Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My own impression was that he was the minister for the old province of Canada before confederation. In his last report, he referred to this work under the new state of things. He said :

The monthly reports of the Agricultural Department of the United States, received by us, furnish abundant evidence of what may be done even in new countries like ours, in collecting agricultural statistics and rendering them serviceable to the public.

In 1872, when the Hon. John Henry Pope was Minister of Agriculture, he made this comment :

This department, though charged with the subject of agriculture, has not hitherto, except incidentally, dealt with it nor completed the necessary organization to make it one of the branches of its administration.

Hon. gentlemen will remember that, at the inception of confederation, although the name of agriculture was given to the department, it really did not deal with the question of agriculture at all, only incidentally in connection with immigration, quarantine, and such matters as that. In the year 1874, the Hon. Mr. Letellier, who was at that time Minister of Agriculture, made these observations in his report :

Intimately connected with this subject is the question of agriculture and agricultural statistics of which a basis for future annual and periodical reports has been established by the returns of the late census.

All these questions are of such importance and their solution to be fitting and acceptable involves such an expenditure as to require time and a great deal of consideration. It is better to delay a little than to rush into a rash organization, the lamentable results of which would be sure to exert an evil influence over many years.

I was very much struck with these words, because the minister in 1872 fully realized the importance of collecting and distributing agricultural statistics, but he also realized the danger of doing anything rashly in the matter, and felt that lamentable results might follow if anything rash were done. It is not necessary to say that anything rash has been done. Mr. Letellier, as far back as 1874, twenty-five years ago, reported upon the necessity for the collection of these statistics, yet up to the present time nothing has been done. In the year 1879 it appeared as if it was the intention of the administration then to take up this question and deal with it effectively, for an Act was passed. In the Act of that year, for the taking of the census, there was a special part relating to vital and health statistics and also agricultural statistics, and complete and full authority was given in that Act for the inauguration, preparing and distributing of statistics throughout the country. But nothing was done. I find that in 1883 a sum was voted in the estimates for the purpose of procuring crop reports of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and in 1884 the minister of the day reported :

A plan for completing and perfecting the system of crop reporting in Manitoba and the North-west for which appropriation was made in the last session of Parliament, has been put into operation with satisfactory results which promise success. The method adopted for obtaining these statistics is twofold: For the province of Manitoba I have made arrangement with the provincial government to make use of its staff, and in addition to this, the agents of my department make a simultaneous return on the first of each month, to me, and are charged with any special investigation that may from time to time be required, of any facts illustrating the progress of agriculture. The design is, by establishing a system of efficient and prompt collection of current statistics, to be able to present accurately the changes in crop conditions and in the production of agricultural products, and the results of agricultural labour.

I have been unable, from the investigation which I have made in the reports of the Department of Agriculture, to find any reports that at all correspond with what the minister speaks of here as having been the actual result of this work. I find some reports from the agents of the department, from Brandon and other parts of the North-west, but I have not been able to find in the reports of the Department of Agriculture any regular tabulated statistics of the agriculture of the country. In 1885 the minister again spoke of the subject:

I have initiated in those provinces in which crop statistics are not already taken, a system of obtaining returns of agricultural products, by means of schedules circulated through the postmasters in these provinces, from which I hope to produce satisfactory results. This statistical investigation is intended to show the changing areas in special crops, the harvest output in different districts, and to offer general returns in practical agriculture. The relations of labour to production affecting the prices of lands and products, and the adoption of industries to localities will all appear in clearer light where considered in connection with carefully collected agricultural statistics.

Whatever effort was put forth, as would seem to be indicated from this general statement from the minister of the day, we are not able to find in the reports any tabulated statements or anything to show that any real substantial work was the result. I fear the postmasters were not so impressed with the importance of the work, or that proper organization was not behind it and that therefore little or nothing was done. In 1892 the minister of the day, my hon. friend from London, said:

Special mention may be made of the number of applications for information on agricultural subjects to which no answers could be returned owing to the absence of any system for collecting agricultural statistic for the Dominion. A quantity of information concerning the various systems for collecting these returns in force in different countries has been obtained and if some similar place was adopted in this country the value to the farmers and the commercial community of the information thus obtained can hardly be overestimated.

I read these various references to this subject from time to time to show what different gentlemen, under different governments, who filled the position of Minister of Agriculture during all these years, fully appreciated the importance of this question. Again in 1893, the Hon. Mr. Angers, who was Minister of Agriculture, said:

The statisticians' office has become a sort of general inquiry office from all parts of the world.

Some of these inquiries, especially those relating to agricultural statistics, it has been found necessary in former years to leave unanswered owing to the absence of any system of collecting them co-extensive with the Dominion. If a good plan ensuring accuracy and early publication could be adopted in Canada the value to farmers and business men of this information can hardly be overestimated.

Then the next year, 1894, I think the same gentleman was Minister of Agriculture and he speaks of the subject. It appears to have impressed itself on the attention more keenly than formerly, from a fact which he mentioned in his report. He says:

The minister speaking of the statistician says: His office has been visited by prominent officials of France, Germany and the United Kingdom on the way to or from the Chicago fair. They have in all cases been supplied with information which it is believed will prove of benefit to Canada, since it has been supplied in the best possible way, namely, by oral communication in answer to questions put on the spot.

In the course of the interviews the statistician has been found to confess the fact that Canada lags behind other countries in many branches of statistics.

In no branch has there been so many inquiries as in that relating to agricultural statistics. These inquiries have necessarily been answered in a most unsatisfactory way owing to the absence of any system of collecting agricultural statistics co-extensive with the Dominion.

And in the different years that have intervened, from 1894 when the minister made this report, to the present time, almost these very words have become stereotyped and remain in the annual report of the Minister of Agriculture, and still nothing has been done. I find the present Minister of Agriculture in the last report, after having referred to the subject in somewhat the same way as formerly, speaks of what has been done by co-operation between the Federal and Provincial Governments in the matter of health statistics and vital statistics, and he points out that some of the provinces have passed laws on these subjects and have been dealing with and collecting vital statistics, and the Federal Government and the provincial government co-operate in carrying out these branches of statistics, and that successful results have been obtained in that way, and then he adds:

This plan could be carried out in respect of agricultural statistics so that while each province could have its own statistics for publication, the world at large would have those of the Dominion. The very great attention given to crop statistics in the United States, France, Germany and Australia, and the large monetary operations based upon them, make it almost imperative upon Canada to provide her farmers and business men with these aids to successful effort.

I may say I have found these words in the last report, which has been placed in my hands since I put my notice on the paper, and that I have received a good deal of encouragement from them, but when we glance back and remember all the promising words that have been used by ministers since confederation on the same subject, we have no reason to be assured that early action will be taken, notwithstanding that the present Minister of Agriculture appears to have hit upon a plan of securing co-operation with the provinces. With regard to the action the provinces are taking, I may say that I am aware that in the province of Ontario a rather efficient system of preparation, compilation and distribution of crop statistics is in operation. I read in the Farmers' Advocate, the leading agricultural paper of Canada, in its March issue, the following:—

Methods of collecting information: About fifty years ago in the province of Ontario the Board of Agriculture began to collect and publish through the press and otherwise such information, and the celebrated Royal Agricultural Commission of 1880 recommended the regular collection and publication of agricultural statistics. The government wisely adopted the suggestion and Mr. Archibald Blue mapped out a plan and was made secretary of the "Bureau of Industries," which he conducted with great ability until called to take charge of another department, being succeeded by Mr. C. C. James, the present secretary and Provincial Deputy Minister of Agriculture, whose great executive abilities have further improved the service. We find that: (1). Information is collected on crop, stock and food conditions from regular correspondents three times every year—1st of May, August and November. Occasionally a fourth request is made, if special weather conditions such as frost, too much rain, drought, &c., demand it. (2). These are got from a list of permanent correspondents numbering 800 to 1,000, the list constantly being revised, negligents being dropped, and newly found competents being added; 600 to 800 are counted on replying on all occasions. (3). The statistics are obtained by sending out blank cards or schedules to every farmer whose name and address is secured through the school teachers. Returns are received from 6,000 to 15,000 persons. (4). Correspondents are pretty evenly distributed over the province, from 25 to 30 in each county. (5). To regular correspondents are sent all published reports and special pamphlets no money is paid. (6). In June of each year a large card is sent to every farmer in the province, returnable first week in July, for details as to acreage of farm crops, timber, &c.; orchard, stock, implements and their value.

Then the editor refers to what has been done in Manitoba, and says:

The provincial government there have 250 correspondents, and they carry on their work in some degree as it is done in the province of Ontario.

In looking over the Agricultural Year Books of the United States we find that in that country this subject has, ever since 1863, received a great deal of attention indeed, and these books that are brought out every year as a compendium of the general results, contain only the very slightest indication of the vast work that is being done on this subject. I have here some notes taken from this book, which show that the Department of Agriculture in the United States have 56,000 regular correspondents and 140,000 occasional ones.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Did the hon. gentleman make a note of the cost of maintaining the staff?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have no note of that.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Cost is no object.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no doubt the cost will be very considerable. But no matter if the cost is considerable, I hope that it will not influence my hon. friend, because the farmer pays for all, and it is in the interests of our leading and best industry that it should be done. I did not think this was a matter of cost at all. Of course, it may be kept within reasonable bounds, but it is a work which should be regarded as almost beyond all price. In the United States they have 56,000 regular correspondents and 140,000 occasional ones. They distribute 175,000 copies of their monthly reports and 325,000 occasional ones in each year. Probably my hon. friend's inquiry with reference to the cost was rather different from what I thought. On reflection he may possibly mean to inquire how these correspondents are paid in the United States If that is what the hon. gentleman meant, from what I can gather from the reports most of them receive very little remuneration. Some acknowledgments are made and they are furnished with documents and information that they consider of value, enough to induce them to supply the department with information. However, I find in the last report that the United States statistician is of opinion that, in addition to all these correspondents, agents locally situated, a certain number to every state in proportion to its extent, who would be on salary and whose duty it would be to overlook the whole work and furnish regular information, would, in his opinion, be a very desirable thing in the way of securing greater efficiency. However, we have the results in the United States, and what is worthy of very great notice is that not only does the United States department collect this information with regard to the industries of their own country, the farming of the United States itself, with regard to the changing aspects of agriculture and agricultural values; not only that, but they have through their general offices in London, been able to secure the most complete and recent information from all the other countries in the world. That is distinctly stated in their reports, and that they are enabled, through their agents in London, to put themselves in communication with the statistical departments of foreign countries, and by that means they are enabled to furnish fresh and new the information with regard to the crops and stock, and all these things, not only for the United States but for other countries. It is quite evident, from the fact of our having a high commissioner's office in London—which has proved to be of very great value to Canada in many respects—it is quite evident to my mind that still more valuable work could be done in London in connection with that office, so that the Department of Agriculture here would be regularly supplied with the very latest information with regard to crops and farming products all over the world, and that it should be regularly distributed for the benefit of farmers. I call the attention of the government, and of this House to this question, because, as I have already said, it is of very great importance indeed, and not one unnecessary day's delay should occur before the Department of Agriculture takes the matter up. It would not be necessary, probably, to duplicate whatever is being done, and being done well in the various provinces, as the Minister of Agriculture, in his last report, which I have already read from, says and says very wisely that it would be possible to secure such co-operation, with the provincial governments and their officers as would render it unnecessary to duplicate much of the work that is being done in the provinces. It would be possible to extend the work, and wherever it is not being done or is done inefficiently, to see that it is done efficiently, and in that way secure the compilation and the consequent distribution of the results amongst our farmers and all classes of the country, not only farmers alone, but those who are dealing with farmers' products, and to them it will be equally useful, and incidentally such distribution would benefit the farmers as well. To all who are dealing with farmers' products and to all who are studying our social and industrial questions, it would be of the greatest possible value that the most complete and accurate statistics should be regularly collected and that they should be as regularly and promptly distributed for the benefit of all. My notice has just one word which I should like to correct, that is where I refer to the "annual" compilation and distribution. The word "annual" should not be there. I mean more than the annual distribution. That would be of very little value indeed. What is wanted is a calculation of crop prospects, reports of condition of cattle, competition in other parts of the world, &c. These should be distributed while they are fresh and new, and not by any mere system of annual distribution—not even monthly distribution, but as soon as they can be compiled. I hope the gentlemen in the government will give the subject their earnest attention, and that at an early day this important matter will be treated as it deserves.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have been very much engaged in the work of my department and in the proceedings of this House, and consequently have not had an opportunity of discussing this question with the Minister of Agriculture since the hon. gentleman has put this notice on the paper, but I know very well that the subject has been engaging the attention of the Minister of Agriculture for a very considerable period of time, and that from time to time he has been making suggestions with the view of improving the condition of the agricultural population, by distributing information amongst them and by making such experiments, by the establishment of farm stations, as may serve to improve the methods of agriculture and to introduce whatever may be best in the way of seed grain and otherwise for rendering their labours more profitable. The hon. gentleman has referred to a number of subjects, amongst others the work that is done by the department at Washington connected, I think, with the Smithsonian Institute there, for the purpose of diffusing information amongst the population upon the subject of agriculture. The United States have incurred an enormous expenditure every year for this purpose. I cannot at this moment recall the amount, but I know that it runs up into the millions, and although they are a very much larger population than we in Canada, I think the people of this country are not in a position to expend even such an amount, in proportion to their population, as that spent by the government of the United States. In fact, there have been a great many complaints there within the last few years with respect to this expenditure. A very large amount has been expended in the distribution of seed grain of various sorts for experimental purposes, and this distribution it is said has been the subject of no inconsiderable abuse. I do not know that it would be to the public advantage that the government of Canada should incur a large expenditure for the purpose of obtaining statistical information which might duplicate simply the work that is being done by the various provinces through local agencies which the government control and which give them a facility of coming more directly in contact with the individuals in each portion of the province than any machinery at our disposal would enable us to do without an expenditure proportionately larger than that which the province incurs; but I think it might very well be that the report made from the Department of Agriculture, and the information that is circulated periodically during the continuance of the year, might be collected. An officer in the department, or more than one officer if more than one is necessary—I daresay that more than one would be necessary—might easily, by careful study and investigation of what is being done in each province, give such a summary of it from time to time as might be useful, not merely for circulation amongst farmers in other provinces than the one in which the statistics originate, but also those engaged or interested in agriculture in the United Kingdom who might be disposed to come to this country. Statistics usually grow up—the perfection of them—very slowly in countries. The hon. gentleman has referred to how very little has been done since confederation for the purpose of collecting information upon the subject of agriculture, and for its diffusion amongst the people of the Dominion. The fact that very little has been done in that regard in this country up to the present time, rather tends to show the difficulty of the work in connection with the Dominion, the government not having the same machinery as the provinces for collecting information, being dependent largely upon the voluntary information imparted by those to whom the Minister of Agriculture may, from time to time, write. The information obtained is often uncertain, and necessarily imperfect, because, in many cases, the parties who have been written to fail to respond. I know the present Minister of Agriculture has been giving a good deal of attention to the subject, and I have no doubt that whatever can be done, in the way of collecting information in that regard, will be done. Our statistics that are published from year to year in the annual report that is prepared by the department, have for many years been devoted rather to the consideration of the growth of manufactures and industrial institutions, than to the collection of information connected with agricultural operations. That collection of information, and the systemization of what may be obtained upon the subject, might very well embrace everything relating to agriculture that can be, without unusual expense, collected and diffused amongst the population, in addition to that periodical information which is obtained monthly, and which is scattered broadcast by some of the provinces, at least, amongst the people of the province.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Would it not be possible to have the reports from the different provinces compiled together so as to form one volume of statistics, which in that way might be distributed? I desire to say that as far as Ontario is concerned I wish to bear witness of their very excellent system of collecting agricultural statistics and giving the results of their inquiries to the public every month. The gentleman who had charge of that department before, Mr. Blue, discharged that duty very well, and so far as I can learn so does his successor. I have been in the habit, for some years past, of sending these quarterly reports to people in England who are interested in the country. Those reports have been full of information, and the correspondence which they have with different farmers, although some of it is perhaps curious literature, still gives on the whole an idea of what progress is made in the country. I do not see why a compilation of these reports could not be made.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I suggested that one or more of the officers in the department might collect that information which is given. I know this work was undertaken some years ago by Mr. Blue, a gentleman I have known all his life, and who, having begun life as a farmer, was certainly well adapted to initiate that enterprise, and I believe that the statistics collected in the province of Ontario are more complete, perhaps, than in any province in the Dominion, and quite as satisfactory as those of any province in the American Union. The Agricultural Department might and probably will act on the suggestion that the hon. senator from Toronto has made.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I understood by the first part of the hon. minister's speech that the present Minister of Agriculture is carrying out the principle and policy laid down by his predecessor. I am very glad he is doing so. It is the only means of getting accurate information of the agriculture of the country. The distribution of seeds, was initiated by Sir John Carling when he was Minister of Agriculture and a member of the House of Commons. I remember the hon. gentleman opposite and his colleagues in the House of Commons were very much opposed to the establishment of the experimental farms which have been of such great value to the farmers of Canada. I remember very well that the opposition to the hon. Minister of Agriculture was very strong when he tried to get grants to establish those farms which are of so much benefit now to the whole Dominion. It would be very well to encourage and afford facilities for acquiring and distributing agricultural information for the benefit of the farmers of the country.

GROUNDS SURROUNDING THE PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN rose to:

Call the attention of the government to the condition of that part of the grounds surrounding the Parliament Buildings, extending along the face of the cliff overlooking the Ottawa River; and will inquire if it is the intention of the government to protect them from further injury?

He said:—I think I may assume that all Canadians are proud of the capital of the Dominion, and especially so of these buildings, and the very beautiful site which they occupy. There are few scenes in any part of Canada, or on this continent, which can be compared with the view which meets the eye, the broad rushing river, with its background of mountains, as seen either from the terrace at the top of the bank or from the walk which winds around the face of the cliff. It is to this latter part of the grounds and their condition that I desire to call attention for a few minutes. The chief beauty of this walk is undoubtedly the wooded bank both above and below it, and one can easily see that nothing would more impair their effect that the loss or destruction of the trees and shrubs which now clothe the rocks, and without which they would be bare and barren slopes. A certain amount of destruction has been going on for a long time past. I have watched very carefully from year to year the effects of frost and heavy rains. The soil is gradually, in many places, being washed away from the crumbling rocks, leaving the roots of the trees bare and exposed and the consequence is that many of them are either dying or dead. Then, on the lower slope, stretching down to the water, a great many trees have fallen, and yet no attempt has been made to replace them, even to remove the dead timber. I do not suppose that all this would be very perceptible to any one who does not take a great interest in the matter. The destruction is so very gradual, but I cannot put it too strongly that if it is not checked, in a few years the beauty of those cliffs will be very seriously impaired. If I wanted an object lesson to give force to my representations, I do not think I could do better than point to Nepean Point and the destruction which is being wrought there. There are few things which impress visitors to Ottawa more than the view from the Sappers' bridge, looking north towards the river. The wooded bank on the left hand side, with the towers of these buildings rising above the trees, and the cliffs on the opposite side covered with evergreens and clothed with a perfect curtain of creepers in summer, which makes this view down the ravine one of the most beautiful scenes in Ottawa. I presume, as the railroad goes on towards its ultimate destination, the whole of that cliff on the east side with its trees and creepers will be utterly destroyed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I hope not.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—How it was that the good people of Ottawa did not resist such a frightful piece of vandalism is more than I can comprehend. But to return more immediately to the subject of my motion, it may be asked what can be done to check the destruction that is going on. Many of the worst places can easily be redeemed by a little terracing. A dozen years ago I ventured to suggest something of the same kind to the minister who was then in charge of the public works, and on one side of the slope places where the earth was sliding away and the rock was crumbling, were repaired by being partly terraced and small shrubs and trees planted, the effect of which was to keep the soil from being further washed away. The result is that that part of the walk is in a fair state of preservation, while in other places on the slopes the earth is being washed away from the roots of the trees, and they are gradually dying and many evergreens there in a short time will be dead. It is quite worth our while to endeavour to preserve that walk in all its beauty, and in fact I think we ought to feel that anything which can be done to beautify those grounds and make them a source of pride, not only to the people of Ottawa but to the Dominion, ought to be done as I have already mentioned. At some places on the lower slope, the dead trees and branches have been allowed to accumulate. There is no danger to be apprehended from that just now, but in a dry season the ashes from a pipe or a lighted cigar thrown down the slope and falling on one of those heaps of rubbish, might start a fire which would destroy the whole beauty of the slopes. Then, again, the government have tolerated—I do not know how they could allow it—a frightful dump at the extreme west end of the walk, just behind the Supreme Court buildings. The slope of the bank there is defaced by the enormous amount of rubbish which I think was thrown first of all from the building, and then there is a choice collection of oyster and lobster cans strewed down the slope which has effectually spoiled a very pretty walk that used to run along the foot of the bank. I think then hon. gentlemen it is not asking too much from the government that they should take the necessary steps to preserve these grounds from further injury, and above all, that the work should be done intelligently. In this connection I should like to mention one other thing. When these grounds were first laid out, hon. gentlemen will remember they looked at first very little better than a deserted stone quarry, and it was doubtful whether trees could be got to grow here at all. Whoever laid out the grounds did it judiciously. At either end of the main building on the east and west there was an embankment of earth formed, and planted with trees. These trees, much to some peoples' astonishment, took root and have grown vigorously, but nothing has been done to keep them in order, and if there was a landscape gardner employed, a man who understands his business, these groups could be greatly improved. Any one who takes the trouble to examine them now will see that the trees in the inside of the group are dying from being too much crowded together, a certain number ought to be cut away to give space for the others to spread and form handsome trees. If that is not done, the lower branches will die and drop off, and the trees will lose their beauty of form. To do this work properly and judiciously, somebody should be employed, not an ordinary gardener, who is all well enough to plant out flowers, but a man who understands that sort of work and who knows something about landscape gardening—otherwise "the last estate will be worse than the first." I take great pride, myself, as a Canadian, in these buildings and surroundings. I think we ought to make the capital of the Dominion and everything connected with it as perfect as can be. Whether anything can be done to prevent the destruction of Nepean Point, I do not know. My hon. friend reminds me that if the railway comes, and I think it must come, to the Canada Atlantic terminus, south of Rideau street, it must take the whole of that lovely bank down.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I hope not.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I do not see how it can be avoided. I should think that, so far as the park on Major Hill in concerned, its beauty and the enjoyment of the people who frequent it will certainly not be increased by railway trains sending their smoke all over the place. That, of course, is a minor evil, but it would be an irreparable loss if the whole of that ravine was destroyed by the cutting away of the cliff.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I think we are all under a debt of gratitude to the hon. gentleman from Toronto for having brought this subject to the notice of the House, but I understand that Wellington street is under the management of Parliament. If I am correct in that, I would call attention to the disgraceful state of the sidewalk on Wellington street. I do not think there is a town in Canada that would permit such a state of things—broken boards and stones, which are dangerous to one's limbs A quantity of stone has been put in heaps on the street without being properly spread out. No roller has been put over them ; the dirt has been scraped into hillocks, and has not been removed for days—I might say weeks. What would any Washington man say when he saw Wellington street of this " Washington of the north ?"

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cordially agree with everything that has been said by the hon. senator from Toronto. The government and Parliament must be regarded as trustees of these buildings and grounds, and they should see that nothing is done to mar their beauty. I have not been, myself, over the walk round the bank for two or three years, but it would be a great misfortune if anything should happen that would permit of the destruction of the trees and shrubs which grow both above and below the walk. There can be no doubt of this fact, that if the trees are allowed to die there and are not replaced, the earth, which is kept in its position by the roots of the growing trees, would soon be washed away, and it would be impossible that any other trees could be made grow in their place. Nepean Point has undoubtedly been to some extent disfigured by undertaking to bring a railway across the Ottawa River to that point. I hope, however, that the disfiguration will be, at all events, in its full extent, only temporary, and that no further injury will be done to the bank on the east side of the ravine by the railway coming through there. It seems to me there is room between the canal and the bank for the location of the road without interfering with or in any way injuring the bank. I would regard it as very unfortunate if, by permitting a railway to locate its line there, in order to reach the central station, it should in any way interfere with the present condition of the ravine. I am told that it is possible to level the slope at Nepean Point and cover it with vines at a very early period, so that the unsightly appearance it presents at the present moment can be overcome. I hope that that may be so, and I entirely concur in the observations made by the hon. senator that care should be taken to protect the slope from injury, to preserve the trees that are growing there, and to replant others to replace those that are decayed, and to take necessary steps to preserve those growing at each end of the building. I trust that the appropriation made this year, and to be continued hereafter for beautifying portions of the city in which we have an interest, will be expended satisfactorily, and that the appearance of the city of Ottawa, as the capital of the Dominion, will be greatly improved by what may be done at an early period. I know the notion has gone abroad that this is in compensation to the city for the loss of taxes which otherwise the city might obtain upon the grounds occupied by the government buildings. That, I think, is not the view taken by the government or by Parliament. It is not given in compensation to the city for any loss which they may sustain on that account. I do not think, in fact, that any loss is sustained. The advantage that the city derives from Ottawa being the capital is a compensation far beyond any disadvantage arising from the loss of taxation upon property which is held by the government. Certainly the city would be in a very different position if the capital were located elsewhere. What is proposed, and the jurisdiction for undertaking the expenditure, is that, Ottawa being the capital of the Dominion, the whole country is interested in its condition and its appearance. We have to pay some attention to the aesthetic demands of the country, and some regard to the public opinion of visitors from other portions of Christendom, so it is of consequence that a moderate expenditure shall be made in order that the capital of Canada may not be unworthy of the country of which it is the centre and head.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I wish to call attention to another matter closely connected with the question just treated of by the hon. Minister of Justice, that the preservation of the Parliament Buildings from the danger of fire. We know that the western block was, a short time ago, very seriously injured and great loss was sustained by fire in that building. On previous occasions we have been threatened with other fires in the departments. Since that great fire in the western block, I understand an improved system has been introduced into this building and probably into the other departmental buildings for their protection, in the way of hose and matters of that kind. What I would suggest is that a system of drill and say once a forthnight or once a week if necessary should be introduced among the officials in these buildings so that in case of fire every man might know his station and what to do. We know in case of fire people are very apt to lose their heads, and do the contrary thing to what they should do. A system of drill would not take a great deal of time, and if it were done among the civil servants and employees about the buildings in the case of fire every one would know his duty and do it immediately and perhaps a great conflagration might be prevented by a system of that kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman's suggestion has already been acted upon. The police under Mr. Sherwood are instructed in that, and they are from time to time drilled so as to know the position of the different hydrants and hose.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Are they here all night?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman for York has rendered a very distinct service to the country in bringing up this matter because it must be interesting to every hon. gentleman in this House. I never visit Ottawa but I reflect on the selection of the seat of government by Her Majesty as one of the many instances of the very great wisdom which Her Majesty Queen Victoria has displayed in governing this great realm, for certainly no more happy choice could possibly have been made than that of Ottawa as the seat of government. I cannot say that I altogether agree with my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, when he says, as I understood him, that the city of Ottawa is not entitled to consideration in regard to the loss of taxation which may arise from this part of the city being set apart for this purpose, inasmuch as very large incidental advantages arise to Ottawa from being the seat of government. There is no question that these incidental advantages do arise, but it was the very fact that Ottawa presented the best advantages for being the capital, that brought the seat of government here, and Ottawa should surely get all credit for what was, in the first instance, due to her own great natural advantage. My hon. friend from York has done very well in bringing this subject of the grounds and the trees under the attention of this honourable House, and when he made his speech I was reminded of Burns' celebrated poem addressed to the Duke of Athol as the "humble petition of Bruar Water." When Burns visited that part of the Highlands, he found the beautiful stream suffering from the depletion of the trees on its banks, and he wrote an humble address of Bruar Water to the Duke of Athol, asking that he might plant the margin of the stream with trees in order to preserve it from droughts, and it is to the credit of the Duke of Athol that he responded to that request. In 1886, when I visited that part of the Highlands, I was pained to find that the trees, which had been planted nearly a hundred years before in response to Burns' poem, had many of them been blown down and destroyed by the storm that wrecked the Tay bridge—that terrific flood and storm which swept over that part of the country, when large trunks of trees had been broken and destroyed. But I learned—in fact, I say from my own observation—that the present Duke of Athol had gone to the trouble of planting new trees to take the place of those which had been destroyed by the storm. I hope my hon. friend will be as successful as the poet was, and that the appeal he has made on the present occasion to the government will not be in vain, that these beautiful grounds will be taken care of, that the life of the trees will be guarded, not only against fire, but against exposure and danger of other kinds, for there is no doubt that there is a great deal of truth in what my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has said, that visitors from all parts of the world who come to our Canadian capital are impressed in favour of our country by the beauty as well as by the commodious character of our Parliament Buildings, and everything that pertains to them.

VACANT JUDGESHIP IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON rose to:

Call the attention of the government to the fact that the office of County Judge for Queen's County, P.E.I., has been vacant for a considerable time; and will inquire when an appointment will be made?

He said:—I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice can say that this is the first intimation he has had of this vacancy. I do not think that that will be his answer. The late lamented Judge Alley died on the 6th May last, and from that time this highly important official position has been vacant. It will soon be three months, and very great inconvenience has resulted from that vacancy. The hon. Minister of Justice knows that when a judge is ill or absent from duty there is a provision in the law by which another judge may take his place and perform his functions. But when a judge dies there is no provision by which another judge can perform his duties. There has been no court since the 6th of May although one is due to be held on the first day of August; but proceedings under the Garnishee Act cannot be taken, and in respect of these proceedings very considerable loss is being incurred, and there is a very strong feeling in the community with regard to the non-appointment of a person to fill that vacancy for so long a period of time. There is no parallel for this delay, in Prince Edward Island at all events, since confederation, in filling an important judicial position where the court has only a single judge. Last year my hon. friend made provision in the estimates for an increase of salary of $400 to the judge of Queen's County on account of the onerous and important character of the duties which he had to perform, and every hon. gentleman who knew anything of the situation agreed with my hon. friend when he made that increase. But now we have this office remaining vacant for about three months, and I may tell my hon. friend frankly that it is believed, in the province of Prince Edward Island, that the failure to appoint a successor to Judge Alley is due to political exigencies. I hope my hon. friend will not stay his hand much longer. A partial election is coming on down there just now, and when I tell the hon. gentleman that it will be held on the 25th of this month I trust that the political exigency will be then over and it will be possible for the Department of Justice to make an appointment to this position which has been left improperly vacant for so long a period.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think my hon. friend was a member of the administration at one time when vacancies were allowed to remain for a very much longer period. There has been no complaint made to me as yet in consequence of the vacancy. There are a good many judges in Prince Edward Island and not a very large population, and I may say to the hon. gentleman that this is the long vacation. There is nothing special to do at present. I am giving consideration to the subject, and I trust that before long I shall be able to make to His Excellency a recommendation to the office that is now vacant.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no judge, as I understand, in that county. The cases to which my hon. friend referred are cases in which there were a number of judges? There might be a vacancy in Ontario or Quebec, but there are a number of deputy judges who, as a rule, perform their duties. The case to which my hon. friend calls attention is one in which there is no deputy.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is a very limited jurisdiction and not a very litigous population.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That speaks well for the province, if such be the case, but my hon. friend from Marshfield says that very great inconvenience has arisen in consequence of the vacancy.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It has not been brought to my notice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend called the attention of the minister to the fact that no action could be taken to put into force the provisions of the Garnishee Act, and I do not think the case is at all analogous, when you consider the limited area of the district, and the fact that one judge has to perform the duties of a particular county.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Last year the hon. gentleman provided $400 additional as salary for this very judgship, which he regards as unimportant, and says, is very little litigation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I hope the additional salary did not contribute to shorten his days.

BUFFALO AND FORT ERIE BRIDGE COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved the third reading of Bill (96) "An Act respecting the Buffalo and Fort Erie Bridge Company," as amended. He said:—The hon. gentleman who has charge of this bill intimated to the House yesterday, when moving for the discharge of this order, that some objection had been made to the name of this bridge company. There is another company in existence of exactly the same name. My hon. friend communicated with the promoters of the bill, and they have consented to change the name, and they propose that instead of the name of the Buffalo and Fort Erie Bridge Company, they will adopt the name of the "Welland and Grand Island Bridge Company." I therefore move that the Bill (96) be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out "The Ontario and New York Bridge Company" where it occurs in the said amended bill, and that the words "The Welland and Grand Island Bridge Company," be substituted therefor.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think there must be some error, because the bill as it stands upon the order paper is called the Buffalo and Fort Erie Bridge Company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They changed the name in the committee from the Buffalo and Fort Erie Bridge Company to the Ontario and New York Bridge Company.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It was an error giving it that name, and they found another company with the same name, and in order to avoid confusion, they have consented to change it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The order paper contains the name of the old company, the Buffalo and Fort Erie Bridge Company, instead of being in accordance with the amendment made in the committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose the resolution will do its work, but this is really an amendment to an amendment which was reported by the committee. The committee reported in favour of adding a clause to the bill to change the name of the company, and this amendment is to that clause. It is not an amendment that should go to the House of Commons. It is simply putting an amendment which this House has already made to the bill in a different shape.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the resolution is all right. It is an amendment to the motion on the paper.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill as amended was then read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Second reading (Bill V) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Elections Act as respects the Province of Prince Edward Island."—(Hon. Mr. Ferguson.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman allow this bill to stand.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am sorry that I cannot comply with the request. This bill was distributed two days ago.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I call attention to the fact that it is not printed in French.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And the hon. gentleman will not be able to understand it on that account. Can my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, tell me, as the objection has in the first instance come from him, why it is that so long a time has been taken to get this bill printed? It was sent down to the Printing Bureau at 9.35 p.m. of this day week, from the hands of the law clerk of this House. I find other bills here, which were sent later, have been advanced a stage and appear to be printed both in English and French. I would like an explanation of why this bill has been detained so long. It only contains three pages and yet an extraordinary length of time has been consumed in getting it printed in English and the inference is that it will take another week to get it printed in French.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know anything about the printing of the bill. All I know is that the French copy has to be furnished by the translators, and those bills are printed a short time after they are sent down. The printing has been unusually prompt this session, but at the end of the session there is a good deal more than at any other time, so many bills have been altered and changed, and the printers have been kept at work at night. The French copy of the bill could not have been sent down. They are slow in the translators office, and the proofs do not go down very rapidly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It was distributed two days ago.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The hon. Secretary of State tells us that the printing has been unusually prompt this year. We have not had a copy of the Debates for ten days, and that has been the state of affairs during the session. It is an utter absurdity to continue the printing at the Printing Bureau if we cannot get it done. For ten days we have not received copies of the Debates in this chamber, and the Debates are perfectly useless to members of the House if they want to consult them on any subject that is being discussed. It passes my comprehension what expedition means.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can give an easy explanation. Hon. gentlemen might have the Debates here the following day, but, unfortunately, the proofs are sent round to the members and they keep them from day to day, and, of course, they cannot get on with the printing till the proofs are all in. If the copy is all allowed to go down from the reporter to the Bureau direct, hon. gentlemen can have the reports the very next day, if they like. That would be the only satisfactory rule that could be made. Senators are appealed to, and so are members of Parliament, to send in their proofs at once and not detain the printing, but they do not do so, and that stops the whole report.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Then let them go without the proofs. If they are not returned in twenty-four hours, let them be returned without revision. I think there is a rule to that effect. I appeal to my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax, and he can tell the House, that what I am saying is true. The Debates have not been in the hands of the senators for from six to ten days.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the fault of the senators.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It should be corrected.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—As chairman of the Debates Committee, I may mention to the House that it is a positive order of that committee that, unless the reports are returned within twenty-four hours, they shall go to the printer uncorrected.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the hon. senator fron Halifax will withdraw his objection, as none of the French gentlemen of the House have entered any protest, the bill is of some importance and unless it is determined to delay it so that it will be impossible to get the amendments through the lower House this session it is necessary that it should have a second reading now. I confess I am not acquainted with the facts, but the hon. gentleman from Marshfield says that the bill only proposes to correct errors in the Franchise Act which will interfere materially with any election which might take place until they are amended. If that be the case, it might as well be done now. Under all the circumstances, as the rule has scarcely ever been invoked unless there is some good reason, I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that courtesy, like reciprocity, should not be jug-handled, and the hon. gentleman on the other side has been very fond of denouncing jug-handled reciprocity. The hon. Secretary of State asked the hon. gentleman from Marshfield to allow the bill to stand until Monday. That was not a very serious request, and did not involve very much delay. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield declined to grant the request, and it was then that I thought proper to invoke the rule of the House. I never thought of invoking the rule before. I am not going to stand on technicalities, and I shall withdraw the objection.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the hon. Secretary of State presses the request, I shall comply with it, but I hope he will not do that. It is a small amendment but it is of very great importance. It is some four or five weeks since I called the attention of the House to it, and I have done my very best to have the amendment made in the election law, as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice knows. I went to the pains of preparing a bill and put it in his hands. He had it a week or ten days in his possession and I was trying to get the government to move in the matter. Nothing has been done. If my hon. friend persists in his request, and wishes the bill to stand till Monday, I must comply, but if the bill should not become law this session, the responsibility will rest upon my hon. friend the Secretary of State. It is a matter that could be explained and put through in a very few minutes, and if the bill should, unfortunately, not become law this session, I must not be held responsible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Neither the Minister of Justice nor myself has looked at the bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Minister of Justice had it in his possession a week.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It certainly will not facilitate the bill. I have no objection, personally, to going on with it. My object was to enable me to consult the minister from Prince Edward Island, who was familiar with the subject and to get his opinion about the bill. Then it might be facilitated, but of course it will not make faster progress by being taken up to-day.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is not satisfied that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has had ample time to consider the bill with him, I will grant the request at once and let it stand until Monday.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I called the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the bill and asked him to take it into consideration, because it seems to me a bill relating to the franchise ought to originate in the other House and not in the Senate, and for that reason the bill of last year, although prepared in the department, was not introduced by me, but was left to a minister in the House of Commons to introduce it. I have not had an opportunity of seeing this bill myself. I think it has been put on the file to-day for the first time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The day before yesterday.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have not had a moment to look at it, and I would rather do that before coming to the discussion of the bill than to look at it later. The bill stands for second reading, and if it is read to-day I am not committing myself to the principle. I will not object to the bill being read the second time, only the hon. gentleman will understand that we are not committing ourselves to the provisions of the bill at all. What I have to say on the subject I may say when we go into committee.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will move the second reading of the bill. There is but one important feature in it, and that is the central point. There are two or three other amendments leading up to and to implement that one. Our law clerk, whose services I obtained for the purpose of preparing this bill, was of the opinion that this amendment could not be effectively brought in except by consolidating two sections of the Election Act, and although the printing is quite large, about a dozen or twenty lines is all the change that is in the law in consequence of this bill. The point that the bill aims at is this. The House will remember that last year the Franchise Bill was made to contain, by amendment in this House and concurred in by the House of Commons, some provisions which dealt specially with the difficulties of the Prince Edward Island law. There were no voters' lists in Prince Edward Island. The system of open voting prevailed, and in dovetailing the Franchise Act on the Prince Edward Island system, a difficulty presented itself.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does the hon. gentleman provide in his bill for a scrutiny on recount?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The amendments of last year provided for that, they provided that as there was no voters' list in the province, there could be objections offered to votes, tendered on polling day, and the ballot could be marked, as is done in Ontario, and the corresponding mark put on the back of the ballot and, such ballots put in an envelope and they could be counted at the close of the poll for the candidate for whom they were marked, but in the event of a scrutiny, all those votes could be questioned before the County Court judge who was to go into the merits of the votes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Without filing a petition?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, without filing a petition. It would all come up in the way of a recount on the usual affidavit for a recount. It was found, however, while all that machinery was provided by this Parliament last year, one thing was left unprovided for. It appears so; I am not quite sure, but it is a matter open to question as to whether the County Court judge was given the necessary jurisdiction to try those votes and examine witnesses and decide whether they were good or bad. The hon. gentleman will see at once that this lay at the foundation of this part of the bill, as far as it relates to the province of Prince Edward Island. The amendment is to be found in subsection 2 of section 64, which is as follows:

[2. In the province of Prince Edward Island the judge shall decide the objections made in each case where a ballot paper has been cast by a person whose right to vote has been objected to on the ground of want of qualification, For the purpose of such decision he shall hear any parties then appearing before him in support of or against such objection. The said parties may be represented by counsel, and the judge shall examine the said parties upon oath and shall ascertain the facts and may take such other evidence as he thinks necessary and is able to obtain and may require the attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and shall, for all purposes of such decision, have all the powers of a County Court in Prince Edward Island exercising his ordinary jurisdiction in civil cases.]

That is the gravamen of the amendment, in fact, it is the whole amendment itself. My hon. friend, when the bill was read the first time, called my attention to the fact that, in his opinion, the amount of the deposit provided in the bill was not sufficient for such an inquiry as the County Court judge might be called upon to make on a recount of votes, on account of those disputed ballots to be looked over. I think my hon. friend's objection was well taken, and when we go into committee on the bill I shall be prepared to accept an amendment on that point which I hope will make it satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Did the hon. gentleman say that there was open voting in the island?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have open voting in the provincial election, but we were incorporating a ballot system on election laws which——

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Considering the use made of ballots in Ontario, would it not be well to make provision for open voting generally?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That question is not at all reached by this bill. The system of marking ballots is provided in the Franchise Act, but that principle is not affected at all by the amendments proposed in this bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not going to oppose the formal passage of the second reading of the bill. I was opposed last year, and I have seen no reason to change my views, to the scrutiny upon the counting of votes. Hitherto the duty discharged, and it is so in every other province of the Dominion, by the county judge upon a recount, is simply an arithmetical duty. He counts the ballots. He sums up the result, and those ballots that are properly marked are counted for the one candidate or the other. My hon. friend asked last year, and he asks by this bill, that in addition to the mere work of adding up the ballots and ascertaining the result, the returning officer may go into a scrutiny and ascertain whether some parties who voted in the election were entitled to vote or not. That, in my opinion, is even more serious in its expense to the candidates than the trial of an election petition; and if a party upon an election petition chooses to inquire into the validity of a vote, if exception has been taken at the time, the vote is recorded so that it may be done on the trial of an election petition. If this provision is carried and made operative—the hon. gentleman did not succeed in making it operative by his amendments last year—the result will be that you will have a scrutiny which will involve all the delay and all the expense of an election petition, and then the unsuccessful candidate in the scrutiny may file a petition and the whole proceeding may be taken over again upon the election petition. That is, in my opinion, an objectionable proceeding, and I call the attention of the House to it so that they will see the responsibility they are assuming with regard to a matter which affects the other branch of the legislature. I have not examined the bill, and that is my reason for reserving to myself the right to fully discuss this subject on going into committee. Under the bill as it is drawn, and as the hon. gentleman has introduced it into the House, this scrutiny can only take place with respect to ballots which have been recorded against the candidate who is asking for the scrutiny. Supposing a man was elected by a majority of 25, that there are 25 or 26 ballots which have been objected to on his behalf—that a scrutiny takes place, and that all these ballots are disallowed; there may be as many more objected to on the other side, and under the proposed amendment it would only be the ballots recorded against the petitioner that can be inquired into, and he might be seated notwithstanding the majority.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman is wrong.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We will see when we come to examine the bill. I mention now what has been stated to me with regard to it. But even were it a proceeding that provided for inquiring into all the objected votes, is it a proper proceeding to take on a recount, which in every other portion of the Dominion is a mere arithmetical proceeding and which here would put the candidate to a double expense, for a petition could subsequently be filed in the contest. I am calling the attention of the House to these points in order that they may see just what is involved in the bill.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—May I ask the hon. gentleman if the bill has the effect, which its friends say it has, of marking ballots so that it may be known how a person votes? Who is to object to an elector's ballot? Neither of the candidates know whom he voted for, and therefore a man whose vote is not a good one will not be objected to because nobody knows how he is voting. That is one of the great objections to the ballot. Open voting ought never to have been departed from. The huge frauds which are now being exposed in Ontario I am afraid are extending to other places in Canada besides Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In so far as you have a scrutiny, you have practically no secrecy in the vote. The policy of the Dominion law is absolute secrecy, but where you mark a number of ballots so as to make a scrutiny in regard to them subsequently to determine the question of validity, you practically depart from that provision, because you could not strike off a vote except by knowing how the party voted. If you put it in a marked envelope and seal it up, and count it subsequently, after its being determined whether the party had a right to vote or not, of course everybody must know how he voted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I can explain that, but perhaps it would be more convenient to do it when we go into committee.

The bill was read the second time.

YUKON TERRITORY BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (U) "An Act to amend the Yukon Territory Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I propose to substitute another clause for the one that stands in the bill as printed. I propose to confer power, after making regulations for shop, tavern and other licenses, to charge a fee for the issuing of the same. That may well be done without departing from the principle of no taxation without representation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that include licenses for butcher shops and all sorts of licenses?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, if they think proper to license them. There may be localities in which every one is a foreigner, and it might be thought necessary to make some provision for the public health in such a place, and it might be necessary also to make improvements. They may have no elective institutions. The settlement may be of a character in which you could not well organize a council, and so this bill provides that if a majority petition for improvements for the protection of health, &c., legislation for that purpose may be had.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to the composition of this commission which now governs the Yukon Territory, I understand that there is a commissioner and that six other persons are associated with him? How is the present commission composed? Who are the gentlemen associated with the commissioner?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Under the Act as it stands, the judges are ex-officio commissioners. I propose to repeal that clause, for this reason: that in some instances the judge may assist in making ordinances and adopting regulations as a commissioner, on the validity of which he may subsequently be called to pass judgment. On that account, it is thought better that the judge should disappear from the commission.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Who are the other five?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is the chief commissioner himself, the legal officer to the commission and, if I remember rightly, the commandant of the Mounted Police.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It may be remembered that when this Yukon Territory Act was before the House last year, in the shape of a bill, there was something said about the composition of the governing body in the Yukon Territory, and a suggestion was made in this House to the effect that it would be wise on the part of the government, looking at the circumstances of the case, to appoint as a member of that governing body at least one person who might be considered as representing the people living in the Yukon country. No particular person was indicated, but some one who might be regarded as representing the interests of the people who are living and doing business there. Things which have happened during the past year go to show that it is to be regretted that the suggestion, which was endorsed I think by almost every member present had not been adopted. A good many complaints which have been made would not have been heard if one or two members of the governing body had been men whose interests were identified with the population resident in the Yukon country. The minister intimates now that he proposes to make some change in the composition of the governing body there, and I trust that the government will take occasion, when they make that change, to put on the governing body somebody who may be fairly and reasonably regarded as representing the people who are being governed. This principle of governing without the consent of the governed is not a good one at this period of the nineteenth century, and there are a sufficient number of intelligent and respectable Canadians in the Yukon country now to enable the government to select some reputable and capable man to assist the gentlemen who are sent by the government from outside into that country. Everybody who knows anything about popular feeling knows what the feeling in any community is as to the persons who are sent from the seat of government to govern that region. There seems to be a feeling of jealousy, and more or less a feeling of hostility. There is always a disposition to regard them as, in a certain sense, the satraps of the central power, and to regard what they do with suspicion, and to think that they are hostile to the resident population. I trust that the Minister of Justice will see, when the government come to fill the vacancy which will be caused in this governing body by the withdrawal of the judge, that some person, who may be fairly regarded as representing the people who live and do business in the Yukon country, shall be substituted for the judge.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—The objection made by my hon. colleague is met already. We all know that all the government officials there are doing business in the country. They are getting claims there. The judge says he got two or three, which he bought as he would buy a house. Almost every official I have heard of there is supposed to be doing business in the way of securing locations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The point raised by the senior member from Halifax (Mr. Power) is well taken if you could make a selection, but certainly at the time that Act was drawn, in 1898, and perhaps even now, it would be impossible to find any one who admitted he was intending to stay in the Yukon. The people only propose to stay there while it is profitable for themselves. We know now that they are going out by hundreds—people who spent last winter mining and were at the wash-up, are leaving.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There are many who are there permantly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Up to now there were not any you could regard as permanent.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—There is the King of the Klondike.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—His interests are too great. You could not put on a person directly interested in the mines. You have now to take some professional person, a doctor or a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There are some business men there, are there not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is only very recently. The two or three transportation companies have been doing all the business. They have control of the transportation lines in there. I think now it is probable we could get some one; there must be some one there who has been there two or three years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I could indicate one gentleman, the Klondike King.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He would not do.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He is just the man; and there is the further recommendation that he comes from Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—The parties to whom the Secretary of State refers are transient population, but surely at this date, and hereafter there will be found permanent residents who could be named.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It would be a great mistake, when we are several thousand miles away from the people who are resident in that country, to take to ourselves the power to name some person who is a resident before an appointment is made. The parties who are there are new comers, just as much as the officials who are appointed, and there is this difference, that the officials you appoint you know before they go, but the men who are there may be men whom no member of the administration has ever seen, and whose fitness for the position the government would be obliged to take at second hand, and we might find that instead of being fit, they were unfit. What I have thought we should do, if we do anything in the matter, would be to take power to authorize British subjects residing in the Territory to elect two members to the council themselves.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And let the government retain the power of appointing the present number, but to give to the population there that number. I have discussed this subject with some of the officials from that country, and this is the objection that has been made: that you have 25,000 people there, and 25,000 perhaps are foreigners.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Have they votes?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, they have not as yet, but once you elect a council and give power of taxation, these people will have to bear their proportion of the taxes. That certainly could not make them eligible as representatives, but whether you would give them the right to vote or not might be a source of a good deal of difficulty just at the present moment. Supposing you were to elect two members, and you gave to the citizens of the United States who are in that country, and perhaps are five times as numerous as all the others put together, the right to vote, you would have at once an agitation raised to do away with the royalty. Now, the revenue from the royalty is very considerable. It goes a long way to sustain the government of that country, and as long as you have an appointed body, with whom everybody is contented, it would be perhaps safer, for the time being, to allow the government to remain in the hands of that body. Supposing we retain the power of appointing six members, and you give to the population the power of electing two, the elected members must of necessity be British subjects. You have to decide whether the voters shall be British subjects or not. If you give to the three or four or five thousand British subjects there the right to vote, and exclude all the others, you would be raising your Uitlander question as they have it among the miners of Johannesburg. That is a condition of things that makes one hesitate as to what is best to do under the circumstances. Personally, my own view would be in favour of giving to the British population the right to elect one or two members to the council, and to leave the process of proceeding in elections just as simple as possible. But I would not bring that into operation, except by a proclamation, and unless the necessity arises. Most of the people who have gone into that country have gone there for the purpose of making money and coming out as soon as they have accumulated the amount they require, and their minds are not taken up with the consideration of political rights and liberties which belong to British subjects in their political capacity. Their minds are preoccupied with the subject of how they are going to make money, and they leave it to the parties who are sent there to carry on the government to do just as they please and are not particular so long as they do not impose vexatious burdens upon them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cannot quite agree with the hon. Minister of Justice. He says that the people out there do not care much about the way in which they are governed. We have had a good many complaints, most of which I believe have been unreasonable, during the past year; and the ground I have taken is that we should not have had so many of these complaints if the people who were doing business and earning their money in that region had a representative in the government. They would have felt they were not unrepresented and that they had some one who could speak for them in the government. That is one reason why I think there should be some one in the government who could be assumed to fairly represent the views of the people in Dawson City and the neighbourhood.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Section 8 is being repealed, and I want to repeal a portion of subsection 3 of section 5.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The clause refers to the "regulation of shop, tavern and other licenses." Would that include licenses for the selling of liquor?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No power was taken away from them by special Order in Council.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the Order in Council should be repealed. If it is proposed to take the right from them by law, that is another thing.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—The authority to issue liquor licenses required the approval of the authorities at Ottawa. When we found they were issuing licenses to the extent they were, the commissioner was notified that no licenses could be issued without authority from Ottawa. Of course they manage to get liquor in there in some way.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I propose to add a further provision to clause 8 which I have handed to the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What does the expression "Commissioner in Council" mean?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the man who acts as governor.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the Commissioner in Council of the Yukon Territory.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The changes are so important and numerous in the bill that I suppose the hon. minister will have no objection to having it reprinted before the third reading.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Would it not be better to put the amendments in the minutes so that we can see them?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They will be printed before the third reading, and if the House desires to go into committee on the third reading to consider any of the provisions there will be no objection.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to say a word before the committee report. The objection to the proposition made by the hon. Minister of Justice, which was that there should be two elected members, was that there have been no persons in that Territory who could be made members of the governing body. One reads every day in the newspapers of so and so, a prominent lawyer, going out to the Yukon and proposing to settle in Dawson City, and in another paper you read of some doctor having settled there, and then you hear of a man who has made half a million dollars coming east to see his friends, and going back to Dawson. So that I do not think there will be any difficulty in finding men who will, on the whole, be good members of a governing body. I do not think United States citizens should be allowed to vote in a British colony unless they become naturalized, and the terms under which a United States citizen can become naturalized in this country are not unreasonably hard. They are not like those imposed upon the Uitlanders in South Africa, and the Minister of Justice is ingenious enough to frame two or three clauses to this bill which will secure an effectual method of having those commissioners elected by the British subjects in that country; and then we shall not have those statements which are made in the Klondike Nugget and other papers edited by United States citizens, or at least we shall not have those things believed in and endorsed even by members of Parliament, who ought to know better.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am entirely in sympathy with the election of two members. I would propose that, upon the issue of a proclamation, not more than two members may be elected as members of council, that those having the right of franchise in the township shall be British subjects, and that the council—that is the Commissioner in Council—may pass an ordinance for the purpose of providing a method of recording the vote. I ask that the committee rise and I will prepare an amendment. We can go into committee again on the third reading if necessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That will meet the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax. I was surprised at the statement with reference to aliens voting. Surely there is no provision for aliens voting in that country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I should like to say a word with regard to that. Formerly, in the municipal elections in Ontario, everybody voted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was a long time ago.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But it was a proper regulation, as I shall show when we go into committee again.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.), from the committee, reported the bill with several amendments, which were concurred in.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to a motion I made in April last, in reference to certain returns as to commissions issued, and the number of persons who had been dismissed from office or removed for any cause. We have only received the returns from the Departments of Justice, Inland Revenue, Interior, and part of the Post Office. There still remain the Militia Department and the department of the hon. Secretary of State. I am inclined to think there are very few in the last mentioned department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can answer for that department now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was going to pay the hon. gentleman a compliment, and say there is sufficient old Toryism in him still remaining to adhere to the good old English practice of not turning people out of office unless there is good reason for it. There are a lot of returns to come yet from the Public Works Department and the Railway and Canals. There are also the Departments of Agriculture, Trade and Commerce, Finance, Customs and Marine and Fisheries. This return I desire to have, so that it can be printed with the other and make the return complete. The Printing Committee have delayed printing the returns in order that they may all be embodied in one. I have not yet received the complete return in reference to the Manitoba School Funds. Perhaps that is not of so much of importance just now if we are not to have another raid upon that fund.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I brought that down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman brought down a part of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I brought in one return to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have not seen it, hence I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to these facts. I should like to have these returns complete so that we will know what really has been done. The hon. gentleman will remember that he laid an elaborate statement before the House in reply to a motion made by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, and I then indicated that if they would complete that return up to the present time, it would answer all my purposes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fancy that this return does complete it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it does not. That statement gave the quantities of land sold, the amounts received from it, the amount received in interest, the amounts due, &c. It was a very good return. All it required was to be completed up to the present time. I wish the hon. gentleman would call attention to the matter.

Bill (20) "An Act to incorporate the Zenith Mining and Railway Company."—(Mr. Clemow.)

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (86) "An Act further to amend the Insurance Act."

On clause 5.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause has met the objection of the old life companies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, until 1910 the interest is reduced to four and a half per cent on all policies now in existence and all policies issued up to the 1st January next. They are on old basis of calculation.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Would the hon. gentleman explain what this clause means?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the present time the assets of all insurance companies are assumed to produce an annual return of 4½ per cent. In consequence of the fall in the rate of interest, it has been found necessary to reorganize that arrangement, and under this clause, as far as existing companies are concerned, on all policies issued up to the 1st of January next the rate of interest at which the assets of the company will be valued up to 1910 will be 4½ per cent. From 1910 to 1915 the valuation will be 4 per cent. After 1915 it will be 3½ per cent. Three and a half will then be the rate for all policies issued after the 1st of January next. The assets relating to those particular policies will be valued on a basis yielding 3½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Existing policies are not affected?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The existing policies will not be affected till 1910 and then a reduction of one-half per cent will be made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a concession made to the old companies for the purpose of not impairing their capital. If the rate of interest continues to go down, as it has in the last ten years, it is very questionable whether all the companies will not have to come to the 3½ per cent. The Canada Life, with its age and large capital, has already placed its reserves upon a basis of 3½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is three and a half and four with many companies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes; the Imperial was started on that basis, so that it does not affect that company in any way. The hon. gentleman will readily understand that a company must have a larger capital to represent three and a half than four and a half, and unless they can get four and a half per cent upon all their investments an impairment of capital must follow. I question very much whether in the future they will be able to do that. However, it is a very liberal provision.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—At the same time, in all this legislation we must consider existing rights—what we call the vested rights of the old policyholders, and there is a question whether these policyholders are not, in fact, very much affected by this.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Except to give them additional security.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It gives them additional security.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—That may be, but it gives them less profits than what they were led to expect.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is quite true, but the hon. gentleman will understand that if they cannot realize 4½ per cent, they cannot have the profits. Formerly they could loan their money and buy debentures bearing 5, 6, 7 and some 8 per cent, and that accounts for the wealth of the Canada Life, because it has been in existence long enough to invest its money at the rates to which I have referred, but to-day if any company can secure a 4½ per cent loan, they will lend their money; and if the old companies cannot continue to secure that amount, they cannot pay any bonuses to the policyholders, for the simple reason that they will not have it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then they must put up with the consequence, a larger reserve in order to give adequate security.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Still the hon. gentleman from Manitoba is quite right in what he states.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He is right to a certain extent.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Because one of the presidents of those companies, when he was asked what he was going to do with those people who had policies with profits, instead of without profits, stated "We will just have to cut off the profits and they will not have them." And I heard it stated in the House of Commons half a dozen times, or rather one hundred and fifty times, that they had no contract with those people for the profits.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is true.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—No, I beg pardon, it is not true. It is just as much a contract as it is with the man who has his policy without profits, and it is just as much a swindle to do away with the profits, because he has to pay more for the policy with profits than without profits.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing he takes less profits?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Then he pays less for it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then you do not swindle.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—You do if you take away the profits from the man, or compel him to pay more for them. This question was discussed pro and con, and I think this is the best arrangement that can be arrived at. The hon. leader of the opposition said that the Canada Life derived its wealth from the larger interest that they have been obtaining for so long. The Canada Life is just the same as every other well managed company. The wealth it possesses is not from that at all; it is from its age. It is a question of age whether they have wealth or not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Sun Life is in pretty nearly as good a position.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—But not half the age. The only thing the Sun Life found fault with was the retroactive character of this legislation. But we fought it out as long as we could, and when we could not fight it any longer, we gave in and accepted what we could get, and this is a good deal better than it would have been if the Sun Life had not fought the way it did, because it was first proposed to make this cut down to 3½ per cent in five years. If that had been done I know some first class companies in Canada that would have been bankrupt in theory, although they are perfectly good. This will give them plenty of time to come round, and save them from what would have been ruin under any other arrangement.

The clause was adopted.

On clause eight, relating to the investment of funds of life insurance companies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT explained that this new section was intended to apply to all insurance companies, except four, the Canada Life, the Sun Life, the Western and one other.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it was considered necessary to protect the interest of the policyholders, the investments should be limited to the securities.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The older companies have a wider power, and we could not very well take it from them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it were considered not safe to give the same powers that are enjoyed by the four companies to which the hon. gentleman has referred, then why, should they be allowed to retain it? If it is safe for these four companies why should it not be safe for the others? Why should any of them be restricted, while you permit these four to enjoy the privilege they already possess? The only reason I can give to account for it is that you do not wish to interfere with rights conceeded to those companies in the past.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They had the rights and the government did not wish to take them away.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But if those rights are safe for the policyholders of these four companies, why would they not be equally safe for the policyholders of the other companies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Treasury Board thought that Parliament had, in some instances, given too great latitude in allowing these four companies to invest in the securities defined under their special charters, and in laying down an absolute rule hereafter to prevail, it was thought wise not to go so far. You could not well take away the power after having given it to them. These four companies are so well managed that it is presumed they will not invest their money in securities that are risky.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Why do you not give them a limited time, say to 1910 or 1915, when they must come in under the same law as the others?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the hon. gentleman from Montreal has said, this matter has been pretty thoroughly threshed out by the insurance companies, and it has been difficult to get a basis, and this was accepted finally as a compromise in order to bring all the companies under the general law.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Do you not think this is more in the interest of the companies than of the policyholders?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The management of these companies stands high. You cannot call in question the securities of the Canada Life, the Sun Life or the Western.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—These companies may get into the hands of men who are not so able or careful as the present management and then the policyholders would suffer.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The managers will have that to consider. Parliament has, by what is being done in this case, indicated what sort of securities it thinks are not acceptable, and the companies that have that privilege have that opinion of Parliament before them, and that of itself will do a great deal towards exercising an influence to bring those companies, without interference on the part of Parliament, within the rules laid down for newer organizations.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—This is a very liberal clause indeed. May I ask what the other four companies' privileges are?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Canada Life has been incorporated fifty-two years, and has come before Parliament several times in that period, and got larger powers and privileges for investment.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES—They had these large privileges in their original charter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have been getting privileges from time to time, but they had the great part of them when they were incorporated in 1845 or 1846. I think you can trust the old established companies. The very fact as the Minister of Justice has observed, that we have laid a certain rule for newer companies will induce them to be more guarded in their investments.

The clause was adopted.

On subsection 4 of the 8th clause.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Does this mean that companies will be able to lend on stock of companies not already paid up?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is an additional security to those prescribed by the Act. Of course that gives them a wide margin.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It is a very dangerous clause.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—In case the silver dollar becomes the recognized coin in the United States, and interest may be paid in silver instead of on a gold basis, the silver dollar may not be worth more than fifty cents, and the security would be worth only half what it is supposed to be.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are not likely to depart from the gold basis in this country.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I am talking about the possibility in the United States. The securities may be perfectly sound now, but if they adopt the silver dollar the interest may be payable in silver, worth only half its value on a gold basis.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think you can trust the managers of the insurance companies. They take only a limited amount of the stock of United States companies, not more than ten per cent.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—They are able to lend on some stocks now. A company is started on a capital of one million dollars, and twenty per cent is paid up. Then a stockholder can borrow from another company ten cents on the dollar on that twenty per cent paid up. This clause provides that the company may have further securities. That does not go far enough, because you may prove to the company that ten per cent more security will be enough. He had better not borrow any money. If there is a large fire, and the company lost half a million dollars, they would be obliged to call in another forty per cent. There is the danger.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—That is rather an extreme case.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—But it happened a few years ago in Montreal as my hon. friend knows very well. When St. John and Chicago were burned, some of the companies in Montreal went under, and some of the banks had to pay up some of the calls of the Stadacona Company and another company.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think any difficulty can arise under this subsection of clause 8, because if the company have already taken the security which they are obliged by this section to take, and wish for further security from the borrower, they can take that security. They might take, as a sort of collateral security, endorsed notes or mortgages. It is in addition. The company does not lend anything further. They take these securities in addition to the securities which they are authorized to take by the preceding part of the clause.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I understand that quite well. But supposing you have $50,000 of stock and you have paid $10,000 and you go to the company and borrow $5,000 and then the company is suspicious, the company will tell you, "give us more security." I may be called to pay the on-call balance. I want you to give me $5,000 security. Well, if he gives a mortgage he might better borrow $5,000 on it and keep his stock in his name. If he gives a bond, he had better go and borrow on his bond and keep the stock in his name.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is at his discretion.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—He can do that if he likes.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—If you lend money on stock that is not all paid up, the company will have the privilege of calling for more security. I want to show that in calling for more securities, the man may just as well borrow on the very securities he would be called upon to give, and retain the stock. By asking more security it is in case the company is afraid that some more calls are going to be made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The company can take all the security they desire. If they take a certain amount of security, they may say, "We won't continue that; we want additional security." You cannot restrain them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this clause not intended to cover additional securities by way of chattel mortgages? Insurance companies are placed about in the same position as loan companies. They have securities on lands, and when there is default in the payment of interest, they ask for additional securities, and the additional security is often a chattel mortgage on the property the mortgagors have on the farm. It seems to me that is the intention of it. Paragraph c says:

> May lend its said funds or any portion thereof on bonds, stocks, debentures or any other securities mentioned in the subsection, except those mentioned in paragraph c of the subsection.

Then the next clause provides for the seeking and obtaining additional security on the money they have already lent for the purpose of securing unpaid interest. That is often done in loan companies when borrowers become defaulters in the payment of interest. I think that was the intention.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—There is no objection to that clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was not present at the discussion, but I know it was discussed for some time on the Loan Companies Bill, and it seemed to me to be the same principle. As to the silver dollar, the government has already provided for cases of that kind. If the invoice is purchased in any currency, that is below the standard value, it is at once reduced to the standard value.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the object of having the security taken in the name of any officer in the company?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I can explain. It is often a very great convenience and saves trouble, especially across the line, if you could do it with an officer of the company. We have to transfer bonds and stocks in the United States and it would not only save a great deal of inconvenience, but would cost a good deal less money if it could be done as provided for in this bill.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (40) "An Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, with respect to Combinations in Restraint of Trade."

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the committee, reported the bill without amendments.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (137) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the protection of Navigable Waters."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I propose to make an amendment in this bill, and change the depth of water into which ashes and refuse may be thrown from twelve fathoms to seven fathoms.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—That is just as bad.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The necessity of the bill has been apparent. Many of our rivers are filling up and we are spending hundreds of thousands annually to dredge them out. As an illustration of it, in taking away Nepean Point to carry the interprovincial bridge across, they deliberately dumped the rocks into the river. They were remonstrated with and the steamboat company made a complaint. It was not sawdust or we might have got at them, but being rocks, we were powerless to prevent it, and those rocks will now have to be taken out at the public expense. Complaints have come from all parts of Canada that the rivers are being destroyed. The depth of twelve fathoms seemed too great to hon. gentlemen, and it has been reduced to seven fathoms.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why does the hon. gentleman include ashes and cinders in this provision? It is not an unreasonable thing that a steamboat should dump its ashes at any place where there cannot be an accumulation of ashes and cinders.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, there is.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Supposing the steamship selects a particular spot to dump their ashes, would there be any objection?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The steamboats running from Quebec to Montreal have to be watched. One steamship has emptied sixty tons between Quebec and Montreal, and we have been spending large sums of money to clear that channel, and the steamers are now very carefully watched by the Marine Department, in order to prevent the ashes being deposited. There are particular points where the person in charge of the river point out to the steamboat man where the ashes can be deposited.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—If the hon. gentleman makes it seagoing ships, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All vessels.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Take the fresh water vessels, they do not deposit any such amount of ashes, yet they would come under this law, which is most unreasonable. Then, again, Canada does not own the whole of the St. Lawrence River; they cannot control the United States side of the river.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No vessel can deposit ashes on our side.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Take the St. Lawrence River down as far as Quebec, you will not find 42 feet at any point.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is three times that depth in Lake Ontario. The harbour masters in Quebec and Montreal look after deposits of rubbish in those ports, and there are officers between Montreal and Quebec who are constantly watching the steamers to prevent them dumping their ashes at various points. There are some places where the channel is narrow, and there are some steamers that come up the St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal who have dumped as high as sixty tons.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—If the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company's steamers coming down the rapids deposit their ashes they will be fined?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—There are very few places between Kingston and Montreal where there is 48 feet of water.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think there are many places.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It is well known that the ashes which steam yachts throw out do not amount to anything, and why should they come under this law? I think it is very unfair.

Hon. Mr SCOTT—It is very unfair to fill up the highways. We had at one time 20 feet of water in the Ottawa River where we now have only 6 feet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why did the government not carry out the law to prevent the obstruction of the river?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Why did not the former government carry out the law when they were in power?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am glad the government rises to the necessity of keeping the channels clear. Why do they not do it with the Ottawa River at the present time? We have a law on the statute-book forbidding the millowners depositing mill refuse in the Ottawa, but our river is now worse than it was. The government say they have no power and cannot enforce that law. Then, how can we expect them to enforce this law, which is supposed to be general, applying all over the Dominion? I hope they will take this matter in hand immediately and protect our rivers. I have been at this subject for fifteen years and I am glad the government are taking the initiative and are going to do what they should have done years ago. They have destroyed the Ottawa River. It will take years to put the river in its primitive state, if it ever can be done. I do not believe it can. When the contractors were constructing piers for the interprovincial bridge, they had 60 feet of sawdust to excavate and a very serious accident happened from an explosion of sawdust near McKay's Mill which almost resulted in loss of life. There was also a serious accident at Thurso from a similar cause. The government bring in this bill, which is objected to by some gentlemen because it is too stringent. I do not know whether it is too stringent or not, but I want our rivers kept as free as possible from injury. They have been injured in the past. We have lost our fish and the damage in every way has been incalculable. Every person connected with the Ottawa River can tell us that, and I have no doubt it is the same in other places. The depth of seven fathoms may be too much; I do not know as to that. The steamboat men should make some arrangement to get rid of their cinders and ashes. In the long run they will benefit by a rigid enforcement of the law, because it will keep the channels open and avoid the necessity of dredging and thereby save a great deal of expense. I think the government are entitled to credit for introducing this bill. They were a little tardy with it, but it is better late than never. I hope they will set to work immediately and prevent the further destruction of the Ottawa River with sawdust. The matter was brought up this session by the hon. member from British Columbia. I mentioned here that they told me the Act was then on the statute-book and could be enforced. I think there should be some one appointed to keep our rivers clear of this nuisance. No man can imagine what a nuisance it has been. I hope the government will set to work and enforce the law, no matter who suffers. They certainly have the power and they are responsible for the good government of the country.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I think the hon. gentleman from Rideau is very unfair. Does he consider that every one of these mills has nearly 500 votes connected with it, and a steamboat has only five or ten? And does he think that because the government have not exercised the law against the mill with 500 voters they will not come down on the smaller fry and punish them?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rather agree with the hon. gentleman from Rideau, and I think it would be a good idea to appoint some officer whose duty it would be to see that the law with respect to the protection of rivers is carried out. I do not know that there is any one in Canada who would fill that position better than the hon. gentleman himself, and I shall be prepared—although his politics are not of the right stripe—to use my influence to get him the appointment. I do not look at this question from the same point of view as the hon. gentleman from Sorel. It occurs to me, particularly when we consider that this law is to apply to the River St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, that instead of going too far it does not go far enough. A depth of 42 feet is not sufficient. There are steamers plying on the Atlantic which draw about 30 feet of water, and if a ship is allowed to deposit stone ballast on the bottom of the river where it is not more than 42 deep, and if half a dozen ships in succession deposit their ballast in the same place, you would not have the 30 feet. The depth should be not less than 8 fathoms. We have been called upon to spend money to keep the channel clear, and we will be called upon to spend more for the same purpose in the future, and I do not think that any one should be allowed to do anything which would interfere whith the channel. I would suggest that we make it eight fathoms instead of seven. The hon. gentleman seems to think that it is a cruel thing that the owner of a steamboat should not be allowed to dump ashes and cinders into the river almost anywhere. A river is simply a marine highway, and how would it be if we were to allow people passing along the road to dump their ashes along the highway. It comes to just the same thing, only you see the obstruction on the road, and you cannot see it under water.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—There is no law against that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, there is.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I would go further than that; I would not allow anybody to dump ballast, no matter how deep the water is; but to apply the law to cinders and ashes and rubblish—I think that is going too far. It is opening the door to blackmail. If by accident somebody drops rubbish overboard he may be fined $300.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I should like to know whether this bill repeals the Act passed some time ago for the protection of navigable waters and reduces the depth of water within which ballast or any rubbish can be thrown from 12 fathoms to 42 feet? If that is so, it is an unwise measure, indeed, so far as it applies to tidal water harbours. It would be injurious to every harbour in the maritimes provinces, to allow ballast, ashes or refuse of any kind to be deposited where the depth is only seven fathoms. At the present you cannot deposit anything of that kind in a harbour where there is less than 12 fathoms of water. In my opinion, it is a great mistake to reduce that from 12 fathoms to seven. If it is necessary to make a different law with respect to harbours which are not tidal waters, it should leave the restriction with regard to tidal waters as it is now, and not apply to them at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is perfectly right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentlemen who have just spoken have discussed the general question of protection of navigable waters; but when my hon. friend from Rideau Division says the government deserves credit for initiating a system of this kind, he seems to have forgotten the fact, that laws not so restrictive as this have been on the statute-book for years, and both governments have been responsible for not putting them in force. This bill is going altogether beyond the law on the statute-book, and if the government did not enforce a law less restrictive than this, is it at all likely they will enforce this one? The hon. gentleman from Halifax says that my hon. friend from Rideau would make a good officer to fill the position of inspector. It was only a short time ago that the hon. gentleman from Halifax stated that in a short time, by the course of nature, his friends would have a majority in this House, does he wish to hasten that time by advocating the appointment of my hon. friend from Rideau to a position that would give the government an opportunity of putting another supporter of the government in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Rideau is an independent member.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I commend the hon. gentleman for that mode of getting rid of one of the opponents of the government in this House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I thought this was a no-party House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was under that impression until the hon.

gentleman from Halifax drew that distinction, when he said the time was fast approaching, judging from the past, when his friends would have a majority in this House. Now, coming back seriously to the question we are discussing, supposing the cook on board a ship throws half a dozen pails of rubbish overboard, that is material thrown into a river or lake with less than 42 feet in depth of water, or a fireman throws a pail of ashes into a lake or river where there is not that depth of water—which they would have to prove, I suppose—and he is dismissed for some cause or other, he can enter a complaint against the company that dismissed him of having violated the provisions of the Act. It would render the company responsible under the law. I am satisfied that we are placing on the statute-book an impracticable law, which the government will never enforce, except at the instance of some blackguard, who may enter a complaint against his employers, when, perhaps, he has been very properly dismissed. That would probably be the result of placing this bill on the statute-book. If it be correct that this is to apply to the river between Montreal and Quebec——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It applies everywhere.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know that, but if the intention be to make the provisions of this Act apply to the river between Montreal and Quebec, and if rubbish is thrown where the eddies form a bar it might impede navigation. If that be so, confine it to that, but if you pass the bill in its present shape every private yacht on the Bay of Quinté will be subject to penalties, if the fireman happens to throw a pail of ashes into the bay. There are very few places in the whole length of that bay where there is forty-two feet of water. The Ontario and Richelieu Company, through a good deal of pressure on the part of those living on that bay, have put a steamer on the route via the Murray Canal, and during the whole length of that bay, one hundred miles, if they throw a pail of ashes overboard they are subject to this penalty. No matter how deep, whether tidal or non-tidal a harbour is I would prevent throwing rubbish into it. There must be a law in the statute-book which prevents the distruction of the Ottawa River.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is, but it cannot be enforced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you say rubbish which impedes navigation, everybody would support it. I remember a great many years ago, when they used to dump the coal, which was used as ballast in the English ships, in Quebec harbour. I remember distinctly hearing my father talk about it. To-day they would not be allowed to do it. This bill is of such a character, and the language is so broad, that it subjects every yacht owner who comes into the Bay of Quinté and throws a pail of ashes into the water, to penalties.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You cannot make a law with exceptions to it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But in this case you can.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island is a very good one. I would, therefore, leave the original law as it is, so far as tidal waters are concerned, and add a paragraph that in any other navigable water, where there is not at least eight fathoms of water at any time, this dumping of ashes will not be permitted. If you are to protect the rivers of Canada this must be done. There is not alternative; you cannot help it. There are many places between Toronto and Montreal where there would be a greater depth than eight fathoms. Take the case my hon. friend suggested, going through the Murray Canal. Before boats enter there, they could empty in Lake Ontario. There are many places where the depth is 150 feet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The owners of yachts do not know that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You cannot draw the line for this vessel or that vessel, if we are going to protect the rivers, we must do it in earnest. If that were not the feeling of the House I would ask the committee to rise.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why not add the words "which would impede navigation."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You cannot.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In Quebec harbour, by the regulations of the commissioners, there is a place where rubbish can be deposited.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill does not interfere with such places.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because they point out the places in the harbours of Quebec and Montreal.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is not eight fathoms of water there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, a great deal more.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is not five fathoms.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So far as the harbours of Quebec and Montreal are concerned, the Harbour Commissioners look after them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—With that law, how will marine closets work on board ship?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law will work satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then the owners of vessels with such closets, will be sued.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Let them be sued.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I would suggest that the words "ashes and cinders" be expunged.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would not consent to that. I have given absolute proof of one case where sixty tons of ashes have been dumped from a vessel in the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—But you do not want for that reason to prosecute those who simply throw a pail of ashes out?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There cannot be any exception made.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—We may at any time be subject to this penalty then?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not a law which is likely to be enforced unless there is some gross violation of it.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Then I propose to take the sense of the House upon it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The better way would be to leave the law as it stands, and add a paragraph dealing entirely with the non-tidal waters.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is what I suggested.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Marine and Fisheries Department could, in the meantime, see if they could do anything towards meeting the views of the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLE—The bill, as I understand it, applies to all navigable rivers. There is the River St. John, from St. John to Fredericton, sixty-four miles, and I venture to say that above the first twelve miles from St. John, the balance of the sixty miles, there is not 25 feet of water anyway. Does the government intend to dredge the river all the way through and make it 42 feet.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLE—What is to be done with regard to that? You say 42 feet of water. At the Oromocto shoals they have been dredging there for years and there is ten feet of water yet, and in several other places it is the same.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They will have to carry this rubbish until they get to a deep place to dump it.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Then they will have to take soundings.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Why not, if the navigation is going to be impeded? A has a right to use a river, but he has no right to make it impossible for B to use it. If you permit every vessel that is navigating any of our inland rivers the privilege of dumping refuse incident to the vessel wherever they may please on the line of navigation, it is only a question of time when our rivers will be rendered unnavigable. The law against dumping sawdust into the river has not been enforced, perhaps, because you are fighting a powerful combination—men of great influence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is well to tell the truth.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend knows right well that that is so. But you have undertaken to legislate against it. Parliament has expressed its disapprobation of the practise of throwing sawdust into the river by what it has done. Now, it is not asking too much of those men who want to use the river to find some other way of disposing of their sawdust without destroying the river for fishing and navigation purposes. The duty in that regard that you impose upon the lumbermen in the interests of the ship owners, and in the interest of the fishermen, may very well be imposed upon the steamboat man to prevent him from injuring the river to the detriment of his fellow navigator. Every one knows that between Toronto and Montreal it is easy to find places in which to get rid of the ashes and rubbish of a vessel, without undertaking to deposit them in places where the water is less than eight fathoms in depth. There is no difficulty in that. It is an imaginary one. They may carry the ashes a little further than they would otherwise carry them if they were at liberty to throw them overboard where they pleased, but that is all. Supposing you have a steamboat ferry, and the ferry is running across the river where the water is barely deep enough for its navigation; and supposing the ferry man were to come here and put up the same plea that my hon. friend has with regard to navigation, he would fill up the river where he is ferrying from one side to the other and we would have to put an appropriation every year in the estimates for the purpose of undoing that which you say he ought to have a right to do. It is not unreasonable to say. It is true it may be an inconvenience to you to deposit your ashes somewhere else than in the river, but you are navigating at a place where it is barely deep enough for navigation, and you can easily employ a drayman or others to carry your rubbish to some point on shore. When you are coming into a harbour and navigating waters barely deep enough for navigation, you can do the same thing that all firemen ought to do if the river is of such a depth as to require caution of that sort. I do not see that my hon. friend would suffer very much, or that it would be very much of a burden on ship owners if they were required, where the necessity arises to deposit their ashes on shore altogether. My hon. friend can give us an estimate of the cost and show whether that would be an unreasonable thing or not.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I understood the Secretary of State to say that he knew of 60 tons of ashes to be dumped at one time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I should like to have an explanation of that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One of the incoming steamers. It was stated to me by the Minister of Marine.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Was it a seagoing vessel?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, a vessel coming up the St. Lawrence. She opened all her bunkers at one time.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—They ought to be fined heavily for doing that. That, of course, would not apply to fresh water between Toronto and Kingston. They would not have any such quantity to empty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It is a rule always observed on board vessels that no man shall throw ashes or refuse overboard where there is shallow water. It would be well to put a notice on board a steamer that they shall not do so, because no man, if he is sensible, will want to interfere with navigation by throwing refuse overboard. The difficulty might be easily got over in that way. I have run boats for years, and I know I always gave instructions to my men to be sure not to put refuse overboard except into deep water. That rule is well understood and ought to be observed all over our fresh water navigation, whether on the St. Lawrence or anywhere else. Of course, where we burn coal altogether it is much more injurious than when we were burning wood. Wood ashes would not be thrown overboard; they would be sold, because ashes are a good fertilizer. But cinders from coal, when thrown overboard in shallow water, create a bank injurious to navigation. It is a rule among marine men not to allow any of their employees to throw refuse overboard where it is going to injure navigation. I should be very sorry to see steamboat hands allowed to throw rubbish overboard wherever they choose to do so. We have destroyed the navigation of some of our rivers, but that is about stopped now, and I hope there will be no more of it done in this country. In some places they still allow sawdust to be thrown into the rivers, and in some places they do not, but I hope the public will see their way to prevent it, so as to leave our navigation free. It kills the fish also, but that is the smallest part of the injury.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company built a new steamer in Toronto last year at a cost of a quarter million dollars. That vessel throws the ashes out the whole time by steam. Under this bill we would be obliged to stop that now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—We are trying to improve the system of navigation, and surely a steamer throwing her ashes out all the time while she is running would not affect navigation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It depends on how many there are of them.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—We burn sixty tons of coal every twenty-four hours. That does not make many tons of ashes. It is scattered all the way from Toronto to Montreal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the sixty tons deposit, to which the hon. gentleman referred, could not possibly be cinders or ashes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it was.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is never supposed for a moment that a vessel running in inland waters will care to accumulate sixty tons of ashes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing the vessel was lightly ballasted, she might carry it as ballast until she got to quiet water.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And wait until they got into the St. Lawrence to dispose of it?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I undertake to assert that it was ballast that was thrown into the river. That should be stopped at all hazards, no matter where it is.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It should not be allowed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suggest to put the words "stone, gravel or refuse of that kind," and strike out the word "ashes." I would not strike out the words "cinders," because cinders will sink, but ashes will float.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Coal ashes will sink.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If they are scattered continually over the lake, they can do no harm. Of course, the device to which the hon. gentleman from Sorel (Mr. Forget) referred is a good labour saving machine on a steamer. I would add the words "stone and rubbish of a like character." I scarcely know what the language in the clause would cover. It might cover the kitchen refuse, orange and lemon peel, &c.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman would change the law as it has stood for many years. That is in the law now. There are only a few words changed in this paragraph.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that be the case, you do not want this bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As the law now stands it applies to tidal waters only, and the object of the department is to extend its operation to non-tidal waters, and in order to do that the bill proposes to reduce the depth. The hon. gentleman from Charlottetown (Mr. Macdonald) takes a very proper objection, that the depth in tidal waters now is not too great, and that it would be improper to allow ballast to be deposited in the harbours in the maritime provinces where there is only seven fathoms of water. The suggestion now is that we leave the existing law as it stands and add a paragraph which will deal solely with non-tidal waters. It occurs to me that there might be some provision of this sort inserted in the bill. As it is now the harbour masters who have charge of the various harbours, select certain places where vessels can deposit their ballast, ashes and rubbish. In the non-tidal waters the Department of Marine and Fisheries, or some officer, might be allowed to select places where steamers could drop their cinders and rubbish.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—What about the rubbish from the kitchen and the sweepings of the boat?

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a matter which the officers of the department have more to do with than we have, and ought to understand better, but I think there might be some provision inserted to authorize the department to select places where ashes and refuse may be deposited.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That would not apply to the device that the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Forget) mentioned.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The owners of steamers, by giving proper instructions and setting up notices will prevent the practice. If the owners of vessels violate the law in any shape, they should be punished. The man who deposited 60 tons of ashes in the St. Lawrence, in place of being fined ought to have been imprisoned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He was punished for it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What punishment did he get? A fine of a few dollars I suppose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The penalty is not exceeding $300, and not less than $20.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The masters and owners of vessels, if they are properly instructed, will not permit a violation of the law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Secretary of State has given as a reason for amending this law, that one vessel deposited 60 tons of ashes in the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave an illustration here of the sawdust also.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Let us dispose of the first case. That was in tidal waters?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not tidal above Three Rivers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend said it was below Quebec.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said it was between Montreal and Quebec.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it is in tidal waters, it is covered by law, and the punishment should be inflicted. I understand from the hon. gentleman that the man was punished.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, in that particular case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. gentleman tell us who it was?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Gourdeau was my authority. In describing the filling up of the river, he mentioned this one case. He mentioned the name of the vessel; I did not attach importance to the name of the man. I also mentioned a case in the Ottawa here, a few hundred yards from where we are sitting.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We admit that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We want the name of the man who was punished for depositing sixty tons of ashes in the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the case of the Ottawa, the injury to navigation has been caused by sawdust. Remove this first and then you will have no difficulty. You could put all the ashes you liked under this law, where they have sunk the piers. The hon. gentleman told us that in putting down the foundation of one of the piers for the interprovincial bridge they found sixty feet of sawdust: if so, there would be a place to deposit all the ashes and cinders that would accumulate in this city for many years. I think this is placing a law on the statute-book which will never be carried out, and if it is carried out it will be by some malicious employée who may have been dismissed, and will apply to yachts which carry very little coal, and the ashes from which would not affect any harbour.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think the River St. Lawrence down to and below Quebec should be considered non-tidal waters.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—It is a difficult matter to know how to arrange this matter, and my hon. friend beside me has suggested one thing. If there was an ill tempered magistrate, who had some spite against his neighbour, which is quite possible in some places, if that neighbour's boy pitched a stone into the river he could be fined $300.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Or if a man on board ship got sea sick, he could be fined for depositing rubbish in the water.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Oh, no, I think not. It may be very annoying, but I think the law is very necessary, and you could not get a greater example of it than you have here in the Ottawa River. Talk about fishing, that is all past, but the navigation has been endangered and certainly between Montreal and Quebec, every inch is wanted. We ought to have two and a half feet more than we have at present It is very hard to get the law in a proper shape, but I can say if any person wanted to annoy the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company he could put them to a great deal of trouble if that law was enforced.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I hope that the hon. Secretary of State will not introduce anything like class legislation here. I consider a pailful of ashes coming from a small boat is just as injurious as a pailful coming from a large steamer. The device described by the hon. gentleman from Sorel might do very well in the Atlantic, where there is plenty of water, but I think it is an injurious thing with reference to the shallow rivers. No such thing is allowed in our canals?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it is not.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Then the hon. gentleman's steamers are not situated in a worse position than the canal boats. The little ferry boats and steamers should be compelled to do the same, and we should make the law permanent and applicable to all classes. There are many navigable rivers in the lower provinces, where if sixty tons of ballast or ashes were thrown into the river, it would have the effect of diverting the course of the stream and making a new channel, because we know rubbish thrown out accumulates other dirt and forms little mounds, and thus navigation is impeded. I do not think the government can take too great care of our navigable waters, so as to save the enormous expenditure which this country is put to every year for dredging, which will continue as long as this is permitted.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the bill and asked leave to sit again on Wednesday next.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (B) "An Act to amend the Exchequer Court Act."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 3.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The first two clauses of this bill have been carried. Exception was taken to clause three, because it related to past transactions. I will just turn to the section in the Act as it now stands, chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1899. If hon. gentlemen will look at clause three in the Act as it now stands, they will see the changes I propose to make. It reads:

If the injury to any land or property alleged to be injuriously affected by the construction of any public work may be removed wholly, or in part, by any alteration in or addition to such public work, or by the construction of any additional work.

Up to that point I think the section in the Act and this clause are the same, but the Act as it is now in force reads:

And the Crown by its pleadings at the trial undertakes to make such alteration or addition, or to construct such work, the damages shall, so far as the future is concerned, be assessed in view of such undertaking, and the court shall declare that in addition to any damages awarded, the claimant is entitled to have such alteration or addition made or such work constructed.

The words that are new in the bill begin after "public work" in the 4th line of the 3rd clause.

Or by the construction of any additional work or by the abandonment of any portion of the lands taken from the claimant or by the grant to him of any land or easement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that all that is new?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The rest is exactly the same as in the original down to the last line, "or such grant made to him."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The words "or before judgment" are not in the Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But I struck those words out when we were discussing it before. I propose to strike out the words "or before judgment" and to retain the words "so far as the future is concerned."

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—That would not apply to anything in the past.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It would not apply to anything in the past any more than the present law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This, it seems to me, is predicated upon the assumption that the clause in the Expropriation Act becomes law; because the clause of the Expropriation Act, which was struck out when we were in committee before, gives power to take the lands, as indicated in the Exchequer Court Act, and if the one be not passed, this is not necessary, unless it is an indirect way of giving to the Exchequer Court the power which we refuse to give to the government in dealing with the lands expropriated. That, to my mind, is clear enough. The Expropriation Act asked for certain powers and privileges which the Senate, when in committee, refused to grant. The clause was struck out, I take it for granted, that if we go back into committee on this bill we shall have to commence where we left off. That is the clause giving them power to expropriate. Not having that power this clause is unnecessary. That is where we left off the discussion before. It will be remembered that the Senate took the ground that, as the law amending the Exchequer Court Act was predicated and founded upon the Expropriation Act, the Expropriation Bill should be dealt with before we dealt with the Exchequer Court Act. The hon. gentleman is just reversing the whole thing again. There is precisely the same principle involved in these two bills that there was in the bills for the leasing of the Grand Trunk Railway and the purchase of the Drummond County Railway. The Drummond County Bill was placed upon the order paper first. When the Senate took objection to considering the bills in that way, the minister very properly said "Very well, we will decide the question of leasing from the Grand Trunk, first, because if we do not lease that, then we do not want the Drummond County Railway," and after the Senate had consented to the agreement made with the Grand Trunk, after an amendment had been made to it, then they considered the other bill, and the Senate took the precaution, at the suggestion of my hon. friend from Calgary, to add a clause declaring that the Drummond County purchase should not be effective until the Grand Trunk shareholders had approved of the amendments which had been made to their lease. Are these two bills not precisely in the same position? The government ask for certain powers of expropriation. We have denied that already by striking out that clause of the Expropriation Bill when in committee before. My hon. friend comes down with the proposition we had before to give the Exchequer Court power to deal with the provisions contained in that clause which we rejected.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. My hon. friend will see that I propose a very important amendment to this.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not sufficient.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And then, when we come to the other, we could consider that again. I propose to strike out the words "or before judgment" and to add "so far as the future is concerned." I propose to drop the 4th clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Personally I object to giving the power to the government, even in the future, to take lands and hold them for a time and then return them or some other lands. We object to placing the power in any one, to take a man's property and hold it for two or three years, and then abandon it, or give the court the power even to compensate him for it. Once the land has been expropriated and taken from the individual, the Crown can afford, even if they do not want it, to suffer a loss better than the individual can; besides the individual, in a case of that kind, is placed at the mercy of the officers of the Crown, and knowing, as I do, what some officers of the Crown are in cases of this kind, it is placing a very dangerous power in their hands.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When the House was going into committee on this question, my hon. friend, the leader of the House, will remember quite well that I called his attention to the very point that the hon. leader of the opposition is now making, and that he then acquiesced in that view and put the Expropriation Bill first and the Exchequer Court Bill second on the orders, so that we went into committee in the order that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition now suggests. That is the course which we should be pursuing now. We are now in committee proposing to give certain powers to the Exchequer Court in relation to a matter we have not yet determined upon. We have not yet decided that we will pass the clause in the Expropriation

Bill, which is the true cause for all this legislation, the second clause of the Bill "D" which I think should be decided first. If we were in committee on the other bill, I would be prepared to give my views on it, but I suppose I would not be in order now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was struck out before.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. leader of the opposition says that his objection to the third clause is that the amendments do not go far enough, and that he is opposed altogether to giving the government power to consider, after they once expropriate lands, whether they will hold them temporarily or permanently; that the land taken once is finally disposed of. I wish to call attention to section 5 of the Expropriation Act, which gives the government that power now with regard to certain things.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Then why do we require it again?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It does not give it as to the principal point I wish this to apply to. The section reads:

Whenever any gravel, stone, earth, sand or water is taken, as aforesaid, at a distance from a public work, the minister may lay down the necessary sidings, water pipes, conduits or tracks over or through any land intervening between the public works and the land on which such material or water is found, whatever the distance is; and all the provisions of this Act such as relate to the filing of plans and descriptions shall apply and may be exercised, and so on. And such right be acquired for a term of years, or permanently, as the minister thinks proper, and the powers in this section contained may at all times be exercised in all respects after the public work is constructed, for the purpose of repairing and maintaining the same.

Hon. gentlemen will see that we are not introducing any new principles, and we are not asking Parliament to confer upon us a power that is new. We are simply asking, with regard to the expropriation of property that may turn out to be only in part required, that we shall have the power to restore it, just the same as we have the power to retain it permanently, or that we may retain a piling ground for the purpose of piling quarry stone or timber or anything of that sort upon, and hold it for a number of years and restore it again. We have that power now.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Then you do not require it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, because we have it for certain purposes now and I wish to acquire it for an additional purpose. It is not introducing a new principle; it is not making the law different from what it was in principle.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Extending it?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, to a new case, and I mention this matter because it is a matter of very considerable consequence. Supposing I were to expropriate five acres of land, and it turned out I only required the half of it, that we could do with half of it, we are not putting the man in a worse position if we restore half of it to him again, but if retaining the two and a half acres does him as much damage as two-thirds of what the original amount would have done him, the court decides that. The government have no power to decide, it is the court. It is taking no new power; no new principle is introduced at all.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes, but the government have it all on their side. They can say when they want it and when they can leave it alone.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I think if you have that power now, it is a power no government in the world should have. If the government want to expropriate property let them come and expropriate it. That is a right they possess which other people have not. But that they should take it and keep it as long as it suits them, and then give it back, I think would be most unrighteous and unfair, and if I am correct there is no such right possessed by the government of Great Britain. Let the government do just as I have to do, go and buy the land, or lease it, or make a bargain for it the best way they can. If the government require my house, or any other property, they have the right to take it, but to give them the right to say that they shall have possession of my property for two years, or five years, and give it back, looks monstrous.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We can do that now.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The government should not have the right to do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing you find a quarry two miles away from your work. You are building a line of railway and you give now to the government power to expropriate a road to the quarry, and you give to the government the power of saying whether they will restore that to the party or not. If you give to the government the power to expropriate ten acres for a road leading from a highway to a quarry, and you give them the power of saying whether they will hold that in fee or by a lease, you give them the power to say whether they will hold it for ever or for two years, or five years as the case may be. You have done that already and it does not matter to me, if I am a land owner, whether the government are taking the land for a road or some other purpose, it is all the same. There is no difference in principle between taking it for a road and taking it for a quarry.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Why oblige the owner to take it back, more than anybody else?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Why should the government pay for more than they require?

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Then they should not take it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We are discussing the Expropriation Bill and not the Exchequer Court Bill.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The hon. Minister of Justice began discussing it.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—He read section 5 of the Expropriation Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Every hon. gentleman knows that the strong objection to this bill and to the companion bill was that it was felt by a majority of the members of this House that they were directed at two cases one of which was before the court—in fact, I think both were before the court—and at that time the majority of this House were willing to pass the bill if there was a provision in it that it should not apply except to the future.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Not this bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman allow me to call attention to the fact that when this Exchequer Court Bill was in committee before, I made a motion that clause 3 be struck out, and that the motion was carried. The only course is to move for a reconsideration of that clause before we go any further.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is what I was doing.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If this bill, in the form in which it is amended by the minister, is satisfactory to the committee, I think the balance of convenience is in favour of reporting the bill and setting it down for third reading on Thursday, and the House need not read it if the other bill does not pass.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The first thing the hon. gentleman did do was to move to reconsider the bill. That clause has been struck out and it is, therefore, not before the committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I thought the committee had decided to reconsider it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no. I certainly object to it. The doctrine laid down by the hon. Minister of Justice is that he has the power now to expropriate any man's property, that is, if it be necessary to secure access to that property, the law gives them power to say to the owner of the land, "You must allow us to pass over your land to get at the property expropriated." That is all the power that is given, and it is very proper that they should have that power, because having expropriated property, they must have the means of reaching it, and as soon as they have done working the quarry, then the land reverts back to the owner on the payment of such damages as he may be entitled to for the use of the land for that road.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The lands may belong to other parties altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is quite true, and you may take it for the purpose of having access to the property and for piling grounds in the meantime. Once you have done with the quarrying of the stone, and you no longer want it for a piling ground, the party from whom you have taken it for that purpose knows that it is coming back to him; but the length to which the hon. gentleman wishes to go is this: that the department should be allowed to go on a man's land and take, for instance, three or five acres for a quarry, and then after a year or two—because there is no limit to the time—return it. The officers of the department are not as particular as my hon. friend, or any private individual, would be, in such matters, and they could arrogate to themselves the right to take whatever portion of the land they liked and return the balance to the owner. After having kept it for some time and injured the owner thereby, the government would be in a position to say, "You can have this land back, or we will give you other land in exchange for it." That proposition is one that should not be accepted. If my hon. friend's motion is to reconsider I shall feel it my duty to vote against the reconsideration.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is the bill from which the clause was struck out.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—This is Bill D, on which the House went into committee. The minutes show that the clause was struck out and that the committee rose.

The CHAIRMAN—The motion before the committee is that the third clause be reconsidered.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman pursues this course. The Bill D to amend the Expropriation Act should certainly have been dealt with first, so that we would know whether we were going to give this power to abandon lands, or reinvest them in the owners, before providing the machinery in the Exchequer Court for the purpose of carrying it out. For my own part, although my views may not agree with those of my hon. friends with whom I usually act, I am willing to give the government power to abandon lands, or reinvest them. It is done in the Railway Act, and although I am told the power is not as great here as it is in England, I am in favour of it, but I am opposed to placing the Exchequer Court Act in the shape for dealing with the new manner of expropriation before we have decided to pass that form of expropriation, and I should not certainly vote for this clause until we decide what to do with the Expropriation Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not a matter of the slightest consequence to me what the order is. Of course, if we defeat the principle in one bill, it is not my intention to proceed with the other. I find in the city of St. John that the city of St. John Railway and Bridge Company have a track which interferes with the improvement of the harbour, and building docks there, and there is no provision in the law for the government expropriating the property of a railway company. That is absolutely necessary, or the public works must be stopped there, and I propose, if we carry this clause, also to amend the other bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To what bill is the hon. gentleman referring?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Expropriation Bill I am referring to now. I propose to move the following:

Paragraph (f) of section 3 of the Expropriation Act, being chapter 13 of the statutes of 1889, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

(f.) Alter the course of any river, canal, brook, stream or watercourse, and divert or alter, as well temporarily as permanently, the course of any rivers, streams of water (railways), roads, streets or ways, or raise or sink the level of the same, in order to carry them over or under, on the level of, or by the side of the public work, as he thinks proper, but before discontinuing or altering any (railway or) public road, (or any portion thereof) he shall (substitute) another convenient (railway or) road in lieu thereof; (and in such case the owner of such railway or road shall take over the substituted railway or road, in mitigation of damages, if any claimable by him under this Act,) and the land heretofore used for (any railway or) road, or (the part of a road) so discontinued, may be transferred by the minister to and shall thereafter become the property of, the owner of the land of which it originally formed a part.

The provisions of this section are retroactive and shall apply to past as well as to future transactions.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is that proposed as an amendment to the Exchequer Court Act?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, of the Expropriation Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why not deal with the Expropriation Act?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Because the principle is exactly the same.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would be an amendment to the Expropriation Act. If there are interests such as the hon. gentleman indicates, I do not see any particular objection to that, but that is a vastly different principle from the one we have been discussing, and when we come to the Expropriation Act we can discuss it. I might say with reference to the Exchequer Court Act, with which we are now dealing, speaking for myself, I am in favour of the first and second clauses. I think they give a power which the government should have, particularly in a country similar to ours. Sending a judge into the province of Quebec for instance, where the judge trying a case should have a full knowledge of the French language. It might be not only necessary, but justice and equity might demand that they should select one who understands the language of the people and send him there under the circumstances. That I do not think can be objected to. As to the other clause, it ought to be struck out.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not understand how this bill has come up a second time. As I understand, when the bill was before the House on the previous occasion, the committee rose without reporting, and it was stated at the time that that killed the bill for the present session.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It did not kill the bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I think we are a little out of order in taking it up now. How does it happen to come up again? Because I see in looking at the official report of the debates, that Sir Mackenzie Bowell said:

> Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) move that the committee rise without reporting?
> Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I do.
> Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All right, then you kill your bill.

Now, if that was the case, how is it that the bill comes up a second time?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Because I had the right to restore the bill to the order paper. I gave notice; I reserved to myself the right whether I should revive this bill or introduce a new one.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When this bill was before the House for consideration in May last, I expressed myself as very much opposed to the principle in clause three, which is now under consideration. At that time I expressed a desire, so far as my humble efforts could do so, to assist the government in securing such legislation as was absolutely necessary, in the public interest, to meet the difficulty which then seemed to exist, but I must confess that the amendments which have been proposed this afternoon do not seem to me to alter the case. The mere striking out of the words "after judgment" only alters, to a very slight degree, the time when the government may exercise the right which they now seek to exercise, so that it is a case which, I might say, would never occur—that is, exercising the right between trial and the date of judgment—because it would be only reasonable to suppose, if the government comes down to trial, it will have then exhausted all negotiation, and if it is raised before the issue is tried out, viz., in the interval between trial and judgment, the course would not be pursued by the government of tendering back the land to the individual. It does not make any practical difference.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There might be an understanding between the government and the party that might be affirmed in the judgment. That would be all. I do not think that is of any importance though.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The difficulties we saw in the way at that time seemed not to be in any way involved in the words "or before judgment." The other amendments are the law of the land to-day, so far as the future is concerned. I attach no importance to that. You have to pay damages. You could not release yourself from any damages which up to that point, you had caused. The difficulty I see in the way is this: I understand certain litigation is pending by reason of the government having expropriated certain land. I take the ground, and very seriously, that this proposed amendment would seriously imperil the rights which those parties are entitled to at the present time. I hazard the opinion that the government, if this clause passed, would have the right to exercise all the rights now sought in reference to matters which are now pending before the Exchequer Court and which have not been tried. If that be the case, I think the sense of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice would protest against altering the rights of those who are now before the courts for trial of those rights. I point that out in all seriousness, and submit that whatever amendment is brought down here and we are invited to consider, should be of such a character as to in no way interfere with rights now in litigation.

The motion to reconsider was lost on a division.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved that the 4th clause be struck out, as the House had not considered that clause on the previous occasion.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Justice to bring down for consideration such an amendment to the Expropriation Act as that of which he speaks. I do not think it would be objectionable and if there is any necessity to amend the Exchequer Court Act, I do not think any serious objection would be taken to it.

Hon Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the bill was objected to largely on the grounds that I mention, and I amended it largely in accordance with that objection. The hon. gentleman also mentions another objection—the objection to include present litigation. I am unable to see the force of that view, and therefore I am not at the present moment proposing to frame an amendment to meet the hon. gentleman's suggestion. I will consider the matter, however, and I ask that the committee rise and report the bill as amended. I shall, between this and the third reading, consider whether it will be possible to frame an amendment in the direction which the hon. gentleman suggests.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it would be better to let the hon. gentleman frame the amendment himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman consent to put the amendment which he has just read upon the notice paper, so that we can consider it in case we go into committee on Bill D?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As I heard it, I do not think it is objectionable.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, from the committee, reported the bill as amended.

