Russell's Great Speech.

LONDON, April 15.—Sir Charles Russell roused his great speech for the Nationalist members before the Times Forgeries Commission, Wednesday, and continued on Thursday and Friday, achieving such a triumph as is seldom granted to a modern orator. He showed conclusively that the National League had checked, instead of fostering, crime, and tore to pieces the flimsy web of sophistry and deceit woven by the counsel for the Times. Then, from a defender he became an accuser, and with all the pent-up force of indignation and earnestness he arraigned the forgers and conspirators before the very tribunal of their own choice. He showed that although Attorney-General Webster promised to substantiate the serious charges against the sixty-five members of Parliament and five other persons, absolutely nothing had been shown against twenty-one of them, and that no real attempt had been made to connect three-fourths of the whole number with any crime. He traced the history of the National League in America, and declared that it proved conclusively that the organization was in no way implicated in crime.

At noon on Friday the orator commenced a superb peroration, which closed half an hour later in a scene of emotional enthusiasm unparalleled in a British court of justice within the memory of man.

Commencing with those singularly apposite lines:—

Call him the blackest name, spread his salacious lies,
All art can think and pregnant spite strikes him, gash deep, no lies nor slanders spare,
He is a man, though cured, yet leaves behind a scar.

Sir Charles reminded the court that they were trying the history of ten years of revolution in Ireland, partly social, partly political; but while they were sitting in judgment there Irishmen were reaping by legal process in courts, legally established, the fruits of that revolution. The Government of Ireland was carried on by representatives of a small minority, who held all the positions of executive power and authority, a state of things unknown in any other country of the world, supposed to possess constitutional privileges and a gleam of returning health across the face of Ireland. He thanked; but could that country be healthy which had twenty-five of its Parliamentary representatives in prison, not for offences regarded as crimes by men of moral sense, but for deeds which caused them to be regarded with sympathy by a large section of the English, and as heroes and martyrs by the whole Irish race? It was because Parnell and his colleagues had planted in the Irish breast the hope of a national independence, the state of things must come to an end that those men stood at the judge's bar.

"In the dark days," he said, "the voice of a united people, secret in the great mass of the people, had been organization burrowed beneath the surface of society, and constituted a great social and political factor in the life of the country. To-day, thank God for it, the great mass of the people have been won to bending their energies to placing their hopes upon constitutional means of redress. Then a great mass of the people were poisoned with a fever of despair for past efforts made, and unrequited sacrifices; to-day hope is strong, is buoyant in their breasts. Then they looked upon their countrymen in this island who they have with hate; to-day they are willing to hold out the hand of brotherly friendship, to let bygones be bygones, and to let forever be buried the memories of persecution and perhaps misery. Then, my Lords, perhaps the most hopeful change of all, the people of this country, hitherto in their own concerns, knew little of Ireland; to-day they have taken this question to heart, and recognizing the truth that misrule in Ireland means weakness to the empire, they have taken an interest in the solution of this question in recent years which was formerly unknown.

"My Lords, I have come to an end. I have spoken not merely as an advocate. I have spoken of the land of my birth; but I feel, profoundly, that I have been speaking in the best interests of England, of the country where my years of laborious life have been passed, and where I have received kindness and consideration and regard which I shall be glad to make an attempt to repay. My Lords, my colleagues and myself have had a responsible duty. We have had to defend not merely the leaders of a nation, but a nation itself—to defend the leaders of a nation whom it sought to crush—to defend a nation whose hopes it sought to dash to the ground. This inquiry, intended as a curse, has proved a blessing. Designed, prominently designed, to ruin one man, it has been his vindication. In opening this case I said we represented the accused. I now claim leave to say the positions are reversed. We are the accusers. The accused are there (pointing scornfully at Mr. Webster and Mr. McDonald of the Times). But I hope this inquiry, in its present stage and future developments, will serve more than the vindication of individuals; that it will remove the painful misconception as to the character, actions, motives and aims of the Irish people; that it will set the Irish people to their feet, and that it will remove the day of true union and of real reconciliation between the people of Ireland and the people of Great Britain; and that with the advent of true union and reconciliation there will be dispelled, and dispelled forever, the cloud, the weighty cloud, that has rested on the history of a noble man, and dimmed the glory of a mighty empire."

Towards the close Russell's voice began to falter. More than once he had to brush tears from his eyes, and when at length he sank into his seat the nervous strain of six days of almost continuous speaking, and the pent-up excitement and emotion of months found vent, and a strong man sobbed like a child. There were many others, men as well as women, who shed tears, and were not ashamed of it. Even President Hannen lost his judicial balance, and being too much moved to speak tremblingly wrote on a slip of paper a warm expression of congratulation and admiration, and passed it down to Russell. Then the whole court crowded round the orator, who, half ashamed of the emotion he had shown, hurried away with his wife and daughter, who had had the felicity of witnessing his triumph.

