Alderson-Hasselfelt Wedding

A quiet marriage took place at the Methodist parsonage here on Wednesday, July 6th, when Miss Minnie Hasselfelt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Hasselfelt, became the bride of Mr. William Alderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Alderson, all of Flamboro Centre. The bride and groom were unattended. The bride wore a becoming travelling dress of navy satin, with mohair hat and corsage bouquet of sweet peas. Immediately after the ceremony the young couple departed for Orillia to spend a few days with a brother of the bride.

Who Is To Blame?

To say bicycle riding on the sidewalks and footpaths of the village is becoming far too common is putting it mildly, a by-law against the practice notwithstanding. But is it fair, is it a square deal that the law abiding citizen should be compelled to walk on the rougher road while the bold lawbreaker rides merrily along on the smooth sidewalk unmoiled. The council should either repeal the by-law and let all ride on the walks or enforce the law and keep all riders off. Think it over.

Recent happenings point clearly to the fact that wedding bells will shortly be heard in our village. The ever watchful cupid has been busy of late, several darts from his bow having found a safe resting place in the hearts of some of our young people. Let us hope that our surmises are correct and that there may be many more such happy events. Those of us who are left have the consolation in knowing that "while there is life there is hope."

A shooting match has been arranged to take place on the school grounds on Saturday afternoon next. This match will differ slightly from the customary methods employed. Generally at such matches of firing at clay birds sprung from traps, but on this occasion "stool pigeons" will be used. These "birds" have become quite plentiful of late around here and proven themselves a nuisance to cherry orchards.

Base Ball

What might have been wasn't. Such was the Junior game at Tansley last Saturday. Manager Dr. Vance stood by and watched his cubs play one of those games that happens when "nobody's at home."

The hot weather no doubt had a lot to do with the playing of the team, they all hold inside positions, the weather outside being too much for them. Harry Gordon was dizzy with the heat. Arnold's running and Nicholson's fielding were on a par. Ribson and Tommy were letting the ball dribble between their feet—too hot to stoop. No blame to the work of the battery, only discouragement.

After the tour in France, Miss Bennetts expects to visit relatives in London and Cornwall, and will return late in September.

Last Saturday Waterdown was favored with a visit of the French Mission, who are touring Canada. The members of the mission were being entertained by the City of Hamilton, and during the afternoon a motor trip to several beauty spots was made, this village being one of them. About a dozen autos, bedecked with Union Jacks and the French Tri-colors, passed through the main streets of the village and then returned to Hamilton.

Bad Man Cashes His Checks

MOVIES have been credited with bringing many youths to a bad end, and to the list of their victims must be added Henry Starr, who died with his boots on as a result of an infatuation for the silver screen, as it is more or less poetically called. It is true that Henry Starr was not originally corrupted by the movies. He was a noted bad man before there were any movies. Indeed his death moved the New York Tribune to call him the Wild West's last bad man, a statement which probably errs on the side of optimism. But it was an ambition to rise above the state into which he had distinguished himself, that of a bad man on a sweating broncho, to that of a silk-shirted bandit in a motor car that was his undoing. The movies were responsible for this. In one of his intervals of going straight he produced a film which represented him astride his foaming mustang committing various unsocial acts. The film was a fiasco. He found that horses had become what one of Leonard Merrick's characters called "extinct" in so far as up-to-date crime is concerned. Modern taste demands a high-powered car which in its noisiest moments does no more than purr.

It was beyond the means of Starr to acquire exactly such a car, the brand not being common in Arkansas and Oklahoma, but he did contrive to lay hands on a battered little boat, and with three companions he made a raid upon a bank in Harrison, Ark., a short time ago. The bandits carried revolvers and concealed their grim features behind masks. The car drew up in front of the People's National Bank, and the revolver-waving robbers entered. They backed the few customers against the wall, and herded the clerks toward the vault. One of the officials who tremblingly obeyed the suggestion of the guns was W. J. Meyers, a former president of the institution. As he cowered in the recesses of the vault, he felt something sinister prod him in the back. For a moment he supposed that one of the bandits had assailed him in the rear, for he recognized the sort of pressure that was applied. Turning he saw the muzzle of a rifle which he had put in the vault years before to meet just such an emergency.

He could not remember whether the gun was loaded. He supposed it was, and he took a chance. He grabbed the weapon and fired at one of the robbers who was leaning over a cash drawer. The gun was loaded. The bandit dropped. His companions fled. The writhing man on the floor said that he was Henry Starr, a name as familiar to those about him as that of Jesse James a generation before. He was taken to the hospital, and lived for four days, but as the bullet had severed his spine there was never the slightest hope of his recovery, and he passed away surrounded by his weeping family. His last words to his son were "Go straight." In fact his death bed could have been no more conventional had the scene been framed by Griffith or any other eminent movie producer.

