AYER'S SARSAPARILLA
S. P. SMITH, of Towanda, Pa., whose constitution was completely broken down, is cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He writes:
"For eight years, I was, most of the time, a great sufferer from constipation, kidney trouble, and indigestion, so that my constitution seemed to be completely broken down. I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and took nearly seven bottles, with such excellent results that my stomach, bowels, and kidneys are in perfect condition, and, in all their functions, as regular as clock-work. At the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, my weight was only 120 pounds; I now weigh 150 pounds, and was never in so good health. If you could see me here and after using, you would want me for a travelling advertisement. I believe this preparation of Sarsaparilla to be the best in the market to-day."

POETRY.

Worth the While.

BY BELLA WHEELER WILCOX.
It is easy enough to be pleasant
When everything goes dead wrong,
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with the years,
And the smile that is worth the praise of earth
Is the smile that shines through tears.

It is easy enough to be prudent
When nothing tempts you to stray,
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away.
But it is only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth
Is the one that resists desire.

By the cynic, the sad, the fallen,
Who hath no strength of the strife,
The world's highway is crumpled to-day.
They make up the items of life,
But the virtue that conquers passions,
And the sorrow that hides a smile
It is these that are worth the homage of earth.
For we find them but once in a while.

SELECT STORY.

A Hundred Dollar Bill.

"She's short-tempered, Nellie, and quick to speak; but you'll bear with her for my sake!"

"Not for that alone, Oscar—I have learned to love her for her own, long ago. She seems almost like a mother to me!"

Oscar Eldon stood in the middle of the floor, holding Helen Dermatt's hand in his—a slight hand, hardened with industry and browned with autumn suns. Just a year ago Helen, fresh from the dock of an emigrant vessel, and avoiding the noisy streets and crowded lanes of the great city as if they had been plague smitten, had tapped on Mrs. Eldon's door, with her bundle in her hand and the sweetest smile on her face.

"I don't believe in these travelling tramps, mostly," said Mrs. Eldon to her son; "but this girl has a good face, and I really need some one to help me. What would you do?"

Oscar looked at the sweet, patient face and answered promptly:
"I would take her!"

So, in the thrifty, healthful atmosphere of the Great New England farm house, Helen worked and sang, and warmed her way into Mrs. Eldon's good graces with marvelous rapidity.

A year afterward when the summons came to Oscar Eldon to go West and wind up the affairs of his deceased uncle, he met Helen in the kitchen and told her that when he came back he should claim her for his wife!

And, when Oscar Eldon was gone, Helen still sang on at her work, but there was a sweeter cadence than ever in her tones.

The clock was striking five in the kitchen. Helen was paring apples by the fire, and Mrs. Eldon sat by the window counting a pretty roll of bank notes.

"Ninety-five—100—200—that's the $100 bill Ford paid for the coils—205—10—20—60. I don't feel safe to have so much money in the house. Helen—I shall drive over to the bank and deposit it to-morrow."

"Yes," said Helen simply, "I never saw so much money at one time before; it must be very nice to be rich."

"Rich, child! we're not rich, only comfortable; but the money must be put in the bank right off. Who's that knocking at the door? Oh! it's Deacon Elderly. Well, Deacon, this is a great idea—we, with our orchard, buying apples!"

"Well!" quoth the deacon, "tress is just as queer as people sometimes. Now there's my Baldwin's ain't done nothing for two years, and—yes, it's all right, Miss Eldon—$5 you owed us afore, and five now—makes 10. Thank'e."

The deacon disappeared, and Mrs. Eldon came in from the door-step.
"Can I go out this morning, Mrs. Eldon?"

The old lady's eyes were rounder than the rim of her silver spectacles as Helen presented herself at the henery door.

"Go out? Why, Helen, what's come to you? You never asked me such a thing before!"

Helen's cheeks grew rosy, but she said nothing of the letter directed,

Oscar Eldon, Esq., that was lying snugly at the bottom of her pocket.

"I would like to see one or two little errands at the village if you can spare me."

"Of course I can spare you—but be sure you're back by 11, Helen."

"I'll not fail, ma'am."

"It was still and cloudy when she set forth, but by the time she had turned her face homeward, the snow was driving in blind drifts and the wind shrieked down the valleys like a disembodied spirit.