The Senate adjourned.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the third reading of Bill (40) "An Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, with respect to Combinations in Restraint of Trade."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not propose to divide the Senate on this question, but I think by striking out the words "unlawfully" and "unduly" from the law as it now stands, we make it far too comprehensive and affect too many innocent people, and the words as they stand at present would embrace a great many persons who might combine for perfectly innocent purposes.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I quite agree with you.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Committee of the Whole House on Bill (D) "An Act to amend the Expropriation Act."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL said: I understood the hon. gentleman yesterday to say, that unless the other bill was passed he did not intend to proceed with this measure.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I did not say anything of that sort.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman propose to proceed with this amendment of which he has given notice?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was going to suggest that it would be better to allow that amendment to stand for a day at least, so that those who would be most interested in the railways of the country would have an opportunity of seeing it. I do not know whether my hon. friend has communicated with the railway companies, or whether he has taken this step on his own responsibility, but as it affects all the railways in the Dominion, we should move carefully when we interfere with interests of that kind. It has suggested itself to me that if it be necessary in order to enable them to deal with the harbour improvements in the city of St. John, to which reference was made yesterday, and that if the present short railway interferes with that public improvement, it would be much better to take special power to do that than to make a general law—that is, to put upon the statute-book a general Act to cover everything when it is only intended to meet a special case. I throw out that suggestion to the hon. gentleman. I do not know what other cases there may be, nor can I understand why the provisions of this clause as it reads are to be made retroactive. If there are any other cases that will be affected by this bill with which they have not been able to deal, the hon. minister might inform us.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Those words are intended to refer to the case of St. John exclusively.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that the government has already expropriated, or attempted to expropriate that railway, and finding they have not the power, they introduce this provision for this purpose?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. My hon. friend knows that when the bill was being considered I gave this case as an illustration of the necessity of the power we sought to obtain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is when the hon. gentleman gave notice of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, in May last. If the hon. gentleman desires the bill to stand until to-morrow or next day, I have no objections. It is desirable, as the session is drawing to a close, not to delay longer than is necessary. My hon. friend refers to the clause being general. I think it is a power the government should have. I do not know why a railway should stand, with regard to the paramount power of the Crown, in a different position from any other property holder in the country. If the interests of the public, so to speak, and a railway company come in conflict, I know no reason why a government should not have power to expropriate just as much as they would in the case of any private property holder; otherwise you are putting the railway on the same footing as the Crown. That never could be intended anywhere within the British Dominion. I am not aware whether there is any case immediately pressing upon the attention of the Railway Department, except the case of St. John, but it is a power that certainly cannot do any harm. The railways are always sufficiently powerful to take care of themselves, and unless the government really need to make the expropriation, it is never likely to interfere with a railway corporation in this regard. So that instead of coming to Parliament every time it may be thought necessary, it would be better to have the clause in the general terms as it stands.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I presume this is the first case where the necessity of having such a power came under the notice of the Railway Department. The hon. gentleman in his remarks did not give us any explanation of why this is to be made retroactive, so far as it affects the St. John case. It is well that we should have all the information, so that we can intelligently consider it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know, but my impression is that there was a contract for the improvement in the St. John harbour let, and there is also the improvement being carried on, which, when completed, would cross this railway, and these words, no doubt, in the opinion of the Minister of Railways, were thought necessary to cover the Act of the department at the present moment, because the work is going on, although the expropriation has not formally taken place. Instead of making a contract with the parties and agreeing to accept a property upon whatever terms they choose to dictate, the government prefers to exercise the general power of expropriation, and have the value of the property fixed in the ordinary way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After you have failed to make an arrangement. If the statement made by the hon.

gentleman be correct, then the Railway Department must have encroached on the property of the railway company, and it is absolutely necessary that you give the law a retroactive effect for the purpose of covering it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That may or may not be so. In all probability it may be so. We say we can shift your line a little further back than where it is at present located, and can thereby provide you a line in every way as convenient as the one you now have, and it is necessary, in the public interest, to remove your line somewhat further back than where it is now placed in order that the harbour improvements may be such as to make St. John a trans-atlantic port. These people, as I understand it, refuse to deal except on terms that are so exorbitant that it would be better to abandon the work than grant them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the name of the company?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The St. John Railway and Bridge Company, I believe. This bill takes away no rights. It leaves the courts to fix the value as in ordinary cases.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That law allows the government to take a public road, and there is no reason why it should not apply to a railway in the same way. The objection before taken to this measure was that it was believed to be intended to affect one or two cases which, if not pending in court, were at any rate in dispute, and it has occurred to me, while there is no use in asking the Senate to reverse its decision upon that point, that further consideration must have shown hon. gentlemen that it is really desirable and almost necessary that the government should have the powers which are set forth in this bill, and it has also occurred to me, that possibly the Minister of Justice might make some amendment to the bill to provide that it should not apply to those cases which are now in dispute, and that as to the future, at any rate, the bill might be allowed to pass.

The order was postponed.

BOUNTIES ON STEEL AND IRON BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (161) "An Act respecting bounties on steel and iron made in Canada." He said:—It would look as if the bounties on steel and iron had come to stay, for some time at all events. Hon. gentlemen will remember that in the year 1894, a policy was adopted in this country of granting a bounty on pig iron, and what is called puddled bar iron and steel billets. That was to continue for a period of five years. Under the stimulus given to that branch of industry by offering these bounties, a number of companies were formed in Canada, and a considerable amount of money was expended in putting up smelters at various points. When the five years was shortly to expire, they hesitated about putting in the full amount of capital that they had originally contemplated, and so they asked for an extension. As hon. gentlemen will remember, in 1897, an extension was granted for another five years. It is now thought that the only way in which you can terminate the system of bounties is by adopting a sliding scale at the expiration of the present term, and giving the parties timely notice that the bounties will be reduced on a scale that will enable them propably to sustain themselves after a period of another five years. At present the bounties will be continued on the same basis that they have existed upon for some years. The time would expire in 1902, and it is proposed to continue the present bounties until then. The following year the bounties to be paid will be 90 per cent of that paid at the present time.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—They have an extension beyond 1902 for five years. Is that what we are to understand?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The five years will expire in 1902, and it is proposed to continue the bounties on a reduced scale for another five years. The first of these five years, that is 1903, the proportion to be paid will be 90 per cent of that now paid. In 1904 the proportion will be 75 per cent; in 1905 it will be 55 per cent; in 1906 it will be 35 per cent, and in 1907, when it will terminate, five years from 1902, it will be 20 per cent. It is hoped that before that period arrives the business will be on such a substantial basis that it will be enabled to live without any further assistance from the public exchequer.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I hope so, but I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—How will iron manufactured from Newfoundland ore be benefited under the bill? Would ore imported from Newfoundland for the purpose of being manufactured in Canada come under the head of foreign ore?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so under the present law.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Would it not be better to substitute for the word "Canadian" "British American?" That would bring in Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before long I hope a change may be made to admit Newfoundland ore at a reduced scale. I have no authority for making that statement. It is an expression of hope on my part, that it would seem reasonable and proper, under the circumstance of Newfoundland being a British colony, that ore from that province should have a preference in that respect.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Not only because it is a British colony, but I may say that it is becoming of late years a great feeder of the iron manufacturing industries of Canada, and if an arrangement could be made by which Newfoundland ore could be manufactured on as easy terms as iron manufactured from Canadian ore it would be a good arrangement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think there is a doubt as to the category under which Newfoundland ore would come into the country. Although a British colony, it is to all intents and purposes a foreign country, so far as customs duties are concerned. I hope my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, has advanced in, or will advance as rapidly in the future, his ideas with reference to Newfoundland as he has in reference to the bounties which should be granted for the manufacture of pig iron in this country. I remember, when the subject was under discussion a few years ago, and I and others advocated the admission of Newfoundland into Canada, my hon. friend had not those hopeful ideas which seem to pervade his mind just now. The time is not far distant, I trust, when Newfoundland will form an integral part of this Dominion, in order that we may be enabled to deal with the mineral output of that colony the same as we do with any of our provinces. Apart from that, I have to congratulate my hon. friend on having become a thorough out and out protectionist in this respect, altogether beyond—and I thought I was a pretty old fogey in that respect—the length that I ever contemplated we should extend the principle. There are smelting works in Canada to-day which do not use one ton of Canadian ore. The ore for the whole output of these works comes from the Lake Superior district and other portions of the United States. Consequently, we are paying a bounty of $2 per ton on pig iron made out of a foreign product altogether. When the principle of bounties was established by law, it was for the purpose, not only of establishing smelting works in Canada, but to enable the natural wealth of the country, which lies in the bowels of the earth in the shape of ore, to be used. The question subsequently arose whether it should not be extended to foreign ores. The late government opposed that, though it was deemed to be absolutely necessary to import the foreign ores to enable smelting of our own ores to be carried on more successfully. Any one who has studied this question knows that in order to flux those ores and produce a good quality of iron, you must have different varieties of ore, but the late government refused to pay a county of pig iron made from foreign ores. I know I advocated that you should allow the importation of foreign ores to be used in connection with the native ore, but that you should only pay the bounty upon the product of the Canadian ore; in other words, if you require 50 per cent of foreign ore to produce a ton of pig iron, you should pay half of the bounty, and not pay any bounty on that portion which was the product of the foreign ore. I may say that even that concession my colleagues would not consent to. However, this government has gone altogether beyond that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman's colleagues had a lingering regard for free trade.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Their regard was, I think, in a different direction altogether. They desired to spend the people's money for the purpose of encouraging the production of iron from ore the product of Canada. They wished to encourage the owners of mines in this country and to create an industry exclusively of Canadian products. I was quite ready to go further, and for the reason I have already explained, that if it were necessary to import foreign ores to produce a better article of iron, they might be allowed to come into the country free under the tariff, and the bounty paid on the iron should be in proportion to the amount of Canadian ore used. I was about to say, when interrupted, that the present government have gone beyond that. They have not only allowed the introduction of a foreign ore, but they pay a sum equal to two-thirds upon the pig iron that is made exclusively from foreign ore, where not one single pound of Canadian ore is used. The question is whether it is not going too far. It encourages the smelting of iron in this country, but it protects no other Canadian industry. That is the distance to which the protectionist principle has been carried by hon. gentlemen opposite. Better that than nothing, but I think it is going a little too far. A smelter has been established in Canada on this principle, it was moved from Detroit to the Bay of Quinté, and when I was informed by the managers that they did not use a pound of Canadian ore, I confess that I was very much surprised. Then I asked the question, how is it you have come to Canada to establish these works? His answer was, "We can afford to bring the ores from Lake Superior down to the place where we smelt them, and the saving in freight upon the article produced in sending it to Europe, where we sell the most of it, together with the bounty which we receive, of two dollars a ton, justifies us in moving from Detroit down to your locality." How much better that would be if we could have induced them to come here and use Canadian ores, and pay them just in proportion to the amount they use. That is the principle upon which, I think, this bounty question should be established and carried out. However, as the hon. gentlemen have become such extreme protectionists, after having denounced us and denounced our policy as robbery when we introduced a more limited policy of paying bounties, I can only congratulate hon. gentlemen opposite on becoming as thorough protectionists as some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. It only shows what an immense difference it makes in public men when they are out of office and when they get into office and enjoy the sweets that go therewith. They know in their hearts that, from a political standpoint, they dare not cease to carry out the principles of the law on the statute-book, and they know, further, that it would involve the loss of constituency after constituency if they reversed that policy. They also know that if they had done that which they pledged themselves to do when they were in opposition, the country within less than five years would have been in revolt against them. Whether they have done it from a pure conviction of right, or for the reasons which I have indicated, I do not pretend to say, but I will give them credit for a conversion. I believe they have not done it from a sense of right; but I should not impute any other motive to them. No matter what the reason may be that has induced them to take the course that they are following in reference to bounties and retaining protective duties which have been upon the statute-books for the last seventeen or eighteen years. I congratulate the country upon the fact that they have not had the courage to carry out the pledges which they made to the people.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think the hon. gentleman is quite accurate in either of the views he puts forward. His statement reminds me very much of a tradition told of the eastern people, that they disputed whether they should walk eastward in the morning to bring daylight or depend upon the cock crowing for that purpose. Daylight may come to them by either process, and my hon. friend will find that without the adoption of the views on protection and without approving of the policy of the preceding government, when these bounties were introduced, the government may approve of this measure. The hon. gentleman calls it a protective measure. It is not necessarily a protective measure in the sense in which the hon. gentleman uses that expression. I have never said, nor do I know any Reformer, either in this House or in the other House, who has maintained that under no case is a bounty to be given, or is protection to be afforded. The difference between the position taken by my hon. friend and myself is a radical difference, that protection is a good thing in itself and that while protection continues, and even during the period when it is necessary in order to the existence of an institution, that it is profitable to the country. I do not admit that at all. I say that as long as an institution requires public aid in order that it may exist, it is an unprofitable institution for mere purposes of gain. You defend it, you support it as John Stewart Mills says in his work on political economy, not because it yields any advantage at the present moment, but because it may be able by and by to live without that aid and confer advantages and profit to the country under these circumstances. That is not a protective policy. The hon. gentleman maintains that while you uphold protective duties, they are yielding an advantage to the country, that the country will be prosperous, and he proposed eighteen or twenty years ago to make this country prosperous by the imposition of high duties. I say he did not accomplish that object, and he did not build up those foundries and smelting works, nor stimulate the working of the mines in the province of Nova Scotia or elsewhere by the duties which he imposed or the bounties which he offered. A bounty is a less objectionable mode of giving protection than a very high tariff, because in giving aid in that way you leave everything else free and untouched by the burden that you impose. But the point is here; you have had, in the province of Nova Scotia and elsewhere, ever since confederation a stationary condition. You have had the population in the main in all the maritime provinces without their due share of prosperity, notwithstanding all the bounties you offered and all the money you expended for public works. The country was stationary. The trade that formerly belonged to Halifax went to Montreal. The commerce that Halifax formerly enjoyed she lost, and in every part of the maritime provinces during the whole period the hon. gentleman was in office he cannot show that any portion of the population was becoming prosperous on account of the policy which was adopted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why does the government continue the policy?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We are not continuing the policy. We are taking a different policy as I shall show. The hon. gentleman is not so acute as he would like to persuade us by the questions which he puts. Let me point out that the duty has been reduced, and what is his proposition? The Finance Minister, who preceded the present Finance Minister in office, gave a pledge that these duties should be imposed for a certain period—I think it was five years—and that these institutions would be able to stand upon their feet and would require no more aid, and no other provision was made. What is the present proposition? It is to put an end to the bounty system.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has only to look at the bill. He has no need to ask. He looks at the bill and what does he find? That the first year the bounty is to be 90 per cent of what it was under the old arrangement. Then it is to be 75 per cent, then 55 per cent, then 35 per cent, then 20 per cent, and then nothing. There is a provision for putting an end to the system without any shock to the industries of the country, and to give those industries an opportunity of developing their resources. What is the condition of things at the present time? You have parties proposing to invest millions of money in smelting operations. You have parties who are under the impression that if they receive this aid while their works are being built, while they are making a large outlay and have no great income from their works and undertakings, if you can give them aid during that constructive period, that when their works are completed they will be able to enter into competition both with the United States and the mother country, and to put the produce of their smelters upon the markets of Europe and upon the markets of the South American republics. I say there is a prospect being opened out, there is a policy adopted, not a servile imitation of what the hon. gentleman did, but a statesmanlike proposition, a proposition that is calculated to give confidence to the men who are investing their money and at the same time telling them "Gentlemen, when you have your money invested and when you have your works completed, you must rely upon your own resources and your own ability," just as they are told in England and just as they are being told in that regard in the neighbouring republic. Those gentlemen who are investing several millions of money in the maritime provinces in these undertakings are under the impression that they can successfully compete with the men engaged in the manufacture of iron in Alabama, the most favourable state of the American Union, and that they will be able to successfully compete with the Alabama producers of iron in South America, where railroads are being constructed to a greater and greater extent every year, and in the markets of the mother country. I say with that hope in their breasts, with that confidence in the undertakings in which they are engaged, with the large amount of capital that they are investing in these enterprises, we give them an opportunity——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Noble sentiment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman says "noble sentiment." It is a sentiment perfectly consistent with the principles of free trade. It is a policy looking forward to free trade. It is not a policy of perpetual infancy as the policy of the hon. gentleman was. I say that this bill provides for the termination of the bounty system without a shock to those enterprises in which money is being invested, and it is a policy consistent with the interests of all classes of the population, and which serves to emancipate the people of this country ultimately from the thraldom of that system which the hon. gentleman has aided in fastening upon the public of Canada. With regard to the importation of ore into the province of Nova Scotia from Newfoundland, if the ore thus imported improves the quality of the iron produced, there is no doubt ore will be imported from there to the smelters that will be established in Cape Breton and elsewhere in the maritime provinces. If the iron is made better, it will be to their interest to import it. Facilities exist for the purpose. There are no places in all Christendom between which the facilities for transportation are greater than between the mines of Newfoundland and the mines of Nova Scotia, and there is practically no difference in principle between giving to the people a certain bounty upon the products from the Canadian mine and to give them a similar bounty extending both to the Canadian and Newfoundland mines. Under the arrangement which has been made, the importations will be as large as the production of the best quality of iron may render necessary, and further than that, with immense resources at home it is not desirable that the importation should in any way kill off a production equally available at home. I think that the bill will accomplish the object intended without the imposition of any undue burdens upon the population.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—The hon. leader of the opposition, in the remarks he made a short time ago stated it as an absolute necessity, in order to conduct the manufacture of iron in Canada to the best advantage, that there should be varieties of iron used. I rose specially to emphasize the fact that in Newfoundland these advantages are found to a very extraordinary extent. There are a great many varieties of iron and that makes it all the more desirable that the product of Newfoundland should be brought into Canada to be manufactured here.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has certainly amused us not a little by the very ingenious defence which he has made of the adoption by him of the principle of protection. He has told us, in the course of the few remarks which he has made, that he is still on the same ground as he always was, but he tells us also that not only is he opposed to protection, but that he regards the protection in the form of bounties as even worse than protection by tariff.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, less objectionable.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I said that the bounty was a less objectionable mode of giving aid than high duties, because it puts no burden upon anything except that which was actually produced.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As far as that is concerned, I think I am right is saying that eminent writers on political economy take exactly the other ground and regard protection in the form of bounties as most objectionable.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Mills does not say so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not quoting my hon. friend. I am quoting authors on the subject of political economy that I know, and if I had had any notice of this question coming up I could have given my hon. friend the authority for that. I understand now distinctly where my hon. friend claims to be at this present moment. He is still opposed to protection as he was in years gone by, but he finds it necessary to continue it, I can hardly tell why, if it be not that the Conservative party started this principle, and that it is necessary for his party at least until these industries shall get on a firm and solid footing, to extend to them some assistance in the way in which it has been done. My hon. friend's ground heretofore, and that of his colleagues acting in conjunction with him, has been that protection was nothing more or less than a form of legalized robbery and that manufactures are—"robbers great and robbers small." He does not propose to stop this legalized robbing, but he proposes to let them rob on for a little while, and gives them notice that on the 23rd April, 1902, he intends to make them rob a little less than they have been doing, and on the 1st of July, 1903, he intends to reduce the process a little more. I cannot find a better illustration of my hon. friend's position and the position of his government at the present moment with regard to this question, than that of a man who has his house on fire. The whole house is in flames, and he is very anxious about it, but a very wise man comes along and says, never mind, let it burn; but on the 23rd April, 1902, I propose to put a bucket of water on the fire, and, again, on the 1st July, 1903, I will come along and put on another bucket of water. My hon. friend and his colleagues have put themselves on record that protection is legalized robbery; that manufacturers who ask for protection are "robbers great and robbers small." After taking that ground, he now proposes to say, "Let them rob; but by and by, if I do not change my mind, I will stop it." It is open for the hon. gentleman three years hence, when he proposes to stop the robbing process, to change his mind and say, "Oh, well, you may rob a little longer." And it is not at all unlikely—in fact, it is almost certain—that on the 30th June, 1902, or before that date is reached, my hon. friend will come down with a bill allowing them a little longer to rob the country. All this shows the inconsistent position my hon. friends have put themselves in with regard to the trade question of this country. They have put themselves on record as opposed to the principle of protection. They announced in their Ottawa platform, and in speeches all over the country, that they intended to put an end of that system, and instead of doing so, we find them bringing in this bill, and getting their newspapers to call it a bill for the purpose of putting a stop to protection, because under the bill a little of the bounty is to be withdrawn three years hence, and they still retain the power to change the arrangement. We used to hear a great deal about organized hypocrisy, but we know what it is by this time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Every one who has any knowledge of the past professions and the present practice of hon. gentlemen opposite, must have been surprised and astonished to hear my hon. friend state that he had not made the declaration that bounties were the very worst species of protection. I think I understood him to deny that pointedly and distinctly. Before we go into committee we may perhaps be able to call my hon. friend's attention to some of the recorded utterances of himself and his colleagues on that question, but what surprised me was this: The hon. gentleman said that parties were now willing—and not only willing but about to invest millions in the establishment of smelting works in Canada, and that they were of the opinion that if this was continued during the time that they were building these works and getting them ready for operation, they would be enabled to succeed much better. Does that mean that the government has come down with a proposition to enable those who have established companies for the purpose of erecting smelting works, to say to the people of the country who have purchased stocks, "We have this protection and hence you are safe in making investments in this line." Then he said that when they got to work and were enabled to produce that for which the works were erected, then the bounty was to cease, and they would have to depend upon their own resources. The hon. gentleman ought to know—he is not as stupid as he would make us believe——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am just as stupid as the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I pity the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We sympathize with each other.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Every one knows that not one single cent is paid to any of these works during their construction, or after their construction, until they produce some pig iron.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Paid on the production of the iron.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman said just the contrary.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman will find, if he is correctly reported—as I am sure he will be—that he made that statement. That is the impression that he left on the mind of the House, that they assumed, as soon as they got on their own feet, they were to rely on their own resources. If this be not a step in the direction of protection, but a step in the direction of putting a stop to protection, why did the hon. gentleman not let the law die of itself? The payment of bounties would have ceased long before the time for which this Act provides to pay them, and if it be a free trade measure in that direction, they should not have interfered with the law at all, but let it expire, and long before the time that they proposed to pay the bounties on this graduated scale, the bounties would have ceased and there would be no charge upon the people. This is a splendid illustration of a free trade protection policy, and as long as the government continued in that line they will have the support of this side of the House. Let the government keep on; they are in the right direction; the country will prosper under such a policy.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I would just say, by way of correction of what the hon. gentleman has just said, that it would be perfectly preposterous for me, with the Act before me, to pretend that the people were to get a bounty before they produced any iron. It was upon the iron that the bounty was to be paid, and if they were producing nothing they would get nothing. I pointed out that the men who are at present producing are prepared to produce more, and to build more extensive works. While the building operations are going on, there is a large investment of money which is yielding no profits and no interest, and therefore if the bounty for the time being serves to give them a certain amount of profit upon their investments that are not yet made operative, it enables them to go on and build their works. That is wholly different doctrine and rests on a wholly different principle from the doctrine to which the hon. gentleman referred. The hon. gentleman intimated that it would be a terrible thing for the government to undertake to aid works if men were going, and the government knew that they were going to invest large sums of money in these enterprises. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten the time when the government imposed protective duties, and said it wished to appeal to the country two years before the ordinary time, and asked the people of Canada whether they were willing to give permanency to this protective principle, because there were millions of money abroad ready to be brought to this country to be invested here in manufacturing enterprises if there was permanency? An appeal was made, and there was permanency given by the aid of a Gerrymander Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No; tell the truth.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am speaking the truth. I say that statement is strictly true, and the hon. gentleman is offensive and unparliamentary in his remark.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say the elections were carried on that cry by the aid of a Gerrymander Bill, and the millions of money did not come.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That gerrymander is a humbug argument. I will answer that by and by.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (V) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Elections Act as respects the province of Prince Edward Island."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I notice that the title of the bill is to amend the Act as regards Prince Edward Island, and I notice in one clause it provides that the Act is not to apply to Prince Edward Island. That seems inconsistent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The bill is intended only to apply to Prince Edward Island, and instead of making exceptional enactments, which are supposed to be required only in the case of Prince Edward Island, a number of long sections of the Election Act are repealed, and this bill proposes to re-enact them with slight changes referring to Prince Edward Island. It would have been more convenient to have given us, in a few lines, the changes required as to Prince Edward Island, and allow the remainder of the Franchise Act to continue as it is.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—With regard to that point I was guided by the law clerk of this House, who informed me that those two sections of the Dominion Elections Act had undergone so many amendments that he was of opinion that the best thing to do was simply to consolidate them and incorporate in them a very few words which were necessary to make the change, and that a very distinct advantage would he gained to the statute by this consolidation; and further, that it would be much easier to understand the whole thing in this way than by proposing some slight amendments. I was guided entirely by the opinion of the law clerk, and I have no doubt the hon. gentlemen will see that in doing this there will be a decided improvement in the statute, apart from the amendment relating to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest that the title should be amended. It does not refer solely to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not notice until the bill had left the law clerk's hands that he had given it this title, and it occurred to me that the title should be of a more general character.

On subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would direct the attention of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield to line 43, and the next two lines:

> And all those upon which there is any writing or mark by which the voter could be identified other than the numbering and initialling by the deputy returning officer in the cases provided for by this Act, and by section 23 of the Franchise Act, 1898.

The note, made by the law clerk I suppose says:

> "The only changes are in the addition of the words "and installing" and in the substitution of the words between square brackets for those hereinbefore provided for.

I wish to direct the attention of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield to the fact that the initialling does not afford any opportunity to identify the voter, because all the ballots are initialled, but the numbering does. The words are unnecessary and calculated to mislead, because the initialling on the ballot does not give any clue to the identity of the voter.

Hon Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend will observe that, with regard to the objected votes, the initials must be placed on the ballot. This is simply to carry out the other provisions of the Franchise Act with regard to these votes.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Would it not save a great deal of trouble if the hon. member from Prince Edward Island was to make an amendment to this bill to say that the votes shall not be taken by ballot, but that there shall be open voting? I understand him to say that there is open voting for local legislature, and they might be given the privilege of open voting for the Dominion. After the exposure of those rascally proceedings which have taken place in Ontario, and that observation about the machine—we know there were corrupt practices in three elections at least, and we do not know in how many more—is it not clear that open voting would be much better than voting by ballot? We know what an obstruction is carried on in the House of Commons committee, with regard to the investigation of this very difficulty, with the object that no decision shall be reached this session. All that must convince this Senate that the proper way of conducting an election is by open voting. There would be very little trouble in granting it in Prince Edward Island, where it already prevails. It would enable us to see whether elections can be conducted better in that province under a system of open voting than they are in Ontario by ballot where the machine works.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not differ materially from my hon. friend as to the merits of open voting. We have it in Prince Edward Island in provincial elections, and we find it works as well as the ballot does. There is no strong desire there to change it, but my hon. friend will observe that if we were to attempt to exempt Prince Edward Island from the operation of the ballot, we would have to amend the Dominion Elections Act in so many respects that I would not attempt it in a little bill of this kind, and it would have to come from the government.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It is quite evident there will have to be some change made in the ballot paper. It is now in such a shape that it is counterfeited in every election, and it is utterly impossible to hold an election in the future without having a recurrence of what took place in the past year. Some change should be made in the ballot paper. I do not know how it could be accomplished.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—By open voting.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Fac similes are pre pared in such a way as to defy detection. I want to know whether the government propose to offer some remedy for this state of things? Without some change it will be impossible to conduct an election in the future with any degree of fair play. It is generally understood throughout the country that ballots can be manipulated, and you can depend upon it that it will be the party who can procure the latest voting machine that will carry the election. This evil is growing every day, and will continue to grow, now that the people understand how the elections can be manipulated. Unless some change is made, future elections will not be an expression of public opinion. I do not know whether a paper could be had, something like bank note paper, that could not be counterfeited. If that cannot be done, some other process should be adopted for the purpose of securing a correct record of the votes which may be polled at the next election by both parties. I am not speaking in favour of one party more than the other, because you can depend upon it the practice which prevails now will be carried on by both sides.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—No.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have always favoured open voting, but whether that would be too Tory an idea to take up at the present day, I do not know. I am told that there is a machine in the United States now for recording votes by electricity. The machine contains the names of the candidates, and you record your vote for the party for whom you wish to cast it. We want a faithful and honest election, and we want every man to record his vote as he thinks proper. We do not want men to go around the country hugging machines to poll votes for you and me. I want to poll my own vote, and I should like to do it in the old Anglo-Saxon way, by open vote. It would be pretty hard to carry that now, though it would not be so hard to work the old system, if people would try the experiment. It is as well the matter should be discussed now in order that the government should know the feeling that is abroad, and it rests with them to provide a remedy as soon as possible.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I do not know that it is in the province of this House to say whether voting should be open or by ballot, but in my opinion one great cause of the corruption that is being exposed to-day, in reference to elections, is the amount of money contributed towards election funds. There is ten times more evil produced by that than by any other cause in reference to elections. I would be very much in favour of giving a large sum for the purpose of detecting and prosecuting bribers at elections, but not one dollar towards buying votes or to help the machine. The responsibility for the prevalent corruption rests with gentlemen of large means and with the government. There is no question about it, large amounts of money are improperly used at elections, and I am afraid a great deal of public money is used for that purpose. It is for the moneyed people as well as those who control the affairs of the country to see that no public money or private money shall be used in that way. If hon. gentlemen are desirous of seeing elections properly conducted, let them contribute, and contribute liberally towards the detection and prosecution of those who are corrupting the electorate of the country.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman from Marshfield had introduced a bill to abolish vote by ballot, we might go into a discussion of the merits of voting by ballot, and I should be disposed to support the hon. gentleman, but that is not what is before the House just now. With regard to the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Rideau Division I think that in some places the deputy returning officer has a stamp with which he stamps each ballot before handing it to the voter. That stamp would prevent, to a certain extent, the use of improper ballots.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They would get another stamp made.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Where you have a dishonest returning officer, what would you do? I think a good deal of the trouble about the ballot is that the printing of the ballot is done in the newspaper offices. The government should print all the ballots. As long as they are printed at offices throughout the country, it will lead to rascality. I think a good deal of the trouble we have had in the elections has come from that source.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hon. gentlemen are carrying on a discussion of this question, which is beside the bill that is before us, as if there were some extraordinary rascality disclosed in this Parliament. I do not understand that that is so. I understand that there is an inquiry being made in the other House in respect to an election in the county in Huron. I understand that the ballots were printed, or commenced being printed, in the office of the Godrich Signal, and that the paper that was being used was too thin. The proprietor, when he came in, stopped that printing, and ordered them to take a better and heavier quality of paper. So there were really two kinds of paper used in printing the ballots. But if hon. gentlemen will read what has been established, they will see that at some of the polls, only the ballots of the better kind of paper were used. The first thing that suggested suspicion was the discovery in one box that was first examined of fourteen ballots of that better kind of paper, and it was supposed that those had been substituted ballots; but in other boxes, the whole ballots were of that sort of paper, even where the majority of ballots were marked for the unsuccessful candidate, so that a little inquiry dispelled that suspicion altogether. Whatever happened elsewhere, hon. gentlemen will see that in that election there was none of the ballot stuffing that was at first suggested, and which led some to suppose, suspiciously I suppose, like my hon. friend across the floor, that some wrong had been done. As far as I can learn, the investigation up to the present moment has dispelled that view.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE — Did not the Premier in the other House admit that a prima facie case had been made out?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know what the Premier admitted, but that erroneous view was on the assumption that these ballots printed on heavy paper were fraudulent. It was subsequently found that they constituted the vast majority of the ballots, because the proprietor, when he saw the quality of the paper that was being used at first, stopped it, and those ballots that were printed on the thin paper were used, but there was no more printed on that quality of paper, but a better and heavier quality of paper was used.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How do you account for the counterfoil being entirely different from the spurious paper?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They did not fit. The ballot cast did not fit the counterfoil.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Do I understand the hon. Minister of Justice to suggest that there was no iniquity?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is what I am suggesting, and I say up to the present time —I do not know what was disclosed to-day —but what was disclosed before to-day does not show any iniquity.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—How do you account for the fourteen ballots being uniformly marked for one candidate? How do you account for their being of a different size from the stub of the book from which they were torn? How do you account for the edges being white while the edges of the others were black? The hon. Minister of Justice shows a degree of innocence that I did not believe any man in public life could be guilty of.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has shown a good deal more than a degree of innocence in the discussion that he has initiated here. I made my statement of the impression that the information, so far as it had been given, has made upon my mind. I find that ballots which were marked for both candidates in other polling divisions were exactly of the same paper that the hon. gentleman says is suspicious and printed in the same way. The hon. gentleman says there was a conspiracy in the case of those fourteen ballots. I do not believe there was, because his suspicion would apply to the entire ballots deposited for both candidates in the other polling divisions. The hon. gentleman may demur to that view. All I can say to him is not "great is thy faith in man," but "great is thy incredulity."

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Since this discussion has been precipitated upon the committee, let us confine ourselves actually to the facts of the case exposed in the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the House of Commons. We found there the stubs of the ballots that were furnished by the deputy returning officer, and the remaining ballots still attached to the stubs. We found ballots which are of a different size and fourteen of a different make of paper, marked uniformly with initials which are written in a particular style with ink, while the rest were marked promiscuously with pencil. We found the ballots printed by a different machine—I do not refer to "the machine" by which the ballot boxes were manipulated, but the machine by which the ballots were actually printed, the printing press. The lines on the ballots themselves showed that they were printed on a different machine. They could not have been detached from the stub, and yet we find the hon. Minister of Justice, from his place in the Senate, contending that there is nothing suspicious about the circumstances. If the man who was elected in that constituency had any self respect he would have risen in his place the moment that exposure was made in the House of Commons and declined to sit longer on the seat that was polluted, and would have walked out of that chamber a bigger man than he has ever been, or than he ever will be if he continues to cling to it in spite of the evidence that has been produced. Let us examine the other circumstances and see how perfectly hollow the pretensions of the hon. Minister of Justice are that there is a possibility that there could have been anything like innocence connected with the polling in that place. Forty-three men have been sworn and have given evidence that they marked their ballots for the Conservative candidate, yet only thirty ballots were found marked for him, and yet we are told in the face of that evidence that the presumption remained that it was an honest election! The Minister of Marine and Fisheries was on the spot and he admitted that those ballots were spurious, and there can be no other contention, yet the hon. Minister of Justice—he who above all the members of the government, who above all men in Canada, is bound to maintain the purity of elections and honest voting—stands up in his place in Parliament and contends that there is no presumption raised against the honesty of that ballot. I am amazed. I knew the hon. Minister of Justice years and years before he came into the Senate, and I always believed that, as public men go, he was one of the most honest public men who had ever taken a seat in the Parliament of Canada, but to-day what a fall has there been!

Hon. Mr. MILLS- Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Did I understand the Secretary of State to cry "Hear, hear?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite prepared to cry "Hear, hear." I am listening to a most extraordinary statement.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I hope I shall not be provoked to deal with the hon. gentleman as he deserves, but I say it is a surprise to me, a disappointment to me that the Minister of Justice, from his place in the Senate, without being called upon to do so, has interjected a defence of the greatest fraud that has ever been perpetrated upon the electors of this country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has been a party to fraud in the other House for years. Did not the hon. gentleman defend the Queen's County case while he was in the other House, and the hon. gentleman assumes indignation towards me because I state my impression with regard to a prima facie case as it stands in the other House. I have to say to the hon. gentleman that the case is not before us for discussion. It was because the matter was referred to here, and the statement made that fraudulent ballots had been used during the election, that I referred to the matter at all, and I referred to the fact that I know Mr. McGillicuddy, who was the proprietor of the office in which those ballots were printed, and he told me himself, personally, that his young man, who was printing off the ballots, had started to print them on thin paper, and when he came in, he stopped him and told him to use other paper. You had, further than that, Mr. Cummings, the returning officer in that place, swear that those were his initials on the fourteen ballots, as well as on the others.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—I do not think there is any necessity for a heated discussion on this bill, but I may say that the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, in view of what has transpired in the last elections and the by-elections, should be considered by the government. It is the part of wisdom, if we want to see pure and honest and just elections, that the government should print the ballots themselves and in that way prevent imitations of the printed ballots by any newspapers, throughout Canada. In my own constituency we have four newspapers, and if the ballots for an election are printed in the office of one of those newspapers, and the other papers find it out, and they have dishonest printers among them, what is to prevent them imitating and printing ballots intended to be furnished to the returning officers? Therefore, it is absolutely necessary for the government, in order to save themselves and ensure honest elections, to have the ballots for the whole Dominion printed by the government and furnished to the returning officers in the various constituencies in Canada. With regard to what the Minister of Justice says about what is transpiring in another place in the West Huron election case. I believe he has not had time to study the matter. I have had an opportunity of seeing and hearing what was going on, and I saw the ballots stubs with some of the ballots that had not been used still adhering to them. The number of ballots polled at that particular poll numbered from one to ninety-eight, and the ballots had been torn from that stub. That stub is of a certain colour. The edges of the ballots were black. Of the ninety-eight ballots which were put in the ballot box, only a certain number had the edges black, corresponding with the stubs showing clearly that fourteen ballots put in the ballot box were not taken from the book which was furnished to the returning officer. That again shows conclusively the necessity of the government guarding the purity and honesty of election, and that they should print the ballots themselves.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I want to know whether Mr. Preston, the man who sent the telegram to the member elect to "hug the machine" and was likewise, I believe, denounced by the Globe (and his guilt must have been strong when the Globe mentioned it) is still in the pay of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Several hon. members have referred to the importance of having those ballots printed at Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Is there no answer to my question?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has the floor; I will answer when he is through.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I will let you off.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On the first day of the examination, when it was stated that fourteen ballots were not similar to the other ballots used in the elections, the attention of the government was called to it on the assumption that fourteen ballots, at all events, had been shown to be different from the officially prepared ballots, initialled by the returning officer. It was then considered that probably an improvement might be made by having the ballots printed, as referred to by my hon. friend behind me (M. Clemow), on water-lined paper, that could not be imitated—paper that could not be made in Canada, and that other marks might be attached to the ballot, which would make it utterly impossible to counterfeit them. The moment I heard of this, I had some ballots prepared for my own information, and I believe the proposition is one that is not only feasible, but I think will be useful, and one that will probably be adopted. I desire to say one word in reply to the declamation of the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Baker) which I think was extremely unfair, when he knows the facts I think he will be prepared to make an apology to the Minister of Justice and the House. I have it from a member of the committee that when the fourteen ballots were shown to be different from the others, he came to the conclusion, as we all did, that they had been improperly placed there. If I am correctly advised—I was not present, but I have been told by several gentlemen who were present—the committee found ballots for McLean exactly of the same character cast at other polls; if that is so, it bears out the statement of the Minister of Justice that ballots of the same character were used on both sides.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How do you account for the absence of the counterfoils?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not satisfied that there has not been fraud. I do not propose to justify anything that has been done. I am limiting my statement to what I believe is absolutely reliable, that is as far as the fourteen ballots were concerned. Some of the ballots which were cast for both candidates in other divisions were exactly similar to those which were supposed to be fraudulent—the same paper and the same mark on the edges as hon. gentlemen have described —and gave other indications that they were the same in every particular as the fourteen. I do not know whether a fraud was committed or not. I am limiting my statement to the fourteen ballots because I have not given my attention to any other feature of the case but that.

On subsection 1 of 64.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I move that the words "one hundred" be struck out and "three hundred" substituted.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is altogether inadequate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think my hon. friend will agree with me when I tell him that from our experience in Prince Edward Island we have had a good many scrutinies under the provisions of the local law and there has never been one that has involved anything like that amount. They have been a much simpler proceeding than my hon. friend would think they were. They turned on such questions as the performance of statute labour by young men, and one case would be a test case, and the cases were soon brought to a conclusion in that way.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Where does the hon. gentleman in this bill provide for the examination of all the ballots that have been protested?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is what we are providing for.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Where? The petitioner would only inquire into the ballots that his own agent had objected to.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Perhaps we had better settle the question of surety first. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, thinks possibly the clause could be made clearer with reference to the scrutiny. I am willing to have that made clearer if necessary.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman's estimate of $300 is based on the practice in Prince Edward Island, but the operation of this clause is not limited to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Paragraph 3 is the only one which refers to Prince Edward Island alone. Paragraph 4 is not confined to Prince Edward Island, but applies to the whole country.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—One hundred dollars is ample where there is nothing involved but a counting up of votes, and in place of striking out the words "one hundred," I would add "or in the case of Prince Edward Island three hundred dollars," so that it would make a larger sum necessary to be deposited in Prince Edward Island on account of the objected votes coming up on the recount. My hon. friend from Halifax is right, I think, in what he says. We would then leave the law exactly as it is now all over the country, but in Prince Edward Island, where we are imposing a different duty on the county judge at the recount, and we would there make the surety $300.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman is doing this on the assumption that on a recount he is to have a scrutiny. A scrutiny is one of the most expensive proceedings that we know of in controverted elections. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, will remember the scrutiny in the case of Rykert vs. Neelon, where the costs were $15,000. That was in 1874. The hon. gentleman will see that in every other province where a ballot is objected to and marked that you only take into consideration the question upon a scrutiny, and the scrutiny requires you to file an election petition and deposit $1,000. My hon. friend proposes that, without filing an election petition and without a regular trial with regard to each vote or examination of it by a Superior Court judge, the County Court judge, in making the recount, shall inquire into the validity of each of those votes and shall pass upon them at the time. Does he not think that that is to the advantage of proceedings in a recount in Prince Edward Island, because it is not done elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON — It is not required elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not having a voters' list in Prince Edward Island, there is a possibility in that regard of men coming forward to vote that otherwise might not do so, but there is also this fact; I understand that in every polling division it is a rare thing that anybody comes forward to vote that everybody else in the locality does not know, and therefore there is perhaps less opportunity of getting in a vote that is not a proper vote in Prince Edward Island than any other province in the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend will bear in mind that we are not proposing to introduce that feature in the law. That was put in the law by this House last year, and we are only suggesting necessary changes to carry out the intentions of that law. There are very few weaknesses indeed in the law, if there are any, and some think that there are none. We have no voters' list in Prince Edward Island, consequently there is no judicial or any other revision of a list establishing who has a right or who has not a right to vote. Consequently, in the polling booths of Prince Edward Island any man can go to the polls and claim that he has a vote, and if he takes the necessary oath, the ballot is given to him and it is put in the box and that ends it. I am quite willing to admit that a great deal of that sort of thing is not usually done in Prince Edward Island, but that is largely because we have this protection in our law. It is not much benefit for the candidate to have bad votes put in for him when they can be objected to and struck out on the scrutiny, and he will be put to costs. As we have not had a judicial revision of the votes before the election, we must have some protection after the election in the event of a large number of bad votes being cast. We have had a by-election in East Prince since this Act was passed last year, and I am told that there were only five votes marked objected in that election. It does not follow, however, that if this law had not been in existence there might have been one hundred bad votes put in, because they knew this check was upon them, and if they put in and got counted on the night of election, they felt and believed, as everybody did down there at that time and as everybody believes still, that the law we passed was effective and they could be struck out and lost on the recount. We simply want these votes to be reviewed by the County Court judge at the recount. This clause will not be called into requisition except in cases where the majority is a small one. If the defeated candidate believes there are more bad votes cast for his opponent than for him, he would make application for a recount. We have had about half a dozen of these scrutinies within my recollection, and none of them proved to be expensive or protracted. I remember one election in Charlottetown, when there were about 2,000 votes cast, between Mr. Morris and Mr. McLeod. Mr. McLeod was elected by two and Mr. Morris demanded a scrutiny. It took the best part of two days. Mr. Morris' counsel objected to votes cast for Mr. McLeod until he had exhausted his list, and if I remember rightly Mr McLeod was put ten or fifteen behind, and his counsel commenced to examine the votes cast for Mr. Morris, and he went on till he got a majority of one for Mr. McLeod and then he stopped. It was not necessary to go any further, and the sheriff declared Mr. McLeod elected. Seventy dollars was the cost of that scrutiny. Then there was the West River case, in which it turned on the due performance of statute labour, and the case lasted longer than that. I know I had to come to the relief of my friend who was the candidate, financially in the matter, and the costs were less than $200. I know there were some four or five others, and none of them amounted to anything of a serious nature whatever. The protection that we will have in possessing this provision in the law to have a scrutiny of votes at the recount will prevent bad practices, and there will be no inducement to the candidate to offer bad votes. My hon. friend seems to be under the impression that this might be left for an election trial. My hon. friend's object in introducing the Franchise Act of last year was to make it conform to the local statutes. Well, he would not be carrying out that principle unless he introduces in the law the principle in the local statute of having this scrutiny before the sheriff or before the County Court judge. It is necessary to carry out the principle which my hon. friend claimed to be underlying the Franchise Act to furnish the protection that is furnished under the local law.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says no. I am surprised to hear him say no. I claim to understand something about the local statutes of Prince Edward Island in election matters. I have had a good deal of experience in them, and am speaking correctly when I say this protection is given in the provincial laws in Prince Edward Island, and it is the duty of Parliament to give the same protection in Dominion elections when we are using and applying the local laws. As against the other proposition, that this might be left to an election trial, the hon. gentleman will see at once in what an unfair position it would put the candidates in Prince Edward Island. In every province of Canada the question of who has a right to vote, or who has not, is settled judicially before the election, and unless there is some fraud, the question of the qualification of the voter cannot come up before the judge at an election trial. There the general conduct of the election and the question of whether it was carried on purely, or whether there was bribery and corruption, are the matters which come in, but here we have simply to do with the question of the qualification of the voters, and hon. gentlemen will recognize this principle, that the man who has the majority of good votes ought to be returned by the returning officer and by the County Court judge after the recount, and the question of the majority of good votes should not be allowed to be mixed up with the question of bribery and corruption, or any other question. It is the easiest thing in the world. If it is left entirely to be settled by petition before two judges, it is many times a more expensive way, but if it is left to be settled there the moment the candidate who has been counted out on account of bad votes being recorded against him appeals on an election petition to the court, his opponent feeling that he is beaten on that point, in order to make a saw off, files a counter petition and, the whole matter is involved in an election court, and the man who has a majority of good votes is mixed up in an election trial and through a saw off and such manipulations he may lose his right to represent the constituency. We only desire to carry out what the law of last year proposed to do, and that is to allow the man who felt that bad votes were cast against him to appeal to the County Court judge to have these votes examined and their merits decided upon at the recount, leaving all other matters to be disposed of exactly as they are in other parts of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As the proposed amendment refers to Prince Edward Island and does not affect the other provinces, I suppose we should not object to it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Assuming they may properly allow a recount at the scrutiny, all the votes should be inquired into.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not want to mix up the question, we are dealing with the amendment now.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It ought to be made clear that where you go into a recount the validity of all the votes objected to ought to be considerd on both sides, so that a minority candidate would not be counted in.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If my hon. friend has any serious doubt on that point perhaps he would point out what he thinks there is in this clause to support the view that only a part of the votes are being considered. For my part I cannot see it. Subsection one, of section sixty-four, taken in connection with subsection two of the same section that we propose now, make it very clear that all the votes would be subject to be decided upon by the county judge.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think the doubt that I have in my mind will be removed, if we add at line ten, page three, these words "And in the case of Prince Edward Island to scutinize all the votes objected to," that will answer the purpose.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think there is no necessity for that amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no harm in it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It might confuse. There is first a method provided by which objection can be taken to vote by the agent of the candidate. Next comes the action of the returing officer in marking an objection upon the poll book, and a corresponding mark upon the ballot, and then counting the votes for the candidate. Then comes the next step, and that is, putting such ballot, at the close of the poll after it has been counted, in a separate envelope. Then comes the County Court judge's action under section 64. There is to be an affidavit made by a credible witness, and he must set forth, among other things, that in the province of Prince Edward Island some person not qualified to vote in such electoral district has voted. That must be in the complaint in Prince Edward Island. We turn to a new section that we propose to add to section 64, subsection 2. It will be found on page 4, and reads:

In the province of Prince Edward Island the judge shall decide the objections made in each case where a ballot paper has been cast by a person whose right to vote has been objected to on the ground of want of qualification.

The complaint is to be a general one, that some persons have voted who have not the right to vote, and then the County Court judge is to decide each objection. The objection my hon. friend has in his mind is the objection that is made at the polling booth and the inquiry covers every one of these objected votes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend does not see what I see, and it is that this deposit is made by a party who objects to the return of the candidate, and asks for a scrutiny in respect of votes objected to. In reference to what votes objected to? The whole?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly not. It is all the votes to which he or his agent took exception. He is not depositing money for the purpose of giving the other side an opportunity to make a scrutiny. What I wish is a provision enabling the party who asks for a scrutiny to have the validity of all the objected votes considered, whether it is the candidate petitioning for a recount, or for the other party, to be examined and inquired into and my hon. friend's bill, as it stands, does not reach that point, because he will be told by any lawyer who examines into this matter that the words, "those in each case" mean where the petitioner has objected, not in each case where everybody else has.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Would it not be better to introduce that on page 4 subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not care where it is as long as it is put in.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There can be no harm in it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In subsection 2 it may be declared that he will examine into the votes cast by both candidates.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a case in which it is well to go slowly, so that we shall not make any mistake. It appears to me that there should be some provision in the beginning of section 64 that where the judge decides that there is to be a recount, then the party who has the majority of votes on the face of the return should have an opportunity to put in some sort of statement as to the votes to which he objects, so that when the judge comes to make the scrutiny, he is bound to consider the votes objected to by both parties. I think in order to make it clear it would be well to have some provision of that kind inserted in the first subsection, and if we allow this subsection to stand, the hon. gentleman can consider the matter and have the amendment put into shape, and we can put the bill through when we meet again without any loss of time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is the best arrangement, I think. The clause can be allowed to stand.

The subsection was allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the bill and asked leave to sit again.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, 26th July, 1899.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

YALE-KOOTENAY TELEGRAPH COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (7) "An Act to incorporate the Yale-Kootenay Telegraph Company, Limted," with amendments.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved concurrence in the amendments. He said:—These amendments are rendered necessary in consequence of the bill introduced by the government not having been passed. It is necessary therefore, to incorporate these clauses with reference to the telegraph line. As the bill was originally introduced this provision was struck out in the Commons, and a general clause put in, expecting that the general Act would be introduced this session.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed under a suspension of the rules.

MEDICAL CONGRESS ON TUBERCULOSIS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that he will cause to be laid before the Senate, a copy of the report of the delegate sent by the government of Canada to the Medical Congress on Tuberculosis, held at Berlin, Germany, in the month of May last.

He said:—Hon. gentlemen are all aware that a Medical Congress was held at Berlin, Germany, in the month of May last, for the purpose of considering the question of tuberculosis. Every hon. gentleman knows how great the mortality is which exists in our population from this disease. It has been held in the past that the disease was hereditary and not contagious. The latest medical opinion is that it is not hereditary, but that it is contagious; and while every hon. gentleman here is probably aware of the modern view, a great many people through the country are not aware of it. It is to be presumed that the report of the delegate, who was sent by the government of this country to take part in the congress at Berlin, will contain valuable information on this important subject; and there is no doubt that it is desirable that that information should be laid before Parliament with a view to seeing whether or not it should be printed for the information of the public.

MANITOBA SCHOOL LANDS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the orders of the day are called, I should like to direct the attention of the Secretary of State to a question of returns. The hon. gentleman will remember that he laid on the table the other day a return to an address of the Senate moved by myself in reference to school lands in Manitoba. It was handed to me to look at to see whether it covered what I wanted. It covers most of the information I asked for, but the hon. gentleman will remember that I asked him if he would have, in addition to this, a tabulated statement which is contained in the report laid before the Senate in answer to an address moved by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, of the revenue and expenditure, from the 20th April, 1893, up to the present time. The completion of this return, which I hold in my hand, from 1893 up to the present time will furnish the House all the information that may be required in case we have to discuss the question in future.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What you want is the tabulated statement continued?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is all that is now required?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, the tabulated statement continued down to the present time.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called:

Third reading Bill (U) "An Act to amend the Yukon Territory Act."

Hon. Mr. MILLS said:—I mentioned the other day that I postponed this bill because a good deal of it concerned the Department of the Interior. I made some changes, after consulting with Mr. Clement and other officers from the Yukon Territory, and I wish to confer with my colleagues again before I go on with it. I want that opportunity. I therefore ask that the order of the day be discharged and the third reading of the bill be made the order for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the order of the day was discharged.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (V) "An Act further to amend the Dominion Elections Act as respects the Province of Prince Edward Island."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In order to meet the view of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, I have prepared an amendment to section 2. I propose to strike out all of subsection 2 on page 4, down to the words "upon oath and" in the 17th line, and to substitute the following:

In the province of Prince Edward Island the judge when recounting the votes shall take into account all ballot papers numbered and initialled by the deputy returning officer under section 23 of the Franchise Act, 1898, as having been cast by persons whose right to vote has been objected to on the ground of want of qualification and the judge shall decide such said objections as are persisted in at the recount by any candidate or by the agents of any candidate and for the purposes of such decision he shall hear the candidates or their agents and may examine on oath any person whose vote has been objected to. Both candidates may be represented by counsel, and the judge may——

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there is one omission in the amendment which the hon. gentleman has submitted. It authorizes the examination of the person who tenders his vote and of the representative of the candidate, but the portion of the subsection which has been stricken out provides as follows:—

For the purposes of such decision he shall hear any of the parties then appearing before him in support of, or against any such objection.

It might be necessary to take the evidence of the neighbour of the person whose vote was objected to. The agent of the candidate might not have the information as to the qualification of the person whose vote was objected to, so that that needs a little extension. The judge ought to be allowed to examine and take the evidence of any person who is tendered as a witness before him. We might say:

The evidence of the voter as well as of any other person.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes. We will add after the words "whose vote has been objected to," the following: "and any other persons."

The clause, as amended, was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The bill was then read the third time and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resumed, in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (D) "An Act to amend the Expropriation Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The whole of the first clause has been struck out. The principle involved in clause 2 has already been objected to in the Exchequer Court Bill. Of course there is no object in calling upon the House to vote on clause 2 when the principle involved in it has already been rejected in the other bill. I, therefore, propose to drop those clauses of this bill and to substitute the one of which I gave notice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. minister is droping clauses 2, 3 and 4?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I must do that, and I move that the following clause be substituted:

Paragraph (f) of section 3 of the Expropriation Act, being chapter 13 of the statutes of 1889, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

(f.) After the course of any river, canal, brook, stream or watercourse, and divert or alter, as well temporarily as permanently, the course of any rivers, streams of water (railways), roads, streets or ways, or raise or sink the level of the same, in order to carry them over or under, on the level of, or by the side of the public work, as he thinks proper; but before discontinuing or altering any (railway or) public road (or any portion thereof) he shall (substitute) another convenient (railway or) road in lieu thereof; (and in such case the owner of such railway or road shall take over the substituted railway or road in mitigation of damages, if any, claimable by him under this Act,) and the land theretofore used for (any railway or) road or (the part of a road) so discontinued, may be transferred by the minister to, and shall thereafter become the property of, the owner of the land of which it originally formed part.

The provisions of this section are retroactive and shall apply to past as well as to future transactions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When this amendment was proposed by the hon. Minister of Justice, I gave an opinion that, from casually hearing it read, it was not objectionable. Neither do I say that it is at all objectionable at present, providing the hon. gentleman would apply it to the case that he indicated to the Senate in connection with the St. John harbour improvements; but I object upon principle to the last two lines, where the provisions of this clause are made retroactive, to apply to the past as well as future transactions. I asked the question, also, at the time, whether there were any other cases that this clause would meet. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he was not aware of any other. If there are no others which it is intended to affect, then there can be no possible harm in striking out the last two lines, or making them applicable only to the case which he mentioned. Since this amendment has been on the notice paper, I have learned that there is another short railway in connection with an expropriation which has taken place that of Mr. Stewart's, better known as Archie Stewart. I have learned from himself that there is a short railway which the government has expropriated in connection with the quarry which they have taken from him. It will be remembered that he had a large contract on the Soulanges Canal, the terms of which the government alleged he did not carry out. They annulled the contract, took the work from him, took all his plant, which they had a right to do under the contract, and paid him for it. They then expropriated the quarry, leading to which there is a short railway. Now, would not this bill, having a retroactive effect, apply to that case as well as the case in St. John? If it would, then it would be simply legislating that gentleman out of court.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you have expropriated, and he is in court, I think it would legislate him out. I am stating it as I understand it. This case under fiat was sent to the Exchequer Court. The government employed Mr. Samuel Blake, as a lawyer to conduct the case on their behalf. He applied to the court to amend the plan, leaving out a portion of the property which the government had expropriated. The court decided that they had no power to do that—that a plan having been filed, the government became de facto owner of the property which they had taken from Mr. Stewart, and the only question was as to the amount of money that they should pay him as compensation therefor. It was new to me, but this map was put in my hands by him to-day, and it shows that there is a railway running to his quarry, extending some little distance. If the amendment is intended to meet that case, it becomes highly objectionable, because it is a case in court, as I am informed, and this Senate should not be placed in a position to legislate any one out of court. If the government have made a mistake through its officers, in taking from this gentleman more of his property than they want, they have deprived him in the meantime of disposing of the product of the quarry. I am not going into the merits of the case as to whether the government did right or wrong, but having taken the property, even if a loss has been sustained, every one would say it is much better that the country should suffer that loss than an individual. It seems to me to be an extremely hard case to ask Parliament to deal with a question of that kind in the manner proposed, and that is why I asked specially, when the question came before the House, and I saw a provision to give the clause a retroactive effect, whether it could possibly affect any other case than that at St. John. I repeat, under the circumstances attending the improvements in St. John harbour, I could see no possible objection to giving them the power to deal with the short piece of road running from the east end of the bridge crossing the St. John River to the station, throwing the track further back if necessary to do so. With the question of compensation we have nothing to do. The courts can decide that. I throw out this suggestion, and I hope the hon. gentleman will, under the circumstances, accept it, if they want to go on with the harbour improvements, and confine the clause to that work.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that there is nothing in this bill that could at all touch the case of Mr. Stewart. In Mr. Stewart's case the government took possession of the railway that led from the railway station, I think it is, to the quarry under the authority already existing, section 5 of the Act, to the passing of which the hon. gentleman himself was, I think, a party, which authorized the government to take possession of the right of way and to establish it, and to either acquire it permanently or acquire it temporarily in connection with the use of the quarry. That is already provided for in the Expropriation Act, so that this has not the most remote relation to a case of that sort at all. This is not the acquisition of a road of that kind. Here is a short railway belonging to the Bridge Company at St. John that runs down to the harbour. The location of that road is in the way of improvements in the harbour that the government intend to make, and there does not seem to be, under the Expropriation Act at present, any power for the Crown to expropriate a portion of a railway. What we are attempting to do here is to expropriate the road and to locate another road further inland, which we will build and connect with the existing line of the company and hand over to them, leaving the Exchequer Court to decide what compensation, if any, the company are entitled to. We have no intention of being subjected to an exorbitant charge just because the railway company think that the acqusition of that property is necessary to the improvement of the harbour. If it is right or proper that the power should exist with regard to the place, then I can see, on no principle, why it should not be equally applicable in any other case, arising under like circumstances, and so I propose not to do what would be a very unusual thing, to confine the amendment to the Expropriation Act to an individual case, but to substitute it for the existing law. The only alteration is the introduction of the word "railway." The present law is general. We are simply applying the power already possessed to railways as well as to roads and other ways. Surely the House is not going to substitute a section in this bill which would confine the power of the government to an individual case. The power of the government exists with regard to any one or all of these cases wherever they arise. That is what we propose to do, and I am proposing now that this section, which I caused to be printed and put on the minutes a day or two ago, shall be substituted in place of subsection f of section 3 of the Act as it now stands. My hon. friends will see, by looking at section 5, that so far as the roadway into the quarry to which he refers is concerned, that power already exists, and so I am not proposing to touch that or deal with it in any way, directly or indirectly, but I am proposing to confer upon the government, by this amendment, the power to expropriate a portion of a railway when it is in the way of a public improvement, just the same as they may expropriate anything else. It is not a power to be arbitrarily exercised, but a power to be exercised under the surveillance of Parliament and by a government responsible to Parliament, and only where the object is to go on with the construction of a public work as the present law mentions. We are proposing the construction of docks that will cut in across the line of railway as it at present exists. We ask that that power, the same as these other powers, may be bestowed upon the government. We do not ask for power for a particular case, but when a particular case arises showing a defect in the law, then you ask that the necessary power may be conferred on the Crown in order that in that case, and all like cases which may arise in the future, the power may be possessed. It is by suggestions of this kind that all those provisions that we now find in the law have from time to time been enacted.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Why does the hon. minister want the last two lines in the clause if that is all that is asked?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Those people are asking a very exorbitant price. The contracts for the improvement of the harbour have been let. It is barely possible that the contractors have come upon a section of the harbour claimed to be in the possession of those parties, and the provisions of this clause are therefore made retroactive; that is, that if the Railway Department have undertaken to act upon the assumption that they have the power—for aught I know that may have been done—then there shall be no right of action in consequence of that, but there shall be the right of compensation. The compensation will cover the whole matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The explanation given by the hon. gentleman is clear and distinct enough, as far as it goes. The present law gives the right to take the road which leads to the property which may have been expropriated, and after the government have used it as long as they want, they can hand it back to the proprietor, on payment of an equitable sum for its use. Apply that to the short line of railway to which the hon. gentleman referred. That railway is of no possible use to anybody except the owner of the quarry, and they have taken the quarry from him by expropriation, and then they have taken the railroad, which cost from $9,000 to $10,000, as I am informed. After they have taken all the stone they require out of the quarry, and the canal is completed, then they hand back to Mr. Stewart this mile and a half of railway. Of what use is it to him except for old iron? It is placing the line of railway in precisely the same position that it places a road through a man's farm. The road is there and has been constructed no doubt for the purpose of getting to some portion of his farm, but the railway, short though it be, was built for only one purpose and that was to enable the owner of the quarry to get the product of that quarry to the Canadian Pacific Railway or to some other railway, or to the river, in order to convey it to the place where it is to be used. Would that not be a case in which it would be an extreme hardship to the owner? Fortunately we have a direct and positive case to which we can refer, and in that case it does not stand in an analogous position to the using of a road or a stream for a temporary purpose, and therefore I think the Senate should not place the owner of that property in the position by which they can take a piece of railway from him, use it for a certain length of time, and then throw it back on his hands, having the other property in their possession, and without which it would be of no use to him.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That has nothing to do with this clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. minister has argued that they still have the right to take a road and use it and pay a rent for it during the time they use it, and then hand it back to the owner. That is right enough, because you could not carry out your work without it; but if the argument of the Minister of Justice has any force, this railway is in exactly the same position that an ordinary wagon road would be, that is after the government have used it for the time in carrying the stone out to the canal, then they hand it back to the proprietor, just the same as they would the road they had used or a piling ground, the land for which they had taken from the proprietor. If this piece of railway is put in the same position as a piece of road, then when it is handed back it is utterly useless, unless the man had the quarry, and, to my mind, the bill ought not to pass in that way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is confusing two subjects, and his suspicions are unnecessarily aroused. The section under discussion, the substitution of this proposed clause, invokes a case where the government propose to hand over another railway in lieu of the substituted one; where they expropriate a railway, they must first construct another railway for the parties. These conditions will not exist in Mr. Stewart's case. It is not proposed to build a railway for Mr. Stewart if we take over that one. There could be no possible object in that. The clause reads:

> But before discontinuing or altering any railway, public road, or any portion thereof he shall substitute another convenient railway or road in lieu thereof.

Take the case of St. John; before the road can be expropriated the government will have to build a railway for the parties, in order that they should not be inconvenienced, and after providing them with a railway, then they would take over the old railway if it becomes necessary to carry on the work. Those conditions do not exist in Stewart's case. It is not proposed to build a railway alongside Stewart's railway.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is under another section of the Act.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not see how we can take the intention of the hon. minister. The amendment should be made clear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is clear.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It is as clear as mud to me. I want it cleared before I can vote for it. Public works are being carried on now with the powers the government have for expropriating property, but they come now with what? With a bill for a certain purpose. If they have made a mistake in Stewart's case they are to blame. As I understand it, in Stewart's case they condemned the stone that Stewart was taking out of the quarry and said it was not fit for the work, and kept him back a year, and then they changed their mind and said, "Oh, well, you can use the stone and you can go on with the work, but you must complete it within the time." He said, "I cannot go on and do this work within a year because you have stopped me." Stewart could not go on with that work because he could not bind himself to finish it in the time agreed upon, because they had stopped him a year. They expropriated his quarry and road and plant and everything he owned and then they come round, by an amendment of this kind, and ask us to take the assurance of the government that they do not intend to do so and so. I want this made perfectly clear before I can vote for it. It is not because it is Mr. Stewart's case. It does not matter to me whose case it is. I am not going to be a party to allow 5,000,000 people to do an injustice to one man. I will not sanction that while I have a vote, and I am sure the Senate will not sanction it. We should have it plainly stated that it does not apply to Stewart's case. My hon. friend speaks of taking one railway and building another. That is all right enough, but why does the hon. gentleman make it retroactive. I will not support that kind of legislation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has supported a great deal of that kind of legislation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—An amendment might be made to the clause proposed by the hon. Minister of Justice, which I think should be acceptable to the House, viz.: that the amendments to the Act should not apply to the claim of Archibald Stewart. I am not sufficiently familiar with all the facts in the Stewart case to say whether the amendments would tend to prejudice him or not. I doubt if any member of the House is sufficiently familiar with his case to pronounce positively upon the effect of those amendments. Suffice it to say that Mr. Stewart does say that those amendments would very seriously prejudice his claim. If that be the case, if there be any doubt about it, then I think in justice to Mr. Stewart, and from that sense of right which has actuated this House in dealing with questions of this character, we should place it beyond all peradventure that those amendments will not apply to that particular case.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The only case before us, so far as I know, is the Stewart case. I would be satisfied in supporting an amendment to the effect that this Act should not apply to that particular case. I can see a possibility of this amendment applying to such a case as that of Mr. Stewart. The Secretary of State has very properly said that this amendment is intended to apply to cases where one road is substituted for another. That would be the general reading of the Act, still, this case under consideration may be of such a nature as would cause the application of this amendment. For instance, if the government, after expropriating Mr. Stewart's railway, had moved that road or railway to some other point on the property, or say off the property, then under this particular section the government could say to Mr. Stewart, "This is a road which we substitute for the railway we took from you, and consequently we ask you to take it back in mitigation of damages." That may be a strained construction of the Act; yet I say in the absence of a familiarity with all the facts relating to that particular case, it is difficult to say how far-reaching such an amendment may be. There is a new principle introduced into this amendment, a principle to which I do not object, in such an expropriation as in contemplated—that of substitution. The present Act does not admit of the principle of substitution; this does. I would suggest that there should be a short clause attached to this amendment so as to remove any doubt as to its application, and that it should be substantially as follows, that the amendments do not refer to the case of Archibald Stewart, now before the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Nor to any one else.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is extraordinary that the case of Mr. Stewart should be brought up every time that we have proposed to deal with the subject of expropriation, and made the subject of controversy in this House. Why is it introduced to-day when we are dealing with an amendment that has no relevancy to Mr. Stewart's case, and why is Mr. Stewart championed by this Senate? I am not going into a detailed discussion of Mr. Stewart case. But what is Mr. Stewart's case? Mr. Stewart had a contract on the Soulanges Canal. That contract was not progressing very satisfactorily, and the engineer in charge, acting in the discharge of his duties, and in accordance with his conviction of what was right and proper, objected to some stone that was being quarried as being defective. The contract was delayed for a period of two months, in consequence of that objection to the stone. The objection was removed and the contractor was permitted to go on if he could, but he did not, and he spent, as far as I know, a whole season without doing anything. If the work was to be constructed it was necessary to put some one else in charge, and as the way was built to this quarry, it was used, together with a portion of the quarry—not the whole of the quarry. Mr. Stewart had bought the quarry, a hundred acres, for the sum I understand of $2,000, or less. The government expropriated a few acres of that and took possession of the road under section 5 of the Act, not as their absolute property, but acquired an easement of it for the purpose of getting access to this property. Mr. Stewart says "You have taken possession of the road; you have closed the way and prevented me reaching the quarry, and I claim damages to the amount of $250,000, for the injury done me in taking possession of a fraction of the quarry for the purpose."

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—He cannot get the $250,000; he can only get what he can prove in court.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If my hon. friend and his friends persists in their way they will do all in their power to enable him to get the $250,000.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. I know what I am saying. In this matter every possible impediment that could defeat the government in securing a fair disposition of the question has, I do not say intentionally, but has in fact been raised. Now, that question is altogether outside of this bill that I have introduced before the House. This bill has nothing to do with Mr. Stewart's claim. Our expropriation of the railway, so far as it was expropriated under the Expropriation Act, was under section 5, which gives to the Crown the power to acquire right of way, a leasehold interest or permanent interest, as the Crown sees proper. It is under that section that the right of way that was constructed by Mr. Stewart, but I think was claimed by some railway company, is in the government's possession. Section 3 of the Act gives certain powers to the Crown, and among those powers are those which I have read, and the only addition to these powers is the power to expropriate a railway, and to enable the government to construct another line in substitution of what they have expropriated, and leave to the courts to say whether the party is entitled to damages—whether he has been injured. All the representations made to me with regard to this New Brunswick road, and that I apprehend is the only one immediately in view, is that the position of the road, by being moved a little further back and a new track built, would be made better even than it is at the present time, because where the road is now located will be cut in upon and docks will be built for the accommodation of ships coming into the harbour. As I have said to hon. gentlemen already, I believe that the only grounds for the last two lines to which hon. gentlemen refer is that the parties have attempted to enter an action against the government, or the contractors, for coming upon their property before expropriation is had, or before they have been settled with for the price of the property. Where the property is required for the use of the Crown, and the Crown proposes to pay the value, ascertained in the regular way, in the way in which the value of all such property is ascertained, I do not suppose that any hon. gentleman in this House wants to furnish special facilities to those who are undertaking to get an exorbitant price from the government to do so, and to undertake to proceed against them by a suit beside. I cannot say anything more with regard to the clause. It is for the purpose that I have explained, and it will apply to every other case where a similar class of circumstances may arise, and the Crown finds it necessary to expropriate a part of a road that interferes with the construction of some public work. The amendment is a reasonable one. It has been recognized as such with regard to all the other cases mentioned, and I see no reason why it should not be held to be as reasonable in the case of railway companies as in the case of any another parties—in fact more so, because if there is any class of people in this country that are capable of defending their rights, and securing all they are entitled to from any government that may exist, it is railway corporations. They are far from being helpless. They are in all cases able to take care of themselves, and any government dealing with them will always be obliged to pay to the utmost limit of the value of anything taken from them. It seems to me very extraordinary that this House that sanctioned the Act which I am proposing to amend, that carried it through on every occasion when it has been amended without any discussion——

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—There was nothing retroactive in the other bills.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Neither is there in this, except the provision in this section, which is made to apply to past as well as to future transactions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As my hon. friend says, this amendment will not apply to Mr. Stewart's case, and as Mr. Stewart is advised by his legal advisers that it will, can there be any objection to my hon. friend saying this shall not apply to the Stewart case?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think it would be a very extraordinary course for the House to adopt, to make an amendment of that sort, but if they choose to amend it, I cannot prevent it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice as to railway corporations, but I really do not know enough about this Stewart case to form a proper judgment of it. When this bill was before the House on a previous occasion, I did make inquiries about it, but not enough to satisfy myself that it was of sufficient importance to justify special action with regard to it. The bill, I thought, had disappeared, and I did not make further inquiry. I was just going to ask the same question, if there is no intention to interfere with Mr. Stewart's case, what objection would there be to say so?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If hon. gentlemen choose to make an amendment of that kind, I am not objecting; but I think it important that those words should be maintained, because I may say frankly to the House an attempt has been made to enjoin the contractors from proceeding with that work, and the whole summer might be lost in litigation. We have undertaken to prevent the injunction from being issued until this bill could go through Parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What I object to more particularly in the remarks made by my hon. friend is his statement, or insinuation, that we are championing Mr. Stewart's case. Mr. Stewart's case has only been mentioned as illustrative of what we consider an important principle, a principle involving the right of a man to his property. Mr. Stewart's case happened to be one of that character. I do not understand either what the hon. Minister of Justice means when he says that those who are objecting to the principle of the amendment which he is endeavouring to place on the statute-book, are assisting Mr. Stewart in obtaining that which he has no right to obtain. Is not that a reflection upon the judge and a reflection upon the witnesses who may go into the witness box? Mr. Stewart has to stand the ordeal, as every other man has, of going before the judge of the Exchequer Court, and the judge decides in his case, as in others, in accordance with the evidence on both sides; that being the case, why should we be accused, because we object to this retroactive legislation of assisting a man in obtaining from the Crown that to which he has no right? I object to any insinuation of the kind. I may be wrong in the view I take of this matter, but I have a strong objection, as this Senate well knows, to interference with the vested rights of any of Her Majesty's subjects, whether it be a corporation or an individual, and if Mr. Stewart's name happens to be mentioned in this discussion, it is not because of any desire to champion Mr. Stewart's case. I took the same ground in the case that was mentioned in connection with the Trent Valley Canal. I did not know the name of the gentleman whose property it was proposed to expropriate and destroy, but I have since learned that he is one of the strongest opponents of the party to which I belong, in the county of Peterborough. But that has nothing to do with the action of the Senate; they acted in the protection of a vested right, and held that no government had a right to take or destroy a man's property without giving fair and ample compensation therefor. I have no doubt the Minister of Justice is just as honest and sincere in the views that he holds, as I am in mine. He says, if it is right in the case in St. John, on which he lays very great stress, is it not equally right in any case that has transpired in the past? I say no. If a man has had property in his own right in the past, and the government have interfered with it, you have no right to seek legislation to take away the rights which that man had under the law and the constitution of the country. That is the ground I take. I may be wrong, but until I am convinced that I am wrong I shall persist in the course I have taken. The hon. Minister of Justice says he will not oppose an amendment excluding Mr. Stewart's case from the operation of this amendment to the law. I do not like an amendment to a bill mentioning any individual's name, because if it is wrong in the case of Mr. Stewart, it would be wrong in the case of anybody else. If it is right that Mr. Stewart should be interfered with then it is right to attack anybody else. Instead of putting in this retroactive clause, I would prefer something like this: "Provided that the provisions of this section shall not apply to any case in which expropriation has taken place," or it might do to say that it shall not apply to any case in which a fiat has been issued, or is now awaiting trial—anything of that kind, which will prevent an interference with the rights of the subject. I will not enter into an argument of the Stewart case. If you have a right to take a road and use it and hand it back, you have the right to do the same under this clause with a railway, or to give another in exchange for it. We had a case in point between Belleville and the Grand Trunk. The second concession road was right alongside of the Grand Trunk Railway station. The Grand Trunk Railway Company said to the municipality, "We want that road and we want a certain portion of land lying south or north of it, but we will give you a road in another direction." The municipality said: "Give us an equally good road, macadamize it and put it in good order and we will make the exchange." There is a practical case. What I fear in this, and I have had a very strong opinion of the matter, is that if you allow this amendment to pass as it is, you can hand over to the contractor that bit of railway, which has cost him, he tells me, some $8,000 or $10,000, which would be of no use to him whatever. I could make a good argument against the government for the manner in which they have treated Mr. Stewart in reference to the contract, but I shall not do it. There is one thing struck me and must have struck every senator who heard the statement of the hon. Minister of Justice, when he said that they took the contract from him, and one of the reasons was that the stone which came from his quarry was unfit for the use for which it was quarried.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman said that the government objected to the stone which was taken from this quarry, and the work was delayed thereby, and then, strange to say, the government goes to work, immediately after annulling this contract, expropriate the quarry, and use the very stone which had been declared useless. However, I am not arguing that point; either one of these amendments I have suggested will suit me.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I understand that the quarry did not yield a very excellent stone. There was an immense amount of waste in it. Some of the cut stone was defective. That good stone could be had there was on doubt, but a great deal had to be set aside in order to get that which was good, and although stone was subsequently taken from the quarry on account of convenience, there has been an immense amount of waste in all the stone that was quarried there in consequence of those defects, and any hon. gentleman who knows anything about the quarrying of stone, is aware that if there is much defective stone in a quarry, it requires very close inspection to keep it out of the walls of a public work. That was the case there. I do not say that the contract was taken from him on that account at all, but after many months elapsing, as the work was not going on, it was taken out of his hands.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—I do not blame the hon. Minister of Justice for the representation that he has made about that quarry. In the multiplicity of his work and of his engagements he has not the information that he should have on the subject, otherwise he never would and never could have made the statements he has made to-day. He has taken the information at second hand. He says that the contract was delayed. Why was it delayed? Because when Mr. Stewart had his men at work on the place the government tried to turn them out, and when they could not turn them out any other way they took the sheriff there and turned them out. I do not blame the hon. Minister of Justice, but I think it would be well for the members of the government to be thoroughly acquainted with statements made about men of this kind, because those who know about that contract from beginning to end, and I think I do, could state a good many unpleasant things here.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am told that the officers of the department did not agree about the quality of the stone. Some reported that the stone was all that was required; another officer reported the opposite way. It ultimately turned out that the engineers took this very stone and used it in the Soulanges Canal work. Therefore, as far as that part of the arrangement is concerned, it is settled. What I object to is the government undertaking in this way to legislate any man from the position he occupies at the present time, whatever it may be. A claimant's position ought to remain unchanged. I do not believe in passing a law to affect a case which is not finally settled. I am totally opposed to giving power to the government to expropriate a man's property, take what they like, and after a time return the balance to him. The Minister of Justice says that this amendment is necessary for the improvements to St. John harbour. If it is necessary, let the government come down and say that they require this power for the purpose of prosecuting that work. Then the people will be satisfied, and the members of the Senate will know that they have given the government power that is necessary to prosecute that particular work. That seems to me the businesslike way to conduct legislation, instead of putting in a clause that nobody can understand. It is all very well for special pleaders as the Minister of Justice is, but he blinds me and others who are not acquainted with the peculiarities of legal phraseology. I will not consent to interfere with the rights of individuals. If you pass a general law it is all right, but to make a contract with a man to-day and legislate to change the conditions to-morrow, is wrong in principle, and should not be permitted by Parliament. The hon. gentlemen had better get together and make some amendment to meet the case in point and settle this difficulty.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED —I suggest as an amendment to paragraph f that it shall not apply to any case in which fiat has been issued, or to any case that is now before the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Supposing a case has not been settled in court. Any man who has a case at the present time should be allowed to carry it out, whether fiat has been issued or not. Every man ought to have the right to conduct his own case, and if a wrong has been done, he ought to have recourse against somebody.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I doubt if there are any other cases than Stewart's case. I doubt if there can be, for this reason, that if the Crown had not the right to expropriate a railway, then there could not be any case; but owing to the doubt which has been expressed by Mr. Stewart, I feel that we should introduce some clause by which that doubt should be removed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quite agree with the hon. Minister of Justice in thinking that the clause before the committee does not apply to Stewart's case. If hon. gentlemen have a different opinion, they are quite within their rights to move an amendment to remove the doubts from their mind. The hon. gentleman from Rideau will see that the matter which he feels so indignant about does not arise under this clause at all. The clause which the hon. Minister of Justice suggests is simply to provide that where it is necessary to take a piece of railway for a public work, the government shall be allowed to take that and substitute another for it. It can only be retroactive in that same sense. The government may now take a piece of any road which stands in the way of a public work, and give the owner of the road another piece of road which will serve the same purpose. Surely the hon. gentleman cannot wish to hamper the government by not allowing such a proceeding as that in the case of a railway. The government do not propose to take any man's property. They simply take a small piece of road, and they lay down another piece of road to serve the same purpose. We should surely do that much to facilitate the public works of the country. The hon. minister proposes to allow the two lines to remain in the bill and to amend the clause so that it shall not apply to any case before the court in any way. I understand part of this railway has already been taken, and if you strike out these two lines you render the conduct of the government in that matter illegal, and leave the door open to the railway company to claim compensation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand that this railway belonging to the St. John Railway and Bridge Company, was a short railway which was used to approach a mill there, and I find now that the government of this country have expropriated the mill and paid them $100,000 for the mill, and now the object is to move the railway to their mill in order that the Crown may use the land where their railway was, making the railway much more convenient to them.

Now that the Crown has taken the mill and paid $100,000 for it, the railway has to be moved at all events, but they decline to move unless they get a very large sum for it in addition to the $100,000 they have already got; and therefore there can be no possible objection to the clause, and we are not doing any harm. Therefore, I see no great objection to the amendment suggested, excluding Mr. Stewart's case, although it is not very good legislation. I think another amendment might be moved as follows:—

The provisions of this section shall apply to litigation or controversy now existing between the Crown and the St. John Bridge Company.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is clear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that there is a mill which it is necessary to move.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Crown has taken it from the railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There was a mill which it was necessary to move in order to change the route of the track.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I said this railway led to a mill. We have already taken the mill and demolished it, and the railway does not lead to a mill. We have to get the railway out of the way in order that the Crown may construct a railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not the railway lead to the Intercolonial Railway station?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Yes. The short railway did not exactly lead to a mill, but past the mill, and it had a diversion to get into the station past the mill. The government have purchased all the property, for $100,000. It was an old mill and was no good. They gave $100,000 for about seven acres of land with the mill. The government took down the mill in order to enable them to make a shipping ground, and instead of having this short line of railway with a turn in it, they will have a perfectly straight line running back of where the mill was. The parties are friends of mine and I do not want to say anything about it. The hon. Secretary of State is under the impression that the Short Line Railway Company owned this property. They only owned the railway. Judge McLeod and others purchased this property themselves, I believe, as a speculation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not this the property that was offered the government for $100,000, and the Railway Department refused to give that amount and referred it to arbitration, and the arbitrators awarded $118,000? I understand it was offered for $100,000 and refused, then referred to arbitration, and the parties were awarded $118,000. The parties now contend they were entitled to that amount and Mr. Blair refused to give more than $100,000. Without giving an opinion about the matter, it strikes me that if arbitration means anything these parties are entitled to $118,000.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—As I understand, the company offered the property to the government for $100,000. Mr. Blair said he did not think it was too much, but would not like to take the responsibility of accepting it without ascertaining the opinion of local judges that it was fair value, because it might be said the government purchased the property through friendship, and he suggested that if they would submit the property to arbitration to see if it was worth $100,000, he would have no objection to give that amount. They assented to that, and it would appear the arbitrators considered it might be worth $118,000, but notwithstanding that, the government were not bound to give that amount. They were only bound to give $100,000, provided the arbitrators thought it was good value for that amount.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say, with regard to this property, that it is not the property here referred to. In the case which my hon. friend has mentioned, the parties offered to sell to the Department of Railways for public purposes, but the minister, while he did not object to the price of $100,000, thought it was better that the property should be expropriated and its value fixed, than that a private arrangement should be made with regard to the price, and the parties bound themselves in a written agreement that if anybody appointed to fix the value of the property fixed it at a higher value than $100,000, the sale should be at $100,000, and so, when they fixed it at $118,000, these parties wanted to repudiate the bargain into which they had entered and to get the $18,000 in addition to the $100,000. That was refused, and I think properly refused.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think so, under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The papers were before me, and it was clear that they were out of court.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How did they justify their repudiation?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—They thought the government would be extra liberal.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Was the property offered for $80,000?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would be quite willing to accept the amendment of the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That amendment would not meet the case we have in view, and I think my hon. friend had better move his amendment. Those parties whose property the government have undertaken to acquire—this railway which they have not the power to expropriate—have undertaken to enjoin them and enter an action for damages, and we have in my department protested against this proceeding. Nevertheless, I do not know but what a provincial judge may comply with the application of the party; and, supposing they did, what is done, having been done before a legal right was required, of course technically would give the party, notwithstanding any purchase or expropriation, an opportunity of persisting in an action for damages. That, we think, is highly improper under the circumstances, and we wish to guard against it. My hon. friend's proposed amendment in relation to a fiat, or in relation to proceedings against the Crown, would not meet the case, but I would be perfectly willing to add that to this clause in order to give protection to parties whose rights he thinks are interfered with.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I do not see what a particular case has to do with the passing of a bill like this. The law is made for all, and why should we be influenced by a special case before the courts? I am strongly against the idea of giving the government more power than private parties possess. If the government have taken a piece of land which they could not obtain by expropriation according to the existing law, I would be strongly against sanctioning their action now, and more so in the case of a government, because the government have more powers to treat with a private party than a corporation has. For these reasons I am opposed to this bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government have no power whatever to expropriate railway property. One railway company can obtain property from another railway company under such regulations as the Committee of the Privy Council direct, but the Crown has no such power, and the Crown is, therefore, powerless in the present case, where they desire to make improvements in the harbour of St. John. There is a short line of railway that is necessary to carry out those improvements and the government cannot expropriate that property. If the iron was not there, if it was simply a roadbed, they could expropriate it. The government now ask power to expropriate that railway, and in its place to hand over a railway that they will first construct for the convenience of the railway company. Before they can expropriate they must substitute another railway, so that the convenience of the railway company shall not be interfered with in the slightest degree. The amendment I suggested that the retroactive clause should apply only to that particular case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would meet all the objections.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I suggest the following amendment:

The provisions of this section are retroactive in so far as relates to the acquisition of railway property in the vicinity of St. John in connection with harbour improvements.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the bill, and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

BOUNTY ON STEEL AND IRON BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (161) "An Act respecting Bounties on Steel and Iron made in Canada."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I explained fully the provisions of this bill yesterday. We do not propose to deal harshly with investments which have already been made. We simply desire to give them notice that a time will come when they cannot receive any government pap.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a good deal of the old Tory still left in the hon. Secretary of State, and it oozes out occasionally.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS BILL.

CONSIDERATION POSTPONED.

The order of they day being called, House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill (137) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Protection of Navigable Waters."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the order of the day be discharged and placed on the orders of the day for to-morrow. I may mention that a very strong opinion was expressed by a gentleman from the maritime provinces that we ought not to interfere with the depth at present recognized in tidal waters, and therefore I propose to leave that as it is now twelve fathoms, and to apply a less depth in non-tidal navigable waters. The hon. gentleman from Montreal, who is not in his place just now, was a little alarmed that private prosecutors might institute proceedings in cases where a pail or two of ashes were thrown overboard. I think that should be avoided and I have prepared this amendment:

That no prosecution shall be commenced for the recovery of the penalty under this Act except with the approval of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

That will do away with any objection that a private party might institute proceedings against a navigation company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. minister propose to retain the words "ashes and rubbish" in the bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman will find the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not wedded to those words.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The word "ashes" is in the present law and I do not think we should disturb it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is as to tidal waters.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has never been applied to non-tidal. It is only when they came to institute prosecutions for dumping material in the various streams and interfere with navigation that it became necessary to consider the propriety of applying it to non-tidal waters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suggest that the hon. Secretary of State should obtain the opinion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on these points. I am informed that he does not think the words "ashes and rubbish" are absolutely necessary for the protection of the waters.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has been very busy and I have not had an opportunity to discuss this bill with him, and that is one reason why I desire the measure postponed till to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, 27th July, 1899.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

A PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That when the Senate adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until Wednesday next at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There is a very important report of the Divorce Committee to be considered to-morrow, and if it is postponed till Wednesday next the probability is that it will not pass the other House this session. The petitioner had to obtain evidence from California, which delayed proceedings.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I move that we ask for prorogation.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I think we ought to hear from the government. For some time past, prorogation has been anticipated by a good many members of this House, and a good many members of the other chamber, and if the government expect to prorogue Parliament next week, an adjournment now would be very unwise. But if prorogation is not expected for three or four or five weeks to come, we might wisely adjourn for seven or eight days.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I am decidedly opposed to short adjournments. I think we are getting into a bad habit in that regard. If there is no work to be done, we might have a long adjournment.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLE—It is a great mistake to have these short adjournments when the hon. gentlemen from Montreal wish to go home for few days every now and then. They should do no less than pay our board if we have to stay here three or four days extra every week to satisfy them. I do not think it is right to have any adjournment whatever.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—The hon. Minister of Justice is the best judge of that. If I understood the hon. gentleman who gave the notice, he said he thought our book would be clear to-day, and that there would be no objection to adjourning till Tuesday at least.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say that we have some business on the paper. A number of bills will come up from the House of Commons soon. The business there is in such a condition that if members desire to facilitate the progress of public business in that House, they might be wholly through in the course of two or three days, and, under these circumstances, it would be imprudent on our part to adjourn, because, on our return, we might find the House of Commons were through with the business and waiting for the reassembling of the Senate. Under the circumstances, I doubt the propriety of an adjournment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What about prorogation?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not addicted to prophesying.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—Would an adjournment from to-morrow night till Tuesday be safe?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—As far as I am concerned, it is impossible for me to say. I cannot know, because they might send up all the bills before them, except the Supply Bill, within the next twenty-four hours.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—They will not be here in the next ten days.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The estimates are not passed yet.

The motion was lost on a division.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to refer to a matter of a personal character. I am not a very sensitive person, but I have generally endeavoured to discharge my public duties here in a fairly honest manner, and in a manner that would be creditable to the people whose representative I am; and whilst I am prepared, as a public man, to expect a fair share of newspaper criticism, I do not think, with all the latitude newspapers have, or claim they have, that they have a right to misrepresent members of Parliament. There has been a good deal of criticism in the press of this country on my vote on the Drummond County Railway Bill and the Grand Trunk Railway Bill. I would not have referred to the matter on account of the reports that I saw in two or three papers, but I have received a marked copy of the Montreal Witness. The article is marked at both ends, and the paper is sent in a separate cover to me, as though they intended me to take a lesson from it. I have read the article, and I feel it my duty, in defense of myself, as well as of others associated with me in the vote that we gave on that occasion, to refer to the matter. We are accused of being friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway and voting in their interest on that occasion. I am sure that if the papers had taken reasonable care to investigate they would never have published that statement, because they are wide of the mark, certainly so far as I am concerned. When the attention of the Canadian Pacific Railway officials was called to a motion made in the Senate asking for the supplemental traffic arrangement which contained the ninety-nine years clause they felt considerable anxiety and wanted to get that part of the agreement modified. That part was changed, changed largely, if not entirely, as the result of the action of Conservative members of the Senate, who suggested the amendments to that portion of the agreement, and after that portion of the agreement was fixed, the Canadian Pacific Railway officials were satisfied, so far as I could see. I had very little talk with them on the subject, but I find that all the members of the Senate who are in any way interested in the Canadian Pacific Railway, voted with the government on that occasion. I also find that any lawyer in the Senate who is a solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway voted with the government. Consequently, it cannot be said that we, who voted against the bill, were voting in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when all the senators interested in the Canadian Pacific Railway voted the other way. Therefore, when we are accused of having been influenced by the Canadian Pacific Railway to vote as we did, the accusation in not borne out by the facts. The St. John Telegraph, an important newspaper in the maritime provinces, took the same view as the Witness, and refers to us as the dull members of the Senate—men who had not wit enough to discern the effect of the votes we gave. That is a serious accusation to make against us, that we are dull, stupid people, without wit enough to know the effect that our votes would have upon the country. So far as I am personally concerned, I feel it my duty, on all occasions, whenever there is a bill of any importance before the House, to examine it closely, and to listen attentively to the leaders on both sides, for and against, and to form my own opinion as to how I should vote. That is the duty of every hon. gentleman, to listen to the arguments on both sides and then use his best judgment. I voted conscientiously on the occasion I have referred to, and the St. John Telegraph says that I am a dull man without wit enough to know the consequences of my vote. I can only say, on my own behalf, and on behalf of the seventeen of us who voted against the government on the two measures to which I have referred, that we are all fairly successful business men. I cannot say the same for the editor of the Telegraph. That gentleman's father no doubt spent a considerable amount of money to educate him for the profession of the law, but he was unable to make a living at the bar, and had to abandon the profession. I know him, and know his history very well. He has been a failure in everything he has undertaken from that time to the present. Consequently he is badly qualified to advise me or any one how to vote. I am willing to listen to criticism from any one who has been a success in his own business, but I take exception to being criticised by such a man as the editor of the Telegraph. The Montreal Witness has been sent to me, I presume, by the editor of that paper, because it is nicely wrapped up, and there is an article marked, in which the history of the origin of the Senate, why it was created and its functions. There is one paragraph which I shall read, and on which I shall make a few remarks. It is this :

> Should the Liberals retain power long enough they would, there is little doubt, follow the precedent set by the Conservatives, and we should in time have a Senate all but solidly Liberal. It would not be so obsequious to party, perhaps, as the present body ; at least Liberals think that they have more individuality among them than Conservatives have

That also is wide of the mark. During my parliamentary experience—in two sessions in the House of Commons—I never knew in those two years, 1887 and 1888, a member of the Reform party voting with the government of that day. They always stuck to party lines, whilst I, a Conservative in the House at that time, on two occasions voted against the government that I had been elected to support. In the Senate, during my parliamentary experience, I have never known an hon. gentleman opposed to the Conservative party to vote with them except on one occasion. Since this government came into power I do not remember of more than one instance of a supporter of the government voting against them, that one exception was the hon. gentleman from Toronto, who said that the Yukon Railway Bill was of such an iniquitous character that he could not vote for it. When the editor of the Witness speaks of the Liberals as being more independent than the Conservatives, he is wide of the mark. So far as I can see in the Senate, the Conservatives have frequently voted on independent lines. I have done it on several occasions, so have other Conservatives. We were the means of defeating the Short Line Railway Bill which the late government was anxious to pass. Had it passed it would have destroyed any chance St. John had of becoming the winter port of Canada. There was at that time great prejudice against St. John on account of the fogs and the currents and the difficulty of navigating the Bay of Fundy with large vessels, and it would not have been hard to injure it as a winter port. But I, knowing the country well, felt that it would have been unjust to support that railway and boycott St. John, and with seven other members, who were among the seventeen members who voted against the Drummond County Railway Bill the other day, was the means of keeping St. John the winter port of Canada. I have always voted independently. When I was elected as a member of the House of Commons from East Assiniboia some of my constituents who were strong Conservatives felt that I was hardly a strong enough party man. They sent for me and asked whether I was at the time a Sir John Macdonald man or not. I told them that I was in favour of the general policy of the Conservative party, and if elected would support that policy; but if the party at any time introduced any measure that was not in the interest of the country, I intended to vote on the merits of the measure. I have done that on every occasion. I can truthfully and honestly say that although I am a strong believer in the National Policy and the generally progressive policy of the Conservative party, I have never voted with them on a measure that I did not think was in the best interest of the country, and I am prepared to give this government the same support when they are in the right. The first session in the House of Commons when Sir Charles Tupper was Finance Minister, a motion was made that the tariff on agricultural implements should be 25 per cent instead of 35 per cent. I voted for the 25 per cent duty on that occasion. Shortly afterwards the North-west Territories Bill was introduced, and contained no provision for voting by ballot. I asked the leader of the government if he intended to introduce the ballot in the North-west. He said, no, he did not want to do it then, but he promised me that before another election was held he would have the ballot arranged for, and on that condition I agreed to support the bill without offering any amendment or asking any change in it. But Mr. Watson, the member for Marquette, moved to add another clause to the bill providing for the ballot. When the division came I voted with Mr. Watson against the government. When a member tries to do what is right in certain matters, although he may be a strong party man with regard to other matters, it is hardly fair that newspaper men should undertake to severely criticise him. As regards my vote on the Drummond County and Grand Trunk Bills I felt that I voted in the right way. If I had to vote on those bills again to-morrow, I would vote the same way, because those measures will increase the national debt by $10,000,000 and give no adequate return for it. It is an unjustifiable expenditure of public money. It is done now, and time will tell who is right and who is wrong. I voted against the government on the Redistribution Bill and that is what the Witness is taking me to task about. I voted conscientiously on that bill. I am in favour of a redistribution of seats at the end of every ten years, after the census has been taken. I do not believe in a government tinkering with the redistribution of seats before every election. I do not believe that was the intention of the British North America Act in any respect. It is lowering the standing of Parliament when a government undertake to do anything of the kind. I believe in uniform constituencies, and think that each member should represent the proper unit of population, not that one man should represent 35,000 and another 10,000 or 12,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite argued that the government had pledged themselves before the country to redistribute the constituencies, but the country expected that to be a general redistribution. They did not expect it to be a redistribution of seats for political purposes. Therefore, on that ground, for one reason, I voted against the bill. There is no argument in the reference to county boundaries. County boundaries will apply to local legislatures, where municipalities are taxed in common with the local legislature to aid schools, bridges, roads and other things of that kind. Our duties are of a general character. Our postal system is one that applies to the whole of Canada. Our finance system, our militia system and our agricultural system apply to the whole of Canada. All the different departments of the Federal Parliament apply to the whole Dominion. A man in the North-west has as much right to vote for a matter affecting the maritime provinces as he has to vote for a matter affecting his own district. There is nothing local. County boundaries are not to be considered at all. I did vote with this government last session on the Franchise Act. On that occasion I gave the only vote, I may say, since I have been in the Senate that I have felt ashamed of. That was a measure that I think was altogether wrong and unworthy of the Parliament and government of Canada. There is no reason why a man in one province should have any more right to vote for more than one member of Parliament than a man in another province. In New Brunswick a man can vote in every constituency where his name appears on the voters' list. The same thing applies to Quebec, but in Ontario, Manitoba and the North-west it is one man one vote. In any corporation in Canada the franchise is uniform. We find that in an insurance company or railway company, some of the stock holders and directors may live in England or in the different provinces of Canada, but they have only one vote when it comes to managing the affairs of that society. But while a man in New Brunswick or in Quebec may have half a dozen votes, in Ontario he has only one. On that ground I felt ashamed that I voted for the Franchise Act. I voted for it because the government had ingeniously placed in the Plebiscite Bill a provision that the vote on the plebiscite was to be taken under the Franchise Act of 1898, and I had to vote for a measure that I did not believe in because if it were defeated the government might withdraw the bill and the plebiscite would not be taken, and throw the blame on the Senate. Again I think the representation of this Parliament should be on a uniform basis, and that is the reason why I opposed the late Redistribution Bill. I find in the city of St. John that a member would represent 40,000 or 45,000 people. In the county of St. John he would by this defeated Redistribution Bill, represent 9,000 or 10,000, a most unjustifiable state of things, I hesitate not to say that there is no common sense, or equality to recommend it to the intelligence of any school boy of ten years of age. I would not vote for that bill now if I voted alone against it. What is the result of an unequal distribution? If the unit of population for a representative is 22,000, my idea is to make every constituency 22,000 as nearly as possible. Then when you appeal to the people you get the decision of the majority. You have government by the people, but as it is now you have not that. You can take half a dozen small constituencies and give them half a dozen members, and take a less number of larger constituencies and give a member to each. Then the six small constituencies, with one-third of the population of the larger ones, control Parliament and the large constituencies are in a minority. I understand that the small constituencies voted for the present government, while the large constituencies voted for the opposition. The result is that the men who are administering the affairs of the country are doing so with a minority of the electors behind them. I desire to say that I felt that we did right in defeating that bill. If the government should be again returned to power and continue in the course they have been pursuing for the last three years, it would be a misfortune to the country, but if they are returned again and divide the constituencies of Canada equally, and make a fair and equitable distribution of seats, I would vote for such a measure, but to undertake to vote for a measure which will give one representative to 30,000 people and equal representation to 15,000 is altogether improper. In order to show that the late Redistribution Bill was not a bill that was genuine and honest, I may say that I do not believe that the hon. Minister of Justice would have framed a bill abolishing Bothwell if he had been elected as a member for that constituency. No man in Canada could make me believe that, and I do not think there are five men among the 5,000,000 population of Canada who believe it. The bill was not on a fair and proper basis but was intended to accomplish political purposes. I felt that an injustice had been done to me and that I had a right to give this House and the country the reasons why I voted as I did, because I did not speak on the last measure.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (176) "An Act to provide for the establishment of direct Sub-Marine Telegraphic Communication between Canada and Australasia."—(Mr. Scott.)

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (20) "An Act to incoporate the Zenith Mining and Railway Company."—(Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (145) "An Act to amalgamate the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway Company and the Canada Atlantic Railway Company under the name of the Canada Atlantic Railway Company."—(Mr. Clemow.)

THE EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The House resumed, in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (D) "An Act to amend the Expropriation Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This bill was left over on account of the retroactive provision at the end of the amendment. I stated the object in view for the insertion of this provision, and I have prepared the following amendment:

The provisions of this section are retroactive as well as prospective, so far as they apply to the acquisition of property in connection with the improvements of the harbour at the city of St. John, N.B., only.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Will the hon. gentleman tell us about this St. John harbour affair? We do not know why it should apply to that harbour and not apply to others.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may state the same thing that I stated yesterday and the day before. Not having the power of expropriation in the case, and the parties having applied to the courts for liberty to enjoin the contractor from proceeding further, an injunction may be granted at any moment, and as we are endeavouring to expropriate the property, we do not think we should be enjoined, or any suit for damages should be entered against the department. We propose to expropriate under the Expropriation Act, and if these parties are entitled to any compensation beyond that which is provided, then we are ready to compensate them; but we do not propose that they shall take advantage of the position at this moment, in addition to the value of the property taken, to undertake to collect damages against the department.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—If I understand the amendment, it is that the retroactive feature of it will not apply to any other case than that of the improvements of St. John harbour.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—What is to be expropriated?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I described it yesterday. The government have, under the Expropriation Act, no power to expropriate railways. This company has a railway running down to the harbour, and the work which the government have left there, according to the plans, will cut into the property belonging to the St. John Railway and Bridge Company. Their road was deflected from a straight line by a mill property. That mill property has been acquired by the government, and instead of the road being deflected, if it is continued straight on it will enable us to carry on the improvement. We propose to straighten the line and bestow it on them, and take the portion of the old line which we require. The company asked an exorbitant figure, and we are asking for this legislation, leaving the Exchequer Court to fix the value of the property which we take, if it is worth anything after we have substituted this other property, which will give them a straight line instead of a deflected line, in its place.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—If you have no right and want to expropriate, there is no necessity for saying that the provisions of this section, are retroactive. You have not expropriated. You may take the power to do so in the future. When you expropriate you take experts to prove the value, and why should you not pay the value?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We are not objecting to paying. Having no anticipation of difficulty in the matter, a contract was let. If the court was to undertake to prevent them proceeding with the work a whole summer would be lost. All we are asking here by this retroactive clause is that no legal proceeding shall be taken against us pending the expropriation of the property. The value of the property will be fixed in the ordinary way, but at the present moment we have no power to expropriate a property on which a railway is located, so we would at this moment, perhaps, be open to an action for damages.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—You have already commenced the work?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Why did you begin it until you had everything ready?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The Minister of Justice has proposed an amendment which he says relates to the harbour of St. John. Is there any other work to which this retroactive clause will apply?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—There are other properties the government may want to take.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We can, under the existing law, take all other properties except a railway.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—But why make this retroactive? Retroactive legislation is bad legislation, because, if the government wish to take advantage of an individual by retroactive legislation they can do so. I do not like that, and when this speaks of the harbour of St. John, I think the hon. gentleman should confine himself to the very property he wants.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is what I have done.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Under the amendment, all improvements in St. John harbour would be subject to this retroactive legislation. Supposing you took anybody's property in that way? Why not mention the railway you speak of and not apply it generally to all improvements in the harbour of St. John? We do not know what improvements you contemplate. I do not see that it will hurt anybody to specify what you want. It is not a laughing matter to individuals. I do not want this retroactive legislation to cover all the improvements in the harbour of St. John—to cover what has taken place in the past, or will take place in the future. If the hon. gentleman will confine the clause to the case that he wants to deal with, I am perfectly willing, if he says he cannot get along without it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is all the minister is getting. The only change which this bill makes in the law is that it puts a railway on the same footing as any other public highway. There is only one railway owned by a private company on the St. John side of the harbour. The Canadian Pacific Railway is on the other side. The only work to which this bill can apply is just this one railway, owned by a private company, which runs to the harbour of St. John. The hon. gentleman may feel perfectly easy on the subject. The amendment which is proposed is the one asked for by the hon. gentleman opposite.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not understand it that way. Do you mean to say that that is the only improvement in the harbour?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, but that is the only railway which is to be interfered with, and it is only to that railway that this clause applies.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I will take the hon. gentleman's word for anything reasonable, but that is not reasonable. Do you mean to say that the harbour of St. John is perfect, that the government do not want to make other improvements?

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman reads the amendment he will see that it is simple.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have heard it read.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The only change is that the government are authorized to expropriate a railway. There is only one railway which can be expropriated, and consequently this applies only to that railway.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The improvements in the harbour of St. John.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—The amendment is, I think, fair and reasonable, and one that the government might well ask for. The amendment affects only one particular railway, and I think the provision is perfectly fair and just.

