—DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF ALASKA GAS PIPELINE. (B) CONSTRUCTION GUARANTEES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the matter I wish to bring to the attention of the House tonight arises out of a question I asked of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) on April 1. It was a two-part question.

The first part was very simple: could he or could he not confirm an announcement made by the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, the northern pipeline commissioner, about five or six days previous to that? The answer to the first question was that the minister did not know and that the proper person to ask resides in the other place. That person is the hon. Senator Olson. If I recall correctly, the order which appointed Senator Olson said that it would be his responsibility to advise and assist the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and, of course, there should be—must be—someone in this chamber to answer legitimate questions from the people's representatives.

The answer to the second part of the question was even worse. I asked what the government intends to do and whether it is concerned about the fact that this project, which originally was anticipated to be completed in 1983, would now be delayed five years, to 1988. The response to that question was a rather blasé write-off. It was a glib response that there was nothing to be concerned about, that everything was in the hands of the minister and his department and that we on this side of the House should not worry. I can tell hon. members that we on this side of the House are worried about continuing delays, not only in relation to the project about which I asked my question, but also in relation to projects such as Alsands and Cold Lake.

When, in 1977, the question of the Alaska gas pipeline was debated in the House, the gentleman who is now Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), and who was at that time president of the privy council, stated that that project would generate 25,000 man-years of work directly, and some 220,000 man-years of indirect work which would be done in the manufacturing areas of Ontario and Quebec. If we ever needed to get on with a project like that, it is now when we desperately need those types of employment opportunities in Canada.

As I said before, the original treaty entered into between Canada and the United States on September 20, 1977, and the act which incorporated many of the terms of that treaty which was assented to in April, 1978, envisaged a completion date of the project and a start-up of gas transmission through that line on January 1, 1983, just less than a year from now. The project is not even started, let alone anywhere near completed.

Nothing happened until about 1980, and then we had another go-around. I remember the pre-build debate. At that time we were given iron-clad guarantees by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that that project would go ahead until its completion. We received iron-clad guarantees from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to know what happened to those iron-clad guarantees.

• (2220)

Recent events show that on March 23, the federal inspector of pipelines in the United States, Mr. John Rett, said that the project would not be completed until the winter of 1987, or perhaps January 1, 1988. This was originally denied by the hon. Mitchell Sharp, but one day later he had to confirm that the dates given by Mr. John Rett were correct.

Even worse things have happened since then, Mr. Speaker. An article in the Toronto Star on April 17 quoted Alaska Senator Frank Murkowski, a man who is generally optimistic and who supports this project, as follows:

> "In my view, the project will be deferred for an indefinite period of time—perhaps two to three years."

The article continues:

> A substantial delay could deal a big blow to Canada's hopes for the thousands of jobs and big contracts—

That is what is happening, Mr. Speaker. Delays by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have resulted in the loss of thousands of jobs for Canadians all across the country. I should like to know what the government intends to do about it.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the concept of the Alaska Highway Natural Gas Pipeline was essentially started in the early 1970s with the Transit Pipeline Treaty.

This treaty was followed by the Canada/U.S.A. Agreement on the Alaska pipeline in 1977 wherein both countries formally undertook to support the project on a priority basis. Canada approved the pre-built segments of the project in the spring of 1980 after President Carter provided assurances that the line would be financed and that his 1977 decision approving the project would be amended to allow pre-commencement billing for the Canadian segments. Further assurances were provided by the joint resolution approved unanimously by the Senate and House of Representatives and the commitment of the industry sponsors to participation in the financing of the project.

With the change in government in the United States there temporarily existed some controversy over the pipeline's scheduling. Nevertheless, President Reagan clearly stated his strong support for the project during a visit to Ottawa in 1981. Last October, in a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the President of the United States reiterated his support stating:

> I believe that this project is important not only in terms of its contribution to the energy security of North America, but it is also a symbol of U.S.-Canadian ability to work together co-operatively in the energy area for the benefit of both countries.

With regard to media reports earlier this month speculating on a new delay in the Alaska pipeline project, I would like to state that the Northern Pipeline Agency has advised that the 1986 schedule was tight and it has slipped to a 1987 completion as a result of a delay caused by the waiver package proceedings in the American Congress; that the schedule which now appears highly probable involves the completion of financial arrangements by June of this year, the submission of the financial proposal in July, and the final official approval by December of this year; and, finally, with completion of financial arrangements by the end of 1982, the schedule calls for completion of all other regulatory procedures and certifications leading to a completion of the project by late 1987.

Adjournment Debate

I would like to comment on a recent news report from Alaska that there may be difficulty in financing the Alaska segment of the pipeline by June of this year and that, if this occurred, completion of the pipeline could be delayed beyond the expected 1987 completion. The U.S. government has not advised of any difficulty in this respect.