"It will be a long storm," thought Helen, with a shiver, as she hurried on.

Mrs. Eldon was standing in the middle of the floor when she entered—standing there with an unusual expression on her face, and a set look round her lips, which made Helen pause with unreasoning dread.

"Mrs. Eldon! what is the matter?"

"Helen, don't play the hypocrite," said the old lady, sternly. "Give me back the money and I will overlook this first offence as you are so young and inexperienced!"

"Money! what money?"

"The hundred-dollar bill you took from my table when I went out last night to pay for the apples."

"Mrs. Eldon! I never touched the money!"

"Helen! think before you resort to deeper deceit. That money lay on the table when I went out; when next I examined my pocketbook it was gone. You, and you alone, have been in the house since. The whole matter is too transparent for concealment. Why did you go to the village to-day? You never before have asked to be absent?"

Helen stood silent; it seemed as if the power of speech was taken from her for an instant.

"Mrs. Eldon, I never dreamed of touching your money! As sure as I breathe, I never touched it!"

Mrs. Eldon's cheek fired with sudden anger.

"Helen," she said in a strange, high-pitched voice, "if it were not that you seemed almost a daughter to me for the past few months, I would send you to the constable and have you lodged in prison. As it is you go in freedom—but you go!"

She opened the door and pointed out into the road.

"Mrs. Eldon—in this storm?"

"If it were the deluge I would not harbor a thief in the house another instant. Go!"

The cruel words stung Helen Dermatt's heart as an asp might have done. She turned without a word and went out into the howling tempest.

All day long Mrs. Eldon sat by her lonely fire, musing with sorrowful intention. Never before had she realized how very dear Helen Dermatt had become to her, nor how desolate the old home seemed with no light step on the stairs, no soft voice warbling old country ballads from the far off rooms.

"I would have burned the bill sooner than she should have taken it," thought the old lady. "The loss of the money is nothing to being forced to believe Nellie's a thief! And what will Oscar say?"

The brief winter twilight was fast darkening into night, when there came a resounding thumping at the outer door. Mrs. Eldon rose hurriedly, lighted her lamp, and answered the somewhat imperative summons.

Through the flying clouds of snow she could just discern the round, red face of Deacon Elderly, beaming from a frame work of fur cap.

"Dear me, Deacon, is it you? Won't you come in?"

"Well, I guess I will, acin! I've got something pretty important to tell ye. Look here."

Standing close by the lamp, Deacon Elderly drew a bank-note from his pocket and held it out to Mrs. Eldon, with a chuckle.

"My red apples bring a fair price in this market, ma'am, but they ain't worth a hundred dollars."

"A hundred dollars!"

"Mrs. Eldon grew pale and cold.

"Then I must have paid you that by mistake instead of a ten."

"Well, I calculate that was the way it happened," said the deacon, dryly—"I'm a very business like, but then your eyes ain't what they used to be no more'n mine is. I think me a hundred dollars is my due, and I don't want no more!"

So the deacon went on his way rejoicing; and Mrs. Eldon stood staring vaguely up and down the road.

"Helen! Helen!" she called aloud; and then remembered that Helen's ears were far, far beyond hearing.

She rushed uncovered out into the storm up the road as if she would have sought the girl to the world's end, with clasped hands and strained eyes. And then waking to the consciousness of how utterly impotent was a search, she turned back with a wailing sob.

"I'll get out, driver, and walk up this hill; the stage is over-loaded, and I don't mind a little exercise."

Oscar Eldon literally could not sit still. Before his mind's eye rose up the bright home fire, the mother's face of pleased surprise, and Helen's crimson cheeks.

Involuntarily a clear, bird-like whistle broke from his lips as he strode on. In the same moment the heavy rack of leaden-black clouds overhead parted, and the moon burst out in a flood of silvery glory.

"So the storm is over," mused Oscar. We should have all been snowed up had it lasted much longer; and—hallo! what's that?"

What was it, indeed? Something a deadlier white than the snow, with dark long tresses fluttering in the wind—something that lay among the piled up drifts close against the old rail fence, with the fall brightness of the moon upon its pale rigidity.

In an instant Oscar Eldon had plunged through the snow-banks and was heading over the prostrate figure.

"Helen! Merciful heaven! how came she here?"

