Friendship.

There is a star whose kindly ray
Illumine the darkest hour,
Whose presence animates the soul
With power and magic power,
The friendship, brightest gem of earth,
And of far greater value worth,
Than countless hoards of gold;
'Tis brighter than the sun's glittering rays,
More radiant than the diamond's blaze—
Its value's never been told.

There is a spark whose genial warmth
Glowe ever in our hearts,
Whose holy flame keeps burning on,
And but with life departs,
The friendship, ever constant, true,
Whose influence, like the heavenly dew,
Calls forth the plants, and wakes the flowers,
No friendship beautifies life's bowers,
No joy and peace give brighter
Than the friendship's sweet glow.

There is a sun whose beams will shine
While flowing years roll on,
Unfaded and bright its rays shall be,
Until life's race is run,
The friendship, ever warm and kind—
Its general ray light up the mind
With hallowed light and cheer,
In brightest sun or darkest night,
Its golden beams of love will shine
Continue still to cheer.

There is a tree whose green leaves
Toss in the breeze so free,
And all who dwell beneath its boughs,
For love its pleasant shade,
The friendship, ever fresh and green,
Its leaves are like the spring's first green;
Its flowers perfume the air,
While at its feet the parting stream
Of happy years, in always new
Ever murmuring sweetly flows.

There is a flower whose leaves fair,
Whose blossoms breathe of love,
Where sunlight, soft, sweet, sweet,
And gentle breezes blow,
There dwelleth joy, and peace, and love,
There bright-eyed beauties ever true,
And here are faith, love, charity,
That make the glorious friendship
That dwells in friendship's bowers.

A lot of other, common sense; a better pill, perhaps, but less so, when drawn out in surgery, conveyed in—Listen to the confession and recitation:

I'LL NEVER FLIRT AGAIN.

I never was really pretty
[That is, they told me so].
And everywhere I wandered
I always had a beau.
At all the balls and parties
I held the highest rank,
But now—ah, well, no matter,
I'll never flirt again.

I'd loveliness in plenty,
For when I stepped forth
And with me I would linger,
Among the flowers and birds,
And often they would call me,
To quell their bosom's pain,
But I would—well, no matter,
I'll never flirt again.

The years were swiftly gliding,
But still I did not care,
My heart was gay and happy,
I yet was young and fair,
And still my lovers sought me,
Though they were on the water,
I'm sorry now, but believe me,
I'll never flirt again.

At last all my admirers
Dropped from me, one by one;
My glass told me the reason;
The merry race was run,
My rival called me "lucky,"
And said I was "marvellous,"
I laughed then, but believe me,
I'll never flirt again.

The not so bad, I'm sure, now,
For I have come with me,
And all my youthful follies
Are paid for with my tears.
An "old maid" now they call me,
It gives me grief and pain;
What shall I do? What shall I do?
I'll never flirt again.

Shingles rendered Fire-proof.

Mr. John Meers says, in the Boston Cultivator, that he has prepared shingles in the following manner, and after an experience of eleven years, and using seven forges in his business, he has never seen a shingle on fire, nor a nail started. The shingles are prepared in the following manner:—"Having a large trough, I put into it a barrel of quicklime, half a bushel of refuse salt and five or six pounds of potash, adding water to slack the lime and dissolve the vegetable alkali, and the salt well knowing that pieces of old line pit, soap barrel, or a pork tub, were not the best kindling stuff, and having long since learned, while at the Vineyard Sound, that hot salt water whitewash would endure far longer than that made with fresh water, absorbing moisture, striking into the wood and not peeling and washing off. I set the bundles of the shingles nearly to the bands, in the wash for two hours; then turned them out and for end. When laid on the roof and walls, they were brushed over twice with the liquid, and were brushed over at intervals of two or three years after."

A BIG SNAKE STORY.—A woman living in Morris, C. W., the wife of Mr. William Evans, has for some years past been afflicted with a regular difficulty in her stomach. The complaint was named after her, and she has since with a sticking sensation about the pit of the stomach. The same sensation has continued to increase in severity from time to time. A few months since it became the intercurrent opinion of the most skillful physicians, that the increased difficulty has been the result of a large snake in the stomach. It has grown so large now that it distends the stomach so as to produce a bunch upon the outside as large as a quart bowl. Upon pressing this bunch with the hand, the reptile recoils and produces great distress in the stomach. When the snake is being cooked in the room, if the snake is not satisfied with food it rises in the throat producing strangulation. When desiring food it manifests it by rising up in the throat. Physicians can see no way in which the snake can be removed without certain death to the woman. Mrs. Evans is about thirty-five years of age. She is of course, feeble in health now, but is round the house.—Lockport Inquirer.

