

MEMOIRS OF SHERLOCK HOLMES, BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

THE MYSTERY OF THE "GLORIA SCOTT."

(Continued) "He says that you know him, and that he only wants a moment's conversation."

Autumn was far advanced and the vacation drawing to a close, I received a telegram from my friend imploring me to return to Donnington, and saying that he was in great need of my advice and assistance.

"And" has spent more of his time in New York city than in Albany, directing the work of his assistants there by telephone or correspondence.

"What then could have been in this letter to cause so dreadful a result?" "Nothing, there lies the perplexing part of it. The message was absurd and trivial. Ah, my God, it is as I feared!"

"When did it happen, doctor?" asked Trevor. "Almost immediately after you left."

"I've not had my 'pology,' said he, 'but you will acknowledge that you have used this worthy fellow rather roughly.'"

ANDY HAMILTON CAME FROM BAR-ROOM TO NEW YORK LIFE

The Confidential Dispenser of Policy-Holders' Millions Was One of "Lucky Bunch" in Albany Saloon -- There He Met McCall, Who Liked Him So Well He Gave Him Company's Legislative Business.

When Judge "Andy" Hamilton comes back from England he will have achieved greater distinction in the eyes of Albany people than he ever had before. Two months ago, when he left for his vacation in Europe, he was comparatively unknown except to his intimates in Albany. They knew that he was "doing well," but they really did not know how well he was doing until the disclosure before the legislative insurance committee revealed him as the "handy man" of the New York Life Insurance Company, entrusted with the handling of hundreds of thousands of dollars every year.

They knew, too, that he was one of the charter members of the "Lucky Bunch" who used to gather in the back room of the "Jug of Blood," a saloon in one of the streets of Albany, celebrated for its position, merrily, its pool table and comfortable seats. As a matter of fact, the rise of "Andy" dated from the day he was admitted to the membership of the "Ten Ten Club," sometimes known as the "Ten Ten Club." Luck seemed to smile on every member of the "Ten Tens." There was Anthony N. Brady, familiarly known as "Tony." He was the patron saint of the organization, and every member of it followed him devotedly through his exploits of high financing and profited greatly thereby.

Brady is now worth at least $25,000,000 and every other member of the "Ten Tens" has at least $100,000 as the result of his association and friendship with Brady. Eugene D. Wood, better known as "Gene" Wood, who probably knows more about the inside workings of the Albany lobby than any other member in the state, was a member; so was Scutter, who started as a drug clerk with a pile of pill boxes and made a fortune, through the favor of Brady; Chief of Police William "Larry" Russell, who now is a Tammany officer; "Billy" McEwan, who is now one of the New York Life agents at Albany; and Harry Brook, who before he made his pile was Brady's private secretary.

"Andy" was supposed to have prospered greatly through his connection with the "Ten Ten Club," the influence of which was strong enough to induce John A. McCall, who was a famous member of the "Ten Tens" of a bygone generation, to take him up. But nobody except "Andy" himself really knew how well he was making out. While a quick and ready talker, a good story teller and an agreeable companion, he never talked about his own business. When things began to come his way, he moved from a humble home in an Albany side street and built a mansion for himself, fronting on Washington Park, in the most fashionable part of the town. But he made no ostentatious display of his wealth, and his neighbors figured that he was making possibly $10,000 or $15,000 a year. He did not drive a horse, own automobiles, display diamonds or adopt any of the various ways of spending money that appeal to rich men.

Hamilton was born in Albany. He was educated in the public schools and studied law. He hung out a shingle and had rather a tough time of it for several years until he got next to "Tony" Brady and McCall, to quote one of his friends. After a while he managed to get in with Hugh Reilly, then a prominent lawyer with a good practice in Albany. Reilly took him into partnership and Hamilton worked hard. Reilly was elected district attorney and Hamilton became his assistant. Hamilton was elected justice of the peace and held the job for two years. That gave him a title, and ever since he has been called judge, although most of the people who address him as such could not tell of what he was ever a judge. When Reilly resigned to become a judge of the court of claims, Hamilton succeeded him for less than a year, but it was the turning point in his career.