He chafed the slender hands, he listened eagerly at the half-open lips to hear, if perchance the slightest respiration floated through!

"It is no allusion of my senses? She is not dead! Hello! driver! coach!"

The slow rumbling of snow-crusted wheels was already audible, and when the stage came up Oscar Eldon was standing beside the road, with a pallid, helpless burden in his arms!

The old kitchen clock was chiming 11; yet Mrs. Eldon, habitually a slave to early hours, had made no movement to retire. She still sat by the fire, with haggard face, and eyes fixed on one glowing spot on the embers, when there was footstep on the threshold, and a loud rap at the door. She sprang up, nervously, and opened it.

Oscar stood there, with Helen clinging to his arm—Helen herself, very pale yet with a bright confidence in her face.

"Oscar!" gasped the bewildered mother, and then, catching sight of the other face she burst into a hysterical cry.

"Helen! God has sent you back to me! Can you ever forgive me, Helen?"

"That's right, mother!" said Oscar, "she will be your daughter soon; and meantime, we'll pile on the wood and bring a little color into those pale cheeks."

But Helen Dermatt's face, as she returned his smile, was pale no longer.

The Power of Children.

One man was making an interesting remark about his mother-in-law, and the other man was taking it all in. After awhile he put in his car.

"No," was the reply; "what's that got to do with it?"

"More than you'll ever know until you have some."

"I fail to see it."

"Yes, and so did I, at first, and I talked just as you do. Then when the youngsters came and began to grow up and to learn who grandpa was, and to look to her as their best friend; the one to shield them when they needed the parental spanking; the one to give them pennies when their parents thought they should not have them; the one who came and washed by them when they were sick; the one grandpa of all prevailing kids, blamed if I didn't forget utterly that she was my mother-in-law, and I got to calling her 'grandma' just as the little ones did, and thinking about her just as they did, and finally, when the gray-haired old apple went to her rest, I grieved with the children and as sincerely as any of them."—Ed.

Ignorant Tree Planting.

As I was passing the country residence of a wealthy gentleman my attention was attracted by two "hired hands" who were engaged in transplanting some choice fruit trees, and having had some experience in that line of business, I stopped and observed their work in every detail, with the anticipation that I might gain some points which would prove of value to me. The knowledge gained will prove valuable only in stimulating me in using all my influence in discouraging others from imitating their methods. Their work was not in conformity with the laws of nature or of good judgment.

The trees were of the Baldwin variety; five or six years old; two or three inches in diameter, and large and thrifty. They had been conveyed in a wagon over a rough road from where taken up, and the friction between the wagon box and the unprotected trunks had badly chafed the bodies, half girdling some of the larger ones. They were then left with the unprotected roots exposed to the hot sun, some a whole day, others a whole week. None of the main roots were over a foot in length, while the limbs were five or six feet. Only a few fibrous roots remained, and these must have been greatly injured by the sun. The holes dug for the trees were about a foot and a half in diameter and three fourths of a foot deep, being just to the hardpan. This required the longest roots to be jockeyed or broken before the tree could be "planted"—much the same as a post would be set. An open space was left under the trees, thus allowing the air to dry the earth about the roots. As the tops were not cut back the large branches could not be nourished, and the trees not being tied, a strong breeze would prostrate them, as the roots had little length or depth in the loose, dry earth. No fertilizer was used. I urinated stones, and dirt were shovelled in profusely, after which a "war dance" was held around the trees, and the job was done. The same could be safely said of the life of nine out of every ten of the trees.

It seems almost a crime to entrust so important a work as tree planting to lazy, indolent persons, who are so ignorant of the laws of nature and so out of touch with the world at large, that their only love is for their daily compensation, and whose services, unless personally superintended, prove a waste and disappointment.

Intelligent tree planting would require trees to be heeled in until planned and handled so carefully that the bark would remain uninjured. The roots should have a spread of two feet or over and be placed in their natural position. The holes should be at least three feet in diameter, or a foot larger than the spread of the roots, and deep enough so the trees will be planted about three inches deeper than they were in the nursery. Well rotted manure should be thoroughly mixed with the mellow earth only, and this worked firmly between and around all the roots with the hands. Plenty of water should be used, which will cause the earth to settle more quickly, and adhere more closely to the roots. The broken ends of roots should be trimmed smoothly just before planting, and the earth pressed firmly with the foot after planting. The greater part of the tops should be cut away, leaving only three or four branches. This may appear unnecessary, but must be done or the best results will not be obtained. Trees must be planted early in the fall, and it is better to plant early in spring, but late spring planting, when intelligently done, seldom proves disappointing.—B. F. Simons.