Starr might be said to have inherited the proclivities that made him a menace for many years to the law-abiding inhabitants of the states where he roamed. He was akin to Cole Younger, and also to Belle Starr, known as "Queen of the Bandits." His uncle and his father also had more than local reputations for lawlessness. There was Indian blood in him, and his boyhood was as wild as might be expected of one nurtured in banditry. Riding and shooting came more naturally to Henry Starr than sequestering their Sunday School collection comes to effete little Easterners. He rode all the better on a stolen horse, and when he shot he wished to have a human target. How many times in the course of his career he fired with the purpose of bringing down a man is uncertain. So far as is known he had only one complete murder to his credit, but in the course of his depredations his display of firearms was not less than voluptuous.

He was a convict at the age of nineteen, but his hardened companions spoke disparagingly of his exploits and intimated that he was in jail under false pretences. He determined to live down this slur, and it was not long afterwards that he shot and killed a detective who met him on a lonely road. Subsequently he expressed regret for the act and is said to have vowed never to shoot another man except in self-defence. The crime made him a marked man. It also made him a much feared man, and it is said that for years he was able to carry on his bank and train robberies almost without disguise. He drove about the country in a chuck-wagon with several other desperadoes, camped openly in the neighborhood of towns and defied anybody to arrest him. Eventually he was caught off his guard and arrested. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment for the murder and ten more years for his robberies, after a legal battle which was carried to the United States Supreme Court. After serving nine years of his sentence, he was pardoned by President Roosevelt, and promised to go straight, and when he was threatened with re-arrest for an old crime that he had forgotten he once more took to the highways, revolver in hand. In a robbery at Stroud, Okla., he was shot by a boy and was sentenced to twenty-five years' imprisonment. After four years he was paroled, and then he entered the movies. Here he was a failure, and it was in an effort to break into the motor bandit class that he planned the crime that ended his career.

Lily Roselip was the pretty little cashier who paid out all the boys every Friday.

One day she went up to her employer.

"Sir," she said, "I must ask for a holiday. I need to get my health back. My beauty is beginning to fade."

"Why do you think so, my dear?" inquired the employer in a kindly tone.

"The men," said Lily, "are beginning to count their money when I pay them on Fridays!"

Not Interested.

HOW AUTHORS WORK.
Find Inspiration Under Many Different Conditions.

Various are the adventitious aids to inspiration of which the novelist or poet avails himself. Not the least of them, perhaps, is tobacco. Tennyson and Charles Kingsley were prolific smokers, and Sir J. M. Barrie has confessed that when at work on a novel he smokes seven ounces during the course of a week.

Maeterlinck, too, always works with a pipe in his mouth, though he has long since given up the use of tobacco. According to his biographer, M. Gerard Harry, "in lieu of ordinary tobacco, he fills his bowl with a denicotinized preparation, tasteless indeed, but harmless. His pipe is still always alight when the pen is busy, but it is hardly more now than an innocent subterfuge intended to cheat and so satisfy an irresistible mechanical craving."

D'Annunzio is a night worker, and plies his pen when the rest of mankind are asleep. He works throughout the night, generally retiring to bed at about nine in the morning.

Dizraeli always worked in evening dress—a habit that was not, perhaps, without influence on his elaborate and highly-artificial style. That industrious scribe, the late Dean Farrar, used to write his books standing. Maurice Jokal always used violet ink, and when unable to obtain it he found the flow of thoughts considerably impeded.

Upon the writing-table of Henrik Ibsen there was a small tray containing a number of grotesque figures, among which were a diminutive devil, some cats, and some rabbits. "I never write a single line of any of my dramas," admitted Ibsen, "without having that tray and its occupants before me on my table. I could not write without them."

Of James Thomson, the poet of "The Seasons," it was said that "he would often be heard walking in his library till near morning, humming over in his way what he was to correct and write out next day." Thomson was in the habit of seeking inspiration in long walks in the open air, during which his thoughts would arrange themselves in ordered sequence.

Browning, too, did much of his work in the open air, and it was while walking in Dutch Wood that the thought occurred to him which was afterwards to find artistic expression in "Pippa Passes." The title of Thackeray's great novel, "Vanity Fair," on the other hand, suddenly flashed into its author's mind one night when he was lying in bed at the Old Ship at Brighton.

If the Sun Went Out.
Wonderful things are constantly happening in the universe; but what if the sun were suddenly extinguished?

The earth and every living thing upon it would be doomed in a very short time.

Why, at the end of the first week the frost would have destroyed all but the hardiest of the vegetation. Our lakes and rivers would freeze solid. Even our oceans would be soon turned to ice. And the ice, by its greater bulk compared with water, would encroach upon and overwhelm the land, until only the tops of the highest mountains would show above the glacial sea. These mountain summits would themselves be covered with deep snow, or ice crystals, which had fallen because of the water vapor in the atmosphere having frozen.

Mankind would be destroyed to the uttermost ends of the globe. Neither would the very lowest forms of organized creatures escape the icy death.

The stars would be always looking down upon our derelict earth, for it would be one long night. No bright-shining moon would ever rise, for our satellite borrows its splendor from the sun.

The earth would not stop turning round on its axis, nor would it cease to revolve about the dead sun.