Hon Mr. TEMPLE—The way that I understand the amendment at present is, it does not interfere with any other road, only the one that runs from the bridge down to the station at St. John. If that is the case I am satisfied that the government are perfectly right in exchanging the road. They exchange the road and improve the line rather than injure it. The government will have to pay whatever is right for what they take by building a new road and giving up the old road. I do not think there is any trouble about it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am opposed to this principle entirely. It is a most extraordinary thing if the government have closed this deal without knowing their position. They should have first inquired whether they had the power to expropriate this property. It appears now they have not. They should have deferred closing the deal until they had the necessary power to expropriate by Act of Parliament. Instead of that, they did as they always do; everything they undertake is done in such a way that they create difficulty in the future. It would have been easy for them in the first place to have inquired about this before they entered into an arrangement. No man will feel safe in making an arrangement with the government, because if they find they are wrong, they can come to Parliament and ask for retroactive legislation to give them an advantage. I shall never subscribe to a doctrine of that kind, because the parties who entered into the arrangement in good faith, knew their position perfectly well, that the government have no right to expropriate that property, and now the government are going to legislate them out of court. I do not think it is fair or honest, and I am surprised that the government have, on so many occasions, endeavoured to act in this way. They do not seem to make sufficient inquiry into the why and wherefore of what they do, and then they have to come down to Parliament for such legislation as this. It was the same with the Drummond County and Grand Trunk Railway deals. It was all done in a hurry; they could not wait to get information. What will the people of St. John say about this legislation? Under it they may be harshly treated. Suppose this was between two individuals, would one of the parties have a right to come here and ask for legislation, in his own favour? I do not think he would, and I do not see why the government should not do as any honest business man would do, find out their position before making a deal with anybody, and as soon as they know their position, let them go ahead. I suppose the Minister of Railways made this arrangement without inquiring unto the circumstances attending it, and has given rise to all this discussion through his own carelessness. I do not think the country would favour this legislation. Until we find that the people of St. John are satisfied with this bill, we should defer action. If they agree to it all right, but I for one will not be a party to taking away any man's rights by legislation of this kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know whether my lay mind leads me astray in reading this amendment, and consequently I shall have to be guided a good deal by the opinions of gentlemen who have had experience in the law. You propose to repeal paragraph f of section 3 of the Expropriation Act, and substitute another clause, including railways, thereby giving the government power to expropriate a railway and build another railway to give the owners in substitution and in mitigation of damages. Then it provides that the provisions of the section shall be retroactive as well as prospective, so far as they apply to the acquisition of property in connection with the improvement of the harbour of the city of St. John. Just as soon as the expropriation of property, which is necessary for carrying on these improvements, has taken place, will not the whole of the clause be nugatory? Will it apply to any other future or past transaction? The amendment makes the whole clause retroactive and prospective, so far as this work is concerned. That having been disposed of, do the powers given in the clause cease to exist? That is what I should like some lawyer to answer. It seems to me the courts might so interpret it; or they might say that the words "retroactive and prospective" apply only to the works in St. John harbour, leaving the balance of the clause as a part of the law to apply in the future. If the court put that interpretation upon it, how would that affect the case to which attention was called yesterday, when we were considering this matter? I understand that a piece of railway was expropriated. The case is now in court to ascertain the value of that railway. Supposing the lawyer on behalf of the Crown says "That cannot be considered, as we had no right to expro-priate," and as this amendment only applies to the St. John case, would they not be thrown out of the court and the owner of the piece of railway lose the value of it? I confess I am not lawyer enough to interpret that clause, but that is the way it strikes me in looking at it from these two standpoints. If my latter interpretation be correct, and the courts should so decide, then it will be an injustice to the man from who they have taken this piece of railway. I do not wish to throw any difficulties in the way of the government proceeding with their improvements, but I do say—and I think the Senate is in accord with the sentiments which have been uttered by the hon. member from Rideau Division—that if this bill is to affect private rights in any way, it ought not to pass. I had an amendment which I am quite sure would cover it, but if the amendment before the House will bear the interpretation that the minister intends it should cover and nothing more, I would not think of moving it. The proposed amendment will cover every point raised:

> The provisions of this section are retroactive and apply to past as well as to future transactions only so far as they relate to the St. John Railway Company; but the provisions of this section shall not be retroactive otherwise, and shall not affect otherwise any act, matter, proceeding, undertaking or expropriation, heretofore had or begun, and shall not otherwise in any way affect or prejudice any claim, demand, petition or proceeding now or heretofore had, made, begun, or pending against Her Majesty the Queen, or against the Dominion of Canada, but every such claim, demand, petition or proceeding shall be heard, determined and dealt with in the matter only as if this section had not been passed.

I am quite satisfied that that would cover everything, and I do not see why, if my hon. friend only intends this clause to apply to St. John and the improvements that are going on there, that it should not be accepted. I may say I sent it over to the hon. gentleman to look at, but I am under the impression that he does not approve of it. Perhaps he will give his reasons for objecting to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The only difference between the two amendments is that the one proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition is about eight times as long as the other one. They mean the same thing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad to hear my hon. friend say that. It was intimated a little time ago that he was the power behind the throne, and if the two amendments are just the same, I shall be gratified if he will accept it. It will meet my views and the views of those who look at the matter as I do.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it would be better if the wording was restricted to the particular company—the St. John Bridge Extension Company. They now have a railway which is practically in the water, built upon piles running from the cantilever bridge over the St. John River to the Intercolonial Railway station. It is a means of communication by which the Canadian Pacific Railway reaches the Intercolonial Railway to connect for Halifax. It is rather circuitous in its route. Before the government can expropriate that railway, they have to provide another railway, and if it should not be equally convenient and satisfactory, compensation must be made to the company. That must be all done before the government can take possession of the railway now under discussion. Certainly no harm can arise to the company if they get a railway in exchange for it. The provisions of the clause are very clear on that. The clause reads:

> But before discontinuing or altering any railway or public road, &c., another convenient railway in lieu thereof shall first be constructed and handed over to the parties.

So that their traffic would not be intercepted for a single hour, because all that must be done in advance. If I am correctly informed by a gentleman who knows the topography of the locality, the proposed railway would run across in a direct line, instead of a circuitous route. The company own the right of way and no more, and the government have expropriated the land on each side. They are practically running on government property, except that the company own the right of way, and the difficulty we have is in not knowing the exact condition of the contract given out for the improvement of the harbour, and that is the only reason why the question of retroactive legislation is being discussed. But certainly if the parties are to get a railway in lieu of the present one before anything is done, they cannot be prejudiced.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no objection to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that this same company, the St. John Bridge and Railway

Extension Company borrowed money from the government at one time. It is called an Extension Company because it extends from the Canadian Pacific Railway on one side to the Intercolonial Railway on the other. There should be some way of limiting the operation of the clause to the St. John Bridge Company.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—This company owns simply the right of way. Why not ask that the government should have the right to expropriate. I do not think we should put the retroactive clause in it. I do not know that we have passed any bills with retroactive clauses.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The statement made by the hon. Secretary of State makes very clear the intention of the government in reference to the matter. Nobody objects to that. What is feared is that this clause might affect other interests. No one on this side of the House, so far as I know, has objected to giving the government all the power that they require to deal with the St. John harbour, providing the interests of all other parties, whether in court or out of court, are not jeopardized.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—This Act only applies to a railway. There is no other railway at the city of St. John except the Intercolonial Railway and the street railway consequently it cannot affect any other railway company.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I propose the following amendment:

The provisions of this section are retroactive as well as prospective so far as they apply to the acquisition of property belonging to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company in connection with the improvement of the harbour at the city of St. John, N.B.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Why put in the word retroactive.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The reason is that these parties are endeavouring to bring a suit against the government for the work being carried on in connection with this property by the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do they own the foreshore?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They run across the harbour.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do the railway company, in their expropriation for building the short line, own down to low tide or high tide?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is built on piles in the water.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am satisfied that the disposition of the House is to grant the legislation which my hon. friend seems to want, but there is a doubt as to whether, notwithstanding that provision or that exception, it would not apply to other cases now pending before the Exchequer Court. I wish simply to point out to the House the doubt with which this question is invested. The Minister of Justice states to this House that there is not at present power vested in the Crown to expropriate railways under the the Expropriation Act, and yet in the Stewart case the Crown have actually expropriated a railway in connection with a quarry, and I hold in my hand a plan prepared by the Crown, in pursuance of the Act, in which the railway is shown as having been expropriated by the Crown. All that we ask is that an amendment along the lines proposed by my hon. friend from Hastings should be attached to the bill showing that it is not to apply to other cases, outside of the St. John harbour case, which are now pending in the Exchequer Court. If my hon. friend will add that simple proviso to the amendment, reserving to himself all the rights he may wish to exercise in regard to the St. John harbour case, we are quite satisfied that the amendment should pass.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have told my hon. friend that this is an amendment to subsection f of section 2 of the Act, adding "railways" to the property that may be expropriated. With regard to the case to which the hon. gentleman refers, that comes under a wholly different provision of the law, and is one that is not touched in any way by the provision of this bill. I am not proposing to hurt the parties to whom he referred, but I do not intend to insert anything in the bill to make the rights of the Crown less than they are at the present time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We are not asking that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The case to which my hon. friend refers—the Stewart case—is wholly apart from this. The road which was built was not an ordinary railway. It was a mere road for the purpose of giving access to the quarry, and that was a road which was, whether rightly or wrongly, expropriated by the government under section 5 of the Expropriation Act, which reads as follows :—

That whenever any gravel, earth, sand or water is taken as aforesaid from a public work——

This was a short distance from the Soulanges Canal, which was a public work.

——the minister may lay down the necessary sidings, water pipes, or conduits, or tracks over or through any land intervening between the public work and the land on which such material or water is found, whatever the distance is, and all the provisions of this Act, except such as relate to the filing of plans and descriptions, shall apply and may be used and exercised to obtain the right of way from the public work to the land on which such materials are situated.

What the Railway Department have done is to expropriate, or take possession, of that road in connection with the quarry, as a road lying between the quarry and the work which was being constructed. The section further says :

And such road may be acquired for a term of years, or permanently, as the minister thinks proper, and the powers in this section contained may at all times be exercised and used in all respects after the public work has been constructed for the purpose of repairing or maintaining the same.

I say that whatever action has been taken was taken under that. It was not and could not be taken under the section which I propose to amend. My hon. friend will see that anything relating to the railway to which he refers—at least the tramway lying between the quarry and the canal—is not germane to the section that is now under consideration. I have endeavoured to make the provision explicit. I have endeavoured to hedge it about with the protection which the hon. gentlemen think is necessary. I have introduced the explicit words referring to this particular property—although it was unnecessary, because it was the only property to which the section had any reference—that has been taken, and I do not propose to go any further. If hon. gentlemen see fit to put impediments in the way I shall ask the committee to rise and report progress.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I am perfectly satisfied with what the hon. Minister of Justice has said. I think the amendment confines the operation of this clause entirely to the improvement in the harbour at St. John, and although St. John is a rival of Halifax still I should be very sorry if they should, not get fair play. Therefore, I wish to see the clause adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest allowing the bill to go through committee now, and take the third reading to-morrow. In the meantime, we could study the amendment. I do not think the hon. Minister of Justice has shown that spirit which should be exhibited by an hon. gentleman leading the House, and having this measure in hand. He says if we throw impediments in the way he will ask the committee to rise. I suppose the same power which would add any clause to the bill or any amendment to it, might prevent the committee rising.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman can do as he pleases, I am not going to interfere or to ask him to do anything.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have been endeavouring to assist the hon. minister to obtain the power he requires, but I want to prevent an injustice being done to anybody else. I do not think the matter has been dealt with in a manner to justify his remarks and he is not at all likely to succeed——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He does not care much.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course we may be wrong. I asked the hon. gentleman to put that amendment upon the notice paper so that we can see what it is. I am not sufficiently versed in the intricacies of law to know what effect it will have.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Every member of this House has a right to express his opinion upon any subject, and if he has a pronounced opinion he has a right to express it in a pronounced manner, and the duties of the hon. Minister of Justice, though they may be onerous and responsible, are no greater in regard to the legislation passed by this House than the duties devolving upon each hon. member. This is not the first occasion on which a lecture, in not an amiable way, has been given to hon. members of this House because they have considered it their duty to express their opinions upon any particular matter. It seems to me the hon. leader of this House should consider it commendable on the part of hon. members to closely analyse all legislation which comes to this House, because I do not think he can say—nor can any hon. gentleman on the other side of this House say—that the close analysis which may be made by any member of this House in regard to legislation, particularly of a technical character, is made for the purpose of throwing any obstruction in the way of the government. We are not to be like a lot of dumb sheep, to be driven in regard to matters which may come before us for our consideration. We have a duty to perform, and I propose performing that duty, no matter how distasteful it may be to hon. gentlemen who may hold an opposite view. I want it to be understood when I express myself in regard to legislation, that I divest myself of my political feelings, and ignore the fact that I belong to one party or the other, and I do it in the public interest and from a sense of justice, which I think should be applied to the matter under consideration. I take a stand which will appeal to my conscience and judgment on all matters of public legislation, and I have pursued that course in this particular matter and have had no desire whatever to in any way obstruct the government, but rather to assist in placing legislation upon the statute-book.

Hon Mr. MILLS—Hon. gentlemen are at liberty to take whatever line they may consider proper, both in regard to this and every other government measure. I am not questioning their right, but I also say that, as a minister of the Crown, I have certain rights here, and I am simply asserting those rights. I have stated that I have endeavoured to meet the views of hon. gentlemen. I have framed the amendments which I believe will accomplish their object. I do not propose to load down measures for which I am responsible with the verbiage of the last century. I may say, as I said before, that if the amendment is not satisfactory, I am prepared to ask the committee to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. The hon. gentleman has said he is exercising his right. I am not questioning his right. I am simply maintaining my own right, and that I intend to do. I may say to hon. gentlemen that I have submitted, with a good deal of patience, to criticisms of government measures. I venture to say that there is scarcely a measure introduced by the government, however trifling, that has not been subjected to criticism and proposed amendments, while a whole volume of private legislation has gone through with less observation than has been made upon a single measure of the administration. My hon. friend opposite may say that he has divested himself of his political feeling, and has approached this measure in a spirit of impartiality. Certainly I am not questioning the sincerity of his observation, but that is not the impression that has been made upon my mind in this matter, and I have nothing to withdraw. My hon. friend sitting opposite has read me a lecture, and the hon. gentleman from Calgary has given me another lecture. I have heard a great many this session. I have listened to them, and in the interest of the public business of which I have had charge, I have frequently said nothing in reply. I have nothing to withdraw from what I have said. This is a government measure for which I am responsible, and if the measure, as now proposed, cannot be allowed to be taken out of committee, why, my hon. friends, of course, must decide for themselves as to what course they will pursue.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think my hon. friend is altogether wrong in questioning the spirit of fairness in the minds of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House and drawing a comparison between the reception of private legislation and public legislation in this House. The hon. member must not forget the fact that private legislation goes to the committee and is there subject to the sifting which it is the duty of this House to give to public legislation on the floor of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLE—I think there is a misunderstanding in regard to this bill. Hon. gentlemen do not seem to understand the situation. I know something about the location of the road which the government wish to take.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We do not want to interfere with that at all. It is other interests we are speaking about.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLE—Other interests should not be mixed up with it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If they confine it to that we do not find fault.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLE—As I understand it, the government want to take the railway as it now stands and substitute another. Without doing that they cannot go on with the harbour improvements. The government want to go on with their work adjoining this road, and have to expropriate a portion of it, and unless they do, they cannot go on with the work.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The Minister of Justice having assented to the proposed amendment shows that we are justified, so far, in endeavouring to make the measure as fair as possible. He himself suggested the amendment, therefore we are not open to a charge of partisanship. The fact is the majority, the Conservatives, have carried every measure here this session. Where would the Grand Trunk and Drummond County Bills have been if it had not been for the Conservatives? I want to do what is right and fair, and will do so while I am in this House. I am not going to be tied down and prevented from giving utterance to my opinions, whatever they may be. I do not want to be lectured as being actuated by a partisan spirit. Let the government come down with well considered measures. I contend that they do not do that. They think themselves all powerful, and that they can carry anything. That is the spirit they have shown all through this session. Had they given this subject proper consideration they would not have brought down this bill until they had made proper provision for carrying it out. But instead of that they made a contract and got into a tangle with this company, and now they want the Senate, without proper consideration, to pass this bill for the purpose of protecting them from the consequences of wrong acts. I contend that the government in authorizing this work without proper inquiry and taking proper precautions, have done wrong. Any business man finding that he had not power to go on with the work would have endeavoured to get the matter put right before entering into a contract, but the government thought they could put this bill through without investigation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They did not know their men.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not think they did. I do not think they appreciated the temper of the Senate. This will be a lesson for them in the future to let them consider their measures in a proper way and give us a full statement, and I do not believe there would be a dissentient voice in this House in carrying any fair measure.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—With all due respect, I would suggest to the Minister of Justice that he has not, in this instance, taken the right course. I can easily conceive anybody in his position, responsible for government measures, if an amendment was proposed to a particular bill, which in his judgment was decidedly one that interfered with the object the bill had in view, I can understand, that as a responsible minister of the Crown, he would not accept it. But when hon. gentlemen are trying to perfect the bill, and when the minister has acknowledged that it is open to some of the objections that have been raised particularly by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and the hon. gentleman from Calgary, I cannot see why, under such circumstances, he should accuse this side of the House of acting in a partisan spirit, and threaten to withdraw the bill. This Senate is an independent body, and has a right to discuss freely all the measures brought before it, and certainly we cannot be taken to task for endeavouring, if we possibly can, to improve a particular clause of the bill. If we are to be told that a bill will be withdrawn if it is interfered with, we might just as well give up criticising bills altogether.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Allowing the government have been guilty of all the crimes the hon. gentleman from Rideau Division has charged them with, and I am not saying they are not, is it right to punish the city of St. John for their sins? The amendment moved by the Minister of Justice covers the whole point. It simply applies to this road in St. John. It cannot possibly apply to any other. If this bill does not pass, what happens? The season for working in this country is short, and if obstacles are put in the way, the people of St. John will not have this harbour which they want to have improved. In Halifax the government commenced an elevator, and they delayed so long about it, that a whole year was lost. It was promised to be finished last autumn. It is not finished yet, and perhaps will not be in operation until another year has passed. Halifax has suffered by this delay, and I do not wish St. John to suffer in the same way. Hon. gentlemen should forget the sins of the government instead of whipping them over the back of St. John. Let us pass the bill, and allow St. John to have the improvements for the great trade of next autumn.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Expropriation Bill has had rather a curious history. It has been before the chamber on several occasions. Hon. gentlemen will recollect, first, clause one was struck out; then, on another occasion, clause 2 was struck out; then clause 3 was struck out, and then clause 4, which is the end of the bill. The Minister of Justice thought the change in the law was important. It did not meet with the approval of this chamber, and the government submitted with a good grace. There was no remonstrance. Then a proposal was made from the other side that if there was any particular case which needed legislation, the House would give facilities for carrying it through. The minister prepared a clause, having in view one particular case. The condition of the work was uncertain, whether the rights the railway have at the present moment had been at all disturbed. The Crown had expropriated the land on each side for the greater part of the way. So this clause now under consideration was drawn with special limitations to this particular case, not making it a general law. If hon. gentlemen will reflect for a moment, the Minister of Justice took a great deal of pains to satisfy the House. Naturally, the retroactive clause was challenged. Every one expected that it would be, but the Minister of Justice explained that the contract having been given out, it was impossible to say whether the parties had taken such steps as would enable them to apply to the courts before this bill was passed. They know this legislation is being promoted, and they may, before this receives the Royal Assent, apply to the court and the court might grant an injunction, and a very serious embarrassment would arise. Then the proposal was made to limit the retroactive clause to this case only. The clause, as now proposed, certainly confines its action, so far as the retroactive part of it is concerned, to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company. It is perfectly clear that it touches no other interest, no other lands, no other franchise or rights than the St. John Bridge and Railway Company, and therefore it ought fairly to be allowed to go.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has dealt with just half the bill, which was not restricted to this particular work.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not originally.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You repealed a section of the Expropriation Act and substitute another for it, and the substitution was to affect all transactions—not only the case at St. John, but all others in the Dominion, if there were any. Then objection was taken to the retroactive clause, believing, as many of us did, that it would interfere with private rights. Then the hon. gentleman said he would restrict the retroactive effect to the St. John case. The only point that has suggested itself to those that have taken that view, is as to whether it goes further, and I suggested a minute or two ago that the committee might now rise and we could consider that point at the third reading. I am surprised to hear some hon. members say that this clause should pass irrespective of what effect it might have on other interests, because St. John might suffer if it did not become law. Nobody proposes to interfere with the power the government seeks in reference to St. John, and why the whole argument should be based on that one point, I am at a loss to know. The Secretary of State has made two speeches and confined himself to that point. He has not answered the questions I asked as to whether this would affect any other interest, or whether the clause would cease to have any effect after the St. John harbour case had been dealt with. Nobody has objected to giving all the powers necessary for the government to carry on the St. John harbour improvements. I believe the House is prepared to give the government all the power they want to deal with this case in St. John. Nobody has suggested or insinuated a desire to interfere with the improvements in St. John harbour. The Minister of Justice says, I have read him lectures on several occasions. I repudiate that. I have made suggestions to the hon. gentleman, and he has read us lectures. Being rather refractory pupils we have not accepted them in the spirit he would like. That is the only reason why I made the remarks I did. I have no desire to read him a lecture, but I will take precious good care that one will not be read to me with impunity. Let the amendment pass and we will think over it until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The House last night was prepared to accept the amendment of the hon. Secretary of State, providing it had been tacked on to the amendment made by this side of the House. I would furthermore say it was not until the House was about to rise last night that the hon. Secretary of State proposed it, and afterwards the hon. Minister of Justice consented to limit this amendment to St. John harbour, and it was at the instance of the Minister of Justice himself that the matter was postponed until to-day.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And furthermore, the Minister of Justice himself must recollect this, that he has special opportunity to study the application of all legislation brought down by the government in regard to public measures, whereas this House has not that opportunity. It is not until a bill is presented to the House, and we listen to the explanations of the minister, who has carefully gone into the matter, that we can determine what may be the application of that legislation, and the limitations that should be placed upon it, or the various interests which may be affected by it. All those questions have to be taken into consideration by the minister in bringing down legislation of this nature.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was agreed to.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

RECONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

The order of the day being called:

Third reading Bill (U) "An Act to amend the Yukon Territory Act."

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House for further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was understood when the committee rose and the bill stood for third reading that I should ask the House, instead of reading the bill a third time, to go back into committee to make certain amendments, to give representation in the Yukon country and for other purposes. That renders it necessary to revise the bill to some extent. I propose to strike out section 5 of the Act and substitute a clause which I have prepared, and which I will hand to the chairman.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Are these members elected from the entire Territory?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. I take it they will be better able to frame regulations than we are. My view has been that the population there is so variable—people constantly coming in and those who have come in leaving the Territory—that a period of two years, perhaps, would be as long as the elective members should be elected for.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not proposed to bring the law into effect at once upon its passage?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. It may be necessary to enter into correspondence, and to make some ordinances with regard to the holding of the election and so on, and that might well be done before any order or proclamation should be issued.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What does the hon. minister estimate the present population of the Territory?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—About 25,000, of whom, I suppose, 5,000 are British subjects.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why confine it to two members? Does not the hon. gentleman think it would be a reasonable concession to give to 25,000 population six representatives—as many elective members as nominative members?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I think the measure had better be tentative, especially where you have so large a foreign population.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What are the qualifications for voting?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Naturalized or natural born British subjects.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Residing one year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One year's residence.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Male subjects?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have no objection to putting in those words if the hon. gentleman thinks necessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am in favour of female suffrage.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In England where a British subject has a right to vote, women have offered to vote and it has been held that they were not entitled to vote, and that it requires an express provision to give them that right.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have prepared a clause which I propose to substitute in lieu of clause eight. I am told that in some cases the mining camps may be of considerable extent, and if there are no sanitary regulations, the streams become polluted and produce typhoid fever. In order to protect the health of the inhabitants, it is necessary that the council should have power to make regulations of this sort.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Will you tax the district that has representation for the improvement of districts outside of the representation? In the North-west council we had representation, for instance, where I lived, the Qu'Appelle district. That district embraced 1,000 square miles. When we had 1,000 population in 1,000 square miles we had representation. Just outside of the district we had no power to tax the people or spend money. Under this bill would the council have the power to tax the country outside of the representation?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There has been no division created by this bill, whatever may be done hereafter by the council itself. They may make ordinances for holding the election, and may suggest a division of the Territory. They are very differently situated from an agricultural population. They will be settled in groups, and as a very large proportion of them are foreigners, the representation, of course, will be confined to a very small number, and it is rather for the purpose of keeping the council in touch with the feeling and wants of the people that the representation and the power of taxation should be given.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The two elected members are to be elected from the whole Territory?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—You do not make districts.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. The North-west being an agricultural country, you could map it out into districts, but you cannot do that with the Yukon country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I approve of extending representative institutions to the Yukon, but this legislation is somewhat unique in imposing enumerated restricted powers on the council. In the first place, the council cannot exercise powers except that are given to it, as all the powers are vested in Parliament or in the Governor in Council, I fail to understand why you should place restrictions upon the powers you confer. You give them certain rights, and it seems unnecessary to say they shall not do so and so, because they can only exercise the rights you directly give them. They are not a province. They do not get their powers through the British North America Act, and consequently their powers are conferred by affirmative legislation and why proceed with all those restrictions? I should also like to point out that you give certain implied powers of a municipal character. It is wise to have our legislation as uniform as possible. In defining the powers of the assembly in the North-west Territories, you adhere as closely as possible to section 92 of the British North America Act. If you look at section 13 of the North-west Territories Act, you will find all the powers incorporated there that are to be exercised by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, very similar to those enumerated in section 92 of the British North America Act, and in that you simply give the assembly municipal powers in general terms. The language is, "Municipal institutions in the Territories." That is precisely the language used in the British North America Act from which the provinces get their powers to erect or organize municipalities in a province. We have copied the same language in the Territories Act. I see no reason why you should not have done it in the Yukon Act. Under these broad powers, viz., "municipal institutions," the Commissioner in Council, or the Governor in Council, as the case may be, could have created such a municipal organization for sanitary purposes, as that which you have just mentioned, without defining the restrictive powers, which will, in my judgment, be mischievous when you come to exercise them. In the Territories they have various classes of municipal government: there is the city municipality, the town municipality, the village municipality, the statute labour district, which is of a very broad character, and without involving all the machinery or giving to the area the machinery necessary for an advanced municipality, yet it can exercise power with respect to roads. I mention this to show how elastic the power may be where it is in general language, and how satisfactorily it proves to a provisional government of that nature. It seems to me such negative legislation as you have here would prove mischievous, and it would have been much more salutary to have followed the precedents already established.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Last year when I prepared the Yukon Bill it had no such provision. It was thought best that the bill should be cut down owing to the very wide difference there was between the conditions of a mining population going in, a large number of whom were mere migratory people, and those who go into an agricultural country with a view of establishing a permanent settlement. The hon. gentleman will see that we give pretty broad powers to the Governor in Council and to the Commissioner in Council in that country, and we did not restrain them within those limits which apply in the North-west Territories, because the North-west Territories Act provide that the powers of the council should never extend wider than the powers of the province.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Should be subject to Dominion legislation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Dominion is constantly legislating in these matters, but in this we have provided that the Commissioner in Council may make ordinances for the peace, order and good government of the Territory. They may undertake to deal with some matters beyond the power possessed by a province and so, that being the case, it was necessary to set certain restrictions, that they should not uudertake to levy customs duties, nor excise duties, nor should they undertake to legislate in any way in contravention of the Act of the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What necessity is there to say they shall not levy customs duties? You could not strain the Act in any way to say that they might exercise such power.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If you state that they may have power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of the country, why not, because you are delegating powers that are broader, it may be, than those that pertain to any of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think so. Parliament could not give any province power to levy customs duties. Parliament cannot delegate its authority to an outside body.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is a question about which there is a difference of opinion. In some cases it has been held that the legislature could delegate authority. In the case of the Queen vs. Hodge, my hon. friend will see that was held. This Parliament being a sovereign body it is not exercising delegated powers. An authority to which Parliament would delegate a power cannot delegate it, but Parliament gives it here to the extent of its authority, and therefore its powers are sovereign, and there is not that restriction on the power of delegation which would be imposed, say, on legislature of the United States, where it is held that the power of any legislative body is a delegated power from the people at large. So that there were other restrictions inserted with regard to taxation. Those were deemed necessary. They were in the bill, my hon. friend will see, last year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, I know. I thought they were mischievous then, and I did not approve of the insertion of them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If I were not pressed with other duties, and had I a little more time to consider the subject at large, I might be able to dispense with some of the provisions set out in the bill of last year and this year. But I think we are proceeding on perfectly safe ground. The power we are giving is tentative. We do not know exactly how the people there may exercise the power that is delegated to them by the provisions of this bill. We have said that the moment they have elected members of the council the power of taxation may be exercised.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In that connection the hon. gentleman has not provided in the bill that they shall only impose direct taxation. By implication they might have the right to impose indirect taxation, which none of the provinces can.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, it might be.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me that the class of taxation that they can impose should be stated positively.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There cannot be any excise or customs duties.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have negatived their right to impose excise or customs duties, and I think it would be very difficult to undertake to define that power.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Except you mention it directly. For instance, in the case of the Bank of Toronto and the Brewers and Maltsters' case, and several other cases of that nature, which went to the Privy Council, it is surprising the powers that may be exercised by the provinces under the guise of direct taxation, which it seems to me may possibly be very properly said to be indirect taxation and only to be imposed by the Dominion Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is this difference between the Territories and the provinces, that in a province they are exercising powers which must be defined and limited, so as not to come in contact with the powers of the Dominion. This is a body subordinate to the Dominion and deriving its powers from the Dominion, and its powers would not avail if it legislated in contravention of them, and if it did impose direct taxation no injury could flow from it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Have you a saving clause of that nature?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have the power of disallowance in the Act of 1896.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the North-west Territories Act, where broader powers are given to the legislative assembly, it is provided that all their legislation shall be subject to any Act of the Parliament of Canada. Section 13 of the North-west Territories Act says:

> The legislative assembly shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, applicable to the Territories, have power to make ordinances, and so on.

It seems to me that a more effectual supervision would be exercised over their legislation by having such a provision applicable to their legislation, and consequently it would dispense with the necessity of scrutinizing every Act to see whether it should be allowed or disallowed, and I do not see why we should give broader powers to the Yukon than to the North-west Territories.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—For the reason that it is distant and inaccessible, and what we may do after more ready means of access are established and better means of information provided, I think we cannot so well do at the present time. We give them very large powers, but we retain the restrictive power that the prerogative of the Crown gives us, and I think, on the whole, we have adopted the line best suited to enable them to accomplish what practically presents itself as a proper object to attain in the Territories, and at the same time if they are found to adopt a measure which is contrary to public policy, we may, when we become aware of it, disallow it here. I quite admit that the arrangement is not theoretically perfect, but it is the one that, for the moment, while that country is so isolated from the rest of the Dominion, is best calculated to enable them to carry out what occurs to them on the ground as in their interests.

The clause was adopted.

On clause b.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have struck out the words "by special permission" and inserted "except under regulations of the Governor in Council." That is in reference to the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The other is the more stringent of the two.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, but the difficulty which suggested itself to me was that it required a special license in every case.

The sub-clause was adopted.

On sub-clause c.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand that the clauses of the North-west Territories Act prohibiting the importation, sale or manufacture of liquor in the unorganized parts of the Territories apply to the Yukon?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They were in force in the Yukon Territory at the time it was organized a separate territory.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But they would not have any effect now after this law.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is simply an enabling power. It does not change anything.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is that prohibition in force in the Yukon Territory today? My recollection is that the Act was amended immediately previous to the introduction of the license system into the North-west Territories, and it was provided that the Governor in Council should have power, by proclamation, to suspend the operation of certain of the prohibitory sections of the North-west Territories Act in the organized parts of the Territories, or such parts of the Territories as might be defined in a proclamation, or Order in Council. I am not prepared to say whether the carving out of the Yukon Territory out of the North-west Territories at once rendered the prohibitory clauses in the North-west Territories Act inoperative as to that particular area of country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I think not. They are continued or perpetuated by the Act of last year. But the difficulty was that the government of the North-west Territories, for the sake of obtaining a revenue, issued, before that Act became law, a large number of licenses to parties to import liquor into that Territory, I forget how many licenses were issued, but a very large quantity of liquor was sold in the Yukon Territory under the authority of the North-west Territorial Ordinances that extended to that country—at least under the power of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then this government, by its action, would not recognize the permits which were issued by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories and assumed to itself the right to say whether liquor should be imported into the Yukon Territory. I think I am correct in that statement.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What I desire to know is, if these clauses will not be interpreted as practically a repeal of the prohibitory clauses of the North-west Territories Act, so as to permit the Yukon council to pass ordinances respecting the sale of liquor. The machinery is provided here apparently for the importation, the manufacture and the compounding of liquor in the Yukon Territory. It seems to me the placing of that legislation upon the statute-book would by implication repeal any prohibitory law that obtains in the Yukon Territory. I am not opposing the extension of those powers to the Yukon Territory, because I think they should have the power, and my observation is that the operation of the clauses in the North-west Territories Act were anything but promotive of temperance and the object which Parliament had in view in passing the legislation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS.—These clauses are necessary, however strict the prohibition may be; otherwise there would be absolute exclusion. For instance, you could not manufacture or compound the liquors for any medical purpose, or otherwise, in the Territory, if you had an absolute prohibition. What we are undertaking to do is to take power that will enable us to prohibit under the authority of law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose paragraph "b" covers that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me paragraph "b" gives the power to the government to say whether any liquor should be manufactured or imported into the Territory.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would take the place of any legislation in the past. It says:

No liquors shall be compounded or made in the Territories except by special permission of the Governor in Council.

That provides for the manufacture and compounding of liquors. Then it says:

Nor shall any intoxicating liquors or intoxicants be imported or brought into the Territory from any province or territory in Canada or elsewhere, except by special permission of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That has been further amended.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It leaves the matter entirely in the hands of the Governor in Council. They can prevent the manufacture and compounding of liquors, and they can prevent the importation into the Territories from any other parts of Canada unless they can obtain special permission.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That we would have no power to do, nor would the government of the Territories have power to do that without statutory authority here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, that is what I say. This clause leaves the question of prohibition entirely in their hands. They can prevent liquor from coming from a foreign country or from British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They have that power now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The power existed in the North-west Territories in the Lieutenant-Governor in Council fearing there was going to be an abuse of it, the power was temporarily withdrawn. Instructions were sent to the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories not to issue any permits, and it was only a very few weeks before the Act of 1898 came into operation, that, under a request from the North-west council, power was given to issue permits as it formerly existed. Under that, a very great abuse took place, and permits were issued for very large quantities of liquor to be taken in there, enough to supply them for years to come, if it all went in. Then the Commissioner in Council in the Yukon undertook to issue licenses in regard to the liquor that came in, and an Order in Council was passed prohibiting the issue of any licenses, and stopping the introduction of liquor into the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What time was that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Assoon as the government heard that the privilege was abused.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—About what date?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A few days before the Act of 1898 was passed, which separated the Yukon district from the North-west Territories. Hon. gentlemen will remember that practically we were administering the Yukon Territory without the authority of Parliament, because it became necessary to send up a commissioner, and up to 1898 the Yukon Territory was under the control of the North-west Territories and it was in the short interregnum between the granting of the North-west council the right to issue permits and the coming into operation of this Act cutting off the Yukon district from the North-west that these abuses took place, of issuing permits to this very large extent, and when the government heard of it they at once put a stop to it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—About the first of May I went home to the North-west and Major Walsh joined the train at Carleton Place and went up in company with me to Rat Portage, or Port Arthur. I had a long conversation with him and we spoke about this liquor business in the Yukon district. He told me distinctly that he was endeavouring to administer the affairs of that country and stop the importation of liquor, that he had refused to grant licenses and was trying to administer the affairs of that country without issuing licenses and was utterly opposed to it. But the government sent their North-west man in there, and he disagreed with him and he issued licenses without stint, almost, I think to the extent of $22,000 of revenue. He also stated that the Lieutenant-Governor had issued permits which was a surprise to me, because I understood they instructed him not to issue permits. Permits were issued lavishly and large quantities of liquor were taken into the country contrary to what I was informed was the case, and I was highly pleased with Major Walsh's statement, because it showed a state of things different to what I supposed existed—that he was trying to administer the affairs of the district without having liquor in the country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask whether the Dominion Government have refunded to the government of the North-west Territories the amounts which they collected for permits? When this was under discussion before, it was admitted, I think, that the action of the Federal Government at that time might be considered ultra vires. They had no power, because the power was then vested in the North-west Territories, and though the government took a very commendable course to prevent the introduction of liquor into that country, they had no power to do so. They issued licenses and collected fees, was the money ever refunded to the Territories?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They got all the money for the licenses they issued.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What about the licenses the Dominion Government issued; did the government of the Territories get the money for those licenses?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that there was any considerable amount. Some very small permits were issued to parties going in. We stopped it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Was it not paid as customs duties. The liquor that was sent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not that which went from Canada, of course.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—All I know is, long after the administration of the government was in the hands of the government here, under a commission issued to Major Walsh, and which commission was valid in this regard, that it largely dealt with the question of mines and mining operations and regulations relating to mining, all of which powers were not in the North-west Territorial government, but in the Department of the Interior here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am only talking about the liquor permits.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I propose an amendment that an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court of Canada direct, or to the Supreme Court of British Columbia. I wish to leave to parties the option of coming to the Supreme Court direct, if they are disposed to do so.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—You ought to stipulate the amount under which there should be no such appeal.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Below $500 cannot be appealed.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In that country it ought to be $1,000. If I had a suit tomorrow, and the man was going to appeal the case, I would prefer to abandon the case altogether. We have too much law in this country. In one province there are five courts to which you can go before a matter can be finally determined. It is utterly impossible for a poor man in litigation with a rich man to do anything. There should be legislation to prevent that. If you have two judges sitting together on a case in the Yukon, why should not their decision be final in a case up to $1,000?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has said, if the present condition of things were likely to be permanent. I have no objection to making the amount $1,000 if in the opinion of hon. gentlemen $1,000 is not too much.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It ought to be $1,000 anyway.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is this much to be said upon this point. The right of appeal ought to be given to every man. If a man feels that he is aggrieved in the trial court, would you prevent him having recourse to an Appellate Court? A man always feels, and expresses himself so, that he should have the right to appeal if he chooses to take the responsibility of the costs of such an appeal.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But there is another view of the matter. There are two litigants, one rich, the other poor. The rich man, if he is allowed to appeal—no matter how small the amount at issue—can always defeat the poor man by carrying the case on to a higher court, and consequently the rule has always been adopted that there shall be some limit to the right of appeal, and I think very properly adopted. The judges in this country are fairly conscientious and intelligent, and may be entrusted to give a fairly good decision, and an appeal should not be allowed unless the question at issue is one of sufficient consequence to be allowed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is almost impossible to lay down a rule that would be correct in all cases. The amount might not be large and yet a number of cases might hang upon the decision. I think the amount fixed in the bill, about $500, would be reasonable.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I would not make such a small amount the limit in a country like the Yukon. In the case of $500 two judges might try the case. There are good men on the bench in Canada, and I feel proud to think that very few cases are reversed, but in a country like the Yukon, where expenses are very large, you should appoint two judges to try cases under $1,000 and above that allow an appeal.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The provisions in this are the same as in the appeal to the Supreme Court from the final court of resort in the province. I repeat if hon. gentlemen think $500 is too small a sum to grant the right of appeal in that country, I have no objection to making it $1,000.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I think you had better make it $1,000.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My observation is contrary to that expressed by my hon. friend from Halifax. It is not the rich man that invariably appeals. I find, as a rule, there is a greater desire for litigation in the poor man than the rich man. He will go to a court of appeal under most circumstances. My experience is that a number of large corporations refuse to go to appeal. You must not overlook this fact, no matter how able the judge of the first court may be, there may be a jury verdict against a party to a suit which may be manifestly wrong, and unless the right of appeal exists there is no possibility of getting rid of that verdict. There are many views which present themselves to one's mind in considering this matter, and I think the clause as it stands would work satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It will only be a few months until Parliament will meet again, and we will have time to consider it. We had better make it uniform with the right of appeal in other parts of the Dominion.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day being called:

Consideration of the amendment made in Committee of the Whole on Bill (D) "An Act to amend the Expropriation Act."

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the amendment be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to a phrase in this clause which is seldom used in any statute. That is the word "prospective." All legislation is prospective only except it be made retroactive, and then it is retroactive and prospective. I placed in the hands of my hon. friend from Halifax to-day an amendment which I suggested, and which I think will fully meet the object which the hon. Minister of Justice has in view, and yet will be satisfactory to those parties whom it was thought this legislation would affect:

The provisions of this section are retroactive so far as they apply to the acquisition of property belonging to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company and not otherwise.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is just the difficulty in this that occurred to me and which induced me to insert the word "prospective." If we were to leave out this word altogether the whole section would be prospective. It would relate to future operations and not to past transactions at all. If we leave out the word "prospective," then the clause, so far as it relates to St. John, would be retrospective and retrospective in my opinion only, and it is to preserve the principle of the bill in the main section, as applicable to St. John in the future, as well as to other places, that I have inserted that word. My hon. friend will see, if he looks at it, that while the section would be prospective, relating to the future with regard to every other place than St. John, it would in fact be confined in St. John to its retroactive effect. Now, I wanted it to be prospective in the case of St. John as well as every other place, but I wanted it also made retroactive in St. John so as to protect the government against suits being brought for trespass, &c., in connection with the property they are about to acquire.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think you have limited this amendment entirely to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company and made it so that it will apply to no other. It seems to me the object in view as to its prospective operation is not affected by this amendment. It is retroactive and prospective so far as it applies to this case. You admit the fact that it is to be only retroactive in regard to St. John harbour improvement?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It can only be prospective as to the same object, because you couple the words prospective and retroactive—it can only be prospective so far as that particular enterprise is concerned.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see it is prospective as far as it applies to the case of the property belonging to the St. John Railway and Bridge Company. This clause only relates to this property. It does not relate to any other. It does not affect the general provision of the law as respects any other property, whether at St. John or elsewhere; but as far as the St. John Railway and Bridge Company is concerned, this clause is both prospective and retrospective.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You are only dealing with the clause. You are not dealing with anything else, and consequently you limit the operation of the clause to the St. John works, because you cannot apply it to any other case. Several lawyers have discussed this and they all agree in saying that this clause, as you have it framed, can only apply to this particular subject, both in its prospective and its retrospective operation. I simply mention that to show the doubt that it can create. If the limitation as to the retroactive operation apply to the clause they must apply to its prospective phase as well. You draw no distinction between the two.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The full clause applies to all places. Railways are added. That is all that is new. There is this limitation, not of the clause but limitation as to the place to which the clause is applicable. The provisions of this section are retroactive as well as prospective in connection with the St. John case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You repeal the law as it at present stands. You wipe that out, and you submit in the bill another paragraph and then you place a limitation upon the operation of that paragraph in its entirety.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, only as to the particular place.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the limitation—the operation of the law as embodied in the paragraph is only in St. John.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The retroactive part of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You draw no distinction. Where do you draw any distinction between the retroactive operation and the prospective operation in the amendment which you are making? The clause is wholly prospective apart from this provision with regard to the city of St. John. If you had said that it was retroactive only in respect of the city of St. John then it would have been prospective elsewhere without any expression on the subject. You immediately place a limitation on it by saying it shall be prospective in a certain way. It would in law be prospective if you had not expressed the limitation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is the very opposite. My hon. friend will see that if I had said that the clause shall be retroactive so far as it applies to the Railway and Bridge Company of St. John, it would have prevented the clause operating prospectively at all so far as that work is concerned. I do not want to prevent its prospective operation. I say there that it shall be retroactive as well as prospective. It would be prospective without this declaration. That is what it is everywhere, and therefore in order to make it retroactive without limiting its prospective operation, I say it shall be retroactive as well as prospective. I do not pretend to confer by this limitation a prospective power at all. I assume it was conferred before, and I wish to make it solely a prospective clause so far as St. John is concerned. That is why I insert these words "as well as prospective." That is the object.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We can let the minister have it as he wants it. It does not affect anything but this particular work.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Parties do think the amendment affects them. I am satisfied the word prospective should be put in in some other way but as I have stated, several lawyers, men in active practice, have expressed themselves in regard to this interpretation. Now, all statute law is prospective, and the court would naturally say why did you insert in the statute that it should be prospective? You must have had some particular object in view, viz., one of limitation, because in law it is prospective anyway, and you immediately couple it with its retroactive operation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me call my hon. friend's attention to the clause he has put in the hands of the hon. gentleman from Halifax. "The provisions of this Act are retroactive so far as they apply to any property belonging to the St. John Railway and Bridge Company." Now, that would prevent its being prospective in its application to St. John at all. I have great faith in the judgment of my hon. friend from Barrie (Mr. Gowan) and would be quite ready to leave the construction of that to his judgment. To my mind, it is perfectly clear that you would except St. John from the prospective operation of the main clause, perhaps if I were not to insert "as well as prospective" so as to secure its double operation.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I think that is a sound legal construction.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Why not make it retroactive altogether so far as it relates to the St. John property?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In last night's amendment you inserted the word "only," did you not? If you introduce the word "only," it would be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend does not want to introduce a tautological expression. That would be practically a double negative, and I objected to it for that very reason.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED — You have mentioned one particular case in which it shall be retroactive, but the law may not imply, and the court may not imply, that it is not retroactive in other matters. The court may say you have declared what the law is with regard to that particular subject, but you at least leave room for argument at once that it is not retroactive in regard to other subjects as well.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Unless it is expressly stated, the law only applies from the time at which it is adopted, and you have to specially state that it is to be retroactive if you wish it to have that effect. In this bill it is stated that it is retroactive as regards this work in St. John, and it is not retroactive anywhere else.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend last night did not object.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I said I thought the word "only" would not do any harm.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I thought it was understood at the time that it would only apply to the St. John Railway and Bridge Company. The word "only" was there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it does no harm, insert the word "only."

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Put it in for the benefit of the lawyers, because they will not understand the clause if it is omitted.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I could not consent, because it would not make sense.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Put it in after the words "so far." Then it would read "so far only as it applies to the works at St. John."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then it would create a doubt.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not put in the words "and not otherwise" so as to limit it to that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You could say "and not elsewhere" at the end of the clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That will do.

The clause as amended was adopted.

The bill as amended was read the third time and passed, on a division.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day being called:

Consideration of the amendments made in Committee of the Whole House on (Bill B) "An Act further to amend the Exchequer Court Act."—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved concurrence in the amendments. He said:—Several clauses of this bill have been struck out. There is a clause remaining in the bill relating to the power of the Exchequer Court judge to appoint some one to hold court in his behalf and I intend to let the bill go in that form.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know how far we are exceeding our power in the second clause. Should not the amount be left blank?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is left in blank in the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resumed, in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (137) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Protection of Navigable Waters.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the discussion on the proposed change in the law in reference to amending the Act respecting Protection of Navigable Waters, the opinion was expressed by one hon. gentleman, and concurred in by several, that the law as it at present exists in regard to tidal waters, should not be disturbed, and the change, therefore, in the law will be to apply it to non-tidal water under certain restrictions—that is, reducing the depth of water. In order to meet the views of some hon. gentlemen, who expressed a very decided opinion on the subject. I have introduced a clause, at the instance of the hon. senior member for Halifax, giving authority to the Department of Marine and Fisheries to point out particular places where ballast or rubbish may be deposited, even where the depth of water is less than that described in the statute, and in order to remove the appprehension of the hon. member from Sorel (Mr. Forget) who came over and discussed it with me, and who seemed to be satisfied with the proposal, I have added a clause to the bill requiring the approval of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries before any prosecution for a penalty is allowed, on non-tidal waters. Therefore any malicious prosecution by a man who had been dismissed, or for malice, or anything of that kind, cannot be commenced except with the concurrence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. As the law now stands, powers are given to the harbour masters and port wardens to enforce the law, and they have power, under the various Acts, to instruct the owners of vessels where to deposit ballast or rubbish.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That only applies to harbours where there is a harbour master?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I think it applies to the whole of the St. Lawrence, between Quebec and Montreal. This clause removes the objection urged that there were places where the requisite depth could not be obtained, and the parties could not get rid of the rubbish they had on board. Under that clause the department can point out places where ballast can be thrown where the depth is less than the depth named.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—What about sawdust?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not touch sawdust.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it give the Minister of Marine and Fisheries power to select places to deposit rubbish where it is not of the depth indicated?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That removes a great deal of the objection. I understood that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would not object to striking out the words "rubbish and ashes."

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I)—I do not see why the section of the Act relating to harbours should be repealed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is re-enacted.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Why is it re-enacted?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The general practice of Parliament—I do not say whether it is the wisest practice or not—has been, where it is proposed to make an alteration in the section, that the whole section is repealed and re-enacted with the alteration.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Any one wanting to look up the law, instead of having to look at the volume of the preceding year for one portion of the law and the volume of the present year for another portion of the law, will have them both together, which is very convenient.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—That is a good and sufficient reason for the course that has been taken. This bill imposes a duty on the owners of vessels passing through these rivers, and they may not be aware of the penalties which they are liable to incur under this bill, and I think it should be provided that a copy of the bill should be furnished to the owners of vessels, or notice sent to them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The department will make it as public as possible.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—The bill imposes a very delicate duty on the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whoever he may be. It appears to me that it would be weakening the effect of the law by placing in it a provision that no action can be taken against any of the parties for the violation of this Act without the consent and approval of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is limited to non-tidal navigable waters.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—It appears to me that if the captain of a steamer threw rubbish or ballast into a river and he was a friend of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the time being, he would go to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and say: "Here I have done this, but it was only a little rubbish that I threw in, and you know I am a political friend of the party and subscribe largely to the funds, and now you have it in your power to relieve me from the penalties the law imposes." I consider the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be almost more than human if he would not say: "Well we will let the matter pass over." I do not think it is proper to place the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in a position of that kind. If he has no discretionary power, and is simply guided by the law, he has nothing to do but to carry out the law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is quite correct, and it is only under the pressure of the views of certain hon. gentlemen that I have inserted the clause. The hon. gentleman from Sorel (Mr. Forget) made out a very strong case, that a discharged employee might at any time start a prosecution if a pail of rubbish was thrown overboard. As that view was shared in by several hon. gentlemen, it was in submission to that expressed wish that I inserted the clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be pleased to be relieved. I have looked at chapter 91 of the Revised Statutes, which deals with the protection of navigable waters. In this section 7, which this bill proposes to amend, there is a subsection 3 which I think would cover the ground proposed to be covered by the amendment now submitted by the hon. the Secretary of State. The subsection reads:

> The Governor in Council, when it is shown to his satisfaction that the public interest would not be injuriously affected thereby, may from time to time, by proclamation published in the Canada Gazette, declare any such river, stream or water, or part or parts thereof, exempt from the operation of this section in whole or in part, and may from time to time revoke such proclamation.

It is possible that under that—I am not expressing any very decided opinion upon it—the Governor in Council might say that in such and such parts of the St. Lawrence, or any other river, ashes might be deposited or that a steamer plying on the river may deposit her ashes in the particular way in which the steamer to which the hon. gentleman from Sorel referred deposited ashes. I am not finding fault with the amendments of the hon. Secretary of State; I am only indicating that possibly this section of the existing law would meet the case. It would take the burden off the shoulders of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and put it on the shoulders of the Governor General, which are broader.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—We have found the exercise of this power very unsatisfactory in regard to the Ottawa River.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I wish to say that there is not so much danger from a pailful of rubbish, or a little ashes, but we know very well that sailing vessels, and sometimes steamers get aground with a large quantity of ballast on board. They are most axious to get afloat, especially if the water is falling, and there is a great temptation for them to throw the ballast alongside the vessel, and that makes that place still shallower for the next vessel that comes along. I think there is danger in giving latitude to throw anything of that kind overboard in navigable waters.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are likely to be filling up our rivers for all time to come, and we are likely to be paying year by year large sums of money for the purpose of dredging them out. We are doing that constantly, and I suppose will continue to do so. It is very difficult indeed to keep the rivers clear. There is $50,000 in the estimates to clean out Toronto harbour, and I suppose the people of Toronto are responsible for that. I think the harbour of Toronto was much clearer twenty-five or thirty days ago than it is to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the obstruction is created by the wash of the sand down the Scarboro Heights. It washes all the way round the island and fills up the harbour.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The bill was then read the third time and passed under a suspension of rules.

Bill (K) "An Act for the relief of Isaac Stephen Gerrow Van Wart."—(Mr. Gowan.)

RAILWAY DEBTS COLLECTION BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I beg leave to call attention to a short bill passed during the present session intitled "An Act respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court with respect to Railway Debts." The origin of that bill was with reference to a case relating to the Great North-west Central Railway, a line running through Manitoba and into the Territories to Yorkville. The case was heard before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and they held that the courts of Manitoba had not jurisdiction with respect to the case, as the road was not wholly within the province. A bill was carried through the House this session to enable the courts to try that case. As I understand the case has been settled. There are other cases, no doubt, to which the bill is applicable, and it is thought there might be some injustice and some hardship arising from the bill if it should be generally operative in other cases without some notice, and in order that the necessary notice of the jurisdiction might be had, and in order that railway companies might be prepared to deal with the bondholders and others having claims against railway corporations of this class, I propose to introduce a suspensory bill to this effect, that no action can be taken against railway corporations during the next twelve months. That will be ample notice to them that thereafter the Exchequer Court will have jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Was it not last session we passed that bill?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, it was passed this session in order to meet the difficulty disclosed by the judges of the Privy Council. I move that the bill be read the first time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the bill be read the second time on Monday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I might ask, for information, whether the case upon which a bill was passed this session, dealing with this question, better known as as the Charlebois railway case, has been settled? Otherwise it might be interfered with by the provisions of this bill. If it is not settled and depends on the operation of the bill already passed, then it delays the settlement for a year from next August. I understood from the Minister of Justice that that case had been settled.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is the report made to me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Rideau Division will know whether that case is settled.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—That case is settled, as far as the proceedings in this country are concerned, but they are proceeding in England. I cannot see why it is necessary to repeal this Act at all. It is utterly impossible to get a judgment from any court owing to the difficulty mentioned by the Minister of Justice. Why should the bill remain in abeyance for twelve months?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Manitoba and North-western was the one effected.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is the one extending from Portage la Prairie.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Charlebois road is entirely in Manitoba. The difficulty is connected with the one which runs from Manitoba into the North-west Territories.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Rideau Division could not have heard the Minister of Justice. It does not repeal the Act; but stipulates that it is to come into operation a year from next August. The reason for that is that it is feared it may affect the Temiscouata Road. About fourteen miles of that road is in the province of New Brunswick; the balance is in the province of Quebec. The difficulty arose in this way: there is an extension called the St. Francis branch, which is a part and parcel of the same road. That portion is a paying road, pays interest upon the bonds issued upon it. The Temiscouata Road does not pay interest. What is feared by those interested in the enterprise is that the bondholders in this country may, without the knowledge of those interested in the road in England, take action at once to put it in the hands of a receiver and thereby injure, to a great extent, the whole enterprise. I would prefer seeing a short bill adding another clause to the bill already passed and approved by the Governor General, restricting the operation of the Act until after a year's notice had been given to all parties interested. Because when this bill comes into operation, as I have no doubt it will, a year from next August, and then any road that happens to be in the same position as the Temiscouata and the St. Francis branch is in to-day, will labour under the same difficulties that the present road does, and advantage might be taken by those who are here, to get possession of the road or put it in the hand of a receiver before the bondholders in Europe, or wherever they may be, know what is going on. There will be this advantage, however, the bondholders will have ascertained the fact that such a law is on the statute-book before the year expires. Consequently the same danger may not arise, which I have indicated might arise, if such were not the case. However, if the Minister of Justice chooses to pursue this course, I have no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

COUNTY COURT JUDGES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the House adjourns I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether an appointment had been made yet for the County Court of Queen's, P.E.I.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think not.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I may inform my hon. friend he has only one day to do it in to prevent a very serious trouble. The court is fixed to meet on Tuesday next, and there will be hundreds of litigants and others in attendance at the court in Charlottetown on Tuesday next, and the time is getting short.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can you not find a lawyer in Prince Edward Island who would take the position.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have not been able yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a large surplus in Ontario, where one could be found.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

REPORT ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER moved the adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on Debates and Reporting. He said:—No doubt hon. gentlemen have read this report, which appears on page 644 of the minutes. There is nothing unusual in the report. The first part recommends payment for the French translation of the Debates of last year; the second part relates to an indemnity to be paid to the reporters on account of the unusual length of the session, which has increased the expenses of their staff beyond what was contemplated when the contract was made. The members of the committee satisfied themselves that these gentlemen are entitled to an extra allowance on account of those expenses.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to the report, but for the purpose of asking for some information from the hon. chairman of the committee. I see that here is a sum of $1,733.75, payment of which is recommended to Mr. Desjardins for the translating of the Debates of 1898. I wish to know whether this is intended to recoup the clerk, or some one else, for payments already made to Mr. Desjardins, or if Mr. Desjardins has not been paid at all for the session of 1898?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—He has not been paid for 1898.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was under the impression—but apparently it is not a well founded impression—that we had placed Mr. Desjardins upon the regular staff of the Senate as a translator. I thought that had been done last year.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—No, Mr. Desjardins was never on the regular staff. He was under contract, to be renewed each session, but this year we have put on the regular staff a translator at a reduced salary. We have made a contract this year with another gentleman, which contract has been approved by the Senate, and there is a reduction of about $500 on the amount mentioned in this report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The new translator receives $1,000 and he does the work which Desjardins has been in the habit of doing.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Yes. We agreed to pay him $1,000.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I am very glad to hear that the reporters are to be paid a larger sum on account of the extra time they have been engaged this session. We have all been kept here longer than we expected, and I think the members of the Senate and of the House of Commons and every one else who has been kept here for between four and five months should receive some compensation. Therefore, I hail the resolution with pleasure.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I understand that, for the future, Mr. Desjardins will be paid under a different basis?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—No. The services of Mr. Desjardins will be dispensed with entirely. Another gentleman has been appointed this session with the sanction and approval of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could the hon. gentleman tell us when we will receive the French translation of 1898?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—We expect that it will be issued in a few days. The index is being printed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TRANSVAAL DIFFICULTY.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I propose to-morrow introducing a motion in relation to the conditions existing between the Uitlanders and Boers in the Transvaal Republic, giving to Her Majesty's Government the support which I think it is entitled to from us in seeing that British subjects in the Transvaal are more fairly dealt with than they have hitherto been. All over South Africa, wherever any British sovereignty has been established, the Dutch population have been put on a footing of perfect equality with those speaking the English language and those of English origin. Their language has been preserved to them in the legislatures, in the courts of justice and in the public schools. In the Transvaal, where the independence of the republic was recognized with the express understanding that the British population should be dealt with on terms of perfect equality and should be subjected to no special tax or special burdens or political ignominy in their treatment, their positions has been very little better than that of slaves. They have been subject to a tax which amounts to nearly $80 a head for every man, woman and child in the Transvaal Republic, I think the British Government are entitled to sympathy and support (hear, hear and applause) in endeavouring to secure the rights of all subjects of the British Empire who may reside in that country. I trust that anything less than terms of perfect equality will not be accepted. I purpose bringing this matter under the attention of the House to-morrow, in order that the hon. gentleman may have an opportunity of expressing those sentiments which, I believe, are entertained by every one living within Her Majesty's dominion. (Applause.)

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to move any resolution on this point?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—It seems to me, we should have authentic information and not merely what we read in the papers, before we interfere with what happens in another part of Her Majesty's dominions. We should have something official. If those Boers are subjects of the Crown, they are our co-subjects, and before condemning them by a resolution of this Parliament we should know what they are doing. It is not enough to say they should give rights to the Uitlanders, who are strangers in that country and are subject to naturalization.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—No.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—How does the hon. gentleman know?

Hon. Mr. ALMON—They are not allowed to take the oath of allegiance nor are they enfranchised.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—It seems to me we do not know those things. We have no official knowledge and are not in a position to condemn our fellow subjects. It is something we should take care not to do although if necessity calls for action I am as loyal as anybody else.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am simply giving notice that I shall bring the matter up for consideration to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—You will give us nothing official.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have nothing further than is before every hon. gentleman who takes an interest in the well-being of the empire, the correspondence that has been published in the official blue books of the Imperial Parliament, containing the reports and correspondence of the Colonial Secretary with the British High Commissioner in South Africa, the report of the Uitlanders who have been subjected to ignominy and oppression, and have been robbed and plundered by the government of the Transvaal. I shall state some of the facts, so far as I have been able to gather them from the British blue books, and I suppose other hon. gentlemen have been equally industrious. Of course it would be possible, but not at this time, to revert to the Imperial correspondence. That, I fancy, is unnecessary. I assume that hon. gentlemen have been fairly well informed on the subject.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it the intention of the government to add a paragraph to sustain the rights of the British subjects in Manitoba which have been trampled on? We might unite with the empire to sustain the judgment of the Privy Council on that question.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I am sorry to say that the answer of the Minister of Justice to the hon. gentleman from Montarville is not at all satisfactory. The hon. gentleman has asked the Minister of Justice to give the House some information, and practically he answers him that he will not give any.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It is the same in this matter as it has been all along this session and last year. We have been asking for information and the government have told us that they will not give us any. We are told to go and search for it ourselves.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is not a subject coming within the jurisdiction of Parliament as fixed by the British North America Act. It is a subject outside. We in Canada have certain relations with the empire. We observe, I take it, what is going on elsewhere. We learn of a state of things existing in a community $\frac{1}{20}$ of whose taxes are paid by British subjects, whose government is supported by British subjects who are taxed to the extent of a quarter of a million pounds sterling yearly, to maintain schools where the Dutch language only is permitted to be used. We find municipal institutions conferred upon a community where there are only 300 Dutch people and those all labouring men, the majority of whom have no education at all and who alone constitute the class from whom representatives can be chosen to the municipal council of Johannesburg, the wealth of which belong to a population of British, French and United States subjects. Now, I say that these are matters with which we are acquainted through the official correspondence which has taken place between the Transvaal Government and the British officials. This correspondence is not in the possession of the government particularly; it consists of Imperial documents which are published and copies of which are sent to our library and that information is not a whit more accessible to me and not one particle more under my jurisdiction and control than that of any other member of this House. My hon. friend from St. Boniface, can easily see that it is not a matter which the government control or which they can grant or withhold from Parliament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has not answered my question, whether he intends to bring in an additional paragraph.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In dealing with the Transvaal we are not dealing with Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask if it is the intention of the government to do something in the matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand the hon. Minister of Justice rightly, he intends to present to this House the same motion which was made in the other House this morning, or will it be of a different character?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It will be the same.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will be prepared, when he makes the motion and asks our concurrence, to give the information for which the hon. gentleman from Montarville (Mr. DeBoucherville) has asked, as to the reasons why we are requested to pass a resolution in sympathy with, or render aid in case of difficulty, to the Imperial Government, as an integral part of the empire. I am heartily in accord with the sentiments uttered by the hon. Minister of Justice, and am quite satisfied that when the matter is discussed in this House, and the position which our fellow subjects occupy to-day in the Transvaal is understood, there will not be a dissenting voice in extending sympathy to them and in hoping that peace may be secured in the country; but that, should adverse circumstances be of such a character as to lead to difficulty, Canada will not be behind in rendering what assistance she is able to give in defence of the empire.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill (R) "An Act further to amend the Penitentiary Act," with several amendments.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the amendments be taken into consideration to-morrow. He said:—These are amendments that ought to have been made here, but owing to the fact that I had not the information before me at the moment, some of them were omitted. For instance with regard to the matron and deputy matron at Dorchester. I had put the schedule in the hands of an officer in my department to revise, and the matron and deputy matron were by mistake left out of the Dorchester list altogether. When it came here I saw that they were omitted, and I inserted $400 for the one and $300 for the other. When I looked at the old schedule I found that one was $400 and the other $500, and I asked to have that corrected in the House of Commons. Then we have a certain provision in the schedule where offices may be united and undertaken by one party. For instance the steward and storekeeper are sometimes united, and the positions of hospital overseer and schoolmaster are united. One had a considerably smaller salary when he undertakes both offices than the total of the two salaries when separated, and in one or two cases this union of the offices was omitted.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF DRY DOCKS BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (177) "An Act to encourage the construction of Dry Docks."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said :—This bill proposes to increase the subsidy granted for the construction of dry docks. Owing to the fact that the vessels to-day are larger than those built in 1882, and the existing dry docks are not sufficiently large for some of the vessels, the dry docks may have to be enlarged, and a subsidy on the same basis is continued for the enlargement. The amount will be 2 per cent for twenty years on new docks, provided the total amount does not exceed $20,000. On existing docks that will have to be enlarged the amount is 2 per cent provided the enlargement does not exceed $10,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the payment by the Dominion and not the cost of the work?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, provided the total amount shall not exceed $10,000 or $20,000.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is there any provision on the statute-books for similar or analogous subsidies now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is an amendment to the Dry Dock Act. That Act limits the amount to 2 per cent for twenty years on an outlay of $20,000. The dry docks have to be larger now than contemplated in 1882 and the law has to be amended.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Will the Halifax dry dock be included in that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If it is built under the Subsidy Act it will.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask if my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, has any more of those returns which I have been asking for?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have apologies from the departments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am afraid it will be impossible to get them printed now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I promise my hon. friend that they will come in good time for the next session of Parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That indicates that we will have one or two more sessions before an election, if my hon. friend's word is good, and I have no right to doubt it, as he must know.

THE LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

SECOND REPORT ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the adoption of the second report of the joint committee of both Houses on the library of Parliament. He said :—There is really nothing in this report to adopt except the report of the sub-committee on the audit, and that is of the usual character. It shows that there was expended altogether from the time of the former audit on the 30th April, 1898, to the 9th July, 1899, the time of the last audit, $15,227 on books. English books, $7,811; French books, $3,792; binding, $2,595; books on American history, $1,028.17; expenditure for contingencies of various kinds, telegrams and freight on books, &c., $3,128, making a total expenditure of $18,356.

RAILWAY DEBTS COLLECTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (W) "An Act to amend the Act passed at the present session of Parliament, intituled: "An Act respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to Railway Debts."

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend give us the number of the bill of which this is to operate as a suspension?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was an Act introduced not long ago by the Solicitor General in the House of Commons and was sent up here. It is a very short bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not with a view of opposing the bill that I asked for the information.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The number of the former bill is 159.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I presume the government has no information of any proceeding having been taken by any of the bondholders under the Act which was passed at the beginning of the session.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I have not.

The bill was read at length at the table, and then read the third time and passed under a suspension of the rules.

CONSTRUCTION OF DRY DOCKS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (177) "An Act to encourage the construction of Dry Docks." He said:—This bill is an extension of the Act passed in 1882, granting a subsidy to dry docks built in Canada. It is an enlargement of the Act, which provided that the total sum should be limited to $10,000. This bill provides that the subsidy shall be 2 per cent for twenty years, and not to exceed in any case $20,000; and in reference to those docks which are now in existence which it is proposed to enlarge, that the limit of the subsidy shall be $10,000.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Does the hon. gentleman tell us where these are located?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is one at Halifax and one at Lévis. I do not know at what other points they are.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—One at Kingston?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—One at Collingwood and one at Port Dalhousie?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman will know.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Is a marine slip covered by that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I fancy not. It would be a dry dock.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—There is a marine slip at Halifax which is partly supported by an Imperial subsidy, partly by a grant from the municipality.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It is not every place that is suitable for a dry dock. Owing to the change from wooden to iron vessels, it ought to be located where there are facilities for doing repairs. I should like to see the places named where these docks are to be. It involves quite an expenditure, and is giving to the government a power which no government should have, of naming the places where these docks should be. I suppose, probably, they will get the power, but it is adding to the expenditure all the time. We do not know how much it is going to cost the country. The money is flying every day, and we ought to see where it is going to, and not give away the people's money. The government will probably give it to their friends.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the next stage of the bill I shall try and get the names of the places at which they have decided to place them. As to the future, I cannot state where they will be, but I have no doubt they will not be undertaken by any organization unless there is an ample opening for them.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Will the hon. gentleman answer my question as to whether a marine slip will be treated as a dry dock?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman know whether the dock at Point Lévis is to be enlarged?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the hon. gentleman to mention that as one of the docks which will be aided. The dock at Lévis is a government work, and is owned and managed by the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I stated that existing docks held by private corporations would receive a subsidy of $10,000.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Every year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the total amount for each dock?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I will endeavour to have additional information to give the House when the bill is referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It appears to me that this will involve a very large expenditure. The dry dock in Halifax is capable of taking in the largest ships in Her Majesty's service on the North American Station, and I presume there will be nothing required for that dock. The dock at Lévis, which is also a very extensive work, is not one which would come under the provisions of this bill, and the amount must therefore be distributed among harbours which are not of the first importance. We require more information than we have yet received on this measure before consenting to grant this large sum of money in addition to what we have to provide for otherwise.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I want to know whether, as a rule, a marine slip is a dry dock within the meaning of this bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Then the sum which you are voting to build a dry dock is so ridiculously small that it is almost laughable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is only a subsidy to any company that may undertake such a work.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House was adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the House was resumed.

His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Gilbert John Elliott Murray-Kynnynmond, Earl of Minto and Viscount Melgund, of Melgund, County of Forfar, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Baron Minto of Minto, County of Roxburgh, in the Peerage of Great Britain, Baronet of Nova Scotia, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, &c., &c., Governor General of Canada, being seated on the Throne,

The Honourable the Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House,—"It is His Excellency's pleasure they attend him immediately in this House."

Who being come with their Speaker,

The Honourable Thomas Bain said:

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,—

The House of Commons have elected me as their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If, in performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am.

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate then said:

Mr. Speaker,—I am commanded by His Excellency the Governor General to assure you that your words and actions will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire, and the House of Commons withdrew.

THE DIFFICULTY IN THE TRANSVAAL.

RESOLUTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved:

That this House has viewed with regret the complications which have arisen in the Transvaal Republic, of which Her Majesty is suzerain, from the refusal to accord to Her Majesty's subjects now settled in that region, any adequate participation in its government.

That this House has learned with still great regret that the condition of things there existing has resulted in intolerable oppression, and has produced great and dangerous excitement among several classes of

Her Majesty's subjects, in her South African possession :

That this House representing a people which has largely succeeded, by the adoption of the principle of conceding equal political rights to every portion of the population in harmonizing estrangements and in producing general content with the existing system of government, desires to express its sympathy with the efforts of Her Majesty's Imperial authorities to obtain for the subjects of Her Majesty who have taken up their abode in the Transvaal such measure of justice and political recognition as may be found necessary to secure them in the full possession of equal rights and liberties.

He said :—I gave notice yesterday that I would move this resolution and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition courteously agreed to second it. It is identical with the resolution moved in the House of Commons. I may say to hon. gentlemen that in order to fully appreciate the situation in the Transvaal country, it is necessary to pay some little regard to the history of South Africa, and to observe how the colony in that part of the continent became a British possession and what difficulties have arisen in the administration of the government of the country down to the present time. The cession of Cape Colony to the United Kingdom was brought about during the period of the Napoleonic war for the purpose of preventing it becoming a possession of the French. It was, in fact, handed over with the consent of the Prince of Orange, although the Dutch in the possession of the fort at the Cape at the time refused to make the surrender and it became necessary to employ force. The colony was, at the time, under the government of the Dutch East India Company, and although it had been settled for one hundred and fifty years there were only about 10,000 European settlers, of Dutch origin, in that country. It was restored to Holland at the close of the last century and again, in 1803, passed to the English, and was confirmed as a British possession at the time of the Treaty of Vienna. The English for many years made no attempt to regard it otherwise than as a military post, but in 1817 the settlement of English people was begun east of Cape Town, at a place called Elizabeth. The colony at the Cape was regarded by the Dutch as a half-way house between Holland and their East Indian possessions, and it has been so regarded by the English. In fact, without Cape Colony it would have been impossible to build up the Indian Empire, and without it it would have been impossible to establish the control that England at the present day possesses over her Australian colonies. If to-day the government of Great Britain were to lose her possessions in South Africa, there would be no security thereafter for the possessions of India, nor could she, in case of war, be certain to retain her control over the Australian colonies. The Cape is of immense military importance, therefore, to Great Britain. It was important when sailing vessels were in use as a place for replenishing supplies. It is still more important when sailing vessels have been superceded by steamers, because were it not for that possession there would be no certainty that there would be a coaling station of which England could retain possession between her own shores and her possessions in the southern seas, so that while it no doubt would be injurious to the British Empire to lose Australia, or to lose this country, there is no great colony that she holds to-day that is of the same consequence in the maintenance of the unity and integrity of the empire as Cape Colony in South Africa. It is said by military men, who are well informed on this subject, that in order to retain Cape Colony as a military post, the interior possessions which she holds there are of scarcely less consequence. The Dutch had bestowed upon them a very much milder government than that which they had under Dutch Sovereignty. The government of Britain extended the power of self government to them and enlarged their liberties until ultimately they became a self governing colony, having parliamentary institutions bestowed upon them. The British Government were specially considerate to the Dutch population. They permitted the use of their language in the legislature, and authorized the use of their language in the courts of justice and in the public schools, so that in every respect the people of Dutch origin who spoke the Dutch language were put on a footing of perfect equality with those of British origin. There was no respect in which an Englishman had conferred upon him larger rights, or was put in anyway in a more advantageous position, than those who were Dutchmen by birth. I may also point out that the first real difficulty that occurred between the British Government and the Dutch population, apart from the Kaffir wars, was the result of the active measures taken between 1830 and 1833 for the abolition of slavery throughout the colonies of the British Empire. The amount that the Imperial Government set aside to compensate those who held slaves for their emancipation, it was said, was not more than half of their actual market value, so that any one who had his slaves taken from him and received compensation, expected to receive no more than ten shillings on the pound of the market value which those human beings had in the market where slavery was established. Now, the great mistake made by the British Government at the time that slavery was abolished in South Africa, was that the payment to those who held slaves was to be made in England and not at the Cape. The slaves were held by men but little acquainted with commerce, having but little dealing with other people, subsisting by agriculture and each man living largely by himself. These people were unable to receive the sums that had been awarded them for their slaves without the intervention of some capitalist, or agent, or broker, who was ready to charge a very large sum as a commission for the services which he performed, so that those who undertook to become intermediaries between the government and the owners of slaves, charged such large commissions that many of those who were paid received but a mere fraction of the sum that was awarded them, and in other cases many of them refused to deal with the parties. They inquired whether the money was placed with any official in the country to give them compensation, and ascertaining that this was not the case, made no further inquiry with regard to the matter, and so a very large number of those who were entitled to compensation never received anything. The result of this was that very great discontent was produced, and two years after the Act came into operation, in the year 1835, several thousand of them took whatever movable property they had across the Drakenberg mountains and undertook to make settlements in what is now known as the Orange Free State. From there they extended their settlement north beyond the Vaal River, into what is now called the Transvaal country, and others crossed the mountains separating the watershed of the Indian Ocean from the Transvaal, and settled in what afterwards became the province of Natal. The people who remained in the Cape and the government of the United Kingdom took possession of the Natal country, and controlled the port which afforded egress and ingress from that direction so as not to permit a port, which would be a rival to Cape Town or Elizabethtown, to fall into the hands of people hostile to British authority and whose hostility arose much in the way I have mentioned. There is no doubt that those people were courageous. They had great self-confidence and great dislike to control of any sort whatever, and they regarded any tax that might be imposed upon them as little better than robbery. Every man having great faith in the protection which he believed Providence extended to him and in the rifle which he sometimes employed without adequate cause, he did not deem that it was of any consequence that any authority should be established over him in order to give protection to life or to property. Confidence in God and in his rifle was the motto which every Boer, who was beyond the protection of the government of the Cape, acted upon. The Boer has been described by almost every writer who has come in contact with him as courageous, cunning and cruel, not admitting for a moment any rights in the Kaffir or native population of the country, holding firmly that Providence has placed those aboriginal inhabitants in the country to serve him and work for him and not having any rights that he was called upon to respect, and so when he found the pasture failing in one place, his flocks and herds and family having so much increased that he required greater latitude, he started out into a new district and with rifle undertook to secure a position for himself. That was his title and had no regard for any right which might be in the aboriginal inhabitant. The Boer population were divided. There was nothing but the pressure of danger that held them together, and they were for the most part uncomfortable neighbours to each other. The Orange Free State had sent amongst them one Sir Harry Smith, a man of extremely affable manner, popular with the Boers and courageous, and he thought that he would have no difficulty in establishing British authority over them. This he undertook to do, and in this he was for a time successful, but discontent of the restraint of any authority over them, dislike to bear any burdens, however light, induced them to protest, and to resist, and in 1854, seven years after Sir Harry Smith had proclaimed the Orange Free State a country under the sovereignty of England, the British Government repudiated that sovereignty and recognized the inhabitants of the Orange Free State as a free republic under the protection of the government of England. Further north was the Transvaal population, and these people exhibited, in even a greater degree than any of the Dutch population of South Africa, a turbulent spirit, a disposition to trample upon the rights of the native population, to engage in conflict with them and to show their dislike to English jurisdiction. Disliking taxation and disliking government, they soon became financially embarrassed, and as a state, notwithstanding they declared themselves a republic, they were practically without any government to which any person paid any respect. The regular laws and ordinances that were enacted were disregarded by every one who felt no inclination, or felt that he had no interest in observing them. Taxes remained uncollected. The treasury was empty. The state was bankrupt. They had engaged in wars with Sekocoini on the north, and had been defeated in several engagements. This tribe of Kaffirs had defeated the Boers and they were at any time liable to extermination. Upon the southeast of the Transvaal State were the Zulus, a very powerful body under their king Cetywayo. They were capable of bringing 40,000 men into the field, and they threatened at the same time the state of Natal and the Transvaal. Their territories were situated between these two powerful native tribes. The British Government took steps to protect their own country. They sent Sir Theophilus Shepstone into the Transvaal, and the people of that country, or the vast majority of them, showed a disposition to place themselves under British protection. They asked to be embraced within British sovereignty, and they were so embraced. Their president told them that they had exhibited no disposition to make those self sacrifices, and to practice that self denial, which was necessary to the maintenance of the independence of the state. They were ready to take the risks of being overwhelmed and destroyed rather than to bear the most moderate public burdens. Then he pointed out to them that there was nothing for it but to place themselves under British protection. A few of them did not give their consent, a few of them protested strongly against it, and amongst that few was the present President Kruger. Let me say here that the British Government saved them at that time from destruction. They defeated the Zulus and took Cetywayo a prisoner. They established peace upon the borders of the Transvaal, and as soon as this was done, active efforts were put forward by the present president, and those that were associated with him, to create discontent, to produce that state of anarchy and that disregard for law which had existed before, and he notified Sir Theophilus Shepstone's successor, Sir Owen Lanyon, that if the government persisted in the collection of taxes, there would undoubtedly be trouble, and he would not be answerable for the consequences. It was at this time, that steps were taken to form an organization of which Kruger was the head, to prevent the concentration of the British forces that had been employed in the war against the Zulus, and that still remained in the country. When an attempt was made to bring these forces together, some 250 troops, a portion of the 94th regiment was attacked, and 201 of them were killed, and the other 49 were taken prisoners. After this, two other engagements took place, in which the British forces were surprised and worsted. The latter of these engagements was that well known one at Majuba Hill. Very large forces were being collected on the borders of the Transvaal under Sir Evelyn Wood, and he informed the Home Secretary at the time that there could be no doubt whatever that the Boers could be brought to subjection, and probably within the next fourteen days, and that it would be very much easier to treat with them thereafter, and there would be far greater security to the natives whom the British Government had promised to protect, and the Boers who in that country had sided with the English, and whose condition would be made very uncomfortable indeed, if the government were to compromise matters, and to make peace with Kruger and his friends immediately after their successes. The Boers of the Transvaal are the most extreme type of their countrymen. They are those upon whom modern civilization has made the least impression. They are those that have come least in contact with the commercial classes of the world, and so they are those who have the least regard for the rights of others. They claim or desire — although the English Government have always insisted upon the observance of their conventions in this regard, — to keep the black population in a condition of slavery. They refused to pay taxes. They have numerous flocks and herds. They hate their neighbours even when their neighbours are their own countrymen. They are credulous, superstitious, migratory, seeking new possessions, not like Jacob with a spear or bow, but with the rifle where they take less risk themselves and are able to inflict great disaster upon others. Lord Kimberley was Colonial Secretary at the time of the Majuba Hill disaster, and he telegraphed to the British High Commissioner in South Africa, after Kruger had made known his desire to make peace, that if reasonable conditions of peace could be established they should be had. This was against the view of Sir Evelyn Wood, but it was favoured by Sir Hercules Robinson, and also by Sir Henry Villiers, who, I think, is now Chief Justice of Cape Colony. When in 1881, Sir Evelyn Wood wanted to know whether, before the negotiations were entered upon—because he made that a condition—the Boers were immediately ready to disperse their forces, Kruger, instead of replying to his question, intimated to him that it would be very important and would faciliate the negotiations, if the English were to withdraw their forces from within the borders of the Transvaal, that it would remove suspicion on the part of the Boer population, and that they would be very grateful for that line of action if it were adopted. Sir Evelyn Wood replied that he would prefer a direct answer to his question rather than a contingent promise of gratitude on the part of those who had been in arms against him. There were three things that were aimed at in the negotiations: the protection of the British population within the Transvaal, the protection of the loyal Boers who had no sympathy with Kruger's movement, and the protection of the native tribes. All these were aimed at and were fairly well secured by the convention of 1881. The Dutch of that district sought local self government, and the commissioners on the part of Her Majesty were anxious to know what their views and practices had been with reference to the government of the country in the past. They promised equal protection to all, equality of rights and privileges to all the European inhabitants, no distinction or disabilities as to matters of trade, and that the elective franchise should be extended to all who were above eighteen years of age who were willing to take the oath of allegiance. These statements formed a part of the contract, although not embraced in the convention, and they were the basis upon which the convention proceeded. The right to maintain these had been questioned by the Transvaal Government, but they rest upon the suzerainty of Her Majesty. That was recognized in the convention of 1881, and was not abrogated by the convention of 1884. The convention of 1881 conceded self government, but it based that self government on a franchise that was guaranteed to the inhabitants under the laws that then existed. If the franchise was to be taken away, if no right was to be recognized, in the population who were of foreign birth or who were other than Dutch origin, then self government could not have been conceded, but self government was conceded because it was assumed that certain fundamental principles would be maintained thereafter, and that no attempt would be made to legislate these away. The second was that full liberty of residence, of ownership of houses and warehouses, of trade, of factories and the like. The third, the principle of trade by agents who were of foreign birth, the same as those who were natural born European inhabitants of the country, and the fourth, that all laws must be consistent with the observance of the convention. If the republic impose disabilities upon Uitlanders, then that legislation would be at variance with the conditions of things that had been regarded as the basis on which self government in the country must rest. After the convention of 1881 the direction of foreign affairs was left wholly with Her Majesty: and under the convention of 1884 that was modified and only a supervision was left to Her Majesty, as suzerain of the country. The Boers could not treat with a foreign country under the convention of 1881. They had to apply to the High Commissioner, and Her Majesty's consent had to be obtained—in fact, the negotiations had to be conducted through a British official, but after 1884 the Boer authorities of the Transvaal were allowed to conduct their own negotiations, subject to the Queen's negative, but if they were not disapproved of within six months, then they came into operation. It certainly did, in this regard, enlarge the authority of the Transvaal Government in dealing with other states. They also provided that there should be no interference on the part of the British with the future legislation of the country, nor would there be any interference if those fundamental conditions, that were supposed to lie at the basis of the constitutional system, conferred upon the Transvaal Republic had been observed, and under this provision there was to be no interference with future legislation. They undertook to impose disability and to take away rights and create inequalities which had not before been attempted, and which, if they had been claimed either before 1881 or 1884, would never have been conceded. There are other provisions of these conventions to which I need not refer, but I wish to call the attention of the House to the way the Transvaal Government has violated this compact. As long as the Transvaal Government felt that they were not secure against the native population—as long as they felt that the native population upon the eastern or northern border, or within their territory, might be successful in waging war against them, they did not wish to quarrel with the English, nor did they wish to impose disabilities upon Englishmen which would array the British authorities in South Africa against them, but when they felt that all danger from the native population was a thing of the past, then they began to impose disabilities upon the Uitlander population, precisely as they had imposed disabilities upon the native population at an earlier period. They disregarded the state boundaries, they drove back the people on the west; they made war on those tribes, and undertook to extend their authority beyond the boundaries that had been stipulated for in the convention, and the British Government had to send Sir Charles Warren, a military officer, there, with a force and compel them to retire within those boundaries which had been recognized by these two conventions. The Boers at this time were fast sinking back into the old system. Their taxes were unpaid. They had a revenue, when the English went into possession, of about £200,000, which they regarded as excessive, and which they refused to pay. In 1886, under their own government, these revenues had fallen to £171,000, but even this sum they were unable to collect. To-day they levy nearly £4,000,000 sterling upon the Uitlander population of the republic. The gold discoveries, the influx of Europeans, especially of the English population which is to-day very large, enabled them to raise a revenue by new devices, by taxes upon other people which were imposed in such a way that they themselves were relieved from these burdens. In the complaints that were made to Sir Alfred Milner, the Uitlander population there say that the taxation averages to-day about £16 sterling per head to every man, woman and child that belongs to the Uitlander population. Under this government the men of the very highest culture, graduates of British Universities, men of high scientific attainments, are made to pay tribute and bow to the authority of men who are barely able to sign their own names. When this new departure began—since the Boers have felt themselves secure from attack from the native population, their government has been characterized by personal outrages, by pecuniary wrongs, by excessive taxation, by political disabilities and by insecurity for life, reputation and property. When the British Government made those concessions which were embraced in the conventions of 1881 and 1884, they hoped to awaken a sense of gratitude and of loyal devotion in the minds of the Boers towards the English population of South Africa. What has since transpired shows how very mistaken this view was, and how far they have failed to accomplish the object that they had in view. The conduct of the Boer population—at least that section of them that constitutes the government of the Transvaal—has been of such a character that, to-day, they have created a feeling of unrest and have awaked aspirations in the minds of the population of Dutch origin in the South African British colonies, that tend to subvert the authority of Her Majesty as sovereign over the territories which are now claimed to be British. There is unrest and distrust, and a desire for independence, a desire to make the population of Dutch origin paramount in authority over the whole of the British possessions in South Africa, and no one can fail to see that, if a check is not had to the conduct of the government of the Transvaal, if some effort is not put forward to establish British authority and to assert the rights of Englishmen with a firm hand on the part of the government, instead of having a conflict with that section of the Boers who reside within the Transvaal, it may be that the conflict will be extended over the whole of South Africa. The Boers, no doubt, look for moral support, and it may be at one time they expected material support from Germany. Every one who has given any attention to German proceedings on the continent of Africa knows that the colonial spirit is abroad in the German Empire—that they have undertaken to acquire colonial possessions—that the German Government aspired also to the possession of Holland. It is well known that Prince Bismarck proposed to the French ambassador, Benediti, that Germany would offer no opposition to the acquisition of Belgium by France if Germany was allowed, as she ought to be, to acquire Holland, and the action of Germany in connection with the Transvaal at one time, and the aspirations that have grown up in the Dutch population there, looking for German sympathy and possibly German support, is due to the hope that if Holland should become a portion of the German Empire, the British colonies of South Africa might become a portion of that same empire. England gave up to Germany the whole Zanzibar coast. It had been in the possession of England since 1840, although British sovereignty had not been formally extended over the country. For the purpose of getting the moral support of Germany in Egypt, this concession was made to the German Government, and Germany was put in possession of the Zanzibar coast. Subsequently, in the year 1890, Germany gave up two islands, Zanzibar, and another beside it, upon the coast, to Great Britain—restored them on condition that Heligoland should be surrendered to Germany, and this was done, but no one who has read the diplomatic correspondence relative to the establishment of German colonies in Africa can have any doubt whatever that when the aggressive policy of the Transvaal Government was begun, the Transvaal Government expected not only the sympathy, but the material support of Germany, in resisting British authority in that country, and in preventing the British Government successfully insisting upon those reforms that the government had endeavoured to bring about. There is scarcely an agreement that the British Government had entered into with the government of the Transvaal that the latter has not violated. On four occasions Mr. Chamberlain said they brought the government of the Transvaal to the brink of war with Great Britian, and there is no doubt that it stands at the brink of war again. If the government of England asserts with a firm hand the authority of England, as far as that authority may be justly claimed and enforced, I have no doubt whatever that British authority will be permanently established in South Africa, and you may have within the next twenty years a South African federation embracing the entire British possessions in that country, including the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, in much the same way, as you have the confederation of the British North American provinces to-day, but until British authority is asserted and the rights of British subjects are supported in the Transvaal country, there will be unrest and there will be no certainty of the permanence of that authority in any other portion of South Africa. You have to-day about 160,000 Europeans in the Transvaal country. Of these 70,000 are Boers, and 90,000 are Uitlanders. Of the Uitlanders, 70,000 are British subjects. Those people are paying the taxes. They possess the wealth. If the country is to be made successful, wealthy and prosperous, they are the people upon whom that prosperity mainly depends, and I do not see upon what principle of political ethics it can be for a moment maintained, that because the Boers happened to be first in the country, although they are not possessed of the wealth—nineteen-twentieths of it is in other hands—they should control the government. You have, it is said, to-day about £170,000 paid for a secret service. You have, of the nearly £4,000,000 that are paid as taxation, large sums stolen by the officials. Nobody calls them to account, because they are all very much in the same position, having the same inclination and having the same necessities. They have in this regard a good deal of spmpathy for each other, but the money comes out of the Uitlander population. It is the British people and others who have capital invested and who are engaged in the production of wealth in the country, who have to bear, not only the necessary burdens of legitimate government, but to bear those extraordinary expenses that, through monoplies and special favours, have gone to enrich a certain favoured portion of the population. You have an educated people constituting the majority of the white population paying nineteen-twentieths of the taxation who are not permitted to apply one dollar of that money towards the education of their own children in their own language. You have men brought from Holland as school teachers who are qualified to teach those who can speak nothing but English and understand nothing but English, by simply a three months' residence in England. That is the sole qualification they possess. The knowledge of the English language which they acquire in that time is supposed to fit them for giving instruction in English, where any teaching in English at all, is permitted. You have the municipal government of the city of Johannesburg, containing about 70,000 Europeans and as many more of a native population put into the hands of 300 men without property, without education, without municipal experience, without any knowledge of municipal government as it is carried on elsewhere, and the result is, the city is without the ordinary appliances necessary for the protection of health and for the convenience of the population. You have nightly robberies and murders committed in every direction. There is none of the security for life or property that is required elsewhere, and the whole of this system is maintained by means furnished by those who are subject to this opression. You have had recently the executive government declaring itself paramount to judicial authority; you have had newspapers suppressed, men arrested and sent to jail under the authority of the executive government, and who are not allowed the protection of the courts even as they exist there. Lord Randolph Churchill, before his death, visited the Transvaal country and gave a description of it. He relates one incident with regard to the treatment of the native population, which gives one some idea of the character of the government controlled by the Boers. A young Kaffir had committed some trifling offence. He was arrested by a cornet and handcuffed. A rope was put around the links that connected the handcuffs and fastened to the pommel of the saddle, and he started off on a canter to a jail some twenty miles distant. He did not go a great many miles until the young Kaffir was tired out and was dragged along the street. The cornet got off his horse, gave the Kaffir a horse-whipping, compelled him to get up, mounted his horse and started on again, and this process of beating and thrashing the young Kaffir in his custody was continued until he came within five or six miles of the jail. Finding that he could take him no further that evening, he left the prisoner in the custody of a blacksmith until morning and rode into town. In the morning he came back for his prisoner, but found that he was dead.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What killed him?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He died from the treatment which he had received the day before. Some two or three persons had seen the proceedings all the way. The murderer was let out on bail, but the parties who were likely to be called as witnesses were sent to prison and no bail would be accepted in their case. The reason assigned was that it was necessary that they should be forthcoming at the date of trial. The day of trial arrived. It was shown that the cornet was a member of the Dutch Reformed Church, that he was a member in good standing, that he was a highly respected citizen, and he was found not guilty. That, I think, is a fair illustration of the manner in which justice is administered towards the native population, and the administration of justice as it respects the Uitlander population does not differ very widely from that which exists as to the natives as is shown in the trial of Edgar's murderers. It is quite right and proper that this dependency of the empire, interested in its unity, interested in the permanence of that unity, interested in the dignity of the empire and interested also in the respect which it earns, it merits, and ought to receive from other states and places in Christendom—it is right that it should not be indifferent to the indignity to which British subjects have been subjected in the republic of the Transvaal. I am sure I express the feeling of every hon. gentleman here when I say that the British Government would fail in its duty if it accepted any compromise which in any degree placed the future liberties and rights of the British population in that country within the discretion of those who have so abused their authority. (Applause.) I say that while we ought not to desire to see the rights and liberties—liberties in the proper sense of that expression—of the people of the Transvaal encroached upon or interfered with, at the same time it is our duty to ask the Imperial Government that they shall give adequate protection to the British population in that country, and to see that in respect to property, in respect to the security to life and to reputation, that the people of British origin should not be placed in an inferior position to the Boers of that country who were themselves once British subjects. (Hear, hear.) I am perfectly assured of this that so far as the British population in that country are concerned, there is but one way of guaranteeing permanency and security of their rights, and that is by admitting them to the elective franchise, making them eligible for office, giving them authority as respects the government of the country in proportion to their merits, measured by their numbers, by their intelligence, by their wealth and by their contributions to maintain the authority of that state (applause), and anything short of this would be a great misfortune, for it would lower the Imperial authority not only in the eyes of every Boer in South Africa, but in the eyes of every free man in every portion of the British Empire. (Cheers.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After the exhaustive speech of my hon. friend the leader of the government, I am relieved from any lengthened remarks on this very important subject. I may say, however, that for many reasons I second the motion which the hon. gentleman has made with a great deal of pleasure, showing as it does, that Canada as an integral part of the British Empire is in full sympathy with the mother country in her determination to protect her subjects in all and every part of the world. (Hear, hear.) And that when anything which affects Her Majesty's subjects, whether it be in the Transvaal or any other portion of the globe, we in Canada are ready upon all occasions to join with the mother country in giving them that protection which every British subject should have, wherever he may be located. (Hear, hear.) The hon. Minister of Justice has given us a succinct history of the acquisition of the Cape Colony including the Transvaal. He has also pointed out the many disabilities under which British subjects are at present labouring in the Transvaal Republic. He might have gone much further in that direction, and pointed out that they are occupying the position in that country of paying nearly the whole of the expenses of the government, and at the same time being treated as if they were serfs. Notwithstanding the valuable information given by the Minister of Justice to which we have listened, with interest and pleasure, I shall claim the indulgence of the House for a few minutes, in order to call attention to some further disabilities to which the Uitlanders are subjected. Originally white settlers in the Transvaal were entitled under the spirit of the convention of 1881 to vote as soon as they arrived in the country. This privilege was in 1855, curtailed and the franchise restricted to persons born in South Africa, who had paid £25 for the privilege. In 1874 another amendment followed, providing that strangers not possessed of real estate should be residents for one year, but if real estate owners full rights were accorded them at once. This was the state of affairs so far as relates to the franchise, existing at the date of the convention of 1881. In 1882, the period of residence was extended to five years, and a payment of £25. These restrictions were again revised, and in 1890, the qualifications of a voter was a two years' residence, which, however, did not begin to count until the person had been registered in what was called the Field-Cornet books—the payment of £5 and the taking of an oath of allegiance. Then, after ten years had elapsed, he became eligible for a seat in the second Raad, not even then, however, until he had passed his thirtieth year, thus restricting his rights to "acquire the franchise for the first Raad" to the age of forty years. Even this right "was made subject to the first Volksraad resolving to admit the particular alien," pursuant to regulations "to be framed" by the Transvaal authorities. How this concession was made non-effective may be gleaned when it is known no regulations were ever framed. Naturalization even in this restricted sense, did not give full citizenship for no aspirant could ever "get the vote for the president or commander in chief." In 1893, provision was made in the law that no one who received the franchise under these conditions should have the right to vote for the "president or commander general," not satisfied with these restrictions the liberty loving republicans of the Transvaal in 1894, passed a law, declaring that children of aliens born in the Transvaal should enjoy full rights "only after claim and waiting for full fourteen years," and further that even the children of naturalized citizens should not have the right to vote, though born in the country, unless they claimed the right at sixteen years of age. This is not all; provision was made that "all future franchise reform was also barred by declaring that future amendments must be published for one year, and then should not be considered in the Raad until two-thirds burghers had approved." That all the provisions in reference to the vested rights of those who had entered the country, under the guarantees of the convention of 1881, and the promise underlying it, that equal treatment would be accorded to all, and in the case of those who had taken the oath of allegiance, under the law of 1890, were flagrant violations of the terms of the convention cannot be disputed. It may, however, be proper to mention that president Kruger now proposes to reduce the term of probation for the securing of the franchise by Uitlanders from fourteen to nine years which is not considered a reform at all adequate. This does not as far as I can learn, include the right to vote for the President. Now, let me call your attention to the educational system which prevails in that country. Though it is estimated that three-fourths of the people in the Transvaal are what are termed Uitlanders, "Dutch is the sole medium of instruction in what is termed Standard IV., and upwards in all schools receiving state aid." State papers before us show that £230,000 were voted this year, 1899, and that nearly all that sum came from Johannesburg, but only a fraction spent there, though the white people are nearly all Uitlanders, and that in 1986, £50,000 was voted for Uitlander education, but only a few hundreds were spent owing to the refusal of the government to allow English to be the medium of education after the III. Standard. It must not be forgotten in this connection that the Uitlanders, who are compelled to bear almost the entire cost of the State schools, are maintaining their own separate schools with their own Superintendent of Education. In Cape Colony under British rule exclusively, the Dutch and English language are as is the French and English language in Canada, equal; while in the Transvaal, under the rule of President Kruger, Dutch alone is the official language of the courts and the public offices, though not understood by a third of the people. This, too, in a land under the suzerainty of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. Bad and tyranical as is the treatment of the Uitlanders in the Transvaal under the presidency of Kruger, in the matter of the franchise and education, the making of the judiciary subservient to the executive is to the British mind, the most objectionable and revolting; destroying as it does the independence of the bench, and the liberty of the subject. So far has this species of absolutism been carried, that official papers show that the "Volksraad and Executive Council have repeatedly attempted to influence the courts by resolutions; in one case actually throwing the plaintiff, in a pending action against the government, out of court. Finally, in February, 1897, in violation of the written constitution, it was enacted that resolutions of the Volksraad should have the effect of law, and that their validity should not be subject to review by the court. The bench protested, and Chief Justice Kotze was dismissed; and Mr. Gregorowski, who was appointed Chief Justice vice Kotze, declared when the law was passed that no man of self-respect would remain on the bench of the republic while this was the law." It is also stated that jurors are only drawn from the ranks of the burghers, who are mostly ignorant of the English language, and alien in sympathy to and having huge contempt for Uitlanders, especially Englishmen. The result is that most serious crime is rampant, and perpetrators of serious crimes frequently escape punishment, what safety under such a state of affairs have that class of the population who are really making the country what it is. Safeguards under such arbitrary and unconstitutional acts, do not exist. To remove these iniquitous restrictions, and the placing of "the children of the suzerain on an equality in all things, with the Boers, whom, of her own movement, Great Britain has made into a free nation," is the primary objects of the present agitation in the Transvaal, and the desire not only of the Imperial Government, but of every subject of Her Majesty, no matter in what part of the empire he may reside. This state of existence is not compatible with the Anglo-Saxon character, nor, as my hon. friend has said, would it be compatible with the history of our own country if she permitted it to continue for any length of time. I am pleased to see the different outlying portions of the greater empire taking a deep interest in this particular case, for the reason that it shows that there is a feeling growing all through the empire that those of us who live at a distance from the motherland are no longer to be considered as outsiders, or any longer as colonies, but as part and parcel of the empire itself, (cheers), and entitled to all the rights and privileges that those who live in Great Britain enjoy. That feeling, I am glad to know, is growing amongst British subjects throughout the world. There is a unanimity of feeling amongst British statesmen, as there is, I am sure, a unanimity of feeling in all the outlying portions of the empire, not only of sympathy with our fellow subjects in the Transvaal, but a determination in the mind of every lover of his country, not only to extend his sympathy, but his aid, in a more material form in case it should be required. (Cheers.) No one can have watched the policy of Lord Salisbury and the leaders of the Liberal party upon this question without coming to the conclusion that there is but one feeling, and that is a feeling leading to a determination to put a stop to the outrages which exist in that country. Only the other day in the debate on this question in the House of Lords, Lord Selborne stated that England had put her hand to the plough and she would not go back. Lord Salisbury re-echoed that statement. Lord Kimberley, who was in office at the time of the conventions in 1881 and 1884—and if I were to give an opinion, which is unnecessary at the present time, I should say that there is where England made her greatest mistake——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Earl of Kimberley, in discussing this question on the 30th of last month in the House of Lords, made no secret, the report says, of the fact that neither he nor Mr. Gladstone ever had in mind such race conditions and political disqualifications or inequalities as those now prevailing in the Transvaal. I do not suppose that Mr. Gladstone, or the statesmen who were controlling the destinies of the empire at that period of our history, ever contemplated that it was possible that the people for whom England had done so much, and, as the hon. Minister of Justice has said, probably saved from total annihilation during that war, could have proved themselves to be, may I say inhuman in their conduct towards British subjects, and certainly they never could have contemplated, when they provided in the convention that civil and religious liberties should be enjoyed by all incomers, no matter who they might be, that political disqualification would have been exercised simply because the word "political" was not inserted in the convention. It is a lesson for those who may have treaties to make of that character in the future. Had the words "political and civil rights" been used, the difficulty under which the Uitlanders in the Transvaal are now suffering, might not have existed. Be that as it may, we cannot but join in sympathy with those who are desiring to remove those disabilities. I find, also, the same unanimity exists in the House of Commons. It is notable, however, that in this debate, many leading men in the British House of Commons were absent, but Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, who leads the opposition, spoke very plainly as to what that party, with which he was connected, would do under any circumstance. He said:

> We have come to the conclusion that the grievances of the Uitlanders are substantial, and the situation is a matter of Imperial concern. We have taken up their cause and we are bound to see it through. We shall not rest until a conclusion satisfactory in our estimation has been reached.

I repeat that it is gratifying to find that the leaders of both parties, and in fact the whole of the English people, to-day, are, as they were when the great question arose as to their rights upon the Nile, a unit. The fact of their being a unit prevented a war, doubtless, certainly, difficulties with France at that time: and when England finds that all the outlying portions of the empire, as I have reason to believe and do believe will be the case, are prepared not only to extend their sympathy but to say to them "As part and parcel of the British Empire we are prepared to do our part in preserving the rights of British subjects wherever they may be situated," it will be gratifying to her. I notice that Mr. Chamberlain has spoken very decidedly and plainly upon this question. He said:

> Great Britain will maintain her position as paramount power in South Africa. Under these conventions therefore Her Majesty holds towards the South African Republic the position of a suzerain who has accorded to the people of that republic self-government upon certain conditions.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach was equally pronounced upon the subject. He said:

> The power and authority of England have long been paramount, and neither by the Snad River Convention of 1862, nor at any other time did Her Majesty's Government surrender the right and duty of requiring that the Transvaal should be governed with a view to the common safety of the various European communities.