The Centre of the Earth.

Did you ever stop to consider the fact that in all probability the centre of the earth is a globe of gold, iridium and platinum? Says The Chicago Times. These metals are, of course, in a liquid state, the iridium at the exact centre (that is, providing there is not some heavier metal at present unknown to man occupying that place), the platinum next and the globe of gold surrounding the other two.

"But," you say, "what proof have we that your proposition is a tenable hypothesis?" In answer I would say two proofs at least, and perhaps more. First, the three metals mentioned are the heaviest known substances, compared bulk for bulk, this being the case they would be naturally attracted to the centre of our planet. "In the beginning," as Moses would say, the earth was liquid, if not gaseous. In either case the heavy metals mentioned were held in solution. By gradual condensation the metals settled to the centre; iridium first (with the proviso above mentioned), platinum next, gold last. Ages ago, when the crust of the earth was thin, very thin, all the gold now known was vomited out in volcanic eruptions. This last mentioned fact is the second reason for believing that our globe has a golden centre core woven around a nucleus of iridium and platinum. A third reason for believing that there is gold at the centre is this: The earth as a whole weighs five times as much as a globe of water of the same bulk, while the rocks forming the same outer crust are less than three times as heavy as water.

How to Sweep a Room.

A very careful housekeeper I know says: "For sweeping a room neatly there is nothing like newspaper aid. It saves so much labor." This is her method: Take a page of newspaper at a time, wet it in hot water and squeeze it until it ceases to drip. Tear into small pieces of the size of your hand, and cast them all over the carpet. Then sweep and most of the dust in the room will be gathered into the paper, pushing them ahead of the broom to take up any stuff there may be, before beginning the regular sweeping. After a pile or heavy carpet is thoroughly swept, a sponging with ammonia and water will preserve its brightness wonderfully. About once a month, after sweeping, take a pailful of warm water and add to it a tablespoonful of ammonia or turpentine, good, as it is an excellent preservative of moths. Go over the whole carpet with a large soft cloth, or sponge wrung so as not to drip. It is surprising how rapidly the water gets discolored. If the carpet is large and much soiled or dusty the water should be changed once or twice.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., SEPT. 14, 1894.

Canada and the Empire.

Sir John Thompson formally opened the sixteenth annual industrial exhibition at Toronto on Wednesday of last week. He was presented with an address of welcome, and as a matter of course made a speech in reply. He referred to Canada's success at the World's Fair and said the circumstances were such as to justify pride of nationality as well as of progress in industry and the arts. But more than ever, continued the premier, they desired the establishment of British policy in this Dominion. Canadians were proud not only of their country, but of the constitution that gave freedom and scope in every direction for the pursuit of every branch of business, to which their industry can be applied. There were those who stated that the first duty of a public man is, where the interests of Canada and the interests of Great Britain fail to agree, to declare loyalty to Canada. "As one of the public men of this country," Sir John said, "I assert that it is our duty to remove all possible causes of friction between ourselves and the Motherland, in order that we may truly establish in these seven provinces and in the fertile prairies of the Dominion, British policy and British institutions. Canada is greater to-day than it would be, did not the flag of the Empire float over us."

The Hotel "Evangeline."

Wolfville is to have a new hotel. The influx of American tourists and the steadily increasing commercial travel to the "Land of Evangeline" demands that first-class accommodation be secured at once; and it was with end in view that a meeting of citizens interested in the erection of a handsome and commodious new hotel was held in Mr. B. H. Armstrong's office this week. The Evangeline Hotel Company, Limited, was organized with Messrs R. E. Harris, Clifford R. Borden, O. D. Harris, T. L. Harvey, C. B. Munro, Stuart McCawley and B. H. Armstrong as promoters. The capital stock of the company was placed at $25,000 divided into 1000 shares of $25 each. We understand that a very considerable portion of the money necessary has already been subscribed. The promoters promise to build a handsome modern structure with accommodation for from 100 to 150 guests; and have the ground floor and winter rooms fitted with hot water radiators. The house throughout will be illuminated by electricity, fitted with electric bells, and have an ample number of bath rooms and this fall and the building will be ready for the furnishes by the first of next May. The gentlemen who are promoting this scheme are to be congratulated on the success that has so far attended their efforts. Their enterprise deserves the hearty support of every well wisher of Wolfville. It is a good and feasible venture; one that will pay large dividends to the investor, and become an important factor in the building up of our beautiful town. There is no place in all Nova Scotia so favorably situated for a successful hotel enterprise of this kind as Wolfville. We have the historical site, the most beautiful scenery and the greatest summer climate; the three things that tourists seek.

