What's in a Name?

THE OLDE FIRME of Heintzman & Co. have not been making pianos for the past sixty five years without their name on a piano meaning something.
Equipped as they were with unusually large financial resources, they have at all times been able to command the choice of skilled workmen, the employment of the most useful and costly machinery, and the selection of lumber with its necessarily vast accumulation for thorough seasoning purposes. They have used only first-class ivory upon their keys, none but the finest veneers, and exclusively the choicest materials throughout.
It was inevitable that these favorable circumstances and an unswerving adherence to the highest ideals in the art of piano manufacture over this long period should produce a prestige for the name "Heintzman & Co." akin to the hall mark on sterling silver.

Locomotive Whistles

There is a widespread belief that America has the honor of having invented the locomotive whistle. In England they even call it the "American devil," but according to a story that seems straight, the honor rests with Geo. Stephenson, the inventor of the locomotive, whose famous "Rocket" built in 1829, ran at a speed of thirty miles an hour.
The invention of the whistle came about in a very odd way. When railroads were first built in England, the engine driver, as they call the engineer over there, had no way of warning people of the approach of his "machine" but by the blasts from a tin horn. Imagine one of our lightning express trains whirling through the country heralded by a tin horn! Yet it had never occurred to anyone in England that a better warning was needed until a ludicrous catastrophe opened their eyes to the matter.
One day a farmer was driving his wagon to market, and in it were about eighty dozen eggs and fifty or sixty pounds of butter. At a point where a country road crossed the railway tracks a train happened to be coming as a farmer's horse jogged along in his easy, comfortable way. The engine driver saw the wagon and blew several blasts from his tin horn, but he did lose his horse, his wagon, his eggs and his butter, for the engine crashed into the team and piled everything—except the farmer—into an indistinguishable mass.
Of course, the farmer put in a bill for damages and the railway managers had to pay it. That was in 1833, four years after the "Rocket" made its initial trip. The directors of the road met at once, for if they had to face the necessity of making good such losses as that, where were the profits to come from? The result was that one of them was sent to see Stephenson, to whom he related the sad experience that his road had just suffered. Stephenson promised to devise something to suit the case, and then the whistle was born. Soon every engine in England had the discordant attachment and the fields and

Spy-Hunting and its Humours

(The Times Weekly)
An artillery officer writes:—
"Three days ago had information there was a spy in the neighborhood of one of our batteries. "Took measures," as they say, and informed all battery commanders that our spy was said to be a woman with a flaming red head, not very common in this part of Belgium. The day after these instructions I came back about lunch time (a time of day I am most punctual) and was told that a corporal and two men had a "Lady" for me to see with a red head, went out and found that she could speak nothing but Flemish; went back to lunch, and at the pudding stage (bread and jam) some one tapped and said, "Beg pardon, Sir, but there is a corporal and two men with a lady for you to see. I said I knew it already and went on eating. A few minutes later another tap and the same message. Thinking some one was trying to be funny at my expense, or that the corporal was tired of waiting, I used language and said if any one else came and told me of the red-headed lady I would make the corporal wait all the afternoon. Finished an excellent lunch and strolled slowly out of the back door to tell them to take the prisoner to the Assistant Provost-Marshal—what was my horror to see three corporals, three files, and three "red-headed females!" Each battery had caught its own. At this period the Regimental Sergeant-Major saluted and said in a hoarse whisper that if I wanted any more there was another in the next farm. This appalling collection of heterogeneous females, all red-headed and all ugly, completely unmanned me, but not for long! I sent the whole boiling off to the Provost-Marshal with a note that I had more arriving later. Result, a motor-orderly to beg me not to send any more, as he had already got a yard full of them and was at his wits' end to know how to feed or keep them quiet, for they were all fighting! (Spy hunting is off!)"

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10

Why are you vainly urging us to buy such books as "Who began the War and Why?" We want some author with prophetic pen to tell us, "Who will end the War and When?"
—Evening Standard.

—Dr. Dernburg, and Count Von Bernstorff do not find it all plain sailing in their propaganda of German opinions in the United States. Dr. Dernburg obtained permission to address the students and professors of Amherst College. He began by saying that they must, in order to understand the causes of the war, study the treaty of London after the Balkan War, and as that Treaty was in French, he would translate it for them. At once a professor rose and remarked, "Oh, doctor, we all understand French here." He proceeded to translate when another professor remarked, "Really, doctor, you need not read the Treaty, we are all acquainted with its contents." Discarding his manuscript, the doctor, then, introduced Belgium, and affirmed that Germany had "guaranteed" full indemnity to Belgium for any damage which might be done by the peaceful passing of the Imperial army. "But, will you tell us, doctor, what value a 'guarantee' from Germany has?" asked the dean. "What could the doctor say in reply? If the treaty guaranteeing the preservation of Belgium's neutrality had proved to be no guarantee, what German guarantee would be of any good?"

A lady invited Ambassador Von Bernstorff to join her party to the Opera. The Ambassador seems to have understood American sentiment better than the lady, for he hesitated. She at once telephoned to eleven gentlemen of her acquaintance, who ascertaining the name of her guest declined the invitation to meet him.

W. F. Bullock, who is our authority for these incidents, adds that Dr. Dernburg said to him, "I am not one to be afraid," and has also told his friends that had as the case he has to argue is, he will uphold it to the end and to the best of his ability.

It is now asserted and proved that the German Emperor, six years before the violation of the neutrality of Belgium, circulated among his officers a plan for committing this very outrage against Belgium.