Taking the utterances of the statesmen of all classes, in the Commons, with one exception, Mr. Labouchere, we find that the feeling is so decided that I am in hopes, as every one must be, that Kruger and the Transvaal authorities will see the necessity, without driving the empire to war, to make those concessions which it was understood, when the convention was entered into, should be given to British subjects. Canada has shown Great Britian in the past that she was ready to assist to her fullest extent in the defence of the empire. In 1896 she had an evidence of that when there was a probability of a collision with Germany. When the difficulty arose in another part of the world, Lord Wolseley expressed the opinion that a contingent of Canadian Voyageurs, such as he had when he went to the North-west Territories during the trouble there, would be the very best class of men he could possibly have to ascend the Nile, and we all know a contingent did go from Canada, and some of our best sons laid down their lives in that expedition and earned for themselves a credit and a name that will never die in English history. And so it will be, I am convinced in this case. While it is not our province in this chamber to even suggest an appropriation of money, or the raising of money, to assist in carrying on a war, should a war unfortunately occur, we can at least say that any appropriation that will be asked for by the Commons, no matter who might be in power at the time, would be readily voted by the Senate for that purpose. I have expressed the views which I hold upon this question, and the views which I am satisfied every hon. member in this Senate holds, no matter to what political party he may belong. There is another matter that is gratifying, and it is the feeling that when it comes to a question affecting our country—and when I say our country I mean the empire—we know no party and no creed. I am glad to know also, that in our difficulties—although it is not perhaps immediately pertinent to this subject, but it is pertinent to the point I am endeavouring to make—with our friends across the border in reference to the rights which we believe we have on the Alaskan boundary, we know no party. Many are not in accord with the party in power to-day, but Canada as a whole will justify the course they have taken in defence of Canadian rights on the Pacific coast. There is another pleasing feature in connection with the point I am elucidating, and that is, that some of our brightest young men, graduates of our military college are earning for themselves a name in the service of the country that will not be forgotten. I might mention, as an illustration, the case of our young friend Girouard, who has played so important a part on the Nile. (Cheers.) There are others to whom I might refer. Among them young Stairs of Halifax and Cook of Moncton, who have done noble work for their country. It emphasises the fact, however, that wherever young Canadians go, whether to the mother country or to a foreign country, they, as a rule, not only maintain their allegiance to their sovereign but reflect credit on their native land. I second this motion with very much pleasure, and I hope it may have the effect that we anticipate, that while the English Government have in the past been pursuing a most conciliatory course in trying to accomplish the freedom of our own subjects in the Transvaal, and while at the same time they were almost on the verge of war, the desire of Lord Salisbury and the desire of the government is to maintain peace if possible, have so far been realized. There may, however, have been in the minds of Kruger and those who are governing the Transvaal, the idea that, as one party in England had not until lately spoken out as boldly as they should have, that a change of government which might possibly take place in England, he would have the sympathy and aid of those who would succeed the present government. The utterances of Lord Kimberley and the utterances of the Liberal party being so clearly in conformity with the opinions expressed by the Conservative party, dispel at least that idea, and that alone may bring about a solution of the difficulties which might otherwise end in war.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—It will be in the remembrance of those who were present when this matter was first brought before our chamber, that there was a very laudable desire for information in regard to the matter. I thought at the time it was a pity that some of those gentlemen who wished to have this information had not done, as some of the other members of the House, availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by that admirable lecture given in one of our committee rooms by Mr. Davis. However, I think now that no hon. gentleman in this chamber can complain of not having a good knowledge of the situation as it exists in the Transvaal at this time. The House is under a debt of obligation to the hon. Minister of Justice for the admirable, concise, lucid and at the same time comprehensive speech which he has just delivered to us upon this subject, and it is all the more worthy of the thanks of the House when we think of the onerous duties which rest upon the shoulders of the hon. Minister of Justice, that he should have been able to find time to prepare such a speech as the one with which he has favoured us this afternoon. I trust that, the effect of what is being done, may be, even upon such an obtuse nature as that of Oom Paul, to bring home to his mind the fact that history is not going to be reversed because he wishes it as far as his ability to reverse it will permit. History is not going to be reversed and Britons, no matter to what branch of the family they may belong, never shall be slaves. I feel convinced that Canada will do her part at any time to emphasize that assertion.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—It will be presumptuous on my part to attempt to say anything upon the general question which has been so ably and fully discussed by the hon. Minister of Justice, or to say anything about the patriotic features of the matter which have been referred to by the hon. leader of the opposition. There is one thought which occurs to me which, I think, will give the clew to the enthusiasm which existed in the House when the Premier brought the matter before them, and it is this: that no one can have failed to observe for some years past the evident desire manifested upon every occasion to draw closer together the bonds between the mother country and every part of the empire, all over the world. It has shown itself in a number of ways. Two years ago His Excellency the Governor General, the representative of Her Majesty, brought to the attention of the Canadian people the dire distress of the people of India and appealed to Canadians for aid. Although the people of India were not of our blood and not of our race, we all felt that they are our fellow subjects beyond the sea, and the people of Canada responded to that appeal. Quite recently His Excellency Lord Minto, the present Governor General, merely mentioned the fact that that great and noble soldier, Lord Kitchener, had a scheme for founding a college in connection with the memory of that great man Gordon, who was murdered at Khartoum years ago, and the purpose was accomplished. What did all this mean, but the tendency and trend of public opinion and sentiment towards closer union with England, to make her colonies, dependencies and possessions as one whole British people. Like the human body, what is felt by one portion is felt throughout the whole system. That is the secret of the enthusiasm that prevails in this country and in this House. The greatest credit is due the First Minister for bringing this question before Parliament, and I trust it is an augury for good in the future. I wish to express my great indebtedness to the hon Minister of Justice for the lucid and clear manner in which he brought before the House and before the public at large everything in connection with the Transvaal difficulty. It will do good, and the loyal feeling that prompted us to assist the people of the East Indies when they were in dire distress will prompt us to assist a few of our fellow countrymen who are practically held as slaves by the Boers of the Transvaal. We would not have hearts in our bodies if we did not at once rise to assist them. These resolutions have been framed with a great deal of care and will do all that is necessary in the way of moral assistance to the British Government and as a clear announcement of Canada's feelings in this matter. But if the Prime Minister ever finds it necessary to appeal to the people of Upper Canada, I can at all events answer for them. He has but to say "Boys, I want a thousand or so of you to go to the Transvaal and assist our fellow subjects there to discuss this matter with the Boers. It is a wild country and if you have a gun in your hand it will do no harm." (Cheers.) I am pleased to find that there is no difference of opinion, that "all are for the state" in this country, and the way in which the subject has been received in this and in the other House augurs for good in the future. (Cheers.)

Hon. Mr. KERR—I feel as though I could scarcely give a silent vote upon the question now before the Senate. I have no doubt that I not only voice the sentiments of every hon. gentleman in this House, but of every loyal citizen of this noble Dominion. I desire here and now personally to express my profound appreciation of the services of the hon. gentleman who has so fully and so very ably moved this resolution, and also, of the leader of the opposition who has seconded it in such appropriate and patriotic terms. I am sure that the discussion of this day will awaken a sympathetic chord among all our Canadian people. We have every reason to be in sympathy with our fellow subjects in that remote part of the empire, because I take it—and it is my pride to feel—that in no part of Her Majesty's wide empire do her subjects enjoy in a greater degree the blessings of civil and religious liberty than in Canada. I am sure that the moral effect of this resolution will reverberate throughout the British Empire and awaken a sympathetic chord in the breast of every loyal subject of Her Majesty. Whatever concerns British subjects in any part of Her Majesty's Empire concerns us, and their welfare must be our welfare. I am sure that our action in this chamber to-day will not be misinterpreted, but will receive the hearty thanks and gratitude of the authorities who have charge of this weighty matter. I am exceedingly proud of Her Majesty's advisers and the wise, patient and long suffering course that they have taken in this matter, and I only hope that the man who presides over the destinies of the Transvaal Republic will not misconstrue the action of the British Government and take forbearance for weakness, that he will not press too long upon that apparent forbearance and hesitation to take a bolder step, but that he will be wise in time and see the necessity himself of taking a different course of action and giving to the Uitlanders those rights and liberties to which every British subject is entitled, no matter where his lot may be cast. I am sure that there is a solution of this question, and that the British Government will insist upon finding that solution. I hope it will be a peaceful solution, and I believe the course we are taking this day will strengthen the hands of the Imperial authorities and do very much towards assisting to bring about that conclusion, and will exert a very salutary influence upon the negotiations now pending. I am in entire accord with what the leader of the opposition has said, that moral suasion is powerful and should be sufficient in this case: but if, unfortunately, it should not prove sufficient, there is a suasion that is even more potent if it should be necessary to use it; but I pray that that necessity may not come. It is too late in the Christian era for slaves to exist in any part of the world, and certainly there should be no place where slaves or serfs can exist within the wide bounds of the British Empire. They must be free. Every man is entitled to his freedom and to the full rights of citizenship, and he must not be expected to bear burdens unless he has those rights. I trust, therefore, that our less fortunate fellow subjects in remote Africa will at an early day receive that for which they have been struggling, that which has been denied to them, but that which, I trust, will come to them at a very early day, and that that will all be accomplished by moral means and moral force, and that more extreme steps may not be necessary. I trust that the moral sense of the world will bring such a pressure to bear upon the Transvaal Government as will result in that difficulty being settled, and settled without a resort to harsher or more forcible means.

The motion was agreed to unanimously, the Senate rising and singing "God Save the Queen."

The Senate adjourned.

SUPPLIES OF OIL FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid on the Table of this House, copies of—1. All specifications and advertisements issued in May, 1896, for tenders for supply of lubricating and signal oils for the Intercolonial Railway.

2. All tenders received in response to said advertisements.

3. Analyst's report on samples submitted.

4. Notices to successful tenderers.

5. Order in Council authorizing minister to notify successful tenderers that contracts would not be executed with them.

6. Any subsequent tender made with the Galena Oil Company, with analyst's report on samples furnished.

7. Contracts made with the Galena Oil Company and bearing date the 17th of September and the 23rd of September, 1896, respectively.

Also a return showing the car mileage on the Intercolonial Railway for each of the years 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898, each year to be computed from the 1st day of November to the 31st day of October following.

Also a statement of amounts deducted, with dates of such deduction from the accounts of the Galena Oil Company to cover the guarantee in the contract.

He said :—It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that a month or so ago I made some inquiry of the government with regard to the supply of oil for the Intercolonial Railway by the Galena Oil Company of Detroit, in the United States. My hon. friend, the leader of the government in this House, gave some information in reply to the questions I put on that occasion. I found then, however, that my hon. friend pointed out that some of the questions were not altogether suited for immediate answer, and that the information would be brought down if the papers were asked for. I now proceed to make a motion to call for the papers which my hon. friend did not find it convenient to give information upon in the former inquiry, and also some other papers, which suggest themselves to me as being of some importance, relating to this subject. I find, by the information which my hon. friend gave me, that this is a subject that requires some further attention, and rather close attention I think. In May, 1896, tenders were invited for the supply of lubricating and signal oils for the Intercolonial Railway; specifications were prepared and several offers were received. My hon. friend gave the names of all the parties that made offers. There was a good deal of competition on the basis of the tenders that had been called for, and the specifications that had been prepared by the department on which the tenders should be based, and it appears that soon afterwards, on the 7th July, the Imperial Oil Company were notified that their tender was accepted. A little later on it appears that the Imperial Oil Company were notified that a contract would not be made with them, notwithstanding that they had been notified that their tender was accepted, and that an Order in Council had been passed to that effect, and on the strength of that Order in Council the Minister of Railways proceeded to make a contract with the Galena Oil Company on a basis entirely different from the specifications that had been drawn by the department and submitted to all the tenderers when the tenders were called for. I do not find that the Galena Oil Company made a tender with the others, but made an offer on different basis from what the specifications pointed out. The specifications called for oil in certain quantities at a price per gallon, while the Galena Oil Company made an offer to lubricate the Intercolonial Railway at a cost of 10 per cent less than the Intercolonial Railway had been paying in the past. It was not an offer which at all conformed to the specifications which had been prepared by the department, and was not an offer which the other tenderers were allowed to make on the same lines. The Minister of Railways made this contract with the Galena Oil Company of Detroit, not on a basis of so much per gallon, but on a guarantee that the Intercolonial Railway would be lubricated in the future, under this contract, at 10 per cent less than it had cost before. Immediately that contract went into effect. Now, I find in the answers given by my hon. friend that for the year immediately preceding the entering into this contract with the Galena Oil Company, that is the year ending 31st October, 1896, the cost of lubricating the Intercolonial Railway was $33,327.75 ; and I find for the year ending 31st October, 1897, or the year immediately following the entering into this contract, the cost went up to $43,174.09. Here was an increase of about 34 per cent in the cost of lubricating the Intercolonial Railway in the face of a contract entered into guaranteeing that it was to be ten per cent less than it had been before. This is the information I received from my hon. friend in reply to the inquiries I made on the subject. Of course, we cannot absolutely arrive at a conclusion as to whether this is all straight and above board unless we take into account the combined car and engine mileage during those years, because it is possible that the mileage may have very largely increased, and that that might account for the extraordinary increase of about thirty-four per cent in the cost of lubricating the railway, notwithstanding that there was a guarantee that it should be ten per cent less than heretofore, but in looking over the report of the Minister of Railways I find that for the year ending 30th June, 1896, the combined car and engine mileage of the Intercolonial Railway was 8,048,643 miles, and I find for the year immediately following that, the combined engine and car mileage was 8,557,163 miles, an increase of about six per cent in the car mileage. This comparison is not for exactly the same period because in the answers which my hon. friend gave me he compared the year ending 31st October, 1896, with the year ending 31st October, 1897. The figures I am quoting are from the minister's report, which shows what were the combined car and engine mileage for the years ending 30th June, 1896, and 30th June, 1897. They furnish, however, a fair approximation, and enable us to estimate the increase of mileage between the two years. That being so, we have this fact, that the increase in the combined car and engine mileage was only six per cent, while the increase in the cost of lubricating the road went up 34 per cent and that in the face of a contract, as my hon. friend told us, guaranteeing that there would be a saving of 10 per cent in the cost as compared with the way it had been done before. I submit that the information which my hon. friend gives is of a very grave character and calls for a full and complete inquiry with regard to the subject. I am told that the gentleman who represents the Galena Oil Company, Mr. Lichtewhein, from New York, undertook to supervise the lubricating of the road himself, and that, with the permission and consent of the Intercolonial Railway, he set about instructing the officials along the roads as to the methods of using oil leading in the direction of economy. That was, at all events, the proposition, and it was on the alledged merit of that proposition that the new contract was entered into. I am entirely resting on the information which my hon. friend the leader of the House gave in answer to my inquiry, to be found in the official report of the Debates of this year. I want to point out some dates to hon. gentlemen. The dates of the two contracts with the Galena Oil Company were the 17th September, 1896, and the 23rd September, 1896, respectively. These contracts have run on from that time to the present and have been renewed without tender, and this gentleman with the German name from New York, who represents this company, made his first acquaintance with the province of New Brunswick in August of that year in the counties of Sunbury and York when the Minister of Railways was running an election for the House of Commons consequent on his acceptance of the office of Minister of Railways. This gentleman I am told first appeared in that constituency at that time and took some considerable interest in the return of the Hon. Mr. Blair.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Did he lubricate the machine?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Possibly he did. I cannot tell, but there is no question there was a good deal of lubrication in connection with that election, and it calls for a very full and complete inquiry. The election was held on the 25th August. On the 17th September following that election, a contract was made with this gentleman representing the Galena Oil Company, for lubricating oils, and six days later a contract was made with him for the signal oils, and in consequence of the contract made with him on that occasion he has gone on lubricating the Intercolonial Railway and has been paid $99,000. Whether he did any political lubricating before or since that, I am not in a position to say, but these are the facts—and I am indebted to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice for information with regard to them—that as a consequence of this new departure in lubricating the Intercolonial Railway, on the first year of its operation, the cost of lubrication went up thirty-four per cent, while the increased mileage was only about six per cent. In making these comparisons I am using the only data before me. I am comparing two years in one case ending 30th June, and in the other case ending 31st October. I do not pretend that the comparison can be absolutely accurate, but it furnishes a very fair and approximate basis for comparison. It certainly is a matter requiring explanation why it is that a contract made on this guarantee of a reduction of 10 per cent should lead to an increase of 34 per cent, while the car mileage had only increased to the extent of 6 per cent. There is another matter which requires explanation; and that is why a contract should be awarded on this basis of the 10 per cent reduction without notice having been given to the public. It is possible that other companies might have been prepared to offer a 20 per cent reduction, and it is not at all impossible that there might be those willing to offer a 50 per cent reduction if they had an understanding, or had reason to hope there would be no reduction made from them, but on the contrary that they would have been paid a larger amount than had been paid heretofore, which appears to have been done in the present case. Not only that, but the unfairness in awarding a contract to the Galena Oil Company, not on the terms of the specification which was put before other contractors, but on an entirely different and new basis upon which there was no competition, making this contract with these gentlemen at that time, and continuing the contract year after year since that time without calling for any further tender requires explanation.

The motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC CABLE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (176) "An Act to provide for the establishment of direct submarine telegraphic communication between Canada and Australasia." He said:—The proposal to lay a submarine cable from Canada via the Pacific Ocean to the Australian colonies is by no means a new project. It has been discussed at various times during the last fifteen or sixteen years. The first official meeting that took place on the subject was in London in 1887, when Canada sent two delegates in the person of the late Sir Alexander Campbell, who was then Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, and the present Sir Sandford Fleming. The subject was discussed very fully at that convention. It was presided over by Sir Henry Holland, who was then the Secretary for the Colonies. No definite form or shape was given to the conclusions of that conference, as they really were not in possession of sufficient information to lay down any proposal. The resolution that was adopted was in the following words:

> That the connection of Canada with Australia by direct submarine telegraph across the Pacific is a project of high importance to the empire, and every doubt as to its practicability should without delay be set at rest by a thorough and exhaustive survey.

That was the only result of the conference. From 1887 to 1894, the subject was kept alive, largely by the then existing Federation League which, at their annual meeting and on every suitable occasion, drew attention to the importance of having an all-British cable connecting all dependencies of the empire. The next formal official gathering that took place on the subject was in June, 1894, in this chamber, when the delegates from Australia assembled here under the presidency of the Earl of Jersey. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, took a very important part in that conference, and he was one of the delegates representing Canada.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Has not the hon. Secretary of State made a mistake in saying that that conference was under the presidency of Lord Jersey? I thought the hon. leader of the opposition was president of the conference.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps I have made a mistake. Lord Jersey represented the Imperial Government. I withdraw the statement. The Imperial officer, as a rule, assumed the presidency of the other gatherings, and the idea in my mind was that Lord Selborne presided at the last conference, as Sir Henry Holland presided at the former one, and that as Lord Jersey represented the Imperial interests, and took a very leading part, it came to my mind that he had presided.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is just this difference, if my hon. friend will permit me to call attention to it. The conferences to which he has referred took place at London, and were at the instance of the Colonial Secretary The conference which took place here was at the instance of the Canadian Government, and the Imperial Government was asked to send a delegate, with which request it complied, and sent the Earl of Jersey.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very glad indeed to stand corrected, because I think it redounds to the credit of Canada that so important an official step was conceived by a Canadian statesman, and that Canada took later the larger part not only in the discussion of this question, but, as appears by the resolution that was adopted at this conference, the duty of keeping this subject alive and of putting it in practical form and shape, was allotted to the Dominion of Canada. The resolution which resulted, after a very full discussion having been brought up on very many occasions, was moved by the Hon. Mr. Thyne, who represented Queensland, and seconded by Sir Henry Wrixon, who was the delegate from Victoria, and reads as follows:—

> That the Canadian Government be requested, after the rising of this conference, to make all necessary inquiries and generally to take such steps as may be expedient in order to ascertain the cost of the proposed Pacific cable, and promote the establishment of the undertaking in accordance with the views expressed in this conference.

It seems to have been conceded by the various representatives of the sister colonies, and by the Earl of Jersey himself, that Canada should be allotted the place of honour in developing the proposal which was to result in what I hope, within a very short time, will prove to be an all-British cable connecting all parts of the empire. From time to time the subject was again discussed, but the next meeting that developed any practical results was that held in London in 1896 and the beginning of 1897, at which Lord Selborne, I think it was, presided. Lord Strathcona and Mr. A. G. Jones, of Halifax, were the Canadian delegates. They went into the practical question. They took up the feasibility of the scheme. They had the advantage of the opinions of very many scientific men in London, Lord Kelvin among the rest, and they discussed the question of whether, the depth of the Pacific being so much greater by the route which was proposed, and the route being so much longer than the cables now crossing the Atlantic, whether there would be any difficulty on that score. They also discussed very fully the particular route which the cable was to follow, and the cost. Tenders were called for, or had been previously called for, and were thoroughly examined and analysed. They also discussed, from the information at hand, the cost of maintenance, the cost of keeping up the cable and the probable revenues arising therefrom. That information, of course, largely as to the revenue was predicated on the existing business that is now carried on by what is known as the Eastern Extension Cable Company. The result of that conference was, I think, very satisfactory, although no actual arrangement was then decided on, either as to the proportions that the various colonies should assume, or, in fact, as to the colonies that would take part, nor as to the proportion that Great Britain would assume. Great Britain up to this time had given it favourable consideration, but had never definitely stated what substantial aid, or what subsidy would be granted to the proposed all-British telegraph and cable across the continent of America and through the Pacific Ocean. The route decided on was from Vancouver via Fanning Island or the Island of Palmyra. I think Fanning Island was the one that was preferred. From Fanning Island it was to go to the Fiji Islands, from Fiji to Norfolk Island and from Norfolk Island there was to be a branch to New Zealand and another to Queensland. The distances from Vancouver to Fanning Island, were computed at 3,561 nautical miles. From Fanning Island to Fiji 2,093, from Fiji to Norfolk, 961, and the two branches, one to New Zealand from Norfolk Island, 537 miles, and from Norfolk Island to Queensland, 834, making a total of 7,986 miles, allowing in that, however, for ten per cent of what was considered slack owing to the depth of the cable to be laid. It had been discussed that a considerable amount might be saved by taking another route via Necker Island. But unfortunately in the last few years—I do not know exactly the date, but six or seven years ago, Fanning Island was taken possession of by the Hawaiians. Up to a recent period the island had been simply a bald rock in the Pacific Ocean, suitable of course for a cable, but it had not practically been claimed by any power. It was 200 or 300 miles from the Hawaiian Islands proper, and therefore not strictly in that group. However, Fanning Island, the island now settled on, is a British possession, and by following the route I have named the cable will touch British territory exclusively. That is the condition that has been expressed as necessary in all the conferences that have taken place on the subject, that it was to be an all-British cable. That was the essential part of it. The estimate of cost, gathered at the time under the presidency of Lord Selborne, varied from one and a half million pounds to one million eight hundred thousand pounds. In the bill before us the amount is fixed at £1,700,000. It is thought that there will be a margin even at that, which of course can go to maintain it for a time, if the whole amount is raised. Canada's share, reduced to dollars, of the whole amount of £1,700,000, is $2,285,555, and if interest were calculated at two and a half per cent it would amount to an annual charge of $57,138. The committee that met in London went thoroughly into all the practical features of the project. They made an analysis of the cost of maintenance on the basis of a capital of one and a half million pounds sterling, and their calculation was that the interest at two and a half per cent, which it was assumed would be the interest for which the debentures would be floated with Imperial assistance, would amount to £37,500; sinking fund £15,300; working expenses £22,000; and maintenance £70,000, a total of £144,000 annually. To meet that, of course there would be the revenue from the enterprise, calculated on a basis of dividing at least a proportion of one-third to one-fourth, even the first year, of the business that is done now by the Eastern Extension Company, and that I think is a rather low estimate, for this reason, that Australia owns the cables throughout the Australian colonies. They naturally would be interested in sending all the business over the cable in which they themselves had an interest, and I think I am safe in saying that, with the feeling that is now developed in England, there would be a decided preference to send messages over the Canadian route. The development of Imperial unity has made very rapid strides, and the sentimental feature is one that should not be at all ignored in discussing a question of that kind. On the very moderate basis, that in the first year only a diversion of about one-third of the messages would be sent over the British cable, it would amount to a very considerable sum in reduction of the £144,000, bringing Canada share of the cost, if any had to be paid, within very reasonable limits. Of course it is impossible to speculate on what it may be, because, after all, it is only a speculation. We can only estimate matters of that kind on what we assume will be the result. There would, of course, be the attraction of the lower rate, unless the present company put down its rate, which probably it would. If I am properly advised, the Eastern Extension Company has been very successful. It has been paying very handsome dividends, and has a large amount of rest account. Hon. gentlemen know that the late Mr. Pender, who was knighted before he died, was a very successful man in developing the interests of that company, and he, perhaps with a great deal of prudence and wisdom, had his stock distributed in quarters where strong influence was brought to bear in the development of the business of that company. One of the difficulties Canada has had to contend with in past years in dealing with this question, has been the feeling of intense animosity on the part of the Eastern Extension Company. Of course, it meant cutting into their business. They, being a monopoly, charged high rates and paid large dividends, and anything that was going to interfere with handsome dividends in the future necessarily encountered their opposition. The rates, I believe, have continued up to the present time from England to Australia at four and nine pence a word. The rate from Great Britain to Vancouver at the present time is one shilling and six pence a word. It was proposed to start the Pacific cable rates at three shillings and six pence a word, that would be two shillings for the cable proper, allowing that there was no reduction even in the charges from Great Britain to Vancouver. It is highly probable that these charges would be reduced. They have been from time to time reduced, until they are brought now to the figure I have indicated, and with a view to diverting a considerable amount of business, it would be in the interest of all the cable companies in France, Great Britain and this continent to divert a considerable amount of their messages via the Canadian route as they would then get a share of the business, and there would be that strong inducement. Besides, no doubt they would have very strong influences both in Great Britain and in France, and therefore we may count pretty strongly on the fact that the business would be assisted by the cable companies connecting this continent with Great Britain. The business, too, is largely increasing. The development is extraordinary. In 1891 the number of words over the Eastern Extension was 1,110,000; in 1895 it was 1,948,000; in 1896 it was 2,236,000. So, hon. gentlemen will see what a rapid advancement there is in the business of the ocean cables. There has been a constant increase, and therefore it would be a very modest assumption to say that the Pacific cable, with all the advantages it would have of support in Australia and Great Britain, could only in the first year carry 750,000 words. Hon. gentlemen know Sir Sandford Fleming has given a great deal of thought and attention to this subject in the last ten or fifteen years, and has himself expended a good deal of time and money, too, I might say, because he had paid his own expenses on several occasions in crossing and recrossing the Atlantic ocean, and once crossing the Pacific in furthering this project, and has made it a study, and therefore his conclusions are entitled to very considerable weight. His estimate of the revenue is as follows :—

In 1902	£114,000
In 1903	153,000
In 1904	197,000
In 1905	249,000

Of course that would pay the interest, maintenance and cost of repairs and leave a surplus in addition. As this is a cable, not for the purpose of obtaining dividends, but really for the development of the unification of the empire, if the rates were only kept at a figure that would pay expenses and pay the sinking fund, and the interest, we should be all amply satisfied. No other company could possibly compete, that is, if we were successful in laying the cable. With the revenue developed in the figures that I have mentioned according to Sir Sandford Fleming's view of it, and it certainly seems a reasonable basis on which to found the statement, it would not be many years before it would be on at least a paying basis—that is, there would be no charge on either Great Britain or Canada. As hon. gentlemen know, it is only recently that definite answers have been given by the parties chiefly interested in the construction of this cable. So late as March of last year at the Postal Conference held in the Australian colonies at Hobart, this resolution was adopted :

That this conference reaffirms the opinion that, in the interests of Australasia, the Pacific cable project should be consumated as speedily as practicable and that the governments of the various Australasian colonies be requested to represent to the Imperial and Dominion Governments the foregoing opinion, together with the proposal of the Premiers as agreed to at their recent conference held in Melbourne, viz. :—That if Great Britain and Canada would each contribute one-third of the cost, the colonies would be prepared to contribute the remaining third.

Subsequently the colonies in Australia that decided positively to take any individual interest came to that conclusion in August of last year at a conference held at Sydney. This is the cable extract :

Pacific cable. Conference of Premiers, New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, just held Sydney, agree that if Great Britain and Canada pay five-ninths and New Zealand one-ninth, then New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria will contribute one-ninth each.

That was the first occasion on which any positive and definite proposition was made. Up to that time New Zealand had only spoken in a general way. Following that, in November last, the subject came up in the legislature then sitting in New Zealand and the Public Accounts Committee, to which it was referred, made this report :

1. It is desirable that telegraphic communication between England and New Zealand, via Canada and the Pacific, should be established.

2. The colony of New Zealand should agree to join with such of the Australian colonies as are prepared to do likewise upon the basis of a guarantee of four-ninths of the cost of construction and annual deficiency (if any) by such colonies, New Zealand's proportion of the guarantee not to exceed in any case one-eighth of the whole cost.

That is the first time that New Zealand has put herself on record as being willing to contribute a specific and definite sum. When all the colonies had agreed, unfortunately, as hon. gentlemen know, the mother country hesitated about joining the partnership. After considerable discussion, they agreed to give a contribution subject to conditions which, I believe, were adverted to in this House when the subject came up in the early part of the session. They were such conditions that Canada did not feel warranted in accepting them, and when the Press of Great Britain heard that, they came out very manfully in support of the views of Canada and of the Australasian colonies, and under pressure of public opinion, Great Britain was then induced to change her attitude, to join the partnership and contribute five-eighteenths of the cost. So that, as it now stands, with the assurances to which I have referred, the proportion would be New South Wales two-eighteenths of the cost, Queensland two-eighteenths, Victoria two-eighteenths, New Zealand two-eighteenths leaving ten-eighteenths to be divided between Canada and Great Britain, making five-eighteenths each. Though, as I have explained to the House, in the opinion of those who have given this subject thought and attention the project will not be a tax upon the people of Canada or Great Britain, or at the worst will be so only for a very limited number of years, that has not been the motive which has prompted either this country or the Australasian colonies to press for the completion of this project. It is rather upon the sentimental idea and with a view to stimulating the trade between all parts of the empire—trade within the empire. That has been the moving influence at all times and at all the conferences—the unity of the empire. Now that the empire had spread over all parts of the world, men in all the colonies and Great Britain who have given this subject much thought feel that the time has come when there ought to be communication throughout the empire by an exclusively British cable. The action of this House yesterday is proof of the desire that Canada has to share with the other colonies in maintaining the unity of the empire and sustaining the fraternal feeling that ought to exist between British subjects in all parts of the world. But, apart from that, no doubt the cable will be the means of opening up a considerable trade, in addition to what we have now, with China and Japan, and although there are obstacles intervening, as the Eastern Extension Company have monopoly rights from Hong Kong northward, still I believe that the feeling that has prompted the action of the parties to this present proposal, in giving it form and shape, will be sufficiently strong to either induce Great Britain to pay the penalty, if it is necessary to annul that monopoly, or if that is not done, that the Eastern Extension will find it in its own interest to give special rates to the Pacific cable over its line from Hong Kong northward. China is just now the objective point of very many countries of the world—Germany, France, Great Britian and Russia are all looking to trade with China. China has an enormous population—more than one-fourth of the whole population of the globe—and the possibilities for development in that country are very great. I am glad to know that we in Canada are exporting to China. We occasionally hear of exports of cotton from Canada to China. They may not be large items, still it is the nucleus of trade that is sure to develop and grow. The only other point to which I need call attention is the method by which the scheme is to be floated. It is proposed that eight commissioners are to be appointed, two representing Canada, three the Australasian colonies and three Great Britain. It will be giving Great Britain a larger proportion than Canada. It is impossible to divide the appointments so that each country shall be represented in the ratio of its financial assistance, but as the board will sit in London, as we hope, now that the Imperial Government have consented to become partners in it they will take such an interest in it as will be of value to the enterprise, there can be no objection to Great Britain having one more representative than Canada. To that board will be delegated the floating of debentures which are to extend over a period of twenty-five to fifty years. The limit of interest named in the bill is 3 per cent. It is not at all likely that the bonds will have to bear that rate of interest, as it is thought that a lower rate of interest will float the bonds at par.

Hon. Mr. POWER—How much does the hon. gentleman say we shall have to pay every year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave the figures, fifty odd thousand dollars a year would be our proportion. Supposing the whole loan were floated—and it may not be necessary to do so—£1,700,000 is considered an outside figure; but asuming the whole of that amount was absorbed, our proportion would be $2,285,555 and 2½ per cent interest on that would be $57,138 but, as I have said, certainly after the second year there could be very little that would be chargeable against Canada, or, in fact any of the colonies. It may be assumed that the enterprise will be self-sustaining from at least the second year. I do not know that I need add anything more than further to express my gratification that all parties in this country concur in the propriety of the step the government is now taking. It is a natural growth, the developing of a feeling that we ought all to respect. It is not a recent proposition. It dates back for the last fifteen years, and has been steadily growing stronger and stronger each year until it has taken the shape in which it appears to-day, in which shape I hope it will meet the unanimous approval of the members of the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have listened with no little interest to the speech made by the hon. Secretary of State upon this very important question, one that has been agitating the country for some years. While it had its ardent supporters, we also know that it had its doubters, and not only doubters, but had opponents who are now friends to the scheme, and its most ardent admirers were at one time its oppenents. However, we have to deal with the question as it is presented to us to-day. My hon. friend has given a synopsis of the history of this scheme in which, if you will permit me to say, I do not think he has given sufficient credit to Canada for the part she has played in the great undertaking. The first meeting that took place, as the hon. gentleman has already intimated, was in 1887, at which we were represented by the late Sir Alexander Campbell, then a member of the administration, and Mr. Sandford Fleming, to whom I shall take the liberty of referring at a later period in connection with this subject. Very little was done, as has been already indicated by the hon. gentleman, at that conference. There was grave doubt in the minds of electricians, and those connected with telegraphy, and more particularly with cable operations, as to its practicability. It was thought that the length of the cable from point to point, and the depth of the ocean were insuperable barriers to success. However, Mr. Fleming, whom I look upon in connection with this subject as the head and front of the whole enterprise, never lost faith in the undertaking, nor did he ever cease to advocate it in this country as well as in England. In 1893 the government of Sir John Thompson sent a delegate, as hon. gentlemen know, to Australia in connection with the development of trade between the Australasian colonies and Canada. One of the subjects which was to be discussed in those colonies was the question of telegraphic communication between this continent and Australasia. Mr. Fleming at that time, to his credit be it said, volunteered to accompany that delegate, who, as every hon gentleman knows, was myself, to Australia and assist in bringing this great question before the people of these colonies. I am not saying too much when I assert, that it was through his advice and through the knowledge which he possessed of the subject, that success, to a very great extent, followed our mission. It has been said on many occasions that Sir Sandford Fleming was sent to accompany me at that time at the expense of the country. Such was not the case. I take this opportunity of placing that gentleman upon record as having this question so much at heart that he volunteered his services, valuable as we all know they have been, and at his own expense, and that he never received one dollar, even for the expenses incurred in the trip to Australia, or his expenses while in that colony. I say this because I think it is only justice to a Canadian who has taken such deep interest in this great enterprise. That delegation to Australia induced the Australasian colonies to send a delegate to Canada, where the representatives from the different colonies could meet and discuss the question without the difficulties which presented themselves in Australia. I found when I arrived in Australia and began to discuss these different questions, that I had five or six different governments with whom to negotiate, and to do that and arrive at any proper conclusion as to the course which should be pursued, would have taken months and perhaps a whole year. The governments of the different Australian colonies, with the exception of Western Australia, acceded at once to the request which was then made, and after communication with Sir John Thompson, then Premier, it was decided that an invitation should be extended to them as coming from the Canadian Government. The result you all know. In 1894 that conference met in this city, and it is a notable fact that in the history of the empire it is the first conference of that kind that was ever inaugurated by a colony, the colony inviting the Imperial Government to co-operate in carrying out this and other great schemes in connection with the unification of the empire. I know it was thought at the time—this may be a little history that is not known to all—that it might be looked upon as presumption on the part of the Canadian Government to invite the Imperial Government to send a delegate to co-operate with the colonial representatives from the different parts of the empire, but it is gratifying to every Canadian to know that as soon as the invitation was received, it was acquiesced in at once and the Earl of Jersey, an eminent English statesman, who had knowledge of the requirements, and who had also a knowledge of the feeling of the people in the Australian colonies, was selected as a gentleman acquainted with Australia from the fact that he had been governor of New South Wales some years before. With that fact in the minds of the government of the day in England, they selected him although he was not in accord with the political sentiments of the government of that day. It was at that meeting in Canada where the information was obtained as to the feasibility of the route and as to the cost of laying a cable, and not at the conference in London presided over by Lord Selborne. If any one has taken the trouble to read the despatch of the late Sir John Pender, it will be found that he took strong objection to the construction of the Canada and Australian line. One reason that he urged was that it would interfere with the vested rights of a company, which he said, was purely a private enterprise and had not received any governmental aid. That despatch was referred to the Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce of the day, who prepared a reply which will be found in the proceedings of the conference held here, in which it was pointed out that the whole Eastern Extension scheme had been largely subsidized in the way of guarantees and in other ways, that it had been paying to a remarkable extent, notwithstanding the fact that its stock had been watered over and over again. To that despatch neither Sir John Pender nor those who were connected with the Eastern Extension Company made any reply. To those who take an interest in this question it is worth reading. There was another peculiarity in connection with this gentleman, who was at the head of the Eastern Extension Company, he declared it to be impracticable to lay a cable between the American continent and the Australasian colonies. But, strange to say, when he found that the people of Canada and Australia, and the commercial community to a great extent in England, were in earnest on this question, he urged that if the cable was to be laid, notwithstanding the fact that he had declared it impracticable, his company ought to be permitted to carry out the project. It only shows the extent to which the opposition against this enterprise has been carried. At the Colonial Conference in Canada it was left with the Canadian Government, as has been indicated by my hon. friend the Secretary of State, to ascertain the probable cost, and whether tenders would be sent in by reputable capitalists in Europe, for the construction of the line. Advertisements were published in the English newspapers, the Times among the number, and the tenders that were sent from the most eminent capitalists and electricians and those whose business it is to lay cables, in England, were much below even the cost which Sandford Fleming, now Sir Sandford Fleming, had estimated, and it was upon that basis that Canada still continued to urge upon the Australian colonies, and also upon England, the necessity of joining together for the purpose of completing this work. Sir Charles Tupper, then the High Commissioner, aided materially in educating the people of England through the press, and also with that energy which we all know characterizes him, of forcing the question, if I may use that expression, upon the attention of the Colonial Office. In 1896, after what had been done, as I have indicated, through the conference of 1894, which was held in Canada, another conference was held in London. That conference was presided over by Lord Selborne, and the representatives from the colonies were the High Commissioner, Sir Saul Samuel, from New South Wales and Mr. Gillis, from Victoria, and Sir Donald Smith and myself from Canada, Lord Selborne, and one of the officials, I forget his name, from the War Department, constituted that conference. Very little result followed that meeting, for many reasons. The Imperial Parliament was then in session. It was in the middle of summer, when gentlemen in England like to take holidays, and unfortunately a telegraphic convention was held at Buda Pesth, in Austria-Hungary, which the Australian delegates had to attend, through instructions from home, and the result was the conference was postponed. I may say, in connection with this, that the Imperial Government refused to increase the number of the commissioners from the different colonies, notwithstanding that, Mr. Fleming was asked to accompany the Canadian delegates, in order to act as their adviser upon this question. In 1897, another conference followed, at which Lord Strathcona, and the Hon. Mr. Jones, of Halifax, were the Canadian commissioners, with Mr. Sandford Fleming, acting in the same capacity that he did when he attended in 1896, as assistant and adviser of the commissioners of that day. The hon. Secretary of State has pointed out what occurred at that meeting. Nothing positively resulted, but they reached a comparative agreement, if I may use that expression, upon the question. Still it remained in abeyance, and nothing was done until 1899; and here I think we may fairly take credit to Canada, and to this House for having urged not only upon the Imperial authorities, but upon the Australian people, the necessity of taking hold upon this question more vigorously than they had done in the past. My hon. friend will remember that, upon a question which I put to the present ministers as to the effect of a certain despatch which had lain hidden, as it were—certainly hidden from the world, since 1893—by which Canada was ostracized to the extent that she was not to be allowed to land a cable at Hong Kong for twenty years, unless either England or Canada, who might desire to tap the trade and the business of China, would consent to pay the total amount which had been incurred by the Eastern Extension Company in the extension of their line to Hong Kong. It was another evidence of the unanimity of feeling which exists among all public men in this country that Canada must not be so treated even by the Imperial authorities, where her interest is at stake.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the contents of that despatch were laid before the Senate, no one spoke more decidedly upon the question than the Minister of Justice himself, to which was added the remarks of strong condemnation by the hon. Secretary of State, of the course which had been pursued; and the strong expression of opinion in this Senate by members of the government and by members not supporting the government, and by the press of Canada, led to an agitation in England which has resulted in the Imperial Government receding from the position which they had taken, through, we have reason to believe, the influence of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, from the position of granting merely a subsidy, leaving the whole responsibility upon the colonies to construct this line. Another conference followed, since this question was discussed in this House, which resulted in the present agreement, and while I hesitate not to say that I think Canada is paying her full share and probably a little more than her share——

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Still she is willing to take the responsibility upon her shoulders to accomplish that which I believe to be the wish of every British subject, the solidification and unification of the British Empire. I have been taking some little interest, as most hon. gentlemen know, in this question, and I am pleased to find that those who threw obstacles in our way when it was first inaugurated, those who sneered at and condemned the whole scheme when it was discussed in the House of Commons, are now the most ardent supporters of the scheme for connecting all portions of the empire by means of a cable. It is another evidence, as I have already said, that when the interests of the country are at stake, we should, and we do forget those little party bickerings that take place upon less important questions. I congratulate the government upon the fact that they have taken this matter seriously in hand. I congratulate them on the fact that they have suceeded in arriving at a final conclusion as to the construction of the line. I am also glad to know they have followed so closely, upon this question at least, in the wake of their predecessors, and I can truly add, let them continue in that direction, and I am quite sure, as far as that is concerned, they will meet with the approbation of the people. My hon. friend referred to one or two schemes, and particularly that of France. It is known that there is a cable now laid by Mr. Hartly Coutts from the French penal island of New Caledonia to Queensland; and any one who will examine the terms and conditions of that contract with Mr. Coutts will find that the French Government have laid down a principle which it were well for England and Canada to follow as far as at all practicable; no man can be employed, in connection with that cable, less he is a Frenchman, or with the consent of the French Government. The operators and every one connected with it are strictly under the surveillance of the French Government. And why? Because they look upon it not only as a protection to their country, but from a national standpoint in case of difficulties, and that is one reason why we, as Canadians, and why the Imperial authorities have come to the conclusion that the sooner we have an all-British cable surrounding the whole world, touching British territory only, the better it will be for us in case of difficulty, and for the promotion of commercial enterprises. I am fully in accord with the sentiments of my hon. friend when he spoke of the reasons why this cable should be owned and controlled by the governments and not by a company. It was some time before, I may say without any breach of confidence, some of my own colleagues could believe that this scheme was better than placing it in the hands of a company. We are not socialisitic enough in this country yet, to come to the conclusion that everything should be done by a government; but when you take this question into consideration and when you consider that it is an enterprise involving an expenditure of some $8,000,000, and perhaps a little more, before it is through with, and that if a company had to place their debentures upon the market they could not be disposed of, in all probability, unless at a good deal below the par value, and when you reflect that a company going into an enterprise of this kind must, of necessity, look to the interests of its stockholders, and that they would expect a return from their investments, you could not expect the same benefits to accrue to the commercial community, or the building up of the trade commercially between the whole empire as if it were owned by governments who can borrow their money at from 2½ to 3 per cent at the very outside rate, and control it without any prospect, or any desire, as indicated by the hon. Secretary of State, of making a profit out of the operation. I know the Premier of South Australia, in discussing this question, said that South Australia could not enter into the scheme, or become a party to it, for the reason that they had large investments in the Overland Telegraph running from Western Australia into their own colony, and he intimated to me—which I think was an error—that their profits amounted to £40,000 a year. I then put the question to him "Do you tell me that the profits, over and above the interest on your investments, brings £40,000 a year which you put into the treasury of the colony." His reply was "Yes." And I said "And you keep up the rates as they are now?" He said "Yes." I then said "If you were in Canada you could not do that over one session, because the principle of governments is to tax the people only for the requirements of the government."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to be led off by the hon. member's "hear, hear." I know what he means. I said to him, "If you receive this amount of profit from your investment, your duty is to lower the rate of telegraphic communication between Europe and the colonies, and between the different parts of the colonies, so as to simply pay your interest." However, I think the hon. gentleman was mistaken as to the profits, but there is no question about it, that if we had a company in charge of the line, they would seek to obtain profits, and if they acquired profits, there would be a combination, which the hon. gentleman from Rideau objects to, with the Eastern Telegraph Company, and the rates would be kept up. If the governments own and control it, they have no such object in view. They should have, and will have, I am quite sure, governed as it will be by practical men and statesmen, no other object in view than to take from the commercial community a sum sufficient to pay the interest upon the investment and give the balance to the country through the charges which are paid for telegraphy. They charge four and nine pence per word from Australia to England. I think I made the statement to this House before, that my friend, Mr. Fleming, when in Sydney, N.S.W., sent two words to his friends in Ottawa, and it cost two pounds eleven and two pence, and they would not record his name in the book unless he first paid them ten shillings. That is the kind of monopoly the people of that country have to submit to, and those are the charges to which all people trading and doing business in this country have to submit through the extortion of the Eastern Extension Company, presided over by the late Sir John Pender. The rate was reduced afterwards to the four shillings and nine pence to which my hon. friend referred. But why was it reduced? There was a guarantee on the part of the different colonies that if there was any deficit at the end of the year they were to make it up out of the public chest. Queensland refused to go into that agreement, and Queensland consequently was subject to a charge of nine shillings and four pence for each word, while New South Wales, just across the border, as the results of the guarantee which was given, paid only four shillings and nine pence. I said to the Premier at that time laughingly, "I suppose you gentlemen know enough when you want to cable home to go across the line and do it." He intimated that many did do that, and did not think it any harm. I have taken the liberty, on this occasion, of giving this short history, if I may so term it, of the inauguration and final completion of this work, in addition to the information which my hon. friend gave in connection with the matter. There is a little history in connection with that Neckar Island which is not generally known, but I do not know that I should be quite justified in repeating the whole facts. I say this much, however, that it is to Canada's representatives that credit is due for bringing that island to the notice of the Imperial authorities. It was not then under the control, sway or ownership of any country, so far as was known at the time, and more than that, Britain would have succeeded in hoisting her flag over that island, which is useless except for the purposes indicated, because it is a rock, had it not been for the, shall I say stupidity, I do not like to use strong words speaking of colonies abroad, of some people from Australia when they arrived at Honolulu keeping their mouths shut; which led Dole the President of the Hawaiian Republic at that time to despatch a ship at once and hoisted a flag upon that island, and by that means we lost it. That is as far as I am at liberty to go on this question, but that is really the fact. I am in hopes that we may all live to see the completion of this great work. I look upon it in the light that was indicated by the hon. Secretary of State. I look at it from a commercial as well as from an Imperial standpoint. If we ever expect to build up a trade with the Australian colonies and the islands in the Pacific in their different products, and to supply them with that which we produce and which they do not, it can only be accomplished, in this age, by means of telegraphic communication. The days of writing and giving orders by letter are passed, and if a man wants to order his million pounds of sugar, as is done in Canada to-day, he must be enabled to take advantage of the markets in the different sugar producing colonies and islands of the Pacific, or he has to lag behind his neighbours and lose accordingly. I have placed upon record what I think, as far as I understand the question, is the true position which Canada occupies to-day in connection with this matter, and I still repeat that to the bold and manly utterances that were made in this House by members on both sides of politics, we may attribute the outcome which we are now considering. That exposure of the terms of the despatch was of such a character as to rouse not only the people of this country, but the people of Australia, and the press and commercial community of England, and has resulted in England's changing her policy and becoming a party to the whole scheme as propounded by the colonies, and joining in the ownership of this cable, which, I am quite sure, so far as my information extends, and from the thought and study that I have given it, will not only prove remunerative from a pecuniary standpoint, but will do much to knit together the different sections of the empire and make us still more British, if that be possible, than we are to-day.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The measure before the House is an indication of the strength of the Imperialistic idea at the present time. I do not think that any one will pretend that Canada is directly and materially interested in this cable scheme to the extent of the interest which she has undertaken to pay. The general feeling throughout the country has been, and the feeling is well founded, that while Australasia and England are very greatly interested, the interest of Canada is a comparatively subsidiary one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—People in England, and some people in Canada, have taken the ground that the government of Canada—and by the government of Canada I do not refer to the present government alone, but the present government and the past government—have not shown enough of the Imperialistic spirit. I think that in relation to this cable project, Canada is showing more of that spirit than the mother country or than the Australasian colonies, because I am perfectly satisfied that if the Australian colonies had no deeper material interest in this undertaking than Canada has, they would not have become parties to this arrangement, which they have done rather slowly and with some hesitation. Here we have the mother country, with a revenue of over $500,000,000, hesitating about paying the same proportion yearly of the cost of this undertaking which Canada had cheerfully agreed to pay. It is desirable that attention should be called to that fact, I am not questioning the policy now, whether Canada is wise in being so willing to assume more than her natural and reasonable proportion of the burdens of an undertaking of this sort. I am not questioning that policy. It may or it may not be wise, but it shows how strong the feeling in favour of Imperial unity is in Canada, and goes far to remove any reproach that may have been attempted to be cast on this country for her action in connection with Imperial defence and other questions.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The bill then passed its final stages under a suspension of the rule.

DRY DOCKS CONSTRUCTION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (177) "An Act to encourage the construction of Dry Docks."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One or two hon. gentlemen were desirous of getting some fuller information than I was able to give yesterday when this bill was up for second reading. I find that the only graving dock in Canada which is receiving a subsidy is the Halifax dock. We have been paying a subsidy of $10,000 a year for four years. The Esquimalt dry dock and the Lévis and Kingston dry docks are the property of the Dominion. Any other graving docks that there may be—I have no knowledge of them—would be of course private graving docks, which were constructed before the Subsidy Act was passed, or at all events do not receive a subsidy. The government have the Esquimalt, Lévis and Kingston docks, and they give a subsidy to the Halifax graving dock. The cost of maintaining the Esquimalt dock last year was $11,700, and the revenue derived from it was $6,227. The cost of the Lévis dock was $6,000 and the revenue $19,829. The cost of maintaining the Kingston dock was $4,700 and the revenue from it was $7,298. I am advised that the only graving dock that was in view at the time this bill was being prepared was the one at St. John, New Brunswick. The province of New Brunswick has, I understand, given a subsidy, and the city of St. John too is given a subsidy.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the hon. gentleman know how much the province is giving?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—$2,500.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And from the city how much?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—$2,500.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is $5,000 from the two. This is a general bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, it is a general bill, but it is intended to cover that particular case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that it is in contemplation to build any other graving dock.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have not the cost of the different docks?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I have not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you had, you could tell the interest they are paying on the total investment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Halifax dock must have cost $1,000,000, because we are paying annually the full $10,000.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—How long does that continue?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For twenty years is the life of the subsidy, and last year was the eighth year.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—You repeal the former Act, chapter 17 of the statutes of 1882. I see that under that Act we were to give only $10,000. Now, you want to double that amount.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is because the city of Halifax paid $10,000; the city of St. John is paying only $2,500.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—This has nothing to do with the city. The government take power now to double the expenditure. It is in keeping with the way they have been going on with the expenditure of the country. I do not know whether this item is right or wrong. I have listened with great pleasure to the speeches in this House the last two days. You would think we were a mutual admiration society, the way we agreed on everything. I should like to know why the government doubles the subsidy—raising the amount from $10,000 to $20,000 by this bill? I want that explained. It is very desirable that we should have dry docks where our ships can be repaired and taken care of. The question, in my mind, is, have you works at St. John where you can do that work before you expend the money? Do they build steel vessels in St. John? Have you shops that can do this work? That should be considered by the government before spending the public money.

We should have full value for the money we are going to pay. I am in favour, as far as possible, of having dry docks in order that when vessels meet with disaster, they should get repaired as soon as possible, but I want to know if they have the facilities for it in the harbour of St. John. If they have not the government should see that they have such a service before they pay any of this money. The policy of doubling this subsidy and the government having the power to pay it as they please is what I object to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are increasing the amount because the dry docks to be built hereafter will be on a very much larger scale than those in the past.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Larger than the dock at Halifax?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, but the dock at Halifax is receiving a gratuity of $20,000 a year, $10,000 from Canada and $10,000 from the Imperial authorities, inasmuch as the navy of Great Britain has a refuge there, and it is utilized occasionally by the ships of war. That is the chief reason—the docks that will be built in the future will be very much larger. The hon. gentleman knows very well that vessels are being built larger now and will require larger docks, and that is, I am advised, the real explanation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman from Monck could arrive at a reason why this bill has been introduced without dealing with general principles. He must not forget that there is a very energetic gentleman at the head of the Department of Railways and Canals just now, who represents New Brunswick. Perhaps he is preparing for himself a seat in St. John, which will be required in a very short time, hence they are expending a very large amount of money there. They are building large and extensive wharfs and they think they require an elevator, whether that elevator will ever pay one per cent on the investment as far as the Intercolonial Railway is concerned——

Hon. Mr. McKAY—It is suppcsed to elevate Mr. Blair some.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a suggestion that did not occur to me. One thing is very certain, he is looking very well after the interests of his own province. Halifax may be satisfied if they get only $10,000 from the government. St. John, which is a rival just now, is getting $20,000. The fact is the country is paying pretty dearly for what they expect to receive in the city of St. John in the near future.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—St. John itself contributes $2,500 per annum.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—For how long?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Twenty years. They also give as a site for the dock a valuable piece of property.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is not that in the water.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Further, as to the wharfs and the elevator at St. John, and the improvements that are going on there, I wish to say before these were thought of by the government the city of St. John itself contributed over a million dollars for wharfs and facilities for establishing a winter port. With reference to the mention made of the representative of New Brunswick in this cabinet, it has been said that an elevator was about to be constructed at St. John for the purpose of elevating that gentleman to a higher eminence than he holds at present. We at St. John, and I think in New Brunswick generally, do not think there is any necessity to elevate him above the position he has always held. He has been Premier of New Brunswick for fourteen or fifteen years without an intermission, and I am prepared to say that during that period he has given such satisfaction that the slightest fault has not been found against him generally. Some personal feeling may exist in the minds of his opponents, but it would have been better to allow him to take his position without personal interference.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Is he a Tory or a Grit?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Well, he is a gentleman.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—You mean to say he is a Tory.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Since he came here to represent his province he has done what is fair to New Brunswick. He has done for his province what should have been done by other gentlemen, who assumed to represent that province for thirty years. New Brunswick contributed to the confederation of Canada steadily for thirty years. They contributed their share for the Intercolonial Railway, which cost New Brunswick its proportion of $50,000,000. Might I ask this Senate and the country what New Brunswick has got for that contribution?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Cheap rates.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Two-thirds of the railway.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Halifax got something, I admit, but the government of Canada invariably manipulated the larger portion of this Dominion, no doubt for political purposes, but they took very good care to ignore the rights of New Brunswick. It is only since the present government came into power, since the Minister of Railways became our representative, that New Brunswick has reason at last to be proud that she has a son able and willing to look after her true interests. Therefore I feel that I would not be doing my duty if I allowed that hon. gentleman to be disparaged in the slightest degree in this House, because, after all he is only doing that which is right on behalf of an important province. Canada could not have been a Dominion had it not been for that province that the Minister of Railways represents. What would you be in Canada? Why, you were nothing but a back ccuntry. You were nobody at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We would not be in it.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—No, you could not be in it to-day. You would be wholly dependent on a foreign country for an outlet and for that very reason the expenditure that is now going on at St. John is intended to develop western business. Therefore I trust that we shall not hear much more of this bickering about St. John. St. John is getting a very slight portion of that which she ought to have got for the last fifteen or twenty years at least, but instead of that she has been steadily neglected by men calling themselves statesmen.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—That is the blare of a trumpet and a trumpet for Blair.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—One would suppose, to hear the hon. gentleman speak, that New Brunswick was the means of bringing about confederation. Other provinces assisted in the work and contributed equally with New Brunswick. Looking at the bill which we have before us, it would appear, from the observations made by the hon. Secretary of State, that this bill is intended to establish a dry dock, which is to be built in the harbour of St. John, New Brunswick, and in looking through the provisions of the bill we find that $20,000 a year for twenty years to come is to be provided for that purpose. I observed, in looking through the press, that the municipality of St. John is contributing $2,500 a year for the same purpose. The provincial government gives $2,500 and the Imperial Government is to contribute for the same purpose the sum of $12,500, making in all $40,000 a year. Part of it, I believe, is to run for forty years, and the contribution from the Federal Government for twenty years, so I presume it will be a very good investment for the gentlemen who are embarking in the enterprise, when they get the site for their dock given to them free and a contribution of $40,000 a year for all this time from the Imperial Government, the Federal Government, the local government and the city. But this bill goes very much further than we would suppose from the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State, because while it says that it is the intention to confine this to the harbour of St. John——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I said that was the only one thought of at the time; it is a general bill, of course.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It is competent for the government, under the authority of this bill, to pay $20,000 a year to any company building a dry dock in any harbour throughout the Dominion. We should confine the application of the bill to certain places to be named in the bill. I have no objection to confining it to the harbour of St. John, if it is desirable that this dock should be built there, and probably it is; but it seems to me we should not place it in the power of the government to sanction the building of a dry dock in any harbour throughout the Dominion. We should specify in the bill the particular place it is to be in the power of the government to build these docks.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has, I am quite sure, unintentionally made a misstatement. He assumed that the government will give a subsidy of $20,000. The subsidy will be two per cent on the cost, and it is not to be assumed that the limit of $20,000 will be reached.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Can the hon. gentleman tell us the size of the largest vessel that can enter the harbour of St. John? Then we will know what size the dry dock ought to be.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that plans have been prepared even. This bill is a general bill. I was asked where it was going to apply. I said I understood as St. John and the province of New Brunswick were giving a subsidy, they had it in their minds to build a dock there, and this subsidy would be applicable. I do not know any other place, but the limit is $20,000, and the subsidy can only be two per cent on the cost per year.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Is the hon. gentleman aware that a large man of-war could not get into the harbour of St. John. Some warships of considerable size managed to get in, and the captains were as proud as if they had crossed the Atlantic in six days.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I wish to say to the hon. gentleman and to this Senate that the parties who have this work in contemplation intend to make it one of the best, if not the best dry dock on the continent of North America. It will be superior to that of Halifax, and equal to that on the coast of the United States, and in case a man-of-war from Great Britain, or from the United States, or any other country should choose to come to the harbour of St. John, they will find that they have provision made at that dry dock for repairs to the largest vessel that sails the ocean. Of course, we cannot say we will accomplish this, but that is the object in view in coming to Parliament for the subsidy. We know what Halifax can do. We have no jealousy whatever, but we feel she made a mistake in building a dry dock there that is not sufficient for the requirements of the shipping interest.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Excuse me, the dock is big enough for any vessel that has ever required to use it.

Hon Mr. DEVER—Before we build we shall have plans and specifications.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—The hon. gentleman must know that the dry dock at Halifax can accommodate the largest vessels afloat.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I would not have spoken, only the insinuation was thrown out that the harbour of St. John was deficient in natural requirements to enable ships of any size or dimensions to approach that city. I say, on the contrary, the harbour of St. John is the only harbour in British North America that is open the whole year round on the Atlantic coast.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—We know that Quebec harbour is frozen over a great portion of the year; so is Montreal, and so has Halifax been.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Twice in fifty years and on neither occasion in such a way as to seriously impede the movements of steamers.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It is not so with the harbour of St. John. It is open the year round, and has never been known to have an impediment in the shape of ice; as for the quantity of water, at present we have at low tide in some of our docks thirty feet, and at high tide some sixty feet of water. It is wholly wrong when hon. gentlemen, who have their own objects in view, try to injure the winter port of Canada. The port of St. John is well known all over the whole shipping world; therefore it is hardly right that an insinuation should be thrown out that is certainly injurious to an important port of the Dominion, one that is, as I said before, open the whole year round, and the only one that I know of that can supply the wants of Canada without going to a foreign country. At present we know that Portland, in the state of Maine, is doing all it possibly can, with the assistance of the government of the United States, to injure Canada. We know that a short time ago the United States Congress gave some $800,000 for the purpose of improving the shipping facilities at the port of Portland, the only one that at present is taking Canadian trade from the Dominion, the very trade that ought to come to the port of St. John. The promises that were held out at confederation, had they been carried out as they ought to have been, would have brought us that trade. That trade, on the contrary, has been going to the United States. It goes to Portland through the medium of the Grand Trunk, which is doing all it can to make Portland the winter port of Canada. Therefore it behooves us to see to it that the port of St. John is made more prominent to the shipping interests of the world, and in that way we can do a large amount of good to the Dominion. If we have not shipping ports in our own country what are we? No country can be great without a seaport open the whole year round. St. John should not excite the enmity or envy of our own people, or of any portion of our own people, and I hope that henceforth there will be no such thing as this jealousy. St. John should be allowed to take that natural and right position she is entitled to.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This bill is altogether too general in its terms. Dry docks nowadays must of necessity be of an expensive character. If a dry dock is required in St. John the government should come down and say so, but, as I understand, there is a dry dock now in Lévis and one in Halifax. If they have performed all that is required of them by vessels in the past, is there a necessity for a new dry dock at the present time at St. John? As I understand, the dry dock in Halifax is at the service of all vessel owners, and has been so for many years, and I have never heard of any difficulty with respect to getting vessels repaired when they come to dock at Halifax or Lévis. Therefore, I do not think it is a proper time, just now, to agitate for the building of additional dry docks, until we find that the dry docks now in existence are insufficient to meet the requirements of the trade.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—This bill repeals the Acts of 1882 and 1888 and substitutes another for them, and the only alteration that I can see is the change of $10,000 to $20,000. I would not for a moment think of opposing the building of a dry dock any place where it is required. I am not opposing it in this instance because it is the harbour of St. John. I am not here to talk parish politics, but the government should tell us whether they have an application to build a dry dock in the harbour of St. John. They should say in this bill what they are going to do and what they are going to give, and not ask for power to make bids for support all over the country, on the promise of building dry docks. I am opposed to anything of that kind, but I am perfectly willing, if the government say what they want and show the necessity for a dry dock, that they should be in a position to assist such works. At the same time there are a great many things to be taken into consideration. I have never had an answer yet as to whether there is a ship yard at St. John. Nobody seems to be able to give the information. Even the hon. member for St. John cannot tell if they build steel or iron vessels at St. John.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—We have built the best ships in the world for the period.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Years ago they used to build wooden vessels in St. John, and built them of spruce and hemlock too, and sent them all over the world. But in place of building vessels of spruce, pine and hemlock now, ships are built of steel and iron. Have you a ship building yard at St. John to build steel vessels?

Hon. Mr. DEVER— Yes and we are going to.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The only place west of Montreal that I know of where they do it is Toronto. The government should make it a condition that the docks shall only be built where there is a yard for building steel vessels. We should not spend money where it will be of no use to the country. This bill is in keeping with the general policy of the government. They are doubling the expenditure. They are doubling the expenses on the dry docks, and the same way with every expenditure in the country. I hope it will soon stop. If it does not, I do not know how the poor people of this country will bear the burden. I hope the government will confine this bill to the harbour of St. John. They should not keep it in their hands to offer inducements to people to build docks.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is a proposition to give aid to the extent of 2 per cent on the capital. That is a little more than half the lowest rate at which money can be obtained.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—You can borrow at 3 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Well, that is two-thirds of the rate. No man in his senses is going to invest money in a dock of any kind that will only pay him two per cent on the investment, and if a dock is erected at a place where there is little or no shipping to repair, no party would be induced to undertake the construction of it by any aid or assistance that is proposed in this bill. I hope hon. gentlemen will keep that in mind, that there is nothing in this bill that will encourage any man to invest his capital in the construction of a dry dock for the sake of the aid that the government is going to give towards it. Let me say this with regard to St. John harbour. St. John is becoming an important winter port. It is a place of considerable commerce, because it is a terminus practically for two Canadian railways, so that vessels are likely to come there, and vessels that come there in the winter season are liable to be sometimes damaged, as they are in going into any other port of commerce in the world, and it is a matter of great convenience in such a port to have a dry dock into which vessels may go for the purpose of repairs. I think hon. gentlemen will see that that is a reason, and a very substantial reason, for having a dry dock at the port of St. John.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Confine yourselves to that and it is all right.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If, in addition to what the parties may earn in the ordinary way, they are aided to the extent of two per cent by the government, the dock may be built at a far less cost, and as a consequence, to that extent relieve the public treasury from the charge that otherwise might be required to be made upon it. Leaving that out of view, is there anything in the bill that would induce parties to undertake to invest their money in the construction of a dry dock where a dry dock is not needed.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Then you do not want the power?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It cannot possibly be any harm and so it may do a positive good.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—In what way?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me suppose, for instance, we were building a railway within a year or two from Kitimat Harbour northward, and that a very considerable trade should spring up at that point, it would be possible under this bill to at once begin the construction of a dry dock at that point that might be needed if parties felt that is was a profitable investment.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Are you going to commence within a year?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But if it was not a profitable investment, they would not undertake to expend their money in that way. We have over and over again proposed to aid railways for a long series of years. There were propositions to aid railways by land grants in the North-west Territories, and without any definite points of beginning or any definite points of ending. Upon what ground was that policy defended or justified? My hon. friend did not ask for a specific declaration at that time, did not insist upon the same view or policy which he is now proclaiming with regard to this Why? Because in his opinion—and I am not saying that that opinion was not justified by the events—if the road were constructed it would be an evidence that the people who undertook its construction believed that they would ultimately make the capital they invested in that undertaking pay them a fair remuneration. What is the declaration in this bill?

If an incorporated company approved by the Governor in Council as having the ability to perform the work, enters into an agreement with Her Majesty to construct a dry dock for the reception and repairing of vessels, at a place, and according to a plan and specification (such specification providing for all proper and necessary equipment, machinery and plant), approved by the Governor in Council on a report by the Minister of Public Works as sufficient for the requirements of the public at such place, and to be completed within a time to be limited by such agreement, then, provided the company performs the work according to such agreement and to the satisfaction of the Minister of Public Works, under the supervision of whose department the work shall be done, the Governor in Council may authorize the payment, out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, of a subsidy not exceeding two per cent per annum on the cost of the work, during twenty years from the time of its completion and acceptance by the said minister.

I put the question again—does any hon' gentleman believe that, for the sake of getting two per cent per annum on the cost of a public work for a period of 20 years, which would amount to 40 per cent extended over the whole period, that any body of capitalists would undertake to invest their money in the construction of a public work? If they believed it would pay and they saw it was likely to be made remunerative, then they would do it. But would it not then be justified, because if it would be remunerative there would be a sufficient justification? There is the absolute protection given to the public in this that no man in his senses would invest his money in this way unless he saw that it would be remunerative, and it could not be remunerative unless it were to the advantage of the public.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Has the hon. minister received any application to build a dry dock anywhere in this country? He can draw on his imagination as much as he pleases, but he cannot show where there is an application for a dry dock in this country except at St John. He wants to provide for years hence. Let me tell the hon. minister that he ought to get the power from year to year when the applications come in. Parliament meets every year. We could deal with every one as it comes up. He says he might build a railway here and a railway there and they might want dry docks. It is giving the government a power which they had not before. The subsidy was placed at $10,000, and now they have made it $20,000. It is in keeping with all the rest. They want to double expenses, but I wish to impress on the mind of the hon. gentleman now, that even if there is an application made to build a dry dock at St. John, he should not ask the power to grant a subsidy except when an application is made. Then he could go to Parliament and ask a subsidy for that work. He should tell us what is to be done and what capacity the dry dock would have at the time, and I am sure, as far as this Senate is concerned, they would always be willing to give the government the power to spend the money, but I do not think we should give the government power to make offers to the people all over the country and say to them, "If you build a dry dock the government will assist you." The hon. minister says that no people will invest their money in a dry dock unless it is a benefit to the public. I want the security of Parliament on that point to look after the expenditure of money every year. Do not give the government power to pay money to whomsoever they wish for their support at elections. We should have the control of Parliament over the expenditure of the public money. We only deal with a fringe of the expenditure. We can restrict some of the expenditure, but we have nothing to do with the details; if we had, it would be much better for the people.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that he has been discussing the principle involved in the bill. In 1882 my hon. friend agreed to a bill exactly the same in point of principle, that $10,000 a year might be paid as the maximum sum paying two per cent. My hon. friend did not insist on exercising that control over every transaction. The government could go on under that former Act just as is proposed to be done under this bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—But you just make it double.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. Experience has shown that two per cent on an investment could in no case build a work adequate to the requirements of modern commerce. My hon. friend knows well about ships and shipbuilding, and he knows that the proportion, as it stands, is not likely to be practically of very much service. The proposition is to increase the aid of the government to the extent of two per cent up to $20,000 a year instead of $10,000. If it is right to give aid to the extent of $10,000, there is no difference in principle. You might make it $50,000 for that matter, if the requirements of the country were such that $50,000, at the rate of two per cent, was necessary for the construction of a dry dock. The increase in the size of the vessels that are used to-day in carrying on the commerce of the country renders necessary a larger and more expensive dry dock than that which was adequate before the very large ships of recent years have come into use.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Do you mean sea-going vessels?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Both classes of vessels. A 10,000 ton vessel to-day is as common as a 4,000 ton vessel was ten years ago. In point of principle there is no difference whatever between the bill now proposed and the law on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If the government would state what they want and where they want it I would not object.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was not done before.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That is no reason why it should not be done now. The object of fixing the amount at $10,000 was that we had small vessels on the lakes and we had several dry docks in this country and the object was to help them if they wanted it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the objection raised by the hon. gentleman from Monck to the form of this bill is well taken. The hon. gentleman cannot reasonably find fault with the present government for bringing in a measure couched in the same terms as the measure introduced by the government which he supported in 1882. At the same time, I think that this is one of those questions which it is just as well to discuss a little freely, and I hope hon. gentlemen will leave out of sight the fact that I happen to come from Halifax. I want to discuss this question as though I came from Ontario, or some other part of the western country. One of the faults which I find with the way in which the bill is framed is that the government have no discretion in the matter. If the bill provided that, when the government were satisfied that it was in the public interest, and that the necessities of the commerce of the country required that a dry dock shall be built in any place, then they should advance this money and give this guarantee, I should not object to it, but that is not the case. It is provided that if any company proposes to construct a dry dock, no matter where and no matter whether it is necessary or not, as soon as the company can assure the government that they are prepared to construct a dry dock they are bound to give them a guarantee. That is not business. The government should insert in this measure some provision to the effect that when the government are satisfied that the public interest requires that a dock shall be constructed it shall be done.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is in the first clause of the bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, the first clause reads :

1. If an incorporated company approved by the Governor in Council as having the ability to perform the work, enters into an agreement with Her Majesty to construct a dry dock for the reception and repairing of vessels, at a place, and according to a plan and specification (such specification providing for all proper and necessary equipment, machinery and plant), approved by the Governor in Council on a report by the Minister of Public Works as sufficient for the requirements of the public at such place.

The government have no discretion. The government have not the discretion to say whether or not the dry dock at that place is necessary.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, yes. I think there is no doubt whatever on the question; it is sufficiently clearly expressed in the first clause. Supposing there is nothing required by the public at such a place, my hon. friend will not contend that the bill does not give the government discretion to say whether the work shall be built or not. If my hon. friend contends that in a case where the minister reports that there is no trade and nothing to justify such an undertaking at such a place, the government, notwithstanding that report, are obliged to go on and aid the work, then my hon. friend is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the meaning of this language is that which is attributed to it by the hon. minister, there are several hon. gentlemen who differ from him, and I presume the government will have no objection to make it clear. The Governor in Council has only to be satisfied that the plans and specifications and so on shall be sufficient for the requirements of the public at such a place. They may be in excess of the requirements, but the government have not the right to say "You shall not build there," as I understand it. That is the first point that I wish to make, that I think the bill should be amended in such a way as to give the Governor in Council a right, and throw upon the government the responsibility of deciding, that the public interest calls for a dry dock in the place in question, because it means a possible expenditure of $20,000 a year for twenty years and it would amount to a half million dollars. I think the bill should be amended in that way. Let us look at this question from a business point of view. Where should there be dry docks in this country? One can understand why there should be a dry dock at Quebec. It is the port of the St. Lawrence. All the steamers coming to the upper provinces have to come to Quebec, and Quebec is the natural and convenient place for a dry dock. Where else should there be a dry dock, and what are dry docks used for? In the first place, dry docks in this country—at least the dry docks in the lower provinces—are used by vessels which get into distress on the ocean, and put into the most convenient place where there is a dry dock and where they can make repairs. Take the vessels on the Atlantic, which is the only ocean we have to deal with. There is a large dry dock at St. John's, Newfoundland, and a large dry dock at Halifax, and any lame duck, as they call it, puts in at St. John's, Newfoundland, or Halifax. The hon. gentleman from St. John said something about the size of the dry dock at Halifax, but no vessel has yet come to Halifax which has found the dry dock too small.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—There is no use of their coming if they cannot get in.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Any vessel can enter the port at any season of the year. Would any vessel on the Atlantic go round the Cape and up the Bay of Fundy for the purpose of going into St. John? I think it is absurd on the face of it. It should be first established that there is a necessity for a dry dock in St. John. Supposing a dry dock is constructed, who should own it? My belief is that if the government propose to pay two per cent on the cost of that dock it would be better that the government should own it. The city of Halifax pay $10,000 a year, the Admiralty pay $10,000 a year, and the Dominion Government pay $10,000 towards the dry dock at Halifax. In this case it is proposed that the Dominion Government shall pay $20,000 a year. The city of St. John pays $2,500 a year and the province of New Brunswick pays $2,500 a year. That makes $25,000 a year. If the statement of the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown is correct, the Admiralty will pay another considerable subsidy, and the whole cost of that dry dock will be paid by the public in one form or another. Having got that far, I want to know where the force of the argument of the hon. Minister of Justice comes in, that you could not get anybody to invest their money in the undertaking on the mere guarantee of two per cent. The company need not put a dollar in it, because the Dominion Government, the city of St. John, the province of New Brunswick and the Admiralty will foot all the bills. If we are to have a dry dock in St. John, I think it should be constructed by the government, if the government are going to pay a large proportion of the cost. I am quite sure the Admiralty would give the subsidy to the Dominion Government instead of giving it to the private individual or the company, and it would be much better that the dock should be owned by the government. Our experience with the bridge at St. John would, I think, go to indicate that that was the wiser plan. What was the history of that railway bridge across the St. John River? A company was incorporated who had put practically almost none of their own money into the undertaking. The country invested over $400,000 in that bridge, and unless I am misinformed, at the present time the freight cars going over the Intercolonial Railway and going down to the shipping point at the west side of the harbour at St. John are paying each $3 toll for going over a bridge built by public money. We had better avoid making a similar mistake in the case of this dock. If the country is going to pay for such a dock, the government had better own it. The measure should at least be amended so as to provide that the government will have to assume the responsibility, and that they shall have the right to pronounce whether or not the place where the dry dock is proposed to be erected is one where a dry dock is necessary and in the public interest, and that I think is not asking too much. If the government are going to pay so large a sum as $20,000 a year they might better undertake the work themselves, because hon. gentlemen know that it means that we will have to pay the whole amount. That always happens. When we say in a bill that we shall not pay more than that, it means that the country will pay the $20,000 a year; and they ought to get a very good dock for that money and the dock ought to be a very necessary one, and I trust the bill will be so amended as to put the control of the matter in the hands of the government. The fact is, as everybody knows, that a gentleman from St. John has been living here for months engineering the matter, and the bill represents the result of that gentleman's energy and probably not very much else.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It is unfortunate that men will speak on subjects they are not really familiar with. I have great respect for the last speaker. I feel very much annoyed to think that I have to contradict him, but when he makes the assertion that the government built the St. John bridge with the money of this country, it should be contradicted, if it is not true.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I call the hon. gentleman to order. He has no right to use such language. It is not parliamentary, even if my statement were not correct.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I wish to say it is not correct. The government loaned to a certain company an amount of money for the purpose of enabling a bridge to be built, but they are getting interest for it. They are bankers in this case, and are getting very large interest for it. They were getting 5 per cent for money which they could borrow at two and a half per cent. Therefore, the government are not contributing to that bridge. The hon. gentleman said that the government of Canada virtually built the bridge which charges a toll of three dollars per car on every car going over that bridge to St. John, and I think he meant to Halifax also. We are paying for getting the privilege of going over a bridge built by that company, whether with their own personal money or not is not the question. At all events it was their own money, so far as the government are concerned, because they did not give it as a bonus to the company. On the contrary, they have been charged a high rate of interest and I am credibly informed, and I believe I have a right to state, that the company are not behind in that interest. They are paying it regularly, annually, and therefore it is a misstatement for the hon. gentleman to try to make it appear that this subsidy or percentage that the present government is about to give for the construction of a dry dock at St. John is of a similar nature. The company at St. John and the people of St. John, before they ask for a subsidy or a grant of any proportion from the government of Canada, in the first instance show that they are serious and that they believe that a dry dock at St. John is essentially necessary, because they give themselves $2,500 per annum, and also the valuable site for that dry dock that is worth a quarter of a million dollars. Therefore, hon. gentlemen need not be so excited about this bill, because when they will consider the matter, there are not so many parts of this Dominion of ours that require a dry dock. I do not wish to say anything disparaging of any of the ports outside of the port of St. John, but I must tell the facts. The other ports, with the exception of Halifax—and I do not think Halifax is quite clear — are frozen up in the winter time, and St. John is the only port that faces the Atlantic and has open water in it the year round. Therefore, it is the best place for a national dock and will answer the purposes both winter and summer. There would be no interruption at that dry dock because it is just as free during the winter as during the summer. Therefore, hon. gentlemen will see that there is no necessity for thinking that there will be general calls on the government for contributions for dry docks, because other portions of the Dominion have not the facilities to build dry docks that we have, and therefore on these conditions I think it is hardly fair to compare the port of St. John, with all its advantages, with other ports of minor importance. I do not wish to say too much on behalf of St. John, but unfortunately the representatives from New Brunswick are few in this chamber, and therefore on that account I have to say more in defence of the port of St. John than, perhaps, should fall to my share, and I trust the hon. gentlemen will excuse me if I have tried to set forth before the Senate the requirements of the winter port of Canada, and the justification for this expenditure. The people of St. John and the local government have contributed towards the cost of the work before we ask the Dominion Government to give the assistance which we feel is necessary to induce a solvent company to come and build a dry dock at St. John. At present we are not quite sure that we can accomplish it, but we have promoters whom we have authorized to go to the markets of the world to ascertain if we cannot get capital to accomplish it; and when we have got parties who will be able to carry out this great undertaking, we will expect the government of Canada to give the contribution provided for in this bill. I think hon. gentlemen will see we are not asking any more than what is reasonable, and I do not think we are asking anything in the way of a bonus which will be extravagantly and foolishly laid out. If we did so, I am sure this government of Canada have commercial knowledge enough to say they are not prepared to meet us as we expect.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Can the hon. gentleman give an assurance to the Senate, in the event of a dock being built at St. John equal to the one at Halifax, that it will not be necessary, in order to accommodate large vessels, to have the harbour dredged, as there is only thirty feet of water?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Bonaparte regretted very much that no port in France was able to admit his fleet and save them from his neighbour's fleet. He had the port of Cherbourg. At that time it could only hold twenty-five vessels; but France has developed the port known as Cherbourg which has cost millions of dollars, which was a national necessity, and I do not see why our government should not establish a national port. Then it was said that England was an island, and by nature England would always conquer on the seas. That wise and far seeing man Bonaparte saw painly that if they had not ports in France they could not compete with Great Britain, and another Bonaparte carried out the old gentleman's ideas and secured this port called Cherbourg.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment

The bill was then read the third time on a division and passed.

CANADA'S GOLD EXHIBIT.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I should like for a few moments to call the attention of the hon. senators to the display which Canada should make at the Paris exposition. The Yukon district attracted considerable attention during last session. So great a country should be kept constantly before the world, and especially its importance as a gold producing territory. At the World's Fair in Chicago, in 1893, Canada was very well represented. Her agricultural products from all the different provinces made a fine display, and attracted very great attention. The products of the forest, the rivers, the sea, in fact everything which Canada exhibited at the World's Fair, attracted universal attention. But there was one exhibit in which we were deficient, and that was our gold. We must all admit that the gold exhibit is a very important feature at any international exposition. Only one province had any gold there, that was the province of Nova Scotia. Its small exhibit of gold was very creditable, but was not very large. We are now in a position, with reference to the exposition to be held in Paris next year, not only to show the various products of Canada to great advantage, but we can take a foremost place as a gold producing country. In view of the attention that the Yukon country has attracted, nothing would be more becoming to Canada than to place a gold exhibit at the Paris exposition. I have before me a letter signed by Mr. Ogilvie, the commissioner in the Klondike, which is as follows :—

COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE,
DAWSON, Y.T., 15th June, 1899.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN :—

This is to certify that Frank R. Miles, who has been for some time in the vicinity of Dawson, has interested himself in trying to get up an exhibit of the products of the Yukon Territory at Paris. He has, I know, discussed this with many people of standing in Dawson and very fully discussed it with myself.

A programme has been arranged between him and myself which I think would be desirable in the interest of this country to have carried out. I would, therefore, commend Mr. Miles and his scheme to all those taking interest in this matter.

(Sgd.) WILLIAM OGILVIE, Commissioner.

PROGRAMME OF EXHIBIT.

Samples of gold dust from each creek, bench and hillside to the amount of $1,000.

A general exhibit of gold dust, coarse and fine, with nuggets, large and small, not limited in amount or value.

Samples of bedrock containing gold, also gold and copper ores, platinum and all other minerals to be found here.

One cubic foot of pay drift irom each creek, viz., Bonanza, Eldorado, Dominion, Sulphur, Hunker and Bear, to be exhibited in glass cases, showing at least two inches of bed rock. It is also proposed to have one cubic foot adjoining this intact sample washed out and exhibited with its proceeds in dust, together with the affidavit of the man from whose claim it is taken.

It is also proposed to have an exhibit of the formation of different layers of muck, gravel, &c., from the surface to bedrock, in a glass tube in sections of five feet each.

Specimens of agricultural products, native grasses, wild flowers, fruits, &c.

Specimens of game birds, animals and fish, furs and fur-bearing animals.

Samples of all kinds of timber found here.

Photographs of scenes and scenery from Skagway to St. Michael's. Also pamphlets containing reliable information for tourists as well as investors of capital; large photographs showing general topography of mining districts, correct maps of mining districts, showing locations of all mineral locations and reservations.

An exhibit of fossil remains, in the interest of science.

Any person having samples of ores, nuggets of gold in quartz or rare samples of minerals of any kind from the district that they wish to have exhibited at Paris can leave the same with Governor Ogilvie, who will receive and receipt for the same.

All fossil remains, viz., ivory tusks, bones, skulls with horns attached, &c., found in the mines should be carefully preserved.

Specimens of Indian works and relics.

That is the programme that has been suggested by Mr. Ogilvie, and I think it would be very desirable for the government to see that there is a good gold exhibit from the Yukon country at Paris. It will attract very great attention. It will confirm the glowing reports and rumours that have gone all over the world about the great gold production of that country, and no doubt many thousands of people will take great interest in viewing the samples sent there for exhibition. Large nuggets of gold would be very attractive, and would have a tendency to confirm the reports of the richness of the Yukon. The project is one which all could reasonably support. We have heard a good deal of late about suppressing party feeling when the interests of the empire are concerned, and I should think we ought all to be of one opinion in securing a good gold exhibit from the Yukon country at Paris in the interest of the development of that great mining district. I bring the matter to the notice of the government and ask them to give it their favourable consideration. I am willing, as one member, to support any reasonable expenditure for making such an exhibit at Paris.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The subject has engaged the careful consideration of the Minister of Agriculture, who is looking after this exhibition, and I have no doubt that he has gone carefully into the matter. The report which my hon. friend has read is one that was brought specially to his attention, and if any hon. gentleman has suggestions to make upon this subject to the Minister of Agriculture, with a view to improving the exhibit determined upon, it will be well to see him on the subject. He is not here to-day; he has gone to Toronto to attend the funeral of the late Speaker of the Commons, but I shall mention the matter to him. At the same time, I would suggest to my hon. friend, and his friend who is here, to take the opportunity of discussing the matter with the Minister of Agriculture, who no doubt feels a great interest in making the exhibit of Canada in every way worthy of the country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether steps have been taken to secure a proper exhibit of the minerals of the Dominion, independently of the gold which is being secured in the Klondike district? It is well known that we have very large copper deposits, very large coal industries, galena, and what is of still greater importance to the world at present, a large output of nickel in the immediate vicinity of the Ottawa. It is known to those who have taken an interest in the development of minerals, that the principal place from which nickel has been procured in the past, has been New Caledonia, in the South Pacific. I have noticed lately that a large quantity of nickel ore has been exported from that country to the United States. The question brought before the Senate by the hon. senator from Wolseley is one of very great importance to the country. I was under the impression, from what I had read in the newspapers, that the subject was being looked after by the Department of Agriculture. If not, I am quite sure my hon. friend from Wolseley will act upon the suggestion made by the Minister of Justice, and see the Minister of Agriculture and furnish him with the document that has been placed in his hands.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am very much pleased that the hon. gentleman from Wolseley has brought this matter thus prominently before the Senate, and through the Senate before the country at large. We, no doubt, have one of the largest countries in the world, and my theory is that we have one of the richest. I have always thought, and especially of late that we have a rather inadequate conception of the mineral wealth of the Dominion. Although not specially interested in mining, still, as one desiring to see the resources of the country developed to their utmost capacity, I feel a very great interest in the question that has been brought up by the hon. senator this afternoon. As far as mining is concerned, we have, comparatively speaking, simply been scratching the surface, but I believe we are about entering upon a mineral development greater than we have hitherto seen, and it is my view that we have not the faintest conception of the wealth that has been stored away, for our prosperity and happiness, in the bowels of the earth. I have heard it stated, and I have come to that conclusion myself, from seeing the number of bills brought before the Committee on Railways and Canals, that we are only on the eve of railway development in this country. If we are only on the eve of railway development, we are certainly only on the eve of mineral development. We have in our mines, in our forests, in our lakes and in our rivers untold wealth, and the great consideration is that these resources should be brought before the business world and before the thinking world, and I trust that what has been done this afternoon will be a substantial contribution in that direction. There is nothing attracts like gold, and these minerals, gold especially, were not placed in our country by Providence for an unwise, but for an all wise and beneficent purpose. I hope we will rise to the full measure of our appreciation of all this wealth by seeing that our resources, which are so various, are developed and cultivated to the utmost extent. We not only have a country rich in minerals, rich in its rivers and its fisheries, but also rich in its forests. It seems to me—and perhaps my view is not singular—that as Canadians we have not yet begun to realize the immensity and the greatness of our timber resources to the north and west, and that is an encouraging view of our country. We certainly have in our arable lands everything to attract immigration and settlers; in fact, if managed aright, every man who owns a good farm in this country has a miniature Yukon. So that, taking all our resources together, beginning with our gold and running through the list we have perhaps as proud a boast in regard to our resources as any people on the globe. I hope that this matter will be productive and bear good fruit, and, if it does, we shall be obliged to the hon. gentleman who has brought the matter so forcibly before us this afternoon. I am quite sure we are all pleased to learn from the hon. Minister of Justice that he is in full sympathy with this movement, and that so far as the government are concerned, in their arrangements for the approaching Paris exposition, everything that can reasonably be done, will be done to place Canada before the world in the proud position which she so deservedly occupies.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I understand that not only a gold exhibit, but a very complete mineral exhibit will be prepared for the Paris exposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The gold interest will not therefore be forgotten.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYÉS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT laid on the table of the House a return to an address of the Senate passed 28th of April last in reference to the dismissal of employés.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have glanced for a few moments at the return which has just been laid on the table of the House. The 4th paragraph of the motion for the return reads as follows :

4. The names, ages, offices and salaries of all employés in the inside or outside service of the government, whether temporary or permanent, who since the 9th April, 1897, have been removed from office by dismissal, superannuation, or otherwise, whether on a report of a commission or otherwise, specifying in each case the grounds of dismissal, and the amount of superannuation or gratuity granted, if any; also, the age, office, salary or remuneration of any and every person appointed in the place of, or as a consequence of every such removal.

I find, in running my eye over this elaborate return, that on the first page seventeen names placed under the head, "Why dismissed." The only information is, "By order of the department." I never supposed they would be dismissed except by order of the department; that is scarcely the information that was sought. I asked the cause of the dismissal. I find the cause given, "By order of the department," and "ditto," and then "By Order in Council," and "drunkenness and insubordination." On the second page, twenty-six were removed or dismissed by order of the department; on the third page, twenty-one; and on the fourth page twenty-eight; on the fifth page thirty-nine; on the sixth page twelve; and on the last page two. I would ask my hon. friend whether he thinks that is the kind of return which should be laid before the Senate in response to an order passed by the House. I think it would be more in accordance with the dignity of the Senate, and of the government if we were to say at once, that those were matters that should not be laid before Parliament, and that they declined to give them. We would not then be treated with what I regard as contempt. These dismissals are merely with reference to the railways. I have not had an opportunity of examining the returns with reference to the Rideau and other canals.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will return it, I will send it back to the department and tell them that the information is not in accordance with the order of the House.

BRITISH AMERICAN PULP AND PAPER COMPANY'S BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (172) "An Act to incorporate the British American Pulp and Paper Company."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the suspension of the 41st rule as far as the same relates to this bill. He said:—This is probably the last railway bill of the session, and it is somewhat important in its character. The promoters of the bill propose to erect a pulp mill in the Lake St. John district, which I fancy is one of the best place in Canada for a pulp mill, and they propose to build several miles of railway in connection with it. I suppose there will be no objection to the suspension of the rules in order to allow it to go to committee to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. OGILVIE—There is an electric railway in connection with it?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes. The bill is to incorporate a company with a capital of $3,000,000, for the purpose of carrying on in Canada and elsewhere the business, in all its branches, of manufacturing pulp, pulp wood and paper, and all other business incident thereto, including the manufacture of timber, lumber and all articles of which wood shall form a component part and all products from wood or wood material.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Is this the same bill that was originally introduced in the House of Commons? It may have been changed over there, and we may be passing a different bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The gentleman promoting the bill said he would have a sufficient number of copies of the bill before the committee to-morrow morning.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I see by the last clause that the Railway Act is made to apply to the company and its undertaking.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the usual thing. In clause eight they are authorized to construct and operate a railway from Ha Ha Bay to Roberval, and to construct and operate branch lines to connect their mills.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to ask the hon. leader of the House whether it will be possible before prorogation to bring down the papers which I moved for yesterday, with reference to the supply of oil to the Intercolonial Railway. In answer to my question some weeks ago, he informed us that these papers were being prepared and would be furnished upon a motion for an address. That being so, I concluded that the papers were prepared and would be ready, and my motion covers very few other papers apart from those that were promised by my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am unable to answer the hon. gentleman, but I will inquire of the Minister of Railways whether they are ready yet.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman will be able to let me know to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot say, but I will try to.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman will make the inquiry?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I will.

VACANT JUDGESHIP IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Can the hon. Minister of Justice inform us whether a judge has been appointed for Queen's County, Prince Edward Island, and, if so, what is his name?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I made a report to council and that report was sumbitted to His Excellency, but whether that has been approved of yet or not I cannot say. Until that approval takes place, I am not in a position to make any announcement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it is quite evident that the hon. minister has found a lawyer in Prince Edward Island who is willing to take it?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. We never have much difficulty in that respect.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman intimated that he had the other day.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I had received no intimation of the vacancy until the question was put to me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the hon. gentleman acted promptly.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

THIRD REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the Standing Committee on Debates and Reporting, presented their third report. He said:—As prorogation is expected to take place shortly, I move the adoption of this report.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is lots of time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I overheard some hon. gentlemen say that this was a new proposal. It is not new, except that it imposes greater duties upon the reporter. First, we pay him the same as we have been paying for this work for years; and, secondly, under this agreement we compel him to prepare a synopsis as the proceedings take place in the House. He has agreed to employ a typewriter and send out his copy so as to have it ready at least an hour after the House rises in the afternoon. If we sit in the evening, he is to pursue the same course and have the copy in the hands of the newspaper reporters in attendance at the session of Parliament an hour afterwards. The reason we insist upon this being done is, because in the past the reports of the proceedings of this House have been delayed sometimes until nine and ten, and occasionally eleven o'clock at night, before being handed to the press. The reporters are compelled, nine times out of ten, to make a synopsis of the summary furnished them, and the result has been that improper reports have been published, conveying sentiments and opinions of members quite contrary to that which they uttered here, and we thought if we could make a provision that the reports should be placed in the hands of the newspaper reporters at an earlier period in the evening, they would be more likely to be published, as the representatives of the press would not have forwarded to their papers in the different sections of the Dominion sufficient matter to fill their columns for the next morning. Once they have sent the reports of the proceedings in the House of Commons and its committees and all the news that they can pick up in the afternoon, there is no room for the Senate debates. This arrangement it is hoped will obviate, to a great extent, the difficulties which have arisen in the past. In addition to that, the reporter is required to attend and report the principal committees without extra remuneration, unless we should happen to think we are justified in paying him extra when the session is over, if we think he has had too much work, but there is nothing in the agreement compelling us to give him one cent more. Every hon. gentleman knows that it is at the committees where the different private bills are sifted, criticised and amended, and the committee thought that it was just as important that a synopsis of the proceedings of the committees should be sent to the press, as those of the proceedings of the House. So that if the reporter carries out his agreement, we shall have a great deal more value for the money we have been paying for this service, than in the past.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The speech of the hon. leader of the opposition has removed any difficulty which might have presented itself in reference to the immediate adoption of the report. Hearing a report read at the table does not give one all the reasons pro and con, unless he is particularly acute intellectually. But after hearing the observations of the hon. leader of the opposition, I am satisfied that the arrangement which the committee have been able to make with Mr. Holmden is very much better than the arrangement we had before. We are not paying any more for it, and I think the committee are to be congratulated.

The motion was agreed to.

THE POSTMASTER AT UPPER MAUGERVILLE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY rose to:

Ask the government on whose recommendation Mr. Shields, postmaster at Upper Maugerville, in the province of New Brunswick, was dismissed from office; also, the cause of complaint that lead to the dismissal? Also, who was appointed postmaster of said office, and if the newly appointed postmaster serves the office personally or by deputy, and if by deputy, the name of the deputy? Also, what hours said office is required to be kept open for the service of the public, and if during said hours the postmaster or his deputy are in the office to receive and distribute mail matter?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say in reply to the hon. gentleman's inquiry that—1. The change in the postmastership of Upper Maugerville was not consequent upon the dismissal of Mr. F. P. Shields, but upon the removal of the office to what was considered a more convenient site. His successor, Mr. Emery Sewell, was appointed on the recommendation of Hon. A. G. Blair. 2. It is not known at the department to what extent the duties of the post office are performed by Mr. Sewell and by such assistants as he may employ respectively. 3. The regulations of the department require that a post office should be kept open during ordinary business hours, and it is not known that the regulation is not observed at the Upper Maugerville office.

TRANSVAAL RESOLUTION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved:

That fifty extra copies for each senator of the portion of the Senate Hansard containing a report of the debate on the "Transvaal Resolution" be printed.

He said:—It is highly desirable that the information contained in this debate should be circulated as widely as possible. I know the people of the country are quite anxious to be possessed of this information, and therefore I have made this motion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON — Before this motion is put I wish to say two or three words in reference to it. I am opposed to the motion. The publication of a debate of this character is altogether unprecedented in the history of either branch of this Parliament. The House of Commons publishes each year, in addition to other documents containing its proceedings, the speech of the Minister of Finance, and beyond that no authority, as far as I can ascertain, has ever been given either by this House or by the House of Commons for the publication of a debate, or any particular speech, in the way that is indicated by this motion. I think, therefore, that it will establish a bad precedent. This House in many ways publishes its debates and proceedings. First we have the regular minutes of proceedings, then we have a summary report, then we have the Hansard report of the debates, and all these are provided for the purpose of publishing our proceedings. The debates and proceedings all come before the public in these ways. In addition to that, the newspapers are watching our deliberations and publicity is given in that way to everything that is said and done in this chamber. That is quite sufficient, and we should not set any precedent with regard to the publication of any particular speech, or set of speeches. For my own part, since I have been a member of this House, in addition to what is done officially by the House, I have taken some little pains to publish and distribute my own speeches and the speeches of other hon. gentlemen, and have expended a considerable sum every session, not only in paying the printing department for speeches delivered in both branches of Parliament, and also paying clerical assistance for distributing these speeches. I have been drawing heavily on the Hansard envelopes—that is all Parliament contributed for it—and I understand it has been a matter of comment in the Contingent Accounts Committee, of which I am not a member, that I have been drawing largely on the funds of this House in the supply of Hansard envelopes. I am not alone in this matter, however: I know that my hon friend from Queen's and the hon. member for Murray Harbour have also contributed in the same way to the distribution of speeches, and other members of this branch of Parliament have done the same, and at their own expense. If we begin to order, in addition to the regular publication of the proceedings of this House, the publication of speeches of members on any particular question, we will have a precedent that perhaps we may hereafter be asked very often to follow, and I think it would be just as well to stop now and not establish any such precedent. With regard to this particular debate that is proposed to be published, there must be one of two objects in view—to educate our own people on the subject and stir up a patriotic feeling in their breasts, or to show to foreign nations that we are at one with our fellow subjects in all parts of the empire. That is very laudable, but I doubt if it will be reached to any extent by this resolution. Members will have to undertake the distribution themselves, and hon. gentlemen who have packed up and are ready to go home will not find it pleasant to undertake the distribution of those speeches in the closing days of the session, others have gone home and cannot do it at all. I doubt if they will be extensively distributed in the first instance, and I doubt if by this means we will attain the object of stirring up and increasing the patriotic feeling that exists in the minds of our own people and the minds of the people of the empire with regard to this question. These speeches have come out in the official report of the Debates since we discussed this subject before, and I have looked over the speeches and they are very good ones. The speeches of the gentlemen who followed the mover are all brimming with patriotism, and I have no doubt expressed the views of hon. members of the House and of the people of Canada generally. The speech of the hon. leader of the House on the subject is very exhaustive. My hon. friend begins at the beginning generally when he makes an explanation. I remember what has been said about the people of Nuremburg, that when any of them speaks of the city of Nuremburg or undertakes to relate its history, he begins at the beginning of the world. My hon. friend began with a historical synopsis which would have been very good if the hon. gentleman had given a little more attention to the subject, but I fear other duties pressed more upon him and he was not able to give as much attention to the preparation of the subject as he ought to, and if the publication that is desired should be decided upon, the hon. gentleman should make some corrections in his speech. I find he states in one place that £4,000,000 sterling have been raised by taxation from the Uitlander population of the republic, and he states that Sir Alfred Milner reports that the average taxation per head of the Uitlander population is £16 per head. A little further on my hon. friend gives the Uitlander population at 90,000. Multiplying this 90,000 by £16 per head would give £1,440,000 as their contribution, whereas my hon. friend states they contribute £4,000,000. There must be something out there. There must be something wrong. These figures do not correspond.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those figures, I might say, were taken from Mr. Chamberlain's speech the other day in the House of Commons. He states that the taxes in the last two years had increased to nearly £4,000,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The exact figures are £3,980,000. I gave round numbers.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—So much the worse for the hon. gentleman's estimate of the population. I have the Statesman's Year Book for 1899 before me, and I find that according to the census of 1896 the white population was 245,397, whereas by my hon. friend's figures given here, the white population is stated to be 160,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Where? In the Transvaal?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, in the Transvaal.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I gave the figures from quite as high an authority as that from which the hon. gentleman quotes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quoting from the last issue of the Statesman's Year Book, which draws its figures from the census of 1896. The Statesman's Year Book quotes from the State Almanac, giving the whites as 347,398, which is 100,000 more than given in the other set of figures, but by adding males and females together, I find that is an error, and the State Almanac gives the census figures, and the population in both is stated at 245,397. Then my hon. friend spoke, in another part of his speech, of the town of Johannesburg having 70,000 Europeans and as many more of a native population. I again refer to the same authority—the census—where the population of Johannesburg is given and instead of 140,000, the population is 102,078 of all races and all nationalities and colours, 50,907 whites, not 70,000, 952 Malays; 4,057 Chinese; 42,553 Kaffirs and 2,789 mixed races. Altogether the population is 102,078, of which 50,000 are whites. I find that my hon. friend, while he has over-stated the population of Johannesburg to the extent of 40,000, has understated the population of the Transvaal to the extent of over 85,000 and my authority is the census of 1896.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I know the hon. gentleman will at once agree with me that if such publication as desired is given to these speeches, we should certainly not show that we are misinformed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman is very much troubled for fear that any statement of mine would misinform the public. My figures are at least as accurate as those in the book from which he has read, and my authority is just as high.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend makes that general statement. With due deference to the authority from which he has drawn his information, it can hardily be any better than the census anyway, and there is a very wide discrepancy, overstating the Johannesburg population by over 40,000, and understating, according to the census, the population of the whole Transvaal, by over 85,000. Some correction should be made, I do not know what my hon. friend would be willing to do, but this House at least, if we authorize the publication of the speeches, should not mislead our own people, or send inaccurate statements to the Cape or to England, to make us the subject of comment as not being possessed of very accurate or recent information upon this question. Of course, these are errors that could be very easily corrected. The time for revision has not yet expired. But, apart altogether from these errors in regard to the population which I find in these statements—and these are very elementary subjects upon which there ought to be at least an approximation to accuracy. I still adhere to the view that I expressed before, that it would be establishing a very bad precedent to publish, with the authority of this House, in addition to the regular publication that is made. this special issue of a particular debate. These are my views; whether they will meet with the approval of hon. gentlemen or not I cannot say, but I am quite satisfied, if we adopt this motion now, that we will have other motions at some future time which may be just as distasteful to the hon. gentleman as this is to others, and you may have a precedent which it will be difficult to steer clear of in future.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am surprised at the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. He above all men in this House should be the last to refuse giving information to the public. What are we doing in this case? We are merely increasing the number of copies of the Debates, upon a certain subject. Each senator receives only two copies of the Debates, which will not go very far. I cannot understand why the hon. gentleman should object to giving this information to the public. Upon many occasions the hon. member gives us long-winded speeches upon subjects of far less importance than this one, and if I found it was necessary to apply to the House for the publication of those speeches I should do it with great pleasure, but to find fault with this motion because it happens to emanate from the leader of the House is beyond my comprehension The very remarks he has made show the necessity of this. Very few people in this country know about this matter. I have read the newspapers, but I cannot gather from them any vivid conception of the state of affairs in South Africa. I contend that this does give us great information, and I believe the public will be pleased to receive it. I have had applications from several people in this town.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What is the cost?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not care about the cost. I would rather pay it myself than not have it done; but I want it to emanate from this chamber, and I want to show the people that this chamber is loyal to the core, and not afraid to give expression to its views through proper channels. I hope the hon. gentleman will see that he has been rather hasty in this matter, and that he will recede from his position and allow the motion to carry without a division. I think that is the feeling of the majority of this House. We are masters of the situation, and we are judges of what we ought to be, and whether it is a precedent or not I am willing to have a precedent established for all time to come if it is a good one.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it were only to have the people well posted on the resolution that the Senate has passed, I would not have any objection to the printing of additional copies of such a resolution. But it is not merely to acquaint the people with the resolution which was carried here that this motion was made; it is to convey to the people the speech of the hon. leader of this House and the debate that took place upon that occasion. That debate was not as extensive as it should have been. Many assertions laid down by the hon. Minister of Justice might have been controverted, and I do not think it is fair to let them go abroad with the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice. The question is more debatable than one would think. England itself is divided on that question. A large mass meeting was held not long ago in the centre of London, at which the question was debated, and in the House of Commons the majority of the Liberal party are taking issue against Lord Chamberlain. The leader of the opposition himself is putting questions every day to Lord Chamberlain.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I say: Yes. In fact, the extreme policy of Mr. Chamberlain and Cecil Rhodes such as advocated in the House of Commons, is rather kept back by Lord Salisbury. In Cape Colony the legislature is now sitting, and that question has been brought up there and the Prime Minister of Cape Colony sides with the Boers.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—He is a Boer himself.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He is a Boer himself, but not of the Transvaal, and the Prime Minister Sir Alfred Milner. That Prime Minister has written over to England and told the government in England that the last proposals made by President Kruger, at Pretoria, were most acceptable, and that there is only a difference of one thousand in the number of the Uitlanders to be enfranchised by the proposition of President Kruger compared with the number covered by the proposition laid down by Sir Alfred Milner at Bloemfontein. Under these circumstances he hopes England will accept the last proposition made by President Kruger. I observe in the press that the question is debated. There is no objection to printing the resolutions proposed in this House, just to show the people abroad that we are a unit, as we have all been carried away by that wave of Imperialism that is passing over this country, but I think we should not go further in publishing a speech of a minister on a debatable question which has not really been fully discussed in this House. For instance, we have never decided and we have not to decide a question of constitutional right which is pointed out in an article in the Contemporary Review which deals with the question. It is written by an Englishman, and it says:

> But the question is what right we have to interfere? The famous convention of 1884 recognized the autonomy of the South African Republic, and the late Lord Derby, who was then Secretary of State for the Colonies, declared that the sovereignty of the Queen, preserved by the convention of 1881, has been abandoned. It is true that the representatives of the public bound themselves not to conclude treaties with foreign powers without the ratification of the British Government, and promised equal rights to all residents in the country, but equal rights are not alleged to include the franchise, and no state in the world gives the suffrage to foreigners on precisely the same terms as to the natives.