He did some favors for Brady and McCall, and was admitted to the inner councils of the "Ten Ten Club." The "Ten Tens" first gathered in the little back room of an old-fashioned beer saloon, where they met to play pinocle and "old ace at Albany, rarely went near the "Jug of Blood" for the drink, incidentally hitching up next little schemes that promised and was probably not in the assembly of profit. As time progressed, and these same chambers when other New York men dreamed of the money, pinocle was discarded and poker became a fashionable office and enjoyed every facility to come. Hamilton was a very good poker player, although he was not very often seen together with an associate, "can feel you bluffing," but kept at night, when they met with the other members of their unique organization to talk things over. Hamilton's law office in North Pearl street was the scene of most of his operations. Whenever he wanted to consult with anybody he called on him to his office, where in an inside room he conferred freely and without fear of interruption.

Six or seven years ago, when Hamilton had assumed complete control of the office of the New York Life in Albany, he began to make excursions to other state capitals—Boston, Hartford, Trenton, Albany, Columbus and Springfield, and was known in legislative circles of those capitals as "the New York Life man" in the morning in re-estimated full supervision over the Albany interests of his company, but so completely had he been enabled to leave much of the work to his assistants, trust that the friendship of Wood and agents in the legislature.

Three or four years ago he was sent abroad by McCall to look after the interests of the New York Life in Paris and Berlin. And so satisfactorily did he perform his work that his salary was raised to $20,000 a year, and he was entrusted with the handling of $100,000 more. But to his casual acquaintances "Andy" never talked about his misanthropic views, and his casual acquaintances never did he reveal the fact that he was handling such immense sums of money.

McCall, on the "witness stand" of the "Jug of Blood," Hamilton $476,927.02 had paid, which added to the $150,000 which Hamilton got for his services and the amount of money he won in the stock market through the friendship of Brady, he has probably handled a million dollars.

Hamilton's friends figured that he was making from $15,000 to $20,000 a year, and they rejoiced in his apparent good luck and hoped that it would continue. The only times that he ever "loosened up" to an unusual extent, although a good average spender, was when he was elected president of the Albany Club, five or six years ago. He then began to give entertainments, which, while not lavish or costly, calculated to impress his guests with the idea that he was making a good deal of money. That he was doing so has been shown by the testimony of the officials of the New York Life before the legislative committee.

The "Judge" himself never gave any intimation of the extent of his prosperity or the exact nature of his business. His frequent visits to New York were perplexing to inquisitive people. He came and went between New York and Albany to transact his business beyond the station and supervision of the third party, dealt directly and kept his mouth shut. If he ever gave a member of the legislature any money for favors received or services rendered, it is pretty certain that no one except that legislator and the "Judge" had positive knowledge of the transaction. He has intimated since his stay in Europe that he regrets the instruction in the nature of a confidential and privileged transaction between himself as the lawyer and the New York Life as client. People who know him best say this indicates that he will decline to discuss these matters before the instruction of the legislative committee, on the ground that he cannot betray the interests of his clients.

THAT NEW WHARF

By awarding the tender for the construction of the new wharf to Mr. Clark, the aldermen have created an interesting situation. If Mr. Mayes, who has the dredging contract, had that for the wharf also, he would naturally make the one sit in with the other, in order to proceed with both to the best advantage.

that the extravagance and waste which Mr. Ramsey charges exist in the operation of the Wharves could be found practically on all other wharves in the country. He believed it would be in the interest of the roads if there should be a thorough investigation of the management and method of operation, and he thought it the duty of the government to institute such an investigation.

GOLDEN DAYS

The thickening carpet of leaves on the arched roof of King square tells of the passing year, and the chill in the atmosphere reminds us that winter is at hand. But seldom has October given us twelve such days as those we have just enjoyed.

THE TEACHERS

For a considerable portion of each day for five days in the week, parents in St. John commit their children who are of school age to the care of the teachers in the schools. These teachers have a large share in moulding the lives of the children, and fitting them for the struggles of later years.