There are believed to be many dead suns in the universe, all traveling through space at a great speed.

Would our dead sun be doomed to an eternal night? Perhaps not. Perhaps, in the course of its wanderings—at a speed of about twelve miles a second—it might meet with another celestial derelict.

If so, then appalling would be the impact. Its light and heat would be revived. The sun, in brief, would be born again.

And what of that icy tomb, the earth? It would melt as a flake of snow in the fire.

Vessel Made of Corrugated Plates.
Using ships' bulkheads to build an entire vessel seems an extraordinary proceeding, says Popular Mechanics Magazine; yet it has just been successfully accomplished in England, where a 6,000-ton tanker was so constructed with nearly 400 tons less material than would ordinarily be used. The secret lies in the curious form of the newly-invented bulkhead plates, which are made with vertical corrugations, so strengthening them that the usual horizontal and vertical stiffening brackets are dispensed with. The oil ship built in this manner, with its straight lines and corrugated sides, naturally offers a most peculiar appearance. It is to be used as a floating reservoir at Las Palmas, Canary Islands, for supplying oil-burning ships with fuel, and is equipped with pumps that have a capacity of 200 tons an hour.

A VERY USEFUL SPRAY

Lime Sulphur With Arsenicals for the Orchard.

A Combined Fungicide and Insecticide—Get the Right Arsenate of Lead — Stomach Worm Loss Preventable.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The time is again at hand for laying plans for the summer care of the orchard and garden and nothing that can be done will be found to give better paying returns than the careful control of insect and fungus attacks. It has been computed by reliable authorities that an annual toll of 10 per cent. is taken by the inroads of these enemies of the farmer on his various crops and that this loss increases many fold where proper precautions are not taken. In extreme cases complete destruction of some crop has sometimes been known to occur through failure to give care, or through neglect of the right steps at the right time.

In this connection it will be found that there is nothing that can be done that will give more satisfactory returns on the investment than a small outlay in money and time on spraying and dusting. But it must be done intelligently or time and money will be squandered; and the leading essential here is the choice of the proper remedy and the correct compounding and applying of it.

One of the most outstanding and effective remedies in use to-day is the lime-sulphur solution mixed with an arsenical. This combination gives a combined insecticide and fungicide effect, a team play which is very frequently required during the growing season, insects and fungi often giving trouble at the same time on the same plant. The advantage of mixing the two and applying them together is obvious — the cost of application is exactly one-half what it would be had they to be separately applied.

But care in making this combined spray must be exercised. Some arsenicals cannot be mixed with lime-sulphur. Paris green, long the most popular bug exterminator, and still extensively used where quick results are desired, will destroy fully 35 per cent. of the efficiency of the lime-sulphur wash if mixed with it, and what is far worse, this mixture will badly damage leaves and other tender parts of plants. It follows, therefore, that Paris green, though a powerful poison insecticide, cannot be used along with lime sulphur wash as a combined spray. On the other hand arsenate of lead has given decided satisfaction in this respect and it is quite probable that the newer arsenical, calcium arsenate, is also suitable to combine with lime-sulphur.

But the chief purpose of this article is to draw attention to the hitherto little recognized fact in connection with the use of arsenate of lead along with lime-sulphur that there are two kinds of arsenate of lead, chemically, one of which is more fitted for combining with lime-sulphur than is the other. Acid arsenate of lead destroys nearly 30 per cent. of the efficiency of the lime-sulphur, whereas neutral arsenate of lead, the other kind, only destroys 9 per cent. In other respects, these two forms of the lead arsenate are equally useful to combine with lime-sulphur solution to get a dual purpose spray. If, however, when using the acid arsenate of lead, 3 1/2 pounds of finely sifted, and fresh hydrated lime be mixed into the lime-sulphur solution along with every 1 pound of the arsenate used (which is usually 1 pound to every 40 gallons of the lime-sulphur solution) the destruction of the efficiency of the lime-sulphur is reduced to 8 per cent. (practically the same as the neutral). If this practice be followed when the acid variety of the arsenate is being used it does not matter which of the two forms of this arsenical is used in making lime-sulphur arsenate spray, as equally satisfactory results are obtained with either.

This precaution in connection with combining lime-sulphur and lead arsenate becomes especially important in view of the fact that practically all the lead arsenate now put on the market is of the acid variety. It is therefore recommended that whenever using arsenate of lead and lime-sulphur as a combined spray, unless the kind of arsenate is known to be neutral, the practice of using hydrated lime along with it be always followed.—H. L. Fulmer, O. A. College, Guelph.

Mullein.

Mullein, under the name of verbascum, is used medicinally in leaf and blossom. The leaves are thought to have anodyne, or pain-killing properties, and also yield a soothing oily substance. In Europe, an infusion of the flowers, strained to take out fibrous substance, is given in catarrhal troubles; and a mild oil, like olive oil, when saturated with mullein flowers, is used to allay inflammations of the mucous membrane. The dry leaves, smoked, are said to soothe irritated membranes.