That is what is done in England. In England what have the Jews in Whitechapel? Have they the franchise? What is the state of things in India? Have the inhabitants of India the franchise? Here is a dilemma which I put to the hon. minister: either the participation in the government by the exercise of the franchise is a strict right due to the inhabitants of a country, as seems to be the case since Great Britain asks the Transvaal to give the franchise to British subjects in the Transvaal, and if that is so, why is that same right not given to the inhabitants of India? or that right of franchise is not supreme but might be subjected to circumstances which changes the case, as in India? No doubt it is the case and if so why not conclude that in the Transvaal, there might be circumstances which should be studied before having a strict rule to apply there when it is not applicable to India? This is a dilemma that I am putting forward for the hon. Minister of Justice himself, and if he cannot answer it, I think he will see that there is something wrong in his whole speech, which then should not be printed. There is another question which arises here: I do not know that we have power to deal with such a motion as this. I know that when a petition is presented here asking for an expenditure of public money, it is always ruled out of order, because it involves expenditure, and here is a motion made by a member of the Senate which has not been submitted to the Crown and which involves the expenditure of public money.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—How much?

Hon Mr. LANDRY—I do not know; the question is not the amount. If I have not a right to spend any sum, the amount matters little, be it large or small.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—It is a very trifling matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It might be a trifling matter but the question of order is raised. I think the motion is out of order.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If the hon. gentleman's view is correct, when you introduce a bill here you would have to get a governor's message in order to have it printed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is part of the routine business, but this is outside of the routine of the House. It is not an expenditure of money in the way public money should be expended.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What does the hon. gentleman say about passing an order to get a certain sum to have the Debates published?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is brought in in the regular way by the recommendation of the committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is not that the case?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The committee is superior to the House!

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is first recommended by the committee which has the duty of looking after such public expenditure, and then reported to the House whose action confirms or rejects the report.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The speech of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Mr. Ferguson), although addressed to the House, was intended as a speech purposely offensive to myself. I saw the hon. gentleman come in the other day loaded down with blue books and other papers, and he did not speak on this question. Of course, time was very short. Hon. gentlemen know that His Excellency came here for the purpose of giving his approval to the election which had been made in the House of Commons of the Speaker, and our time for discussing the subject was very limited, and I felt it my duty to take less time in dealing with it than I should like to have taken if it had been discussed earlier. The hon. gentleman says it would be discreditable to have my speech given to the public with the sanction of the House with all the blunders that it contains. The hon. gentleman has mentioned the blunders. The first is with regard to the European population in the Transvaal. I took the very latest figures. I took those which were given to the British public in a pamphlet by Sir Ashmead Bartlett, who had given a good deal of consideration to the subject, and who was as likely to be well informed as the hon. gentleman himself. Then I looked at the publication on behalf of the Uitlander population, the author of which stated what their numbers are in Johannesburg. That was a very few weeks ago, and I think that those people who are specially interested are quite as likely to be well informed on that subject as the hon. gentleman. So I might go over all the figures I have given. I know the population is not very accurately ascertained, but I gave those figures which I believed were, on the whole, most reliable. For instance, it is stated that the native population of the Transvaal is somewhere between 730,000 and 800,000. If I gave it at all I gave it as somewhere about three quarters of a million, and so with regard to all these matters, the information which I gave was as accurate as could be obtained, and as safe a statement as one could well make. Now, upon that question, no thing particularly depends. We were considering here the condition of the Uitlander population of British origin in that country. The hon. gentleman has referred to the statement I made with regard to the revenues. I gave that, both upon the statement made by Mr. Chamberlain himself, who, I think, is not likely to be misinformed on the matter, and also the figures with regard to the individual taxation per head which the hon. gentleman says is very much less. The individual taxation referred to the taxation that was borne specially by the people of Johannesburg, and if hon. gentlemen will look at that they will see that the statements with regard to the aggregate amount and with regard to the individual amount are perfectly consistent with each other. I need not go into that discussion further. Unfortunately, the hon. gentleman did not make his speech. The hon. gentleman said it would be a great misfortune to introduce so bad a precedent as the publication of the discussion on this question. I am not pressing the matter. I have not pressed for the publication of a single copy. It did not matter to me. There was a general expression of opinion in the House that the speeches should be distributed, and I acquiesced, but, whatever the hon. gentleman may think, it is not a matter to which I personally attach any great importance. In saying this I care very little whether the views of the hon. gentleman are accepted or the views of the House generally. The views of the House in this matter I think ought to prevail over the views of the hon. gentleman. With regard to the publication of documents, when we employ a gentleman to give a summary for the press of the proceedings of this House, you are violating the last principle which the hon. gentleman referred to. Let me take, for instance, the publication that took place in the House two or three years ago of a report made by some one with regard to the dairy business. There were some 75,000 or 80,000 copies of that report published. There was a departure from the rule which the hon. gentleman has laid down.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, no; it was not a parliamentary speech.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It does not matter whether it was a speech or not. It does not matter whether it is in the form of a document prepared outside, or a speech delivered inside. Why did you give the document to the public? Why was the document published, containing a report of an officer upon a particular subject? Instead of publishing the usual number of three or five thousand you ordered 75,000 or 80,000 copies printed, because you considered it was a matter of public interest which you would be justified in making generally accessible to the public. That is the whole point, and the point in every publication in regard to which you feel justified in departing from the rule. It is not a matter of the slightest consequence to me, what course the House may be prepared to adopt, whether it is the particular view the hon. gentleman has expressed or whether it is the view entertained by my hon. friend who has made the motion. I have risen only for the purpose of answering the criticism of the hon. gentleman with regard to my facts and figures. I need not say anything with regard to the observations addressed by the hon. gentleman opposite in respect to the right of this House, because every hon. gentleman knows that if the House chooses to give such an order it is within its right.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I had very little idea that the innocent motion of the hon. gentleman from Rideau on Friday last would have provoked such an amount of elaborate research on the part of the hon. gentlemen who opposed it in this chamber this afternoon. The object which the mover had in view, and the object which I had in view in seconding his motion, was this: I held, and I hold now, that in the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice there is a compendium, a gathering together of an immense amount of knowledge which should be made available.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield laughs. It is quite evident that some of the statements which the hon. gentleman has made in the chamber this afternoon are open to contradiction, but that is the view which we hold, and there was in the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice a gathering together of a large number of facts with regard to a very important subject indeed, and we think that the information which it contained should be made available to the people of Canada. That is the whole matter in a nutshell, and even if questions were to arise, debateable questions perhaps, such as to bad precedent and constitutional right and so on, I think that, under the circumstances, we might well afford to ignore these for the present, in the light of the information which would be conveyed to the people by having that speech in their hands. We wish the people to have extended knowledge in regard to this most important subject. We wish the people to have their loyalty stirred up in regard to this matter, and I cannot think of any better way than that proposed in the motion, to circulate copies of the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice. As far as expense is concerned, it is a mere bagatelle and, under all the circumstances, the House might well afford to take the course suggested in the motion of the hon. gentleman from Rideau.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I had not intended making any observations on the motion to-day, owing to my having expressed my views on a former occasion, when the matter came up for our consideration, but owing to some observations which fell from the hon. gentleman from Rideau, I feel bound, in vindication of the course which I am taking on this subject to repel the innuendo, or insinuation, made in regard to the reasons why any opposition has been expressed by my hon. friend to the left and myself on this motion. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice also made an innuendo, somewhat along the same line, that this opposition was largely due to the fact that he had made a speech upon a particular question. I say, with all sincerity to my hon. friend, that had any one else, particularly any members on this side of the House, made a speech along the same line, I would have been more emphatic in the opposition I have expressed to the printing of this debate than had that speech been made by one differing from me in politics. I yield to no one in this House in regard to my appreciation of the efforts of my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, in the speech in question. There is no doubt it is a very useful compendium of knowledge on this particular question, and undoubtedly indicates an amount of industry, labour, and loyal feeling which should receive the commendation of this House, but that was not the question at issue. The question was whether it was wise to establish a precedent of this order which, so far as I can learn, has never been recognized in Parliament upon any previous occasion. My hon. friend from Rideau says that it is an indication of loyalty on the part of those who desire to have this debate printed and circulated, I presume, conversely he means it would be an indication of disloyalty on the part of those who oppose it. Loyalty should be somewhat more deep seated than in the mere fact of making a speech and distributing it. However, probably my hon. friend from Rideau, with the zeal which usually characterizes him in speeches, was not serious in the appeal that he made to members of the House to support the motion. I did take occasion to say, when my hon. friend from Rideau first suggested the printing of these speeches, that in my judgment, owing to the fact of the popular branch of Parliament, viz., the Commons, having taken no step in this direction, it would not be in good taste for this body to have our debate printed and circulated. Had they shown any wish to do so, it might have been politic and wise for us to follow in the same direction; but surely we leave ourselves open to be attacked for immodesty in printing and circulating a debate on a subject which, to say the least, has received quite as much attention in the House of Commons as in this branch of Parliament. Then, on the other hand, when this matter was first brought up very serious doubt existed in the minds of many members as to whether the questions should be dealt with by Parliament. We know there is a deep seated feeling against dealing with subjects which are not germane to those subjects with which the Parliament of Canada has to do. Very strong opinions were expressed at one time on the introduction of the Home Rule issue into Parliament, and the passing of a resolution on the subject. If this Parliament is to take into consideration all Imperial questions that may arise from time to time and pronounce upon them, I can assure hon. gentlemen that they will have assumed a responsibility which they had not bargained for in entering on this precedent; therefore, my view was that a precedent of this kind should not be established, because, in the first place it was a doubtful question as to whether Parliament should have been invaded by a question which did not particularly pertain to the business before it. So far as precedent is concerned, it is well known that the Finance Minister's speech is the only speech published and circulated by Parliament. That has been recognized as a precedent and followed year after year, and it is limited to that. Consequently if we open the door to the publication of debates such as we have before us now, hon. gentlemen can, with very good cause, in the future ask Parliament to print and circulate any debate. As to the expressions which have fallen from the other side of the House with reference to the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, I think the House should feel indebted to my hon. friend for having directed the attention of the Senate to what seemed to be inaccuracies in regard to some statistics given. I know very well that statistical books differ on the subject of the Transvaal. I have been comparing Whittaker with the Statesman's Year Book, and I can well understand that a difference of opinion does prevail with regard to the figures that have been mentioned. This House should not condemn any member because he directs attention to what he considers inaccurate statements. Instead of hon. gentlemen finding fault with him, and attributing his opposition to captious criticism, it seems to me that a member who makes himself familiar with the statistics on any important question should receive the thanks of this House instead of receiving hostile criticism. I merely mention these facts to indicate the position I have taken on this question and the opinion which I still hold in regard to the printing and circulation of particular debates by this House. With regard to the precedent mentioned by the Minister of Justice, in relation to the reporting of the debates of this House by an outside reporter, I have always expressed myself as being opposed to that. If the expressions of opinion, or the speeches which are made in this House are not of sufficient importance to receive the attention of the press, it is beneath the dignity of the Senate to resort to any means to circulate, through the press or otherwise, the speeches made by hon. gentlemen on public matters.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is departed from in both Houses by the publication of the Debates. Both Houses are supposed to publish every speech made in Parliament, and so, even in the case which the hon. gentleman mentions, of the Minister of Finance, it is simply a difference in numbers and not a difference in principle.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The principle of circulation has never been recognized in the Hansard. It is a record of the proceedings.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is mistaken, because copies of Hansard are sent to all the newspapers in the country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not a wholesale circulation of the debates.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not my intention to prolong this debate. I should not have risen only for the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona (Mr. Landry), which were somewhat of a surprise to me, when he read from the Contemporary Review. I know, and I think most of those who have read anything on this subject are aware, that there was a discussion as to whether the preamble of the convention of 1881 was repealed when the convention of 1884 was held. Some were of the same opinion, at that time, as was expressed by the late Lord Derby in the article just quoted by the hon. senator, but if my recollection serves me right, that question has been referred to the Law Lords of the Crown, and the Law Lords have decided that the preamble to the convention of 1881 was not repealed by the convention of 1884. If my recollection be correct, and I think it is, then the preamble gives the suzerainty of that country to the Queen of England, and under that power, she now seeks, through Parliament, to restore the rights which she thinks her subjects have been deprived of. If the statement were true, that the convention of 1881 which gave the suzerainty to the Queen of England had been repealed, then there would be not only much force in the statement made by my hon. friend for Stadacona, but it would show an interference on the part of England with the independence of the Transvaal. If that suzerainty exists, as I am under the impression it does, for the reasons I have given, that the Law Lords of the Crown have decided that that portion of the convention is not repealed—and I think the Minister of Justice will agree with me on that point—then the Queen of England, through her government, not only has a right, but it is her imperative duty to look after the interests of her subjects in the Transvaal. Otherwise, I should be very much inclined to agree with my hon. friend; but in looking casually at this question, I think there is quite enough evidence to show that an interference on the part of England at the present time is an absolute necessity, unless she has made up her mind to have her subjects ill-treated in parts of the world where she has some control and some power. If the speeches on this question are to be printed, I shall take the liberty, not of changing anything I said—because in reading over my remarks I do not see that there is anything to change so far as the sentiments which I have uttered are concerned—but I shall take the liberty of adding a little information. In reference to the point of order raised by my hon. friend, I shall not discuss that further than to state what my recollection is of the procedure in the House of Commons and also in this House. When the Minister of Justice called attention to the fact that we employ a reporter here to report for the press and pay him without a Governor General's warrant, he must have forgotten that there is a certain sum placed in the estimates, called the contingent accounts, over which this House has full control; and if this printing is to be paid out of that fund, and the recommendation comes from the proper source, we have a right, without a message from His Excellency, to expend this sum of money. I do not think the recollection of the Minister of Justice is accurate with respect to the procedure of the House of Commons. It is true the Committee on Agriculture recommended to the House the publication of 60,000 or 100,000 copies of a report, and when an independent member of the House rises to ask for the printing of any document, as has been done by my friend opposite to-day, the suggestion is at once made to refer it to the Printing Committee, and the Printing Committee recommend to Parliament the carrying out of the suggestion made by the member of the House of Commons, they having the power to do that, a sum having been placed in the estimates to cover the cost, Parliament approves and it is done. Most hon. gentlemen who have been on the Printing Committee for any length of time will remember that that is the course pursued. I have a distinct recollection, on a number of occasions in the House of Commons, when a motion of that kind was made, of a reference of it to the Printing Committee, and the fact that the House recommended the printing of a certain document which has been suggested in the House, is taken as an indirect order to do it, and it is always done. That is the procedure in the House of Commons, and my hon. friend is aware that we have in the estimates every year a sum placed at our disposal, called the contingent account, to be used in such a manner as the House may deem proper.

CONDITIONAL LIBERATION OF PENITENTIARY CONVICTS BILL.

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN.

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill (T) "An Act to provide for the Conditional Liberation of of Penitentiary Convicts," with an amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the amendment be concurred in. He said:—The amendment consists in the addition of the following as clause 12:

It shall be the duty of the Minister of Justice to advise the Governor General upon all matters connected with, or affecting, the administration of this Act.

It was not stated precisely in the bill to what department the administration of this Act belonged, nor whether the regulations should be made as departmental regulations, or in council, and in the discussion in the House of Commons they seem to think that the matter should rest with the Minister of Justice, and that the responsibility should be his personal responsibility in the discharge of his official duties. The reason was that in all pardons, except those in capital cases, the Governor General acts upon the advice of the Minister of Justice alone, and so this applies that rule with regard to the granting of the tickets of leave, or conditional pardon, or freedom on parole.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would that go beyond the question of ticket of leave? I am aware that in cases of capital punishment, questions affecting life and death, that the council always act upon the advice of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Not always.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will withdraw that expression. I did not intend to imply that. They always act upon the advice of the Minister of Justice, but they do not always confirm it. They consider the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, and I may say further, that it is very seldom departed from. I have known occasions, however, where his recommendation has not been concurred in, as to carrying out the sentence, and sometimes as to reprieving. But does this amendment go beyond these two points; first, the recommendation, so far as affecting life and death, and the ticket of leave, or does it place the whole responsibility in the hands of the Minister of Justice when he makes any change in reference to salaries, or in reference to appointments to office without recommending to council?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no provision with regard to offices of any sort in the bill. There is no creation of offices in the bill. It simply relates to the granting of tickets of leave and the conditions upon which they are granted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I thought it was dealing with the other bill.

The motion was agreed to.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (156) "An Act to amend the General Inspection Act."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said:—The General Inspection Act is being changed in a few particulars. There has been a good deal of discussion affecting the standard of Manitoba wheat, and this bill gives the result of the various reports of the boards with reference to it. The proposal is to do away with the present mode of having inspectors who are paid by fees, and to appoint two inspectors, one at Winnipeg and one at some eastern port, to inspect the grain. It elevates the standard of Manitoba hard. It provides that the proportion of hard red fife wheat in every bushel shall be raised from 66⅔ to 75. These are the principal points in the bill. I will explain it more fully on the second reading.

The motion was agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the House adjourns I should like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to a cablegram which appeared in the Toronto Globe of Saturday last and reads as follows:

LONDON, ENG., OFFICE OF THE GLOBE,
222-225 STRAND, W.C., August 4.

The Senate having thrown out the Redistribution Bill on the ground that it is unconstitutional to legislate in the direction of altering the electoral divisions except upon the occasion of the regular decennial adjustment, the following opinion is interesting. It speaks for itself:—

Our opinion is asked whether it is competent to the Canadian Parliament to legislate as proposed, and independently of the decennial adjustment. We are of the opinion that it is competent.

(Sgd.) EDWARD BLAKE,
R. B. HALDANE,
Canadian Agent under the late Government.
W. H. ASQUITH,
Formerly Home Secretary.
EDWARD CARSON,
Solicitor General for Ireland in the last Salisbury Government.
ROBERT CECIL,
Son of Lord Salisbury.

What I should like to ask the hon. minister is, whether this opinion was sought from these gentlemen by himself, or by the government of which he is a member; and, if so, whether he will be prepared to lay upon the table the question which was asked these legal gentlemen? I do so for the reason that the manner in which the question was put to these legal gentlemen was not correct, presuming that this cablegram is true. The reason for rejecting the redistribution, or Readjustment Bill, is given in the motion which I made in amendment to the motion for the second reading, and that does not affirm that Parliament had not the right to legislate upon that question if it thought proper to do so. I was very careful in drafting that resolution not to have that question involved. If hon. gentlemen read the remarks which I made they will see that I pointed out very distinctly and positively that it was inexpedient for the reasons which were given in the amendment, and not that it was unconstitutional. I quite agreed with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, who put that question succinctly and very pointedly. He said that while he was of the opinion that, as the British North America Act did not prohibit legislation upon this subject, he did not think that it was unconstitutional. That was the view also taken by my hon. friend who sits in front of me, except that he goes a little further. My hon. friend from Montarville, (Mr. DeBoucherville) voted against the amendment simply because he thought that we had a right to legislate upon the subject. That point I never disputed. What I pointed out, and what most of those who spoke upon the question pointed out, was, that while the Confederation Act gave the power to the local legislatures to change, alter and amend the representation in the legislative assembly, and also to change the constitution by the abolition of the Upper House, that had the fathers of confederation, when they drafted the clauses affecting the readjustment of the representation not intended to confine it to each decennial census, they would have given the same power to this Parliament as they gave to the local legislatures, and, therefore, inferentially they did not intend it to be exercised, and that equitably it should not be done. That was the ground upon which this House rejected that bill, and not for the reasons given in this telegram. I am led to suppose, from what has taken place in another branch of this legislature, that in all probability this question was put to Mr. Blake, and the other gentlemen in the manner indicated in this cablegram to the Globe: We know that a very short time ago, when certain charges of a very grave character were made in the Lower House against one of the ministers, Reuter telegraphed, under instructions, so he said, this important statement, that the member who had made these charges had withdrawn them, when in fact there was not a scintilla of truth in the statement. On the contrary, he placed his own position in the House in jeopardy if he failed to substantiate the charges before a committee. The only deduction to be drawn from these two instances are these: first, a desire to mislead the public mind in England, both as to the charges to which I have referred, and which were made in the Lower House, and also as to the action of the Senate. If Mr. Blake held the opinion which this cablegram indicates he holds, it is a most singular thing that when Sir John Macdonald, in the Lower House, made the statement that the Senate had prevented a violation of the Constitutional Act in preventing the Tuckersmith Bill from becoming law, that Mr. Blake never answered it. Hon. gentlemen may read that debate from beginning to end and they will not find a single word by Mr. Blake's dissenting from the propositions laid down by Sir John Macdonald at that time. If Mr. Blake had had the strong opinions that he now holds, knowing him as we do, and knowing how positive he is in every instance where he expresses an opinion, more particularly against a political opponent, it is but fair to assume that he would have taken issue with the Premier at that moment. However, that is a matter which I shall not discuss just now; but what I should like to know is whether that was the representation made to these legal gentlemen in England by the Minister of Justice, or by any of his colleagues; and if so, whether he will be prepared to lay upon the table of the House the communication, whether it be by cablegram or letter, in order that we may know exactly what representations were made to them, and then we will be able to judge and act accordingly. It is suggested by my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Landry) that the Solicitor General is at present in England, and probably the submission may have been made by him. If that be the case, I should like to know whether he was acting on his own responsibility, or whether he acted under instructions received from ministers in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have had no communication with anybody in England with regard to the Redistribution Bill, nor do I know that any of my colleagues have had. My impression is that the opinion was one perhaps obtained at the instance of the newspapers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—For its own purpose?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. minister think that Mr. Blake and the other gentleman would have undertaken to have addressed that to the Globe if they were not asked for it?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not say that they would do it without being asked. All I said was that I had not asked it, nor was I aware that any of my colleagues had asked it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. minister consider Mr. Fitzpatrick one of his colleagues?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He is a member of the government, but not of the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not aware that Mr. Fitzpatrick has put any such question. I think he is on the continent.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has he gone to Rome?

THE ALASKAN BOUNDRY QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As we have a little time at our disposal, there is another matter to which I should like to call the attention of the hon. minister, because there is no saying what the results may be. We may be involved in international difficulties and troubles through the actions of our Premier, and it is a matter of very serious consideration, and a matter which I think it behooves not only every member of the Senate, but every man, woman and child in the country to take into serious consideration. From an article which I hold in my hand it appears that the Premier of this country has been treated rather cavalierly by some newspapers in the United States, and that being the case we cannot tell what may be the result. His sunny ways may have to give way to a Saskatchewan musket for all we know. I shall read this article and ask whether there is any truth in it:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—F. W. Fitzpatrick, of the treasury department, has returned to Washington from Ottawa, where he went at the instance of the committee of citizens of Chicago, in charge of the ceremonies of laying the corner stone of that city's great post office building, next October, by President McKinley, to arrange for the formal invitation and expected acceptance of an invitation from Chicago's citizens to the Governor General, and cabinet of Canada to participate in these festivities. Mr. Fitzpatrick is the assistant United States architect for the Chicago building.

To an Associated Press representative he admitted that his official reception at the Canadian capital was slightly chilly, Sir Wilfrid Laurier very candidly telling him that under the present conditions it would be impossible to accept or even to consider any social invitations to this side of the border. Mr. Fitzpatrick says than in substance Sir Wilfrid's voluntary statements and answers to questions were as follows: "As a friend in whom I am deeply interested I am very glad to see you, but, frankly, as a representative of the federal or any government in the United States, your visit could not have been more untimely. When I received your first letter I took up the matter with His Excellency the Governor General and he expressed a sincere desire to visit Chicago, and seemed as anxious to accept the invitation as I was. We would have been delighted to go, and were looking forward to the day with much anticipation. But since then the tone of your press has become so harsh in dealing with the Alaskan boundary question, such misrepresentations have been made about our government, and particularly about me, that it would be undignified for us to visit you, and I cannot advise His Excellency to go."

Mr. Fitzpatrick said that Sir Wilfrid intimated that in the present state of public feeling in the United States, as indicated in the press, it would not be entirely safe for the Governor General and himself to visit Chicago, as he feared that they might, in a great gathering of such a character as a Chicago ceremony, be subjected to some unpleasantness or indignity by thoughtless persons. Sir Wilfrid expressed as strongly in favour of arbitrating the Alaskan boundary dispute, and concluded the interview as follows: "No, much as I regret it, I could not go to Chicago under present conditions and shall certainly, however painful a duty it may be, also advice His Excellency to decline the invitation that I know and feel has so kindly been extended to us by the city of Chicago."

Mr. Fitzpatrick secured Sir Wilfrid's promise, however, to reconsider the matter.

THE PREMIER'S CURT REPLY.

In the House of Commons on Saturday night Mr. Davin called attention to the foregoing:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made curt reply: "I have nothing to say," he made answer: "I beg to move the adjournment of the House," which motion carried.

What I should like to know is, whether the Minister of Justice could inform us if any such interview took place, and if so, whether the Premier of this Dominion ever gave expression to sentiments of this kind. They are unseemly, and out of character with the high position that he holds. If the statement is untrue, he ought at once repudiate ever having uttered it. It seems incredible that the Premier of this country should tell a United States official, whoever he might be, that because there is an international dispute existing between the two countries as to the Alaskan boundary, it would prevent him accepting a public invitation, and still more that he should for a moment have given as a reason that the press of the United States had been abusing Canada and particularly himself · ergo, it would not be safe for him or the Governor General to go to Chicago. It struck me, when I read it, that I should ask whether the friendly relations that have existed in the past still exist, or whether there is a probability that all negotiations and friendly intercourse between the two countries shall cease.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I suppose it is a question of tobacco and pistols.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not understand that. As I do not use tobacco, I do not see the application of it. If it is simply a case of pistols for two and coffee for one, it would not be a matter of very great importance even if the duel took place between the Premier and this gentleman, Mr. Fitzpatrick, or some one of the editors who has been abusing our Premier. Seriously, a statement of that kind going to the world as coming from an official of the United States should be sufficient to warrant a denial of it on the very first possible occasion. If true, I do not hesitate to say it is not only impolitic, but undignified on the part of the Premier of this country to talk in that manner to any official coming here to extend to him a friendly invitation. It is so ridiculously absurd that I cannot for a moment believe that the Premier would commit himself to that extent, and I hope that the hon. gentleman may be in a position, if not now, at least when we meet to-morrow, to give it an emphatic denial.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think it is very much to be deprecated that we should make it the custom to discuss, in Parliament, all sorts of rumours that are put in the newspapers, and give them a dignity and importance that otherwise they would not possess. Our position upon this boundary question was for a number of days systematically misrepresented by a portion of the press of the United States with a view to influencing public opinion in favour of the United States contention and against the view that the Canadian people entertain, but I do not think it is good policy for us to undertake to transfer that discussion, which in the United States is carried on in the newspaper press, in this country to Parliament. If we have anything to say it should be said through the newspapers of the country, and let it be a newspaper discussion instead of making it a parliamentary and official discussion on our side. I know nothing about the matter to which my hon. friend has referred. I can express no opinion with regard to it. I formed the opinion, when I read it, that it was made up very much in the same way that the Waterford Editor made news. He was informed by his printer that they wanted about two inches of a column to complete the page of a newspaper and asked what to put in. The editor said "put in a paragraph that there was a boy drowned in the harbour." The paragraph was put in, and the printer returned and said, "That has filled up one-half the space, but we want as much more." "Put in a second paragraph, said the editor that it was a mistake, there was no boy drowned in the harbour." In that way the material was furnished to finish out the column. Some penny-a-liner may have written to a New York paper professing to give an interview with the Prime Minister. Certainly from what the hon. gentleman read, it has been pretty well spun out, but I never made any inquiry with regard to the matter from the Prime Minister, because I did not suppose there was a particle of foundation for the supposed interview.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is of interest to every citizen of the Dominion to know how far the Premier has committed himself to statements of this kind. I am speaking seriously now. The hon. gentleman may make light of it. This is not written by a penny-a-liner; it is given on the authority of the gentleman who came here himself. If he has told a falsehood, let us know it. I would not have brought up this matter if it affected any one but the head of the government of the country. When the Premier of this country speaks, he speaks for the whole Dominion, and not for an individual, and if he has made the statement reported, I say it is undignified on his part. I doubt very much whether he ever did say it. Let us fasten the lie upon Mr. Fitzpatrick, if it is a lie.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It might not have been Mr. Fitzpatrick.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It says Mr. Fitzpatrick. There could not be a more positive statement made. It does not appear at all like the work of a penny-a-liner.

The Senate adjourned.

DEPARTMENTS OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (182) intituled "An Act respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue." He said :—I need say little with regard to this bill. The measure is a very brief one, and the object is specifically stated in the bill. It has for its object the increase of the salaries of the Controller of Inland Revenue and the Controller of Customs to $7,000 a year, the same as the other members of the cabinet. At the time that the salaries of the Controller of Inland Revenue and the Controller of Customs were reduced, it was when a different arrangement was made, the object being to exclude these officers from the cabinet, although they were members of the administration, and so a smaller salary was fixed. Sir John Macdonald stated that the object in making the change was to furnish an opportunity for bringing men into the administration who were young members of promise, in order that they might receive training which would fit them for offices where great responsibility would attach. It was a proposal to some extent to introduce the English system. It never seemed to me that it was a plan that could be, without going much further, satisfactorily worked out in this country. There were two systems in vogue in two countries of Europe where parliamentary government subsists, either of which was capable of being practically worked out. There is the Italian system, which gave to each department of government a single head, the same as our system does, but which gave to the minister an opportunity of following his measure into the House to which he did not belong and there speaking in its defence, so that each House might be fully informed as to the policy had in view in the proposal of the measure. I am not aware that the system has been tried elsewhere than in the Kingdom of Italy. In England every department of the government has an assistant head, as well as the chief, the assistant being a member of the administration but not a member of the cabinet. This, to some extent, introduced that system, but only to a very limited extent, and Sir John Macdonald, after putting the measure on the statute-book, did not bring it into operation, although it was there for some time while he remained Prime Minister. At a latter period it was brought into operation, my hon. friend on the opposition (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) who had been Minister of Customs for a number of years, retired from that department and took the position of Minister of Commerce, and the Controller of Customs was created and discharged the administrative duties which had before belonged to the Minister of Customs. I do not think that this system could be considered as a successful or satisfactory one. It either went too far in being called into existence, or did not go far enough in not being extended to all the other departments of government. At all events, the next administration thought proper to return to the old system and to the practice of creating a chief who is the head of the department, and who is also a member of the cabinet. It was proposed that these two officers should continue to receive the salaries which had been paid to the Controller of Customs until there could be a reduction in the number of cabinet ministers. That reduction has not taken place. There has been a rapid extension of the Dominion, during the past two years, in population and in the area over which that population extended. The Yukon, which is as large as an ordinary province, and which contains a very considerable population producing a large amount of wealth and of revenue being distant and somewhat inaccessible, has made it, up to the present time impossible to reduce the number of cabinet ministers, as was suggested at the time this change was made. I would say to the hon. gentleman that I have never spoken in favour of a small number of cabinet ministers. I never believed that you could undertake to engraft the policy of the United States, with regard to the executive government, upon the parliamentary system of the country. A Prime Minister in England, some years ago said, that it was the duty of the administration to make a House and keep a House, and that is, under our parliamentary system, in a large measure one of the duties and one of the sources of anxiety to the Prime Minister and to his government. You may adopt a public policy that is acceptable to a very large number of people, the majority of the people of the country, but that is not sufficient. A government, like Parliament itself, must be in touch with the people of the country if there is any very large area that is not brought in contact in some way or other with some one or more members of the administration. Every one knows, who consider the subject, that when an Imperial federation of a representative character is spoken of one of the first insuperable difficulties that presents itself to the mind of a statesman who is called upon to reflect upon the subject, is that with an empire so extensive—with portions of the country so widely separated from each other, if you had a parliament sitting for any length of time at London, say, or an administration and responsible government created sitting there, that that government would soon be out of touch with all the more distant portions of the empire, because it could not be sufficiently in contact with them to know how they view matters to fully appreciate the constant changes that public opinion is undergoing that would always require, if Parliament is to remain in harmony and the country to be duly reflected in the House of the empire, and in the administration of the empire, and in the administration itself, so that we in this country as a cabinet, occupy a very different position from a cabinet in the United States under the United States system. They are not ministers. They are simply chief clerks under the president. Under the constitution the whole executive government is in the hands of a single person. It is in the highest degree monarchy, a simple monarchy, whereas under our system the executive government is represented, and the Crown is the dignified head and is the organ for the expression of the executive government of the country. Now, that is our position, and even if it were possible that a government composed of a very small number of ministers could efficiently carry on the executive government, it would altogether fail as a portion of Parliament to keep itself in touch with the people, to control, if I may so use that expression in its legitimate and proper sense —to control Parliament and to retain its confidence, and to give to the advisors of the Crown something like permanence in the conduct of public affairs. There is nothing of that kind required under the United States system. It is necessary under ours, and so, under our system, you require ministers of the Crown not merely who are engaged in the efficient work of the administration, but ministers also who have leisure to consider all those important questions which come up, the consideration of which is necessary to keep the government in touch with Parliament and with the country, and to see that the work of legislation is properly and duly prepared for the consideration of Parliament, so far as the Crown or the advisors of the Crown may think it necessary to take charge of that work. So you have in England, for instance, the first Lord of the Treasury who is leader, at the present time, of the House of Commons and who is for the most part usually the first minister. You have no executive or administrative work at all associated with his office. The leading of the House of Commons and the control of the business of government in the House are considered of sufficient importance to engage his entire attention; and so with regard to the office of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. There are no administrative duties associated with his office. So with regard to the Lord President of the Council. In all these cases you have cabinet ministers, who are invariably in every government, and yet who have no particular administrative labours to undertake, and the duty which they have to discharge is to assist their colleagues whose time is otherwise occupied in discharging legislative functions which are of paramount importance, under our system, while Parliament is in session. I say that being so, in a country like this, containing between three and four millions of square miles over which the population is spreading, a population of diverse interests who are brought into close contact with each other, it is a necessary thing, if you are to maintain parliamentary government, that the number of ministers should be considered and that you do not at all answer, or successfully attack, the system by showing that the executive government of the country could be carried on with a smaller number. It would be no advantage to the government of the country to have a political crisis during every session of Parliament, and if you had a very small number of ministers they would find it impossible to keep themselves in touch with public opinion in every part of the Dominion. You would have practically that state of things. Now, avoid that by having a cabinet sufficiently numerous so that ministers may, during the vacation or otherwise, and by their association with members of the House, keep themselves fairly well informed of all the political currents that are flowing, sometimes in opposite directions, through the various populations that make up the people of the country, that the number of cabinet ministers is not unduly large, and that certainly amongst those who have important duties to perform, few hold offices involving greater leisure and greater responsibilities than the Minister of Customs. I, therefore, approve heartily of the measure I am now submitting to the House for its consideration.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am very sorry that I am not in the state of health to do justice to the task which I have undertaken, but having promised a number of my colleagues in this House to make a motion in opposition to the second reading of this bill, I feel that I have no way of avoiding the responsibility that I have assumed. With regard to the speech of the mover of the bill, to which hon. gentlemen have listened, I desire to say—and I say it with the greatest respect for my hon. friend the Minister of Justice—I have never heard in this House an address which was more completely intended to cast dust in the eyes of the Senate and to draw away the minds of hon. gentlemen from the actual subject before them than this long address of the hon. minister. The hon. gentleman commenced by talking to us about the system of government prevailing in Italy and elsewhere, and ended by describing the system created by Sir John Macdonald, which was no longer in existence. I do not see the purpose in discussing these measures in connection with the motion before the House. The hon. gentleman went into a long dissertation as to the necessity of a large number of ministers to govern this country, but that is not the point that he has to defend in moving this bill. I intend to show, before I resume my seat, that this bill on the ground of economy, on the ground of political morality and on the ground of public decency, should not receive the sanction of this House. The position assumed by my hon. friend was clever, as everything he does in this House shows intellectual ability of a high order, but it was ability prostituted to the purpose of fooling the House. I am passing over, in starting, all this irrelevant matter which I do not intend to answer. The position my hon. friend assumed was that the government required a large number of ministers, and that he had never advocated the United States system; that he believes a large cabinet is necessary for the government of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct in these statements. He is not sufficient of a demagogue to have wasted his talents, either on the floor of Parliament or in agitation on the hustings of this country in tricky and dishonest contentions. But I say here, and I say it fearlessly before this House and before the people of this country, that if there was one question upon which the great Liberal party went to the country at the last general election, it was on the question of extravagance in the administration of public affairs of this country.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The hon. Minister of Justice may have kept his skirts clear of being soiled by such demagogism, but I say the leaders of the party, the men who spoke from every platform of this country, the men who spoke upon the floors of Parliament, as the representatives of the great Liberal party, used as one of the chief arguments against the late administration that the government of this country was carried on too extravagantly. They pointed to the great nation to the south of us, and said: "There is a country of sixty or seventy millions governed by one-half the number of ministers which this poor country of ours, with four or five millions of population, require to govern us. It is monstrous." I appeal to the sober, solid sense and judgment of every political opponent I have in this House if that was not the canvass these demagogues made for years and years throughout the length and breadth of this land—the extravagance of the late government. It was pointed out that in no respect was that extravagance more palpable than in the administration of the departments. Therefore, although my hon. friend may clear his skirts from this demagogism with which his colleagues did not hesitate to smear themselves, I say the great party to which he belongs got into power by telling the people of this country that they could be governed with half the number of ministers and at half the cost. What was the first thing they did after they got into power, with these denunciations of their opponents fresh in the minds of the people? The first thing they did was to create a cabinet with twelve portfolios, with salaries ranging from $7,000 to $8,000, and three subordinate cabinet positions, at $5,000 a year, taking in besides two non-salaried officers, creating a cabinet of seventeen members. This was the first act of these gentlemen while their denunciations I say were still ringing in the ears of the people of this country at the absurdity of a cabinet of fifteen or sixteen members (thirteen salaried members all told) being required to conduct the public affairs of this country. Are these not the facts, hon. gentlemen? These are the facts upon which I am going to ask this House to consider the bill before us. I say, as soon as they got in they created one of the largest cabinets the country ever saw. Consistent with their conduct on every public question, they falsified their pledges and broke their promises, cast them to the winds, trampled them under foot and treated the people as if they were too ignorant or imbecile to understand or to resent the deception which had been practised upon them. More than that—and I just mention it in this connection because it is consistent with their course from the first—they denounced the late government when in power for expending $38,000,000 upon the public service of the country and said that it could be reduced by $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. I ask if they did not do this from platform to platform in every province of the Dominion? Their record is there and any man who wishes to see it can examine it. And what have we to-day? We have sixty odd million of a budget providing for the expenditures of the present year. I do not know what these gentlemen must think of the public intelligence of this country in view of such facts as these, but I say, bad as this comparison is which I have just made with regard to the general expenditure, in point of political morality, it sinks into the shade when compared with the bill they are now trying to force upon this branch of Parliament. In 1897 this government passed a bill virtually abrogating the system of Sir John Macdonald, creating two ministers instead of the controllers existing under the old system, and took them into the cabinet with a salary of $5,000 a year, and in asking Parliament to make that change—to create the two controllers ministers, they put a provision in the bill which is as solemn a contract as ever was enterd into between a government and a Parliament or a people, as to the salaries of these two ministers. My hon. friend took very good care to avoid the Act of 1897; he took very good care not to allude to it in his clever address to-day. He never alluded to this fact. But, hon. gentlemen, it was then provided as the Act clearly shows that until the cabinet was reduced these officers should not receive any further salary than they were then receiving until the number of ministers was reduced to thirteen, and then they would receive like other ministers the same salary. I will read the bill carried by this government, and I ask this House if they can fancy a more unblushing act of administration than for the same government to come down here in the face of this solemn contract that they entered into with the people of this country in 1897 and ask to do the thing which is being condemned. Clause 2 of the bill reads as follows:—

The offices of the Minister of Customs and Minister of Inland Revenue which, under the provisions of the said Act, ceased to exist when the said Act was brought into force, are hereby revived; and hereafter the Department of Customs shall be presided over by the Minister of Customs for the time being, and the Department of Inland Revenue by the Minister of Inland Revenue for the time being.

2. The salary of each of the said ministers shall be five thousand dollars per annum and shall continue at that rate until a readjustment of the departments of government shall reduce the number of ministers holding departments to thirteen or less, whereupon and thereafter the salary of each of the said ministers shall be seven thousand dollars per annum.

That is the compact they made with the country. That is the compact they entered into with Parliament. Those are the terms under which these two gentlemen entered the cabinet and accepted portfolios as ministers of the Crown. There is as solemn an obligation upon them as if they had signed it under hand and seal and there is a solemn obligation upon the government to-day which this bill is intended to frustrate.

This bill is brought in by a government that has been condemning the extravagance of its opponents and lauding its own principles of economy for years past. These men disregard their own legislation, disregarding this obligation solemnly entered into, come down with a bill to abrogate it, and the Minister of Justice in submitting that bill to this House make a long irrelevent speech to you about other matters which did not concern the bill at all and never once referred to the Act of 1897. He knew his weak point. He is an adroit fencer. Bad as the bill is, so far as I have gone, there is something else, which is its worst feature; it not only is intended to give these gentlemen $7,000 a year—not only intended to place them on the same footing as other members of the cabinet—but it actually has a retroactive effect, and contemplates giving them the increased salary for one year back. That is these men who have no more claim to it than I have to-day, by this bill are intended to be enabled to put their hands in the public treasury and take, each of them $7,000 instead of $5,000 in violation of the stipulations of their agreement with the country in taking their present office. We have heard the word boodle used frequently in parliamentary discussions in this country, but when you find, in the recesses of the cabinet, two ministers ready to do such an act as that, having unblushing hardihood to submit it to Parliament for its approval, what will they do on the sly? If this bill becomes law and these two gentlemen are enabled to take $7,000 each out of the public treasury, it will be as complete an act of legalized larceny as could be perpetrated. Still, this is what we are asked to sanction. The hon. gentleman by his bill will establish fourteen ministers with $7,000 or $8,000 a year, against the contentions of his party for years, that half that number should be sufficient, and, on that ground, I ask that this bill be rejected. But I claim that it be rejected on the ground that the expenditure is quite sufficient now and should not be increased, and further when hon. gentlemen comply with the conditions imposed by Parliament in 1897, by reducing the number of ministers, they have the power to do what they want, without a bill of this kind. With regard to these officers, I am not going to discuss the policy of making the change a few years ago, or the policy that altered it. I think myself that $5,000, with an indemnity of $1,000, is a very handsome salary for the work that either of these gentlemen now perform or are capable of performing, as one of them especially is said by his own party friends to be good for nothing—a mere ornamental nonentity. I doubt if we were to put either of them at anything else, if he would be able to earn half the money; therefore, their present salary is quite sufficient. There is no hesitation at extravagance in anything where this government is concerned. But if any word is said with regard to increasing the trifling allowance which members get as an indemnity, at once their hands go up and we are told that the country would not be pleased with anything of that kind, but you can shower thousands on the ministers and there is nothing against that. The ministers can get all they want and the country is called upon to pay their extravagant bills in public junketing, and conferences, and antics of every sort besides. I take it for granted that the duties of the Minister of Customs to-day are not what they were a few years ago. The duties devolving on the Minister of Customs in the early days of 1878, 1879 and 1880 were very onerous indeed. It was then that the National Policy was created and brought into existence, and during that period of years, until it was being trimmed to work smoothly and meet the exigencies of the various industries of the country, there was a great deal of work in connection with it. For years after the adoption of that policy the position of Minister of Customs or Minister of Inland Revenue might justly be placed, in regard to claims for salary, on the same footing as other cabinet positions. But latterly what are the duties of the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Inland Revenue, particularly in comparison with the duties they had to perform before? They are nothing more at the present day than soldering or tinkering an old boiler, in comparison with making a boiler new, which their predecessors had accomplished and made so water-tight that it required very little tinkering from them—the policy their predecessors created to which is due largely the present prosperity of this country. I do not desire to imitate my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and make a long speech.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is already long.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think I have however, placed before the Senate the grounds on which this bill should not become law. We should now have fourteen salaried ministers at $7,000 or $8,000 a year an outrider, besides called the Solicitor General, who gets $5,000 for doing nothing. We should never go beyond thirteen, and I think this House would at all times be willing to go to the extent of that number.

I have been told, and I have laughed at it when told so, that the hon. leader of the opposition rather favoured this bill. I never could believe that he did. I believe that the hon. leader of the opposition is a very generous man to his political opponents. I admire his generosity, but it is not always good for the health of a political organization that its leader should be too ready to take his opponents out of a hole. I laughed, I say, at the idea of my hon. friend supporting this bill when I was told so, and I will tell hon. gentlemen why. The hon. and distinguished gentleman who leads the opposition in this House was for many years Minister of Customs in this country. No man in Parliament or in this country to-day probably understands the working inside and outside of the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments better than the hon. gentleman. The hon. leader of the opposition was the member of the government who changed the constitution of the cabinet by creating deputy ministers. With his experience with his leading position in the cabinet of that day, there was no man consulted with reference to the re-organization of his own department, but himself, and no other man was fitted to advise so thoroughly and so ably as himself. He regulated the department which he was then filling, and although it may be said it was the work of the government, it was the hon. Minister of Customs who fixed the salary at $5,000, he who knew the work that had to be performed by the officer coming into the incumbency of the new controllorship. He knew the conditions existing when he fixed that salary at $5,000, and the same conditions exist to-day. There was called into existence a new portfolio called the Department of Trade and Commerce. That portfolio exists to-day, so the circumstances existing at the time of the arrangement of the departments by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and to-day are on all fours in respect to the conditions that should be observed in reajusting them now with this difference, the labour of running these departments now is less even than it was in 1891. With these remarks I beg to move that this bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have been twenty-five years in the Senate, and I certainly have never listened to a more extraordinary speech than the one which has just been delivered by the hon. gentleman from Richmond. It is the first time I have heard him raise his voice against extravagance. He has not, up to this time, been a pattern of economy, and I am quite sure if this bill had been introduced by the Conservative party it would have met his approval instead of his disapproval. That the two members of the government who hold most important folios, members who are largely responsible for the enormously increased revenue which affords a surplus of between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000—that the two gentlemen who are instrumental in collecting that revenue are not to receive the same salaries as their colleagues, is a proposition which I did not expect to hear from the hon. gentleman. The question of salaries largely concerns the House of Commons, yet this House is asked to avail itself of its power to throw out a bill which, had Sir John Macdonald been in power to-day, would have received the approval of the Senate, and the Minister of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Customs would be occupying positions similar to their colleagues and would be receiving allowances equal to the other members of the government. I should think it is a very extraordinary action on the part of this House, if, after a measure of this kind has passed through the House of Commons, they were to challenge and defeat a bill giving to two members of the government an increase of $2,000 each—the two members who, as I said before, are those who are mainly instrumental in collecting the revenue. I should like to ask the hon. leader of the opposition whether he concurs in the observations made by the hon. gentleman from Richmond when he says that the office has really no duties connected with it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I did not say that

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon gentleman said it was like repairing an old boiler : he said the duties were very small.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Much less than what they used to be.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think they are a great deal more, and if the hon. gentleman knew much of the subject he would not make such a statement. The duties of the Minister of Customs have been enormously increased by the preferential tariff introduced since the change of government, and I am quite sure the leader of the opposition would not agree with the statements which have been made by the hon. senator from Richmond. It is only fair that facts of that kind should be known. Any hon. gentleman who gives thought or attention to the question will see that both these ministers do give as much time as any members of the government, and much larger than some of their colleagues. If salaries have to be cut down, certainly it is not the salary of the Minister of Inland Revenue or of the Minister of Customs which should be reduced. They hold two of the most responsible positions in the government, and their salaries should be maintained. If there is to be an equality of salaries, they should be as high as the salaries paid to the other ministers. The hon. gentleman says we have increased the expenses of government by creating a Solicitor General.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I did not say that. I used his name but did not say that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Inferentially the hon. gentleman said so.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Nothing of the kind. I stated that, in addition to the large number of salaried ministers of the cabinet, they had a Solicitor General at $5,000 a year for which I did not think he did any work.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is entirely astray in that. The Solicitor General had been time and again before the Privy Council arguing cases in which the Dominion was interested, and is quite as active as any of his predecessors were.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I agree with the hon. gentleman there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the hon. gentleman should criticise unless this government was responsible for creating the position of Solicitor General. I do not propose to go into the general expenditure that the hon. gentleman has referred to. It is not the time or the occasion. All I can say is, so far as the public departments are concerned, those for which the ministers are individually responsible, if the hon. gentleman will examine the public accounts and returns, he will find there has been no increase in the expenditures of the public departments. The increase has been owing to the wonderful expansion of this country since the change of government. The hon. gentleman talks about extravagance. Did he suppose that the government were going to allow the canals to linger on for ten or fifteen years, as our predecessors were doing? Take the Welland Canal, which was finished to a depth of fourteen feet eight or ten years ago, and was useless until the deepening of the other portions of the canal system was finished. It was far more in the interests of economy that this government should go on with the work of enlarging the canals to avail ourselves of the fourteen feet depth, than to let the work linger on for some years. The extra expense has been due to the great expansion that has taken place—to the opening up of the Yukon Territory. That has cost a very large sum of money, but the Yukon will pay for itself and a great deal more. This government, when it felt itself inheriting the responsibility of office, had to rise to the occasion. This government can defend itself on its expenditures, and the hon. gentleman will see, when the government appeals to the country, that his views on the situation are not generally accepted. We are quite ready to take up that challenge when the opportunity arrives, and see whether the people are in accord with the government or not. We have had over thirty by-elections since the change of government, and twenty-eight of them have been in support of the present administration.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Counting West Huron.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—With the aid of the machine.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not going to take up that outside issue. I do not approve of ballot stuffing. I deny that there was any general ballot stuffing. (Cries of oh, oh!) Hon. gentlemen may say "oh, oh." I hope no hon. gentleman will accuse me of approving of such a thing. I condemn it, and hope to see every one connected with it punished? Holmes had a majority of 140 or 150. I do not know that that has been pulled down. Those guilty of ballot stuffing should have been punished, and it was the duty of those who first knew of it to bring it before the courts and have the guilty parties punished, and this government would never have interfered. A hasty inquiry could not be satisfactory, conducted as it has been. It ought to have gone to the courts. It is much to be regretted that it did not go to the courts and let the guilty parties be punished. I think there are fair minded men enough in this chamber not to take advantage of the position in which the government find themselves at the present moment, with but two or three supporters of the government present, to reject a bill of this kind, which simply deals with an expenditure of $4,000. Any gentleman who reflects for a moment will admit that the amount has been earned by Sir Henri Joly and Mr. Paterson. It would be an extremely ungracious act on the part of this House to support the amendment made by the hon. gentleman from Richmond.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the measure to make the controllers ministers of the cabinet was introduced by the late Minister of Justice, Sir Oliver Mowat, in this House, I expressed the opinion then, and I think I used the words that it showed want of courage, or cowardice on the part of the government that they did not, in making these two gentlemen full ministers of the Crown, with all the responsibilities attaching to their position, at the same time increase their salaries and place them on an equality with their colleagues. I have not changed my mind on that subject since.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The hon. gentleman did not do that himself when he took Mr. Wood into the cabinet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to enter into a discussion on that point just now. I was not Premier long enough to carry out what I should have liked to do, had I been there longer. I am fully in accord with the principle of the bill, except the giving to it a retroactive effect, and I should much rather have seen a motion condemning that clause than the six months' hoist. I felt flattered by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, when he spoke of my labours in connection with the bringing into force the very intricate and somewhat complex National Policy tariff. If my labours in that respect met the approval of the people, I am amply rewarded for any labour which was imposed upon me. I know something of the duties and labours pertaining to the head of the Department of Customs. I know that they occupied my whole time, not only by day, but during many and many a night when organizing and bringing that system into operation. I can fully understand, too, the point made by the hon. Secretary of State when he referred to the labour attaching to the Minister of Customs in bringing into operation the system of preferential trade. I am not so sure that that has been successful, from the study that I have been able to give it, and from watching events as they occur, I have come to the conclusion that the carrying of it out is not only difficult, but results in continual fraud upon the revenue. The system itself is bad in the manner in which it is being carried out. However, I do not know that that is a point on which I should occupy the attention of this House for any length of time; but, a regulation which enables an exporter in England to send goods to this country that are principally the manufacture of a foreign state, is not that preference to England, which we were led to believe was to be the result of the policy. If Great Britain was to have the advantages which hon. gentlemen said were to accrue to her from the adoption of this policy, then it should be confined exclusively to the products of British labour and British manufacture. I know very well that I differ from a great many of those with whom I act on this question. I firmly believe that there is no minister who has more responsibility on his shoulders than the Minister of Customs, provided he attends to his business. I had the honour of occupying that position for a number of years. I was in the Militia Department for a year and a half; I was in the Department of Trade and Commerce for some little time, during which I flatter myself, I did something to increase the trade of this country; and I occupied the position of President of the Council for some time. I am not so much in accord with the Secretary of State when he speaks of the labours and duties pertaining to the office of Minister of Inland Revenue. The duty of the Minister of Inland Revenue is to supervise, through some excellent officers, half a dozen distilleries in the whole Dominion, and a number of breweries, together with the tobacco manufactures and weights and measures, and, with the officers that he has, the duties pertaining to his office are nothing in comparison with those of the Customs. If the system is to be adopted in this country that prevails in England, and which the Hon. Edward Blake, when leader of the Liberal party, advocated in the House of Commons, then they should begin to regulate the salaries in proportion to the responsibilities of the position which the minister holds and the duty pertaining to each office.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am in accord also with the Minister of Justice when he says that each portion of the Dominion should be represented in the cabinet. There is nothing to prevent every section of this Dominion being represented with thirteen members, and even less. I do not know any reason why you should have five heads of departments and two without portfolio from the province of Quebec, nor is it absolutely necessary that there should be four from the province of Ontario. I know that at the time of confederation Ontario was to have five, Quebec four and the maritime provinces two each, so as to have the different provinces represented in the manner in which I have indicated; and one of the reasons which induced me, while Premier, to bring the controllers into the cabinet was to carry out the very idea and principle which has been laid down by my hon. friend opposite. When they were appointed a salary of $5,000 was given to them, for the reason that they had only the departmental work of these two departments to supervise. The responsibility of framing the policy of the government in the cabinet, and work of the treasury board devolved upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce, under whom both of these controllers were placed, so that no matter what the policy was —no matter what had to be recommended to council—no matter what changes or regulations had to be made, they had to be supervised by the minister under whom the controllers were placed at the time, and he had to carry them through council. What might have followed had I remained at the head of the government any length of time, in reference to placing those two gentlemen upon the same footing as their colleagues, I on a former occasion indicated; but notwithstanding the fact that they were made members of the cabinet, with the same right to express their opinions and cast their votes upon any question of policy, they had no more additional responsibility resting upon their shoulders than the gentlemen who use members of the government without portfolio. That was the position that they held; but notwithstanding the fact that they sat at the council board, they voted just as one holding a portfolio and expressed their opinion in the same manner, though anything done in the way of inaugurating a policy was done by the head of the department, who, for the the time being, was Minister of Trade and Commerce. If the principle is sound that my hon. friend has laid down, that all sections of the country should be represented in the cabinet, why are seven given to one province, four to another, two to another and the great province of British Columbia, that is expanding more rapidly, becoming more important as a revenue paying province than any other part of the Dominion, comparatively, is not represented at all? These are the reasons why I have not changed my mind in reference to placing these two gentlemen in the same position as their colleagues. I have no objection to seeing the English system prevail here as far as it is practicable. I can also say from my own experience, and I am led to say this from what fell from the hon. gentleman for Richmond in reference to the Department of Justice: we know that when Sir John Thompson occupied that position his time was more than fully taken up. We know that when the question of appointing a Solicitor General was discussed in council, and in Parliament, the principle of appointing a Solicitor General was advocated because there was more work connected with the Department of Justice than any one man could do, consistent with his physical strength, and I have no reason to come to the conclusion that the work has fallen off in that respect. I know that in conversation with Sir Oliver Mowat, in reference to the labours which he had to perform, he said that he could scarcely keep up with his work, and the remark he made to me was that he made a mistake when he left the position he had occupied in Ontario, for the amount of labour that devolved upon him was of such a character that it was almost impossible for him to do it. I think I am safe in saying to-day, that if it were not for having an efficient and talented deputy head, with a good Solicitor General, it would be somewhat difficult to keep up with the work of that department. I am not going to find fault with the hon. gentleman from Richmond for what I consider a just castigation that he gave the hon. gentlemen opposite for their professions of economy in the past. However, I am not going to discuss that now. That can be done at a future time, when we have the Supply Bill before us, but I think they richly deserved all that he said of them; and if he had used even stronger language than he did, that portion of his speech at least would have met with my approval. I am not prepared to discuss this matter beyond what I have already said, with the exception of a few remarks on the subject of the controllers. Had the intention of Sir John Macdonald when the Act was placed upon the statute-book been carried out, I am of the opinion that it would have been successful. It is not necessary for me to say at present where the failure took place. The reason why the salary of a controller was made $2,000 less than the salary of a cabinet minister, was because he was relieved of all those social and other responsibilities which fall upon the shoulders and are incident to the position of a cabinet minister, and it was thought that by making these under-secretaries (although not so called) that it would be the building up and educating of a class of men who would be prepared, as they are in England, to take more responsible positions in future life, when their party would come into power. I believe the system was a good one, and if properly carried out would have succeeded. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the different sections of the Dominion should be represented in the cabinet, that could be done with a less number of cabinet ministers than we have to day, and just as effectively; more particularly if you had those under-secretaries and throw more responsibilities on these deputy heads. In England the ministers never think of, nor are they ever troubled with the details of the office as they are in this country. Take the Minister of Customs, if a seizure of ten cents worth of needles in any part of the Dominion is made, the man from whom they have been seized will not be satisfied until he has seen the minister himself, although a decision may have been given over and over again by the deputy minister or collector, and just so with every difficulty which arises in all parts of the Dominion in reference to values, and the rates on which the duties should be levied. For these reasons, I am sorry that I have to differ from my hon. friend from Richmond upon this question. This is a matter in which I have come to my conclusions from a good deal of experience. Whether $7,000 is too much for any one of the ministers is a question I am not going to discuss just now; but I do say—speaking for myself, and for nobody else—if a proposition came to increase the salary of the Premier of this country, although I am not in accord with the views of the Premier or the party he represents, I would cordially give it my support. Unless he is vastly different from the Premiers with whom I have come in contact in the past, and considering and knowing what it costs them to live, particularly if they perform the duties and functions pertaining to that office, I would not consider it unreasonable. I have been in politics all my life, ever since I was a boy. I have been in Parliament over thirty years. I have watched the cabinet ministers during the time I have been in office, and I would like to see a cabinet minister retire from office able to live without working for himself. I hesitate not to say, that no man who has been in public life for ten or fifteen years, even holding a cabinet position, can retire with a competency on his salary. He cannot do it out of the salary which he draws from the country. In addition to the labour which he performs, the expenditures connected with his position are such that it renders it impossible for him to retire with a competency unless he gets it in some other way than that which is legitimate, honest and proper. I was rather surprised at the Secretary of State in speaking of the function of the Minister of Customs, and also of the Minister of Inland Revenue that they collected nearly all the revenue. One who did not know to the contrary would be led to suppose that these gentlemen paid it all. While their labours, or the labours of one of them, at least, are great, I was under the impression that the importers and people generally paid the taxes and revenue, and that it did not come out of their pockets. That statement has no point whatever. As to the expansion of the country, I admit that it has expanded. Where has it expanded in some parts more than in others? It expanded in the Rossland district in British Columbia. The mining interests in the country are such as to cause an influx of tens of thousands of people. In the Atlin district, and other gold producing portions of that province, there has been another influx, and there has been great expenditure and wasteful expenditure, I do not hesitate to say, in connection with the management of the Yukon district. There may be some excuses for that on account of the difficulties of getting into the country, but that there has been the grossest mismanagement and as I believe, the grossest fraud perpetrated in that country, is beyond a doubt. This would have been proved to the satisfaction of the whole country had the government given a commission to investigate the charges which have been made against them. My hon. friend says, in reference to the West Huron election, that he would rather it had gone into the courts. I should like my hon. friend to tell me how he could have got this matter into the courts and expose what has been exposed before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the other House. Is there any one individual who could stand the expense of bringing these parties to justice, of bringing forty or fifty witnesses to swear that they cast their votes in a certain way, to show that the ballot boxes were stuffed, and that frauds had been committed? I can tell the hon. gentleman that I believe, notwithstanding his assertions, it has been the system in operation for years, and that if we could get at the bottom of the whole of these by-elections, or most of them, we would find that the same frauds and ballot stuffing and iniquities were perpetrated in all of them. In my own riding, North Hastings, at the last local election, the leader of the Reform party, in the city of Belleville said boldly: "If we do not carry this election with the arrangements which have been made, we never need try to carry it in the future." Ballots marked for the Grit candidates were picked up in the streets of the villages after the election. It is true they did not succeed, and for what reason? Because North Hastings is unpurchasable, and they could not seduce the large body of the electors in the country to forego their principles and their opinions. Frauds have been carried on in, I venture the assertion, at nearly the whole of these by-elections. In every place where there has been any investigation, it has been found that there has been an organized system of fraud in existence, and that the machine has been operating throughout the whole of the Dominion. I regret very much, for the sake of the political morality to which my hon. friend referred, the attempts on the part of the supporters of the government and members of the government themselves to frustrate that investigation before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I hesitate not to say it was not only a reflection upon the members who did it, but evidence of a desire to cover up frauds and iniquities for party purposes, instead of lending aid to bring them to justice. Compare that with the declaration made in this House by the late Premier, Sir John Abbott, and Sir John Thompson, in the Commons, when certain offences were alleged against members of the House of Commons, contractors and others. Sir John Abbott, said: "Fasten the crime upon them and I will see that they are punished." Sir John Thompson took precisely the same position, more rigidly than any other man in these particulars with whom I ever had anything to do, and the result was that the jail was the home of some of them, so soon as they were convicted. If both parties would put their shoulders to the wheel and crush out these iniquitous proceedings whenever they are found to exist, and punish severely those connected with them, the sooner this country will occupy a better position before the world, morally at least, than it occupies to-day. But when frauds are found to exist and one party tries to cover them up while the other party is trying to bring the guilty to justice, it must leave the impression upon the minds of the electors that the offenders will be held harmless by the party with which they are connected. I should be very sorry to see this bill thrown out. Instead of the six months' hoist, if we could amend the clause by making it take effect from the 1st July of the present year, and not have it made retroactive, very likely the Senate might accept it, and probably they may accept it as it is. I am not in a position to say what they may do. For my own part, I shall vote against the six months' hoist, and if the other motion came up and I thought there was a probability of carrying it, I would vote for such a motion as I have indicated in reference to making it take effect from the 1st July of this year. Unfortunately the Senate has no power in this respect, the bill being a money appropriation.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. Minister of Justice in moving the second reading of this bill, said that we should have a large number of ministers to represent the people of the different parts of the Dominion. A large number of ministers, it appears to me, will increase the expenditure, and I know the hon. gentleman said at one time the annual expenditure could be reduced from $38,000,000 to $34,000,000. We have an expenditure of $60,000,000 this year, and I question if it will stop there. There may be a further supplementary yet. But what I rose to say particularly was this: after all the pledges the government have made to the people on the stump and hustings in Ontario, in fact all over Canada, that they were going to reduce the expenditure, where do they stand to-day? I was more than surprised at the hon. Secretary of State when he told us that the hon. senator from Richmond never raised his voice against the extravagance of the former government, and insinuated that if there was another government in power to-day he would support it in extravagance. The hon. gentleman must have a short memory, or cannot read the Debates or he would know differently. I remember in this House when the hon. gentleman from Richmond moved against the adoption of the Short Line.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That was when the Conservative government was in power, and by his action on that occasion he helped to save three or four millions of the people's money. I would like to know where the hon. Secretary of State was on that occasion. Was he here to try and protect this country against that expenditure? He was absent. My hon. friend from Halifax, who protested strongly against expenditure, was here and voted for what would be a waste of money. The people have the assurance that the hon. gentleman protests against expenditure, but when a bill involving expenditure comes up the Secretary of State runs away. Yet he has the assurance to come here and state that the hon. gentleman from Richmond never raised his voice against expenditure. The hon. leader of the opposition is very magnanimous about this matter. He is perfectly willing that this money should be paid. He knows these ministers made a contract with the people of this country that they should not get any more salary until the government reduced the number of ministers to thirteen: he overlooks that, and he says he is willing to vote for the bill if they will strike out the retroactive clause. What does the controller, Mr. Clark Wallace, say? I was reading his speech made in the other House, and he claims that he was well paid. I presume the late controllers, Mr. J. F. Wood and Mr. Clarke Wallace, discharged the duties properly. One of them said he was well paid for his services: and now they ask us to break the law in order to raise the salaries of their successors, after promising us, that they would reduce the annual expenditure by four millions. When they come to face the electors again they will have a hard contract. The hon. Secretary of State says "Oh the people would approve of it." Do hon. gentleman fancy for a moment that the people will approve of their violation of their pledges? I am not niggardly at all in paying public men for their services, but my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is magnanimous with other people's money, he says he is willing to raise the salary of the Prime Minister. We have had Prime Ministers of this country who received the same salary that

Sir Wilfred Laurier is getting, and I do not know that he has shown any more ability then the former Prime Ministers. We are getting very lavish with the people's money. But I am not built that way. I desire that the ministers should be paid well, and I agree that the ministers should not all be paid the same salary. Take the Department of Trade and Commerce. What have they been doing for the last year? The officials have been going to England from year to year, wrestling the Petersen Company about bottle-necked ships. It puts me in mind of Sinbad the sailor. He could not see anything but bottled-neck ships. What have the ministers done for this country? After promising to reduce the expenditure, they have increased it one-third. We are asked now to make these ministers presents and to make the legislation retroactive. We might as well pass an Act and present a lot of money to all of them, and tax the poor settlers of the country in order to pay it, if you think this bill is right. The ministers are well paid now. They made a contract with the people of this country that they should not receive any more pay until they reduced the number of cabinet ministers. Have they carried out that agreement? In place of reducing the number they are increasing it. The hon. Minister of Justice says that they must have a large number of ministers so that they will come in contact with the people all over the country. When they come in contact with the people, according to my humble judgment, there will not be many of them left. We are told that Parliament is going to prorogue in a day or two. I may say that I am not willing that we should carry the estimates three times round the table and say amen. I am going to discuss these estimates, but I cannot move to reduce them. The constitution will not permit us to amend the Supply Bill. If we had control of this expenditure the money would be expended in the interests of the people of this country. My hon. friend spoke of the Welland Canal, and it was stated that it was like hanging up a red rag in front of a certain animal to speak of the Welland Canal in my presence. That is not so. This government is making the most woeful mistake that any government ever made, and I know it. They say they are going to make an expenditure on improvements. They are going to expend $5,500,000. Yes, to throw it in the lakes. They can do as much good by a proper expenditure of less than one-fifth of that amount. In the House of Commons they have placed a small amount of money in the estimates, $350,000, and when they expend that it might as well be thrown in the lake unless they spend more. Their excuse has always been "It made a blunder and we must continue to cover our blunder, we cannot stop." I remember as far back as twenty-four years ago, in 1875, when they were making up their minds that they were going to enlarge the canals and were going to have fourteen feet of water from Lake Erie to Montreal, I spoke to the Prime Minister of the day. I spoke no less than three times when that question was up, and what was done about it? I was passed off with a coarse joke, and from that day to this there has been mistake after mistake, and to-day the worst blunder of all, if they are going to spend $5,500,000—why it is madness. If they were going to destroy the interests of the people of this country and waste the money they could not take a better way to do it. I say that, as far as the expenditure on the canals of this country goes, if they do not provide a proper harbour on Lake Erie the money is all lost. Every man in this country took pride in the deepening of the canals in order to get cheap freight through the canals to the cities of Montreal and Quebec, and across to the mother country. They have had lots of time, and I gave them warning. If hon. gentleman will look at the Hansard of 1875, the first Hansard we ever had, they will see that I warned the government, and I have continued to do so from that day to this. The government have committed blunder after blunder, and they do not like to admit that they have done wrong, I will admit that the first mistake in making Port Colborne a harbour was excusable. It is amusing to read the speeches delivered in the House of Commons on this question. It would appear from them that Port Maitland was no harbour at all. One gentleman states how much grain has gone through there for fifty-four years. As I said the other day, for fifty-four years it has not cost the government of Canada one shilling to dredge Port Maitland harbour, and to-day it has seventeen feet of water, and if they would take a dredge paid per day and remove a bar which is there, they would have plenty of water, twenty-two feet, and they would have from twenty-five to thirty feet for three or four miles. Are they going to abandon that because it will cost money? Mr. Fielding, in discussing this question in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, said he did not know anything about it. He said it is eighteen miles from Port Colborne to Port Maitland, but you are shortening the distance by seven miles going that way. You are sixteen miles further up the lake, but will have nine or ten miles more canal. I do not wish to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter, but I am bound to say that I shall look after those estimates when they come in, and I shall have something to say about them. I do not like the idea of carrying them three times round the table and passing them. If we cannot amend them we should show the iniquity of them. A generation yet unborn will have to suffer for the action of this government. Here are gentlemen who have been stating that we should economize and should not spend more than we collect every year. What do we find now? I have figured out already that the expenditure will be about $61,000,000, and I expect there will be a million or two more. In addition to that, I see legislation is being enacted in the other House by which we are giving away privileges which we possess. We are going to give a guarantee on the bonds of the Quebec Harbor Commissioners. That means that the last mortgage comes first, and it is a just arrangement as far as the shipping goes. But in this case if we give that $250,000 there will be no more about it. I am bound to tell the government of the sins of some of them at least. I cannot get at them all. They are too many, I am bound to show them that they have violated every pledge they made to the people of this country, and though I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet I am satisfied that when they came before the electors the people will say "Get thee behind me, I have had you long enough, and I do not want you any longer. You are not fit to govern this country. You are an extravagant, spendthrift government. Get about your business. You preached that the former government was extravagant and corrupt and where do you stand now? You are much more extravagant than they were and ten times more corrupt." That will be the answer of the people of this country. I do not know that I should have spoken at all had it not been for the reflection cast on the hon. gentleman from Richmond that he had never raised his voice against an excessive expenditure. I proved to the House that he saved three or four millions to the people of this country, and where was my hon. friend the Secretary of State? He was absent. My hon. friend from Halifax supported it because it shortened the distance to his home about seventeen miles.

Hon. Mr. POWER—More than that.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman said 27 miles, but the best authority makes it 17 miles. The hon. gentleman from Halifax may approve of this expenditure. His actions show that he does, because he is supporting the government. He is very close to the government, and ought to be in the government, and if he was, I would expect something more than we are getting now. The hon. Minister of Justice tells the people of the country that the expenditure should be reduced by four millions, and now he comes and tells us it is an advantage to have a number of ministers coming in contact with the five millions of population. The tune is now changed. They say we have so much territory to look over now that we must have more ministers. I do not know that the ministers have been attending to the territories since they came into power. Probably they can explain what they have done. They may get a little when they are through with the Alaskan boundary, but of course it may not be worth much. They talk about proroguing to-morrow or next day, but when these extravagant expenditures come before us, I am not going to stand by and see them passed without debate. We can discuss them; we can show the people of this country what we would do if we could constitutionally do it. I shall undertake, as far as my humble ability will permit, to do all I can to expose to the people of the country where there is any wrongdoing.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—According to my judgment, I cannot see how the existing conditions and requirements of this country are so very materially altered since 1897, or the period when that Act was placed on our statute-book, as to call for an increase of expenditure. I wish to refer to an expression which fell from the Secretary of State, and which I do not think he really believes. He stated that had this bill originated with the Conservative party, he thought the hon. gentleman from Richmond would have supported it. I do not think the Secretary of State believes that. If he does, he stands pretty much alone in this chamber. I do not believe the majority of this House would take such a position as that, or believe in any such statement with regard to the hon. gentleman from Richmond. Then the hon. gentleman said that this matter is one involving the expenditure of only $4,000. That is true. It is a drop in the ocean of expenditure, but still it is there, and it is there in direct contravention of the Act of 1897, which these hon. gentlemen themselves placed on the statute-book. I am in accord with the remarks which fell from the hon. gentleman from Richmond, and I do not intend to trespass upon the time of the House any further in regard to this matter, considering the expressions of opinion given by those who have preceded me, and I shall vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER--I hope the House will pardon me if I say a few words before the question is put. I take the same view that has been expressed by the hon. leader of the opposition. I do not think that this is just the proper time to deal with the number of ministers. When the bill for increasing the number of ministers was before this House in 1897, that was, in my humble opinion, the time for striking. Now, the question before us is a totally different one. We have those two gentlemen who were formerly Controllers of Inland Revenue and Customs, now ministers. As the hon. leader of the opposition has stated, one of the reasons—I presume the principal reason—why the controllers were to receive lower salaries than the ministers was that they were not under the same obligations, in a social way, that the ministers were, and, further, that they had not to attend the meetings of the cabinet. Their time was not taken up in that way, and they had not to assume the responsibilities which ministers had. The position to-day is a different one altogether. These two gentlemen are, with the concurrence of this House, full fledged ministers, just like their twelve colleagues. We have the evidence of the hon. leader of the opposition to establish the fact, if we did not know it before, that no minister in the cabinet is worked harder than the hon. Minister of Customs, and now the question is whether those gentlemen, being ministers, sitting in council with twelve other ministers, shall continue to be paid $2,000 a year less than their colleagues, who have no greater responsibility, no harder work and no greater dignity than they have themselves. I could not, by voting against this bill, sanction that principle. It has been stated that a contract was made with the people of the country in the Act of 1897. If that ground were taken Parliament could not alter laws at all, particularly laws which affect expenditure and salaries. For instance, the Parliament in 1867 fixed the indemnity of members of both Houses at $600. They made a contract with the people of this country that they were to discharge their duties and receive no further indemnity than $600. The Act of 1873 which increased the indemnity to $1,000, was according to the hon. gentleman's contention a breach of faith. That is not the case. The representatives of the people who said in 1897 that they were not going to pay these ministers than more than $5,000, now say that they shall pay them the same as their colleagues. I was very much pleased to hear the hon. leader of the opposition repeat to-day what he had said in very emphatic terms in 1897. The hon. gentleman has also indicated to-day, as he did then, although not so distinctly, the policy which he had himself intended to pursue if he had remained in power. If hon. gentlemen will turn to page 609 of the Debates of 1897, they will find this language used by the leader of the opposition :

> I stated distinctly that I had informed the controllers, when they were made cabinet ministers, that if I continued in the position I then held I intended to take the first opportunity to readjust the different departments, as my hon. friend proposes to do now, and to abolish the controllers, because I do not think from my experience, the late system was practical. I wish it distinctly understood that I do not advocate the policy of inferior positions in the cabinet, either as to salary or as to the honour which attaches to the position. What I did find fault with was that they had not the courage, in making this change, to put the two controllers in as good a position in the cabinet in re salaries as the other ministers and for the reason that I know that the duties devolving upon the Minister of Customs, exceed, if he does his duty and examines every question that comes before him, those of any other minister in the cabinet.

Although I did not speak on that point I agreed with the hon. leader of the opposition then in thinking that when those two gentlemen, who had been controllers, were made ministers, their salaries should have been increased at the same time. There is some force in what was said by the hon. gentleman as to the retroactive character of the measure, but that is not brought before us by this amendment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I crave the indulgence of this House for a short time to explain the vote I intend to give on this question, and to meet an argument brought forward by the hon. leader of the opposition. I contend that the declaration made by the hon. gentleman should force him to vote in favour of the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Convince me of that, will you?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I shall try to convince the hon. gentleman, and if he is open to conviction he will vote for the amendment. I start from this point; the hon. leader of the opposition disapproved of the principle of retroactive legislation contained in the present bill, and declared that he would vote for an amendment which would strike out the clause creating such retroactive effect.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—We could not move it in this House. I have no hesitation in saying it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman is right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am taking the hon. gentleman's assertion. Supposing we had the power of proposing such an amendment the hon. leader of the opposition would then be in favour of striking out that clause. If that clause is stricken out, what remains? Nothing but the power just as it is on the statute-book in the legislation of 1897. The power the government ask for now they already have by the legislation of 1897. The only thing they want is to make that legislation of 1897 retroactive, so that they may pay those two ministers two years' salary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Take out the word 8 and substitute 9.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What does subsection 2 that is repealed, say? "The salary of each of the said ministers shall be $5,000 per annum and shall continue at that rate until a readjustment of the departments of government shall reduce the number of ministers holding departments to thirteen or less, whereupon and thereafter the salary of each of the said ministers shall be $7,000 per annum."

So we have on the statute-book a clause which is the law of the land now, providing that the salaries of those two ministers shall be $7,000 per annum when certain conditions have been complied with. What does the government want this Parliament to do now? To grant an increase of salary. There is no need of it. Why, the government have only to comply with the condition they have imposed. The condition is that the number of ministers shall be reduced to thirteen or less holding portfolios. The remedy is in the hands of the government. The government by this legislation of 1897 were given power to grant those ministers $7,000 each per annum, and they have that power still. The only thing they have to do is to carry out their pledges, and it is because they do not want to carry out their pledges that they bring in this bill. I repeat the only thing they want to do, in addition to the power they possess already is to secure a retroactive law. As the hon. leader of the opposition is opposed to the retroactive feature of this bill, he must be convinced now that, this feature being set aside, nothing remains in the bill but what we already have on the statute-book. We consequently do not need this bill and for that reason and because the only effect of the legislation is to pay the ministers for past services, the hon. leader of the opposition is bound to vote for the amendment if he wishes to be logical.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Q. E. D.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In that way he will put aside that principle embodied in the bill to-day. My argument cannot be refuted in the face of the declaration made by the hon. leader of the opposition. He said he would like to see an amendment striking out the retroactive power, and that he would be in favour of an increase of salary for the Prime Minister. If I were in the position of the hon. leader of the opposition I might say the same thing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because I might expect to be Prime Minister some day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Secretary of State, in his defence of the government, showed a good deal of vim. If I were in the position of the hon. Secretary of State I would, perhaps, show the same zeal. He does not ask why, but he understands why. A proposition was made in the House of Commons to increase the salary of the Minister of Customs, but at the expense of the Secretary of State, so that in defending the cause of his colleague, I think he is saving his own position. Perhaps I am mistaken, but it had that appearance to me. I notice that people generally who expect one day to enter a ministry never appear to combat a measure that might be beneficial to themselves one day or another.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—You are not one of them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not think so. I have not that expectation, so I am quite disinterested; and I think, in view of the remarks which I have just made in answer to the argument brought forward by the hon. leader of the opposition, there is only one thing he should do, and that is to support the amendment, and we will vote together throwing out the bill which contains the principle he has denounced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to explain the difference between us. Let me call the hon. gentleman's attention to the bill itself. It repeals subsection 2 of section 2 of chapter 18 of the statutes of 1897. That is the subsection to which my hon. friend has just referred. Now, supposing you could take the third clause in this bill and make it read: "The present Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue may be paid $7,000 from the 1st July, 1899——"

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I have no hesitation in saying we have not the power to do that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am quite in accord with my hon. friend in that respect, but that is not the point I am arguing. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona says I should support the amendment, because I intimated that if a proposition were made to increase the salaries commencing the present year, I would accept that rather than the six months' hoist, and vote for it. He argues that my position is illogical, because if my position is correct I should vote for the amendment because the only proposal in the bill is to give it a retroactive effect. My position is simply this: I would vote for the bill as it is, and if it were possible to make the salaries begin from the 1st of July, 1899, I should vote for it. There is nothing illogical in my position, nor would the change that my hon. friend suggests have the effect that he thinks it would. We would be repealing the second subsection of the clause and making the bill apply from the present time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not see the difference. Perhaps it is because the hon. gentleman does not see it himself quite clearly. He has given me an additional reason why he should support the amendment, when he says that the bill cannot be amended. If we cannot amend the bill he should vote against it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said distinctly I would vote against the hoist, and if it were possible to amend it in the direction I have indicated, I should vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I am pleased to see the hon. leader of the opposition take the position of a statesman, a man of feeling, and of justice. The hon. gentleman has been in Parliament so long that he can look back for thirty years, and knows that the Minister of Customs and Minister of Inland Revenue from the days of Howland to a recent date always had an equal salary with the other cabinet ministers. We had the Hon. Mr. Baby in this House when he was Minister of Inland Revenue, and he had $7,000. The Hon. Mr. Aikins had $7,000 a year. We had the Hon. Mr. Costigan, who filled that office for several years. He also received $7,000 a year, and I do not see, for the life of me, with the receipts from the Inland Revenue and Customs almost double what they were in those days, why the present ministers should not be in the same position as their predecessors. When the present leader of the opposition in this House was Minister of Customs he received the full salary. A change took place, and a new department was created, and we have as Minister of Trade and Commerce. What his duties are I do not know, but it strikes me they do not reduce the labour or duties of the gentlemen who occupy the positions of Minister of Customs and Minister of Inland Revenue. It has been said in this debate that formerly the Minister of Customs and Minister of Inland Revenue had more to do than they have at present. That I can safely deny, because we had the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Finance at all times arranged the tariff. The Minister of Finance to-day arranges the tariff, and therefore I cannot see the difference in the labours of the gentlemen now holding those offices from those who formerly held them. They have the same amount of labour and responsibility, and I think the country recognizes that the gentlemen who fill these offices today are well entitled to the full salary of cabinet ministers. In fact, I go further and say I do not think our cabinet ministers are well enough paid. With our Dominion increasing in population, our revenue increasing five or six millions of dollars in the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments, the increased labours of the ministers should be recognized by the country and an increase of salary should be given to every one of them. I do not think the people would say we were doing anything wrong with the public funds if we were to recommend a revision of the salaries of cabinet ministers, and that the Premier of Canada should receive a salary that would be ample for the dignified and responsible position which he holds. These are my views, and I am sorry to think that an able man, such as the hon. gentleman from Richmond should make such a disturbance and create an impression in this House, that instead of merely adding $2,000 per annum to the salary of two cabinet ministers, we were desirous of giving them $14,000, or $7,000 a piece. That is not the case. We are simply raising the salaries of two officers to the same level as those of their predecessors for the last 30 years. I do not see anything unreasonable about this ; on the contrary, I think, with the increased expense of living, if we expect men to perform the duties of those two responsible offices, in all fair play $7,000 a year is not too much.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It is true that a very small sum is involved in the bill before us ; but there is a principle involved in it also which will guide me in the course I propose to take with respect to this measure. It is true that the salaries of those officers, previous to the change of government, was $7,000. They would have remained at that figure, I presume, up to the present time, had the Conservative party not changed the law while they remained in power ; but when the Reform party came into power they made a further change in the law.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It was before. The late controller had $5,000 and the sessional allowance.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD(I.P.E.) —The Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue, as I understand it, under the Conservative government had $7,000 each.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The controller had not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (I.P.E.)—I am speaking of the ministers. That law was changed by the Act of 1897, as I understand it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it was changed before that.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It was changed under the Conservative government.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (I.P.E.)—Does not this bill refer to the Act of 1897 and is it not necessary by this bill to repeal that Act?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That Act gave them a seat at the council board only.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It appears to me it is a very small change that is being made by this bill. Each of those gentlemen received a salary of $5,000 and the sessional indemnity. Now, the session has been five months long. They are receiving their $1,000 for their attendance during the session and the other $5,000 they receive for their services during the recess. For the balance of the year, after the session, I think you will find those gentlemen taking as many holidays as any one in office. The view I take of this matter is that in the Reform party in the House of Commons there are a great many men who are competent to fill any of these offices perhaps just as well as the gentlemen who are occupying them, and I venture to say that if either of these offices were vacated, there are a dozen members of the party who would be ready and willing to take the position which these ministers now hold.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Call for tenders.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—As the bill now stands, it only adds two thousand dollars a year to the salary of each of these two officials. It is a very small matter after all, but in view of the agitation in the country, and the promises that were made throughout the country by members of the Liberal party respecting the great saving that they were bringing about by fixing these salaries at such a low rate, I do not think I should be justified in giving my support to this bill.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—There are two principles in this bill which will influence my vote on this occasion. It is an increase of salary to ministers, and the equality of ministers amongst themselves. I am decidedly in favour of increasing the salaries of ministers, not only of the Prime Minister but all the ministers. If you take into consideration their positions, their functions and the expenditures connected with such positions, we must come to the conclusion that they are underpaid. Now, as to the ministers themselves, it seems to me that for the present at least there should be no difference between them. Every member in the cabinet having the portfolic of a minister should be equal to his colleagues, irrespective of person. True, we may find gentlemen willing to accept the position with a lower salary, but this is a minor detail that we should not take into consideration. It is true that the government, in taking this action, are not consistent when we consider their previous declarations. Their action should go further, however, and there should be an increase also of the indemnity to members. It is not fair to keep members here for half a year with a paltry indemnity of a thousand dollars. They should increase the amount, but because they do not do so, I do not believe in doing injustice to the ministers. Because of their refusal to do justice to us we should not refuse to do justice to them—not to the gentlemen personally, but to the functions of those officials mentioned in this bill. I am opposed also to the retroactive clause. I am sorry to say that during this session it has been the habit of the government to introduce retroactive legislation, but that question is a minor detail which should not influence my vote on this measure. Therefore under the circumstances, I shall vote against the six months' hoist.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not going to discuss those matters which are irrelevant to the bill before the House. We have had a good deal of criticism of the conduct of the government on other measures than that now under consideration, and also on the subject of expenditure. It is said that our predecessors expended $38,000,000 a year, and we, who complained of their extravagance, are expending over $60,000,000. The latter statement I am prepared to show is inaccurate when it comes up properly, $30,000,000 represents the expenditure on revenue account, while the $60,000,000 represents the expenditure both on revenue and capital together and the additions made by the opposition. If you were to take some years of our predecessors in office when there was a very large expenditure connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway undertaking, we might show an expenditure of $70,000,000 a year at certain periods of time, charging sums borrowed against the government as so much expenditure for the year as is being done now. I am not going into the discussion of these matters at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will have that when the Supply Bill comes up.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There will be a more appropriate period for that discussion. Neither am I going into a discussion of frauds at elections and questions of that sort. I will be prepared to discuss that also at a proper time, but the bill now before the House is a bill to increase the salaries of two ministers of the Crown from $5,000 to $7,000, and put them in this regard on a footing of equality with their colleagues, which I think is a reasonable proposition. The principle I laid down in moving the second reading of this bill was acquiesced in by the hon. leader of the opposition. We do not differ as to the principle of parliamentary government which applies to the composition of the cabinet. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, who spoke a moment ago, referred to the number of competent men in Parliament who would be prepared to take the office of minister of the Crown at a very much less figure. One of the methods I have heard suggested of carrying on the government is to put up the public offices to tender, and to accept the tender of the lowest bidder, and in that way there is no doubt you would get men who would serve for a very much less figure than we pay at the present time, but you must consider other things than who will take the office for the least sum. I remember one gentleman suggesting to me very seriously that the whole business of government should be let out by tender and security given, and the man agreeing to do the work for the least money should be employed.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—They might not carry out the agreement.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend says that they might not carry out the agreement. In this there is no particular agreement. There is an Act of Parliament and that stands on the same footing as any other Act of Parliament. It is capable of being amended if experience shows that any wrong or injustice is being done. I have no doubt whatever that the House will not deal unfairly with those ministers of the Crown as the hon. gentleman from Manitoba has said simply because there may be other matters that ought to have been considered that have been left undealt with. I think that is a sound proposition, and I do not know that I differ from him either with regard to the one or the other.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before this motion is submitted I should like to make one or two observations in regard to the merits or demerits of the bill now before us for consideration. It strikes me that it is an inopportune time for the government at this particular juncture to bring in a bill of this particular nature, particularly in view of the fact that considerable attention has recently been directed to the necessity for a readjustment of salaries not only of Ministers but of judges and of other officials. I might say, and I think I can say with confidence, that the country has been looking with no small degree of interest to the government for some time past to bring in a broad and generous measure in regard to the re-casting of all official salaries, and particularly those salaries which relate to the higher officers of the state, and more particularly the judges upon the bench. It seems to me that the subject of this bill could have been made an initial step with every justification for the introduction of a measure of that character. Considerable fault may be found with the late government on their not entering on a sufficiently bold policy in regard to a question which admitedly is one which should for some years past have received public attention, and which I am satisfied would have received the best support of the country. This government is to be marked to a certain extent upon boldness, at any rate, in the matter of expenditure and no government could more fitly have included within that bold policy of expenditure such a policy as that which I have indicated in regard to an increase particularly of judicial salaries and salaries of ministers not excluding, I might say at the same time, the treatment of the indemnity of members which for some years past I might say has been an equally important subject. Let us for the moment consider the Act that during the present session and many preceding sessions members of Parliament, necessarily of both branches of Parliament have been giving their undivided attention for nearly half a year to the business of Parliament and in consideration of that service they have received at the hands of a generous country, so to speak, $1,000, a paltry amount, which would not more than pay the expenses incident to the members being here, and not taking into consideration at all the loss which they have sustained by reason of their absence from their business in other departments of life. It may seem selfish for a member to address himself to this phase of the question, but yet one cannot fail to say that if there is anything which members have been particularly modest in and yet have been faulty in it is in reference to their own position in regard to the remuneration which they are to receive for paying attention to the public business of the country. It may be very well said, and is very frequently said when this subject is talked of, that members entering the committee or members entering this chamber know very well the amount of indemnity which they are to receive. They are not compelled to come into either chamber, and therefore not compelled to accept the amount on the statue-book. The same argument may well apply to the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Inland Revenue. In reference to their acceptance of a portfolio under the law as it at present stands on the statute-book. Therefore the argument applicable to one would be equally strong in the other case. I say members who have to deal with their own remuneration need not at all have any hesitation in expressing themselves freely upon this point, because I am satisfied that if there is anything which the electors of this country will support a government in, no matter what government it may be, it will be in giving a proper remuneration not only to members of Parliament, not only to ministers of the Crown, but to the other officials who are called upon to perform the more important duties for the state and country. Therefore I say in view of this fact, to my mind it is an inopportune time in which the government should have selected two officials and should have treated them in the way indicated in the bill, and that they should have entirely overlooked the demands which have been made through public opinion and otherwise for a mature consideration of those more important subjects to which I have alluded. It seems to me, taking another view of the case, that this bill as it is at present constructed, is an entire abandonment of the policy embodied in the Act which we now proposed to repeal. In 1897 the present government very laudably and consistently, and I think with due regard to the public interest and with due regard to the public expenditure, introduced in the Act of 1897 a policy which certainly would have received and which did receive the approval of the country, namely, a policy which impliedly announced at any rate that the number of Canadian ministers would be reduced, and in view of that proposed reduction to thirteen portfolios or less, the Ministers of Inland Revenue and Customs would be entitled to receive $7,000 a year. This bill before us calls for an absolute repeal of that statement, which leaves it free, in fact, for the government of the day not only to confine themselves to the number of portfolios which at present obtains but would leave them at liberty, so far as any record is concerned, to ask for additional portfolios. The late government took a proper step, it seems to me, when they placed upon the statute-book provision for the appointment of controllors. The intention then was, as was the intention of the present government in 1897, that there should be a reduction of portfolios. When we take into consideration the limited number of cabinet ministers in England the still more limited number in the cabinet in the United States.——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are sixty ministers in England.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not members of the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, but members of the administration.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot state the number now, but my own opinion is that the cabinet in England is no larger than the cabinet in Canada.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It varies from thirteen to fifteen.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the under secretaries in England correspond to some extent to our deputy ministers.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I know they are vested with much broader power. They have much the power held by a minister. Yet at the same time the under-secretary of state performs to a very large extent the same duties as a deputy minister would perform in this country. It was intended at the time that the legislation regarding controllers was placed upon the statute-books that there should be a reduction of portfolios, and the portfolio of Inland Revenue and the portfolio of Customs were practically wiped out. We afterwards find the introduction of the portfolio of Trade and Commerce. The gentlemen who composed the present government were very strong in their denunciation of the policy then adopted in the introduction of that additional portfolio of Trade and Commerce. Why, I ask, do not the members of the present government decide upon abandoning the portfolio of Trade and Commerce as it obtains to-day? The hon. gentlemen denounced it in times past. I think it is conceded to-day that the portfolio of Trade and Commerce is very largely superfluous, that really the work of that department is done by the Minister of Inland Revenue and by the Minister of Customs, and if hon. gentlemen were sincere in wishing to retrench in reference to carrying into effect the promises which they have made, and to act logically with the denunciations which they heaped upon the late government, they would wipe out the portfolio of Trade and Commerce and restore the portfolios of Inland Revenue and Customs as they obtained under the late government, or previous to the amendments in the Act. Under these circumstances I therefore think that this House will be justified in voting for the resolution of my hon. friend from Richmond. I think it will be conceded, and it need not be discussed, that, much as my hon. friend from Hastings might desire it, the bill cannot be amended. I think it is quite clear, it being a money bill, that we have either to accept the bill in its entirety or reject it. These are the views which I hold upon this matter. I might say, before resuming my seat, that I appreciate the important services rendered by the two ministers referred to. I fancy the services rendered by those hon. gentlemen are quite as onerous as those rendered by other members of the cabinet who are receiving $7,000 a year; yet, in view of the fact that the government of the day have committed themselves to the policy which we find enunciated in chapter eighteen of the statutes of 1897, in view of the professions which they have made upon this subject, and in view of the fact that the country demands from them the treatment of this subject in its broader state, as I have indicated, namely, a recasting of salaries of ministers and judges and others, I must say my present opinion is entirely adverse to the bill.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. minister in introducing this bill should have come before us in a penitential mood. He should have been clothed in sackcloth and ashes, great briny tears should appear on his cheeks and he should have addressed the House in the following manner: Hon. gentlemen, I regret to say it becomes my painful duty to confess before this House that my colleagues and myself in the government of this country have been guilty of a great many crimes and offences against the people; that we have made a vast number of promises that we have never been able to fulfil—which, indeed, we scarcely ever had any intention to fulfil—and we are obliged to come before you with this bill as an evidence of our guilt in this respect. We solemnly promised the people of this country that we were going to cut down expenditure generally, and were going to reduce the number of cabinet ministers, but instead of doing that, we have filled all the positions at the highest salaries that had obtained under our predecessors, and we have continued that system up to the present moment. After having been a year in the government, and after having discovered all that was to be found out in the working of the government of this country, we came down to the House and made new protestations and new promises with regard to this matter of cabinet positions. We said to the Senate and House of Commons we will undertake to fulfil those promises about reducing the number of ministers, but we will take a little further time to do it, and we now offer to give to you two of our number as hostages for the faithful performance of the promises we have made and have neglected up to the present time to fulfil and which we now solemnly renew. On submitting this question to the House two years ago we did not indicate how this was to be brought about, whether it was to be by a political decapitation of one of our number, but we renewed the solemn assurance that there was to be this reduction in the number of cabinet ministers, and when that reduction was made you agreed that these two gentlemen, in whose flesh the thorn was placed, so far as their salaries were concerned, would receive the full amount of salary given to their other colleagues. We now confess with shame and confusion of face that we have again deceived you, and we implore you to remove the thorn from the flesh of Sir Henry Joly and Mr. Paterson and relieve us from the consequences of the deception we practised. That is the kind of speech my hon. friend should have made on the present occasion. I take the Commons Debates for 1897, page 4123, and I find it recorded that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who had charge of the bill in the House of Commons made these remarks:

> The prevailing impression, I think, on both sides of the House was that a determined effort should be made to reduce the number of ministers, and that matter has been under the consideration of the government, and is now engaging their very earnest consideration. The hon. gentleman sees that this bill now introduced is merely to make the present controllers in a point of fact ministers, and to entitle them to seats on the cabinet board; and the express provision is made on the face of the bill—not the mere statement that the government are considering it—but that when the departments are reduced to thirteen, and not until then, their salaries should be the same as other cabinet ministers. But in the meantime they do not receive any increase of salary whatever.

That paragraph was the solemn promise made in 1897 when this Act, to which the hon. member from Richmond has referred, was placed on the statute-book providing that when the number of ministers was reduced to thirteen, or less, then these two ministers were to be placed in the same position as the rest with regard to salary. Now, the government come before us and ask us not merely to relieve them of their pledge to the country, but from the pledge to their colleagues. This thorn in the flesh of their colleagues, two estimable gentlemen, I admit, is going to be removed at the expense of the country instead of being removed at the expense of one of themselves, whether it was the hon. Minister of Justice or of Trade and Commerce, or my genial friend the Secretary of State was going to be decapitated I do not know, but instead of that they ask the country to make up this $7,000 and let them out of all this trouble. Had my hon. friend made this explanation to the Senate, and with some evidence of contrition, and in a purely penitential manner, we would have been inclined to deal leniently with this bill. To my mind the government are in a thoroughly indefensible position with regard to this measure. Had this disability fallen upon another gentleman in the cabinet, instead of the two men who have suffered from it, I refer to the Postmaster General, there are very few in this House, or out of it, who would have been very sorry for him, because that gentleman practiced demagogery to a greater extent than perhaps any other member of the government when in opposition. So far as this government is concerned, they are in a perfectly indefensible position in asking that this bill should be placed on the statute-book under the present circumstances. As far as they are concerned, they have no plea before Parliament, and this country, except one, of complete failure to perform their promises with regard to this subject I am not one of those who think that the number of cabinet ministers should not be reduced. I agree with the hon. Minister of Justice and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that Canada is a country with many diversified interests, and of large extent, and at all events, as long as the present method of selecting ministers is continued, that it is desirable that ministers should be selected from various parts of the country in order to procure a better representation of the different sectional interests of Canada than could be if they were otherwise selected. There is no question, that the ideal system for the selection of cabinet ministers would be to take the best men wherever they are found. There is no question that would be the highest ground to take in the selection of a cabinet, and that the best and highest form of government would be obtained under such circumstances. However, we would have not come to that point in Canada, and perhaps it is not very easy to come to it considering the extent of the country and the diversified nature of our resources. I do not know that it is altogether within the region of practical politics to discuss it at all. But while sectionalism is bad in some respects, it brings with it some conpensating advantages, and it is one of these things we will have to bear with at least for a time. When the question of the salaries of two cabinet ministers comes up, it affords those who are not in that position, whether a happy or an unhappy one I am not going to say, an opportunity of settling some little accounts with hon. gentlemen in the government and discussing some questions that may properly be discussed in connection with this matter of salaries; and I have this general complaint to make against the cabinet ministers, that when the House rises in the spring, or early summer, they spend the summer in vacations, cruizing over the world and leaving the work of preparing for the next sitting of Parliament until the beginning of winter, and the members of Parliament have to put up with the great disadvantage of summer sessions, such as this is, on account of the neglect of ministers to attend to their duty in the way of preparing for Parliament in the proper season. When the public accounts are closed, on the 30th June each year, there is ample time to prepare for the meeting of Parliament in the earlier part of the year, and I think it is too bad that private members of Parliament should be put to the serious inconvenience that we are so often put to, of having to attend in Ottawa away into midsummer, as we are doing now, merely because cabinet ministers neglect their duties and do not prepare the work for the session at the proper time, nor even have it ready when Parliament is called together. Some references have been made to the onerous nature of the work of some departments as compared with others, and the inference has been drawn that on that account a difference might fairly be made between the salaries of the different ministers. As far as the two departments more particularly under consideration are concerned, or at least one of them, it cannot fairly be said that it is less onerous and requires less work than any other department. That must be frankly admitted at the outset, and I do not know, comparing them one with the other, that the two are less onerous than the average of those that are left. Reference has been made to the department of the Secretary of State as being an office that is not a very heavy one and does not require as much personal attention as many of the others. As far as that office is concerned, as long as it is held by my hon. friend, the present Secretary of State, I feel that he is entitled to a larger salary than any of his colleagues, because when Parliament rises the ministers all fly away to the ends of the earth, and he is left here to overlook all the departments, and has to do some work for nearly all of them when the other ministers are away on pleasure trips. Not only is that so, but as we all concede that my hon. friend is most efficient and painstaking and courteous in his treatment of members of this House, and I for one would be very sorry to see any such disability placed upon him. It may be that the office is not as onerous as some of the other offices, but while it is held by a gentleman who is required at some periods of the year to perform the work of his colleagues, I think we might fairly enough allow his department to escape criticism in this respect. To my mind the great objection to the bill before us is that gentlemen in the government were pledged against its principle, and they have no right to submit or vote for such a bill. They pledged themselves to a different course altogether, and that is a very strong reason why hon. gentlemen like myself should not support the bill on the present occasion. Then there is this retroactive provision in it, that these gentlemen should be paid one year's salary from July, 1898. When they took these salaries these ministers knew what they were to receive. There is no question about that. They continued in the discharge of their duty to the present time, and there is no principle of justice upon which Parliament should be asked to vote this sum which they think is in arrear to them, but which is not really in arrear, because the moment Parliament votes money for this purpose, it will be argued why should we stop at the 1st of July, 1898? Why should we not go back and pay them from the time they entered office? And why should we not go back still further and pay their predecessors who performed the duties under precisely the same circumstances? Why should exception be made in favour of these gentlemen and an invidious distinction made against the gentlemen who have held office before them? Hon. gentlemen will agree with me that there would be no justice in doing anything of the kind, and that if we admitted this principle of paying a salary for a year past, we would then have to go further back and pay other gentlemen who have equally good claims to this payment of a retroactive character. While touching upon that question I might refer to what has been proposed in another place, recommending the payment of the indemnity for the present year to a gentleman of this House who has been indisposed and who is ill at home and not able to attend here. I refer to the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Reesor). I have no particular fault to find with that, but I do object to different treatment being meted out to different men. Another hon. member of this House, the hon. gentleman from Delanaudière (Mr. Bellerose), has been very seriously ill, and consequently has been absent a good part of this session, and I see no reason why he should not be treated in the same manner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And when that is done, it will raise the question why was not the late Mr. Sutherland also paid when he was not able to come here for two years? Once we depart from a sound principle in anything, we meet all kinds of difficulty and at once begin to extend a different kind of treatment to different individuals whose circumstances may be exactly the same. For the reasons which I have given, I am not unfavourable to keeping a large number of cabinet positions as long as members of the cabinet are selected as they have been ever since Canada has become a confederation, on the ground of their representing certain provinces. While that principle is observed it is desirable, and I do not know that the expenditure is at all a waste of money. The full number of departments should be maintained in order to admit of the gentleman, having charge of forming a ministry, bringing representatives to his government from all the different parts of Canada, and I do think at the present moment a great injustice is done to the important province of British Columbia in the fact that it has not a representative in the cabinet. I have no hesitation in saying that that is my opinion. I am not going to say that $7,000 a year is too large a salary for cabinet ministers, and I am not going to say that it would not be right in the abstract that these two ministers should be treated the same as their colleagues are treated, and receive the same salaries as they are receiving, but the government comes to us with this proposition coupled with an obnoxious condition of a retroactive payment, and they come to us with a complete back down as to their policy before the country with regard to reducing the number of cabinet ministers. For these reasons I feel it my duty to vote for the motion of my hon. friend from Richmond.

The House divided on the amendment which was lost on the following division :—

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (183) "An Act to authorize the construction of a branch railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour as a public work."—(Mr. Scott).

Bill (85) "An Act further to amend the Railway Act."—(Mr. Mills.)

SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (189) "An Act respecting securities for Seed Grain Indebtedness."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. gentleman tell us why this principle has been adopted as far as these securities are concerned? This is an endorsation by certain parties to secure the government loss for advances made on grain, and the proposition, if I understand the bill, is to relieve the sureties. Does it relieve also the parties who receive the grain?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. As I understand, it is considered that the land should be sufficient security, and there is no reason for keeping up the security against the bondsman. The security of the man and the land itself is sufficient security.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON TERRITORY BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS ADOPTED.