There was a sensation in the court room when Sir Charles concluded his speech. It is the opinion of his hearers that he never spoke better. The note which President Judge Hannen passed to Sir Charles when he had finished read: "I congratulate you. Your speech was a great one, and worthy of a great occasion." Many of the other friends warmly congratulated Sir Charles Russell and Mr. Parnell and Mr. Davitt. Upon the conclusion of the proceedings the court adjourned until April 20.

The Archbishops of Dublin and Cashel will be among the witnesses who will testify for the defence. Sir Charles Russell's speech will be reprinted in pamphlet form for circulation in Great Britain, America and the colonies.

Harold Frederic, the London correspondent of the New York Times, thus cables under date of April 13: "Sir Charles Russell is already arranged a rank, even by his Tory critics, with Edmund Burke and Lord Brougham in that proud but limited list of pleaders, whose great efforts belong to English literature. To belong to the Standard, literally as it is opposed to the Parnellite movement, classes his oration with Burke's attack upon Warren Hastings and Lord Brougham's appeal in the trial of Queen Caroline, and says that, if a great actress broke into sob's yesterday, as Mrs. Siddons did in Westminster Hall, and if no emotional lady did Mrs. Sheridan under the strain of Burke's eloquence, it is because we are of the nineteenth century are a wild and critical generation, and not because Sir Charles Russell fell before in moving force and pathos the standard set by his illustrious predecessors.

Truly it was a wonderful scene yesterday noon as Sir Charles Russell entered upon his peroration. Mrs. Gladstone, with a bevy of wives and daughters of leading Liberals, occupied the jury box, and among the great and good men and women was David Dudley Field, who had just returned from a winter's sojourn in Italy, and who said as he left the court that he had listened to the greatest forensic effort in the whole experience of his long life. Sir Charles Russell himself is not a specially impressive personage outside of a courtroom, where he seems nothing more than a tall, quiet, serious, elderly gentleman; but once he is attired in his wig and gown he becomes a veritable eighteenth century type of vigor, breadth and power. A caricature can picture him almost perfectly to their mind's eye by imagining George Washington, with rather a sorrowful face and deep-set, dark brown eyes, and wearing a black silk gown. The contour of Russell's face, with his strong chiselled features, in his gray wig of horsehair, is exactly like that of the author of this country, and the habitual gravity of his countenance in repose has a marvellous likeness of one of Gilbert Stuart's portraits.

Russell has a most flexible and melodious voice, which, without a trace of English, still makes the listener feel that it is not an English orator, but is instead a kind of cosmopolitan voice which, alike in London, Melbourne and New York, would set a mark of classic English pronunciation. His oratory, too, is Irish only in the sense that it is not English. He affects others by making himself weep, and the auditor is moved as if by the sight of the speaker's emotion as by the splendid eloquence of his broken words. Yesterday, when, with faltering voice, he forced himself through his concluding words, one by one, and listeners felt that every pause reflected the speaker's struggle to keep the sobbing down, there was an almost painful tension of breathless silence, and as he sank to his seat at the finish, with a bowed head and trembling frame, there rose throughout the high-vaulted chamber a strange, inarticulate tumult of long-suppressed feelings finding relief, which was not in any sense applause, and which, in truth, was like no other sound I ever heard. Above it rose cries of "Silence" from the others, and it was not till the meaning of these had become evident to the excited assemblage that the real applause began. Justice Hannen, who had been visibly much affected by the speech, hastily wrote on a piece of paper the words, "A great speech, worthy of a great occasion," and had it handed down to Sir Charles before he rose, and with his two associate justices disappeared behind the red curtains at the back of the bench. It is a curious corollary to this great forensic performance that upon its conclusion Russell took the train for Birmingham, over a hundred miles away, and there last night delivered a big political speech to a wildly cheering audience.

Naturally the immense prominence into which Russell has lifted himself all at once raises the question what will be done with him when Mr. Gladstone again comes into power. He was Attorney-General in the last Liberal Cabinet. It is felt that the piece is not now big ### enough for him, and to make him Lord Chancellor would be to prematurely bury him, even if he did not feel that he lacked the necessary wealth for a position in the peerage. Really the best way out of the thing would be found by making him Peer when Home Rule is passed, and sending him to Ireland as the first Viceroy under the new and beneficent dispensation.—Exchange.