Another sad exposure in the fashionable world has arisen out of the inability of "Scottish Chief" to win the Derby. A well-known public official, whose antecedents have been the most satisfactory, has been seen in a deplorable state on the turf to the extent of more than $25,000. The gentleman in question, who is heir to a newly acquired peerage, conferred for political services, held a legal appointment of $1,200 a year. This he has been compelled to resign, and he is now residing in a French watering-place in the hope of some arrangements being made which may admit of his return to London society.

Labour is getting scarce in the rural districts. Labourers get a shilling per diem and half, and are difficult to get in several places.—Limerick Reporter.

The Drink Curse at Sea.

On Sunday morning, at an early hour, the maritime population resident about the North Shore, Monkwearmouth, were horrified by the news of a dreadful tragedy which had been enacted on the deck of the Scotch schooner Rosneath, of Cromarty, shortly after she had proceeded to sea on her homeward voyage—an occurrence terminating in the death of the entire crew, the captain only remaining alive to tell the tale. The Rosneath is a schooner of about 80 tons register, and carrying five keels of coal. On Sunday morning, between twelve and one o'clock, she left the port, towed by the steam tug "Annie," and having a pilot named Atkinson on board. At the usual distance from the harbor mouth the pilot left the schooner, and the steamer cast her off, when the sails were set in due order by the crew, and the Rosneath proceeded on a voyage unhappily soon cut short by the tragic incident to which we have already alluded. The crew consisted of Andrew Ross, captain, a middle-aged man; Hugh McKay, mate; William Duff, able seaman; and Charles Munro, a lad of twenty, who sailed in the capacity of ordinary seaman. These men, we understand, had all been in the drink, and during the course of the week, and even at a late hour on Saturday night. After the sails had been set, and the schooner began to shape her course northward, the captain left the helm in charge of Munro for a few minutes, and lighted his pipe below, returning to take charge of the helm and steer the ship. The men then went forward, and in a few minutes the captain heard quarrelling going on between the mate and the lad Munro. He took no notice of the circumstance, especially as the sails were between him and the combatants, so that he could not see what was going on. He heard no particular noise or splash, but a minute afterwards the movable gangway portion of the midships bulwark floated past, and Ross heard a cry for help from a drowning man whose voice sounded like that of McKay, the mate. Terrified at this, the captain immediately ordered the helm and steer the ship. The mate was nothing to be seen, and Ross found himself alone on the deck! He rushed down the fore-castle, and searched everywhere, but the three men were nowhere to be found. The ship was then laid to, and Ross waited about half-an-hour in a state of anxiety and suspense, when a Tyno steam-tug, the "North Star," Captain Hutchison, took the schooner in tow and proceeded to Sunderland; two of the men from the steam-tug going on board to assist the captain to work his ship. The most reasonable surmise is that the mate and Munro had got from words to blows, and began to struggle upon the gangway, which prevented them from rising to the surface again. An examination of the bulwark showed that the board had been a tolerably rotten affair, the bolts which fastened it being fast sticking in the remaining bulwark. It did not appear to have been properly fastened either, as the top rail which ought to secure it was lying on the deck when the ship came in, although the captain stated it was on, and he found it hanging over the side, held by one bolt at one end. The boat was on deck, unfastened, and had been drawn up by the top rail, which was just before the ship went to sea, which is quite probable that in the intoxicated condition of the captain and the crew the bulwark had not been properly fastened in its place. The occurrence took place about three miles to the north-east of Sunderland, nearly abreast of Whitburn, but the exact place was considerably obscured when questioned by the police on Sunday morning, said at first he believed it had taken place off Scarborough. The unfortunate men who were lost were all natives of Cromarty.—Newcastle Chronicle.

An Amphibious Steamer.