A Message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill (U) "An Act to amend the Yukon Territory Act," with certain amendments.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved concurrence in the amendments.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED asked if any amendment had been made relative to the sale of liquors in the Yukon Territory.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, nothing except the prohibition with regard to the manufacturing of liquor.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the minister whether the prohibition of the manufacture of liquors in the Yukon Territory is in order to protect the distillers in other parts of the country?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend knows right well that we do not apply the principle of protection as between manufacturers within the country—at least I am not aware of its having been done. This prohibition of manufacture in that country is a prohibition that would apply to outsiders equally with those manufacturing within the country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think the object is to give consumers a better article.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If we do not succeed in prohibiting, we may get a much worse article brought across the border; but the government are in hopes they will be able to maintain order and sobriety amongst the population of that country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The answer is quite satisfactory. I admit the principle of protection was not carried to that extent in the past. It was left to a free trade government to introduce the principle of protecting an industry in one part of the country against the establishing of a similar industry in another part of the country. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on having carried the principle further than I ever thought of carrying it.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were concurred in.

INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (156) "An Act to amend the General Inspection Act." He said:—As hon. gentlemen are aware, for some time past a considerable controversy has been going on between the growers and dealers in wheat in the western country, and the brokers and dealers in wheat in the east. The people of Manitoba have complained that their wheat was used rather to improve the quality of inferior grades of wheat, and that it was not fair to the reputation of Manitoba wheat, I think the contention was a very strong one, because it has been found by those who have given it practical attention that the wheat grown in Manitoba and the North-west is a superior grain and that it would be only fair that the wheat should have an opportunity of going abroad and earning a reputation for the country. I have seen in papers, particularly Glasgow and Edinboro' papers, where Manitoba wheat has gone in its pure condition, unmixed with any other grain, that the bakers found there was more glutton in it than in other wheat. The opposition to this bill has been by persons who desire to mix and improve a quality of inferior grain. After very many meetings between several boards of trade, a standard was agreed upon and it was agreed that certain conditions should attach to wheat being exported from Manitoba, and this bill is the result. So far as classifications goes, the only change, I understand, is in regard to No. 1 Manitoba hard, as it is called, which provides that the larger proportion of hard fife wheat should be necessary in order to grade No. 1 Manitoba hard. The proportion is increased from sixty-six and one-third to seventy-five per cent. The clauses in the bill provide that there shall be general inspectors, one at Winnipeg and one at some eastern point, who will have the general charge of the deportation of the wheat from Manitoba. The bill provides that the wheat shall be as described in the bill of lading which shall accompany the wheat, and prohibits mixing in any of the elevators that are recognized as public elevators. I shall be glad to explain the details when the House goes into committee upon the bill. The changes have been made in the House of Commons. The first change is the appointment of two chief inspectors, not disturbing the sub-inspectors, one at Winnipeg and the other at some point in the east. The principal changes are in the schedule of the Act, where a number of details are entered which can be more conveniently explained when the House is in committee. They are only in detail carrying out the principles to which I have adverted, that is the effort to preserve the identity of the wheat as it leaves Manitoba and the North-west, and prevent it from being mixed in the elevators at Fort William and the other points to which it is consigned. It provides further, and the Canadian Pacific Railway have agreed to it, that the charges for inspection shall be a charge which will be paid by the railway companies and transportation companies that take up the wheat.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How have these changes been brought about? Have the producers and dealers in wheat in the North-west been consulted, and consulted in a representative way so that great care has been taken in the preparation of this bill to carry out the wishes of these people?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am advised that the bill has been the result of representations made by the grain growers themselves and inspectors and various Boards of Trade, I presume in Winnipeg and Montreal. It has been generally agreed to, except by those parties who would be opposed to the principle—the parties who have in the past been interested in increasing the standard of lower grades of wheat by getting Manitoba hard and mixing. They are the only parties, I am advised, who have been opposing the bill. Probably the hon. gentleman from Wolseley would know more about the feelings of the wheat growers than I would.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have called upon the Minister of Inland Revenue and Mr. Miall and have told them what I know is the fact, because I attended one of the meetings, that this bill is framed entirely at the instance of traders and dealers in grain, and no farmer was represented at the different meetings. I have no fault to find with this bill as far as it goes. There are one or two amendments which I am sure the hon. gentleman will not object to when we go into committee. The bill is all right. The principal provision in the measure, apart from what the hon. gentleman has explained, is that all the grain in the North-west is to be inspected at Winnipeg. No farmer has had anything to do with this bill. It is a bill got up entirely in the interest of millers and men speculating in grain. There is a clause which I want to add to protect the farmer. This bill, as it stands, applies to the wheat after it leaves the farmers hands altogether, except it be a large farmer who can ship a train load of wheat and get it inspected in Winnipeg instead of Fort William. Last year I shipped my own wheat to Fort William. It had to go there to be inspected. It took three weeks to get there and be inspected, and I could not sell the wheat until I got my certificate of the inspection. I cannot sell my wheat except by sample. I have to sell the grade by the certificate of the inspector. Now, the Winnipeg dealers and traders in wheat claim that they want the wheat to be graded in Winnipeg, and they can get returns for it at once. That is the great feature of this bill. I am quite satisfied with the bill but, as I have said, I want one clause added of which I have given notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope I was right in saying the bill was more favourable to the farmer inasmuch as it allows the inspection nearer home.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I see this bill applies with regard to oats:

No. 1 oats shall be sound, plump, clean and free from other grain.

No. 2 oats shall be sound, reasonably clean, and reasonably free from other grain.

No. 3 oats shall be sound but not clean enough to be graded as No. 2.

Rejected oats shall include such as are damp, unsound, dirty, or from any other cause unfit to be graded as No. 3—but you do not give the weight of the grain at all. We can deal with that in committee. Here you are grading three classes of grain. They do not weigh the same.

Hon. r. SCOTT—I presume there must be some other law to regulate it. This is taken from the law as it now stands. In making the change with regard to wheat, they include the other kinds of grain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a law on the statute-book declaring what the weight of oats shall be. If there are no changes made in the weight, as there are in reference to wheat, there is no necessity to include it in this bill. They have declared in this bill what a bushel of wheat shall be, and how much it shall weigh. That changes the law as it stands on the statute-book to-day. In the matter of oats that is not necessary and they do not change it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It describes the different grades of oats, but it does not give the weight of each grade. A bushel of oats is 34 lbs., and when you grade oats you should say how much they ought to weigh.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The object of the bill is to grade the oats so that they may be sold according to quality. In our province oats is sold entirely by weight, and I think it is a very desirable thing to have the grain inspected and classified in this way. It is very much better for the farmers that there should be some such regulations as these and that they should have some inducement to clean their oats and have them come up to a good high standard, because if they clean their grain properly and send it to market in good order, it will bring a better price. The object of the bill, as I understand it, from glancing hurriedly through it, is that there should be an inspection of all grains throughout the Dominion. The law does not seem to be confined to any part of Canada, and I presume from this that it is the intention of the government to appoint inspectors of grain in the different provinces and that not only wheat, barley, pease and oats and Indian corn shall be inspected but also hay and rye. The bill will have a good effect in this way: it will induce people to send their grain to market in good shape.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause relates to the appointment of inspectors. It is proposed to have one inspector for Manitoba and the North-west, and one for the other parts of Canada. The only change is adding the letter "s" to the word inspector.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What is the difference in regard to hay? I cannot see any.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there is any. They thought the simpler way would be to insert a new classification so as to have the law all together.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—It just repeals the old clause and re-enacts it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It makes different grades in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What is the difference?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Seventy-five per cent of hard red fife wheat instead of sixty-six and one-third per cent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is really going back to the provisions of the Revised Statutes. By the previous statute you were not allowed to mix anything.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This extra hard should weigh sixty-two pounds to the bushel. That is the quality of it, but sixty pounds would be a bushel.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 5.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Do they raise much winter wheat in Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—None at all.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Then this applies to Ontario?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—There is very little wheat in Ontario which weighs sixty-two pounds. It is considered that sixty pounds is fair weight for red wheat or white wheat either.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman will see that this applies to wheat grown in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. On page 2, at line 23 it states:

> All wheat in the preceding six grades shall consist wholly of wheat grown in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, or in Ontario west of Lake Superior.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The classification of winter wheat will be found further on in the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it weighs 62 lbs. to the bushel it is graded as extra white winter wheat, and it would be worth more, but the standard weight is 60 lbs.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understand that down to line 29 in section 4 it refers to Manitoba and North-western wheat, and after that all through the bill we are dealing with the produce of Canada generally.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If it is to apply to Ontario, we do not raise any such wheat. You might get 62 lbs. in one case, but it would be an exceptional case. Red wheat generally weighs more than white wheat. I do not think we should have it classed so that we cannot have number one.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will look at the next paragraph he will see what applies to Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM — Why does clause 4 apply to Manitoba when they do not raise that kind of wheat?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The provision in this clause reads as follows :—

All wheat in the preceding six grades shall consist wholly of wheat grown in Manitoba, the North-west Territories, or in Ontario west of Lake Superior.
No. 1 spring wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than sixty pounds to the bushel.
No. 2 spring wheat shall be sound and reasonably clean, weighing not less than fifty-eight pounds to the bushel.

The legal bushel is 60 lbs., but if a bushel by measure weighs 62 lbs. it falls into the first class.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Dominion Weights and Measures Act chap. 104 of the Revised Statutes, 49 Victoria, declares what the weight of oats is. It must be 34 lbs. That Act has not been repealed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no change in the weight.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I think we should give the farmers some encouragement to clean up their oats before going to market, and we should make some difference in the weight of number one oats and number two oats and number three oats.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The difference in the oats is in the cleaning.

No. 1 oats shall be sold plump, clean and free from other grain.
No. 2 oats shall be sound, reasonably clean and reasonably free from other grain.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—At the same time it is 34 pounds. One must be clean and the other must be reasonably clean.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But all oats require to be 34 pounds to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—They might be buying chaff instead of grain.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would not be reasonably clean.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If it took a bushel and a half to weigh 34 pounds the purchaser would only pay for a bushel. We should encourage the people to sow good oats and clean them properly and encourage them to get them into market. In my opinion there should be a weight set for a bushel of oats.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—How much would number one weigh?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Thirty-four pounds.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—And No. 2.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Thirty-two pounds, and No. 3 thirty pounds. In my part of the country I raise a good many oats and buy and sell a good many oats, and also buy and sell wheat. I raise everything of that kind, and I want to know what we are doing. I do not want an inspector to condemn the oats without good reason.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What do you suggest?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I think we should say that No. 1 should weigh thirty-four pounds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They all weigh that.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—But No. 2 cannot weigh that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But it must.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—But when you speak of a bushel by measure, No. 1 should weigh thirty-four pounds, and No. 2 thirty-two pounds, and No. 3 thirty pounds. That would be better, and I think it is common sense. It would be an encouragement to people in the country to clean their grain in a proper manner. If we are going to have an inspector to inspect a farmer's load of oats as it comes in to pass an inspection, and say whether it is No. 1 or No. 2, it will make no difference as long as it gives the weight whether it is chaff or oats.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Are you satisfied with the law as it is?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I am not. I want a weight put on the oats, to show the difference between No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3. It is easy enough to say that No. 1 shall weigh thirty-four pounds, No. 2 thirty-two pounds, and No. 3 thirty pounds.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It might be very easy to do that ; still it is a very important matter, and I suppose, as this bill represents the opinions of a number of other people, it might be wise not to proceed further with the bill, but to allow the hon. gentleman from Monck to have an interview with the minister and the bill could be referred to the committee again to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will let the clause relating to oats stand.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman from Monck. Oats are generally bought at a certain price per bushel. The hon. gentleman says that No. 1 oats should be thirty-four pounds, No. 2, thirty-two pounds, and No. 3, thirty pounds. Would the purchaser of oats, according to that, give 34 cents for a bushel of oats weighing thirty pounds? If the inferior grain is to bring the same price as the better oats, it should have more weight. But it is not according to the quantity per bushel that the price is paid, but according to the weight of the article and the quality. For a bushel of No. 1 oats, say a man receives thirty-four cents, and for a bushel of No. 2 oats the same weight, but an inferior quality, thirty two cents, and for No. 3, thirty cents. It is in the price, not the weight.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A bushel of good oats by measurement will weigh a good deal more than a bushel of inferior oats, and as the grading is according to the quality, and that quality is indicated by the weight, it is important, perhaps, to grade oats, and oats will weigh sometimes thirty-eight pounds to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Yes, and forty-two pounds to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And so it is perhaps as well to let the oats remain untouched to-night, and go on with the remainder of the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why is there any distinctiom made between rye and barley? The bill provides that No. 1 barley shall be plump, bright, sound, clean and free from other grain, but it does not give the weight. No. 2 shall be reasonably clean and sound, but not bright and plump enough to be graded as No. 1, and shall be reasonably free from other grain and weigh not less than forty-eight pounds.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the law as it stands.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, what if it is? Then the next is forty-five. Why does that not apply to rye as well? Pease remains the same.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The colour of the barley regulates the price a good deal. A great deal depends on getting in barley bright and nice. The brewers will pay a good deal more for barley of a good bright colour: they think more of the colour than they do of the weight; I have bought many thousand bushels of barley and I know that is the case. On the other side, the brewers paid more attention to the colour of barley than they did to the plumpness. If it had a good colour the farmer could get a good price.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—With regard to barley, my hon. friend asked the question why No. 1 barley did not call for any particular weight. I am sorry I could not hear my hon. friend from Monck, because I have no doubt he understands this question very well. If my hon. friend from London was present he could put us right on this question in a moment, but I understand that No. 1 is intended to be a malting barley, and it must be plump, bright, sound, clean and free from other grains, and it must be of undoubted germinating qualities. For such a barley as that, it is not so necessary to put in a weight at all if it complies with the other conditions. Also there is slight amendment necessary in regard to oats. No. 1 oats shall be sound, plump, clean and free from other grain. I can scarcely say whether No. 1, No. 2 and No 3 oats should not have weight attached to them as indicating their quality. It is just as true of oats as it is of barley and wheat. The grain that will show the largest weight, assuming all are equally dry, is the most valuable grain. And I think in oats there should be another distinction drawn. No. 1 oats should not only be sound, plump, clean and free from other grains, but it should be free from oats of a different colour. For instance you take white oats with an admixture of black oats, and it would be certainly disqualified for some purposes. However, as I have understood that the clause relating to oats is to be laid over until to-morrow, that is a matter which my hon. friend who has taken such an interest in it can consider in the meantime.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved that the following be inserted as clause 14*a* :

That when the House is in Committee of the Whole on Bill No. 156, "An Act further to amend the General Inspection Act," he will move the insertion of a clause providing "that whenever there shall rise a difference of opinion between any farmer selling wheat and any wheat buyer as to the grading of such wheat, the farmer while taking the price offered for his wheat as of lower grade than that to which, in his opinion, it belongs, may insist on a sample being selected and agreed on between buyer and seller, which sample shall be parcelled and sealed and sent to the chief inspector at Winnipeg, and the said chief inspector shall grade the said wheat without delay and make a return of his grading to both parties, and if the said chief inspector finds the said wheat to be of a higher grade than that on which the price had been already paid, then the said buyer shall pay to the farmer aforesaid the difference between the price which he had already been paid and that which should have been paid in the first instance had the grade fixed by the chief inspector been agreed upon at the time of sale.

As I have explained, the bill up to this point is in the interest of speculators and traders in grain ; none of it is in the interest of the farmer. I have talked over this proposed amendment with the minister and he approves of it. Let me illustrate how the present system works : I am a farmer at Wolseley and I drive in with a load of 50 or 70 bushels of wheat. I find three or four buyers at Wolseley and the first one that can get on my load opens a bag and says, "your wheat is No. 2 and I will give you 55 cents for it." I claim that it is No. 1, but he will not allow more than No. 2. The other buyers look on and will not offer a cent. The prices are wired to the buyers every morning from Winnipeg so that I have nothing to say about the price of my wheat. The question between us is as to the grade. Now, what I ask by this amendment is that the buyer select a sample and send it to Winnipeg. In the meantime, I will accept payment for the wheat as No. 2. If the inspector grades the sample as No. 2, there is an end of it. If he grades it as No. 1, I propose by this amendment that the buyer shall give me the difference between the price of No. 1 and No. 2 wheat. That is fair and honest and the man who is not willing to accept that is not an honest man.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—What is done now?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—You have to take what the buyer offers ; you have nothing to say about it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Is there any appeal from that ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Would it not be simpler to say that where there is a dispute between the farmer and the buyer, an appeal shall lie to the chief inspector ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is the object of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The amendment is fair to both parties, and I do not see how any one could object to it.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the bill and asked leave to sit again.

SAFETY OF SHIPS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (170) "An Act respecting the safety of ships." He said :—This bill has not been circulated in its Senate form. I may say that the bill, as introduced in the House of Commons, consisted of eight or ten clauses but it has been cut down to one single paragraph, and the purpose of that is that any steamship sailing from any port in Canada on or before the 12th October in each year to any place out of Canada, shall not be subject to any of the restrictions therein provided as to deck loads. This bill amends section 3 chapter 44 of the Act of 1894.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What about sailing vessels ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are still subject to the existing regulations. I should like to take the second reading of the bill now and the committee stage to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER—At the present time the underwriters in England charge unduly high rates on vessels and freight going through the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and if we diminish the restrictions upon deck loads, there is a risk that the rates of insurance may be still further increased, and it is just as well to see our way clear before passing the measure.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That does not follow.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

ROADS AND ROAD ALLOWANCES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called :

Second reading Bill (175) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the roads and road allowances in the province of Manitoba."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said : This bill has not been distributed. It consists of two short paragraphs. Hon. gentlemen will know that the surveys of the North-west were all run out at right angles of the road allowances. In many instances trails have been previously made, and the public found it much more convenient to adhere to the trails than to be forced to make straight roads, and in many instances those trails have been confirmed and a plan has been filed in Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We had better have the bill before we take the second reading.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was merely explaining what the bill was. It is the substitution, in some instances, of trails in accordance with the plan filed in the city of Winnipeg, confirming those trails as road allowances. Perhaps we can take the second reading now and the House can go into committee to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Oh, no. Take the second reading to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—I should like to inquire whether any of those lines extend beyond the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know, but I think very likely that they do.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We must see whether it interferes with the rights of the settlers or not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then I move that the order of the day be discharged and that the bill be placed on the order of the day for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CITY OF OTTAWA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (187) "An Act respecting the city of Ottawa." He said :—For some years an agitation has been going on in the city of Ottawa tending to show that the government of this country is not allowing a fair sum for the necessary improvements the city has been obliged to make in connection with the presence here of the seat of government. The city naturally had a very ambitious desire that the necessary improvements consequent upon Ottawa being the capital of the Dominion should be carried out, and certainly they did their share towards it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—To make it the Washington of the North.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The city built a number of bridges here which should properly have been built by the government. The Maria street bridge is on a concession line, and in addition to that, it crosses the canal, and wherever bridges are built across the public canals of the country they are invariably built by the government. The bridges at the Chaudière over the slides were built by the city, and the bridge leading to the Chaudière. As hon. gentlemen know, the slides have been a revenue paying improvement. The timber descending those slides always pay duties to the Crown. I do not know how it has been in recent years, but very many years ago when I gave attention to the subject the revenue derived from the Ottawa improvements was equal to over 6 per cent on the outlay. I do not suppose that rate has been kept up, because the quantity of timber passing down the slide is not equal to what it was many years ago. The city of Ottawa has now gone to its limit in the way of taxation, and most of the recent improvements are improvements made on what is called frontage tax. That is, the land fronting on the improvement is specially taxed, the city paying one proportion and the owner another. Of course there can be no tax levied on the government property, and I suppose I am well within the mark when I say that there must be a mile of frontage of property occupied by the Crown. Take the frontage on Wellington street, the geological department, the fisheries exhibit, the various public offices in Ottawa, the Cartier square frontage and the frontage along the canal, it would amount to more than that distance. So that had the government property been paying a frontage tax, a very considerable amount would have been levied upon it. The city has been receiving in cash about $15,000 a year for the water supply of the various departments, the Geological Survey branch, the Printing Bureau and other public buildings within the city. It is believed that that is not a fair proportion on what would be the assessed value of the government property. Apart from that, the city have found it necessary, more particularly since the recent fire in the western block, to largely increase the cost of the fire department under the belief that the government would contribute towards that expense. An independent pipe has been laid specially for the government buildings, and increased protection has been afforded, until now it is to be hoped the buildings are reasonably secure. If the upper portions of the eastern block were changed from being the fire trap that they are, similar to the improvements that have been made in the western block, it would make them fire proof. This bill proposes to add to the $15,000 that has been paid for water, the sum of $45,000 making the whole amount $60,000, to be paid annually to the city towards the improvements that have been carried out. This money is not to be handed over to the city, but to be given to a board of commissioners, three of whom will be appointed by the government and one by the city. The board will be entrusted with the expenditure of this money, but their proposals and estimates must first be submitted to the government for their approval, but the accounts must be passed, as any other government accounts, and paid in the regular way. Those are the main clauses of the bill. It has been pretty widely discussed, and I think it may be considered reasonably fair, and the result will be, I hope, that very considerable improvement will be made in the streets, at all events those bordering on the government property. I think hon. gentlemen will all admit that Wellington street, opposite the buildings, should be asphalted. We all know that an immense amount of dust is blown in from that street at present, to the serious inconvenience and injury, no doubt, of government papers in various offices during the summer season. Dust floats in at all seasons. Improvements should be made in the vicinity of Rideau Hall. Great complaint has been made there of the state of the roadway, and it is to be hoped that this board, which it is proposed to appoint under the bill now before the Senate, will be enabled to point out in what way improvements can be made that will serve not only the interests of the city, but will add to the beauty and improvement of the capital.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I cannot allow the motion to pass without saying a few words.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the hon. gentleman to move the six months' hoist?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Oh, no. The city of Ottawa was selected a number of years ago by Her Majesty the Queen to be the capital of the Dominion. It was utterly impossible for the people of this country to agree upon a site themselves, and it was left for the determination of Her Majesty. Notwithstanding the fact that Toronto, Montreal and other places with large influence and wealth had desired to obtain the distinction, still Her Majesty, considered the subject in the interests of the whole Dominion and decided in favour of Ottawa. This, of course, caused an immense amount of disappointment to the various other places, where the people expected that they would obtain the advantages incidental in their favoured localities having the seat of government in the future. But when the information was received that Ottawa was selected, Ottawa, as you all know, was a comparatively small city of no wealth, and with very little to recommend it in the way of general improvements, and therefore, of necessity, the amount to be expended to render to suitable for the accommodation of the legislative bodies was considerably in excess of the amount at the disposal of the municipality at that time. But Ottawa having confidence in its future, and possessing all the necessary facilities for a seat of government that would be considered desirable in the future by the people of this country, expended a very large amount of money in anticipation of these improvements that were a necessity at the time. They constructed the different bridges over the Chaudière and the timber slides, all this involving a very large expenditure of money, for which the city had to become responsible. They also had to erect waterworks of large size for the purpose of supplying water to these buildings, and generally in every way they spent a very large amount of money which had to be paid by the inhabitants of the city irrespective of any government assistance. The government for many years contributed nothing at all towards the general improvements of the city. The feeling was so intense against Ottawa that it was utterly impossible to obtain a grant even of an insignificant amount for the purpose of meeting this expenditure? Therefore, the city had to undertake it on their own responsibility, and I can assure hon. gentlemen from personal experience that there has been a large amount expended by the inhabitants of the city at that time, which continues a charge upon the city's ratepayers and resources, and will continue so for very many years to come—I can speak feelingly on that point, having had to contribute myself and still contributing annually a very large amount of money for the purpose of meeting this extraordinary expenditure, which was undertaken as necessary for the purpose of making the city what it ought to be as the capital of Canada. They accomplished this, I may say, without any aid from the government. I am glad to see that the government have taken the subject in hand and intend to render substantial assistance in the future for the purpose of carrying out what remains to be done in the way of further improving the city and surroundings. It was an unfortunate thing at the time when the seat of government was established that they did not establish, as was the case at Washington, a commission for the purpose of having all these works undertaken under the supreme management of the executive government. They did not do that and therefore it rested entirely with the inhabitants of the city, small in number and possessing no wealth of any consequence, and I can assure hon. gentlemen that it has been a severe drag upon the people of the city. I do not under-value the great advantages that have been derived by the city and surrounding country, with respect to the seat of government itself, but the people of those days, the mercantile community and those who were engaged in carrying on a profitable business, were to a very great extent prevented from carrying on their usual avocations, because a large number of people came in for the purpose of dividing that business which was certain to arise by the increase of population and by the fact that it became the seat of government. Therefore, I can assure hon. gentlemen that it was with great difficulty, and it required a great deal of nerve for the people controlling the destinies of the city, to accomplish all the improvements without receiving aid from the government. They had also to provide a police force commensurate with the necessities of the times, and to provide an efficient fire brigade, and now I believe we have a brigade equal to any in Canada. They perform their part of the contract in a manner that must be agreeably surprising to every hon. gentleman visiting the capital. Now, we possess all the natural advantages and we have a site equal to any other in the country, and I think the selection of Ottawa was a wise decision on the part of Her Majesty. It was said at the time that there was a disadvantage in choosing Ottawa because we were so far removed from Montreal and other outside places. But what do we find to-day? What we predicted then is coming to pass. We can travel from Ottawa to Montreal in two hours, and if the further improvement of railway communication is to take place, as it is proposed, running at the rate of two hundred miles an hour, the distance between here and Montreal is nothing.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman would become baldheaded if he travelled on a train going at that rate.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—They are going to construct a railway in the States on which they will make that speed. It shows that the decision to make Ottawa the capital of the country was a wise one, and Ottawa possesses all the qualifications to make it the pride of the whole Dominion. I am glad to find that there is a feeling of this kind at the present time. I have never seen a man who came to Ottawa who did not go away well satisfied, in fact, astonished at the beauty and natural resources that the city possesses in the way of making it the Washington of the North. Therefore, I hail with satisfaction the announcement that tardy justice is to be given to the city of Ottawa, and I hope the government will take the matter in hand themselves and take the entire management and control of the works constructed in the future. I do not believe in placing any portion of it in the hands of the municipal authorities. We all know the municipal authorities have local and sectional prejudices, and it is not likely to be carried out as efficiently as it would be under the management and control of the government of the country. Therefore, I should be very much pleased if the government would take it in their own hands, because they would have the work constructed in a proper and systematic manner, and I should prefer that the entire sum of money, instead of being frittered away at the rate of $40,000 or $45,000 a year should be capitalized, and that the work should be proceeded with as soon as possible, in order that old men like myself who have been here for the last 50 or 60 years may have an opportunity of seeing and enjoying the advanced state of the capital after all those improvements have been made.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You will look down upon them.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Some years ago property could have been had on Sparks street, from Elgin to O'Connor, at a comparatively small price. I believe that property could have been had there in those days at a price less, if anything, than has been paid for the site of Langevin block, and it will be necessary for the increased accommodation of the public service in the near future. We will require an addition to the House of Commons and to the Library, and greater accommodation for the civil servants of this country, and the sooner it is undertaken the easier it will be to accomplish it. I do not know that the government could purchase property on Sparks street now at any reasonable figure. It was a mistake that it was not secured when the values were low. The public thought that these buildings, when designed and erected, would be sufficient for all time to come, but the country is progressing so rapidly that extensive improvements will soon be required in those buildings. The city also undertook to supply Rideau Hall with water, and besides placed a 15 inch pipe from the Chaudière to these buildings. Supposing these waterworks had not been constructed, the amount of money required to keep the public buildings insured, would have involved a large annual outlay, whereas with this fire protection and water supply, the government only pay some $9,000 a year, and only for a few years of late $14,000. At the price paid by ordinary water consumers it would be $45,000 per annum. All the improvements in the past have been entirely at the expense of the city; therefore, I think now the city of Ottawa, having so well performed its part, the government certainly should and will do what will be necessary in the future, to make it as it ought to be the great Washington of the North. Therefore, I hail this bill with pleasure and satisfaction. I hope there will be no objection to it. I do not think there is a man in the country who could object to it at the present time, although it would not have met with such favour a few years ago. I was glad to hear the other day my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Allan) eulogizing Ottawa in the way he did. It shows that the public are realizing the importance of the city, and will take a pride in making the capital of the Dominion what it ought to be. It is no longer Bytown,; it is the capital of the country, and every man has the same right as the residents of the city to claim ownership of this capital and its surroundings. The government deserve credit for bringing forward this measure and giving it the first instalment that is necessary to make Ottawa what it ought to be. I again impress upon the government the necessity of taking the whole of the work into their own hands, and not have any interference from municipal or other parties. They should capitalize this grant and make the improvements in a manner that will show in the future, at all events, that everything will be done in a manner deserving the praise of every one who visits Ottawa. Under the circumstances, the people will stand by the government in carrying out a scheme of public improvement that will reflect credit on them and make our capital a city that the country will be pround of. Other countries have contributed in many ways to the improvements of their respective seats of government. Great Britain, the Australasian colonies, South Africa, France and the United States have all given substantial aid in building up their respective capitals, and I feel that the people of this country will support the government in trying to make the capital of the Dominion what it ought to be. I hope the measure will receive the unanimous support of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this measure. The hon. gentleman from Rideau went into ancient history about Montreal and Toronto, and talked of the benefit that the people of this country have got from the city of Ottawa, but he must remember at the same time that the country has conferred a great benefit on Ottawa by selecting Ottawa as the capital. I must say for the people of Ottawa, however, that they are enterprising. There is quite a change in this city in the last thirty years, to my knowledge. In years gone by you could hardly get down the streets for three months in the spring; it was more like a barnyard than anything else. There is no place in Canada where there has been more improvement than Ottawa, but at the same time, when my hon. friend is giving so much credit to this city for what it has done for the government and the people of Canada, he must not forget that the government has conferred a great benefit on the city of Ottawa. The city would be very little if it were not for the government of the country. It is true that the people of the city of Ottawa wait on us, but they take our money. I thought he might as well have left ancient history alone. Her Majesty selected Ottawa and gave as a reason for doing so that it was away from the frontier.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the woods.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Yes, in the woods. This is an age of progress: let the money fly. We have $60,000 more added by this bill to the expenditure of the country. The present government were put in power to reduce the expenditure. I am not opposed to an expenditure for which we get value.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—You will get it in this case.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I question that. The hon. gentleman talks about the waterworks and what an advantage they have been to the government of this country. Well, they have been paid for it all.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Not by the government.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Why, you have been bleeding us all the time. Take the government away from Ottawa and what would you have? However, as my old friend here from Rideau (Mr. Clemow) is very desirous to have this bill, it is an inducement to me to vote for it. Neither of us has long to remain here, and as the Minister of Justice says, we will be looking down on the city of Ottawa and I hope we will find it a beautiful spot. The only objection I have to the bill is that it is adding to the burdens of the people. Every move is adding to the public expenditure, and you do not think much of the rural population who have to pay the bill. It is about time you called a halt. I do not say stop on this, and I am not going to oppose it, but I hope the government will see that the money is properly spent. When we come back, after some of this money is expended, we will have a look to see where it has gone, and what value we are getting for it.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a second time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (191) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons."—(Mr. Mills.)

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the motion to adjourn, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he can answer the question I put to him with regard to the telegram that appeared in the Globe, stating that the Senate rejected the Redistribution Bill on account of its being unconstitutional, and also whether the interview purporting to have taken place between the Premier and some United States gentleman who was here is correct. Can the hon. gentleman answer either or both of these questions.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I only heard one question put by the hon. gentleman that relating to the information that appeared in the Globe. I am not in a position to answer that, because really I have had no opportunity of making an inquiry to-day, nor did I think of it when I was present where my colleagues were, and so I cannot answer the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The same answer I suppose will be given with regard to the other question, as to whether that interview took place and whether the Premier used the expression he is alleged to have made.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I suppose my hon. friend saw the report in the papers with regard to the Prime Minister that he received no invitation to go to Chicago, but that he was expecting one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not a reply to my question, I did not ask whether he received any invitation; I asked whether he can answer the question: did that interview take place, and if it did take place, did the Premier give expression to the sentiments attributed to him?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say again I know nothing except from the report I saw in this evening's paper and, of course, the interview reported could not have taken place if the Prime Minister received no invitation to go to Chicago; because my hon. friend will see that the whole statement was based on the assumption that a certain gentleman had come here and invited the Premier and His Excellency to attend the laying of a corner stone of some public building in Chicago, and if he has not yet received the invitation, certainly the statement could not have been accurate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Did the interview take place?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That interview could not have taken place. That is clear enough.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not clear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The answer is not satisfactory, nor has my hon. friend touched the point at all. The interview does not say that the invitation was given. On the contrary, the interview is to this effect, that the gentleman came here to ascertain whether the Premier and the Governor General would accept an invitation when it was sent to them. The statement made in a newspaper, when the authorities of Chicago had their attention drawn to it, was that no invitation had been sent. My hon. friend says that no invitation had been received, and consequently no interview took place. That is not a correct answer to give. An interview might have taken place and the Premier might have made the statement that he is alleged to have made, and yet not have received an invitation, because the interview stated that Mr. Fitzpatrick came to Ottawa to ascertain whether he would, and the answer received was that the personal attacks made on the Premier, and the unfriendly action of the United States in reference to this Alaskan boundary, were of such a character that he would not go himself or advise His Excellency to go. I want to know whether the Premier did say so, or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have had no conversation with the Premier or anydody else, and the only other party who could have any knowledge of the matter, I suppose, would be this Mr. Fitzpatrick, who is reported to have interviewed the Premier. I have had no conversation with either. I know nothing, except what has appeared in this evening's paper, as to what the Prime Minister himself has said, and I infer from that that the Prime Minister did not receive any invitation, nor would I infer that any person had come all the way from Washington to know whether he would accept an invitation or not. That, of itself, would be a very unusual proceeding. My recollection is, from a cursory perusal of what was said in reply to Mr. Davin in the Commons, if I remember correctly, no discussion or controversy took place between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and any gentleman from Washington in respect to the statement in the United States paper upon the subject of the Alaskan boundary.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Did they meet?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will have to inquire for himself; I have no knowledge of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman had said that without an explanation, it would have been better. The explanation is no answer to my question. I was led to a different conclusion in reading the Premier's reply to Mr. Davin. He simply said: "I decline to answer any question," and moved the adjournment. That would imply that the report was true, and he did not wish to answer. Will the hon. gentleman take the responsibility himself, or does he consider it not of sufficient importance, to say to the Premier that this question had been asked in the Senate, and to ascertain whether he can say yes or no; or whether the interview took place, and whether he was misrepresented?

Hon. Mr. POWER—There are two statements in the papers. I think the one that the hon. leader of the opposition mentioned last, referred to what took place on the first occasion at the adjournment of the House. Then, at a subsequent meeting, the Premier made an explanation which is substantially identical with the statement made by the Minister of Justice now. I feel we are getting too much in the habit of quoting statements made by United States newspaper correspondents. Without saying anything about newspaper correspondents generally, I have no hesitation in saying that United States newspaper correspondents, as a rule, are not remarkable for the accuracy of their statements, and it would be more in accordance with the dignity of this House that those statements should not be noticed; or if the hon. gentleman wishes for accurate information, the better way is to put a notice on the order paper and get it in the regular parliamentary way. Here we have the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. leader of the government differing as to what a certain paper said about some probably imaginary interview. That is not the sort of business we should be doing in Parliament.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is no doubt right with regard to the tendency of newspapers to exaggerate, and very often magnify a molehill into a mountain, in regard to interviews with public men, but there is this fact which makes the Parliament of Canada rather more than usually interested in these United States newspapers when they report the Premier of Canada. We all remember that one the first things the present Premier did when he took office was to give himself away with regard to the future policy of the country to a Chicago newspaper. A very lengthy interview was published in which he discussed with the utmost freedom the policy of the government as compared with that of the previous government in regerd to international matters. That has made the people of Canada more than usually interested in these United States interviews.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL— I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Marshfield in reference to United States newspaper reporters. I had a conversation with a reporter from the Brooklyn Eagle. I read the interview purporting to have taken place between him and me, and the latter portion of it put in my mouth sentiments that I never even thought of, and certainly those who know me would not believe I gave expression to—that is that I found fault with regard to the government of this country from the other side of the ocean. I did not consider it important enough to call attention to it, but when statements are alleged to have been made by the Premier of Canada, it is another thing. When I want instructions as to what constitutes the dignity of this House and the maintenance of the dignity of the Senate, I shall certainly not ask advice of the hon. gentleman from Halifax as to what course I should pursue. I fancy I understand what my rights are as well as the hon. gentleman does, and I trust that I have not so far transgressed those rights, or infringed on the dignity either of the House or the gentlemen who occupy seats in it; but when a public question comes up, which must of necessity, if it be true, create ill-feeling between this country and our neighbours across the line, I am quite within my right to ask whether the occurrence ever took place or not. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman and those with whom he has been acting for the last ten or fifteen years, if an incident of that kind had occurred with a minister of the late government, what denunciations would have been hurled at their head for attempting to rouse the passions of people across the line. We have been charged over and over again with being dishonest when our every endeavor had been to protect honest government in connection with the trade of this country; and whenever any intercourse has taken place between the two countries, or any negotiations between the two, the leaders of the Liberal party have declared it was a sham and a fraud, and that we never really meant what we were doing. If Sir John Thompson, or any other Conservative Premier of this country, had given expression to the sentiments which are alleged to have been uttered by the present Premier, it is not difficult to divine what these gentlemen would have said, and the manner in which they would have hurled denunciations against the government as being hostile to the United States and desirous of stirring up the very worst passions. I have no desire to do that. On the contrary, I hope to see the same course pursued by this government, as by the last, and that is, cultivating the most amicable relations between the two. In rising to-day to ask a question, it was for the Purpose of giving the premier of this country an opportunity of denying in toto that he had ever uttered sentiments which, I repeat, would create ill-feeling throughout the whole of that country. I took that course with no desire to embarrass the government or to impair the dignity of the House which my hon. friend has so much at heart. I have not read what appeared in the evening paper, or probably I should not have called attention to this matter.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Evening Journal has this report of what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said :

Let me say one word, not because the hon. gentleman has brought the matter to the attention of the House, but because several newspapers have taken hold of it. There has been an interview published in a Washington paper attributing words to me of a certain character, which the hon. gentleman has just mentioned. I did not take any notice of that interview, and I do not propose to do so. This interview was not published by me; it was an interview of a reporter of the Washington paper with a Mr. Fitzpatrick, and Mr. Fitzpatrick has put words into my mouth for which I do not hold myself responsible. If I wish to say anything to the public I will say it myself and in my own way, not through any other party. I have received no invitation so far from the Chicago authorities to take part in the demonstration proposed to be held in the month of October. I understand that one is coming, in fact, I have been informed unofficially this morning that one is on the way, and when it comes I shall certainly treat it with the courtesy that is due to it, not only because of the position I hold, but on account of our relations with our neighbours.

That is the answer which the Prime Minister has given to the question. I think I gave to my hon. friend a fair summary of that statement, and I am not in a position to state anything further.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That answer is not satisfactory.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice whether he is yet in a position to bring down the returns which I moved for some time ago in reference to the oils furnished to the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not in a position, and I was told by the Minister of Railways that it would take some little time to prepare the statement. Further than that he informed me that my hon. friend opposite has entirely misinterpreted the information which he gave.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, 9th August, 1899.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READING.

Bill (182) "An Act respecting the Department of Customs and Inland Revenue."—(Mr. Mills.)

CHARLOTTETOWN AND MURRAY HARBOUR RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (183) "An Act to authorize the construction of a Branch Railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour, as a public work." He said :—I understand that the construction of this railway involves a very expensive bridge, and negotiations have been going on between the federal and provincial governments as to the proportion which the provincial government shall contribute. The provincial government have agreed to contribute, provided the bridge is constructed for carriages and foot passengers as well as for the purposes of a railway. The bill provides for the construction by the government of Canada of a railway from a point, in Prince Edward Island, at or near Charlottetown to a point at or near Murray Harbour as a government work. The distance is forty-one miles, and as the bridge crosses an important estuary, the cost of the bridge is very considerable, somewhere between $800,000 and $900,000, depending, I suppose, largely on the cost of iron. The provincial government are at present negotiating with the Federal Government for the proportion of the cost that they shall bear on condition that the bridge is to be a bridge for carriages and foot passengers. They had offered to contribute $10,000. I think the Minister of Railways is holding out for $12,000 as their portion for a year. This bill was one of the resolutions submitted in the spring of 1896 for the consideration of Parliament, and it has been discussed and is pretty well understood as a work of some importance to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I intend to support the bill. I think it is a step in the right direction, but it is only a step.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—The hon. gentleman wants more.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The question is one of very considerable importance to the province from which I come, and it involves the very wide question which has been in discussion between the provincial government and members of Parliament and the government of Canada for years. It has been a matter of complaint, and very strong complaint, in Prince Edward Island for a great many years that the province was suffering a great injustice in consequence of the construction of railways in other parts of Canada in the benefits of which it did not participate and in regard to which there was no corresponding expenditure in Prince Edward Island. Hon. gentlemen perhaps do not all remember—they are not so much interested in the province of Prince Edward Island as I am—that before the island went into confederation, for the six years between the time the other provinces confederated and Prince Edward Island joined, the island stood out and refused to confederate mainly for these reasons, that the plan of confederation had as a basis the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the widening and deepening of the great canals and the construction of the Intercolonial Railway—three great important public works in which it was claimed that Prince Edward Island had no interest whatever—that the people of Prince Edward Island, isolated from the rest of Canada, had no interest in these great public works which would lie within the other provinces, and would be of very great advantage to the whole of them. As far as the Intercolonial Railway is concerned it was rather a disadvantage to Prince Edward Island, because it was held that it would tend to bring western produce to the markets of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and injure the farmers of Prince Edward Island, who had up to that time those markets to themselves. The result has fulfilled the fears of the people on that point. However, we had to take the good along with the bad. I was going to say that that was the ground of the objection that Prince Edward Island had to confederation, and Sir John Macdonald finally settled that question with Prince Edward Island by agreeing to certain terms of union, by which it was frankly and clearly admitted as clearly as language could do it, that Prince Edward Island was not interested in those railroads and should be idemnified in the terms of union for these great public expenditures. And you will find, by referring to the statutes of 1873, both of the Dominion and of the province, that it was there declared that an allowance should be made to the province of Prince Edward Island on account, not merely of the debt of Canada as it stood then, but on account of the sums that the Parliament of Canada had authorized for the construction of these great public works, and if hon. gentlemen will take the pains to verify the figures they will find that the sum of $45 per head, which was the amount allowed to Prince Edward Island on entering the union, was made up on the debt of Canada as it stood on the 1st of July, 1873, and the authorized expenditure by Canada on public works added. Hon. gentlemen will find, on making the calculation that it comes out exactly right. Adding the amount that was authorized for the expenditure on those three great public works of Canada to the debt as it stood in July, 1873, amounted to $45 per head of the population. An additional $5.00 was given on other grounds. That was all right and appeared to be perfectly equitable, but as years went on Canada undertook the construction of other great works in addition to those then provided for in the terms of union, and in place of expending $30,000,000 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, $62,000,000 was expended; in place of $20,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway, $50,000,000 was expended; instead of $9,000,000 on the canals, $48,000,000 was expended, and these are all expenditures which the terms of union, clearly and distinctly set forth. Prince Edward Island, isolated as it was, could have no interest in, and were indemnified for as far as the amount then authorized by Parliament, but in addition to this Parliament largely subsidized railways, a policy originating in 1882 and still continued. The government of Prince Edward Island some years ago laid this whole matter before the government of Canada. The provincial government in 1898 submitted a memorandum which was very carefully prepared. I have gone over the figures and, having traversed the same ground several times, I find they are substantially correct. After making all allowances and making exact calculations, there would be due on a fair and square account to Prince Edward Island $2,174,705.53. That is in order to put Prince Edward Island in the same position as the other provinces of Canada, with regard to railway and canal expenditures, it would call for an expenditure of over $2,000,000 in Prince Edward Island and this was up to the 1st of July, 1897. From that time up to the present, I have some figures here taken from the estimates, and this is what has happened; in this period, covering three years, including the year for which Parliament has just voted a set of estimates, I find there has been, either voted or submitted in the estimates in the present year, or paid, $30,809,381 for railways and canals in Canada. And of that amount I think there has been some $30,000 spent in the province of Prince Edward Island. This $31,000,000 is in addition to the statement, altogether apart from and beyond what was included in the memo. of the provincial government two years ago. At the end of this financial year, if the government use the money they are now asking Parliament to vote, there will be a new expenditure of nearly $31,000,000 on railways and canals embraced in the years 1898, 1899 and 1900. Prince Edward Island is one-fortieth part of Canada, and hon. gentleman will see there is over $760,000 which would be Prince Edward Island's share of that expenditure supposing it were distributed round all the provinces evenly. So, in addition to the $2,174,000 which the province claims, and I think claims correctly, to be due to the island in 1897, there has been an addition created by the extraordinary expenditures by the government since 1897 amounting to $760,000. In the vote which is now submitted to Parliament $250,000 is proposed to be expended in this year in the province of Prince Edward Island on this branch railway. I may say, further, what hon. gentlemen have a right to know, that the whole proposition embraces a very much larger expenditure than that. This railway, if it goes to Murray Harbour—I see most statements mention the head of Murray River but it would have to go nine miles further—would cost about $1,319,000. Then the provincial government have provided a payment of $12,000 annually towards this object.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the sum of $1,319,000, which the hon. gentleman mentions, include the cost of the bridge?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, this is a statement of the whole expenditure; the bridge, $800,000; railway to Murray River $447,000; wharf and ground at Murray River, $22,800; extension to Beach Point, $94,000. I deduct from that, however, the $22, 800 for the wharf, and also $23,040 because there is a shorter road surveyed than the one embraced in these estimates, which would cost that much less. That leaves the net amount of the road and bridge $1,319,205.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will they take the shorter route?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Probably they will. The value of the $12,000 a year which is required to be paid by the provincial government at the rate at which the government of Canada can borrow money, 2⅞ per cent is $417,391. Deducting that the expense will be $901,814. That is what it is proposed the whole of this work will cost the government of Canada. With regard to the bridge it is proposed—and this is a matter as to which a friendly arrangement is going on between the two governments—that the bridge shall be a railway and traffic bridge combined, and it is provided that the provincial government shall contribute $12,000 a year in perpetuity, and the bill before us provides that that $12,000 shall be deducted from the subsidy due the province half yearly for all time to come. So that the door is locked very firmly and strongly in that direction. I think that is demanding a little too much, and that there will be some little difficulty, owing to the bill which the provincial legislature passed last session, only providing for a sum not exceeding $12,000, on a sum which would cover the fair proportion of the cost, for a traffic bridge. That is that engineers and experts should ascertain what proportion of the expense of the structure was due to the traffic part and what was due to the railway part, the provincial government assuming control of the traffic part and receive the tolls and the Federal Government receiving the earnings of the railway part. The proposition is all right, I think, but I am afraid there will be difficulty about coming to a bargain, because I think it is quite possible that a fair estimate would establish the fact that the traffic part of the bridge would be a great deal less expensive than the railway part, and that a fair division of the cost between the two would not be $12,000 a year for the provincial government, but a sum considerably less than that. However, I presume it is a matter that we cannot deal with here, and that it has received all the consideration possible for it to receive at the present time. I find no fault that the provincial government should be called upon to contribute to the bridge as far as the traffic part of the bridge is concerned, but I hold that with the state of the account between the province of Prince Edward Island and the Federal Government with regard to railways and railway expenditures generally, the provincial government should not be called upon to contribute anything towards the railway portion of the bridge, inasmuch as the bridge becomes a link in the Prince Edward Island system of railways. I may say—and I think my hon. friend the leader of the opposition who has, I know, taken a great deal of interest in this question will bear me out—that the late government took this matter up and gave it a great deal of earnest consideration. All the subjects to which I have referred were discussed between the members of the late government and the representatives from the province of Prince Edward Island in the years 1895 and 1896, and it was decided by the late government at that time in the public interest, as well as in justice to the province of Prince Edward Island, that a number of small branches were to be built in the province, altogether some six or seven, and this was to be one of them, and the railway experts were of the opinion that if these branches leading to the seaboard were built, tapping important settlements and connecting with the fishing establishments on the coast, the result would have been to largely increase the earning power of the Prince Edward Island Railway. Mr. Schreiber made a report at that time, and it was his opinion that if that were done a very considerable amount would be contributed in the way of increased earnings for expenses on the railway in place of the deficit we have at the present time. I have no doubt that in a measure that opinion was correct. I have just barely stated the grounds of the contention between the province and the Dominion, and I must express my satisfaction to find that now we have the present government following at a respectable distance, but nevertheless in the wake of the late administration and accepting, at least in part the policy that was there laid down, and admitting the just claim of Prince Edward Island, in regard to this matter. I only hope they will not stop here, but that they will go on and fulfil the entire proposition and give us some other small branches that were suggested. This one is larger and more expensive than all the rest put together, very much more so even without considering the bridge. When that is done, I have no doubt that the account of the Prince Edward Island Railway will show a very much better result than it has in the past. My hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who represents in the House of Commons some of the territory affected by this proposition, some years ago made a speech and advocated the scheme of a railway running across the county from Peak's station, in King's County, to connect the harbour of Wood Islands with the railway by running across the country instead of running from Southport to Murray Harbour, and serving the country in the way in which it is proposed to do in this bill, and it might not be amiss for me to read the exact words used by the hon. gentleman at that time. He said:

> When I brought this question before the House in 1890, I thought it was desirable to put this matter before the government in a businesslike way. I had some consultation with a number of engineers, and I was assured by them that a branch line from Peak's station might be built which would give the necessary accommodation and do away with the necessity of a bridge across to Hillsboro', which would cost half a million of money.

That was the view of the hon. gentleman at that time. I happen to know that his opinions on that subject were severely criticized in the province of Prince Edward Island, and that he was obliged to abandon that view later and take the popular opinion, the prevalent opinion in the province, which was that the road should be built on the line indicated in the present bill from Southport to Murray Harbour and that the question of the bridge should also be entertained in connection with it. In reply to the memorial of the provincial government to which I have just referred, and which I think was supported later by a delegation consisting of members of that government, the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, wrote a letter to the Premier of the province which has been brought down to Parliament during the present session. Sir Wilfrid Laurier made use of these words:

I understand Sir Louis Davies has had a good deal of correspondence with you and your predecessors on this point, and that the government of the province has passed an Order in Council, agreeing to contribute $10,000 annually as its share towards the cost of the bridge in case the Parliament of Canada should authorize its construction, while it is contended that your fair share should certainly not be less than $12,000 annually. I do not presume at present to discuss these details, but I desire to point out to you that the claim you have made in the memorial for a readjustment of your financial terms of union on the ground of alleged underestimate of expenditure upon the Intercolonial Railway, Canadian Pacific Railway, canals, &c., would even from your standpoint present an altogether different aspect if the Dominion was to undertake the construction of this railway and bridge?

I have just to say—and I wish to make that statement distinctly on the present occasion, as representing the province of Prince Edward Island—that we do not admit that this will materially change the question, because, as I have already pointed out, the expenditure involved in building this railway, after receiving $400,000 or something equivalent to that, from the provincial government will only amount to an expenditure equal to Prince Edward Island's share of what has been expended or voted for railways, canals and such purposes by the Parliament of Canada since the provincial government made its claim in 1897. There will be only a very small amount over, and no doubt, as this work on the railway and bridge will extend beyond this present year, that by the time the railway and bridge are completed the account on the other side will have gone so high that it will altogether offset it, without contributing anything as it were, to the old account which the provincial government presented as amounts due the province of Prince Edward Island. I know hon. gentlemen coming from the other provinces are very apt to conclude that these are all sectional considerations, and perhaps they are. Perhaps that is a proper enough name to describe them, but they are just such considerations as cannot possibly be avoided under the peculiar circumstances. It was clearly, as I started by saying, admitted by the government of Canada at the time of confederation, and it was put in black and white in the terms of union, that the basis as regards the province, should be, in fixing its debt account, the sums authorized by the Parliament of Canada for railway and canal expenditures in which the province had no interest. In 1887 an Order in Council was passed to pay $20,000 a year to the provincial government, and in the Order in Council which was submitted to Parliament as a warrant for that payment, this was the distinct and clear basis, carrying out the terms of the union. On all these considerations I have no doubt, even without these few remarks of mine, that this bill would receive the support and hearty concurrence of this House, but what I want to point out to my hon. friend the Secretary of State is that I hope he will be able to carry out, at a very early day, the full programme decided upon by the late government, and which will still, in my opinion, be quite short of giving justice to the province of Prince Edward Island, and I hope, notwithstanding that the Prince Edward Island Railway has not paid fully the working expenses during the past, that a better state of things will prevail in the near future, and the day will come when it will be a valuable asset. The difficulty in that respect largely arises from the water communication around the coast, and the further consideration that it has no through traffic. It depends entirely on local traffic. The Cape Breton railway is in an altogether different position. Any one travelling to Sydney will have to travel by the Cape Breton railway about 90 or 100 miles. The road has to be used by people having business with the island of Cape Breton, and it does quite a considerable amount of through trade of that kind connecting with the province of Newfoundland, but in the case of Prince Edward Island the province is tapped at the more important harbours from the mainland, and they have a great deal of business with the island which does not contribute a dollar to the railway. Both in the matter of tickets and passenger traffic, as well as in the matter of freight, their business will be with these cities, and there is less need to use the railway. It is not because the province is not prosperous, or thickly settled, for we know it is more thickly settled for its area than any other part of Canada, but it is on account of the water communication along the coast and the fact that the smaller harbours have not been reached by branches, and the fact also that the island is tapped from the mainland at the more important harbours and that that does not lead to a through traffic or much distribution along the line of railway. It is for these reasons the railroad has not paid as well as it should in the past. Notwithstanding that, I do not believe it will always continue so. The building of these branches will help materially to change that state of things. No doubt the Intercolonial Railway will be a paying road soon, and I have no doubt the Prince Edward Island Railway somewhat later will also come up to the standard and take the same position. I have only to express my satisfaction with the bill as far as it goes, with the single doubt that I have that there may be a little difficulty between the provincial and federal governments as to settling what should be actually paid because this bill fixes the amount absolutely at $12,000 a year, whereas a correct inquiry and investigation might show that a smaller sum would be a fairer proportion for the province to pay for merely traffic purposes. However, I hope that will be adjusted. I hope the work will be put under contract soon and that it will be done by open competition.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very glad to listen to the observations made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield and to know that the bill meets with his approval. I shall draw the attention of my colleagues, more particulary the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to the observations he has made and to what he considers the fair thing for Prince Edward Island. We all recognize that it is a matter that is not only difficult, but absolutely impossible, to apportion to each portion of the Dominion the fair sum it might claim either in relation to population or area. We must also recognize that in the newer portions of the Dominion, where the population is going in, and we are all interested in the development of the whole Dominion, a larger proportion probably has to be spent than in the older sections. However, it is very gratifying to hear from the hon. gentleman that the prospects are so good in Prince Edward Island and that by these additional branches the railway is likely if not actually to pay something on its cost, to at least yield sufficient revenue to balance the annual expenditure on the road.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I presume that the railway that is to be built is to be of the same character as that which now exists on the island—that is a narrow gauge railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That being the case, it is only an extension of the system which has been carried out in the past, and it is carrying out in part the principle of the late government on railway extension, a decision which was arrived at after a great deal of consideration and reflection from the point that has been so admirably laid before the Senate by my hon. friend from Marshfield. It was considered that that province had not received what was her due proportion of the expenditure of Dominion funds, and that there was no other way in which that claim could be met—at least it was so thought—so equitably, as the mode proposed by the late government, of which this is a continuation. I do not think, under all the circumstances, there can be any objection to it. I know very little of Prince Edward Island, and I am not quite so sanguine as my hon. friend as to the paying qualities of the road; but, whether it pays or not, there is one thing certain, it will add materially to the prosperity of that section of the island and enable many to take advantage of railway communication which they have not now. My hon. friend in his remarks mentioned, in advocating deduction of the cost of the road, a certain wharf which is proposed to be built. Now, if this road does not reach navigable waters, it certainly would be to the great advantage of the island itself, and also to the revenue to be derived from it, if it were extended to a deep water terminus on the straits.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is provided for in the bill. It goes down to Murray Harbour. I deduct it because the engineers did not know what the ultimate intention was and they put in $22,000 for a wharf at Murray River, but this bill provides for going to Murray Harbour, and so expensive a wharf will not be needed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That explanation removes any objection I would have to the bill.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Is it intended to build an elevator at Murray Harbour?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That point has not been considered yet.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—When the road pays.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have been told that this was entirely for election purposes.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The bill then passed through its final stages under a suspension of the rules.

SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (189) "An Act respecting securities for Seed Grain Indebtedness." He said:—This is a bill of only one clause which explains itself. It authorizes the discharge from liability of the surety who became indebted to the Crown for seed grain, the minister being satisfied that the land which is held and also the debtor himself are sufficient security, and it is not thought desirable to continue the security.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the bill is read, it would be interesting to know why this step is taken. The provisions of the bill are to relieve those who became surety for the repayment of the value of seed which was advanced to the settlers, at a period when a failure had taken place in the crops in that country. Then it provides, that these sureties are only to be discharged after an examination of the land upon which I understand, there is a lien at present for the repayment of the funds, and if the land be found to be worth sufficient to cover the debt, then the surety is to be released. What necessity is there for releasing surety when there is no danger of his losing anything? No ordinary business man would take that course. If the land be worth the money, there can be no harm in allowing the surety to remain, and unless some good reason be given for it I do not see why we should pass this bill. If you endorse a note to a bank, I am bound to say the bank, no matter how rich you may be will not relieve you of the responsibility until the note is paid.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—With regard to these sureties, the patent for the land does not issue until the debt is settled, and so there is a lien both on the amount of the surety, and on the land of the original debtor. Now, where the land of the original debtor is adequate it is just as well to allow the surety to get his patent. It is not worth while to hold him for the amount where the government have ample security without interfering with him at all, and a good many of those persons, where they are anxious to get possession of their patents, do not want to pay the debt of their neighbour as long as the neighbour has ample property out of which the debt may be collected, and they expect the government to push the original debtor to get the money from them and release the sureties. My hon. friend will see this stands in the way of issuing the patent to the surety.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that the securities are from the original homesteaders who became one security for the other?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, many of them are.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then this bill relieves them, and allows the government to permit the debt to remain against the person who receives the grain?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The surities are not in a position to urge the collection of this debt. For my part it does not seem a business transaction at all. I do not say I am going to oppose the bill if it is honestly and properly carried out, but it looks like placing in the hands of the Minister of the Interior a very powerful weapon when he may wish to use it for political purposes. I do not say he will use it, but it enables him to say to every one who has become surety for his neighbour when an election takes place, "I will have a report made that this man's land is sufficient security and have you released." Where you have an unscrupulous minister he would not hesitate to do that. It is a power that I do not think ought to be placed in the hands of any government. The government can only release the securities on ascertaining that the security of the debtor is ample, and if ample, there is no reason why the surety should be released, supposing him to be a settler nobody could take his land away from him.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing he wants to sell?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only object the government can have in asking the security to be released is to enable him to sell or mortgage his land, but the question is whether you should release a man until the debt is paid. I have had some experience personally, and if any of you have had a similar experience, I do not think you would relieve any surety until the debt was paid. In the other House a resolution was offered providing that all these claims should be given over to the local legislature or the North-west council, and let them exact the payment from the debtor or allow him to pay it in labour upon the road, or in other words by statute labour. That would be simply making Manitoba and the North-west Territories a present of whatever amount may be due to the Dominion for the advances which had been made.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In 1886 we had a dry year in the North-west Territories. The country was new then. People did not understand how to till the soil with a prospect of getting as good a crop as we get now. Owing to the dry weather, no grain was raised. Hundreds of farmers did not reap any at all, and people did not know whether it was going to be a country suitable for farming at all. They felt, while they used their means to prepare the lands for crops, they had not means to buy seed for another year. They applied to the government for seed. The government, I think, acquiesced and resolved to take security from the debtor, and from some other person in each case. A great many have paid for that grain and the party who became security as well as themselves have been relieved, but a great many have not paid and the government has been lenient, but still the man who is liable as security for the farmer cannot get his patent or do anything with his land. If the government had coerced these men and made them pay their debts, this bill would not need to be introduced. But the late government and the present government have been lenient to these men, and have given them every chance to pay their debts, but at the same time the man who went security for them is held. I think this is a very proper and just bill, and the government will not sustain a particle of loss by it. The debts are all small, $40 to $50 in each case. I venture to say that the interest is the greater part of them now. In 1886, in the district where I live, half the people left the country. They said they could not live there. A great many have come back. Others have not returned. Those who stopped in the country had three crops which were entire failures. In 1889 I sowed forty acres and did not have any wheat. I never saw a spear of wheat, because it did not rain from the 8th of May until the fall. Farmers who had less means than I had, felt that they ought to be relieved, and it would not have been amiss if the government had made them a present of the grain. They stuck to the country and helped to give it a character, and it would have been a proper and just act to have given them the seed grain, and I told the government so. Still, some of them having repaid the amount, it would not be fair to relieve the others.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose the hon. gentleman knows that when the advance was made a great many years ago to the settlers of Ontario by the old government of Canada, they made them pay it all back.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They are doing so in this case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But you claim that the grain should be given to them.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that principle be carried out, I can bring a number of cases in the northern part of the province where I live where the settlers have undergone much greater hardships than those who have settled in the North-west, having the difficulties of the frost to contend with, instead of open prairie to break up. No one recognizes more the force of the remarks of the hon. gentleman than I do, in reference to the failure of the crops and the set back it gave to the country. I am very glad it has not occurred since, but that has nothing to do with the principle involved in this bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—It is very doubtful to my mind whether, if the government release the sureties they can hold the claims against the others. We know in ordinary transactions if a party does so he may have great difficulty in recovering his claim. I should like to know besides, what amount is due to the government on account of this seed grain.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I venture to say if they relieve the security the claim against the original debtor is not one-tenth of his ability to pay, so there is no danger of any loss.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—I did not quite understand what the hon. gentleman from Wolseley meant, whether he means that there is only one-tenth of the amount due the government which was originally advanced to these settlers.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, the whole amount is due in some cases, and interest on it, and that will not amount in many cases to $100. In nine-tenths of those cases it is under $100.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—If it is only one-tenth the capacity of the individual to pay, I do not see why he should release the security.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They have the security of the land.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—If the individual to whom the advance was made is only good for one-tenth, it would be very wrong indeed to reduce the security.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—The principle involved between principal and security in ordinary business should not obtain in cases of this sort. Here the government feels it is its duty, as no doubt it is, to induce immigrants to settle on our unoccupied land, people go there to occupy them and the first necessity must be to see if they can make the land produce. They cannot do that without seed. The neighbours or residents there become securities for those immigrants for seed. I say that there should not be too great stringency for those who become sureties, and if continuing them as sureties would embarrass them and make it difficult for them to obtain their patents to enable them to have thorough freedom to deal with their own lands without any mortgage or lien or charge, then I say the government should do everything within its power, consistent with safety, in releasing those people who performed that generous act of becoming sureties for new settlers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—It has a wider range and is quite a different thing in the hands of governments than it would be in the hands of banks or private creditors. The government must take in the whole scope and effect of it on the country generally, and certainly the man who became surety for the immigrant upon his arrival in getting seed for his land, has done an act that should be rewarded with all the generosity which the government has power to display.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not for the new settlers that the seed was obtained.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—After hearing the observations of the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, I think the bill should be passed. The circumstances are such as would call for the passing of this bill. When the trouble occurred and the farmers lost their crops, the government came in, and in giving these loans they probably took one man as security for his neighbour, and very likely both lost their crops, and there was not very much difference as far as the government was concerned, in giving the grain absolutely or giving it as a loan. It all turned on the question whether they would have a crop next year. If they left the country and did not have a crop, the government would have no security. I suppose they did the best they could. One man got some seed grain and his neighbour got some grain, and they joined, giving the security in that way, and the government took the best security they could get. It was a risk. They did not know whether they would ever see a dollar of interest or principal. Fortunately, it turned out better, judging from what my hon. friend from Wolseley has said. A great many have repaid, and in the case of those that have not paid, the property has become valuable. So that there is hardly any question about the value, and now the titles are somewhat in jeopardy. The man who does not owe anything himsel is still security for somebody else who does owe and he wants to get the title to his land. It is important to a man to obtain his title, and he is not able to obtain it because he is security for somebody else who has ample property to pay his own debt. I think there can be no possible harm in giving the power to the government to release the surety and take the primary debtor where the security is good. Of course that has to be left to the discretion of the government. A dishonest ministry could, no doubt, use that for political purposes, but a government is entrusted with administration. Although we may not have the most unbounded confidence in any particular ministry, they are entrusted with this and we will have to give them this along with the rest of the trust. On the whole, the bill is a fair one, and the act of the government in 1886 was a wise one, even though there was a prospect of the whole of it being lost, to try to keep those people on their land. It has turned out to be extremely wise. Prosperity has set in, and the farms are taken up and they are good securities for the money the government loaned and there can be no possible harm, excepting the bare possibility of an administration turning it to political account, which I think will not be done, and therefore I shall give the bill my support.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read at length at the table.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the 41st rule.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I would like to know the amount of the indebtedness.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no knowledge of that. It extends over a large area, but it would be a small sum. Perhaps the hon. gentleman from Wolseley could tell the amount due.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It is not very large, I cannot tell what it is. Most of it has been paid. It is only the very poorest people that have not paid.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I)—Millions are not considered large amounts now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State said that these lands were worth the money, and that the people could repay the loan, and my hon. friend from Wolseley says that these people are poor. I sympathize with the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, and the hon. member from Wolseley, but I would go further. If these people are in the state which hon. gentlemen say they are, the government had better make a clean sweep of it and forgive them the debt, particularly if the land is sufficient. The whole secret lies in the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley. I remember a case coming up before, where they refused positively to pay, upon the ground that they were the original settlers, and underwent many hardships, which was quite true. The drought which followed deprived them almost of sustenance in the country, certainly of a proper living. They had to earn their living in other places : therefore they should not be asked to pay. But if prosperity has fallen upon them, as has been indicated, and the land is worth it, and these people are able to pay, should they not pay their debts as well as anybody else, even if their creditors are the government, and if it be understood that in consideration of their being the first settlers who went into that country, there should be great consideration shown to them and the government had better introduce a bill to wipe out the indebtedness altogether.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is not suggested.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am suggesting it. I would go further and relieve the debtor himself and not merely the surety. If the sureties are to be released why not release the debtor? Logically, I think it is the only conclusion to which we can come, and more particularly taking the view expressed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto in this matter. These are not the immigrants who had just gone there, but they had been there for years and misfortune followed them. I do not oppose the bill, but I have given my opinion as to the principle involved in the bill, which I think is a wrong one.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not wish to oppose the bill, but it is a strange thing that the government should come to the Senate with a bill about which they cannot tell us anything. They do not know the amount of the indebtedness. They say the land is sufficient security, but if we are going to change the security we should know what the amount is. It is said that it is not very much. Can the hon. gentleman for Wolseley tell us how much it is? It may be very small in the estimation of the government, because millions are small amounts with them. Where formerly dollars would be considered a large amount, millions are not now considered large. The government should inform us how much the country is going to lose by this.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Not a dollar.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM — Then why change the securities? The hon. gentleman says they are able to pay.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I will read a letter which will explain the matter.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman has spoken. I do not intend to divide the House on the question. The government of this country came down to the Senate with a bill and they cannot tell us anything about it, only that a former government gave some seed grain to the inhabitants of the North-west and they want to change the security for the payment of the debt now. They say the land is good enough for it and the people of the North-west wanted to pay for it in statute labour. I have no objection if the government wipe out the whole thing, but I am not prepared to go it blind. I want to know what we are doing. I have great respect for the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, but he is not responsible in this case. It is the government. When the government appeal to the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, to know how much money this country is going to give away, I say they are not discharging the duty for which they are paid by the people of this country, and further I do not think they will ever collect the money.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I must make a few remarks in answer to what has been stated by the hon. gentleman from Monck. In 1886, as I stated before, there was a great drought in that country. In the fall of that year the farmers realized the importance of having seed for next year. They had not raised any crop. They made application to have seed grain given to them. The Minister or the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, Mr. H. H. Smith at that time, called a meeting at Regina and invited all the members of the North-west council to meet him. I happened to be a member of the North-west council at that time, and I met Mr. Smith at Regina. Mr. Davin was there, and a number of farmers from north of Regina. None of the farmers through that district had raised any grain except perhaps one or two. From early spring till late autumn there was no rain, and these men realized that there was a great doubt about raising a crop in that country. No one had been successful in raising a crop up to that time. They adopted the Ontario principle and waited till the frost got out of the ground. Up to that period they had no crop. It was all frosted to a large extent, and when the drought followed, they felt there was great risk in their continuing, and many of them had not money to buy seed grain and made application to the government to buy it for them. Mr. Ross and Mr. Davin and members of the North-west council were all present. Mr. Davin was spokesman for a number of farmers. He wanted the government to give them seed grain and take their I.O.U. for it. All they wanted was seed for twenty acres. I knew one farmer who had prepared over one hundred acres. Mr. Smith asked me my opinion, and I said give the farmers seed for what land they have prepared but make them give security. Do not give it without security. Mr. Smith said: "I will act on that advice. We will ask for full security." They gave a lien upon the land, taking the owner of the land and some other good man as security. The seed grain did not amount to a great deal. It was not much then. It would be very much more now if the government supplied the seed grain. I sowed one hundred bushels last year, but at that time fifty and sixty and twenty-five and thirty bushels was the amount which each farmer was in a position to ask for, because he had not any more land prepared for it. I have here a letter from a farmer asking me to see if the government would not relieve a man of the interest on the debt on the seed grain. The government declined to do so. I have a letter from that gentleman stating that he has paid the debt and interest, and that it amounted to $131. That man owned a section of land. He sold his land, and I suppose he could not get his deed because the seed grain was not paid for. I have a letter from the man stating he has paid that indebtedness. I venture to say that that is one of the largest debts against any man in the North-west Territories, and that man owned a section of land, forty head of cattle and several horses to my knowledge. That man said that he lost two crops in testing the country. I venture to say he has lost a thousand dollars in these two years in which he farmed and had no crop at all. He stuck to it, however, and he says that the government ought to relieve him. The late government gave him all the time he wanted, and I do not hesitate to say now that many of these men will be great losers in any case, but if the government had presented it to them they would not have done a bad act at all. At present the interest is more than the principal. This bill will relieve the man who is surety for another, so that he can get the patent for his land, and the original debtor has more property ten times over probably than will pay the debt.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We have not been told the amount of this indebtedness yet.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot give it to the hon gentleman. It would take two or three weeks to make it up. The amounts probably range from $20 to $75 or $100. I cannot tell anything more about it than that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the question put by the hon. gentleman from Monck is a pertinent one, and, if I might be permitted to make a suggestion, it would be that when questions of this kind came up the hon. gentleman should put himself in a position to answer these questions. It is a fair question. We are about relieving certain people of a responsibility to the government. How much does that amount to? The Minister of the Interior ought to tell us that in half an hour, and I think it is a source of legitimate complaint that in many of these questions on which we are asked to deliberate, we can get no information at all. If the information could be laid before the House pertinent to a question of this kind, or any other, it would save time. When those with whom I am associated were in the positions which these hon. gentlemen occupied, questions of that kind when asked were readily answered. I do not wish to dictate to the hon. gentleman or even make suggestions to him, but I think the hon. gentleman who has the bill in charge ought to be able to answer questions which are really pertinent to the matter before the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I had the honour of occupying a seat on the opposition side of this House for a great many years, and I do not think that during all that time, I ever pressed for such information as is asked for now. I cannot see how any gentleman who looks at this measure carefully, and with a dispassionate eye, can feel that there is any objection whatever to it. If the money of the country was being put at risk I could understand the anxiety of the hon. gentleman from Monck to know how much money would be likely to be lost. But the very wording of the bill shows that there is no money to be put at risk. It simply states that the lands of the men who have become surety for their neighbours shall be relieved where, upon inquiry, it is shown to the satisfaction of the Minister of the Interior, that land owned by, or entered as homestead by the primary debtor is liable and is, in the opinion of the government, sufficient security for the debt of the primary debtor. There is no risk at all. The probabilities are that the whole amount does not exceed $100,000, but if it amounted to a million it would not make any difference, as long as the country is satisfied that the land still held is sufficient security for the payment of the money. Some reference was made to the way in which private persons did their business. I have not had a great deal of business to do in the line of holding security for debt, but on more than one occasion during my own experience, where it has been shown that a certain property was sufficient for the amount we loaned on it, we released the other property holding that the property of the principal debtor was sufficient. Any reasonable mortgagee will release the property of the surety under such circumstances. Why should we hinder these people from getting their patents when we run no risk whatever? I am surprised at an hon. gentleman who usually shows so much common sense and wisdom as the hon. gentleman from Monck making objections to this measure.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What objection have I made? I simply asked for the amount of the indebtedness. The hon. gentleman was for a long time acting as leader of the opposition in this chamber, and he says he did not ask questions of this kind. All I can say is if he did not he did not do his duty to the people of the country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But he did.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I know he was of an inquiring turn of mind at that time. But now he is going back on himself and undertakes to lecture me because I want to know the amount due to the government for seed grain. I am not saying that I am opposed to the government remitting the debt altogether, but I want information. If it is a reasonable question the government should not be afraid to give me an answer. I consider when they are dealing with a matter of this kind it is a reasonable question to ask them what the amount of money is, how much is owing to the government of this country for the seed grain. I am not going to be lectured by the senior member from Halifax. I have a duty to perform here and I am going to do it without fear or favour, and I consider the government of this country are not treating the Senate fairly when they do not give the information asked for, and they should let this bill stand over until we get the information we want. There has been too much information refused this session. The government think because they have a strong majority in the other chamber that they can push anything through here without giving information.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend from Monck is in rather a warlike mood. He has been on the warpath for some time.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—You want some one after you.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have not come to terms of peace yet, but I hope we shall not do my hon. friend any harm in the contest, and perhaps he will not do us any harm. The hon. gentleman says this question is a reasonable one. It would be if he had given us notice that on the bill coming up he wanted this information. My hon. friend opposite has spoken about his readiness, when he led the government, always to give the information called for. Let the hon. gentleman look back over the Debates. I have been looking over them, and I can see the opposition are in a very much more inquiring mood in everything that relates to the measures of the government than my hon. friend beside me and my hon. friend behind me were before the change of government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say yes. Let us look at the question which my hon. friend puts and which he says is perfectly reasonable. I cannot give my hon. friend the information on that question. It is a matter of laudable information. It would be a proper thing to look up for the hon. gentleman if notice is given, but let us look at the question. It is our duty to have all the information necessary for the elucidation of the matter under discussion, and to enable the House to decide whether there are any risks to be taken which ought not to be taken in the measure which is proposed. A certain number of persons obtained seed grain from the government. They gave a lien upon their land which they had taken up, 160 acres in every instance and their personal security and the security of some neighbour. A number of these people have paid. It does not matter whether there is $500 or $500,000 due the government. The whole point is this: there is 160 acres pledged by the primary debtor for the seed grain which every primary debtor obtained. In the beginning, as the hon. gentleman said, the quantity obtained by each was relatively small compared with that which a farmer requires at the present day. The majority of the debtors, I believe, have paid. There are some who have not paid, and those who went security for them want to be relieved. The debt was incurred in 1886, nearly fourteen years ago, and there is fourteen years interest accumulated in some cases; in others the interest has been in whole or in part paid. The minister comes down with a bill and says this in effect that there are a number of those people who are surety who ask to be relieved. They do not say to the government you ought to press these men to pay immediately, or that they want their property seized unless they pay immediately.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Nobody wants that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is the duty of the government in that regard either to release the parties who have become security or to press the principal to pay. Now, we have not pressed the principal to pay. The hon. gentleman himself admits that it would not be desirable to press the principal unduly to pay or to take legal proceedings against him to compel him to pay immediately. The minister asks liberty in every case, where the primary debtor has sufficient property to furnish ample security, to release his surety in order that the surety may obtain a title to his lands. That is not an improper thing. It has been done over and over again. It was done many years ago in the case of liabilities incurred in the old province of Canada and I do not see anything improper in its being done now. As to the amount, it can have only a remote importance in the consideration of this bill. If the hon. gentleman had indicated in the regular way his desire to have a statement as to the amount of the indebtedness of each individual, he would have been entitle to that information, but he cannot expect a minister to be in a position to give information of that sort on the spur of the moment.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I expect the minister to give information when he comes here with a bill. He might naturally expect he would be asked that question. It is not my duty to do the work of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not asking that.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—When the hon. gentleman comes here with legislation he ought to be in a position to explain it. He does not tell us what the amount is, whether it is $100,000 or $10,000. I am not opposing the bill, but when the government of the country comes down with legislation and wants the sanction of the Senate, every member of the House has a right to ask for any information that he thinks proper, and if the government can furnish it, all right, but they say they do not know anything about it. They bring us legislation, and they cannot tell us the amount of money involved in it. They say, give us power to do so and so—give the Minister of the Interior a chance to go and value this land. They have every confidence in the Minister of the Interior, but I have not, and I question if this power might be used, not to the advantage of the country generally, or the farmers in the North-west, but to the advantage of a certain party. I have seen a good deal of this in my day. I am an old bird, I have been through the mill a good deal, and I think it is the duty of the Senate to see how much is involved in this bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the Minister of Justice says he has been looking over the Debates and he finds the gentlemen on that side of the House were not nearly of so inquiring a disposition as the opposition in the Senate on the present occasion are—that is, when the late government were in power. There is an implied disparagement of the gentlemen who are sitting round him in that statement, and it is my duty to say, having been here for some years and having for some time occupied a seat in the government, that I found that these gentlemen were most persistent in their inquiring. I venture to say anything that would escape the observation and the criticism of the hon. gentleman from Halifax must have been pretty good, and the Secretary of State was equally persistent. In all these years we could not get anything passed. It must be virtue itself, to have it escape their criticism.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman never could have been criticised on these conditions. Why the hon. gentleman is virtue itself.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am glad you have come to that opinion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—While this discussion has been going on I went to see if I could get a a memo. from the Minister of Interior. He could not give the details, the indebtedness is made up of such small amounts. I said give me any memo. you have. He said that during the last fiscal year about 500 individuals had discharged their seed grain indebtedness, the total sum being about $10,000—that would be about $20 each. Mr. Sifton's estimate of the total amount still due would be about $131,000. He thinks there are about 4,400 individuals who owe that amount. I do not know that all the accounts are kept here. They are probably at local agencies.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It is about $30 apiece.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Why did not the hon. gentleman tell us that when we asked for it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not know I could get it. I am anxious to give the fullest information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I always like when people make general statements affecting others, that they would give illustration to sustain their assertions. My hon. friend says he has examined the Debates and has come to certain conclusions. He did not give a single instance. When I occupied the position which the hon. gentleman does, I never came to the House with any bill affecting any other department outside of my own, without having a brief, and an explanation from the department, of what was wanted and what was intended, and if it were a bill of any intricate character, such as the Weights or Measures, or Inspection, I never failed to have an officer to give the information.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That question I understood myself. I did not need an officer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the hon. gentleman has perpetrated a gross insult to this House. If the hon. gentleman had the information within his own knowledge, he should have answered the question immediately on its being asked.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There was no question put.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There was a question put by the hon. gentleman from Monck, and you did not answer it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I said I had the information with regard to the weights and measures. That is the measure the hon. gentleman referred to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was not doing so, and the hon. gentleman is either wilfully dull of comprehension, or designedly misrepresenting what I said.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I have said anything contrary to the rules of the House I will withdraw it and apologize. I gave as an illustration of the manner in which business used to be conducted, which the hon. gentleman took objection to. I did not accuse the hon. gentleman of not having information with regard to the weights and measures. I merely gave that as an illustration of the manner in which I conducted the business and you made——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has no right to address his remarks to me personally.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will do that no more. I will have more respect for myself. Had I not been interrupted in the manner in which I have been, there would have been no necessity for the hon. gentleman calling me to order, but when I am addressing the House and replying to statements which other hon. gentlemen have made, I must be permitted to give illustrations which I think necessary to enforce what I say without being constantly interrupted and contradicted.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (128) "An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act."—(Mr. Scott.)

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What are the changes made by this bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It refers to barrels for apples.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—There is one condition I would like to add, and that is that the apples in the centre of the barrels shall be as good as the apples at the ends. How a barrel is made is a small matter compared with the kind of apples that are in it. It is an outrage the way apples are sold in this country at the present day. I went the other day to buy some fruit to send to my grandchildren, and bought some apples because they looked so well on top. I paid sixty-five cents for a basket when the general price was sixty cents. The first layer of fruit I found was very nice, but the rest was not fit to feed to the pigs.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Ontario apples?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I presume they were. I bought another basket. The top layer was good, but the balance was not good. In the North-west we buy apples by the carload. They come from Ontario. The freight adds largely to the cost of apples, and I have never bought a barrel of them yet that half of them were not poor in the middle of the barrel. You bring in a bill to regulate the size of the barrel. That is a small matter. Let us have the apples packed in a uniform manner.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman had better get his apples from Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—If the hon. gentleman came to Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, where the apples are put up by good honest farmers, he would find them as good in the middle as in the ends. If a man does not pack them that way he is soon known. This bill, it seems to me, is for the purpose of encouraging a branch of trade which perhaps is somewhat dull at present, that is barrel making. We know apples are frequently put up in barrels which had been used previously as flour barrels or for some other purpose, but which would not come within the requirements of the present bill, and I think the bill will have a good effect in giving employment to the coopers.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Do they not change the weight of lime also by this bill?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to tell me the meaning of cylindrical veneer barrels? I do not know what it means.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know what veneering means. It seems extraordinary they should veneer an apple barrel.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—It is a common custom now to have the wood sliced; just the one veneer composes the barrel. It is not made of staves, but of veneer wood, a quarter of an inch thick, and it makes a cylinder.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am afraid my hon. friend's explanation is not altogether satisfactory. I have very little doubt that this bill has been prepared after consultation by people who perhaps know more about the subject than any of us. I was only curious to know the meaning of the words. As to the general principle of the bill providing that a barrel of certain dimensions should be used for our export trade in apples, I think it is decidedly right. A barrel of Canadian apples should be a barrel of uniform size. The barrel should be neat and look respectable. It is needless to say, however, that the inside of it should be as respectable as the outside. I am afraid there is a good deal of this work done by Canadian fruit men, not only in Ontario but nearer home, to myself, than Ontario, that is of putting up the best apples for the English markets, and something that is not nearly so good for the home market, and I am afraid that is why the hon. gentleman from Wolseley is not getting as good apples as they ought to be. At the same time it is also complained of, and not without reason, that there is not the same conscientious care all round taken in sending apples from Ontario and Nova Scotia to the English market. We have no right to cheat one another that is certain, but whatever may be said about the home market, it is penny wise and pound foolish policy to send anything but a good article to the English market, because the exporter is sure in the end to lose more by it than he can make. I was pleased to hear Professor Robertson last year, in discussing the question of fruit production before the committee of the House of Commons on agriculture, state as far as he could ascertain, not more than five per cent of the apples we send to the British market from Canada are dishonestly packed. From the inquiries he made to the buyers, that was about the proportion, but it ought to be better. There ought to be no bad packing at all. The reputation of the country is at stake, and if a man sends a bad article, his neighbours are likely to suffer from the wrong as well as himself. I have shipped apples to the English market myself, and it has been discussed as to whether it would not be possible to have an inspection of all the apples that went to that market. I know that the best class of exporters and farmers would like to see that brought about, and the fruit-growers association have passed resolutions on the subject, but there is a great difficulty in finding a practical way. If a barrel of apples is likely to be opened at the point of shipment, it is almost ruinous to that barrel. The opening up of the barrel and putting the apples back carelessly into their places, might destroy them. The opinion of many is that education, teaching farmers and packers to do what is right, will probably reach the desired result better than by means of inspection. I am glad that this bill has been submitted. I take it that both these descriptions of barrels have the same capacity. One refers to a barrel with a straight stave and the other to a barrel with a bulge. My hon. friend from Wolseley asks if there is anything about lime in the bill. There is a clause which I think is legalizing the weight of lime at seventy instead of eighty pounds. I know this was before us last year and we settled on eighty pounds. I had a doubt that eighty pounds was too much for good lime. The process of burning is the expulsion of carbon, and I think for good lime seventy pounds is nearer the weight than eighty. There might be lime for agricultural purposes that would weigh eighty pounds, but no farmer would buy that weight at all.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (178) "An Act respecting the Quebec Harbour Commissioners."—(Mr. Scott.)

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Perhaps the House will allow me as a question of privilege, to refer to a report of the proceedings of yesterday which appeared in the Gazette, and which is no doubt due to the carelessness of the printer. In discussing the bill relating to the Departments of Customs and of Inland Revenue I am made to say the following :

Hon. David Mills moved the second reading of the bill respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue. This bill, he explained, was for the purpose of increasing the salaries of the ministers of these two departments from $5,000 to $7,000 a year, the same as the other ministers. The ministers under the provisions of this bill were to receive salaries from the past year at $7,000, an increase to which they were neither morally or legally entitled to receive. He had heard of boodling before, but if ministers were allowed to do this sort of thing openly what would they do behind the scenes. If this bill was allowed to become law he considered that it would be one of the greatest pieces of legalized larceny ever perpetrated and he would ask the Senate to reject the bill. He concluded by moving the six months' hoist.

Every hon. gentleman knows that I said nothing of the sort. I proposed the second reading of the bill and the hon. gentleman from Richmond, who moved the six months' hoist, made a speech in which these words are included, and the introductory remarks which I addressed to the House and a portion of the speech of the hon. gentleman from Richmond are attributed to me. I wish to make this statement in order that the newspapers may not quote the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Richmond, published in the Montreal Gazette as remarks addressed by me to this House.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (190) "An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the constructions of the lines of railway therein mentioned."—(Mr. Mills.)

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (85) "An Act to amend the Railway Act. He said :—Hon. gentlemen will see, by looking at the bill, that the first portion of it is practically a proposal to amend section 90 of the Railway Act, which confers certain general powers upon any railway company that may be incorporated under a special Act. This clause is in further amendment of that section. There is power to enter on a highway for certain purposes here. There is a provision that travel shall not be obstructed. There is a provision relating to the erection of telegragh wires, to the power to remove them, to the power to remove the telegraph poles under certain circumstances, that in carrying on these works injury shall not be done to trees, and protecting the supervision of the municipalities in respect to the operations that are being carried on within a municipality. Then, apart from this supplementary section, which deals with powers that have been conferred on some railway corporation and which it is now proposed to embrace in the general Railway Act, there is a further clause amending section 192, which amendment is in this bill called 192 a, providing that when any company has power, under a special Act to construct, maintain, and use a bridge for railway purposes, or for railway and general traffic purposes, such power shall be exercised subject to the following provisions. Then the first provision is that plans are to be approved by the Governor General in Council, that equal rights in passage of the bridge are to be secured to all railway companies requiring to use it, that the rates of toll to be charged are to be approved of by the Governor in Council, that the disputes are to be determined between the railway corporations using the bridge by the Railway Committee, and there is also a provision for the issuing of bonds and for other purposes. Then there is the further clause—and that embraces the whole bill—amending section 273 by placing the two subsections of that section as they now stand in the bill and inserting others in their places. The two subsections as they stand in the Act, are as follows:—

Every person who enters upon any railway train without the knowledge and consent of an officer or servant of a company, with the intent fraudulently to be carried upon the said railway without paying fare thereon, is liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding $10, or in default of payment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten days.

Subsection 3 reads:

Any person charged with an offence under this section shall be a competent witness on his own behalf.

The two subsections substituted read as follows:—

2. Every person who wilfully breaks down, injures, weakens or destroys any gate, fence, erection, building or structure of a company, or removes, obliterates, defaces or destroys any printed or written notice, direction, order, by-law or regulation of a company, or any section of or extract from this Act or any other Act of Parliament, which a company or any of its officers or agents have caused to be posted, attached or affixed to or upon any fence, post, gate, building or erection of the company, or any car upon any railway, shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, or, in default of payment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two months.

3. Every person who enters upon any railway train without the knowledge or consent of an officer or servant of the company with intent fraudulently to be carried upon the said railway without paying fare thereon, or who wilfully obstructs or impedes any officer or agent of the company in the execution of his duty upon any train, railway, or upon any of the premises of the company, or who, not being an employé of the company, willfully trespasses by entering upon any of the stations, cars or buildings of the company in order to occupy the same for his own purposes, shall be liable to the like penalty or imprisonment, and shall be liable to be proceeded against and dealt with in like manner, as mentioned in subsection 2 of this section in regard to the offences therein mentioned.

No. 2 is a new provision altogether. No. 2 in the present Act is No. 3 in the bill, and No. 3 becomes No. 4 in the bill. It gives the necessary protection against depredations upon railway property.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the 41st rule.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think there is any great objection to the suspension of the rule. This bill has been discussed and analysed in the other House, and the two clauses to which there would be objection have been eliminated. I think the amendments are in the right direction and will assist in future legislation by all private companies, such bills being made subject to these amendments to the Railway Act, which I think is the principal intention of the measure.

The motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

On subsection e.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How far does this clause extend? Many people in the different towns and cities in the country, plant shade trees, which are really their own property. Have the municipality the power to permit the cutting down of these without compensation to the parties who planted them?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think not.

The CHAIRMAN—Sub-clause k covers the point.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I notice in the first clause of this bill in the amendment that is proposed to be made to section 90 of the Railway Act, that the said subsection shall not apply to any company incorporated or chartered under any Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed prior to the 1st January, 1899. That means that that section is not retroactive. This amendment we are dealing with has reference to bridges. Is there the same provision in the bill with respect to it that it shall not apply to any company incorporated before 1st of January, 1899.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. These clauses are new in the General Railway Act, but there are many individual acts recently passed that contain exactly the same provision and this is to do away with the necessity of repeating them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think there is this difference between the amendment we are making to section 192, which relates to bridges, and section 90 that refers to railway companys generally, that the amendment, which is altogether a new one, which is made to section 90, does not apply to any railway company chartered before the 1st of January last. I do not think there is any such limitation in regard to the amendment we are making to section 134.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The first section reads:

1. Section 90 of the Railway Act, chapter 29 of the statutes of 1888, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following subsection; provided that the said subsection shall not apply to any company incorporated or chartered under any Act of the Parliament of Canada passed prior to the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine.

2. When any company has power by any Act of the Parliament of Canada to construct and maintain lines of telegraph or telephone, or lines for the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity, such company may, with the consent of the municipal council or other authority having jurisdiction over any highway, square or other public place, enter thereon for the purpose of exercising the said power, and, as often as the company thinks proper, may break up and open any highway, square, or other public place, subject, however, to the following provisions.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is whether it is a new company or an old one?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Providing the work has not been commenced.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could not apply to any work under way.

The sub-clause was adopted.

On sub-clause b.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is a rule acted upon for some time. It prevents a waste of capital where one bridge will suffice, it is not worth while having two. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council fixes the terms.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They would have to pay the toll.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

The sub-clause e was adopted.

On sub-clause c.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In reference to matter of tolls on bridges, might I ask the hon. Secretary of State if it is clearly understood that in regard to the bridge proposed to be built under the bill providing for the railway between Charlottetown and Murray Harbour, the toll collected for the traffic will belong to the provincial government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fancy so. I will make the inquiry. It seems only reasonable.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole on consideration of Bill (156) "An Act to amend the General Inspection Act."

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One clause of this bill was held over for further consideration at the instance of the hon. gentleman from Monck. I sent over to the department to see if they had any expert information on this clause, and they said they had not. The law has been in its present form for a number of years. It provides that No. 1 oats shall be sound, plump, clean and free from other grain. No. 2 oats shall be sound, reasonably clean, and reasonably free from other grain, and rejected oats consist of oats damp and unsound, &c. In the bill a further classification has been made, as hon. gentlemen will see, but there has been no alteration for very many years, as far back as I have been able to trace; and no necessity for a bushel of oats to amount to thirty-four pounds. My hon. friend suggests that the classification applicable to wheat should practically be applied to oats, that is, that No. 1 should weigh thirty-four pounds at least; No. 2 not less than thirty-two pounds; No. 3 not less than thirty pounds. Of course I am quite unable to give the House the information on the subject, because it is purely a matter for experts and those who are in the trade. We should not make any change except with a good deal of reflection, because we do not know what the effect would be. At present a bushel of oats means thirty-four pounds, whether it is light or heavy oats. My hon. friend has personal experience and I do not propose to place my judgment against his. I only mention that fact, that in disturbing the law as it has been for many years, we might be taking a plunge which might be a mistake.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It might be well, in view of what the Secretary of State has said, to adhere to that law as we have it. There is this difficulty in the matter of oats, the oats produced in one part of the country differs immensely from the oats of other parts. I come from a province where we claim to raise the best oats in America. We can do it. I am sorry to say we do not all do it, but the soil and climate of Prince Edward Island are peculairly adopted for cultivation of the oats. In other parts of the country oats do not fill as fully, nor do they clean off the ends so as to pack like barley. The Prince Edward Island oats are more like Scotch or Irish oats than anything else. We might go this far and say that No. 1 should be clean, plump and free from other grains, and from oats of any other colour, but if we were to say any particular weight as being necessary, we would find a great deal of difficulty on account of the different quality of oats grown in other parts of the country? I know that in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the oats do not fill nearly so plump and full as in Prince Edward Island, and from what I know of the North-west oats it is the same. On the whole, it would be perhaps just as well to let the Act remain as it is.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It is good to have Conservative principles and stick to what we have always done, but it does not require expert evidence, only a little common sense, to consider this question. A bushel of oats in Prince Edward Island is thirty-four pounds to-day is it not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is all over the country.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I know they raise heavy oats in Prince Edward Island, and I do not see why you could not put the weight down in the way I have suggested: that is, No. 2 oats should be thirty-two pounds to the bushel, and No. 3, thirty pounds to the bushel. I will hand in an amendment to the chairman and he can take the sense of the House on it. A bushel of oats is a bushel of oats, but if you take thirty-four pounds of oats raised in Prince Edward Island, I venture to say there is as much food in it as there is in thirty-six pounds of some oats in the province of Ontario. It does not at all affect the case by saying a bushel of No. 2 oats shall be so much, because it will show to the man that is buying what its quality is. Besides, by doing so, it will encourage those who are raising grain to have good clean oats and have them weigh as much as possible. Even when they come to fan them, it will encourage them to blow away light oats and get as near No. 1 as possible. But if you are going to take light grain, which is not half filled, it will be a mistake. Oats to weigh well must be sowed early, so as to ripen, because when the sun gets hot in August, that is the time the straw grows and the grain does not fill. I cannot see, for the life of me, what difference it will make if oats would weigh forty pounds to the bushel. It does not lessen the price of the grain to classify it that way. You do it with other grain. You leave a man to take a sample in his hand, to say whether the oats are well filled or half chaff.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There are two things we have to keep separate in our minds. The Weights and Measures Act fixed thirty-four pounds as the standard weight of a bushel of oats. Here we are grading and trying to find a basis for a grade. In the whole of Canada, with respect to wheat and barley, I do not see that there is a very great deal of difference how you fix it, because in our end of the country and in Ontario and the North-west, good wheat varies but little in weight; but there is a most decided difference in oats. Before confederation the province regulated their own standards of weight and measures and in Prince Edward Island we had an old official standard of thirty-six pounds to the bushel, and that was put away down below the average weight. But we found a difficulty in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. There the standard was thirty-four pounds and it caused a great deal of difficulty, so we put down our standard to thirty-four pounds in order to conform to the standard of the markets. If we were to establish Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in Canada on a basis of weight, it would create the greatest possible confusion, because in one part of the country I know from experience thirty-four pounds represents very respectable and good oats. I know in my province it does not. Take a Winchester bushel of well-grown and well cleaned black oats, and in a good year they will generally come very close to forty pounds to the bushel. Take the Egyptian white oats and they will go forty-five to forty-eight pounds to the measured bushel. When a farmer sells oats he sells at thirty-four pounds to the bushel. My hon. friend from Monck will see the difficulty the moment we begin to establish any particular weight as a basis for oats. The moment we come to make weight a basis for grading oats, a difficulty presents itself which we do not meet in wheat or barley, for I find east grown and west grown barley are pretty much the same in regard to plumpness and weight. I think it will be better to leave the law as it stands.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I know there is a marked injustice. If a Winchester bushel weighs but thirty pounds, and it takes thirty-four pounds of oats to make a bushel, I am sure there is not the value in it that there is in the thirty-six pounds that my hon. friend speaks of. With regard to barley, the quality is not altogether fixed by weight; it is the colour that regulates the price. Barley might be very plump and weigh heavily, but if it is off colour it is put down as seed barley. If the House rejects my amendment, I have nothing further to say. I do my duty in the interests of the country as far as I know how. I must be very dull of comprehension if I cannot see the difference between oats with the hulls partly filled, and plump oats. People can do as they have been doing, look at the oats and weigh them, and if they do not come up to thirty-four pounds to the bushel pay so much less. But oats should be classified, because it would be an inducement to the farmer to clean his grain properly and sell good oats.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not think that the view which the hon. gentleman from Monck takes of this question is the correct one.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—You are for chaff, are you?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—No, I want to see the oats properly cleaned and properly sent to market, and if we are going to say No. 3 oats shall weigh thirty pounds to the bushel, it will be such a grade of oats that nobody would buy it for anything but chaff in our province. The description in the bill before us is sufficient to grade oats. It does not matter whether No. 1 oats weighs more than thirty-four pounds to the bushel. It is No. 1 if it answers the description here, and the same with No. 2 and No. 3. Oats which are unsound, or damp, or dirty, are considered in our province unfit for market altogether. That is the way they are described in the bill, and I think that is sufficient.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am quite aware that the amendment of my hon. friend will be defeated; nevertheless, it is on the right track, and I will tell you why. I have bought a good deal of oats in the North-west. What is the first stipulation? The oats shall weigh so much to the bushel. You get oats in Canada all the way from twenty-five to forty-five pounds to the bushel. I have raised oats in New Brunswick that would not weigh more than twenty-five pounds to the bushel and in the North-west that would go forty pounds to the bushel, I would grade the best, No. 1 extra. Now, I want to buy a carload of oats from a dealer. The oats may be late and may not be well developed. They may answer the description in this bill and yet be light oats. The result is you do not know what you are getting. If I buy a carload of oats I ask how much will they weigh to the bushel and I pay two or three cents more per bushel for them if the weight is above the standard. I would have No. 1 extra weigh thirty-six pounds; No. 1, thirty-four pounds; No. 3, thirty-two pounds. The standard bushel will be thirty-four pounds, I understand, and when you get thirty-four pounds, a good deal of which is virtually chaff, it makes a difference. I have bought light oats very cheaply by the bushel. The proper way is to have the grain graded by weight, and if I go to a man in Winnipeg for a carload of oats of a certain quality, I know then what I am getting.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The difficulty is, there is such a great variation in oats which if you undertook to classify according to weight would come in the first class. Take for instance in Prince Edward Island my hon. friend from Marshfield might insist that oats should weigh forty pounds to the bushel to be of the first class extra and thirty-six pounds to be the first class, and if they fell below that, to be of the second class, but no Ontario man would be satisfied with that classification, because thirty-four pounds would be as heavy as oats grown with him. You would have great difficulty in classifying according to weight on account of this variation in weight itself in different parts of the Dominion, but you can classify them fairly well in the manner provided in the bill.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

LOTTERIES IN QUEBEC.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I wish to bring under the consideration of the House a matter which I consider of great importance. I suppose hon. gentlemen are all aware that the House of Commons have not thought proper or convenient to pass the Criminal Code Amendment Bill, which was introduced in this House some time ago by the Minister of Justice, and occupied the time of this House for several days in the endeavour to make the Act as perfect as possible. The effect of throwing the bill over to another session has caused the lottery question in Montreal to assume gigantic proportions. I am almost afraid to state the amount that it is expected will be invested in the lottery business. Therefore, I think it behooves us, at any rate, to protest against the action of the Commons in dropping this measure, which was introduced by the Minister of Justice, who is, of course, the administrator of all judicial matters in this country. I do not know whether it would be parliamentary or not that a protest from this chamber should be presented to the House of Commons, and to suggest that, even at this late date, at the risk of keeping the members here for a short time longer, whether it would be advisable, under the circumstances, that they should pass the bill, in order that it might be brought into operation as soon as possible, to prevent these nefarious transactions being carried on as they are at the present time.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—What transactions?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—These lotteries at Montreal. I do not know what you call them. I have seen several articles in the newspapers severely commenting on the fact that they are allowed to continue, and stating the amount of money which would probably be lost by the poor people, because we all know that these things are taken up by the poor people, I am almost afraid to estimate the amount, but it is said to be millions. In this case the Commons have not performed their duty. They talk of reforming the Senate, but if such a thing occurs again a reform of the House of Commons would be more in keeping with the condition of affairs in this country up to the present time. I feel it my duty to bring this matter before the House, because we all took a very lively interest in the amendments to the Criminal Code. We spent several days on the bill and the Minister of Justice, I have no doubt, spent a great deal of time and gave a great deal of attention to the various amendments proposed. It is a reflection upon him that the Commons have thought proper to withhold their consideration of this important question. They have had time enough, as we all know. They have been squabbling over matters of trivial importance and have allowed matters of great importance to pass unnoticed. It is beyond my comprehension. I do not know whether I am in order in bringing the matter before the Senate, but I hope they will take it in the spirit in which it was intended, which is merely to give my opinion in respect to the conduct of the Commons in the matter. Hon. gentlemen will know better than I do what course to take, if any course can be taken, and I do hope in the interest of justice and of the people of this country, that something will be done to carry out the provisions of the bill amending the Criminal Code, as introduced by the Minister of Justice. It rests with the Senate to say whether it is convenient or proper that we should take notice of this matter in the way that I have suggested.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I very much regret that the measure which was carried through this House, which embraced a good many suggestions that were made by judges in various parts of the country, as the text in the Criminal Code required correction both with regard to procedure and questions of ambiguity as well as others, has been dropped. The House of Commons, I believe, allowed the bill to stand over because there was likely to be a very considerable amount of discussion upon some of the provisions of the bill, and among others, that provisions to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, the question of these art associations and art lotteries in Montreal. Some persons have been very much in favour of these institutions. They were organized, it was said, for the purpose of encouraging art, whereas others have declared that they had degenerated into gambling institutions, if they ever had an art feature connected with them, and that they are inflicting serious injury upon a good many of the labouring classes, especially upon boys and girls that are employed in some of the large factories. I regret that the measure could not become law this session. I trust that it may, at no distant period, become law. We have the slaughter of the innocents every session, towards the close, and it has been my fate to submit to the slaughter of this measure in the present session. I say again with my hon. friend that I regret that the bill has not become law, but I believe it was the anxiety of the House of Commons to bring the session to a conclusion, and with a certain knowledge that a number of parties were opposed to the measure and it would likely protract the session for some days if persisted in, that caused the measure to be thrown over.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (179) "An Act respecting the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal."—(Mr. Scott).

