Sin,—I beg leave to enter in your paper
my protest against the decision Teachers have so generally made against this have so generally made against this Fund. They complain of compulsion—that they are denied the privilege of voluntary subscription. Since 1854 they have been continually solicited in the Journal of Education, to subscribe to the fund; and the Government itself has raised its yearly grant to it, from $2,000 to $6,500. Still teachers keep aloof, so that of 5,165 teachers in Ontario, only 131 are pensioners on the Fund. I believe that, in most cases, there is far more honor, and our sincerity is far less liable to suspicion, by objecting at once to the payment of money itself, than by inventing untenable objections about mere modes of payment. The laying up of something for old age is a necessity which will then be fully understood, if that something for old age is a necessity which will then be fully understood, if that something for old age is a necessity which will then be fully understood, if the something for old age is a necessity which will then be fully understood, if the something happens then to be wanting. If a man does not wish to stay in the business loager than it shall have enabled him to rise one step higher towards the real object of his ambition, $2 a year is a mere moiety for the privilege of intrusion. Doctors and lawyers do not allow quacks and petitiogges to usurp their professions; but teaching, the most important of all, is the nursery of all professions, and the dernier resert of differences on the dernier resert of every craft. The Fund has now an income of $17,500 a year, and it would, ask Government to rescind the obnoxious cause, and forfeit the grant. The conceding to such a petition would, in my view, evince some Parliamentary passiveness. There could not be a better test throw how many intended to follow teaching for a lifefong avocation, for any such teacher could not rationally object to, the Fund.

A Worthy Ambition.

A Worthy Ambition.

(From the London Advertisers.)

How to make good farmers and worthy citizens of farmers' boys seemed to be a pressing thought in the mind of Mr.

Laidlaw, in his "President's Address" at the Central Exhibition at Guelph. The fact that many, very many, farmers' boys go to the towns, and give themselves to business, or scheming, or idleness, is undentable. The constant and only excuse for descring the country is did only be led to see that there is nothing to be accomplished without hard work, it would be greatly to their advantage. But there is no necessity that farm work should be heavier or more waring than any other out-door labor. The fact is nave not heavier of the contry is always that the control of the co How to make good farmers and worthy bers invade the country, seeking farm-employment? The fact is the present generation of farmers, as a whole, fail to make home life on the farm attractive to their sons! The boys grow up without any freshness or beauty in the surroundings of their home-life, and assoon as they are their own masters they change it. They get the impression that education is mainly thrown away upon a farmer; that is a luxury which he may indeed keep for his spare hours (if he has any), but which he cannot use in his vocation; that a farmer may become something high or worthy, but it is on the terms of ceasing to be a farmer. This must be all changed beaf farmer. His must be all changed beaf farmer. His will be what it ought.

A worthy ambition would be for a farmer to be as intelligent, as well-informed, as refined, as he can be—as a part of his farm life. And to resolve that whatever drawbacks he labors under, on account of early imperfections of education, his sons shall not suffer from the same. And that boys must have occasional holiday hours; and ought to have them statedly; and that alittle patch of ground in summer, and a few tools or a foot turning-lathe in winter, and a good magazine or two and the privilege of the village library all the year round, and a little parental encouragement and appreciation through it all—will do very great wonders in the way of solving that problem about "Farmers" Boys."

And a most worthy ambition would be for the boys to convince themselves that farming is a noble pursuit—that education may be profitably obtained and used by a farmer—that fathers are naturally proud of their boys, and if a request for a little bit of ground, or a few tools, or a book or two, or a quarter at school, is modestly made, most likely it will be cheerfully granted—that wen under present circumstances, they have much time in winter evenings for experiments, literature, or study; and that an interpretation of the province that of a little part of the part of the province themselventhents in interpretation of the par also to be constructed by the Government. These arrangements are considered very satisfactory by the friends of the movement in Scotland, and the first batch is to be composed of about eighty families, including all the necessary trades, and a schoolmaster, who will officiate as minister for a time. The reserved section will be composed of part of the counties of Victoria and Carleton, in the western part of the Province; though other areas may be taken up as the agents of the colony consider it advisable. The immigrants—most of whom are to come from Kincardineshire—will meet with such familiar names as Forfar, Perth, Deeside, Banff and Aberdeen, which have been applied to the several townships.—Globe.

suspect that I am here? Oh, if he should come?"
"Why; let him," said Harry, quite composedly. "He will get his surprise the sooner. That's all."
"But I don't think the figure was that of my father. The fellow skulked across the open and disappeared among the trees."

the open and disappeared among the trees."

"Possibly 'twas Nathan Garrett," suggested George.

"He may be watching us," cried Lilias nervously. "Oh, let us return!"