A Toulon letter of the 24th says:—"Experiments have been made during the last few days with a new kind of iron clad gun-boat, which is more powerful than any other, and is able to move at a rapid rate on land as well as on water. These small vessels sit very low in the water, and have on deck an iron clad shelter pierced with six port-holes and eight embrasures. As they can be taken to pieces in a few hours, and divided into eight blocks, including the engine, these gun-boats could, if required, engage in a naval combat off the coasts of France with a speed of eight knots; then be taken to pieces, and having been carried away by railway be ready to fight again off the coasts of the Atlantic in 36 hours, after crossing the whole of France. If this new engine of war had existed during the Italian campaign, Mantua and Peschiera might have been captured almost without a blow, and Venice might have seen a miniature iron-clad fleet navigating her lagoons."

THE NEW AMERICAN CENT.—A new species of currency has been issued from the United States mint, to take the place of the nickel cent, which has gone out of circulation there, in consequence of the depreciation in the American money. The difference in value between a dollar in Canada and a United States greenback, or perhaps a nickel cent, is now so great, that the trade in this new coin by our neighbors across the border has already flooded this country with their comparatively worthless tender, passing it here at its face value. The consequence is, that our merchants are overstocked with the article, without any means of disposing of it, except at the same discount as charged upon greenbacks. Anyone accepting these pieces should remember that they have been coined in order that one hundred of them may represent a dollar in American money, and that consequently that they are of no more value than a United States greenback, or perhaps a nickel cent, and of course are liable to the same discount. The coin is both lighter and far inferior in metal to the previous nickel cent, being solely composed of copper, and has a nasty, less appearance, which contrasts strongly with the most pleasing appearance of the old nickel cent, and it bears the same design.—London Prototype.

"New explanation of the golden mean." To have gold and be too mean to use it. "Constitutionally tired," is the polite way of expressing that a man is naturally lazy. Robbins says that he and his wife always go to bed quarrelling. "And yet," he adds, "with all our differences, we never fall out."

A Revolution in Domestic Economy.

The discovery of oil has already exercised a modifying influence upon the existing condition of things, and we are inclined to think it is a revolutionary agent is not yet terminated. Yesterday the pleasure of examining a recent invention of this combustible fluid is introduced even more intimately into household economy than by its present use in our lamps. It is in fact made to roast, bake, and broil, toast, stew and boil, anything and everything, and even to heat a room to any required temperature. The invention is that of Mr. John Hart, of the Township of Granby, an inmate of what he calls a "gas stove for the consumption of oil as fuel." The model in its present form consists of a tripod about ten inches high, supporting what might be called an ordinary stove, to which is attached a vertical tube about three feet long and of six inches in diameter, which is surrounded by a tin reservoir, containing about a quart of the burning, used as fuel. The tube is bent under the tripod and brought to the centre of the ring, where it terminates in a small gas chamber with a minute hole drilled in the top. About two inches above this is a round cast-iron plate two and a half inches in diameter, placed in such a position that the jet of gas from the gas chamber impinges against causing the entire consumption of the gas. A round brick about eight inches long is passed into the lower end of the tube, and a steady current of air is slowly passed towards the gas chamber, where it is volatilized by slightly heating the chamber, and is forced through the aperture at the top, in a jet which when ignited will maintain the temperature of the chamber sufficiently to volatilize the oil as it passes from the wick. The supply of oil is regulated by a faucet which compresses the movable gangway portion of the midships bulwark floated past, and Ross heard a cry for help from a drowning man whose voice sounded like that of McKay, the mate. Terrified at this, the captain immediately ordered the helm and steer the ship. The mate was nothing to be seen, and Ross found himself alone on the deck! He rushed down the fore-castle, and searched everywhere, but the three men were nowhere to be found. The ship was then laid to, and Ross waited about half-an-hour in a state of anxiety and suspense, when a Tyno steam-tug, the "North Star," Captain Hutchison, took the schooner in tow and proceeded to Sunderland; two of the men from the steam-tug going on board to assist the captain to work his ship. The store can be seen at the office of Mr. C. J. Lugg, Civil Engineer, in Hon. John Young's building, William street entrance, and is worthy of the attention of scientific men. It is an interesting example of great heat made applicable to so many useful purposes in a small compass. It is quite evident that if the principle could be made applicable to the generation of steam for locomotives and steamers, that a great revolution would result, not only in the cost of fuel, but in the increased capacity that would be given to vessels, and to the legitimate use of the steam engine. A modification of purpose of stowing cargo in the immense space which is now occupied in stowing fuel for a voyage.