TERRIBLE RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

The worst accident that has occurred on the Great Trunk Railway for a great many years took place Sunday morning, 26th ult. at 7 o'clock, about three miles west of Hamilton, Ont. The engine of the St. Louis express, from Windsor to Suspension Bridge, jumped the track at the junction and ploughed into a water tank. The engine and smoking car in the rear telescoped and immediately took fire, the passengers were ablaze; the passengers in the ever-smoking car were killed, and soon four more were killed and many more injured. The train was stopped at the junction, and the passengers were taken out of the train and sent to the hospital. The train was stopped at the junction, and the passengers were taken out of the train and sent to the hospital.

None of the fifteen who were taken out of the train after the fire had been identified; it is doubted if any of them remains alive beyond recognition. Many of them were mangled horribly before the fire, and almost all of them were taken out in places. It is not likely that any of the wounded will die.

As far as can be learned there was no negligence on the part of the railway company, they simply jumped the track at a "frog." Seven cars, including the engine, two first class coaches, a first class dining car and two baggage sleepers were burned, those leaving not a vestige of wood or anything that would burn. The loss to the company will be enormous. Most of the passengers lost all or portions of their baggage and clothing, and a large amount of the mails were lost by fire.

SENDING HORSES TO JAPAN.

Dr. J. T. Jenkins, ex-M. P. of this city, who is at present on a visit to his home ranch, at Fort McLeod, N. W. T., had the following to say to a reporter of the Winnipeg Sun:

"I had some surplus capital some time ago, looking over the country, and appeared to me to be a paying investment, and so it has turned out to be. I have some 250 horses altogether in my stable now. I began with some fine stallions of good jumping characteristics; these have been bred to me by the English and American breeders, and the race from them are what will be very marketable in England and America, where good hunting blood is scarce for the horses here. The jumping power of the horses is not a good one, but the quality of their manes, and the quality of their manes are very hard to please in the way of horse flesh. They will find fault and defect in the slightest flaws in an animal and have nothing to do with it. Americans are different. If they want horses they will get them. It is said to be too large for one purpose, or too small, or too weak, they will put it to work at whatever it is best adapted to."

"Is there any other market for horses besides those in the east?"

"There may be another good one in the far west. Last Saturday, while in conversation with Mr. VanHorn, of the C. P. R., I asked him if he would give us low rates on some future date in the summer when freight traffic was dull, for the shipment of horses east. He said: 'Why don't you ship your horses to Japan? There is an excellent market for them there.' The days are now beginning to realize the value of horses and want to have them. They will send a few ponies in the Oceanic Islands, and in the course of time the shipment of horses there may develop into a big thing. Mr. VanHorn said that he would send our horses to Japan at a low rate, so you may hear more about it. If we do send any, it will be some time next July or August."

According to Le Canada Ecclesiastique,

the company of Jesus possesses in Canada fourteen establishments, containing 250 members. Of these all but sixteen are religious belonging to the order of the Society of Jesus. The entire number is 12,070, distributed in twenty-five provinces, all over the world. The superior general in Canada is the Rev. Father Hamel, S. J. The general of the order, who resides in the mother house at Rome, is the Very Rev. Antoine Marie Andrieux, the provincial house in Canada was founded in 1827 by the Rev. Father Martin, S. J., first rector of the institution. His five colleagues were Fathers Pierre Chastell, Benoit Jollier, Paul Lacombe, Joseph Hanquart, and Dominique Durand. In the diocese of Montreal there are establishments in this city (St. Mary's College, residence of the Immaculate Conception), and at St-Jacques-Nord. In the diocese of Quebec is one establishment in the provincial capital. In three houses there is one, and in the diocese of Ottawa there is one at St. Ignace de Newburg. In the diocese of Hamilton there is one at Campbellville. In the diocese of Peterborough there are six—Wickwood (Manitowishippi), St. Marie, Garden River, Fort William, Sudbury, and Fort Arthur. In the diocese of St. Boniface there is a college, founded by Mgr. Tache, and served by 17 religious, with Father Hypolite Lory, S. J., at its head.

Very Rev. Father Laurent, Administrator of the archdiocese, has received from Pope Leo XIII. an approving letter announcing that he has caused to be forwarded from Rome a handsome cap and stole for St. Michael's Cathedral. The gift, it is stated, is a token of the Pope's affection for the clergy and people of Toronto, and a memorial of the golden jubilee of His Holiness. The priests of the cathedral, much pleased with the graceful recognition of the Holy Father.

Archbishop Riordan's safe return to San Francisco, Cal., was a subject of general rejoicing. The Monitor of that city informs us that the Archbishop, though not perfectly well, is very much improved by his trip. At his own special request there was no public reception given in honor of his return, but when he arrived he has been kept busy by seeing the numerous callers.The Rev. Fathers Abinal and Malmo, of the Madagascari Mission, have just published a very complete directory of Madagascar, the largest of the great African islands.The Pope will soon send a Delegation to Bolivia and Paraguay to investigate the dispute in which His Holiness has been appointed arbitrator.Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.