The Times.

CONCERNING SUNDRY PERSONS AND THINGS.

Continued.

At this point, my friend told me that the theatre to which we were going was not very far away although as yet not in sight; but, since there was no especial cause for haste, we might sit down awhile and rest. We sat down under the shade of a large tree of the so-called hypocrite kind, which grew on the side of what is often called Phan Attie Hill, close to the entrance of what is commonly termed Crank Lane. We were not long seated before we were greeted with a shower of mud, not unmixed with hard misales. Looking around I found to my surprise that this fusillade came from the innumerable and highly respectable-appearing passers-by, who turned no very loving glances at my friend; but what amazed me most about this was that the not-too-cleanly misales were thrown by persons who I had thought ever reverent Cammon Sense. My friend however expressed no surprise, saying he was used to it and the misales seldom disturbed or injured him. So without more ado he began to tell of another character in the tragedy of the World.

The one whose portrait now will be unrolled, is he whom sainted seers described of old, "As one who in dark byways spreads his toils. And age and youth and beauty are his spoils." He holds the theory of modest scope. That water only should be used with soap. And on all lakes and springs this sign he set:

"For outward application only fit." And thinking thus works morning, noon and eve. That other liquids may our thirst relieve.

Just at this point my comrade ceased rhyming and said to me, "By the way! there's no joke in this matter. Last winter I read the list of applicants to sell the 'gentle beverage' in the city morning papers, and I said to myself 'I'd rather be hanged than have my name,--homely though it be--printed there.' Then I thought I would go and write a new and more appropriate heading for the application list and send it to the same papers. But after writing it I thought myself that they would not print for fear of offending these respectable gentlemen. So I did not send it and will not put it before the public at all, but will recite it to you." He stopped, struck an attitude and began to recite.

THE HEADING.

We, undersigned, desiring sure and wall a way to blast the earth and people Hell, hereby demand from all right-wishing men, Leave and protection straightway to begin, Erect a structure, open wide the door poor, To enter in and quaff to latest breath, Our fiery draughts of shame, disease and death.

Our modus operandi to be fair, For youth whose throat cannot with comfort take The burning liquid, we'll a mixture Of honied sweetness which may coax his taste, So that his thirst to stronger draughts shall pass.

Till, when the rolling years have manhood brought, He stands to view a vile and wretched sort, Upon his family fame an everlasting blot, To aged toppers we'll give trust, and fill Their homes and fortunes hang upon our will;

Then to the prison or the street they go, Unknown, unnoticed in their want and woe.

We'll bring the rich and haughty to the dust, And from the paper read his latest crust. We'll fill the prison and the madhouse too, And every porchouse shall our victims view.

And oft 'twill be,--for fun must have its when men with wine their sight and sense estrange,-- That we'll forget to give the proper change, But vice and mad hath such a form and mien

"That to be had it needs but to be seen;" So we will varnish all her fallings o'er, And add new charms for idiots to adore. Bid where the public vision never sees, Are fair compartments of luxurious ease, Where men and women, half-grown girls and boys,

May, minus Hymen, find unnumbered A pleasant game shall not be wanting too, To cheer the hours of the sporting crew, Where friends of ours shall play with honest face, And hide in every sleeve a golden ace. Thus pluing, as the titans did of old, Ossa on Pelion of world-worshipped gold.

We'll show the charm that admiration wins, The charity that glides unnumbered sins. We'll swell the church collections and appear, Such selfless philanthropes, that all will stare, And say, "most generous soul in town, we swear!"

