years the fur-brothers have every year brought large cargoes from this island, but as yet there is no sensible diminution of the stock. The flocks on the island are also much more fresh and white than those of the Continent. I send a link on the western side was the most productive of all, and the fur-brothers maintain, that when the sea recedes after a long-buried rain, a fresh supply of mammoth bones, is always to be seen on the shore, from which, proceeding apparently from some vast store at the bottom of the sea.

In addition to the mammoth and those of common occurrence, we were told the remains of two other unknown animals are occasionally found along the shore of the Polar Ocean; one supposed by Dr. Kytter, the naturalist, to be a species of rhinoceros, but about a century ago, in the northern islands above mentioned, Sannikow, another Russian explorer, "found the skulls and bones of horses, buffaloes, oxen and sheep, in such abundance, that these animals must have lived there in large herds. At present, however, the icy wilderness presents a prospect that could afford them nourishment, nor would they be able to endure the climate. Sannikow concludes that a milder climate must formerly have prevailed here, and that these animals had then been very contemporary with the mammoth, whose remains are found in every part of the island. Another circumstance, which infers a change in the climate, is the frequent occurrence here, as well as in the island of New Siberia, of large trees partially fossilized."

These animals may have been contemporary with the mammoth in a exceedingly probable, but the large "fossilized trees" are a fact for which we have no production of a more remote era. But if these remains "required a milder climate," how must it have been with the mammoth? This "change of climate" may have been a gradual one, and various conjectures have been hazarded to account for the apparently recent and fresh appearance of the bones of these animals—so recent that the entire skeleton of one dug out of a mass of ice at the mouth of the Lena was sent to Petersburg, where it is preserved in the Imperial Museum with the hair on the skin, a part of which was exhibited at the house of Sir Joseph Banks, in London.

The fossiliferous rocks of the Siberian coast of the Arctic Ocean.

The last London Quarterly Review has an interesting article founded on Von Wrangell's Narrative of an Expedition to the Polar Sea, under the orders of the Russian Government.

Countless herds of reindeer, elk, black bears, stags, and gray squirrels fill the upland forests; stone foxes and wolves roam over the low grounds; and, when the sun shines in spring, the air is filled with the notes of various birds, and, when they are in season, the air is filled with the notes of various birds.

These animals, the Baron observes, either visit or inhabit the ice deserts in obedience to the universal laws of nature; they have no choice to exercise. "But," he asks, "what induced man to fix himself in this dreary region? Nemesis races under midnight skies wander from our fruitful region to another; and life is a continual conflict with privation, and with the terrors of cold and hunger."

These animals, the Baron observes, either visit or inhabit the ice deserts in obedience to the universal laws of nature; they have no choice to exercise.

inhabitants have returned to their shattered abodes, shops are open, the dead bodies have been removed to the grave, and the wounded taken to the hospital. I visited the hospital, and the scene presented there was of the most dreadful description. The Egyptian Governor, after taking the oath of allegiance to the Porte, was re-elected, and our men and the Austrians are busy clearing away the rubbish and fortifying the castle, and now, I may say, we can defy the strongest enemy. An addition of 10,000 troops to the Turkish army is expected in Syria. We need no assurance that the magnitude and irrevocability of the dreadful description. The Egyptian Governor, after taking the oath of allegiance to the Porte, was re-elected, and our men and the Austrians are busy clearing away the rubbish and fortifying the castle, and now, I may say, we can defy the strongest enemy.

Love.—What an infectious mystery is love! I maintain that it is born a twin and never can exist, at least for any length of time singly. The "beatin' damier," and in which all labour more or less, may indeed be a sort of impetus that sometimes impels the heart towards an object that feels no reciprocity for it; but all such are mistaken missions that soon terminate. Just as we often enter a room in which there to meet us, quit it involuntarily; so it is with affection. No heart ever lingers on another that has no corresponding sympathy to greet it. A freemason would hardly repeat the sign of his order where he found it was not understood; and the freemasonry of love requires an equal return; for which reason, no love that is not mutual can be either deep or lasting.

anxious hearts under smiling countenances. The parents look at their daughter, and feel how great, how rich a treasure they are losing, and confiding to another's care. Their minds glance back to her days of infancy, the progress of her childhood, and how dwell with anxious solicitude upon her entrance into the duties of womanhood.

Taking of Quebec by General Wolf.—A map upon an extensive scale, illustrative of the naval and military operations which led to the above memorable event, is preparing for publication by Mr. Wylde, the geographer, of Charing-cross. A work of this description appears to us to be likely to meet with a favorable reception, not only from those belonging to the service, but also from the public at large, to whom it can scarcely fail to prove acceptable, as a record of one of the most glorious and important exploits ever achieved by British skill and valor.

The compiler, Mr. Alfred Hawkins, was for many years resident in Canada, where the topographical part of his plan was sketched out from original surveys. Mr. Hawkins's undertaking has been cordially and extensively encouraged in our North American possessions, as well as at home.

The list of subscribers connected with the cities of Quebec and Montreal alone already amounts to nearly a thousand, at the head of whom are Lord Selkirk, the Earl of Gosford, Lord Sydenham, Sir James Macdonell, and Major General Clitherow. In the making up of the service, he has been patronized by several leading public functionaries, amongst whom may be enumerated the Master General of the Ordnance and Lord Bloomfield. We have been favoured with a private view of this interesting chart, which is now rapidly drawing towards completion, and engraved in a bold and spirited style. It is to be appropriately dedicated to the members of the United Service, and will no doubt prove a gratifying offering.

It may not be out of place to take the present opportunity of correcting a long existing misconception respecting General Wolf. We have heard some people contend that he was a major, and others that he was a lieutenant. In point of fact he was neither the one or the other. At the time he held the mere local rank of brigadier, and his general rank being that of a lieutenant colonel only.—London paper.

THE TROUBLE OF A POLITICIAN.—In the course of our morning's drive I happened to ask him if he intended to go into politics when he was at home at Sikkerville. He said, he did not, I was once an Assemblyman, but since then I gave up politics. "There is nothing so well taken care of as your rights and privileges, Squire. There are persons in our village who volunteer to do that out of pure regard for you, ready to lay down their lives to fight your cause, or their fortunes, if they had any. No; I have given that up. Good-morning, a better trade by one half, dear Deer, I shall never give it up, and a little the biggest man in all Sikkerville. I knew so much was expected of me, I couldn't sleep a wink for a night, and when I was in bed I slept as if I had a thousand devils on my mind. I saved half my work by saying I was from my cut down salaries. I intend to, says I. Watch the officials, says another; they are the biggest rogues we have, and it don't come with liberty that public servants should be the masters of the public. I quite concur with you, says I. Reduce lawyers' fees, says some; they are eating up the county like locusts. Just so, says another; a bounty on wheat says the farmer; if I don't come with liberty that public servants should be the masters of the public. I quite concur with you, says I.