"And what business has he to watch us?' said Harry. "I remember this gentleman of old, and my recollections of him are anything but fayorable. Let him not dare to interfere in matters which do not concern him."

"But caution is necessary now, Harry," said Lilias, whose anxiety increased every moment. "Do—oh, do let us go."

said Lilias, whose anxiety increased every moment. "Do—oh, do let us go."
"Well perhaps, on the whole, it is better that we should," remarked her brother.
"The object of this night's meeting is served," he added, turning to George, "and well served too, I hope."
"It has brought me to a double joy," returned George, his fine manly face beaming with its overflowing happiness." you have proved our guardian angel,"
"Ha I I am the good fairy, am I, come to deliver imprisoned princess from the ogre, and unite her to her lover? Well, give Lilias a kiss, and bid her good night. Return to Mathew Greigson's, and I will make my appearance there sometime to-morrow." you to the house now, then?

"Only to the private enfrance with Lilias." I shall spend the night at Mrs. Rendal's lodge. In the morning I shall seek an interview with my father. Now," he added, laughing, "don't be long over your tender adieus, and don't be long over your tender adieus, and on't be long over your tender adieus, and in the letter."

"Oh, the letter, I had quite forgot it," oried Lilias. "It came yesterday by the nost."

"It came 'pesterday by the post."

"A letter for me," said George; "who can it be from?" he asked, as he took it from her hand.

"Don't know," said Lilias, archly; some fair lady parchance."

"Well, the address doesn't look like a lady's handwriting." laughed George, as in the star-light he examined it for a moment, then put it unopened into his pochet, and seeing Harry waiting at a little distance, he caught Lilias to his heart and fondly kissed her.

She offered no resistance to his ardent caress, but laid her head on his bosom with quiet happy content.

"Our hopes grow brighter, my darling," he whispered. "The drak cloud grows lighter. Who knows but the silver lining may appear still?"

"God graant it," sighed Lilias, with a look of love.

A low whistle came from Harry as a reminder, and after another fond embrace he released her.

Lilias and Harry moved away together towards the house, and George, light-hearted and joyous, took his way across the wide park, in the direction of Matthew Greigon's cottage.

But, alas! that place he was not destined to reach.

The Reform Demonstration at Seaforth.

The Reform demonstration held at Seaforth on Wednesday was in every respect a grand success. Not fewer than two thousand of the substantial and true Reformers of the Counties of Perth and Huron assembled to listen to their political leaders. At eleven o'clock a procession, headed by the fine band of the Grand Trunk Rallway; formed at the station and proceeded to the grounds. After the speakers had partaken of lunch the chair was taken by Mr. J. S. Sinclair, of Goderich. Speeches were delivered by Mr. Horton, M. P. for Centre Huron, Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, Joseph Rymal, M. The address delivered by Mr. Mackenzie was one of his most able efforts, was pregnant with truth, and carried conviction to every unprejudiced heaver. Mr. Rymal, as usual, delivered in address overflowing with vit, well seasoned with good, sound, common sense. Mr. Young fully sustained the reputation he has earned as being a fluent and earnest advocate of Reform principles. Mr. Patterson convulsed the audience with his ready and original witticisms; in fact Mr. Patterson bids fair to rival Honest Joe as a humorous speaker. The other speakers also sustained their parts well. At the conclusion of the speaking three cheers were given for each, and three for the safe return of the Hon. Mr. Blake. In 1846, Mr. Darwin held the position of naturalist in a scientific expedition sent by the British Government to South America. His first work of importance was a history of his observations on that trip. He stated in it his belief that the whole South American Continent was slowly rising. This was sneered at then, but, like some other statements by Mr. Darwin, the lagise of time 'is proving its trath. The apparent sinking of the Andes is really the rising of the table land around thum. Again, the group of small islands known as Fernando Noronha, 194 miles east of Cape San Roque, in Brazil, shows signs of a steady upheaval. It is connected with the maidland by a long rock, which, it is predicted, will some day afford a secure passage from the islands to the cape.

Mr. Edward Blake is expected to reach Toronto on Thursday night or Friday morning. His friends say he has gained greatly in strength and health.

GUELPH MARKETS.
Guelph, Oct. 16, 1872
The markets have been tolerably well supplied during the past week, indeed, on Saturday there was apparently quite a stir. Wheat shows somewhat of a declining tendency, which, however, is not likely to be of long duration in the face of the exceedingly bad wheat harvest the Mother Country has just realized. We hear an occasional complaint from farmers that our weekly quotations do not correctly represent the markets; we need hardly say that it is impossible for a paper published once a week to give the quotations of the intervening business days; for these both buyer and seller must refer to the daily edition, which is corrected by the Market Clerk every day, up to two p. m.