Thus will we serve thee, in thy wares that trade; O yield us, father Lucifer, thine aid! At this Common Sense finished his sarcastic heading, but heated beyond his wont, he kept right on, breaking out into an apostrophe partly addressed to me and partly to the absent license applicants.

This is my heading truthful and sincere, Without exaggeration by one hair. But I must finish soon, and so can say But little more before my pen I stay. O men still young--for to the old in crime,

To plead were useless and to waste the time,-- O men still young who this foul trade strow, Where are your high ambitions anchored now? Say! is it thus ye'd raise weak human-kind?

ROSCOE & DENNISON.

W. E. ROSCOE, HARRY L. DENNISON. Barristers, Solicitors, Proctors in Probate Court, etc. Debts. Fire insurance in reliable English Companies.

Windsor, N. S.

N. B.--Mr. Roscoe will be in Windsor on Thursday of every week, remainder of time at his office in Kentville.

(For surely once you bore such wish in mind) Is this the way ye'd gain the world's applause? And be a guiding light in every noble cause? Ambition base! by curses ever tracked! It needs small brain, small honesty, small face.

Of learning none on that road to advance; But brains, brainless fronts and darkest ignorance. Think ye to send the deadly current wide, And keep unstained by all the murky tide? If, fired by wine a man upraises his knife, And with the blow destroy another's life, Him as alone the guilty must we view? Nay! he's but equal in his crime with you.

Though laws defend and churches scowre and censure, That does not raise you but it lowers them. What though in mansions ye may sleep and eat, And glittering cars convey you o'er the street, Held this forever in your memory's span, Mansions and chariots do not make a rogue an honest man.

My friend finished the conversation by repeating to me an epigram which he had written on hearing that Louis P. Cribbs was to publish an anti-prohibition paper to be called the "The Advocate. The following is the epigram:

Honest Cribbs, I'm informed you're to bring out a sheet Called "The Advocate"; my! won't the rumour excite us! But be honest, sweet Cribbs, make your title complete; So just put the fitting term "Devil's" before it.

Mr. Edron,--On Friday night last several plum trees of a superior variety, in the Hemlock orchard, belonging to the Wolfville Fruit Land Improvement Co., were robbed. On the same night nearly all the glass in the windows of the two houses on the company's land was broken by stones; stones weighing four or five pounds were found in the houses the next day. On Tuesday night of this week six remaining trees of plums just ready to gather were also robbed, limbs heavily laden with apples were torn from the trees and apples destroyed. It is plainly evident that the malicious rascals have a predilection for the goods of the company as trees containing the same varieties of fruit thirty feet distant, and owned by other parties, were undisturbed. THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., SEPT. 14, 1894.

Local and Provincial.

Mr G. E. Torrie has been making some improvements in his restaurant lately.

Cattle were turned on the Wickwire dike yesterday. The rates remain as usual.

On Thursday morning there was shipped from the station at Wolfville, one hundred baskets of plums.

The Colchester Sun says that R. Harlow, Esq., of Shubenacadie, has moved to Berwick, he having purchased a farm there.

Mrs Churchill, returned missionary, addressed a meeting in the Baptist church on Wednesday evening in a very interesting manner.

Mr J. E. Dares left on Saturday morning last to resume his position at Lakeville, Conn., where he is teaching in a large school for boys.

Mr E. A. Wilson, of Belfast, Me., the Skoda chemist, has been in town for the past few weeks, on business in connection with that company.

There was a heavy frost last Friday night, the first of the season. In some sections in the county a vast amount of damage was done to the crops.

A marble statue was unveiled at Springhill Tuesday in memory of the miners who lost their lives in the terrible explosion on February 21st, 1893.

Messrs G. W. Munro and O. D. Harris left on Wednesday morning for a bicycle trip around the shore, via Yarmouth. They will be absent about two weeks.

The road machine ordered by the town some weeks ago arrived by the r. ch. on Wednesday. We will soon have an opportunity of seeing a test of its value.

A lantern service will be held in St. John's church, Wolfville, on Monday, Sept. 17th, at 8 p. m., by T. A. Stansfield, Diocesan Lay Missioner. Silver collection.

Mr C. S. Baker, of the Peoples' Bank staff, returned on Tuesday evening from Woodstock, N. B., where he has been spending his vacation, to resume his position in the Bank.