SAFETY OF SHIPS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day being called:

Committee of the whole House on Bill (170) "An Act respecting the safety of ships."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said:—This bill is not printed in the Senate form, and as it was introduced in the House of Commons it consisted of several clauses. The only clause which comes up to this House is the first clause. If hon. gentlemen have the Commons bill before them, they can see what it is. All the clauses have been struck out except the one. The Act provides penalties for ships going out, without a permit by the port warden, with what are called deck loads, after the 1st October, and the shipping men claim that there is no possible danger with steamships that sail before the 12th October in any year. It is chiefly at the instance of the shipping interests of Quebec that the bill is being promoted.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—How is it in England?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are much more particular about deck loads than we are. The Plimsoll Act is in force there.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Will it not affect the insurance?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill is introduced at the instance of the ship-owners, and it is a matter entirely with themselves. They say they are very careful and never exceed a proper deck load. They assert that steam vessels sailing before the 12th October ought to be exempt from any condition as to inspection by the port warden in regard to deck loads.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—As I understand, the object of this bill it is to conform more closely to the English law than to any law of our own. The English law is that no vessel shall arrive at a port in Great Britain with a larger deck load than three feet in height after the 1st November. This law is so interpreted as to allow a vessel to sail from this side of the Atlantic up to the first day of October with such deck load, assuming it would occupy thirty days for the voyage, giving sufficient time. The captain has to make an affidavit that he sailed at a certain date to arrive at his destination before the 1st November. At the time this law was passed there were very few steamers carrying deck loads of timber and deals, as they are doing now. The steamboat owners claim that a steamship leaving Canada on the 1st October would be due to arrive in England before the 1st of November. A steamer should cross in from twelve to fifteen days and the government, possibly wisely, has fixed their sailing date the 12th October. It is the arriving on the other side that is the important matter, and not the date of sailing from Canada. A steamer leaving here on the 12th October is as likely to arrive at her destination in time as a sailing vessel leaving on the first of the month. Parties owning vessels sailing from Canadain ports are anxious to get the sailing date with a large deck load extended to as late a date as possible, but underwriters look suspiciously upon it. People in the maritimes provinces have been very unfortunate this year, having to pay an extra rate of premium of insurance on their cargoes, on account of losses which occurred in the River St. Lawrence. When we remonstrated with the underwriters, they told us that the loss occurred in British North America and we have to help make it up, and such extra charges have become extremely serious. Where on and before the 1st August previous to this we had insured our cargoes effected at from a half of one per cent to one per cent for the voyage, and sailing vessels at one per cent up to the 1st August, this year they have doubled our insurance to one per cent on steamships and two per cent on sailing vessels before this date and add another one per cent on it after the 1st of August, and then one per cent addititional every ten days up to the 1st of October, so that it became almost prohibitory for us to ship by a sailing vessel, after say, the 1st of September. Sailing vessels are now becoming scarce and we look more to steam. If the insurance companies are willing to concede a discount on our insurance, if we have the deck load inspected and the port warden gives a certificate that the ship is sea-worthy with an extra deck load up to that period, it will be a great relief to the ship-owner and the shippers as well, because no matter what taxes are put on a vessel, the charterer has to pay them eventually, and it comes out of the proceeds that we eventually receive. I am sorry the minister has not been able to see his way clear to go into the matter more fully than he has done. This bill is intended to be a relief to shippers, and I understand that a minister without portfolio had been in communication with the underwriters on the other side, and they had agreed under certain conditions of restricting the deck load by getting a port warden certificate, that they would consider the reduction of rates. However, it is too late in the session now. Mr. Dobell is now on the other side, and there is no one apparently that will take the responsibility of advising very strongly the course that should be adopted. The move is so far in the right direction, and there can be no objection to the granting of this one clause, but it is unfortunate that it does not go still further and relieve us of some of the burdens which are imposed upon us by extra insurance premiums.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As the hon. gentleman who has just spoken represents the minister without portfolio in the House, will he be kind enough to tell me something which I cannot quite understand? Had all these regulations that are now declared not to apply to steamships up to the 12th October, applied to steamships up to the present time.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—They had.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And we are now proposing to exempt steamships sailing up to the 12th October from these regulations?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—How would that act with reference to the premiums charged by the underwriters?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—A certificate that the ship is sea-worthy should be obtained.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—This question has been discussed in the press of the place from which I come, and the great difficulty is that the underwriters will not effect the insurance except at 4 per cent extra.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The present law permits deck loads up to the 1st October and this bill extends that period twelve days.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The measure has been pretty clearly explained by the hon. gentleman from Northumberland. The clause, as it stands, is to exempt all steamships—not sailing vessels—from the penalties provided in one section of the Act referred to, and to allow steamships to load just as heavily as they please up to the 12th October. My hon. friend from St. John has very properly inquired as to how it will affect the rates charged by the underwriters—whether the extension of that time would not induce the underwriters to charge a heavier rate of insurance than they do at the present time. That is the only point, and it is for the shippers to understand how it will affect them. Before going further, I desire to say that this bill, although short, containing only one clause, is very important, affecting the shipping interests of the Dominion. The question is not only how much further will this affect the underwriters in the old country, but how far will it come in contact with the provisions of the Plimsoll Act, and what effect will it have upon those who do a good deal of shipping? This is another illustration of the bad effect of introducing important measures at the dying moments of the session.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This was introduced on the 10th July.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But it did not come up here before. All the bills which have come up to us yesterday, and to-day, are government measures, and if they were introduced in the Commons and had been there for two or three months, it is no reason why we should be asked to pass them without knowing their contents, or without being able to make inquiry as to what effect they would have on the interests of the country. We have had most important measures brought up to us, measures involving the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars. It may be said that the Senate, not having the power to deal with questions of that kind other than to accept or reject them, it makes very little difference what time they come here. I do not take that view of the question. A question like this, particularly, is one that we should have before us sufficiently long to justify our voting for the principles involved in it. My hon. friend says that has been the practice for years. It has been too much the practice. The hon. leader of the House will remember that months ago I referred to what might probably occur at the last hours of the session, and I then intimated to them that the Commons must not be surprised if the senators insisted upon taking a sufficient length of time to acquire a knowledge of the measures which were brought before them, and if they were kept for three or four days by the Senate, in order that we could give due and proper consideration to these measures, I think it would teach them a lesson that might improve their conduct in the future, and that would be the best kind of improvement that we could adopt. I do not feel inclined to take any and every measure thrown down to us, and without a moment's consideration, to place them upon the statute-book, unless perhaps it be the Supply Bill, and we know what the practice has been with regard to that. Further than a short discussion on its contents, it is generally allowed to go. What I have said I do not say in any spirit of carping, but I think the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Secretary of State will admit the force of my remarks. Here is an illustration: the hon. gentleman from Northumberland (Mr. Snowball) is the only man who has given any indication of understanding what the bill is. Is he the "Old Man" of the sea representing the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not object to this bill, simply because I do not now what effect it will have. I take it for granted that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries must have known what he was doing when he introduced it. Though Mr. Dobell is looking after bottle-necked ships, or unsinkable ships, I should suppose the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who was born and has lived by the sea, has a fair knowledge of what he is doing in his department, and how this will affect shipping, and I think it is rather a reflection on the minister of that department for the hon. gentleman from Northumberland to say that Mr. Dobell not being here, there is no one to tell him what he should do. Let us hope that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows his duties better.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not see anything to complain of in the provisions of this bill as it comes to this House. The hon. leader of the opposition has spoken of the late period at which many bills have come to the Senate this session. That is true. Every session must have a beginning and ending, and it is also certain that there are some bills that must come after others, and must come up to the close of the session, because if that were not so, the session would terminate at an earlier period than it is likely to terminate on this occasion, and although the session would have been shorter, the same process would necessarily go on. With regard to the measures of the government this session, I think, we have had a very much larger number here than we have had for a good many years. Then in the other House, hon. gentlemen know that a very large portion of the session was taken up, I think some five weeks, discussing the Speech from the Throne; and after that speeches were made almost continuously upon the subject of the estimates, and if the measures of the government that were initiated in the other House have not come here at an earlier period, it is simply because the House, in deciding upon the orders in which it would conduct its own business, occupied its time very largely with the discussion of the estimates with which we, of course, can have nothing to do until near the close of the session. Now, with regard to this bill, there is nothing complex or difficult to be understood about it. Whether the measure ought to have embraced other reforms than those which are set out in the bill as it has come down to us, I will not say. It is a bill containing but two clauses and the title. It provides that notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the Act as it now stands, steamships may take on board deck loads up to the 12th of October. There is no change in the law except the one single point, that is that the law as it now stands, permitting vessels to take on deck loads, is extended twelve days beyond the time which is mentioned in the present Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why is it extended?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend stated specifically that under the English law ships taking on deck loads must arrive in the English ports before the 1st November, and that while the 1st October would be a period quite low enough, perhaps, for sailing vessels taking a risk of delay or accidents in crossing the Atlantic, the period here could be safely extended to the 12th October and still give ample time for the arrival of steamships in British ports before the 1st November. My hon. friend opposite will remember the discussion which took place some years ago on this measure. If I remember rightly, it was primarily introduced to the attention of Parliament by Mr. Mitchell when he was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and there is no change in the law by this legislation, except giving the steamers sailing from the port of Quebec an opportunity of taking on a deck load up to a later period.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It has been changed once or twice since that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But the principle is unchanged.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—A sailing vessel leaving any port of North America for England could not take a deck load after the first day of October, or if she could take any deck load at all, the quantity that she could take on deck was regulated by the port warden. He said that the ships should not be allowed to take over a certain height of load on deck. After this bill passes it will be competent for any vessel——

Hon. Mr. POWER—Any steamship.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—For any steamship leaving a Canadian port for Great Britain to take on, up to the 12th October, such quantity of deck load as the captain may choose to put on the deck of his vessel. That appears to me to be the effect of this bill. It may possibly be a very good thing for ship-owners to have vessels take as much load as possible on deck, but we must remember that the object of the legislation in Great Britain has been to prevent as much as possible the overloading of ships of all kinds, both steam and sailing vessels, because the masters or the owners of vessels are very apt to put on more than is really safe at times, in order to make their freight as great as possible. This bill is, in my opinion, doing away with some of the safety that is provided for sailors and mariners on the ships sailing from the 1st to the 12th October, by permitting vessels to take on heavy deck loads when probably they have very heavy cargoes under deck, and is not so safe as it would have been otherwise. There should have been a further provision in this bill that the port warden, or some authority, should have power to see that even up to the 12th October the ships were not overloaded by taking too heavy deck loads.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island is rather astray: there is a restriction on sailing vessels after the 1st day of October now, and after the 12th day of October, for steamers, if this bill passes. Up to these dates there is no restriction, so far as deck loads are concerned. A vessel can carry any deck load up to the 1st of October, but the Plimsoll Act comes in there. All British registered vessels have a load line marked on their sides, so that they cannot be loaded at any season of the year below that mark.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the principle of the Plimsoll Act?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Yes. But after the 12th October, of course not being able to carry the same deck load, the Plimsoll mark will be seen above the water line. Then, again, we must remember the Plimsoll mark only refers to vessels of British register. Foreign vessels can do as they like. Our vessel owners complain that foreign vessels can come in and take loads which a British vessel is not allowed to carry.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is a Canadian ship considered a British vessel for registration purposes?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Yes, all Canadian vessels are required to carry this Plimsoll mark, and no vessel registered in the British possession is allowed to go to sea without it. That makes a distinction between Plimsoll and the insurance. The hon. leader of the opposition asked how it affected insurance companies. All the timber cargoes at any rate going out of Canada, and I assume very largely others, if the goods are sold to arrive at a certain date, the parties on the other side make the condition that the shipments are to accompanied by a Lloyds policy of insurance, and as the law on the other side is the arrival time, not the sailing time from this side, the Lloyds insurance comes in all right. I may say the government are well advised, but what I tried to say was that Mr. Dobell had had some conversation with Lloyds in London, being a heavy shipping insurer, that on certain conditions they would make certain concessions, and Mr. Dobell is not here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When this subject was under discussion some years ago, complaint was made of the disadvantage which British ship-owners, and Canadians in particular, were placed when coming into competition with Norweigan vessels which visited this country and are allowed to put on what load they like.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Up to the 1st October. Afterwards they are subject to British regulations. They cannot sail with deck loads after that date.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would they be subject to penalties on arriving in England, just as a British vessel would be?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How is it on the question of insurance? Norweigan vessels, I have been told, are not a very good class of vessels. Do Lloyds insure them at the same rate as a well-built Canadian vessel?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—They did up to a year ago, when, there being no new wooden vessels. These vessels are getting so much worse because they are much older. They have taken their tariff away from them, and insure every vessel now on its merits after the 1st of October.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—A Norwegian vessel in our ports would be subject to the Act we are dealing with, but not subject to the Plimsoll Act.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—They are not subject to a load line, but after the 1st of October they are subjet to the Plimsoll Act

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only addition to this is relieving ship-owners of penalties?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, for the twelve days.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

ROAD ALLOWANCES IN MANITOBA BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (175) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting roads and road allowances in the Province of Manitoba." He said:—The object of this bill, is to legalize a plan which has recently filed in the city of Winnipeg. There were errors committed in laying out the streets. The principal street affected is Water street. I have here a report by Mr. Rothwell, the law clerk of the Department of the Interior, on the subject, which I will read for the information of the House. (Here Mr. Scott read the report).

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand that report, it means this: that Water street is supposed to be 66 feet wide. It has been encroached upon by the original settlers, I understand, without any intention of trespassing upon other than what they supposed to be their own land, and this is to narrow the street to 60·40 feet, and to give to the land holders the other 5·60 feet of land. If they have all agreed to it, and the city has agreed to it, I do not see why we should object.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The report we have is from the law clerk of the Department of the Interior.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And he reports that all the parties interested and the city have acquiesced in this new survey.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and have sent a draft of the bill to the Department of the Interior to be confirmed here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only parties who could object would be the city of Winnipeg, and those interested in the width of the road. It is to remove a difficulty, I suppose, rather than put the property owners, who have built on the road, to the inconvenience and expense of moving their buildings. Is that the object of it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the object.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understand that this plan, which is referred to in this report and in the bill only relates to some street—the old trail that goes through the city of Winnipeg?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is limited to Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What is contained in this plan we are asked to legalize. We really do not know, beyond the explanations we have received what is covered by the plan, but it goes on to say that we are to approve of it. Surely all these words "road allowances, highways and great highways" must refer to more than one street in Winnipeg?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have read the law clerk's report to me.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend must be mistaken, because it speaks of all "roads, trails, road allowances, highways and great highways."

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The title of the bill indicates that it relates to more than one street.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quoting the title of the General Act relating to roads and road allowances in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But it provides that the unpatented lands are transferred to the Crown in the right of the province of Manitoba. Surely they should revert to the city of Winnipeg if they refer to a street in Winnipeg only.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Secretary of State yesterday, when he introduced this bill, gave as an explanation that it was to legalize some trails that ran through different portions of the province—that they had followed the old original Indian trails instead of making roads on the surveyed lines. Now he tells us it affects Winnipeg only. I would suggest allowing the bill to pass through the committee with the understanding that it is not to be read the third time till we have an explanation.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—We have no French copy of this bill, and possibly I do not understand it. Reading this:

> Those portions of the land shown as streets on the said sectional plan and so much of the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan as is unpatented.

This does not relate only to the city of Winnipeg. It embraces more than that. I think it means this, that those lands shall be transferred to the government of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is the meaning of the second clause.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—What do they mean by the lands? Are you going, by this bill, to give to the government of Manitoba lands which do not belong to Manitoba now?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has not looked carefully at the clause. It says that "those portions of the land shown as streets on the said sectional plan, and so much of the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan as is unpatented," that is still in the Crown of the Dominion, "are hereby transferred to the Crown in the right of the province of Manitoba." There is a transfer of that Dominion interest which is now vested in the Crown, to the Crown as represented in the province, but it is not lands indefinitely, but lands represented on the plan.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The plan contains more than the street, and we are going to transfer to the province of Manitoba lands that belong to the Dominion government. There may be lands belonging to schools there.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I thought that yesterday the hon. gentleman explained to us that there were certain trails in differents parts of Manitoba, which it was found more convenient to use as roads than the concession lines. Now, his explanation is that there is but one street in the city of Winnipeg which is affected by this bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest to let the bill pass through committee, and allow the hon. Secretary of State to produce the plan sent to the Department of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The plan is at Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I insist on having the French copy.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Do we understand that a copy of this plan is in the department of Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not understand from the letter that there is any plan here. The plan was filed in the registry office in Winnipeg.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As the hon. gentleman does not understand it at all, the bill should be allowed to stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that by the first clause of the bill the legislation is confined to the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The plan is filed in the Land Titles Office in Winnipeg, but it may relate to the whole province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It amends the General Act respecting roads and road allowances. Then it says that the sectional plan filed as plan 559 in the Winnipeg office "is hereby approved." We do not know what we are approving, because we have not the plan, nor have we an explanation of the meaning of it. Then it goes on to speak of "streets, roads, trails, road allowances, highways and great highways." The second clause refers to certain streets, and it gives to the province of Manitoba whatever interest the Dominion may have in unpatented lands along those streets on one side or the other. The bill, though short, is more comprehensive, and has more meaning in it than we at present understand, and if the hon. gentleman will let it stand over and get information to-morrow, it would be better.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the order of the day be discharged and placed on the orders for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the order was discharged.

CITY OF OTTAWA BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (187) "An Act respecting the City of Ottawa."

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask if that $45,000 includes the care and keep of the park east of the canal, which is government property?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government still retains that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was originally given by the Mackenzie government to the city of Ottawa, in consideration that the city would keep it in repair as a park. They neglected it, and when Sir John Macdonald came into power in 1878, the government assumed ownership and control and have kept it in repair ever since. That is not included in the $45,0000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I think we are treating the city of Ottawa very liberally, indeed, in giving this sum, and if it had not been for the eloquent address of the hon. gentleman from Rideau last night, I should certainly have given my opposition to this measure. The city of Ottawa has many advantages that do not accrue to other cities throughout the Dominion. The whole of the civil service is centred here, and the money which they receive is expended here. The Parliament Buildings are here. The members of the Senate and House of Commons come here and spend, as they have done this year, five months of the year in Ottawa, and the greater part of the money which they receive as indemnity for that time is spent in Ottawa, and in that way the people of the capital have very many advantages that do not accrue to the people elsewhere. The hon. member for Rideau spoke of the large amount that the people of Ottawa had to pay as taxes. It is very true that they may have to pay a considerable amount of taxes, owing to the great value that property in the city has acquired by the concentration of the people who are brought here for the purpose of administering the affairs of the government, and the expenditure of their salaries by other employés of the government. If it had not been for that, the city of Ottawa would probably be a centre for a certain portion of the lumber trade of the Dominion, and perhaps some manufacturing, and it is probable that the value of the property in the city would not be anything like what it is to-day. We must remember then in giving this vote of $60,000 to the city of Ottawa, we are making a grant which very few of the inhabitants of the capitals of the different provinces will look upon with favour. They will consider that they have just as much right to receive from the Federal Government a grant for the improvement of the local capitals as we have to vote that amount for the improvement of this city. But the citizens of Ottawa claim that they contribute, by their fire protection and by supplying water to the different buildings, very handsomely towards the share that the government ought to pay for that purpose. But they must bear in mind that if the government had to pay insurance on these buildings, it would not amount to $15,000 a year, at the ordinary insurance rates, and if they are now paying $15,000 for the water supplied to the buildings, they are paying very handsomely indeed. I feel that we perhaps have some call to do something for the benefit of the capital of the Dominion, but in voting them the sum of $60,000, as is proposed in the clause now under consideration, we are dealing very handsomely, very liberally indeed with the capital of the Dominion.

On subsection c of clause 4.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—If we put a joint authority in the commission and in the corporation it will immediately give rise to great difficulty. The city, I presume, under its Act of incorporation, is bound to construct and keep in proper repair the streets of the city, and if so, I think it would be very unwise to join the commission or confer upon them any authority as to the construction or keeping of the streets in repair. That joint authority would be very embarrassing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it contemplated by the words "or the vicinity thereof," to spend any money beyond the city limits? The clause reads the "improvement and beautifying of the city and the vicinity thereof." Take Hog's Back, for instance, which has been referred to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is improbable that any money will be spent out there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am asking about the probabilities. I am not asking if this bill gives power to do it; because if they have the power to do it they might do it. Is that the intention of the law?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. If it were thought desirable to extend some highway to a park it might be done. For instance, I do not think Rockliffe Park is inside the limits, and the road to that park is one of the highways that certainly should be improved.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should be very sorry that the power to make improvement should be limited to the city of Ottawa. For instance, it would be very desirable to have a proper road constructed to the experimental farm. There is really no good road leading to that farm, except the tram road, which does not go near the farm buildings.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bill is broad enough to cover that.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have not observed that there is any contribution towards the illumination of the city by the government. I suppose it is taken for granted that the presence of members of Parliament here for so long a time is sufficient illumination.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Rideau Division does not understand that.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—In introducing this bill and proceeding to the third reading, the government has taken a step in the right direction towards the end which it has in view, but which probably will not be attained for some years. It shows that it makes a difference between the city of Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion, and other cities of the country. It is very natural for any good citizen to take a pride in the capital of his country, but there is, in this province, a state of things which, at least to me, seems quite anomalous. In England, France, Spain and Italy, every citizen that goes to the capital knows that he is in his own country. The superior government is not subjected to an inferior government. I wish to explain, when I say that the Federal Government is superior to the local government, that it is only in certain points. In the local governments we have certain attributes. For example, the civil law makes us, on those points, perhaps, superior to the Federal Government, but the Federal Government has the care of the safety of the whole nation. I need not go through all the attributes to show that it may be considered as superior to the local government. The government—at least the members of the House of Commons and the Senate—are subjected to the municipal rules of a government which is not their own government. It is the government of the Ontario people, but it is not the government of the Quebec people. It is not the government of the Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island people; it is not the government of Manitoba or of British Columbia. In every country, similar in some respects to ours—that is, a confederation—for instance, the United States and Switzerland, there is a city where every citizen can say: "This is my own country." The people from New York and the people from California may, when they are in Washington, say: "This is our country." But here we are not in that position.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Why?

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I thought I had been explaining why. We are under the municipal law, the civil law of another province than our own. Take the matter of police; we are subject to the police of a province which is not our own. We are subject to the civil law. If a man becomes very sick and is in danger of dying, he cannot make his will here according to the laws of the province of Quebec. It is true that in books treating of the conflict of laws they say that a will in another country may be good in the province of Quebec, for example, but lawyers take both views. You will find those questions discussed, and in Quebec there have been cases of that sort decided by the court. It seems to me we ought to occupy in this country the same position that they have in other confederated countries as in Washington, and in Switzerland. In Berne, I understand, the federal government rules the city. I understand that Berne is something like the district of Columbia. It seems to me that this aiding, by the present government, in the prosperity of Ottawa is a step towards an end which I desire, and which I think a great number of Canadians should desire. I may add that a short time before the death of Sir John Macdonald, in a conversation which I had with him, he told me that it was a mistake that we did not provide for that in the confederation resolutions in Quebec, that his opinion was that we ought to have Ottawa as a federal city with ten miles round Ottawa, forming a district something like the district of Columbia. Although it may not come for a year or two it will certainly come in time. I shall certainly vote for the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is another reason why the principle laid down by my hon. friend should be adopted. In looking at the public accounts and estimates every year, we find that every dollar spent on these buildings is charged to the province of Ontario, and when we speak of the appropriations which are made, speaking of the comparative amounts of the appropriations to the different provinces, all the money spent in the city of Ottawa in connection with the public buildings is charged to the province of Ontario. I have objected for years and years to that classification, always contending that it ought to be under one heading, because it shows to the reading public and to those who look at the public accounts that the province of Ontario is charged with large sums of money annually which really belong to the whole Dominion, as indicated by my hon. friends who have spoken. I have the estimates for this year in my hand as an illustration of what I say. Under the heading of Ontario I find the following:—

Dominion public buildings, renewal improvements, repairs, &c	$10,000
Ontario public buildings, repairs of masonry and so on	4,000
Ottawa public buildings and Langevin block improvements for fire proof attics and so on	24,000

I merely give these figures as an illustration. You sometimes will find it runs up to large amounts and yet that is all charged to the province, when really it should be charged to the Dominion. It is just as much an expenditure for Quebec and British Columbia and other portions of the Dominion, as it is for the province of Ontario, and whenever you make a comparative statement of moneys expended in the interest of the different provinces, you will find hundreds of thousands of dollars charged to this province which should be charged to the whole Dominion and not to Ontario. That is another reason. It does not give a correct idea of the amount of money that is appropriated annually to the different provinces. I do not speak of that from a sectional standpoint, but as a matter of correct book-keeping, I think that the public accounts and the estimates ought to be changed in that respect, whether we go so far as the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, has indicated or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is a great deal to be said in favour of the theoretical view expressed by the hon. senator from Montarville, that the seat of government ought to be free from the control of the province. That is an arrangement that would put it in exactly in the position of a city. The inhabitants of the city would be, for all purposes, under the absolute control and jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and the Parliament of Canada alone could legislate for them. That was the case with regard to the city of Washington after the district of Columbia was ceded by the states of Maryland and Virginia. At a very early day in that district a question was raised as to the right of taxation Congress taxed those people in the city of Washington not represented in congress. They have no member sitting in congress. Congress actually controls the city. They refuse to pay taxes and called attention to the doctrine of the period of the revolution, that representation and taxation went together, and that what justified the colonists in resisting Imperial authority and throwing off the sovereignty of the Queen of England, ought to justify the people of the district of Columbia in resisting the arbitrary taxation of the district of Columbia, and yet the Supreme Court held that under their constitutional system, the tax was properly imposed and that the people, having been taxed by Congress under the constitution, had no right whatever to complain or to resist congressional authority, I think the sovereignty of this Parliament over all matter within the sphere of its jurisdiction is pretty clearly established, and I do not know that we would be practically any better off, and we might in some respects be worse off, if the city of Ottawa and a certain territory contiguous to the city, were placed under the exclusive control of the Dominion. My hon. friend opposite has spoken of the question of conflict of jurisdiction, and said that a person from another province, where a different system of jurisprudence prevailed, might have difficulty in dealing with his property by will in comformity with the law of his own province—that a difficulty might grow up in connection with that matter, but that would be equally true if he were taken sick at Toronto and were a citizen of Quebec, or if he were taken sick at Kingston, or Winnipeg or any other portion of the Dominion. He would not be in any worse position in the city of Ottawa, being within the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities of Ontario, than he would be if a like misfortune befell him in any other portion of the Dominion outside of the province to which he belonged. In the United States a good many practical difficulties have grown up under their system. For instance, following the rule of the English common law they have held that all territories taken over for any public purpose and vested in the authority of Congress as the common law of the state, as it is at the time that the territory is acquired. Take Fort Wayne, near the city of Detroit; that is a federal territory, and it has been held in the state of Michigan that as capital punishment prevailed in the state at the time the United States acquired that territory from the state of Michigan, that a murder committed at Fort Wayne was legally punished capitally, whereas in every other portion of the state it was punished by imprisonment for life. The jurisdiction of the state does not extend to that territory. The changes that have been made in that criminal law in the province of Michigan do not extend to the territory that is held by the government of the United States, and so you have a different criminal law within Fort Wayne from what you have two or three miles away in the city of Detroit. And the same may be said as to other portions of the United States. Take, for instance, the conspiracy to assassinate Lincoln immediately at the close of the civil war. Several parties were tried by martial law and were sentenced to be shot instead of being tried in the ordinary civil tribunals of the country. I have no doubt in my own mind that that was an illegal proceeding, but the reason assigned for it was under the old common law, if you tried and convicted a principal you could not try an accessory for the same offence, and as the person who assassinated Lincoln, the chief offender, had been shot by those who were pursuing him. It was not possible to try any of those who were accessories to the murder of the president by the ordinary common law of the district of Columbia, because Congress had never legislated and the law as it was in Virginia and Maryland at the time that the territory was taken over, still remained law for the district of Columbia, and so wherever the United States has acquired territory in any state of the Union, the law that prevailed in that state at the time the territory was acquired still remains law unless Congress has intervened by legislative enactment for the purpose of changing it. So that there are a great many practical difficulties that arise in connection with the acquisition of absolute control over territory by the federal government and by which you extend its authority further than it exists generally with regard to the entire country, and I think that when all the practical advantages and disadvantages are taken into account, it will be found that under our system, leaving the city of Ottawa under the jurisdiction of the province, so far as the province has jurisdiction under the constitution, will produce less practical mischief and will secure greater equality in the progress, improvement and changes of legislation, than you would have if the territory was absolutely acquired by the federal authority.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman has cited two cases which, in my opinion, are easily met. He says, first, that there is no difference between a gentleman going to Toronto or Winnipeg and dying there and a gentleman dying in Ottawa just now; but it must not be forgotten that the gentleman going to Toronto is proceeding there for pleasure or business, and there is no reason why he should have privileges which he would not have in other cases. That is not the state of affairs with those who come here as senators and members of the House of Commons. They are bound to come here. They are doing their duty, answering to the demand of the electors, or of the sovereign, who has named them as senators, therefore, I do not think this clause would apply. The other case in which Washington is cited as being in a peculiar position when the government wanted to impose taxes, it must not be forgotten that we are not in the same position as United States citizens. There are many things in the neighbouring country which do not apply to this country. We are a monarchial country, and have more freedom than they have in the United States. They have the name of being a republic, but in reality they are only a four years' elective monarchy. The direct taxes do not apply to the federal government. The direct taxes are controlled by the local government. You can have no direct taxes even if you have a district here. Therefore, there is no danger from that. It would not prevent them having a corporation which might levy taxes for the improvement of the city or of the territory. This is another case which shows there is a great difference between our position and that of the United States. I admit there would be some difficulty but that would be the business of the government that would undertake to give to this country such a great boon as I have been advocating.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (191) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to object to the bill. I think it is an improvement on the Act as it stands on the statute-book, for these reasons: first, that it prevents the fifteen days being allowed to members who are elected during the session. The indemnity will begin to date from the time a member is elected, and the fifteen days absence would have to occur after that. The second clause provides that the time of service of active militia men, who are called out on duty during the session of Parliament, shall not be deducted from their sessional indemnity. That is a very wise and good provision, for the reason that the man who gives his time and the expenses attending it should not be deprived of any benefit to be derived pecuniarly from his connection with Parliament. I have long been of the opinion that this system of deducting fifteen days for absentees is scarcely fair to those who attend here regularly, I do not know whether that view is entertained by many others.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Look at the House to-night.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Exactly. The very time when the members' presence is most required, they are absent. From the moment the fifteen days begin to run, some hon. gentlemen take advantage of it, and leave us here with scarcely a quorum. I question whether it is wise to make this allowance. If a man who attends Parliament during session, and particularly a long session like this, is not sufficiently compensated it would be much better that the old law should prevail in its entirety, and deduct so much for every day he is absent, and make the sum larger if it be necessary to compensate those who are here continuously. I know many hon. gentlemen share my views on this question, but there is always a delicacy in dealing with a question affecting other members. I feel this delicacy all the more, because I am seldom absent from my duty here. Business called them away, but it is their own business, and they expect to profit by it. I am not going to suggest any change in this bill, further than this: I would rather see the law upon the statute-book as it was originally, and if members of either House do not attend to their duties, let them suffer the penalty, namely, a deduction from that allowance, and let those who attend regularly draw the indemnity to which they are entitled. I have held those views for some time, and I express them now freely. The longer time you allow to absentees the greater will be the absence of members.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This particular bill does not introduce a system. As the hon. gentleman says, it is rather making the present system a little less objectionable; but I may say that the hon. gentleman has spoken pretty nearly my sentiments. When the Act which is now on the statute-book—that is the Act of last year—was before the House the hon. gentleman from Richmond proposed an amendment to the effect that none of these days of absence should be amongst the last fifteen days of the session. If you were going to have such a thing, that perhaps would have been a judicious provision, because as the hon. gentleman says, here we are, with the most important work of the session, with a bare quorum of members. If we had not this fifteen days arrangement, we should probably have three times as many members present to-night. The government might consider, during the recess, whether they cannot put the thing on a better footing.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It proves that these gentlemen who do not remain during the session consider their time is much more valuable at home, or wherever their vocations require their presence, than it is here, for the sum they receive for their attendance during the session of Parliament. This session, which has lasted some five months, is perhaps slightly longer than an ordinary session, but I venture to say that a session which will be much shorter than five months hereafter will be an exception. Now, it is absurd to expect persons who have any business at home, or any profitable employment at all, to leave all their home comforts and come to the capital and spend four or five months for the sum that is now allowed to members. Senators are in a somewhat different position from members of the House. They do not have to run an election in order to come here but their time is equally valuable. They may, perhaps, have served many years in political life in one way or another, but I feel assured many gentlemen whose presence in the House of Commons or in the Senate of Canada would be a credit to either of these branches, and a benefit to the legislature of the country are prevented from taking the position which they might otherwise take in either House by the consideration of the paltry sum that they receive for the time thay have to spend here—time which perhaps to them would be worth five times the money if they remained at home attending to their own business.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I desire to endorse what has fallen from my hon. friend from Charlottetown. Unless we eliminate altogether from the indemnity the idea of remuneration, what he has stated is actually the true state of affairs. A man who has any business at all to attend to at home can make far more money by giving his attention to it than by coming here as a member of either House; and I think some more adequate sum should be provided as sessional indemnity than that which is at present allowed.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—We are all meeting here on one common platform as senators of the Dominion. We all have an equal share of the responsibilities and duties to perform, but I do not hesitate to say that I think this country is now under a very great debt of gratitude to the hon. leader of the opposition for calling attention to this matter. The difficulty is because we have had no organization. I have never been asked once since I have been in this Senate to vote one way or another by any one supposed to be my leader.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Call me the senator from Hastings, I like it much better.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In every speech that is made, the hon. gentleman is spoken of as leader of the opposition. We have proved this session that there is no opposition. The hon. gentleman from Hastings has voted frequently with the government. I admit it is unusual in this House, and I have never seen it practiced so much as since the change of administration. The hon. gentleman from Hastings has done invaluable service to Canada. He has spent five months here, with the exception of two or three days, and has taken an active part in criticising every bill which has come before us, and if there is any man to whom the country is under a debt of gratitude it is the hon. gentleman who has watched the legislation to see that it is based on sound principles. With regard to the way our indemnity is paid, I am decidedly opposed to it. I am not too thin skinned to say that I do not think there is any equality in the way we are paid here. The ministers get a certain salary, which I admit they are worthy of—some of them would be worthy of more—but when they attend twelve months for $8,000 and we spend five months for $1,000, paying our own expenses, our compensation is very small compared with theirs. Only fifteen members of the Senate are present to-night. Yesterday and the day before the House was opened with fifteen members. The most important legislation has been brought here within the last ten days of the session. Who are absent? Those who can take advantage of the fifteen days. To allow that fifteen days is wrong, because a man does not wish to vote against a measure has an opportunity to step out. The wealthy men are hardly here at all, and yet they get as much indemnity as men who are here. I might have gone home last Saturday. I was offered my pay, but I said "No, there is legislation coming up and I must remain to the end of the session." We remain while wealthy men go home, or away on pleasure, and they are on the same scale of equality as we are with regard to pay. When the question of revising the sessional indemnity and ministers' salaries comes up, it should be on a basis different from that of to-day.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend from Wolseley has announced to me that there is no opposition in the House, no party organization. I am not going to discuss or dispute that, but I was under the impression —perhaps it was an illusion or delusion— that we postponed legislation this session to give hon. gentlemen opposite an opportunity to meet in caucus and decide what course they would take. There was a disposition on the part of some gentlemen of the opposition—and I am not finding fault with it but stating it as merely being at variance with the statement of the hon. gentleman— not to agree to the policy of their leader. But the question before us is not one of the organization or the concerted action of the opposition, or those who are supporting the government, but the question of indemnity and this question is one which has, to some extent, I believe, perplexed every administration since the union. There has never been any scheme proposed that was quite satisfactory, even to those gentlemen who, for the time being, may have adopted it. There are several things to be considered. In the first place, there is no salary voted— nothing that pretends to be a salary. There is an indemnity, and that is supposed to cover the expenses to which a member is put, not merely while he is sitting in the House and while the House is in session, but as an incident to the position he occupies, whether in or out of Parliament, on account of his being a member, and that I think is a fair test of what would be a reasonable indemnity. Every government has felt that it was most undesirable to make that indemnity so large that it would be a temptation to parties, when a general election comes on, to become candidates for the sake of getting into Parliament in order that the indemnity might be received. It would cease to be an indemnity, properly so called, and would become a salary for services in Parliament. That would be an unworthy and undesirable condition of things. Of course, we cannot, in this country, adopt the English system of giving services in Parliament gratituously, because, otherwise, it would be only those who are wealthy who would be able to sit in Parliament at all. The compensation that was thought fair at the time it was proposed to adopt the thousand dollars as an indemnity for a session, was when a session would be one of about ten weeks. That was the supposition; at all events, that it would not exceed a three months session. It was for a session of that length that a thousand dollars was considered a reasonable indemnity. When the session became a little more than three months, then this practice of taking a fortnight, so that a member might have some opportunity during the session, when it was longer than three months, to look after his own private business, was allowed to him. What the effect of that would be, when it was first proposed, upon the session of Parliament itself, was not perhaps sufficiently considered. The tendency, I believe, has been, in the estimation of most members, to lengthen the session and make it longer than if no such deduction has been made. If the session is to be longer than three months, undoubtedly the indemnity is altogether inadequate. I think every hon. gentleman recognizes that, but I have often heard the gentleman who was long at the head of the Conservative party in this country say that it was not desirable to hold out any temptation to members to remain here, for it was the interest of every government to get rid of Parliament at as early a date as possible. That sort of feeling, I daresay, exists at the present time This session has been very much longer than the government desired, longer in my opinion than was necessary. When you take a period of five weeks, a thing unprecedented in this country, to discuss the Speech from the Throne, and when one member in the House of Commons makes two speeches of from seven to nine hours each, it can be seen how possible it is to prolong a session altogether beyond the ordinary period. It is most desirable that we should ascertain what is a normal session in this country and make our indemnity accordingly, for although the indemnity is for the purpose of covering the expenses incident for being a member for the twelve months, the greater portion of that expense is incurred while Parliament is in session. My hon. friend has referred to the fifteen days as being an allowance that it would be to the advantage of Parliament if it were withdrawn. I am inclined to think that that is true ; I am inclined to think that the business would be more systematically conducted if that were the case, and the habit of those living between here and Toronto and between here and Montreal and Quebec, leaving here every Friday in the afternoon and not returning until Monday afternoon, has also had a tendency to lengthen the session. Whether the provision under clause two is a desirable one or not, it is patriotic, at all events, giving members of the volunteer force of Canada an opportunity of attending to the training in camp. Whether it is to the practical advantage of Parliament is another question. I might say that the bill, although it is unlimited in time, must of necessity, as every bill upon this subject has been, be regarded as a mere tentative measure, and I have no doubt before we meet again there will be an opportunity of considering the subject, and perhaps of deciding upon some other plan of indemnity than that which exists at the present time.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—There is another matter to which I wish to refer. I think when an arrangement is made, the government ought to call Parliament together earlier in the year. This calling of Parliament to meet in the spring and keeping us here all summer, is a detriment to the business of every man of us who has business to do. I understand the long debate on the address was due to the government not having business ready.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not at all. I believe the gentlemen of the opposition in the House of Commons got it into their heads that the government desired to have a short session and go to the country, and it was with a view to frustrate what they considered the policy of the government.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I am glad the hon. gentleman has drawn a distinction between the indemnity and a salary. I should be very sorry if the indemnity we receive here was considered a salary. The indemnity is paid to us to enable those of us who could not very well sustain the expense of remaining at the capital four or five months to defray the cost we are put to during that time. I do not like this fifteen days arrangement. I think it would be better, if it is necessary to do anything of that kind, to adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Hastings (Sir Mackenzie Bowell), and increase the indemnity rather than open the door to those who may be disposed to take advantage of it to absent themselves from their duties here. What I was going to refer to principally, and what I have been forestalled in by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, is with regard to the time of the meeting of Parliament. It would be greatly to be lamented if politics should fall to a very great extent into the hands of mere professional politicians, and I think that is very likely to be the case if year by year it is made a still more trying and difficult thing for gentlemen who have occupations and large stakes in the country to give regular attendance for four or five months at this period of the year. In addition to simply private business, a great many of us here have public duties in the various places where we reside, and it is very often absolutely necessary to leave here to give attendance on those occasions. When Parliament met somewhere about the 15th of January and adjourned in April, there was comparatively little difficulty in giving regular attendance, but now the late period of the year when Parliament meets makes it an almost intolerable inconvenience to a very large number of the members of both Houses, and I think it would be very desirable indeed if the government would take some measures to prevent that in the future. There is another matter connected with this question of indemnity which I think is ot quite fair. As I understand the law at present, gentlemen come here, attend for a few days, go way and perhaps not come back for the greater part of the session, but they receive their share of the indemnity for any time during which the House may not be in session. That is a very unfair arrangement, and one which ought not to be permitted. I do not want to mention names, but I know cases in which gentlemen attended in that way, and were absent for a number of weeks during which there was an adjournment, and those days were not deducted. This is a matter of great importance if we are to get gentlemen who have a very great stake in the country, to bear their part in the legislature of the Dominion, and I think it will be an evil day for Canada when it falls into the hands of men who make politics their business and do not care how long they stay here. For these reasons it is very desirable that the government should make some effort to establish, if not by enactment itself, at least by custom a certain time in the early part of the year when Parliament should meet, and the business of the House should be transacted, and we should be allowed to return to our homes in the early part of the season.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not agree altogether with the view expressed by some hon. gentleman that increasing the amount of the indemnity would cause a greater competition for parliamentary positions. I think the true result is that when you make the amount of the indemnity lower, you do not lessen the competition in the slightest respect, but you bring it down among a lower class of men. When the salary is placed higher, there will be a greater desire for public life on the part of able men whose services command larger salaries in other respects. I can point to a distinct case where the public of Canada made a great loss from the fact of the sessional indemnity beirg insufficient. I happened to know about it at the time. The late Sir John Macdonald, ever on the watch for brilliant men for public life, took notice of a gentleman who has since made a very distinguished place for himself. Yet a comparatively young man, he was then in one of our Canadian universities or colleges in Nova Scotia, teaching at a salary of less than $1,000 a year. I refer to the President of the Cornell University. Sir John Macdonald was anxious to get him into public life in Canada : I know he made an effort in that direction, but when Professor Schurman looked into it, he had no means but those which would result from his profession, and he had prospects in that profession which he did not see in politics, and if the salary had been sufficient for him to live on, he would have entered public life ; but instead of that, he drifted to the United States, and he is chairman of the commission which is regulating the affairs of the Phillipines, and Canada has lost a good man. He was a native of Prince Edward Island. He had a taste for public life in Canada, and he would have worked in that direction if the indemnity had been large enough to have enabled him to live on. I think if the indemnity was made somewhat larger it would induce, or at least help to induce, men of greater ability, and men who are able to command larger remuneration in many of the walks of life, to look towards obtaining seats in Parliament than they do under the present system, and I think it would be a decided improvement. There was one remark made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to the effect that the length of this particular session is to be attributed in a large degree to the prolixity in debate on the part of the opposition in another place. I think my hon. friend will have to be willing to divide the blame and allow some of it to go in another direction. Our friends in the government were not always so prompt in bringing down information as they should be. If the information had been forthcoming the debates would not have occupied so much time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The bill then passed its final stages.

The Senate adjourned.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (178) "An Act respecting the Quebec Harbour Commissioners." He said:—The Great Northern Railway Company, which was originally chartered by the province of Quebec, propose to make a junction with what is called the Booth system, the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Road and the Canada Atlantic, and by that means have a through line from Parry Sound to Quebec. It is proposed to erect an elevator at the city of Quebec, in conjunction with that railway system, and the object of this bill is to allow the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to guarantee the bonds of the railway company to an extent not exceeding $200,000. The railway company is not permitted to increase its debt to that extent. It is limited to its present issue of bonds, which is $20,000 a mile, and the Harbour Commissioners are permitted by this bill to guaranteee the interest on the indebtedness.

Hon. Mr. MACINNES—What is the amount of the indebtedness of the commission?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have heard it stated at $5,000,000.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is including the interest?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, all the back charges. Of course, the only criticism of the bill is that to that extent it weakens practically, the security of the Dominion of Canada on the indebtedness of the Harbour Commissioners. However, the amount is not very large, and it is thought that the connection at Quebec with so important a line as the Parry Sound Railway, will increase the trade very largely, and in that way enable the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec to pay, probably a portion of the interest they owe the Dominion. We are all hopeful that there will be increased traffic there from the direct connection of Lake Huron with Quebec by an all rail route. The Parry Sound Road will connect with the Great Northern and cross the Ottawa River at Hawkesbury.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What part of the Great Northern Railway is built.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think all but thirty or forty miles. There is that much to be completed yet.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is being built now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Ottawa and Parry Sound Company proposes building to Hawkesbury, which is in the county of Prescott, on the Ottawa River, and a bridge is to be built there across the Ottawa. There is a subsidy this year for that particular bridge. That will give a direct line from Parry Sound to the Ottawa River at Hawkesbury, then on the north side of the Ottawa River they make a connection with the Great Northern, and if I am well advised, the Great Northern will soon complete that link, the distance uncompleted at the present time, as I understand being about thirty or forty miles.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—That will be completed next year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This seems to be a proposition, when analyzed, to grant a subsidy to the Great Northern Railway Company of $200,000 for the construction of an elevator in a city where at present there is an elevator which has been in existence for some years; and, as I am informed, has never had a bushel of grain in it yet. It is true that on the face of the bill it gives power to the Harbour Commissioners of the city of Quebec to guarantee the bonds of the railway company, which company is to erect an elevator. The guarantee is to be for three per cent interest upon the issue of bonds to the extent of $200,000, for twenty years. Upon the face of the proposition, it would seem to be unobjectionable, if we were unacquainted with the facts as they really exist. We have been advancing for years millions of dollars of the public money of Canada to assist the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec in making that harbour useful for a larger class of vessels than formerly visited that city, and providing what they call an inner basin where the vessels can go for repairs and for other purposes. The Quebec Harbour Commissioners, while they have been expending millions of money to the extent of an indebtedness at the present moment, including interest, of between five and six million dollars, have never paid one single cent to the government of the interest upon the amount advanced out of the public chest. The interest that has been paid to the bondholders, whoever they may be, in the past has been paid out of the capital advanced by the government. This proposition is to give a preferential lien upon this $200,000, thereby depriving the Harbour Commissioners of the power, in case they earn the money, to pay the interest due the Dominion to that extent. That is the whole proposition, and as there is not the slightest probability of that harbour paying, no matter whether the elevator is built or not, and even supposing it be built, and the trade of the country increases to the extent anticipated, through the connection which, it is hoped, ere long will be made with Quebec, then the question is whether the shipping in that port, particularly with the facilities which are given for all ocean vessels to reach Montreal, will ever be able to pay a dollar of interest to the country. We might just as well, to my mind, wipe the debt off at once and make a present to the city of Quebec and the Harbour Commissioners of the amount they owe the country. From the trend of trade at the present day, we cannot come to any other conclusion—at least I cannot—than, that while we advanced and assisted the Grand Trunk Railway to the extent of over $15,000,000 for the construction of the road, we have constantly, ever since that advance was made, been passing laws giving fresh issues of bonds a preference over the government claim upon that amount of money, until it is utterly worthless as an asset; and while in our public accounts we have set it down there an asset of twenty or thirty million dollars against the Grand Trunk Railway, including the interest upon the amount advanced, it is absolutely worthless. The harbour of the Quebec improvements, from all present appearances, and what has heretofore taken place, will be to the country a similar asset in the future, unless there is a development in the trade of the country that none of us can anticipate, so far as the port of Quebec is concerned. Now would it not be possible to save to the country the interest upon this $200,000? If the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec are able to pay interest upon the issue of that amount of bonds, out of the earnings, why should that not come to the country instead of being paid to the bondholders for the construction of an elevator which, to all appearances at the present moment is useless. When I say useless, I mean needless, because if the trade is to develop, as I hope it will, and I anticipate there will be a large carrying trade built up by the construction of the road from Parry Sound to Quebec, surely they could, for the time being, use the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator which stands there idle and useless.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—By whom was the money furnished to build that elevator?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I take it for granted that that was built by the Canadian Pacific Railway out of their own money, and the subsidies they had received from the government in connection with the purchase of what is called the Northern Road. Unless there is some other object in view, that object being the expenditure of money in the city of Quebec, there can be no reason in the world why the Great Northern Railway should not have made arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway to utilize their elevator until the trade of the country became so large as to justify the construction of another; and then, if it did, no public man in Canada would object to a large subsidy in order to assist in building up the trade in that old city. The statement is that there never has been a bushel of grain in the elevator built in Quebec, for the reason that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have not carried the grain from the North-west to that city. Speaking of this railway of Mr. Booth's, no man in Canada, to my mind, deserves greater praise and consideration from the Dominion and from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, than does Mr. Booth, when we consider his great enterprise in the opening up of a shorter route to the sea. The late government stepped beyond the system which they had adopted in granting bonuses, and nearly doubled the bonus in connection with the portion of that Booth road where it is very difficult to build, westward from Ottawa. The present proposed expenditure seems to be another instance of the reckless manner in which the government of to-day are dealing with the public funds. Look at the whole of the estimates, from beginning to end, and the current expenses connected with the year, and the amount for which the country is being pledged runs up, if you examine it carefully and capitalize the annual payments which we are making, it amounts to a sum of nearly $70,000,000 this year alone. When I say that, I include the estimates for the year, the supplementary estimates for last year, and the indirect indebtedness which we are creating, and which, if you capitalize the amounts to be paid annually, you will find runs the total up to nearly $70,000,000. Whether Canada can stand this kind of expenditure continuously is for the people to consider. It is a grave question for the government to take into their most serious consideration when they are relieving those who are indebted to the country from the payment of the interest due to the coffers of the country. I make this statement from what I can glean in connection with the whole work. I do not say that the present government is to blame altogether for this. The government of which I was a member were to blame, to a certain extent, in connection with it, but the time has come when we will have to cry a halt. We expended hundreds of thousands of dollars at Three Rivers. Is there a dollar being paid back? I do not want it to be understood that I am trying to shirk any responsibility which rests upon me individually as a member of the government which made that expenditure. We advanced a large portion of money to the city of Quebec and never received one cent in return therefor, and now the government are going still further, and in a direction which I think every business man will say is not justifiable, and not required. Should we go on with that kind of work? I have given expression to these opinions because I believe them to be in the interest of the country. I honestly believe what I say to be correct, and I think it is high time to stop this kind of expenditure. If I could see into the future—even in the distant future, not the near future—a probability of a return to the country, I would say we should do all that we possibly can in order to develop the trade. We are deepening the St. Lawrence every year and not improperly. Why? For the purpose of bringing the shipping and trade to the city of Montreal, the head of ocean navigation. Another bill will come in shortly for the expenditure of a large amount of money in the city of Montreal. We shall be relieving the city of Montreal of an indebtedness and a charge upon their revenues which formerly existed. They had to pay out of the receipts of the Montreal harbour all the interest upon the bonds for the deepening of the St. Lawrence below Montreal. The late government relieved them of that, and I think properly relieved them of it; and if this government goes a little further in that direction, I do not say that they will be doing wrong, for this reason, that the deepening of the St. Lawrence between the city of Montreal and Quebec cannot be looked upon in any other light than a continuance of the canal system which exists in the Dominion of Canada, and particulary in the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario. For that reason I think that any government would be justified to a reasonable extent, in relieving the city and the harbour that in the past have paid every cent of the interest due upon the issue of their bonds and the advances which have been made, but when you appply that same system to a city that is actually losing its trade, for many reasons which I will not discuss now, and through the operations of the government itself, we should not go on expending money to the extent to which we are doing, and then relieving them of the responsibility of paying the interest on that indebtedness to the country, in order to assist in the construction of an elevator to the extent of $200,000 when there is no evidence before the House and the country that that elevator is required. There is an elevator at Quebec that is equal to all immediate demands, and I repeat that if the western trade of the country is so developed as to require additional elevator accommodation in order to build up the trade of the city of Quebec, no one would be more ready to lend his voice and his vote for any reasonable amount in order to accomplish that; but, believing as I do, and from the facts as they exist as every public man or public reader knows, that this elevator is not required, because the accommodation is there, should we under the circumstances pass this bill? I regard it as a wasteful expenditure of the public money to the extent of the interest upon that $200,000. They say we are only giving a preference to the bondholders for the bonds issued for the construction of the road and are not advancing any money. We have advanced the money and want the city of Quebec, if they can earn it, to pay back the interest on that money, and this relieves them and gives it to other people to the extent of $200,000 and to my mind it is nothing more or less than an absolute grant of $200,000 out of the public chest to assist a private company in the construction of an elevator.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not quite follow the argument which the hon. leader of the opposition has addressed to the House on this subject. He says that the city of Quebec is indebted to the government to the extent of $5,000,000. The city of Quebec will never pay either the debt or the interest on it, and the evidence of that is that she has been paying nothing for some time, that it might as well be written off, that it is an asset that is worth nothing. Now, granted that all that statement is true, we are not adding $200,000 to the indebtedness of the country. It is not proposed to incur a liability by the country. The liability is being incurred by the Great Northern Railway. That liability is being guaranteed by the Harbour Commissioners of the city of Quebec. If the Great Northern Railway Company do not pay it, the liability will fall, not upon the public, but upon the Harbour Commissioners, and the payment will be made by the Harbour Commissioners. What interest have we in that? Because the Harbour Commissioners will, if the hon. senator is right, in no event, pay us anything. We will receive nothing from them, and if the Harbour Commissioners are called upon to pay and do pay the creditors of the Great Northern Railway for the construction of this elevator, in what way does that concern us, assuming the argument of the hon. gentleman is sound in this regard? If the Great Northern Railway Company incur the liability, there is no doubt whatever that the creditors of the Great Northern Railway Company—those who advance the money for this purpose—will consider first the value of the Great Northern as a creditor, whether it has a prospect of paying, and in the second place the worth of the parties who guarantee that payment—that is the Harbour Commissioners of the city of Quebec. That being so, if these people ask for power to guarantee the construction of this work, and the payment of three per cent interest on $200,000 for a period of twenty years, I do not know that that specially concerns us, and I do not know that it, in any way, increases the liability of this country or imposes any special burden upon its population. The hon. gentleman has taken rather a gloomy view of the prospects of the city of Quebec. He says that we have deepened the River St. Lawrence. In the first instance, it was done by the enterprising men of the city of Montreal, who undertook to convert Montreal into a seaport rather than to have it continue what it previously might be regarded as—a lake port, and to extend the seagoing navigation from the city of Quebec up to the city of Montreal. That has been done. It was for many years a question of controversy as to whether the country was going to gain anything by extending the deep water navigation for seagoing vessels beyond the city of Quebec up to Montreal, and the assumption was that the country had no special interest in it; that if it concerned anybody, it concerned the people of the port of Montreal, and if Montreal was to be made a seaport, then the deepening of the navigation of the St. Lawrence ought to devolve upon the commercial men of that city. That was the view taken. I am not going to argue the question as to whether the people of Canada as a whole, outside of Montreal, have gained by transferring the seaboard generally from the city of Quebec on the St. Lawrence to the city of Montreal. At all events, that has been done, but the impression is to-day, whether that impression is well founded or not I need not argue, nor go into a detailed discussion of it—the impression is that in consequence of the growth of the western portion of the Dominion of Canada, Manitoba and the North-west Territories, with the development of new Ontario to the west, the commerce of the great lakes that will seek an outlet by the lakes and by the River St. Lawrence must rapidly increase, and must grow to an indefinite extent far beyond anything that has been known in the history of this country in past years. Formerly our western border was the Detroit River, and we had no trade originating west of that boundary. Our commerce is rapidly going far to the west of that, and we have an amount of products that must seek an outlet either through the highways furnished by the United States, or by Canadian channels, far beyond anything known in the history of this country in former times. We are deepening the canals, and improving the navigation between Montreal and Port Arthur with a view of securing that trade, and it is believed—and I think it is not an unreasonable belief—that Montreal is not likely alone, for some time to come, to furnish adequate store room for the immense amount of grain that will be carried from the west down to the seaboard. That being so, many lake going vessels, instead of stopping at Montreal, can go on to Quebec and many of the railways may seek to carry grain to that point. My hon. friend has referred to the enterprise of a gentleman who has invested his money in the Atlantic and Parry Sound Railway. That has been a most enterprising venture, and certainly we ought not to do anything that would tend to make it unprofitable to the gentleman who has invested his money in it. That road extends at the present time from Parry Sound to the vicinity of Montreal. With this connection it may be extended on further, and the grain instead of being left at Montreal, may be carried by rail to the city of Quebec.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It might go by water but not by rail.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but however, that may be, time will show. He says there is an elevator built at the city of Quebec by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway has, in all probability, since the elevator was built, adopted a different policy, and it is of more consequence to act upon their later view of their commercial interests than it is to make use of the elevator which has been constructed at that point. However, this may be, I am of the opinion that the men who are proposing to construct the elevator ought to be regarded, on the whole, as the best judges of what is to their interests, and they would hardly borrow money at three per cent to erect an elevator for the purpose of storing grain, if the elevator was to remain empty. If they come to the conclusion expressed by the hon. gentleman opposite in this regard, they are not likely to go on with that erection. If they do go on, it is an evidence that they wholly dissent from the view of the hon. gentleman. Then the parties who advanced the money will have an interest in deciding whether the venture is likely to be a profitable or profitless one. They have a special interest in inquiring into the matter and ascertaining whether the parties are likely to make a profitable use of the money they obtain for this purpose. Then there are the Harbour Commissioners whom you empower—you do not compel—to guarantee the bonds which those persons may issue to the extent of three per cent on $200,000 for a period of twenty years. All those parties have an interest in the careful consideration of this whole question, and abstaining from investing any money in it unless they see that they can make the venture a profitable one. However, it may be, the country itself is not nvolved in the transaction.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The bill before us, as I understand it, contains two main provisions. It confirms an agreement entered into between the Great Northern Railway Company and the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec by which the latter guarantee interest at 3 per cent on the amount of $200,000 for twenty years, for the purpose of erecting an elevator by the Great Northern Railway Company. It provides that this guarantee, which the Harbour Commissioners give, or three per cent interest on those bonds, shall have priority over the present claims of the government of Canada against the Harbour Commissioners. That is the whole substance of the bill. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken says my hon. friend the leader of the opposition takes altogether too gloomy a view of the prospects of the harbour of Quebec. To my mind, after hearing the statements of the two hon. gentlemen, I would be inclined to say it was my hon. friend opposite who takes the most gloomy view, because he tells us that the harbour of Quebec will never pay a dollar of its indebtedness to the government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I paid close attention to the hon. gentleman while he was speaking, and if the hon. gentleman did not say that we have no prospect of ever getting that money or interest back, that was the conclusion I drew from his remarks, that that was an amount we had no expectation to get and he used the words "It might as well be written off."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend did not make good use of his attention, because I simply repeated what was said by the hon. gentleman opposite (Sir Mackenzie Bowell), I did not pass an opinion on it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I listened to the hon. gentleman attentively, but if he was only paraphrasing my hon. friend's remarks, I was mistaken.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not paraphrase; I repeated what he said.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend took good care that he did not combat that view, and did not tell the House that that view was fallacious. He did not say that any portion of this money would be got back from the Harbour Commissioners. I would not be altogether disposed to take that view, I go further than my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and I venture to say that it may not be altogether hopeless that a portion of this money may yet be received back from the Harbour Commissioners. It is true trade at the harbour has been languishing, and is still in a languishing condition, but I fully agree with what has been said by both hon. gentlemen who have addressed us, that there is a good prospect opening for the harbour of Quebec when this new railway gets to that harbour, and I would not say that when that goes into operation the harbour of Quebec may have valuable trade directed towards it, and that a better state of things may result in the future; but I do think, in view of the fact that the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec are not now paying one cent of principal or interest on the indebtedness to the Dominion, we should not encourage the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec to give a new guarantee which I do not conceive is necessary at the present time, and particularly as we are giving that guarantee priority over the amount due to the government of Canada. This view seems all the more reasonable from the fact that we have been told in this discussion that the Canadian Pacific Railway people built an elevator some years ago at the harbour of Quebec, and that not one bushel of grain has passed through that elevator up to the present time. It is on the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Whether it is that they do not want to send trade there, or that commercial conditions have changed, the fact remains that the elevator is idle and there is not the slightest doubt that an arrangement could be made with the Canadian Pacific Railway by which the use of that elevator could be obtained for a reasonable amount, and in place of interposing a guarantee of this kind, standing in the way of payment of interest owing to the government by the Harbour Commissioners, the Great Northern Railway Company should proceed in another way to the Harbour Commissioners and use their influence with the Canadian Pacific Railway, or something should be done to bring about the use of the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator in the harbour of Quebec. It is possible, after the above system is completed, a system which has many good prospects for Quebec, it might turn out that the elevator would be necessary, and the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec might so profit by the extensive trade to that harbour that our security against that city would not appear so hopeless as it is to-day. All this indicates, to my mind at least, that this is not a bill that should be passed at the present moment. It will be some time before the Ottawa will be bridged. There appears to be no hurry, and why should not the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator be used until the financial position of the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec was better determined than it is at the present time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We are again making a mountain out of a molehill. This proposal is simply to authorize the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec to guarantee the payment of interest at three per cent on bonds to the amount of $200,000. How does this measure come to be here? It comes to be here because the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, controlled by Mr. Booth, has entered into arrangements, as I understand, with the Great Northern Railway Company, and under these arrangements the fifty miles which intervene between the Canada Atlantic system and the Great Northern system are being now constructed and will probably be completed by the end of the year. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield says there is no hurry and why cannot the government wait, and why should they incur this additional liability? Under this agreement the elevator is to be completed by the 1st of May next. The work is to be begun on the elevator this fall, and the Canada Atlantic Railway Company want to be in a position to ship grain at Quebec with the opening of navigation next spring.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman laughs. Things are moving very fast in that direction. The Canada Atlantic Railway system carried a vast amount of grain to Montreal last season, and I have no doubt that those who control that system understand their business quite as well as the hon. gentleman who leads the Conservative party in this House. Perhaps they do not, but I assume that they do. Now the hon. leader of the opposition and his first lieutenant ask would it not suit the Northern Railway just as well to use the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator. If the hon. gentlemen were familiar with the condition of things in the city of Quebec, they would know that it would cost probably four times as much to extend the Great Northern Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway elevator as the government propose to authorize the corporation to guarantee, so that that is simply out of the question, even if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were likely to be willing to make an arrangement which would be advantageous to a rival railway corporation. Further, this guarantee has been to a certain extent, unintentionally misrepresented. In the first place the railway company are primarily liable. The probabilities are that the Great Northern Railway Company will be absorbed into the Canada Atlantic Railway system, and the Canada Atlantic Railway is in the habit of paying interest on its bonds. If there is anything which is calculated to put the Quebec Harbour Commissioners in a position to pay the interest on their bonds, it is the completion of a work like this. If, through the means of this elevator and its railway connections, a large amount of freight is brought to the city of Quebec, it is just the thing which will put the Harbour Commissioners in a position to pay the interest on their bonds. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield said that the interest on these bonds for $200,000 was to have priority over the existing bonds. I do not so read the bill. In the first place, the agreement is ratified by the bill. When I turn to the clause in the agreement which deals with the guarantee, I find this :

The elevator to be held as security by the commissioners subject to the bonds aforesaid to the extent of two hundred thousand dollars for the payment of the interest so guaranteed, and the guarantee only to take effect when the elevator is completed and ready for operation. Such guarantee shall be a preferential charge upon the revenues of the commissioners after the capital and interest of the bonds authorized by the Act 61 Vic., Cap. 48 ; but shall rank equally with, and not be preferential to the interest upon any other bonds which may hereafter be issued by the commissioners in connection with improvements in the harbour of Quebec.

That is what the agreement says. The bill ratifies the agreement.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That may take place hereafter, not what has taken place heretofore.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This guarantee is postponed to the payment of the interest on the bonds authorized by the Act 61 Victoria. Those bonds were for $350,000. The bill itself says in the 3rd clause :

3. All amounts payable by the corporation under the guarantee provided for by the said agreement shall be a charge upon the revenue of the corporation and shall have the same priority of payment as the interest on the debentures or bonds which the corporation is authorized hereafter to issue under the Act passed during the present session of Parliament intituled An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, and shall rank equally with, but shall not be preferential to such interest.

The 4th clause provides :

4. Section 36 of the last cited Act is hereby amended as regards paragraph 3 thereof, so as to make the principal and interest of all debentures or bonds now issued by the corporation under the provisions of chapter 48 of the statutes of 1898 payable before and in priority to the principal and interest of debentures or bonds hereafter issued by the corporation under the authority of the said Act passed during the present session of Parliament, and in priority to any interest payable under the guarantee provided for by this Act.

So that it is not true that the bonds are to take precedence of all other bonds, and, inasmuch as you have a railway which, when it becomes part of the Canada Atlantic Railway system, will be probably a solvent and prosperous corporation, and will pay interest on its bonds, I do not think the country is running any great risk, and for that reason in raising a serious question about a comparatively trifling matter like this, hon. gentlemen opposite are making a mountain out of a molehill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—My hon. friend says we are making a mountain out of a molehill. One hon. gentleman said that it was $5,000,000 the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec owed the government of this country. Another gentleman says $6,000,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That has no connection with this.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman may consider that a molehill, I do not. If they cannot pay the interest on $5,000,000 or $6,000,000, I do not see how they are going to pay it any better when they increase their liability by $200,000 more. I do not think the building of this elevator is going to help them very much. I hope trade will improve largely, and I am satisfied it will improve, but I think we are going wild on this question. The taxpayers of this country will think we are going wild. I look upon it that these bonds will take priority on the indebtedness to the governmen to-day. I look upon it the same as a bottomry on a ship—the last mortgage comes first, and justly so, because the object of putting bottomry on a ship is to enable the master of the vessel, if he gets into trouble, to pay for repairs, and it is very much the case in this. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House give great credit to the people of Montreal for what they have done in making that city a seaport. I must say that they are enterprising. I remember the time when the harbour dues at Montreal were so excessive that they drove the trade away from that port. The government of the country relieved the city of Montreal from deepening the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, and it was said they gave that to Montreal, but it is not to Montreal they gave it at all. They gave it to the trade of this country. But now the question is this, are we not giving away too much? If there is one elevator at the city of Quebec, I say it is premature to build another. We are going too fast when we allow the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec to build another elevator and put the securities of the country back. Hon. gentlemen seem to think the Harbour Commissioners never can pay their debt. Perhaps not, but they cannot pay it any better if they increase the debt by $200,000. They do not use the elevator that is there now. It is all very well to say it does not cost us anything. There is $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 of the public money that the Quebec Harbour Commissioners have got. We should try and get some of it back if we can, and if we cannot get it back, we had better wipe it off the slate entirely, and know exactly where we are. There is no use deceiving the people of this country and let other people get ahead of us. As far as I am concerned, I am in a quandery about it. I do not know whether I could vote for the bill—in fact, I do not think I shall vote for it, because it is a question whether I would not vote to wipe the debt off altogether and give the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec a fresh start. As it strikes me now, I think I shall vote against the bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—This is a matter which should have been settled by the local government of Quebec. If they desire an elevator there the local government and the corporation of the city of Quebec should guarantee the money required for the purpose of erecting that elevator. We know that in the city of St. John there are three elevators, and they were built by the joint assistance of the local government and the city corporation and the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is true, the Canadian Pacific had a subsidy for building its railway through the province of Quebec, but they did not come to the Federal Government for assistance to build the elevators at the city of St. John. The people of Quebec ought to be in the same position. If they require a second elevator, they should build it themselves. They have one there which they have not, up to the present time, used. While the Harbour Commissioners of the city of Quebec are indebted to the government of the Dominion for such a large amount as $5,000,000, and while about two-thirds of that sum is composed of the overdue interest on the moneys they received from the government, we ought to be very careful in advancing them any further sums of money, or guaranteeing any further expenditure. It may not be required of the Dominion Government to pay out any further sum at present, but if the enterprise is gone on with and it fails to be a paying one they may fall back on the Dominion to make good this sum. It has not been shown either that there is any necessity for a second elevator at Quebec, and it appears to me we are in considerable haste about undertaking this guarantee for an elevator for which there is at present no necessity.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

On the first clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I confess I listened with a good deal of interest to the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice, and I cannot help complimenting him on the dexterous manner in which he evaded the point I endeavoured to make in reference to the payment of interest. The hon. gentleman attributed to me and repeated what I did say, but conveniently left out that portion in which I qualified the remarks I made. The hon. gentleman says that if my arguments were correct, and the position I took had had any force, then it could not affect the revenue of this country in any way. What I said was this, that there being an elevator in the city of Quebec, capable of doing all the work for a number of years to come, there was no necessity for the construction of another, and if the trade of the city of Quebec developed to an extent which would enable the commissioners to pay the 3 per cent upon the $200,000 bonds, then that 3 per cent could be paid in liquidation of the debt which they owed to the country. That was the position which I took. Whether the trade will develop to that extent, or whether the extending of the Parry Sound Road into the city of Quebec will furnish sufficient freight, in wheat particularly, during the six months when navigation is open, is altogether problematical. I question very much whether it will, and even if it should, my statement is quite correct as to the facilities which are offered for doing that trade at present without incurring this $200,000 additional debt. If this is not to affect the indebtedness due to the country by the Harbour Commissioners, then the bill is useless, because, if I am correct in this statement, the Harbour Commissioners are obliged to pay whatever surplus they may have, over and above the working of the Harbour Commissioners, to the government in liquidation of the interest which is due, and if that is diverted to any other purpose, it must deplete their resources for accomplishing that end.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not if this work creates a revenue by which it is paid.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Which is exactly what it will not do. There is where I take issue. If the extension of the railway to Quebec will increase the trade of that harbour to the extent of enabling the Harbour Commissioners to earn a sufficient amount to pay the interest on the $200,000, should they be called upon to do it? The earnings could be paid to the government on account of the liquidation of the interest on the bonds. The hon. gentleman from Halifax, who looks on this as making a mountain out of a molehill, very seriously told the House that it might possibly happen that it would cost more than that amount of money for the Northern Railway to reach the elevator which is already built upon the Louise Basin. The hon. gentleman, when he made that statement, must have been either drawing on his imagination, or he knows nothing of the location of the terminus of the Lake St. John Railway in Quebec, because, that is to be the terminus of this Great Northern Railway system. It is only a very short distance from the terminus of the Lake St. John Railway in Quebec to the Louise Basin on which the elevator is erected, and to which there is already a railway constructed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman knows how much land damages cost in Quebec.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There would be no land damages in the case.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am told there is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All that would be necessary in leasing from the Canadian Pacific Railway the use of their elevator, would be to make arrangement to run over their tracks to the Louise Basin, and the distance between the terminus of the Lake St. John Railway, and the road that runs to that point is short. In fact the connection can be made before you reach the terminus at all, for they both have to enter the city, so that on that point there is no reasonable argument in the position he has taken. My principal objection has been just what I have already stated. The trade of the country does not require it at the present moment. If it does require it, the facilities are there for doing it, and the very moment the facilities which are now offered are insufficient to carry on that trade, then would be the time to do precisely what the government is proposing to do at the present moment. I admit frankly what the hon. gentleman says with reference to the development of the trade of this country. When we look at the returns and see what the tonnage is that passes through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, and the rapidity with which it is growing, exceeding to a very large extent annually the business carried through the Suez Canal, and when we look at the building up of the Great North-west and its development, we can scarcely anticipate what will be the result; but we have this to consider, whether the trade of that Great North-west is always to come in this direction. We are spending large amounts of money in the way of subsidies in the construction of railways in the North-west Territories, which, if the prediction be correct—I confess I have not the confidence that others have in it—will develop trade by the Hudson Bay route, it will carry the trade away from Ontario and Quebec. The Booth system of railways has established a line of large steamers on the upper lakes in order to feed the line at Parry Sound. We know it has carried millions of bushels of grain during the past year, but where has it carried it? Partly to Montreal and partly to United States ports. That which came after the close of navigation would not be carried to Montreal to remain there all winter, nor would it be carried to Quebec, because it would have to remain there until navigation opened, unless they crossed the Quebec bridge which is to be built and carried to St. John or Halifax. There is another fact which must be borne in mind, and I give the hon. gentleman the information which I have on the best authority: the carrying of wheat by the Parry Sound Railway to the seaports during the past season has not paid the railway. On the contrary, it has been carried at a loss. This is done with commendable enterprise on the part of those people in the hopes of building up that direct trade, to make a profit out of it hereafter. It is all very well to talk about having this new route opened up next May.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the contract.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not the hon. gentleman know that it is utterly impossible to make that connection by next May? Does he not know that the first step has not been taken yet towards the construction of the mile and a quarter bridge across the Ottawa River at Hawkesbury? Yet the hon. gentleman tells us, with all the solemnity of the pulpit, that this expenditure is necessary in order to have it all completed by next May.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the good of an elevator next May, unless you can reach it? The great trade of the west cannot reach there by the Canada Atlantic Railway until the bridge is constructed, and they have not even commenced the construction of the bridge yet. They are preparing for it. They have given out the contract for building the links to connect the pieces of road already constructed. If the bridge is built by next fall, it will be an extraordinary feat in the construction of a public work. I am yet at a loss to know, and I have not yet been informed, either by the Minister of Justice or the Secretary of State, of the necessity for this bill—if it is to give priority to these bonds which are to be paid out of the money which legitimately and properly belongs to the Dominion, unless they propose to give the Harbour Commissioners the $200,000 as a bonus. If that were proposed, I would look on it as a fair, straightforward proposition. This proposition is to expend that which you have not the courage to do otherwise. I hope I may be mistaken as to the results of the construction of this road. Nobody would be better pleased than I would be to see the city of Quebec as prosperous as the city of Montreal. I hope the trade of the country will develop to make it so, but I question if it will while hon. gentlemen are doing everything they can, by the expenditure of money, to take the trade away from that city.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is an element about the agreement which has escaped the attention of the House, and which I think is important in considering the proposition; that is, that the city of Quebec undertake to free any steamship company from tolls and charges for a period of five years that will establish a fortnightly line between Quebec and some British port. If I am correctly advised, the Elder Dempster Company have already acquiesced in the proposal. I see by the papers that the company have accepted the offer of the city of Quebec. If they are going to start their steamship line in May next, one can understand the importance of having the elevator there for the business next spring.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How are you going to get it there?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—By water in the meantime. That is one of the possibilities, but it is an important element in this, that the steamship company has already agreed to run a portion of the service from the city of Quebec, which would be rather hopefu of the wishes that we all entertain that the city of Quebec would receive a portion of the trade.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before we adopt clause 3 I wish to obtain some further information. During the present session of Parliament we were called upon to pass a measure, which I think has received the assent of the Crown, to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. We were told by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice when he submitted it to the House, that that measure was an Act simply to consolidate the Acts relating to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. It was very voluminous. It purported to consolidate a great number of Acts, I could not say how many, and it purported to consolidate all these measures and nothing more. When we look at this bill before us we find that a great deal more had been done, if I understand these sections aright. Clause 3 of this bill reads:

3. All amounts payable by the corporation under the guarantee provided for by the said agreement shall be a charge upon the revenue of the corporation and shall have the same priority of payment as the interest on the debentures or bonds which the corporation is authorized hereafter to issue under the Act passed during the present session of Parliament intituled An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, and shall rank equally with, but shall not be preferential to such interest.

Here we find that under the Act passed by this Parliament the bonds shall have a certain rank, and, therefore, it is as plain as possible that some borrowing powers have been given to Quebec and the right to issue debentures, and that a certain priority is given under this consolidated Act. What are they? We turn to clause 4 of this bill, and we find the following:

4. Section 36 of the last cited Act is hereby amended as regards paragraph 3° thereof, so as to make the principal and interest of all debentures or bonds now issued by the corporation under the provisions of chapter 48 of the statutes of 1898 payable before and in priority to the principal and interest of debentures or bonds hereafter issued by the corporation under the authority of the said Act passed during the present session of Parliament, and in priority to any interest payable under the guarantee provided for by this Act.

I turn to the Act of this session, section 36, with its six subsections, and all these relate to the priority of the debts of the corporation. Section 3, to which reference is made in the clause now before us, says:

The principal and interest on debentures or bonds issued by the corporation under the provisions of chapter 48 of the statutes of 1898 and this Act——

These words "and this Act" have been inserted in that consolidated Act, so that it gives priority to new obligations entered into by the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec under the Act of the present session to the government alone. These words "or of this Act" ranking the new obligations entered into by the corporation of the city of Quebec under the Act of the present session with the obligations incurred under chapter 48 of the Act of 1898.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the $350,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, which the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec were allowed to borrow, to secure additional lands on the front, and to secure wharf accommodation and so on. This Act of 1898 gave this sum of $350,000, priority over the government claims of $3,000,000, with accumulated interest of $2,000,000. That was done with the eyes of this Parliament entirely open. We consolidated these Acts this session, and in the Act of consolidation of this year we declare that further obligation that might be entered into under this consolidated Act would rank with this $350,000 and would take precedence over the government claim of $5,000,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. The hon. gentleman is all wrong in his statement. The words "under this Act" give the commissioners no aditional powers.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We will see.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will state the fact for the information of the hon. gentleman. The whole issue under the Act of 1898 had not taken place, but the balances that were authorized under that Act are provided for under the Act of this session. The statement I made to the House is strictly accurate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—These liabilities, if there are any, must have preference over the government claim. These words were not put there without some meaning.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The meaning was the authority to issue the balance of $350,000 provided for by the Act of 1898.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We will read this clause and find whether the present bill will harmonize with that. The Act of 1898 was not repealed. It was in force and was consolidated with the other, and it still remained on the statutes. Section 36 gives the $350,000 precedence and priority over the old debt which the Harbour Commissioners owe the government of Canada. That is what my hon. friend explained. The explanation is that the words "or of this Act" have only reference to the consolidation of the Act of 1898 into the Act of this session, and it refers to the same amount.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Supposing that that is all right, we still have the fact that these two sections that we now have before us do two things; they go to rank this $350,000 as being a prior claim upon the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec—prior to any other. Then they go to rank the amount we are now authorizing under the bill now before us to come next and to rank with these other words of the Act "or of this Act." That is where the strange part of the business comes in. The 4th clause reads:

Section 36 of the last cited Act is hereby amended as regards paragraph 3° thereof, so as to make the principal and interest of all debentures or bonds now issued by the corporation under the provisions of chapter 48 of the statutes of 1898 payable before and in priority to the principal and interest of debentures or bonds hereafter issued by the corporation under the authority of the said Act passed during the present session of Parliament, and in priority to any interest payable under the guarantee provided for by this Act.

It provides, to my mind, clearly that this amount will take rank next to the $350,000, that it will rank next after the $350,000 and before the old indebtedness of the Harbour Commissioners to the government of Canada. As far as I am able to understand it, that is what it means, and therefore the argument of the hon. gentleman from Halifax is not to the point. I did not, at the time of my observations before the House went into committee, understand the exact bearing of the $350,000. I understand that that is a first lien. Then, I understand that the interest on the $200,000 comes next and will rank after the $350,000, which makes the matter, as far as the government of Canada is concerned, a little worse than I thought it was when I formerly addressed the House.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW, from the committee, reported the bill without amendment.

The Senate adjourned.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (128) "An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act."—(Mr. Mills.)

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (178) "An Act respecting the Quebec Harbour Commissioners."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the bill is read the third time, I wish to make a short explanation. When the bill was before the House this morning I was not so well acquainted with its real object and purpose as I am at the present time. There is much more in the bill than was understood by the House generally, when we considered it this morning. I find that the Harbour Commissioners were authorized under Act of Parliament some time ago to issue certain bonds for the improvement of the Quebec harbour, the interest upon which was guaranteed by the government. In 1898 a bill was passed authorizing the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec to issue $350,000 of debentures, being a portion of that amount which they were authorized under previous Acts of Parliament to issue; but the only reason for the passage of the bill in 1898 was to enable them to issue $350,000 of debentures giving them priority over all other debentures, that is cutting out the government lien upon the receipts of the harbour until the interest was paid upon the $350,000 of debentures which they were authorized to issue, giving them priority, as I have already said, over the government lien. During the present session a bill was introduced consolidating all the Acts which were formerly upon the statute-book relating to the Quebec harbour, and the advances which were made to them by the government, and the guarantee given by the government of a certain amount of interest upon the debentures which they issued. There the matter stood until this bill was introduced which we have been considering to-day. That bill gives to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec the right to endorse or guarantee the interest upon $200,000 of debentures which are to be issued by the Great Northern Railway Company, and it goes further: it places the $200,000 in the position of claiming the interest out of the revenues of the harbour immediately after the interest upon the $350,000, which the law of 1898 gave them the right to issue. That is the position: so that instead of the government's lien being placed behind the $350,000, it is actually placed now, under this bill, behind the $550,000, but that is not all. The law says "and such other debentures as may issue under this Act"—that is, the bill now before us. So that really, as I understand it, and as far as I could understand it by looking at the three different Acts, there is scarcely any limit to which they could go, in the future, to place the government behind the whole of them. Or, in other words, it is tantamount to saying to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec, we forgive you the $5,000,000 we have advanced. That is really the case as it stands, and it is just as well that the Senate and the country should know, that by what we are doing to-day, we are virtually wiping out the claim of the government against the Quebec harbour amounting to over $5,000,000.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (179) "An Act respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal." He said:—Last year we had a bill before us which passed into an Act of Parliament, authorizing the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to borrow $2,000,000 to be spent on harbour improvements. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that there was a good deal of discussion as to the locality on which this money should be spent There was a great difference of opinion between those who favoured the east and those who favoured the west. A compromise was arrived at, and it was provided in that bill that $750,000 of the $2,000,000 should be spent below St. Mary's Current, at the east end of the city. This bill authorizes a change in the Act of last session. Instead of $750,000 going to the east end, the sum of $250,000 only goes there. The $500,000, the balance of the $750,000 that was allowed to go to the east, would be spent in the west end.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that the result of a compromise?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose it is.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The bill of last year was.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the estimates for the present year there is a sum of $500,000—it is not referred to here—which is to be granted to the Harbour Commissioners, and which I assume is to replace the $500,000 taken out of the vote of last year to be spent in the west. The $2,000,000 is raised by the harbour board, but in the Supply Bill which will come down to us, I think there is an item of $500,000 towards the improvements generally at the city of Montreal, and I assume it may fairly be concluded that that $500,000, or part of it, will be spent in lieu of the $500,000 proposed to be spent in the east end. The bill before the House is a very short one. It substitutes $250,000 in lieu of the $750,000 to be spent at the east end of the city. The remaining portion of the $750,000 is to be expended at the Windmill Point basin, subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—This bill, it seems to me, means this—giving $500,000 to the west.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; I think it is giving it to the east.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—By the bill of last year there was $750,000 given to the east end to build a dock and other improvements. This year they take away $500,000 of that from the east and give it to the west, and they take from the east the promise of having a dry dock, and they say that the government itself will build a wharf for $500,000. Why not come here frankly and tell us we are going to give $500,000 to the west and nothing to the east?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Why do you give $500,000 to the west and not a cent to the east?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was a very strong protest against the $750,000 going to the east. It was alleged that the docks at the east were not used to their full capacity, while the docks at the west end do not afford accommodation for the shipping going there. The main business is in the centre and towards the west end. That is the impression I have formed from statements I have read in the discussion that has arisen on the subject. It is stated now that there are docks in the east which are not used to their full capacity, whereas in the west there is admittedly a great dearth of accommodation for ships, and it is admitted that the city of Montreal is not equipped at the present time for the traffic that is going there. The shipments of wheat alone last year amounted to 30,000,000 bushels, and the facilities were taxed, and if there is to be any increase in shipments, there must be an increase in the accommodation. The loan of $2,000,000 is to meet that want. There has been a wrangle over it owing to local jealousies, and very little has been done. I understand a compromise has been arrived at and the works are progressing. I assume, as far as I can gather, that the parties interested accept this arrangement. Although it is not referred to in this bill, as I have said, it amounts to this, the government are, in addition to the authorization of the $2,000,000, granting to the harbour of Montreal, $500,000.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who are the parties interested in the matter?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Allans, the Torrences, the Elder Dempster Company, and the large lines favour the centre and west end. I am told that the docks and wharfs in the east are not utilized to their full capacity.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who are the interested parties who came to a compromise?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gather my information from the public press—the Montreal Witness, Herald and Gazette. I have read a good deal about this controversy.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the same press that reported the Fitzpatrick interview with the Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The press is not always correct, but it does afford a certain amount of information. Last year, when the bill was before the House, it was held up for a considerable time for a compromise. I am not aware that there is any opposition to this bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If I understand right, last year the legislation which passed this House was the result of a compromise. I think we should see that that compromise has been broken and a new compromise has taken place. We have nothing of the kind before us. Is the hon. minister aware that there was any opposition in the House of Commons by the mayor of Montreal upon this subject?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not really say.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Perhaps the press might tell him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I should have heard it if there was.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman says that the docks in the east end are not frequented by steamships.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not to their full capacity.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Since we are speaking of the papers as an authority, the newspapers say that if shipping should stop at the east end they would be at such a distance that the carrying of freight would cost as much as the voyage from Liverpool. That is certainly an exaggeration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought so.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway lines extend to the wharfs, and freight for Toronto can as easily take the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway at the wharfs there as anywhere. That is not a very good reason, but there is another reason given by the hon. minister. The docks in the east are hardly used. Then why are you going to build another wharf, costing, $500,000, in a place where the government say there is no trade to be had? Not only that, but you refuse to the east what the east expected, a dry dock, which certainly, if it could not be built with $750,000, cannot be built with $250,000. I want the hon. gentleman to explain why it is necessary to build a $500,000 wharf if there are no ships coming there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me. The $500,000 is to build a dock between two of the present docks, as laid down on the present plan. It is not in the east, but in the centre, towards the west. Of course the trade will naturally gravitate towards the west, being near the canal. The canal brings down a large amount of traffic and I presume that is one of the reasons why there is more trade there, but I did not mean to say that the $500,000 was to be spent in the east end.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I saw in the public press lately that the Minister of Public Works was not aware of that change.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. He is in France now.

The motion was agreed to on a division, and the bill was read at length at the table.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If I understand the question, this $500,000 is to be spent according to the discretion of the Minister of Public Works, just as he pleases.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It says it is to be approved of by the Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That refers to the plans.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Who spends the money—the $500,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Harbour Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Where is the $250,000 to be spent?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is in the east end.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Instead of spending $750,000 at one place you are going to take $500,000 to the west end and the other $250,000 is to be spent in the east end.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are we to understand that since that compromise took place harmony prevails?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Do the papers say anything about that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has the same opportunity of seeing the papers that I have. It was rather an interesting family quarrel.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I obtain my information where the hon. Secretary of State obtained his, from the editorials in the Montreal Witness, Herald and Gazette, as to the trouble between the Minister of Public Works, Mr. Tarte, and the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. The question really was which was to be master, and I think Mr. Tarte was too much for the whole of them. He had the money and the government at his back, and consequently he could twist the ropes round their neck just as he pleased, and being a man of iron will, he has done just as he liked.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The Harbour Commissioners have got the best of it, and the east end of Montreal has got the worst of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad to hear it. I watched the debate in the House and I did not notice that the mayor of Montreal, who was an exponent of the east end of the city, had anything to say in opposition to this arrangement, and I suppose he must have acquiesced in it. If he has gone back on his friends in the east, we will allow him to settle with them.

The bill was then read a third time, and passed on a division.

MANITOBA ROADS AND ROAD ALLOWANCES.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (175) "An Act further to amend the Act respecting Roads and Road Allowances in the province of Manitoba." He said:—Since this subject was before the House I have succeeded in obtaining further information. The bill as it now stands was drawn at Winnipeg and sent here. The explanation I asked for was in reference to the enumeration of trails, road allowances, highways and great highways. When the bill first came down I assumed that would refer to trails outside of Winnipeg. It did not seem to me that the expressions there were quite applicable to the city of Winnipeg alone, but I find that in an Act passed in 1895 that was the language used in describing and legalizing similar plans, and in that Act there was a provision which reads as follows :—

Nothing in this Act shall affect any right claimed or set up in any action or proceeding now pending in a court of competent jurisdiction, or any right heretofore adjudicated upon or in any action or proceeding in any such court, or shall affect sectional plan number 7 of the city of Winnipeg or any trail, road allowance, highway or great highway shown on that plan, or any original road, trail, road allowance, highway or great highway within the area shown therein.

It appears at the time that road allowances were formed by this Parliament in 1895 that reservations were made in consequence of certain suits that were then in existence in relation to what is known as Water street in the city of Winnipeg. I have before me the plan of the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Is that plan number 7A ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, plan 7A is on file in Winnipeg and we cannot get it.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—We cannot pass the bill without it. How is it the bill speaks of a plan we have not got ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Section 10 reserved any lawsuits that were then existing. Those lawsuits referred to Water street, patents were issued for lands that protruded on the street. The street was originally 66 feet wide and in consequence of buildings put up, it was narrowed down to 60·40 feet, and in the Act of 1895, there was a reservation that it should not affect any suits then pending. I will read a memorandum from the department which will explain the matter. It is as follows :—

The streets affected are Water street and Main street at its junction with Water street, both in the city of Winnipeg, as shown upon the accompanying tracing.

Water street was originally intended to have a uniform width of 66 feet for its whole length, from the Red River to its junction with Main street. The street was, however, encroached on by the Northern Pacific Railway Company on its south side, near the Red River, and on its north side, where it joins Main street, by the original owners of a parcel of land which was formerly parish lot No. 2 in the parish of St. John, and which is now subdivided into city lots. This parish lot faced Main street and is bounded on one side by Water street and on the other side by Notre Dame street. Main street, it may be here stated, was formerly part of one of the old Manitoba trails referred to in different Acts of Parliament as the "trails," "old trails," "highways" or "great highways" of that province.

The encroachments in question have resulted not only in uncertainty and dispute as to the correct boundaries of Water street, and incidentally of Main street, but in several actions at law.

According to a letter addressed to the Minister of the Interior on the 29th June last (copy herewith) by Messrs. Hough & Campbell, solicitors of the city of Winnipeg, the interested parties are the city, the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Canada Landed and National Company. The last named company are now the owners of the city lots on Water street at its junction with Main street, lots within the boundaries of parish lot No. 2 in St. John's parish for which the late Sir John Schultz obtained a patent.

The city represented by Messrs. Hough & Campbell, the railway company represented by Messrs. Ewart, Fisher & Wilson, and the other company represented by Mr. J. B. McLaren, having arrived at a settlement, the city of Winnipeg caused a special survey to be made of that part of the city of Winnipeg affected, under the provisions of the Special Surveys Act, chapter 142 of the Revised Statutes of Manitoba. The plan of this new special survey has been filed in the land titles office at Winnipeg as No. 559, and is the plan 7A referred to in the bill. A copy has not been furnished to the department.

The words in the first clause of the bill as to the boundary lines of "all roads, trails, road allowances, highways and great highways" correspond with the last part of section 4 of chapter 30 of 58-59 Victoria of which a copy is herewith.

The bill was framed by Mr. Wilson, of Messrs. Ewart, Fisher & Wilson, and was approved by the city solicitors and by Mr. McLaren.

If the bill becomes law, Messrs. Hough & Campbell state that it will settle the disputes on account of which section 10 of chapter 30, 58-59 Victoria, was passed. For this reason the city solicitors urge the passing of the bill during the present session of Parliament.

A bill was drawn and sent down here by the solicitor for the city of Winnipeg with a request that we would pass it. Parliament, in confirming the other streets in 1895, introduced a clause holding in abeyance any streets as to which there were law suits then pending.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—As I understand it, this plan only deals with the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is all.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It does not go outside the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I was misled by the reference to trails and highways. Those are the words used in the original Act.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We do not know what the area of the plan is. It may be a plan of the city of Winnipeg and it may be a plan of the whole of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The plan on the table is a copy of the plan referred to.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If it only deals with the city of Winnipeg I am satisfied with the bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is all it deals with.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If it deals with all the trails of Manitoba I have a decided objection to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You would be quite right.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We have in Ontario trails made by cattle, and it would never do to legalize them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It only deals with that part which was left undealt with by the Act of 1895. It provides that wherever there were suits then existing, the Act should not apply. The suits having terminated, this bill is to transfer the streets not included in that Act. At the time the Act of 1895 was passed, there was this lawsuit about Water street, and therefore Water street was excluded from the legislation under the Act of 1895.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It goes beyond that. When you look at the second clause of the bill, it transfers all the interest of the Dominion in the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan. We have no knowledge whatever of the extent or value of the territory which is to be transferred to the government of the province of Manitoba. It may be $1,000 or $100,000. Those who know anything of the city of Winnipeg, know the rapid increase in the value of property there, and though there is no boom such as they had a few years ago, still there may be a great value in the lands which are to be transferred and which are not yet patented, and I think before the hon. gentleman asks us to accept this bill as it is, he should place himself in a position to give information to the House as to the value of them, or if he desires to have the boundaries to which he refers settled, then he had better strike out the last portion of the second clause, because we have not heard any reason yet why the lands now in the Crown, and if sold would form a part of the revenue of the Dominion, should be handed over to Manitoba without any consideration other than to give them another douceur. We have given them over half a million dollars already. We have assumed the debts which were incurred a long time ago for the building of government house and the parliament buildings, amounting to half a million dollars. How much more are we to give them by the provisions of this bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought I explained that when we had it up before. I explained that Water street was laid out 66 feet wide, and there had been encroachments which lessened it to 60·40 feet. There are odds and ends, as the hon. gentlemen will see, between where the land has been encroached on, because the encroachment has not been uniform all over Water street, and those odds and ends of five feet here and there, of course, go to the Crown of Manitoba.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because the streets are now in the Crown.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—If they belong to the Crown, leave them as they are.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In order to make the street uniform, we are now narrowing it to 60·40 feet wide. Between that width and 66 feet, there will be little gaps of land 5·60 feet wide, and there is no reason why they should go to individuals.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—If it belongs to the government of Manitoba, what right have we to interfere and narrow it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are now, in conformity with the law that has prevailed heretofore, correcting an error in regard to one of the streets. We corrected in 1895 a number of other errors, and we held over the errors connected with Water street. The parties have now come to an agreement and we propose to deal with Water street just as we dealt with the other streets of Winnipeg, so there is nothing I can see of any substantial value, and the Crown as represented in Manitoba should have those odds and ends. I do not know their value.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not understand the Secretary of State. He first tells us that in the past they gave these streets to the province of Manitoba. If they are held by the government of the province of Manitoba, what right have we, as a Dominion Parliament, to interfere with the width of streets that belong to the city of Winnipeg, and to the province of Manitoba, and what necessity is there for declaring in this bill that such portions of the land as remain unpatented should be given to the province of Manitoba? If it is theirs already, there is no necessity for making a provision to give it to them. If there is any portion of the lands not yet patented and not yet sold, then it belongs to the Dominion; and you are assuming the ownership of that land from the very fact that you are making provision in this bill to hand over all that portion of unpatented lands to Manitoba. The hon. gentleman shakes his head.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a purely technical question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The bill says those portions of land shown as streets, and so much of the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan as is unpatented.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Crown in Manitoba holds the sixty-six feet. We are now altering the width.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend does not seem to understand it, or I am incapable of explaining it. There are certain lands presumed to be unpatented by the wording of this bill, and you say that in narrowing the street from 66 feet to 60·40 you will give all the unpatented lands to the province of Manitoba. You must own it if you can give it. If you have disposed of it under some other provisions of the law, there can be no necessity for redeeding it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend undertakes to give a broader meaning to those words than they are intended to have. The words are "those portions of the land shown as streets on the said sectional plan."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Which we have not got.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It continues:

> And so much of the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan as is unpatented, are hereby transferred to the Crown in the right of the province of Manitoba.

In 1895 a bill was carried through Parliament transferring the proprietory interest in the street from the Crown as represented by the Dominion to the Crown as represented by the province of Manitoba, but that really was only adopted with regard to these streets about which there was no controversy. There were certain streets reserved which were not transferred from the Crown of Canada to the Crown of Manitoba in consequence of this controversy. Now, this bill deals with those streets exactly in the same way as the former bill dealt with the vast majority of the streets. The street was supposed to have been 66 feet wide. Encroachments had been made upon certain portions of it, and those encroachments made the street somewhat narrower than the original intention. The first clause is:

> The sectional plan numbered 7*a*, filed in the Land Titles Office for the city of Winnipeg, on the 27th day of June, 1899, as number 559, is hereby approved, and the boundaries and lines of all roads, trails, road allowances, highways and great highways, as such boundaries and lines are shown on the said plan, are hereby declared to be the true boundaries thereof, whether or not they are the true boundaries and lines according to any Dominion Government survey thereof.

There is the declaration that these boundaries, as they are settled by that plan 7A, are to be regarded as the true boundaries, whether they were originally so in fact or not. Now, if there be portions of the land along these streets that have not been encroached upon, although they are more than 60·40 feet, they will be vested in the Crown of Manitoba as portions of the street. They do not belong to any individual, and you would not want to have in front of any particular lot four or five feet of land vested in the Crown here, instead of being vested in the Crown of Manitoba to which the street is intended to belong. That is the whole question, and this bill will put those particular streets undealt with, which were in controversy until very recently, in exacting the same position as the other streets were put by the Act of 1895.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will read clause 3 of the Act of 1895:

> 3. Section six of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—
>
> 6. The unpatented land forming part of any road transferred to the Crown in the right of the province by or under this Act or declared by this Act to be the property of the Crown in the right of the province shall be vested in the Crown as aforesaid.

It assumes, where the width is altered and there are odds and ends, that they belong to the Crown and not to individuals.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing the hon. gentleman's contention is correct, those unpatented portions would be at the disposal of the province to sell to whom—to the owners of the property lying behind them? Does that belong to the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This law is not sufficiently clear to my mind. Do those road allowances referred to in this Act of 1895, include the streets, roads, (and old trails of the city of Winnipeg), as well as of the province? The question for us to consider now is the amount of land and its value we are transferring to the province.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—There is no doubt that this plan which was before us just now has been amended by plan 7A. Therefore this plan is not correct.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a certified copy of plan 7A.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, it is not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is a copy of a portion of sectional plan number 7.

Hon. Mr. LANRRY—Then it is not 7A.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—It is very fortunate that it is so. If it were a copy of plan 7A it would have put the minister in a bad position, because he told us that he did not have plan 7A. I am glad the hon. member has acknowledged he was mistaken; 7A is a different plan from this, and it was made to amend this plan. We can only form suppositions, and those suppositions, I suppose, should be admitted until we can get something surer. If the government simply asked that those portions simply shown as streets on the sectional plan be transferred to the Crown, I do not see much difficulty about it. But the clause further says: "And so much of the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan." What does that amount to? Does anyobody suppose that this plan only contains those lots which have not been sold and which, therefore, are not patented? It says: "So much of the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan as is unpatented." Therefore, there remain in Winnipeg certain lots that are not patented. This bill asks that the Dominion Government should give to the local government the unpatented lots. They may amount to a large sum. The hon. leader says that the city of Winnipeg is not booming just now. I think I have seen the statement that it was booming a little. It is not hard to suppose that one-quarter of the city of Winnipeg is not patented. That might amount to $100,000; it might amount to $300,000, and this would appear to be a way to obtain what we refused last year—the $300,000 that they asked for. We would be shifting from one plan to the other, and giving by this means what we refused to give last year. Will the government consent to strike out "And so much of the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan as is unpatented."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have not seen the bill before, and so have not the information upon it which amounts to perfect accuracy, but the impression I have with regard to it is that in the case of the unoccupied or unpatented lands, the street there remains at its normal width of sixty-six feet, and therefore there is a portion of that street the title of which is still in the Crown, that if you confine your conveyance to the Crown as represented by the province, it would be a narrow strip of land vested in the Crown of Canada between the lot and what becomes the streets.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it not go further than that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think so. I cannot say positively that it does not, because the words might be broad enough to include other lands, if there were other lands undisposed of, but I am not aware of any lands belonging to the Crown undisposed of in Winnipeg.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The explanation given by my hon. friend is just the one that suggested itself to me. They have given to the city of Winnipeg a street 66 feet wide, and they now propose to reduce it to 61·40 feet. This leaves a strip of land along the front of the whole of the buildings, and this strip they propose transferring to the government of Manitoba, because it was a part of the street which was originally given to them. But you go further than that; you say "all the unpatented lots." Now, if there are fifty unpatented lots, or a hundred unpatented lots along that street, that had not been yet patented or sold by the Crown, you gave them also. Let me call attention to a remark made by the Minister of Justice which verified the statement I made in reply to his remarks a couple of sessions ago. This is another illustration of governing by heads of departments without the knowledge of their colleagues.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes. My hon. friend told this House not five minutes ago, that he had never seen this bill. Now this is a bill affecting the laws of the country. It is a bill affecting the transfer of lands, and it is a bill which should have been considered in the Department of Justice before it was acted upon by other departments. If that bill had been suggested under the late government, it would have come before the council from the Department of the Interior, and the council would have referred it to my hon. friend's department to see how it would effect the law of the land, and upon his report they would have acted. It is quite evident the Minister of the Interior has taken the responsibility upon himself. My hon. friend the Secretary of State shakes his head. I took it for granted, drawing my conclusions from declarations made in this House some time ago, that they were not going to pursue the old fogey plan, as they designated it, of letting each of the cabinet ministers know what was going to be proposed, hence the Minister of the Interior took upon himself the responsibility of sending this bill into the House of Commons and carrying it through. Perhaps he was able to give all the information necessary. The Minister of Justice, who should have been consulted in this matter, and who should be able to tell us what effect this will have upon the laws at present upon the statute-book tells us that he never saw it before. He will excuse me for calling attention to this, I do so because it is always a gratification to any one to be able to say that his predictions have been verified. "I told you so" is a very old remark, and here is an illustration of it. We have had it in almost every bill that has been introduced here to-day, for the simple reason that in every instance, except the bills which came from the department of the Minister of Justice, and particularly those which were introduced and attempted to be explained by the hon. Secretary of State, they have not been able to give any explanation at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, pshaw!

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If these bills had been approved by council, the Secretary of State and Minister of Justice would have been in a position to give such explanations as were required. The only point in the bill, is really this, how much land are we giving to the province of Manitoba. If it were only the mere strip that was cut off, I say that it would not amount to much, and it would be the best way to get rid of it. If it includes a dozen, or a hundred, or fifty of valuable lots on this street then it is worthy of further consideration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could not. It only refers to one street.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, take for instance Notre Dame street, or Sherbrooke street in Montreal each is but a street, and might include a lot of property. Water street is not one of the best streets in Winnipeg, but it is a street running from the Main street down to the water's edge, and there is valuable property on it. If the House thinks proper to pass the bill, I do not propose to object to it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may be allowed to add a word to the discussion which has already occupied some time. I may say the question presents itself to the House in this way: The Parliament of Canada, when the hon. leader of the opposition was leader of the government, in 1895, passed an Act, chap. 30 of the Acts of that year, which gave the road allowances in the province of Manitoba to the Crown in the right of the said province. That was as to places outside of Winnipeg. Then section 4 reads:

All roads, trails, road allowances, highways or great highways of any of the classes referred to in the said Act, as hereby amended, which are shown on any sectional plan——

It says any sectional plan, not one sectional plan.

Any sectional plan of the city of Winnipeg, &c., are hereby transferred to and vested in the Crown in the right of the province of Manitoba.

Section 5 continues the same thing:

The Governor in Council may, on the report of the Minister of the Interior, transfer to the Crown in the right of the province of Manitoba all such roads, trails, road allowance, highways and great highways as are referred to in the next preceding section.

So that Parliament, at the instance of the hon. leader of the government, was prepared to transfer, without any hesitation, to the province of Manitoba all the road allowances in the city of Winnipeg set out upon all the sectional plans. Now there was just one exception to that, and it is in the last section of the Act of 1895. The section reads:

10. Nothing in this Act shall affect any right claimed or set up in any action or proceeding now pending in a court of competent jurisdiction, or any right heretofore adjudicated upon in an action or proceeding in any such court, or shall affect sectional plan number seven of the city of Winnipeg, or any road, trail, road allowance, highway or great highway shown on that plan, or any original road, trail, road allowance, highway or great highway within the area shown thereon.

Whatever was shown in that sectional plan seven was excepted from the Act of 1895, because there was litigation going on with respect to the roads. The litigation has been terminated by compromise in some way, and the parties to the litigation prepared a bill and sent it down to us to pass, which simply amounts to repealing section ten of the Act of 1895. That is repealed because the causes have ceased to operate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman must imagine that the members of the House are far more simple than himself, when he asks us to accept this explanation. This 4th section of the Act is distinct and positive in its character. It transfers all roads, road allowances, trails, highways and great highways of any of the classes referred to in the said Act as hereby amended, which are shown on the sectional plan of the city of Winnipeg, which has been prepared and confirmed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba and so on. It does not transfer one single yard or foot of land other than the streets and highways. This bill goes further than that. It reads:

And so much of the rest of the land contained in the area of the said land as is unpatented is hereby transferred to the Crown in the right of the province of Manitoba.