A patent for this province has been secured, and application made for patenting the invention all over the world.—Montreal Herald.

"Buncombe."

At a meeting held recently in New York, one of the speakers in the course of an oration, glorifying the successes of Gen. Grant's army, said: "The end is at hand. After the storm comes the calm. Worn and weary by the usual cares and labors of his office, having deserved well of his country by his patient industry, his inflexible integrity, his pure and unselfish patriotism, and by his fixed determination to restore the Union, another term of office awaits Abraham Lincoln. (Tremendous cheering.) He has had a term of war—he shall have one of peace—(applause); he shall rule over a divided country—he shall rule over a united one—(applause)—he shall be President of the North—he shall be President of the South—(applause)—and then, with Lincoln at the head of the Government, and Grant at the head of the army, the vindictive war against the traitors (cheers) and the hurl Maximilian, and the French bayonets which support him, into the sea." (Cheers.)

How Lee Repairs his Broken Railroads.

The facility with which General Lee repairs his railroads after they have been torn up by our cavalry raiders, is so wonderful by facts, the truth of which is undoubted. General Lee has, in conjunction with several English railroad engineers, organized a corps of railroad constructors, which has this matter in hand. Large supplies of new railroad iron have been received from abroad and placed at convenient points, and duplicated of all supplies and bridges are also on hand. With this agency and these means the damage which can be done is rendered merely temporary; and it is quite certain that the rebels were able, in a marvellous short space, to put in running order both the Virginia Central and the Lynchburg roads. It can hardly be claimed, therefore, that the enemy's communications are to-day in any respect seriously embarrassed.

Two moose, while swimming across the Miramichi, a few days ago, were pursued by men in boats and captured alive on an extensive chase. Old hunters pronounce the animals tame and gentle. When first caught they were very vicious, and would strike with great force with their fore feet; so much so that it was dangerous to go near them. The Glenner says they "are now being tamed, fed well, and appear to enjoy civilization very much. It is the intention of the owners to make them into a show, to make a pair of 'Caribou Moose,' which will certainly be quite a novelty in Miramichi.

A Great Reform Beginning in India.

One of the most serious obstacles which the missionary in India is called to meet, is the prevalence of caste, which seems to be a system specially contrived by the arch-enemy of truth, to keep the millions of that peninsula in the chains of the most oppressive bondage, enervating soul, body, and estate, and to prevent the diffusion among them of the truth which alone can make them free. The Hindoo trained in the rigid rule of complete exclusion from all classes except those of the rank in which he was born, with difficulty receives the Christian doctrine that "God hath made of one blood all flesh of the earth," and when brought under the power of the Gospel, finds it almost impossible to practice the requirements of Christian fellowship.

In addition to the four castes of priests, warriors, traders, and laborers, there are numerous other castes, which are allowed to eat or intermarry with another. In Bombay there are eighty-four castes of Hindoos, besides numerous other races, kept separate from each other by religion, or habit, or national prejudice. In Madras there are twelve or fourteen independent castes, in the top of the hierarchy, and about forty castes of servants, and those above them. Every part of society is thus effectually separated from every other part.

The influence of Christian teaching is beginning to take effect, and some, particularly among the young men of rank and education, are beginning to break the fetters that have bound their countrymen for centuries. In Bombay a movement of great hopefulness has been going on for the last two years, led by an educated young man, which is turning the attention of the community to the question. This young man, an educated man, and a native of India, really gained a moral victory, as the name of the caste of the priests, for which one of them sued him for libel. As the trial proceeded, the hypocrisy and villainy of the priests were brought out and fully established, and though at last nominal damage was placed on the plaintiff, the defendant really gained a moral victory, as the name of the caste of the priests, for which one of them sued him for libel. THE LARGE NUMBER OF PRIZES AWARDED TO OUR Buckeye Mower & Reaper, together with the VER-slip. We have also improved and strengthened the Machine in many other points, and can so fully recommend it to purchasers as the strongest, best, and most perfect MOWER & REAPER NOW OFFERED FOR SALE.