—Mr. Carnegie, being asked what he would do in case of an invasion of the United States by the Germans, replied, "I myself should wish to be invited to advance and meet the invading forces, if they came. I would approach them without any weapons upon my person. I would not shoot them. I would make a speech to them. 'Gentlemen,' I would say, 'here is the chance of your life to win life's chief prize. You have the opportunity to become citizen kings—We are all kings here. Here at least you can take a rank much higher than that of any general in your army. He can become a Sovereign in a Republic.' I think they would hurrah for me, not hurt me, after they had heard my speech."

But what would the Kaiser say to this? Is the ideal of the citizen King of the United States, the ideal of the Kaiser and his warlords? Is not their ideal a military despotism dominating over the world, of which the Kaiser is the supreme head? The French Baron D'estournelles de Constant remarks, "When it is contended that there are true Americans who favor the success of German militarism, I say I do not believe it. Such a preference would be contrary to nature, the repudiation of their very origins, of their most noble aspirations, of their very reason for existence."

—The greatness of the work of supplying the Army, over and above the work of feeding it, may be better understood, by observing that in one month, there were issued to the troops 450 miles of telephone wire, five hundred and seventy telephones, five hundred and thirty-four thousand sand bags, ten thousand pounds of dubbing for boots, thirty-six thousand bars of soap, one hundred and fifty thousand pairs of socks, and one hundred thousand pairs of boots. In ten days, one hundred and eighteen thousand, one hundred and sixty fur waistcoats were given out and three, hundred and fifteen thousand, and seventy-five flannel belts. The weekly issue of vaseline for the feet is five tons, and of horseshoes 100 tons.

The "Vocabulary of Stores" contains the names of 50,000 different items, which are in constant demand, and must be on hand for immediate delivery. It is difficult to estimate the number of clerks and accountants required for this great and important work. These supplies are provided by the Ordnance Department. Besides, there are the Army Medical Corps, the Army Veterinary Department, the Royal Flying Corps, and the Transport Branch of the Army Service Corps, each of which has its own special work. The Army estimates for the year 1915-16 provide for three million of effective and non-effective men, besides those serving in India.

—The American papers have been telling the story of an enterprising gentleman in Kansas who advertised extensively a wonderful remedy he had discovered for many human ills. It was a colorless liquid of such wonderful power of penetration that one drop put in the eye would find its way through the nerves to every part of the body and extirpate disease of whatever kind it might be. The United States Government requested its analysts to examine this remarkable medicine in order to discover its contents. It was found to be merely a weak solution of salt and water with sugar. It was found also that the ingenious proprietor had in six months received nearly ten thousand dollars for the sale of this bogus remedy.

Some years ago we were acquainted with a man as white as most white men are. After a prolonged absence we met him and found to our surprise that he had turned into a black man. Or rather he was a blue-black man, as though somebody had been polishing him with stove blacking. On inquiry we found that he had been using a patent medicine containing mercury which was seeping egress from his body through the pores of the skin. We have understood that he continued to be a blue-black man as long as he lived.

Moral—Be careful in your patronage of patent medicines.

—The announcement of the Birthday party, in aid of the Cemetery Fund appears in our Local Column. The good work done in the Cemetery during the last two seasons receives commendation from all quarters. And it has been done at comparatively small expense. The nice fountain was made by voluntary work, for which the Committee are very thankful. The only cost was for cement, which was furnished at first cost. It is good to see the interest taken by non-residents in this undertaking. One man sends five dollars and asks not to be forgotten when the call comes for another birthday party. Another sends the same amount and says he hopes to get one hundred dollars which he did not expect, and if it materializes he will donate it to the cemetery fund. Another's twenty-five dollars, part of which is for the permanent fund, and desires to encourage a very desirable and creditable endeavor. Sometimes in visiting an old, neglected grave yard, one is led to sympathize with Nehemiah who wept before the King because the place of his father's sepulchres was laid waste. People often decorate their homes and adorn their surroundings, while taking no apparent interest in "God's Acre," where their parents and children were laid. A costly monument surrounded by briars and thorns in tangled masses looks out of place and inappropriate. Amid the many calls, and the special calls of the present time, let every one spare a little for the Cemetery Fund. "Many a little makes a mickle."

Card of Thanks

 On Friday evening, March 5th a company of local amateurs presented in the Orange Hall, Margareville a farce comedy called "The Ranees' Necklace." It was by far the best thing in the way of either amateur or professional work seen here in years. Starting with the scenery which was unusually attractive the whole performance showed a praiseworthy attention to detail. There were seven characters, each quite different from the other and offering equal opportunities for successful interpretation. Mr. C. E. Balcom as Lord Blazonberre presented a well sustained impersonation of a young Englishman of a not too attractive type. Mr. Balcom maintained his accent to the bitter end and combined the pleasant and unpleasant sides of his role with skill. Mr. N. G. McGranahan as Jack Ryder, a young American author acted with much ability and that rare characteristic of the amateur restraint. Mr. C. D. Blair gave a splendid interpretation of Robinson the butler, in accordance with the most approved traditions of the legitimate stage. Mr. Lloyd Patterson acted the part of Dick Chetwyn in a manner that won him the approval of the audience. It is difficult to say whether the talent or the costumes of the women in the play earned them the greatest admiration. Miss Phinney as Petrolia Seersucker, the daughter of an American millionaire wore three very attractive gowns and gave an interesting interpretation of her part. Miss Mapplebeck, who has a good stage presence, made an excellent Duchess, in places her acting was good and her gowns, particularly an evening gown of pink with an overdress of ecru lace draped in classic style were a feature of her part. Mrs. C. E. Balcom as Lulu Seersucker an impressive child of fifteen was well received. Her costumes and general make up were good. The entr'actes were popular songs as played in the theatres of Boston today. It is hoped that the play will be repeated. It was gotten up for the benefit of the local Belgium Fund, and it is understood that the actors are willing to place themselves at the disposal of any of the various patriotic societies. The play is well worth seeing.