By notice in another column it will be seen that the firm of Brown, Munro & Co. has been dissolved. Mr Walter Brown will continue under the old name, and asks the patronage of the public.

The induction of Rev. D. J. Fraser, as pastor of the Presbyterian congregation of Wolfville and Lewer Horton, is to take place in St. Andrew's church, Wolfville, on Thursday afternoon next, at 2 o'clock.

At a special meeting of the town council on Monday evening, it was decided to give the company who propose to start a flour mill here a free site free water and exemption from taxation. We hope they may locate here.

Rev. Mr Cameron, of Bridgetown, has been supplying the Presbyterian pulpit for the past two Sabbaths. Mr Cameron has been fifty years in the ministry, and although now nearly eighty years of age—still a forcible speaker. His sermons were much enjoyed.

We understand the new building for the School of Horticulture will not be erected this season. The prospects for a successful term are good. Our young men cannot do better than take advantage of this opportunity of getting a useful education.

Fly paper; large supply "Tanglefoot" and poison. Druggists.

There has been a report around town to the effect that the new hotel when erected is to engage in the liquor business. We have been asked by the promoters to say that such is not the case, as they have no intention of selling liquor on their premises. We hope that the undertaking will not be in any way hindered, but rather that all our people will give it their support and help.

A Hamilton Lady's Story.

She Met With Many Failures and Disappointments.

SHE WAS INDUCED TO TRY PAINE'S CELYRY COMPOUND.

NEW LIFE! HEALTH! STRENGTH! THE GRAND RESULT.

Thousands of hopeless and despairing hearts in Canada have been made glad and filled with sunshine. Men and suffering for long years and who have been given up as incurable, have been restored to vigor and health by Paine's Celyry Compound.

A great and glorious example of cure, after long suffering, is furnished by Mrs. Rebecca Jackson, of Hamilton, Ont.; she says:—

"Having been troubled for nearly fifteen years with nervousness and sleeplessness, and my physician unable to afford me relief, and after trying a number of remedies, I was induced to try Paine's Celyry Compound. I continued to improve from the first bottle. I have used one dozen bottles and am now fully recovered. I can heartily recommend its use to anyone who suffers as I did."

Paine's Celyry Compound goes direct to the root of all troubles; it cleanses and purifies the blood, strengthens and braces the nerves and gives tone to every organ of the body. Try it; sufferer; it will make you well and strong.

Dike Meeting.

The semi-annual meeting of the proprietors of the Grand Pre dike was held in Borden's Hall, Grand Pre, on Saturday last. F. G. Curry was called to the chair and Jas. Leard acted as clerk.

After considerable discussion it was resolved that the cattle be turned upon the dike on Monday, Sept. 17th, and that they be allowed to remain there until Oct. 25th, at which time the dikes are to be cleared. In consequence of the middle road (so called) having been fenced, the common field is now divided into two pastures, and it was decided that two different brands be adopted; the one for the pasture east of said road, the other for the pasture on the west. The scale of feed agreed upon is just double of last year, viz., 5 acres to a cow, other stock proportionally. No horses are to be allowed to go on. The branding places will be at the Miner Lane for the west, at the east at the usual place near the east gate, and at Long Island. The following named persons were elected branders: G. W. Tremblin, west end; W. J. Gould, Long Island; and J. S. Taylor and F. G. Curry for the east end. The following amounts were allowed for branding: West gate, $2.30; Long Island, $3.—to include yard; east gate, $5.—with an additional dollar for yard at east and west gates.

The ACADIAN has for years advocated the formation of a Town Improvement Society in Wolfville. We notice that our sister town of Kentville has taken the initiative in the matter and organized. Perhaps Wolfville will be willing to follow in the matter since our people object to taking the lead.

A Headache Specific still ahead. If you have headaches try a 10c package, and be convinced. Two sizes 10c and 25c. Druggists.

NOTICE.

The partnership hitherto existing between the undersigned under the firm name of Brown, Munro & Co., has this day been dissolved by mutual consent. All accounts due the late firm are now payable to Walter Brown.

(Signed) WALTER BROWN. CHAS. B. MUNRO. Wolfville, 8th Sept., 1894.

Referring to the above notice I beg to notify the public that the business of Brown, Munro & Co. will be continued by me under the same name as before, and I would respectfully ask a continuance of the patronage of the public.

WALTER BROWN.