THE TROUBLE BREEDERS

The Gaelic American, published in New York, is furiously angry because Prince Louis of Battenberg, with a British fleet, will visit that port. It asserts that this is a British war move, against which the United Irish-American Society of New York must protest.

Today a convention of teachers opened in this city. There is an opportunity for citizens who can spare the time to attend the meetings, listen to the discussions, and by their presence manifest their sympathy with those who are so vitally connected with the work of training the men and women of the future.

Teachers from two counties will unite to consider matters relating to their work. Interesting papers will be read, and very interesting discussions will follow. There will be a meeting this evening devoted to public addresses on educational subjects, and those who attend will be well repaid.

SIR WILLIAM MULOCK

The withdrawal of Sir William Mulock from the federal cabinet will be regretted by the employes of the department, what ever the public estimate of his work as a minister may be. He has shown a willingness to listen to the views of those employed in his department, and to give them fair treatment.

Sir William Mulock has been a member of the cabinet since 1896, when he assumed the office he now resigns. He introduced the measure reducing domestic postage to two cents per ounce, and at the Imperial Postal Convention held in London in 1898 was successful in securing a reduced and uniform rate of imperial postage on letters.

There is the more regret at his retirement because it is the state of his health which makes that step imperative.

RAILWAYS NEXT?

Mr. Joseph Ramsey, Jr., had the hardihood to protest against the election of Messrs. George J. Gould and Russell Sage as directors of the Wabash Railway system, on the ground that they are also directors of a competing line. He also charged that extravagance existed in the management of the Wabash.

There is an awakened public opinion which is demanding that the railroad enterprises of the country shall be subject to a keen and sharp a scrutiny as the insurance enterprises are undergoing, and that they shall be run in the future for the benefit not merely of a clique of men who control the majority of the stock, but of all bond and stockholders and the public generally.

It was said today by one of the most prominent railroad men in New York

Wilmington, N. C., Oct. 11—The murder of Captain Rumill and four of his crew of the four-masted schooner Harry A. Berwind in a mutiny while the vessel was bound from Mobile to Philadelphia, is the story told in a special to the Star from Southport tonight.

The schooner Blanche R. King, Captain J. W. Taylor, bound from Brunswick (Ga.) to Philadelphia, put into Southport this afternoon bringing in three negroes, all that remained of the crew of the Harry A. Berwind.

Leading jewelry firms in New York and London are the names of diamonds in New Ontario, and some gem experts have been sent into the district.

FREDERICTON'S SENSATION

Mrs. Susan Briggs, a Charwoman, Arrested for Murdering the Infant Whose Body was Found on One of the City Dumps.

Fredricton, Oct. 11.—(Special)—Mrs. Susan Briggs, a widow, earning her living as a charwoman at the city, was arrested while at work in one of the hotels this afternoon on a warrant charging her with the murder of the infant whose body was found on the city dumps last Tuesday.

Since the discovery of the body of the child, Mrs. Briggs has been working diligently on the case and today received information which led her to believe that the child belonged to Mrs. Briggs.

It is claimed that the infant was strangled to death by her and the body hidden in the dump by her two little boys. On the strength of this information a warrant was sworn out and the arrest followed.

Mrs. Briggs is a woman of about forty years of age with seven children. Her husband died about three years ago and she is said to have had a hard struggle to keep the wolf from the door.

According to a story told by neighbors Mrs. Briggs gave birth to a child a few days before moving, and the theory of the police is that finding herself unequal to the task of supporting it through the winter, in addition to her other children, she led to commit the crime with which she is charged.

Coroner McDewhen had an inquest this evening on the body of the infant, and the evidence brought to light cannot fail to shock the moral sense of the community.

Dr. W. H. Irvine, William Darlington, Henry Boulter, Miss Ellen Briggs, George W. Adams and Mrs. Susan Briggs, were present at the inquest.

Dr. Briggs gave evidence as to the results of his post mortem examination. He expressed the opinion that the child had been born alive and that death was due either to strangulation or suffocation from something being pressed over the mouth.