Why does the hon. gentleman want to impress upon the minds of hon. senators, a fact which does not really exist? We were not contending against transferring to the province of Manitoba any land that was situated on and formed part of Water street. That has been transferred by a former Act, by this Act we are assuming the responsibility and the power of narrowing a street of 66 feet wide, which we had actually given by a bill to the city of Winnipeg, and then we turn round and say that portion of the land which is not included within 60·40 feet, we will not only convey back to the province of Manitoba, but we will give all unpatented lands that are shown on plan 7A, whatever that may be. That is the distinction, and I am surprised that my hon. friend from Halifax should, even unintentionally, mislead the House on a question of this kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This bill was not drawn by us. The bill was framed by the solicitors for three different concerns, the city of Winnipeg and the other parties who were interested. They knew what they were about and sent this down to us. Probably they drew the Act of 1895.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Better give them a little further time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The solicitors for the parties have written to me as follows:—

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, 29th June, 1899.

Hon. JAMES A. SMART,
Deputy Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Re WATER STREET.

DEAR SIR,—You will remember that last year there was some correspondence as to amending the law as to Water street.

The parties interested were and are the city of Winnipeg, for whom we act. The Northern Pacific Railway Company (solicitors, Messrs Ewart, Fisher & Wilson) and the Canada Landed and National Company (Mr. J B. McLaren). The last named company own the lots at the intersection of Water and Main streets formerly owned by Lady Schultz.

As intended thirty years ago Water street should have a width of 66 feet but the railway company on the south side have according to the city's contention encroached on the street on its south side near the Red River and the owners of the Schultz estate encroched on it near Main street on the north side of the street.

A settlement has at last been arrived at, under the city's direction a new plan has been made "plan 7 A" which has been filed in the Land Titles Office as No. 559. This gave Water street a uniform width of 60 $\frac{4}{10}$ feet. The city council by resolution approved this and by it directed us to obtain legislation necessary to validate it. We inclose you two clauses drawn up by Mr. Wilson and approved by Mr. McLaren and by ourselves which we think will meet the case. This will put an end to the trouble given your department in 1894-95 as to title to the strip in dispute.

It settles the disputes on account of which sec. 10, cap. 30, 1895 Dominion was passed. As titles in that part of the city depend upon the fixed location of Water street an enactment this season is important.

Yours truly,

HOUGH & CAMPBELL,

Winnipeg, City Solicitors.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman should accept the bill without the second clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We could not do that. I called my hon. friend's attention to a similar clause in the Act of 1895. It speaks of the unpatented land forming part of any road.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The bill goes further than that. The clause says "all unpatented land." It does not say "unpatented land forming part of the road."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it amounts to much.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It may not it amount to much, but still it is there.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the motion is put, I should like to ask the minister if the government would not consent to strike out the following words "and the rest of the land contained within the area of the said plan?" If not, I think it would be our duty to propose an amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a compromise bill between the city and the other parties, and I do not feel like making any changes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It might be amended when we go into committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE — I move that this clause be amended so as to read in this way:

Those portions of the land shown as streets on the said sectional plan are hereby transferred to the Crown in the right of the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This stands in a different position from the other. The clause in the bill which the hon. leader of the opposition referred to is scarcely applicable. The clause would convey nothing but the 66 $\frac{4}{10}$ feet. The intention of the clause, as it now stands, is that where the street was originally wider than that, and has not been encroached upon, it has been more than 66 $\frac{4}{10}$ feet. There will be a strip of what was originally intended as a street between what is now actually the street and the lot, and the suggestion is to convey that, and I do not think the words are broad enough.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was shown as streets before.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would not this settle it, "That portion of the land shown as streets on the said sectional plan No. 7A, and unpatented is hereby transferred."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That would not serve the purpose.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The present bill only refers to unpatented lands.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The sixty-six foot was never patented. That was reserved as a road allowance, and therefore it is the unpatented portion of Water street.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You leave everything that is objectionable in it when you leave the word "unpatented."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then strike out the word "unpatented."

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then you convey nothing.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I ask leave to withdraw my amendment, and I move an amendment that the second clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then the bill is not good for anything. That is the operative clause which transfers the lands to the province of Manitoba. The better way is to throw the bill out altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman thinks so he should move it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a very small matter. It affects only one street in the city of Winnipeg, little scraps of land which are not patented because of the narrowing of the street. Wherever the street is 66 feet wide, the city will probably leave it so. Hon. gentlemen will see we are dealing with a subject where we do not know the details. The city of Winnipeg, in a small matter of this kind, ought to be trusted to do what is right. The lawsuits have been withdrawn and this bill is introduced at the request of the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They forgot to send us a plan.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They could not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How is it we have a correct copy of the plan of 1894 which comes from the same source?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am giving you all the information that plan 7A can give. Hon. gentlemen can see the narrow line on the plan where the encroachments are.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Could not the hon. gentleman meet the objection by inserting something to show that the bill refers only to Water street?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have read the original correspondence from the solicitors of the city of Winnipeg. I think we can trust them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are three parties interested, the city of Winnipeg being one, and the hon. gentleman contends, that they, having agreed to this, we should accept it. The province of Manitoba has passed legislation demanding the transfer of the whole of the unpatented lands of the province to them, to be disposed of by them. If there is anything in that argument, we should give the province of Manitoba all the unpatented lands on the same principle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government of Manitoba have nothing whatever to do with this. They have not been consulted. The only reason the government of Manitoba is mentioned is that they are technically the representatives of the Crown in reference to all road allowances, just as in Ontario the Crown is represented by Ontario and is the owner of all road allowances, and so in every province. The only parties really interested are those I have mentioned.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—In the province of Ontario the government own all the wild lands. It is not so in the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A suggestion has been made to me by the hon. gentleman from Halifax which meets all objections. Strike out after "the plan" in the second line, and the word "are" in the third line and it will read "those portions of the plan shown as streets on the said sectional plan No. 7A are hereby transferred to the Crown in the right of the province of Manitoba." That will transfer the streets.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My impression is from that fact that a plan is referred to and that plan is prepared with reference to the carrying out the compromise, that that will be uniformly throughout the whole length of that street $61\frac{4}{10}$ feet and nothing more, and if my impression is right, the property that is intended to be surveyed beyond that is the original street that has not been encroached upon, and that will be left untouched if you carry that amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman may be quite correct, but that is a matter we know nothing about, because we have had no information upon it. Let it go down to the other House and if they see it is not correct they can put it in shape. We do not want to be in a position of transferring a whole lot of property we know nothing about.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing the hon. gentleman were to add to that "and the original street laid out to its full extent, where it is not encroached upon."

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to that, but some other gentlemen have.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was adopted.

Contents, 9; non-contents, 7.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the bill with an amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall not move concurrence in the amendment. I will not stultify myself by moving concurrence in an amendment which I do not approve of. The gentleman who moved the amendment should move the concurrence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a government bill which has been amended in committee, and the practice has been always either that the mover drop the bill altogether, or accept the amendment. If the hon. gentleman does not like to accept the decision of the committee, the bill drops and he takes the responsibility.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will move that the amendment be concurred in. Let the bill go to the House of Commons and the amendment can be dealt with there.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (190) "An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned." He said:—There are a number of lines that are mentioned here, some of which it is proposed to aid for the first time, and some are roads to which subsidies have been voted by Parliament in former sessions. The first part of the bill is taken up with the interpretation of its provisions, what is to be considered the cost of the road, certain charges, as for instance a bridge that costs more than $25,000, the terminals of the roads and the cost of equipment are not included in the cost of construction of the road. Then there is a provision as to the amount of subsidy up to a certain sum, $3,200 a mile, and when the cost exceeds $15,000 a mile, a larger subsidy may be voted. The bill contains a list of the roads, and the length of road it is proposed for the current year to aid, and after the list come certain conditions as to the terms upon which these grants are made. There are certain duties that the roads so aided are to discharge for the public, as for instance the carriage of persons, the carriage of mails and so on. Those duties are to be undertaken and discharged for the public over these lines of road up to the sum of three per cent on the amount of money that has been advanced towards their construction. If there is anything done beyond that sum during the year on behalf of the government of the country, then payment is to be made for that. I need not go over the list of roads and mention the names of the lines to be aided. I have brought, for the information of the Senate, the maps with the lines marked in red upon them, so that any hon. gentleman who wishes to see where any one of those roads is situated, its terminal points and the direction in which it lies, and its connection with other roads, will be able to obtain that information by looking at the maps laid upon the table. Those roads lie in every province of the Dominion east of the Rocky Mountains. The first mentioned is the Central Ontario Railway, twenty-one miles in length; the second is the Quebec Railway, fifty-three and a half miles in length; the third a Quebec railway sixty-six one-hundredths of a mile in length; the fourth, an Ontario road twenty-four miles in length, running in a north-westerly direction from the town of Strathroy; the fifth a road in New Brunswick fifty-nine miles long, lying between the county of York and the county of Carleton; the sixth a Nova Scotia road thirty miles in length, extending from the Straits of Canso to St. Peters, and so on. The number reaches fifty-one. Besides those fifty-one roads that are to be aided in various parts of the Dominion, there is the Ontario and Rainy River Railway, 140 miles in length; there is the Quebec bridge to receive aid not exceeding $1,000,000, the Yamaska River bridge to the extent of $50,000; a bridge over the Richelieu River at Sorel, $25,000; a bridge across the St. Francis River, $50,000, and a bridge over the Nicolet River, $15,000. Then there are some further and smaller sums in other portions of the Dominion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman tell us the total amount to which the country is pledged by these subsidy resolutions.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot tell my hon. friend. I know we went over it, and the sum total was made up, but I have forgotten. I do not carry it in my mind, and besides that, I think some slight modifications were made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not suppose that there is any intention on the part of the Senate to interfere, to any great extent, with the bill or the proposition which is now before it; but I think it well to call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman himself, and those with whom he has been associated, have denounced in unmeasured terms former governments for having brought down propositions of this kind a few hours before the prorogation of Parliament. If it were a crime in the old government to bring down propositions for the expenditure, in the way of railway subsidies, of sums amounting to $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 in the dying hours of the session, how much greater is the crime on the part of my hon. friend to ask a House of about sixteen members; to pledge the country to a sum exceeding $6,000,000? That is the position in which the Senate is placed at the present moment. First of all, I do not hesitate to say that the system of bonusing railways, to the extent which is now being carried on, is imposing a burden on the revenues of this country that is totally unjustifiable. When the proposition was originally made to bonus railways, it was upon the principle of granting a sum equal to the expense of the metal which would be required to rail all portions of the road subsidized. It was also laid down as a principle, that the roads which were to be subsidized should be those lines which opened up and developed certain unsettled portions of the country. This was the original principle on which bonuses were granted. I do not wish it, however, to be inferred, that that principle was strictly adhered to during the whole of the time that these bonuses were granted, but I do say this, that the propositions which are now before us are of a character altogether different from and apart from the principle upon which bonuses were originally granted, and which was followed for a number of years. Any one looking at these proposed bonuses will find that not only has the amount which is to be paid in assisting in the construction of roads been doubled, but that it has gone much further. It is aiding roads with double the amount of subsidy originally proposed to be paid, and it is double the amount in cases where the local legislatures and the municipalities have also bonused the line to an extent which will nearly build the road. Or, in other words, the bonuses which are to be received by a number of these roads are sufficient in amount to almost cover the construction of the whole road, or very nearly so. To put it in other words, the roads are being built through the aid from the Dominion and local governments and municipalities, and made a present of to the parties who speculated, because if you get within a few thousand dollars of the amount required to construct the roads in the way of bonuses, and the company has bonding powers, in all cases running from ten to twenty thousand dollars a mile, it simply means the placing of a large amount of money, perhaps thousands of dollars per mile, in the pockets of promoters and contractors. When I say the contractors, I mean in many cases the construction companies which are composed of those who form the companies, and consequently they have the disposal of the money which comes into their hands. Then, again, you will find that there is the proposition in some of these proposed subsidies to aid short lines of a mile or two in the very centre of industries which are in existence in towns or villages, and they want to extend the railway from a particular industry down to the wharf, which is a purely local matter, and the Dominion Government, with its paternal care over these particular sections of the country, for some unknown reason, come down and make a proposition to aid in the construction of such short roads. They can have no Dominion or even local object in view, but simply to aid the gentlemen or the company, whoever they may be, in the construction of a road to assist in carrying on manufacturing industries. You might as well go to the city of Montreal and say to the sugar refining company, "You require a road to connect with the Grand Trunk Railway at a certain point on the canal. We will give you $3,200 per mile in order that you can lay down rails to enable you to carry your raw sugar which arrives at one of the basins of the canal into the refinery." I unhesitatingly say that that was not and should not be the object of granting the railway subsidies. The object was the opening up and developing the country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Eighteen thousand dollars was given to build a road six miles long to a saw-mill in the county of York by the late Minister of Finance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So much the worse. The hon. gentleman has intensified the error. We assisted in building six miles and you have reduced the length to two, and even in that case I do not say it was right. On the contrary, I think the principle has been carried too far even by the government of which I was a member. The error has been intensified by the propositions which are now before us, and the sooner the country puts a stop to this mode of expenditure, and the involving of the country, in one session, in this kind of railway subsidies to an amount exceeding $6,000,000, the better it will be. As senators we cannot amend these bills, I suppose, because they are money bills. We have either to accept them in toto, good or bad, or throw them out. I am not prepared to assume that responsibility. I leave that with the government which proposes these subsidies and with the country which has to decide upon this question when asked to give a verdict. I will, however, take this opportunity of placing upon record still further the sentiments of some of the gentlemen, my hon. friend opposite among the rest, upon this question of railway subsidies. We have only to look at the declarations which have been made throughout the whole Dominion for the last fourteen years, during the time these subsidies were proposed by the late government, to find that almost every hon. gentleman who now holds a portfolio, and those in the cabinet who have not the responsibility of a portfolio upon their shoulders, denouncing in most unmeasured terms the propositions which were made. They were declared, more particularly by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to be not only improper expenditures of the public money, but bribes to the sections of the country where the roads were to be built—not only those sections of the roads which were going into the northern part of our country, opening up new settlements and assisting in the development of the resources of the country in that way, but more particularly the subsidies to those short roads which were declared to be for the purpose of buying up constituencies. I do not want to particularize, but I know of one case—and it is a road which is being subsidized by these resolutions—where a certain portion of a constituency always gave a Conservative majority, or a majority in favour of the government of the day. The Ontario Government gave them $99,000 in aid of the construction of certain railways. These resolutions add to that amount, and the last local election gave the Hardy government a majority in that particular locality of a hundred and one, or in other words, just about a thousand dollars for each one of the majority, or very nearly so. I do not mean to say that the granting of the bonus purchased that municipality, but I give hon. gentlemen the facts and they can draw their own conclusions. The present government are aiding in the extension of two miles in that particular municipality to-day. But do not forget how they guard themselves in the immense return they are to have in the three per cent postage service which they are to deduct from these subsidies in consideration of giving it. That is the three per cent on two miles of road running from a manufacturing establishment to a wharf. What mails they are going to carry, I do not know. Be that as it may these are facts, and they are incontrovertible, as the result of this class of bonusing, and the rapidity with which we are running into debt. In fact that in those very estimates they are for the ordinary purposes exceeding by millions those subsidies which they condemned in the late government, and the pledging of the country to an amount verging on nearly $70,000,000 this year, is a question for the country seriously to consider as to whether it is not time that they began to cry a halt. When we discuss the budget, I think that I shall be able to show, without occupying very much time that the statement which I have made is not at all exaggerated. Let us look at the position the present government occupy on this question, commencing with the Premier and going down to his colleagues. In looking at Hansard hon. gentlemen will find that the Premier used the following language:

> The policy of bonusing railways by cash and land grants from the Dominion Government has become a fruitful source of jobbery, peculation, and corruption. Under its operation favourites of the government have been enriched. Appropriations have been made for the sole purpose of purchasing the support of constituencies, and vast sums of public money have been voted without regard to the public interest, while millions of acres of land that should have been held in trust by the government for the future homes of hardy and deserving settlers have been handed over without consideration or justification to charter-hawkers, whose intervention actually retards the construction of the lines whose franchises they control for the purpose of extorting money from the ultimate builders of the roads. The policy of granting these subsidies has repeatedly been condemned in Parliament by the Liberal party, and this resolution is in harmony with the attitude of the Liberal party upon this question.

That is when they moved the resolution condemning the granting of subsidies to any road. Then Sir Richard Cartwright stated, in answer to a letter written to the president of the Patrons, that there should be no railway bonuses. He said:

There is simply no single one of all these objects which the Liberal party have not been fighting for, moving resolutions for, and doing their very best to obtain any time during the last twenty years.

Yet they come into power and propose these resolutions. They intensify the wrong which they say was perpetrated by their predecessors by doubling and trebling the sums which they propose to give in aid of every conceivable proposition which can be made to them; from opening up the unsettled lands of the country, to which not one of us would have any objection, to the building of roads to assist the manufacturers in the particular cities and towns in which they exist. Then coming to the point from which I started, that they condemned in unmeasured terms the bringing down of railway subsidies at late periods of the session, we find in 1894 Sir Wilfrid Laurier using the following language:

The session has lasted four months, and the government have had more time than was necessary to prepare these resolutions. How is it possible that this House can discuss these resolutions intelligently, covering as they do about sixty different railway schemes, and involving as they do over three millions of dollars? It is quite impossible under such circumstances that any man in this House can give intelligent attention to this question. I protest against such proceedings.

He was followed by a gentleman whom we all respect, and who now has the position of leader of of the government in this House, the Hon. David Mills, who said:

We are in the fifth month of the session, and we now have for the first time brought under our attention and have no opportunity to consider.

Now, if that were the case with subsidies about fifty per cent less than we are now asked to give, I suppose if the argument had any force, then it would be equally forcible and pertinent to the case before us, unless my hon. friend thinks the members of the opposition to-day are much more intelligent than he and those with whom he was connected were at that time, and consequently are able to master a $6,000,000 appropriation for railways, easier, quicker and more expeditiously than they could $3,000,000. If he puts it upon that ground, which I should not have any thought of doing, we would have no particular cause to complain, but I question very much whether he will.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I do not think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think the hon. gentleman's lack of self esteem, or the organ so described by phrenologists, being situated some where on the top of the head, is of such a character as to enable him to concede any superiority, intellectually, on the part of anybody over himself and his colleagues. That is a point I am not going to dispute with him. I will concede all that he claims for himself, and leave the country to judge of the correctness of the estimate. Then Sir Richard Cartwright followed. He said:

This abuse is one of long standing, and therefore all the worse. We ought in all conscience at the time of the budget or about that time to get a description of what our obligations are and what further obligations it is proposed the country should incur. The practice of putting these resolutions off until the end of the session is carried on for the express purpose of stifling and preventing inquiry.

If that were applicable in the past how much more applicable is it to-day, when we have the House of Commons just passing the last of the items in the estimates which are to form the Supply Bill, and we are left to consider a $6,500,000 appropriation in a very few hours. I confess I am somewhat inclined to the view expressed by the hon. Minister of Justice some time ago, when he denounced this system, and I think very few of us are capable of mastering the whole subject in so short a time. Then we have the Postmaster General who, as we all know, is not only choice in his language, but very moderate in anything he says when speaking of his opponents. He said:

To-day we have scarcely more than one-half of the House sitting.

We have not a fourth of the Senate sitting here, and venture the assertion that the Commons have not more than a third, and perhaps not more than a fourth. Mr. Mulock said:

To-day we have scarcely more than one-half the House sitting and not one of us has had the opportunity of communicating with the outside world before we are asked to vote away public money. It is on the line of the whole financial administration of this government. They are practically engaged in wrecking the finances of Canada. A government that has shown less regard for the finances of Canada has never occupied the treasury benches since we have had responsible government. I am but voicing the sentiments of the thoughtful people of Canada when I say that the finances of our country to-day are in the hands of reckless men, who are prepared to sacrifice the interests of our country in order to maintain themselves in power. The recklessness with which the rights of the people are being dealt with, the recklessness with which our finances are being handled, the recklessness with which our credit is being dealt with, the recklessness with which the possibilities of this country are being disregarded, convince me that the interests of the country are entirely subsidiary to the interests of the men who are on the treasury benches.

With a proposition to spend during the coming year, or to involve the country in an indebtedness—because it may not all be spent this year—of the amount to which I have referred, between $60,000,000 and $70,000,000, have we not evidence of the truth of this statement as applicable to the present government? If we have not, then I do not know how you could find language to properly express the true position of the government. I shall not proceed any further in quoting the sentiments of the present ministers when they were in opposition, upon this question, and which principle then advocated by them, they have so flagrantly violated. I confess that when I sat in the gallery of the Commons the other day, and heard those sentiments hurled at the ministers, and particularly at an old friend of mine for some twenty-five years, and when I saw that gentleman rise and walk out without attempting to defend himself on his change of front, I felt if he was not humiliated, those who had any respect for him would be, and I, for myself, felt a sorrow that I do not care about expressing at the position in which I saw an old friend, although only part of the time politically a friend, and part of the time a political opponent, placed in. It may be and perhaps the hon. Minister of Justice will tell us, that the exigencies of party and the difficult position which he holds necessitates the change of front. He may tell us that he has not changed his opinion. Frankly, I do not think he has changed his opinion upon this question, but he has changed his practice; and in this, like most other cases of pledging themselves to certain principles, they violate them as soon as as they get into power. I do not know that I could explain this better than to repeat what a writer for a Liberal newspaper, said, namely, that the gentlemen who now occupied the treasury benches in the House of Commons and in the Senate of Canada had most flagrantly violated every promise that they had ever made in the past except one, and that was "Do not walk on the grass." I do not know if any one has ever accused them of violating that little sign that is on the lawns round this place about walking on the grass. But I thought it was expressive and truthful in its character—that they had violated every promise that they had made except the one "Do not walk on the grass." It is between them and the country, and we must leave it with them and with the country to decide in the future. I have quoted the opinions expressed by the hon. gentlemen who now occupy the treasury benches, and who are responsible for the present proposition, as illustrative of the character of politicans out of office and politicans in office; and I think we shall have to ask the people ere long how far they are prepared to support a continuance of the policy which has been pursued, more particularly during the last two or three years, and then carry it further back so far as the expenditure of money is concerned. I have come to the conclusion that it is time that we call a halt, and that unless there are sections of the country that require aid to open up and develop, that we ought to stop this bonusing system, and the sooner those gentlemen come to that conclusion, the better it will be for the Dominion. I admit that there are roads which deserve aid; I admit that the Rainy River Railway, in what is now termed New Ontario, is worthy of support, and opening up by the aid not only of the Dominion, but of Ontario, in which province the great wealth of that section exists. I am also prepared to admit that in the great North-west, and in portions of that country which require railway facilities to enable the new settler to go in and select lands, for a home for himself, and to enable him to take to market the produce of his farm—carrying the bonusing of railways to almost any extent in that respect would pay the country by enabling parties to go into those sections of the country and get out the products of their farm, which they could not otherwise dispose of. But that applies to other provinces as well as to the North-west. In the free grant territories of other provinces, there are many portions 75 to 100 miles from the Grand Trunk Railway, and the bonusing of roads to run into those sections of the country, and particularly by the province, often aided to a certain extent by the Dominion, is not only excusable but justifiable. More justifiable on the part of the province, because in going into those sections of the country it enables the government to sell their lands and place the proceeds in the treasury, and to obtain much larger prices for their timber, which is to be found principally in those sections of the country. Hence they have a direct pecuniary interest in bonusing railways. The Dominion, in assisting them, can have but one interest, and that is the increasing of the population of the country, by inducing emigrants to go into those sections which are not now occupied, and increase the consumption of imported articles, and by that means indirectly and directly add to the revenues of the country, and thereby assist in carrying on the government and the maintenance of peace and order in the Dominion. To that extent I do not think any Canadian, who has considered the question, will have any objection. But to continue to grant subsidies to build roads in the best settled parts of the country, the most wealthy parts of the country, is going beyond the functions of any government. The hon. gentleman may hurl back the assertion that it was done by the late government and that he is only following the example that was set by the late government. I accept the responsibility in that respect. We carried it too far, but these gentlemen are carrying it infinitely further, and it is time to call a halt. I have taken this opportunity to give my sentiments on the general principle involved rather than to do it in Committee of the Whole. When we are in Committee of the Whole we may ask questions as to particular items, as to why the subsidy is granted and what return it is expected will be received therefor. My hon. friend spoke of that three per cent. It was well explained by another newspaper man, one who belonged to his own party. When he called my attention to it, he said, "What do you think of it?" I said I do not think it amounts to anything. "But," he said, "it is a good thing to talk about." Yes, it is a good thing to use on the stump. You can say "See how we are safeguarding the interests of the country. We are going to save in the amounts to be paid for carrying the mail, and therefore in granting bonuses we are going to have it all paid back again in the shape of a reduction of the amount."

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That is not the return they expect.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it is a political return they are expecting. If my hon. friend would take one of those lines and make a calculation, he will be able to answer the question that he is asking. I will give him one case where he can make the calculation and satisfy himself. We are subsidizing about four miles to connect the Gatineau road with a bridge here at Ottawa. Take the three per cent on the amount they will pay for carrying the mails, and you will have a very good idea of the amount the country is to receive, and particularly when we remember that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is paid a mileage rate to carry the mails to this particular point. You can get an idea from this instance of the infinitesimal amount that is to be received. The principle applies in almost all these cases, because the subsidies granted, except in a few cases, are for short lines of road and extensions of roads. There are certain roads which, from my knowledge of the localities, are bonused for no other reason than to enable the party to extend his road to where he can get wood, because there is nothing to develop beyond bringing out the wood that is on the route. It shows the pernicious policy which pervades this whole system, and the purpose for which it is pursued. The Finance Minister in this country gets about one hundred and thirty miles of railway subsidy, and he gets some fifteen or sixteen appropriations running from $2,000 to $10,000 for wharfs and breakwaters. I do not know that I could find fault with that. The constituency furnished him with a seat in the House of Commons, and enabled him to retain the portfolio which he holds. Probably that fact alone is a sufficient compensation for this large expenditure.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—In what way?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a question which must be answered by the people themselves. My hon. friend, I am afraid, has not sufficient confidence in the gentleman to whom I am referring when he supposes that the securing of a seat is not a sufficient return for the expenditure of that amount of money. I would not like to say that to my hon. friends opposite, or to the hon. gentleman from Northumberland. He may think that the Finance Minister is worth a great deal more than that; but that is merely a matter of opinion, which I suppose, in this free country, we are permitted to hold. Going back to where I started, I believe that if the hon. gentleman who moved these resolutions were to express to-day the honest sentiments of his own mind, and his belief as to what they should do in the future and what they should have done in connection with these bonuses, we should differ very little in our conclusions, and that if he had his way he would carry out the principles and doctrine which I have attempted to enunciate here in the few remarks that I have made.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If I were to congratulate the hon. gentleman at all, it would be on the fact that he is giving us a blue ruin speech.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has imbibed the spirit which he formerly attributed to the Minister of Commerce, that he never made a speech in public that was not of the blue ruin character. My hon. friend has to-day given us a speech pointing strongly in that direction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very sorry that I should have followed the hon. gentleman's example.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has occasionally been complimenting the government this session on the fact that they had adopted the policy of their predecessors in office, and the country was greatly benefited by the fact that the government was treading in the footsteps of those who had preceded them. But my hon. friend has departed from that rule to-day, and has given us a blue ruin speech, not because we have gone in opposition to the course which was taken by our predecessors in office, but because, in this regard, we have followed in their footsteps, and have stepped longer than those who preceded us. The hon. gentleman admits that the government of which he was a member, with regard to these railway subsidies, adopted a bad policy—that in many respects they did what was wrong—that they had made serious mistakes, and that we were, by following their example, in some respects going further than they had done, and were doing so to the detriment of the country. One of the things that the hon. gentleman complained of was the very short lines of railway in some instances that we were subsidizing, not because there was not more to it, but simply because we were not granting a subsidy for more than the parties were likely to do during the present season. I may mention a case to the hon. gentleman where a subsidy of $3,200 a mile was granted for six miles of railway, I think in the county of York, then represented by the late Minister of Finance, for the construction of a road, and when it was inquired into it was found to be a road to a large lumber mill in his constituency; and besides the $3,200 a mile, if I remember rightly, there was also granted old rails to construct that branch running from the existing road down to this mill. That was one of the subsidized lines when the hon. gentleman was in office, and when he was responsible for the government. If the hon. gentleman will look at the list of the subsidies that were granted in the year to which he refers, when I think the total amount was something over $3,000,000, he will find roads subsidized at that time one-quarter of a mile in length, one mile in length—a number of them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was that right?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not questioning that. I am pointing this out to the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was it right?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It depends on the circumstances, but I would say this, that by the rule the hon. gentleman has laid down to-day, if there was a wrong in the one case which he has mentioned, there was at least a treble wrong in the cases to which I have referred.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is as six miles is to two.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—More than that. In one instance, as I understand, there was a railway subsidized a quarter of a mile in length and another a mile in length.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Tell us where?

Hon Mr. MILLS—For a line of railway from Cap de la Madaleine to connect with the Piles branch, three miles. To the Canada Eastern Railway Company for an extension of one mile from the west end of their railway to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway, a subsidy of $3,200. There are two cases, one three miles in length and the other one mile.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But connecting with the main lines.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It does not matter where.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The case to which I referred does not connect with anything except one part of a man's industry and another.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is an extension. The hon. gentleman has spoken about paralleling lines.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say a word about paralleling lines, but I might.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman spoke about constructing a road in an old district where they were already supplied.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I never spoke about paralleling lines at all, though I could have done so.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I was going to call attention to a road which the hon. gentleman subsidized from Tilsonberg to Port Dover. That is an old district. There was a road subsidized from Woodstock to Detroit which most of the way is not a mile from the Grand Trunk line, for 130 miles. The hon. gentleman will remember that line.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do. I did not refer to that principle at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then there was the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie; the Tilsonberg and Lake Erie; the Brantford and Waterloo.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Brockville road is not parallel to any other railway.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is through an old country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And a pretty hard country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is the road from Veaudreuil to Ottawa. So I might go through the list of roads down in the maritime provinces where aid was given. One, if I remember rightly, from Pictou to New Glasgow is where a road already existed, and where it was represented as shortening the distance very considerably, and where it was found that the difference in the length of the road was to the advantage of the old railway, if I remember rightly, by a mile and a half. There are several other cases. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the position taken by myself and by some of my colleagues in office in our opposition to those railway subsidies. Our idea was that the subsidizing of all those subsidiary roads within the provinces ought to be left to the provinces, and if we left them there, unless a road was a very great necessity to the province, the construction was not likely to be undertaken. But that rule was wholly broken down in 1882, when the present leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, if I remember rightly, was Minister of Railways. He introduced the rule that all roads that were connected with any of the great trunk lines were to be regarded as roads for the general advantage of Canada, and under that rule roads that had been subsidized to the extent of some twelve or fourteen millions of dollars by the province of Ontario and municipalities were wrested out of the hands of the local authorities and made Dominion railway enterprises. When the hon. gentleman and his colleagues adopted that rule, the rule for which we contended was wholly broken down. A new rule was introduced, a rule which we thought objectionable, but a rule which was adopted by the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member, and, after the adoption of that rule, there was nothing for it by any government except to assist roads in these new sections of the country which were without roads, or where there were in old sections of the country the necessity for a railway line owing perhaps to special connection with the express companies that could not accommodate the population in an old district. Look at the roads that are being subsidized in the province of Ontario. You have a road extending northward from the county of Victoria into the new county of Haliburton. It is proposed to extend that road further north. Ultimately that road must be connected with the Parry Sound Railway. It will be a great advantage to the new settlers going into that district that that should be done. Then, the road from Parry Sound north to Sudbury forms part of a line in which we are all interested, in obtaining commercial connections at no distant date with the Hudson Bay. If we do not do so, our neighbours over the way will obtain control of the commerce of that bay. For 150 years that was regarded as an inland water exclusively under our control. For a number of years United States fishermen have gone into the Hudson Bay and have carried on fishing operations without any protest on our part, or on the part of the Imperial authorities. The moment you cross the height of land, both in Ontario and Quebec, there are large areas of land, about 30,000 square miles in each province, well suited for agriculture. A gentleman who had traversed that country for several weeks and who also had agents out surveying the country, told me that between the Albany River and the height of land, there is an immense area well suited for agricultural purposes, free from rocks, with fair timber upon it, and where thousands of settlers might be placed. That district is much nearer to us than a great deal of the territory lying in the North-west. We have many people coming into the country that would prefer, on account of their means, to go into a wooded country rather than to go into a prairie country, and between the fertile belt which lies to the north of the height of land and the settled districts there is an immense mineral belt, and we have had propositions made to us by men ready to invest money in mining operations to go into that new district if access was given to them. The hon. gentleman admits that the Rainy River Road is a necessary undertaking and will be advantageous. In my opinion it will prove so. It will form part of a continuous line extending to the Yellowhead Pass in the next three years, connecting with the existing roads, and you will have two great trunk lines extending throughout the Dominion of Canada across nearly the whole continent. I have no doubt it will be found necessary, at no distant date, to build others. It is a great mistake to suppose that the northern part of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are simply rock and water, subject a great portion of the year to severe frosts and utterly incapable of sustaining an agricultural population. From all the information I get that is a very mistaken view, and it seems to me that a reasonable expenditure of money upon lines of railway extending northward into the new country, especially when you find that the government of Russia is pursuing a policy in Finland which is likely to lead to the expatriation of a considerable portion of the population, we should put forth efforts to settle them in the northern portion of these provinces, where the country is not unlike in climate the country from which they come. This has also to be borne in mind. Take the revenue for the present year. Hon. gentlemen know that the rate of taxation is less at the present time than it was before the present government came into office. I am speaking of the rate of customs taxation. Under that rate you have a very large revenue. What does it indicate? A very rapid growth of our commerce within the past two years. That is partly due to the increased hopes of the population; the increased number of the mining population coming into the country, and the increased number of immigrants into the North-west. I trust that nothing may take place to check that immigration, and if it continues there is every reasonable ground to look for a continued and steady growth of the commerce of the Dominion, and if there is an increased population it seems to me it is not merely a speculative or doubtful enterprise to assist in the construction of those roads which are here set out, the greater number of which are in new districts, and where large additions may be made to the population. I need not say more with regard to the general principle upon which these subsidies are being asked. The rule has been settled of aiding roads throughout the Dominion rather than relying upon local contributions from the provincial governments. When the rule was adopted in 1882 of making all the tributary roads of the great trunk lines Dominion roads, you effectually wiped out the system that the opposition at that time had been endeavouring to foster, and which they had sought to carry into effect in the local legislatures that were at the time under their control. That has been departed from in a large degree and a new system has been adopted.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The government appear to be anxious to get this bill through, and I shall not detain the House long. Those who have come into the Senate lately may not know the course I have always taken with regard to subsidizing railways. I have always considered it my duty, in the interests of the country, to oppose large subsidies to railways, for the reason that I could not see that it did any good. In the first place, the government tax the people to give subsidies to railways, and I know in the province from which I come the railways have all gone into one or two hands, either the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway. They have absorbed all the railways, and there is no competition. One railway does not run where it gives competition with another, and in that case we simply tax the people to help to build the railways, and then the railway companies charge such freight rates that the people are paying twice. In this case the government say that they are going to give a sugar coating to the pill, and they think the people of this country are going to swallow it. What is the arrangement they are going to make about carrying the mails? It does not amount to anything. That is not the way they calculate to get their pay. I know better than that. The government get their pay because it gives them political influence. They need not try to deny it. I can prove it if necessary. I can prove what has taken place previously, and of course it will take place again. I was amused at the hon. Minister of Justice telling the hon. leader of the opposition that he was preaching blue ruin now. A few years ago the hon. minister himself was preaching blue ruin. The people of this country should understand that when one party is in power it is all lovely with them, and the other party is preaching blue ruin. I know that the gentlemen forming the ministry, and their supporters, always preached blue ruin until they got into power, and it is worth something to the people of this country for the millions it has cost us to make them good loyal subjects and give them confidence in the country. We subsidized railways in Ontario to a large extent. I remember when I had the honour of occupying a seat in the local legislature of Ontario and I had a seat here as well. The Hon. Mr. Blake was Prime Minister of the province of Ontario, and I know that he is the gentleman who largely introduced this subsidy assistance to railways. The Hon. Sandfield Macdonald was the Prime Minister before Mr. Blake. I know that the Sandfield Macdonald government of that day set aside $1,500,000 to aid railways in the thinly settled districts. Then there were some protested elections and there were, I think, some six seats short. Sandfield Macdonald moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and Mr. Blake offered an amendment condemning Sandfield Macdonald's government mainly because they had set aside that amount of money for railways. What was the effect? He defeated Sandfield Macdonald's government by a majority of one. He had an adjournment for about ten days, and I think my hon. friend the Secretary of State came into that government as Speaker at that time. He knows whether I am saying what is correct; if I am not he can correct me afterwards. I can tell hon. gentlemen—and the votes and proceedings of the local house will show it—that Mr. Blake turned that majority of one to a majority of twenty-five in a very few weeks. How did he do it? He did it by subsidies to railways. These gentlemen are going to go one better than the old government did. They want to do the same thing. That government of Mr. Blake's in Ontario, although they turned out the Sandfield Macdonald government because they gave subsidies to railways, added $400,000 more to the $1,500,000 that the Sanfield Macdonald government had set aside, and they mortgaged the province of Ontario for twenty years for $100,000 a year, making in all $3,900,000 and gave us only twenty hours to decide whether we should swallow it or not. These new converts were purchased. If it is parliamentary, I say that the Prime Minister of that day purchased them all; it was as plain as possible. What has been the result? To-day we are selling annuities in the province of Ontario in order to pay that indebtedness which has been lying on our shoulders since that time.

I know something about subsidies to railways. I was fairly disgusted to see the political influence that it had. In this House I have made it a rule that unless I saw clearly that the company should be aided, I would not support the granting of them,and I say now with due deference to all who are interested in railways, that if my vote could throw out this bill holus bolus, I would vote against it, and I would consider it was the best thing I could do in the interest of the country. Just look at it.! We are going railway mad. Not satisfied with the money we are spending in other ways, we are giving over $6,000,000 to the railways. We are putting it into the hands of the government to enable them to control the electors of this country. That is what it is for more than anything else. Talk about blue ruin and about people being comfortable when they strike oil, or, as they say, when they get into a safe harbour, when they get to be members of government, it is all lovely then. But I tell the hon. ministers that the people of this country will not be satisfied with them if they go on discounting the future as they are doing now, and continue increasing the expenditure. I am not going to say one word more about the expenditure, I will try and confine myself to railways, because when the estimates come in I may have a few words to say on the subject. The government should be careful; they should be economical. Look at the pledges they gave to the people of the country. They declared that they would not give such aid as this to railways. When the former government voted half that amount they said it was robbing the people, and I heard the remark that the present government do not take as much money, out of the people as the former government did,—that the taxation is not so high. They mean to say, I suppose, that the percentage is not so high. I do not look upon that as anything at all. I want a pretty good charge put upon all the imports that come into this country which come in contact with the products of our own people. I do not want advantage given to people who send silk and shoddy stuff into this country. All we want should be manufactured here, in order to give employment to our own people. But my hon. friend tells me that he thinks everything is quite right because we get large imports. It is not the imports coming into this country that help the people of the country but the exports. The balance of trade is against the country now. We have a spendthrift government going under full sail. They do not care what becomes of us. They are discounting the future. They have plenty of money, and it is all very well now and there is no blue ruin. The hon. Minister of Justice says the blue ruin is on the other side just now. If any hon. gentleman will move the six months' hoist to this bill, I shall be glad to support him, because I believe it would be in the interests of the country. Just imagine $6,000,000 added by this bill to the expenditure of the coming year. It was said that $38,000,000 was too large an amount for the current expenditure of the late administration, but the estimates this year show that the present government are spending $12,000,000 more. It is no wonder that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is comfortable now, while the hon. gentleman on the other side preaches blue ruin. I am not going to single out this railway or that railway for criticism; I am opposed to the whole thing. I want the people to have a rest. I want to call a halt in this matter, because my experience has shown me that when a railway is built it is absorbed by a larger railway and there is no competition and the producers of this country have to continue to pay high rates for freight. We cannot keep the railways from amalgamating. They are getting so clever that they will amalgamate and bleed the producers of this country all the time. It is fearful to think of the way the government of this country is going mad in the matter of expenditure. What is going to become of us? They are taxing the people and taxing the children yet unborn—discounting the future. We should be satisfied to go on and try to keep our expenses within our income. That is what the government promised to do. They fairly deceived the public by telling them they would do so. I do not know that they gave a direct pledge, except what Sir Richard Cartwright said in adopting the platform of the Patrons. That platform is no subsidies to railways, and Sir Richard was very friendly with the Patrons. His party desired to make friends with everybody before the last election. Any port in a storm. But, now they do not want to be confronted with these facts, and they do not wish to be reminded of these pledges. They said they would reduce the annual expenditure of the country $4,000,000 and they are not satisfied to be told about that. I have seen enough of this subsidy business in the province of Ontario. I feel for the people; they were deceived by the government of Ontario. They claim to have a surplus every year, although they are selling annuities to anybody that will buy them. Sandfield Macdonald was a very economical Prime Minister and he saved the public money. His successors have squandered it till the people have got so disgusted with them that the government have got down to ballot stuffing and hugging the machine in order to keep themselves in power. It is not a very desirable thing for the people of this country to have their money thrown away, and it looks to me as if that were going to occur. This subsidy business commenced in the province of Ontario under the Hon. Edward Blake. Every word I have said to-night about that subsidy business in the province of Ontario is true. I have not got the books here, but I remember what occurred. It is vividly impressed on my mind. There is at least one hon. gentleman in this chamber—yes, there are two, if they choose to admit it—who can corroborate what I say. I think the hon. gentleman for London knows it. He knows that I am speaking by the book. I divided the House on that occasion. I think there are only three of us left, and if there are only three to-night ready to throw out this measure, I am willing to be one of them. But the hon. gentleman is anxious to get through with it, and I do not wish to stay here all summer. It might be convenient for the hon. minister to remain here through the summer, but he gets $8,000 for twelve months and I only receive $1,000 for five months, but if he can stand it I can. When I am speaking of that, I am not speaking for myself particularly, but I say to the House, and I would say it before all the electors that ever supported me, and there have been a good many in the eighteen years that I was in the House of Commons—that the members of the House of Commons and the senators who spend five months here and only receive $1,000 are not fairly treated.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I say, further, that I voted against the increase to the controllers. I know that one of the controllers, my friend who used to represent Brant, has very hard work and I would not have any objection to his receiving the larger salary, but I dislike retroactive legislation, such as has been brought before us on two or three occasions this year. I hope to be able to explain something about the estimates when they come before us, and I will make some inquiries, and perhaps the hon. Secretary of State and the Minister of Justice will be able to tell us why all this expenditure is necessary. We cannot alter them; we can throw the measure out altogether, but we cannot take that responsibility. If we had more power, and if the expenditure of the country was more in the control of the Senate, it would be much better in the interests of the people of this country, If we cannot vote, we can at all events tell the people of this country what we think, and the people of this country will make them do something by and by. The people of this country find the music and they do the dancing, but by and by it will not be carried on in that way. My desire is to see this country prosperous. We have no blue ruin yet, but I am afraid that if the government carry on in future as they have in the past, there will be a little storm. Then it has been said that we could pass an insolvency law. I am afraid that if the government continue in their present course it will be necessary to obtain a benefit of some kind for the government as they will not be able to pay for all these undertakinings full.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will have a bankruptcy law next year.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—There is one respect in which we will all agree with the hon. gentleman from Monck: that is, that we are here now longer than any of us expected during the present session, and I tkink a longer time than the law provides for the members of the legislature to be present at Ottawa, still, after the length of time we have been here, we find in the very last hours of the session, when we have a bare quorum present in the Senate, that one of the most important bills that has ever been brought before the Parliament of Canada is submitted to us. It is within my recollection, and within the recollection, I daresay, of other members of the House, that when this same course was pursued by the late government, and a measure of this kind was brought before the House in the last hours of the session, the hon. gentleman from Monck, who has addressed you, and myself, were two members who expressed our decision at that time, that if ever a similar bill was brought before the Senate at such a late period, it would receive our opposition. There is a great deal in a bill of this kind that requires to be looked into and criticised much more effectively than is possible in the dying hours of the session, with less than twenty members of the Senate present in the House or in the city of Ottawa. A bill of this kind, granting aid to a railway in almost every constituency, at any rate in some fifty constituencies, in the Dominion of Canada should receive much more consideration and be more fully gone into, and the merits of the different subsidies that are there provided should be better canvassed and more fully discussed, than it is possible to do with a bill coming in at this late period. Under this measure we find some fifty different railways throughout the various parts of the province for which subsidies are provided, ranging from $3,200 up to $6,400 for some of the railways. Some of them are of considerable extent, others are exceedingly small. I find that there is one which a $\frac{66}{100}$ of a mile long. That is a very small railway indeed, that it should be necessary for the Parliament of Canada to provide a subsidy for its construction. There is another one, two miles and a half long, one of four miles, one of three miles, one of two and a half, another of two, a third of two, one of three miles, two or three of five miles, and from that they go up in various increasing numbers of miles, and there is one of 100 miles long, and several about eighty. Making it up roughly, in the brief time we have had to look into this measure, I find there are about 1,650 miles of railway for which subsidies are provided under this bill. It may be true that for some portion of that number, subsidies had been provided under some previous Act of Parliament, but the conditions on which some of those were granted were not fulfilled, and yet they are provided for under the present bill. So that there is now required a sum of about five and a half millions to provide for those railways. Even at the ordinary rate of subsidy of $3,200 a mile, it amounts to upwards of five million dollars. With the increase of subsidy going up to $6,400, it must amount to a very considerable sum more than that. Then there is, besides that, a sum of about two and a half million dollars provided for bridges. Under this bill we are making an expenditure of about $8,000,000. It is a very large sum of money. The finances of Canada are said to be flourishing. They would indeed require to be flourishing when we expend money as liberally as we are doing under the present bill. It is possible that if the Senate had the right of rejecting any single item within the four corners of the bill, there are several items in it that would receive the approval of senators and possibly the approval of the country also; but when I look through the bill and see the various lines to which this money is appropriated I cannot come to the conclusion that they are all in the public interest. Many of them may be of local interest, and of interest to the representatives of certain districts in Canada, and still not to the general advantage of the country. Under the circumstances, I do not feel that I would be justified in voting for this measure. We are bonusing railways promiscuously, I might say. The expenditure is extravagant. Notwithstanding the favourable position in which the trade of this country stands, in my view of the matter, the expenditure that we are providing for now is extravagant. It is a larger amount than ever was passed in any similar bill, with the exception of the bonus that was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think it is not in the interest of the Dominion to vote, at this session, such a large amount of money in the way of bonusing railways. If that vote was distributed over a series of years, it might be possible to justify it, but I venture to say there is no justification for it as it stands. The electors of the country have not expressed their approbation of many of the subsidies proposed in this bill, and it is very doubtful if the question was put to the electors of any single province within the Dominion, whether they would approve of all the subsidies voted within the province itself—whether they would by a majority sanction any such expenditure, even though it might possibly be of benefit to themselves.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Is there any locality which will object to the vote for that locality?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—People would likely vote in favour of a subsidy to aid a railway in their own locality; still, there is to be found in the electorate of Canada a large body of men who have judgment and are possessed of sound views as to the financial management of the Dominion, and I doubt very much whether people of that class would approve of expenditures which are made to a great extent for political purposes, even within the province from which they come. I think it would be the duty of a large body of the senators who are now absent to be present on an occasion of this kind, and to express their views on a measure of such importance as this. I regret that those who are interested sufficiently in the welfare of the Dominion to give their attendance here even at a pecuniary loss to themselves are not present to express their views on such an expenditure as this. I feel in accord with the views expressed by my hon. friend from Monck on this occasion, as I was in accord with him on a former occasion when a similar bill was under consideration, and am not prepared to vote against the adoption of the bill in its present shape.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman's criticisms because of the bill coming down at a late period of the session are no doubt well founded; but, unfortunately, it has been the practice, since I can remember, that bills of this kind are never brought down until sometimes when the guns are booming for prorogation. I have under my hand here the action that was taken by the Senate on bills of this nature in former sessions, and I find in some instances the most important bills of the session came in on the day the House was prorogued. It is due to this fact that some of the most important bills are held in the House of Commons until the last moment. This bill has been brought down earlier to this House than any former Railway Subsidy Bill was ever brought down. In the important session of 1884, when very large subsidies were granted, I find that on the very day that the House was prorogued the bill was brought down.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And a great many others besides.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but I am referring to this particular one. It is so throughout, as you will find if you examine the statute-books as many years as I have examined them. Take the session of 1886, on the very day that Parliament was prorogued, there was the Act respecting the bounty on pig iron; the Act to amend the Act relating to duties of custom; the Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in money in aid of lines of railway. These bills passed through the House the day that Parliament was prorogued. Then a bill was brought down to authorize the granting of subsidies in land in aid of railways—not only a bill aiding by subsidies in money, but a bill granting subsidies in land. Those bills were passed in a very short time and His Excellency came into the House and prorogued Parliament. It is unfortunate, but it does not seem possible to get away from that practice. It is simply due to the fact that the House of Commons claim the prerogative of discussing those measures, and they continue to discuss bills of that kind until the very last moment. If hon. gentlemen will examine the proceedings of the last day of any session for the past twenty-five years, they will find that the most important bills only came down at the last hour.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Yesterday was supposed to be the last day of the session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should have liked very much if it had been the last, but we were held up. The hon. gentleman has found great fault with the size of the Subsidy Bill. No doubt it is very large, but the circumstances and conditions are different from those which existed when any other Subsidy Bill was introduced. The applications, I am creditably informed by the Minister of Railways and Canals, amounted to $22,000,000, and of course they had to be cut down very much.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—They will come next year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—These are only short extensions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be some time, probably, before all this money is spent. In a period of great expansion, when enterprises are being undertaken, no government can possibly resist the pressure to consider proposals that seem to have merit in them. The principle of subsidizing railways is not a new one, and no government at present could live and refuse to recognize that principle. The hon. gentleman from Monck (Mr. McCallum) says he is going to vote against this bill. I think the hon. gentleman's own locality has a fair share of this kind. It gets aid for an important railway and an expensive bridge, and I do not think he has a right to say he will cut off every other enterprise in the province. The subsidies are pretty fairly distributed. On this occasion the principal subsidies go to open up western and northern Ontario,—New Ontario, as it is called. Then aid is given towards the construction of a railway northward from Winnipeg up the Saskatchewan country, a railway that has been favoured by both political parties, and is thought to be going through a very valuable section of country where settlement is rushing in as fast as the railway is constructed. Railways in these two sections take up at least one-fourth of the whole amount of the appropriation—perhaps a greater proportion. Then, hon. gentlemen must recollect that perhaps not one-fourth or one-fifth of the money voted this year will be spent for perhaps two or three years. A portion of the $6,000,000, or whatever the amount may be, consists of revotes.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—A small amount.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is over a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Yes, and the whole expenditure is over $6,000,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—These probably are revotes of grants made by our predecessors. The parties have not been able to build the railways; still they think they can build them now, when money is more easily obtained, and therefore they are given another chance. I think I am safe in saying that during the current year the proportion that will be spent will be comparatively small.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have consistently opposed from time to time, since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, the introduction of these important measures at the latter end of the session, and I think the Secretary of State when in opposition, was just as strongly opposed to it as I was or could be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He was not in power then.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Of course not. What seems extraordinary on this occasion is the change of principle in contrast with the action taken by the hon. gentleman when he was in opposition. He and his friends were in opposition for a great many years, and they opposed in the most strenuous manner every subsidy that was proposed for the consideration of Parliament. In those days circumstances in this country were very different from what they are at the present time. I am and always have been in favour of giving aid to new localities—places where they cannot afford to construct those roads on their own account, and where I believe railways would be a benefit in the settlement of the country. I remember occasions when I attended with deputations that waited on Sir John Macdonald, they used to try to persuade him that their country possessed great riches which would be developed by improvements. His uniform reply was, "If you have a great country possessing all those advantages, you should be able to build those works yourselves without assistance." What is the position of matters at the present time? An amount of money has been voted for the purpose of opening up settlements in the western and northern sections of Ontario, but what are these others? We cannot tell. This measure has been before us but a short time, and until we get the information from the Minister of Justice it is impossible to say whether the subsidies should be voted or not. In the past we have been too apt to grant charters to anybody and everybody who applied for them, without sufficient discrimination as to whether they were in a position to carry out the schemes they were promoting or not. That has been the cause of a great deal of trouble in this country, and it will continue in the future unless some measure is adopted to prevent a recurrence of such events. I know many people come here for the purpose of getting railway charters without the remotest intention or the ability in any way to carry them out. They try to make an arrangement with the government for a subsidy to carry out what should be done by private means. I do not think it is fair to the country. The people of Canada are willing to assist any legitimate railway enterprise that is in the interests of the country at large, but I do not believe that they are willing to appropriate money for political or other improper purposes. I do not say that there are any projects of that kind in this measure, but we know that all governments are likely to be influenced in that direction by their friends.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—You have never had a division of this House on the subject.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I know that, but I have spoken forcibly on the subject on every occasion. No one will dispute that. I am thereby conscientiously carrying out a principle. I do not believe in voting for these measures without having an opportunity of considering them. It is all very well to say that the government are responsible, but the members of this House become parties to the wrong if they permit this measure to pass without having an opportunity of considering it. I am not actuated by any political bias, but I want to see a business-like system carried on in the interests of the country. I did expect, when this government came into power, with all their professions in the past, with their strong denunciations of the manner in which business was carried on by the late government, that they would have initiated a new principle, and that I would not have to complain of their method of doing business. I have heard of "blue ruin" to-day for the first time since the change of government. I thought it was dropped out of our vocabulary. While the late government were in power we heard nothing but "blue ruin." The opposition of that time were continually decrying the country in every way. We are asked to vote six or seven million dollars by this bill, and we must remember that the government has already involved the country in an expenditure of $15,000,000 by the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway and the lease of the Grand Trunk Railway. It is increasing our public debt enormously. Is the country capable of standing all this? The country is progressing favourably, but there is a limit to its means, and we ought to be careful not to do anything that may be injurious to the future of the Dominion. It is all very well to say that money can be raised easily. That is true, but the money has to be repaid, and must be raised out of the pockets of the people. It will take a long time before this money can be recouped —if it will ever be recouped. It may be said that it will have the effect of lowering the freight rates. Has that been the effect of such expenditures in the past? No. We generally find these parties combine and instead of diminishing freight rates they will increase them in the interests of the stockholders. Under all the circumstances, viewing it as a business man, I believe we ought not to exceed what we can reasonably expect to meet in the way of liabilities in the future. If we go on in this way there is no knowing where it will end. It is said that the subsidies granted this year amount to only six or seven million dollars. It may be more next year, and we will be told that it can be increased indefinitely. Is that a safe policy to pursue?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman is getting blue.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—No, I never have been blue. The hon. gentleman never heard me cry "blue ruin." I have never decried my country; I have been a loyal subject and will be to the end of the chapter. I have nothing to gain either from one party or the other, and it makes no difference to me which party is in power. I only want the affairs of this country so administered as to benefit the whole Dominion. I do not care whether it is Hon. Mr. Mills or Sir Mackenzie Bowell leads the House; I want them to do what is right. I protest in the strongest terms against this bill being brought down at the very end of the session. The Supply Bill has to come down yet, and it comes at such a time and in such a shape that we know nothing about it. Members of the government ought to know their business. I presume they do, and I am perfectly willing that they should be remunerated in the proper way. I voted against the bill to increase the salaries of two ministers the other day, but it was because of its retroactive character; I should have been very willing, but for that, to vote for increasing the salaries of those two gentlemen, because I think they are worthy of it. I am perfectly willing to acquiesce in any fair measure brought up for our consideration, but I want an opportunity of satisfying myself that it is of a character that is entitled to our support. The thinking people of this country criticise everything that is done here as carefully as we do ourselves, and it is to that class of people I am trying to do justice when I ask for information in order to see that we are only doing what is right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to say a word or two with respect to the point made by the hon. gentleman from Rideau, and some other gentlemen also—that is, that the government are very much to be condemned for bringing down an important measure of this character at the closing hours of the session. I have, on former occasions, felt that there was a good deal of force in that contention; and if hon. gentlemen will only consider, they will find there is substantial reason why these subsidy bills should not be brought down earlier in the session. The Secretary of State has told the House that there were applications in for railway subsidies which would have totalled about $22,000,000. The bill before us totals something like $6,000,000. If this measure had been brought down, say in the middle of the session, and had got before the public eye, there would have been a tremendous pressure upon the people who represented the remaining portion of the $22,000,000 on the government to have their claims considered, and instead of having a $6,000,000 bill, we should have had a $12,000,000 one at any rate. That would be the practical result. I might say this with respect to governments, as a rule, however, no matter whether they are Liberal or Conservative—the government does not wish to spend money. The desire of the government is to spend as little as possible, and it is just a question how strong the pressure is from the people who want the expenditure. I think, under all the circumstances, that the government is to be congratulated on having shown a considerable power of resistance, if we had to begin this system of railway subsidizing now, we might discuss the principle; but the system was introduced in 1882. At the time I opposed the principle and felt that it was a mistake. I felt that it was the letting out of the water, so to speak, and that it was going to lead to serious results in the future, and I think it has turned out that, but no government which depends upon the popular vote, when a system of that kind has been introduced and has been in operation for eighteen years, could stop it at once, and particularly if the country is prosperous and there is plenty of money in the hands of the government it is impossible to put an end to a system of that kind. I do not propose to discuss details, but I am quite satisfied that if hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, with the treasury as full as it is now, we should have at least as large a Subsidy Bill.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The hon. gentleman is quite an apologist.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time on a division.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are we not going into Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then we will discuss each clause.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not usual, on a bill of this kind, to go into Committee of the Whole. My hon. friend introduced a similar bill some years ago, and I see by the minutes that the bill was read the first time, then on motion by Mr. Bowell seconded by Mr. Angers, the 41st rule was dispensed with and the bill was read a second time, and then on motion of Mr. Bowell, seconded by Mr. Angers, the bill was read a third time, the three readings all taking place at the same sitting. We are only taking two stages. This is practically a money bill. It does not differ in that regard from the Supply Bill. In fact, it is a mere practice which has sprung up of separating it from the ordinary supplies, but it might be introduced in the Supply Bill as an appropriate part, and that being so, I think my hon. friend will see that we are following the settled usage of Parliament in moving the third reading now.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I understood the hon. minister was going to give us information about the details and that he had produced the map for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I brought the map here and the lines are marked for the information of hon. gentlemen present.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could we not suspend the map in place of suspending the rule?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E. I.)—It may be very true that the bill granting those subsidies has, on previous occasions, not been considered in Committee of the Whole House, but it is quite within the rights and privileges of this House to go into committee on any bill, even the Supply Bill itself, and that it is a bad precedent for us to allow any such course to be followed without standing up for the rights and privileges of the Senate, and asserting our right to consider the bill in Committee of the Whole. I think we will find that the Supply Bill itself has been committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is impossible, for this reason, that the object of going into committee to consider the details with a view to amendment. This is not a bill that the Senate has the power to amend.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I do not wish to express any opinion as to whether it is in the power of the House to have the bill referred to a Committee of the Whole, but I am bound to say that, as far as my experience extends, and it is a long one, that invariably the Subsidy Bill—and this system of granting subsidies to railways was introduced as far back as 1882—I have never known the House to go in Committee of the Whole on the Supply Bill or a Subsidy Bill of this kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to pursuing the policy that has been followed in the past, providing it be conceded that before the Speaker submits the third reading to the House, we have the right to question the government on certain paragraphs of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have no power to resist it if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under the rule, no member has a right to speak more than once, and if that rule is invoked, no member can speak more than once. I have known in the House of Commons, where the Speaker exercises more power and control over the debates than he does in this House, that when an item in the tariff or the Supply Bill was discussed in committee, and the information that was required could not be obtained at the moment, it was understood that there should be a latitude given to the members of the House on concurrence, and that they would be allowed to discuss the matter the same as in committee. I daresay my hon. friend will remember that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is, where it has been reserved ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I frankly confess that I had forgotten the usage until my attention was called to it by my hon. friend from York and the precedent which the hon. Minister of Justice has read. I have discussed this question on the general principle, and I think each member of the Senate did the same thing. If it be understood that we can ask questions in reference to the different clauses, I would have no objection I do not say that we should go through it seriatim but in case I should ask a question as to what this 66-100th part of a mile is for, and what it means, and why a subsidy is given to that, I suppose there would be no objection. Then there are other points to which I would call the attention of the House ; for instance, the subsidizing of the South Shore Railway, I would like to know whether that is the railway which is to form a part of what they call the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railroad, in other words, the railway which has been known as the Armstrong Railway, which is a road competing with the Intercolonial Railway between Quebec and Montreal, and whether that is carrying out the pledge made by the Premier when he went to assist at the election and when he made that speech at Nicolet——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In which he pledged himself, notwithstanding the fact that they were purchasing the Drummond County Railway at the time, to grant a subsidy in aid of the South Shore Road, which is a direct and positive and competing line with the line which we have just bought, and also if it is that road to which the member who was running for that county, or one of the members of the House of Commons at present, wrote a letter declaring that he had the assurance and pledge of the Premier to assist in the construction of that road, and whether it is the road to which the Premier referred when he was at the nomination meeting or at a public meeting in Nicolet. Both candidates declared in favour of the subsidizing of the road to which I refer, and the Premier held out this direct inducement to the electors: "You had better send my young friend, who is a supporter of my government, to Parliament, and by doing that are you not more likely to secure a subsidy than you are if you send an opponent?" In other words, "Send me a supporter and you will have a subsidy, but if you send an opponent you will not get it." I want to know whether that is the same road and whether the two members of the government in this House are prepared to aid in the construction of a road to compete with a road which they tell us is to make the Intercolonial Railway a paying enterprise in the future, instead of being a charge on the revenues of the country in addition to the interest which we pay upon the outlay. I am speaking now to the third reading, and if we can have this information, and if we are permitted to talk freely about it, I should have no objection. I refer to item No. 27 in the bill. Certainly, if that is anything at all, it is the road which was declared not to be of any use, although we know that it runs through the most settled portion of that section of the province of Quebec, while the Drummond County Road runs through a large portion of unsettled and useless territory, so far as nature has made it so, and consequently never will be settled. Then, again, here is a road of two and a half miles, item No. 44, for a railway from Nelson, N.B., to connect with the company's main line running into Chatham. I can understand that, because it is an extension of a road already in existence, in order to meet, the main line, similar to those two instances which the hon. gentleman read a few minutes ago. Take the Bay of Quinté line; I think I know something about that part of the country. The subsidy is "for an extension of their line in a westerly direction from a point at or near Richmond boundary road near Deseronto, for a distance not exceeding two miles; also for an extension of their line from its present terminus at Tweed in a northerly direction for a distance of two miles, and for an extension of their line from the end of the last two miles mentioned in a northertly direction for a distance not exceeding three miles—in all seven miles. Subsidies payable on each of the sections mentioned as each of such sections is completed." Where does that road of two miles, running from Richmond boundary road near Deseronto for a distance not exceeding two miles, go to? What direction? In the original resolutions that were introduced it was said westward. The word westward is left out. If it went westward I could understand that it went to some point on the Bay of Quinté, but where it is going now I cannot tell, and it seems to me the word westward is left out for the purpose of misleading, or deceiving those who read it. If it goes northward it goes nowhere. It cannot so southward, or it would run into the bay, and if it goes eastward there is a road already running from the boundary line eastward to Napanee. Therefore, I cannot tell where this road of two miles is to run to. Then a part of the description is "from its present terminus at Tweed in a northerly direction for a distance of two miles." Where that will lead to is a mystery to me, unless it is to go up to some point where it would cross the Moira River and then be tapped by the three mills, and run out to a place called Bridgewater. That is what is indicated by that map, but even then I do not see that they can possibly do that, because if they did they would have to build another bridge, and if they could utilize the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge they could run up the river to Bridgewater without crossing the river, and not have to incur that large expenditure. There are many cases of that kind which, without some explanation, would puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer, unless he happened to know the immediate locality. I should like to know whether the South Shore Road is the road which is to be subsidized which was condemned so strongly by the government and its supporters when we were condemning the purchase of the Drummond County Railway and, if so, for what earthly purpose can that section of the province of Quebec between Montreal and Quebec require three lines of railway running parallel with each other. If it were a settled country, or if it had been on the north shore—and even there it is not so much required—I could understand it, but the South Shore Road would, I venture to say, have answered all the purposes for the settlers in that section of the country with the addition to the Grand Trunk Railway which runs still further to the south, and would have been a greater advantage to the Dominion of Canada in making the connection between Quebec and Montreal by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Can my hon. friend give us this information ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have no objection whatever to give the hon. gentleman the information so far as it is in my possession. My hon. friend knows that he is practically proposing now what is an evasion of the rule of going into committee because what he is now asking to do is something altogether different from what is done in the House of Commons. Sometimes, when a member waives his right of speaking in committee on a particular item, or where the government at the time have not the information to give, they say to him "Make the inquiry on concurrence and we will be able to give you the information, and will give you the same freedom of discussion and will not invoke the rule against you." That is where some right is waived. There is no right waived now by the hon. gentleman. He had a right to put in any number of questions to me at the first, or second reading, but what the hon. gentleman has done now might be done now by every hon. member of the House, and instead of speaking once in the exercise of my right under the rule of the House, I might be required to speak as often in reply to inquiries made to me, as there are members present who might be disposed to put these inquiries, so that that would be an evasion of the rule. It is not in conformity with the rules of the House. Not having the right to amend the bill, we do not go into committee, and we do not make those inquiries which the hon. gentleman has addressed to me now, except with the view of exercising the right in rejecting the measure, if that is the conclusion come to. But while I say this in defence of the rule, I am not going to invoke it on this occasion against the course which the hon. gentleman has seen proper to adopt. There is one matter of importance about which he makes an inquiry, the South Shore Railway Company subsidy. I might say to the hon. gentleman that this is a road that was aided before. It was aided by the government of which he was a member. They constructed a portion of it, as I understand, as far as Sorel under the aid which was formerly given.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not the government. The hon. gentleman said it was aided and constructed by the government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was aided by the government and constructed by the company. The hon. gentleman says this is in competition with the Drummond County Road. I do not so understand it. I understand the two roads are located some fifteen or twenty miles apart from each other, and some places a greater distance, and therefore they are in different sections of the country and are supported by different communities. Every hon. gentleman knows that when you go more than ten miles from the line of railway you do not avail yourself of it to any great extent. A population that cannot leave their homes and return the same day from the railway station are not likely to use it to any very great extent. We have in western Ontario the Canada Southern and Grand Trunk Railways that were located not more than twelve miles apart a great portion of the way, and at some points not that distance, through the counties of Kent and Essex, and the building of one road took scarcely any appreciable travel or traffic from the other. It was a new and distinct population that was accommodated by the construction of the road, and I have no doubt whatever that will be the case here. The road is one running through a densely peopled section of the country, a section that is fertile and where the road is likely to pay, and if this were not the case, they would hardly undertake to construct a railway upon receiving aid to the extent of $3,200 a mile. The government of which my hon. friend was a member, thought proper to aid this road, and the road was built to the extent to which it was aided, and now the government is continuing that policy, so far as this road is concerned, and giving a fresh subsidy for the construction of eighty-two miles more which is likely to be accomplished. My hon. colleague calls my attention to the fact that in the Subsidy Act of 1890, the government of that day subsidized both these roads. They subsidized the Montreal and Sorel Railway from St. Lambert to Sorel. They granted it $40,000 as a subsidy, and they also subsidized the Drummond County Railway for a distance of twenty-four miles, and the hon.

gentleman at that time did not think it was improper to subsidize these two lines that he has informed us to-night are lines competing with each other. In 1885 there was a subsidy of $72,000 granted to the Montreal and Sorel Road; and also there was granted to the Drummond County Railway, $76,800 at the same time. So the hon. gentleman will see that he and his colleagues thought it was proper to aid in subsidizing both these roads. So if the government are wrong in acquiring the Drummond County Road and subsidizing this road, my hon. friend was equally wrong in 1885 and 1890.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is just this difference. The hon. gentleman has evaded answering my questions. I asked with respect to the short portions of the road. When the government subsidized the two roads to which the hon. gentleman has referred, they had no intention to acquire, nor was there any scheme for acquiring one of these roads in order to make it part of a government road running from the maritime provinces to Quebec and thence to Montreal, to make it pay. The point that I made, to which the hon. gentleman did not refer, was the fact that the government had expended this year $1,600,000 in acquiring a portion of the road, and incurred the debt of $140,000 annually for 99 years, which represents about $5,000,000, in order to reach Montreal by the Intercolonial Railway; and now that they have acquired that with the boast that it will enable the Intercolonial Railway to pay all running expenses, what I complain of is this, that in order to carry a by-election the Premier pledged himself to subsidize a road which comes in direct competition with the road which the government have purchased. If they objected to individuals, and if, as the hon. gentleman says, they are accommodating different people ten miles apart, and being private enterprises there will be some difference, although not to the extent that I should like to see. My hon. friend says that people living within ten miles of a railway never think of going there. He must have very little knowledge of our farmers. They drive fifteen or twenty miles and return the same day, and if they can reach a railway within ten miles they are very well satisfied. I want to ask the hon. gentleman what this sixty one-hundredths part of a mile means. He has not answered that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, certainly not. I can give no further information than is contained in the statement:

To the Phillipsburg Railway and Quarry Company, shortage in the extension of their railway from a point on the company's line at or near the end of the subsidized section, to the government wharf at Phillipsburg, Quebec, not exceeding $\frac{66}{100}$ of a mile.

As I understand it, this will somewhat shorten the line.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—It will lengthen it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, it will shorten it and bring it to a terminus in connection with navigation, which it has not at this moment. Beyond that I know nothing.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I am very happy to give the information to the head of the government in this House that he seems to stand in need of.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I do not, because it is not a question we have to deal with.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The hon. Minister of Justice will remember, when I bring it to his recollection, that this is to supplement the subsidy granted in 1892 to the Phillipsburg Railway and Quarry Company, and my hon. friend, with the alertness which distinguished him in the House of Commons, challenged the propriety of granting this subsidy to a quarry company, and the remark he made on that occasion was very pertinent and very forcible; but notwithstanding the remonstrance of the hon. Minister of Justice, who was then a member of the House of Commons, the subsidy was granted, and I myself was in favour of it, and I am in favour,—I say without hesitation, of supplementing the grant to the sixty-six hundredths of a mile or less as may be required to bring the line down to the government wharf. It is called the government wharf, but it was built by the people aided by the government. It was found that the subsidized portion was not sufficient to make a connection between the railway and the wharf, and this sixty-six hundredth of a mile subsidy has been granted before this, but for some technical objection it was not found available; so it has found its way into this bill as a revote. If it will be satisfactory to my hon. friend to know that his criticisms at that time was, to a certain extent, well founded, I may frankly confess that the granting of that subsidy has not realized the full expectation of those who were promoting the enterprise. It has not turned out to be so judicious an investment as it was hoped at the time it would prove; but the railway having built, and being too short to reach the government wharf, there is propriety, if not wisdom, in supplementing the grant by giving this revote. While I am on my feet I will take the liberty to ask the Secretary of State if there was any application on behalf of the Montreal, Portland and Boston Railway Company for a subsidy? That was a road that was subsidized by the local government and built some years ago, and for a short time put into operation, but it fell into partial decay, and that partial decay has gone on until it is in a state of almost complete decay. But those who are interested in the enterprise felt that if the government was distributing subsidies with a lavish hand, there was no reason under the sun why that railway should not share the benefits that were being scattered over the length and breadth of the land. I feel confident that there must have been an application on the part of the zealous and faithful member for the county who supports the government in the House of Commons on behalf of the railway authorities, a very pressing application for the granting of a subsidy, and if so, it will be most interesting to know why the government did not see its way to yield to the pressure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those applications were chiefly to the Minister of Railways, and I have no recollection of hearing or seeing that company's application amongst the number. They went to the Minister of Railways and were reported on from his department. I do not remember that particular road.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I am sure it could not have escaped the vigilance of the member of the county, because he is always at his post and ready to support, as far as he can honourably, the interest of his constituents. Although I am opposed to granting subsidies to the extent embraced in this bill, because I believe it goes beyond even the great resources of the country at the present time, while I am opposed to the magnitude of these appropriations, I should not be at all opposed to the granting of a small subsidy to a local line that deserves the consideration of its friend.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is an illustration of how difficult it must be for the government to resist the pressure. No one could resist a gentleman like the hon. gentleman from Mississquoi.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has given us full information by telling us that the late government subsidized a road which has not fulfilled the expectations of those who invested their money in it, providing they did invest any, and now he supports an appropriation to extend that road, which has proved of no value to those at least who invested their money. I can easily understand that. It is in the hon. gentleman's own neighbourhood, and he is doing precisely what most of us would do with reference to these roads in our own counties I know that one of the roads to be extended simply goes to a man's limits for no other purpose than to enable him to bring out wood out of which he makes charcoal. I should like to see that industry flourish. I am speaking locally, and as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Power) says, it shows the difficulty presented to the government in dealing with this question of railways. First of all, if I were representing North Hastings, as I did formerly, and I have still a very kindly feeling towards that constituency, even if I felt it was not in the general interest but in the interest of a manufacturing establishment in that riding, I would vote for it. I should like to ask my hon. friend to turn his attention to item No. 13, the Portage du Fort and Bristol Branch Railway; is that a road which the Committee on Railways of the Senate, rejected a few days ago, when they asked for power to run from Portage du Fort down to Quyon, and thence to the city of Hull?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The promoters of the road to which my hon. friend refers were anxious for a charter from Portage du Fort to Quyon. That was opposed by Mr. Beemer and his friends, and the committee threw it out, Mr. Beemer maintaining that they had no railway commission—all we ask is to make connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway on the south side, or Mr. Beemer's line on the north.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How are you going to get to the south side of the Ottawa by this road?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This does not contemplate that. However, they were anxious to cross the Ottawa. Mr. Beemer and his friends maintained that Portage du Fort could be connected with his system by building in the direction outlined here. It is practically forcing them to make a branch to Mr. Beemer's road.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is a revote.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this given to Mr. Beemer?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Beemer has a charter from Portage du Fort running across the island to connect with Pembroke. This is taken to Quyon easterly. That is where the Commons terminated the proposed road in the charter which was asked for by the company and rejected by the Senate, but they objected to the extension of the road from Quyon to Aylmer on the ground that it was a parallel road. I find the next paragraph is a vote to the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway. Is that Mr. Beemer's road?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—"For a railway from Aylmer to Hull, Quebec, not exceeding nine miles." There was formerly a railway between Hull and Aylmer built by the Pontiac Pacific Junction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, by the government of Quebec.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And then sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—And subsequently sold to the electric company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was coming to that. I will get at the facts with the assistance of the hon. gentlemen I suppose. Then it was sold to the Ottawa and Aylmer Electric Company and they went to the expense of laying a double track. That is perhaps one of the best graded roads in Canada, and the most substantial. The government are now granting a subsidy to build another road which must run parallel with this double track road. Why? In order to enable the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway to compete with that line, when in fact they had a line formerly which they used when the Canadian Pacific Railway had it. There is a direct, positive competition with one of the best electric lines in the country which, as I understand, speaking from hearsay, is not paying.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reason was that it was thought it was too dangerous to run the Pontiac Pacific Junction trains over an electric road on which cars runs every few minutes. There are times when they run every ten minutes, and it was quite impossible to allow a steam railway to use one of the tracks under the circumstances, and therefore they asked to get an independent charter to extend their line to Ottawa.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest to my hon. friend to go and spend a few hours in the city of London and go to the Euston station, where you will find trains arrive every minute through the whole day and through the whole night, and many of them run over the same tracks to get into the same station.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They run in the same direction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes. Of course every train that comes into London from every part of the kingdom does not use the same track, but the system is so perfect that it is a marvel that it is carried on in the manner in which it is without accident; and in this case, it might be so arranged without the slightest difficulty. It is only an evidence of the government paralleling lines for favourites.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that it would be quite impossible to run an electric car, that stops almost at every block to take on passengers, on the same line with a steam train, a locomotive that is running 35 or 40 miles an hour could never run behind an ordinary electric car that has to stop every quarter of a mile, or sometimes shorter distances.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is another evidence of the hon. gentleman trying to instruct people on questions about which he knows little. If he has ever been over that road, he will know that it only stops once between Hull and Aylmer, and that is at Deschenes. In travelling over the Grand Trunk Railway there are plenty of places where they stop at just as short distances as they do on that road. I can understand a road requiring to have its own road bed, but I say that this is an absolute and positive waste of money.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed on a division.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Hon. Mr. POWER, from the sub-committee of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented their third report. He said:—The Committee on Internal Economy appointed a sub-committee consisting of the hon. gentleman from Brandon, the hon. gentleman from Victoria and myself to assist His Honour the Speaker in selecting a uniform and making arrangements for providing a uniform. The hon. gentleman from Brandon, as is well known, was the chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts. He was obliged to leave for home almost immediately after the committee had appointed a sub-committee, or very shortly afterwards, and he requested me to take his place, and it happened that just at that time the hon. gentleman from Victoria was not well and the hon. gentleman from Brandon asked me to assist His Honour the Speaker in dealing with the matter, and being the only member of the sub-committee who was here besides His Honour the Speaker, of course I have done my best and we have agreed upon the style of the uniform set out in the memo. attached to the report.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Are the members of the committee to have uniforms?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No. If there is no objection to the report I think we might adopt it now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—To-morrow.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—To-morrow. The hon. gentleman is the only member of the committee left, except His Honour the Speaker, out of a committee of four.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Halifax deserves some credit for taking the whole responsibility upon himself, in consultation with the Speaker, to accomplish that which the Contingent Accounts Committee thought was absolutely necessary, in order that the messengers about the doors might be known to the public—dressed in such a way that the public and strangers would know them. At present people go into the lobbies and into the rooms occupied by members, and pay no regard whatever to the messengers who stand at the doors. In fact, they do not know that they are officials; but if they have uniforms upon them, they will be enabled to show that authority which they are placed there to exercise, and I am glad that the hon. gentleman, in conjunction with the Speaker, has come to a decision to have the messengers and different officials of the Senate uniformed. If the report is embodied in the votes and proceedings to-night, each member of the Senate will be able to read it to-morrow, and learn what the suggestions are. The House of Commons adopted this system some time ago, and we ought to have better uniforms than they have.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that the report be taken into consideration to-morrow at the first sitting of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPROPRIATION AND EXCHEQUER COURT AMENDMENT BILLS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are two bills sent from the Senate to the other House which I have not heard about. One is the bill relating to the expropriation of lands, which we sent down with certain amendments, and the Exchequer Court Bill, I do not know what action has been taken. It may be that they are abandoned. The supplies, I understand, are all voted and the Commons are engaged in concurence and they expect to be through before midnight and will be ready for prorogation to morrow. That being so, if we meet at 11 to-morrow we could deal with the Supply Bill and be ready for prorogation by three o'clock.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I see no objection to that. If those bills are accepted by the Commons, with the amendments made to them, there will be no difficulty, but if the amendments are rejected that might possibly lead to some discussion here.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I apprehend there will be no change. With regard to the amendment which was made here in reference to the St. John bridge, it may be modified, but it will only be to make it absolutely certain that the government shall not be liable for trespass upon lands which they intend to expropriate as soon as the bill passes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The bill was amended so as not to affect any other company. I understood that my hon. friend accepted that amendment with the exception of the last two or three words. In fact, it was his own amendment with that exception, and I should suppose, under the circumstances, particularly as it has been stated that the words which are added make it neither better nor worse, that the Commons will accept it. I do not suppose the discussion on the Supply Bill will be very long. We should be able to prorogue at half-past four

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Make it late because we may have a good deal to say.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and that there be two distinct sittings on that day, the first of such sittings to be commenced at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and to continue till 1 o'clock in the afternoon unless the Senate be sooner adjourned, and the second of such sittings to be commenced at three o'clock in the afternoon and continue till the Senate adjourns.

The motion was agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the House adjourns, I should like to ask the Minister whether he can inform the House who it was that asked Mr. Blake's opinion in reference to the action of the Senate on the Redistribution Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot tell the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman not had time to consult his colleagues ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was never referred to by any of my colleagues, nor did I think of the matter when we were in council. I am quite sure no member of the government communicated with Mr. Blake. It may have been the Solicitor General in England who made the inquiry.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If he did so, I do not know it, nor do the members of the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman try and think of it to-morrow and ask his colleagues whether it was done by any of them, or whether the Solicitor General did it ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly I will ask, but I am quite sure of the answer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to have it authoritatively.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. minister if there is any probability of those returns in reference to the oils supplied to the Intercolonial Railway being obtained before the House rises.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I do not think there is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could my hon. friend tell me whether the returns from the Railway Department as to the 150 dismissals by order of the department will be placed upon the table before we adjourn, giving the reasons why ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I sent the return at once to the department with a letter saying that I did not consider the informatien was in accordance with the order of the House. They were sent back to me and the answer was very unsatisfactory, and I returned it again to them saying that I did not think the House could accept the return in its present shape, and I thought they should obey the order of the House and furnish the information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. minister has done all that he could do. We will discuss the matter next session.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Am I to understand, by the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice, that the Solicitor General is asking extraneous aid in the performance of his official duties, seeking advice from the outsiders? I think he is an advisor of the Crown. He is one of the officers of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He is, but sometimes the law officers of this country consult men of eminence on the other side of the Atlantic. I did not say that the Solicitor General consulted anybody. I do not know that he did. I have no such knowledge. It may be that the Globe correspondent in England obtained the information. That was the only journal in which it appeared. He may have made the inquiry at the instance of the editor of the paper, but, of course, I cannot tell about that. I am not a prophet.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman might be the son of a prophet.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, 11th August, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'Clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN.

A message was received from the House of Commons to return Bill (D) "An Act to amend the Expropriation Act," with an amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The amendment made by the Senate has been replaced by the following:—

This section shall be held to apply to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company, and to that portion of its property which has been taken possession of by the Minister of Railways for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway in the city of St. John, as fully as if it had been enacted and in force at the time of taking possession of such property, but otherwise this Act shall not be retroactive.

I think that is an improvement, and I move that the amendment be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—There should be a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER—That has not been the usage.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—The rule has not been suspended on former occasions because no objection was taken. But it does not follow, because nobody has objected, that the rule should not be suspended.

The SPEAKER—I do not think it is necessary to suspend the rule.

THE MESSENGERS' UNIFORMS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the adoption of the report of the sub-committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate. He said:—The recommendations of the sub-committee are:

They recommend that the housekeeper, the doorkeeper, the keeper of the wardrobe, and the Speaker's two permanent messengers, be supplied with uniforms of one style, and the other permanent messengers with uniforms of a somewhat different style.

The question of supplying uniforms to the sessional messengers may, the sub-committee submit, be postponed until the opening of the next ensuing session. It is suggested, by way of avoiding any misapprehension, that the keeper of the news-room be not deemed a messenger for the purpose of this report.

The sub-committee recommend that the Serjeant-at-Arms be authorized to take tenders for suppyling the uniforms, from not less than three clothiers doing business in Ottawa and to see to the execution of the work, with power to arrange as to any details not provided for in the memorandum herewith provided.

With respect to making a distinction between certain members of the staff, I think it will be seen that this is reasonable and proper. The housekeeper has to be present here on public occasions, at the opening and closing of Parliament, and he is a good deal in evidence. The doorkeeper is an officer of the Senate who has a position on the floor of this House, and naturally he should wear a dress coat, or something of that kind. The keeper of the wardrobe is assistant doorkeeper, and in case the doorkeeper were ill, he might have to act as doorkeeper, and while he does that he should have that kind of dress. Then, His Honour the Speaker thought, and I agreed with him, that his two permanent messengers, who are employed about his rooms, should wear the same kind of coat. The other permanent messengers are those who are employed in the halls here, and are sent to do errands outside, and naturally you would not put those employees in dress coats, and it is provided they shall have sack coats. The colour of the uniform is to be navy blue, with red piping. The uniforms are to have brass buttons, and it is intended that a die shall be procured to stamp the buttons, showing that they belong to the Senate. The sub-committee did not act by themselves; they took suggestions from the housekeeper and from other persons whose judgment was supposed to be worth something.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This report of the sub-committee recites that the sub-committee should report directly to the House. I have the last report of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, and I see nothing in it that warrants the nomination of this sub-committee and the duties it has performed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman himself is a member of the Committee on Contingent Accounts, is he not?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should want to have twenty-four hours notice to answer that question. Like the government, I want to be prepared.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Contingent Accounts Committee report to the House those matters which the House had to deal with at once. The Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts appointed this sub-committee and authorized the sub-committee to report directly to the House, and we have reported to the House, and it is for the House to either adopt the report or reject it. If the hon. gentleman disputes what I say, we can produce the law clerk with the minutes of the meeting of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, at which the sub-committee was appointed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not desire to question the accuracy of the statements made by the hon. gentleman. I am not a member of the committee. I will answer the hon. gentlemen's question now. I wish to say that the sub-committee was appointed by the Standing Committee. It was on a motion made by the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The minutes of the committee read as follows:—

Committee room, Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, 13th July, 1899. On motion of the Honourable Mr. Power, it was resolved that the Honourable Messieurs Kirchhoffer, Power and Macdonald (B.C.) be appointed a sub-committee to action association with His Honour the Speaker, for the purpose of selecting a uniform, and that the said sub committee be authorized to report to the Senate.

I suppose that is correct.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, that is correct, I presume. I did not remember it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I read that in order to refresh the memory of the hon. gentleman, because he had forgotten it. I always thought that when a sub-committee was appointed they would act as such, and I did not imagine that one member of that committee would call himself the sub-committee, and make a report in the absence of his colleagues. I think we should have a quorum of that sub-committee. If a sub-committee consists of three members, I should think a majority would be necessary to constitute a quorum. That sub-committee did not meet, and the report before us is not the report of the sub-committee. I raise a point of order on that ground.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is quite right. I did not remember that I had moved the resolution for the sub-committee; but the idea did not originate with me. I think it was the Hon. Mr. Owens who brought the matter of uniforms before the committee. I had no interest in it, and was not, in fact, in favour of it. I moved the resolution to dispose of the matter when it was before the committee. The hon. gentleman is right to a certain extent; but, as I explained last night when the report was presented, the hon. gentleman from Brandon was the chairman of the committee, and he was nominated on the sub-committee, and also the hon. gentleman from Victoria. We were associated with His Honour the Speaker in the matter. The hon. gentleman from Brandon left here shortly after the meeting. He said he could not attend to this matter, and asked me if I would attend to the selection of the uniform. He did not think that it was a very solemn matter, or that the constitution of the Senate was seriously involved, or anything of that sort. The hon. gentleman from Victoria, unfortunately, met with an accident which prevented him from working, and he left shortly afterwards. That left His Honour the Speaker and myself. This work had been imposed upon us, and I thought it was better that we should do it in some way; and even though the work has not been done in the strictly regular way, it is before the Senate, and the Senate can do as they wish. We have done our duty. I feel that if I had failed to act, and His Honour the Speaker had failed to act, in a certain sense we should not have done our duty. But we have done our duty, and now the Senate can do its duty.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have no report. The duty of the committee was not done in the regular way. The hon. gentleman from Brandon told the hon. gentleman from Halifax to go on with the business. He went on with the business in a very irregular way. Another meeting of the committee should have been called and a new sub-committee appointed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a report of two members of the sub-committee, and the Senate can deal with it. Any member of the House can move any resolution he pleases as long as there is nothing disloyal or improper about it, and if the hon. gentleman thinks the sub-committee was not acting legally, we can act as individuals and the Senate can adopt our action or not as they please. I move that this report be adopted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not a report of the sub-committee, and I ask for a ruling.

The SPEAKER—I never understood that the Speaker could be called upon to decide if a report had been properly or improperly drawn. I do not believe it is within the jurisdiction of the Speaker to decide that. In my opinion, the only thing to be done in the present case, if the hon. gentleman thinks that the report has not been properly drawn, or is not properly before the House, is for him to object to the adoption of the report, and the Senate is at liberty to adopt or reject it. The hon. gentleman has the report in his hands and may take that course if he desires, but I do not believe that I have the right to decide that this report is not a report.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I second the motion of my hon. friend from Halifax, quite understanding the manner in which the report was prepared. The sub-committee endeavoured to obtain a majority of that committee to make a report, but could not do so. It would be most ungracious and unreasonable—I was going to say improper—to hesitate one moment in accepting the report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has said that it is most improper to refuse to accept the report. I am insisting on a right, and I do not think any hon. gentleman is justified in challenging my right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I challenge the hon. gentleman's right to speak again.

Hon Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the motion for adjournment is carried, I desire to call the attention of the House to this report, or what is called a report, but which is not a report at all, made by two members of the House. I approve of the ruling that has been given, because I presume that the Speaker of this House felt himself interested in the question and would not like to give a direct ruling.

The SPEAKER—I ask the privilege of being allowed to answer that statement. I do not insist on the report. I have nothing to do with it. It was signed and I thought it was my duty to acquiesce in it, but I would not like the hon. gentleman to think I would not give a proper decision because I was interested.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am saying that that would not be a reason for withholding a decision. I am in accord with what the Speaker says. I am perfectly convinced that it would not be a reason to prevent the Speaker giving a proper decision. Take the report, and what do we find that the hon. gentleman from Halifax, the future minister, did, in reference to it? Not only did he select a uniform which is described in the pretended report, but he makes a distinction between the messengers. He did what he had no right to do, because if he is regularly appointed to do a specific duty he must stick to the obligations that are imposed on him, and the instructions that are given to him in his appointment, and the only thing he had to do was to select a uniform. He went further than that, but it is not astonishing at all. Why? Because he began to act without authority. Two members of the committee had gone home. It was impossible to have a quorum, but he went on and said "I will be the committee," and he prepared a report, and in that report he ignores the instructions he received and says that the housekeeper, the doorkeeper and the keeper of the wardrobe and the Speaker's two permanent messengers shall be supplied with uniforms of one style and other messengers with uniforms of a somewhat different style, and he says that the trousers should have red piping on the outer seam of each leg, that the buttons must be of brass and caps navy blue, the pattern to be chosen by the Serjeant-at-Arms. The whole civil service is to be consulted in the choosing of that uniform. One must choose the buttons, another the gold lace and another the red braid which must go on the trousers and hide the seams, and I do not know who else has not been brought in to choose other parts of the uniforms. I contend that this report is ultra vires and not in accordance with the instructions given to the sub-committee. The hon. gentleman has made distinctions between the messengers, which he had no right to do, and for that reason the report is unconstitutional. I hope the House will not adopt this report. We have just received it this morning and have not had time to consider it. If we decided to accept it in these dying hours of the session, perhaps we might regret our action and be obliged to have our messengers change trousers next session if we adopt the pattern with the brass buttons.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It would not be an unusual thing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not understand that the question of order has yet been decided.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It has been decided.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it decided that this is a report?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask the House to decide whether this is a formal or an informal report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Informal.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that this report be not now taken into consideration, but that it be declared not to be a report at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Put the motion in writing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman's motion is not in writing.

The SPEAKER—It is before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move in amendment, seconded by the Hon. Mr. DeBoucherville, that this so-called report be not now taken into consideration, but that it be taken into consideration this day six months.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—It is all very well for us to amuse ourselves, as we have nothing to do till the Supply Bill comes before us, but I think there is something due to the dignity of this House, and I do not think that amendment should be submitted. We have a report on the minutes presented for adoption. The committee appointed could not act under their proper powers, but to talk of the report being a so-called report is not very dignified, and it is not a proper thing to ask the Speaker to put the motion to the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will withdraw the word "so-called," but I do not want the report adopted.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I did not hear the Speaker's decision; was it decided that this was a report?

The SPEAKER—No, I said nothing of that kind. I said I did not think it was within the jurisdiction of the Speaker to decide whether the report was properly drawn or not—that it should be left to the House to decide that question.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Then the Speaker has not decided that this report was a proper one.

The SPEAKER—No, I did not decide that. I refused to decide that, because I thought I had no jurisdiction.

The House divided on the amendment which was lost on the following division:

Contents, 8; non-contents, 9.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE— We have not yet voted on the question of whether this is a proper report or not. The matter has been explained very clearly. A sub-committee was appointed to assist the Speaker. If the committee made a report the Speaker would sign that report, but he does not belong to the committee. It is necessary to have a quorum in the committee. The committee is composed of three, and it is clear that they had no quorum. One member of the committee has made a report and signed. Can we decide now that that is a regular report?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not of the slightest consequence what we call this report. It is a report, and whether it is a report of the committee as originally constituted is of no great consequence. The question for us to decide is whether we shall have some distinguishing uniform for the messengers of this House. That question may be referred to the Committee on Contingent Accounts or it may not. A single member of the committee may express his opinion to this House and the House may act upon that expression. The House of Commons adopted a uniform for their employees some time ago. It has been found very convenient to strangers visiting the buildings, because they know who the officers are, and they can ask the officers of the House for any information they desire.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—And the officers of the House had also authority.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The same thing would happen if we were to adopt a uniform here. It is a matter of convenience to the public. I think it is trifling with the House to enter into a long discussion as to whether the report is regularly before us. It is a matter relating to a question upon which the House has an inherent authority and does not derive its power to act from the committee or any member of the committee. It might have taken the initiative in this matter without a report from any member of the committee. There is a report before us signed by His Honour the Speaker and by a member of the House, and if we choose to act upon that report it is clearly within our right to do so.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE — I agree with what has fallen from the lips of the hon. leader of the House. Any member can come here and make a motion, although he is not representing a committee, but can any member come here and move the adoption of a report of a committee which does not exist, or at least which has not dealt with the question? There is a great difference between the two, and I cannot agree with the hon. minister when he says it is trifling with the House to debate this subject. It is not trifling with this House when you are dealing with the rules of the House. If we disregarded the rules of the House in our proceedings, then we would be trifling with the House. We should follow the rules.

The report was adopted on a division.

The Senate adjourned.

SECOND SITTING.

THE SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'Clock.

Routine proceedings.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (192) "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 30th June, 1900, and for other purposes relating to the public service."

The bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the suspension of the forty-first rule in so for as the same relates to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of the bill. He said:—The measure is, of course, one of very great importance, because the administration of the affairs of the country for the twelve months is dependent upon the supplies that have been granted by the House of Commons and of which we have been informed by this bill. I may say very briefly, that the amount of supply is somewhat larger than that usually asked for. The supply in the main estimate amounts to $41,528,000, and in the supplementary estimates it amounts to $1,198,000, making in the supplementary and main estimates chargeable to income $43,426,844. There have been other sums besides that included in the main estimate voted this year, but those have been voted every year, almost, since confederation. There are certain sums that are asked for to carry on the affairs of the country that are chargeable to capital account. Hon. gentlemen know very well the line which devides those expenses which are charged against the ordinary and current revenues of the country and those estimates that are obtained for the purpose of making improvements of a permanent character, that could not be charged against the expenses of the year. These relate to various public works, and are of very considerable importance, and are justified, in my opinion, by the circumstances of the country and by its requirements, especially those requirements that are certain to arise at a very early day. The main estimates chargeable to capital account amount to $4,748,000 in round numbers, and the supplementaries chargeable to capital account $3,598,000, and then there are railway subsidies, $5,305,000 and sums for bridges in the province of Quebec, the one over the St. Lawrence near the city of Quebec $1,000,000, and certain other bridges amounting to $235,000.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—How much altogether?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—$51,000,000 I think, besides these estimates for railway purposes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And the Ottawa contribution.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then let me say that these amounts are variable. Some years they are very much larger than they are other years. Thus, when we built the Canadian Pacific Railway and agreed to pay the company $25,000,000 to aid in the construction of that road, besides the immense area of public lands that were given, no one for a moment suggested that those $25,000,000 ought to be charged against the expenditure of the year in which the contract was made. From the very earliest period down to the present day, when we have been discussing the expenditure for the year, whether in this House or in the House of Commons, no one has included in that expenditure the amount of money that has been voted and charged to capital account. Sometimes expenditures have been charged to capital account, which, in the opinion of some members of the House of Commons, ought to have been charged to the ordinary revenues of the year. For instance, a few years ago, when the charges made for the surveying of the lands in the North-west Territories, was transferred from being a charge to ordinary revenue to a charge upon capital account, objection was taken by some members of the House. And so I might mention other instances of a similar character. These, however, are quite subordinate, and I might say that a fair comparison between the expenditure of the present year and years gone by must be a comparison between the charges to revenue account in the present year and the charges against revenue in previous years. When it is said that the expenditure under the late government was in a certain year something over $38,000,000, there is not a dollar over $38,000,000 that embraced charges to capital account. They are charges to revenue account, and to revenue account alone. If you take out of the charges of the current year the charges that arise out of the administration of the affairs of the Yukon country, which is wholly new, and the extra charge made for public improvements for the purpose of promoting the commerce of the great lakes, you will find that the charges for the ordinary affairs of government have not been increased. The charges for the ordinary affairs of government are less per capita the present year than they have been in former years. I am not going into a comparison of these charges, however, at the present time. That is a matter rather relating to the business of the House of Commons than to this House, but I say when you look at the rapid extension of the commerce of the Dominion, when you consider that during the past two years it has grown by some millions more than it did during the preceding twenty-three years, you will see how rapid the expansion has been and how necessary the improvement of the highways of commerce are to the commercial interest of the country. If we were stationary, there are improvements which are being made that would not be justified, but when we are so rapidly progressing and our commerce is expanding to such gigantic proportions, we would be equally culpable if we neglected to make those improvements which are called for by the interest of the Dominion. With these observations, and without further trespassing on your indulgence, I move the second reading of the bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As we have been informed by the hon. leader of the government in this House that the Supply Bill specially pretains to the House of Commons, the inference would be that it is improper that we should discuss the bill which is now before us, or in other words we are simply to say yea or nay. I shall therefore follow the example, as near as possible, of the hon. gentleman, in speaking very shortly on the question before the House. In doing so, I must, in the first place, take some little exception to the statements made by the hon. gentleman as to the relative expenditure between this year and former years. Without going into particulars, I shall merely deal with the facts as they are presented to us by the bill now before us for our acceptance. It is true that there is a difference between the current expenditure of the year and the expenditure which is properly and legitimately charged to capital account. What I shall deal with is this—and what I think the country will have to consider is—what amount is the country asked to pay for the carrying on of the business of the Dominion during the coming year, and what amount has the government pledged the country to pay in future years. When we take the figures as they are presented to us, in that light, we find that they exceed by a very large sum any former appropriation. I shall take for a few moments the liberty of contrasting the professions of the hon. gentlemen with their practices, and endeavour to lay down a basis to show that their professions out of office are not always practiced when they assume the reins of power and the responsibilities of office. I find, and so will any one who has read the platform upon which these gentlemen appealed to the people at the last general election, that they made certain definite and positive promises and it may fairly be asked, how far have these promises been carried out, and how far do the government deserve the continued confidence of the people with respects to this particular branch of the subject—that is, the promise and the practice. One of the principal planks in the platform of the Reform convention so-called, held in this city, was the following :—

> We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand the strictest economy in the administration of the government of the country.

In introducing that resolution, Mr. Gibbons, of London, one of the lights of the Liberal party, made use of this language :

> You do not need to be concerned with regard to this resolution. You have already been convinced of the truth of the principles advocated by the Liberal party, and about this one there is no dispute.

He was followed immediately by the Hon. Clifford Sifton, then Attorney General of the province of the Manitoba, and now Minister of the Interior, in the present administration. He said :

> I wish to call attention to the fact that, as Liberals, we have the right to say that we are the exponents of economy.
>
> In the Liberal campaign book we are told :
> The large reduction which would take place, under a Liberal administration, in the public expenditure is sufficient of itself to justify any man in voting for a reduction of the tariff.

How far that reduction has taken place has been pointed out repeatedly in this House, as well as in the House of Commons. It is true that certain articles have been placed upon the free list. It is equally true that these very articles have ever since been sold to the consumer at a much higher rate than they were sold before they were put on the free list.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Do you want a tax put on to bring down the price ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I had time, and I deemed it at all pertinent to the subject now under consideration I could prove from the experience of this country in the past, that the placing of a protective tariff upon every article which the present government has placed upon the free list, led to its being sold cheaper than it is to-day. However, I am not going to be led away. There are articles, I may say, in the tariff that bear a higher rate of duty to-day than they did prior to the introduction of this so-called free trade policy. It is true they are articles principally imported from Great Britain, while the articles upon which the duty was lowered are imported from the United States, and the result has been a falling off in the importations during the last two or three years from the British market, and an increase in the importation of the articles, notwithstanding the preferential duty, from the United States. The public accounts show that, and it is not necessary for me to elaborate the subject. After the present Minister of the Interior had given vent to his opinion as to what constituted the platform and policy of the Liberal party, Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke as follows :

Do you imagine there is any justification for this extraordinary expenditure? The Conservatives tell us there is a justification. Population has increased, they say. Oh, yes; it has increased 9 per cent, but the expenditure has increased 100 per cent. (Sic.) There can be no justification for such an expenditure, when, as has been stated, the great bulk of it is a corrupt expenditure.

They tell us that if we were in power we could not retrench and economize. But I do not believe that it will be a difficult task. It would not be a very difficult task to economize to the extent of one, two, three millions—and Mr. Mills told his constituents a few days ago that it was possible to retrench to the extent of four millions a year.

I will show presently how that declaration on the part of the present Minister of Justice has been carried out. It was merely an ebulition of hon. gentlemen who were trying to catch the popular will at the moment, forgetting what the duties of statesmen really are, and appealing to the prejudices of people by giving utterance to sentiments of that kind. Then we have that great economist, Sir Richard Cartwright, who held out in the following style :

For my own part I do not hesitate to tell him (the Finance Minister) that I consider a yearly expenditure of forty million dollars, or thirty-eight million dollars, altogether too much for the resources of Canada.

I say it is a disgrace and a shame to the government that has been entrusted with our affairs that they come down to us and ask for an expenditure of thirty-eight million dollars a year for federal purposes.

Sir, the thing is utterly unjustifiable.

Sir, there is very little use for honourable gentlemen whining over this matter.

They ought to try and meet it, and the way to meet it is to reduce our present establishment, to reduce your present extravagant mode of government and to reduce your extravagant ideas.

I have said before, and I repeat it, that $38,000,000 is, in my judgment, a monstrous sum for this people to be called on to provide for.

I might go on for hours giving extracts of that character from the utterances of the gentlemen who now occupy the treasury benches, and who are guiding the destinies of Canada. We know the organ which speaks for them on almost every occasion. But lately, by the by, I saw it announced, when the attention of the House of Commons was called to a demand made by the Toronto Globe that the present occupant of the seat for West Huron in the House of Commons should retire on account of the gross frauds which have been proven before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that newspaper statements should not always command much attention. I congratulate the Premier on the fact that he has arrived at that conclusion, so far as the utterances of the Toronto Globe are concerned. However, there was a time when they did not speak so disparagingly of that paper, that is when that paper gave utterance to sentiments of this kind :

The first duty of the Laurier Government is to put an end to the abuses of the subsidy system.

We have an illustration of how these subsidy abuses are being put an end to, in the bill passed yesterday.

To set its face against every mere boodling enterprise. We must turn over a new leaf in order to maintain the public credit abroad, no less than to introduce a higher order of public morality at home.

Then there was a letter written by Sir Richard Cartwright, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, to the president of an organization, known as the Patrons, in Ontario. Among other things he told the Patrons that he was at one time with them on the following planks of their platform :— first, "economy of administration." We have an illustration of that in the Supply Bill before us, which, as I shall show presently, pledges this country to an expenditure of nearly seventy millions.

Secondly, purity and independence of Parliament.

We have had that exemplified in the fact that, notwithstanding the declaration of the ministry of the present day, that men who accepted office while holding seats in Parliament were the mere slaves of the administration of the day, three or four members have been sent from the House of Commons to this chamber, quite legitimately and quite properly in some cases, but in one or two cases it was in order to create vacancies in constituencies in order that those who had been appointed to office, but who had never held a seat in Parliament, could retain their positions by obtaining seats which had been secured by the elevation of commoners to the Senate. The Finance Minister is one, the Minister of Railways and Canals is another, and the Minister of Public Works a third. There are three of them. They all secured seats in the Commons by vacancies being created in that House. I do not find so much fault with that, as I do with the violation of the principle which was laid down so vehemently and so strongly by members of the present administration in reference to the appointment to office of Commoners, and thereby creating vacancies. How has that been carried out? There are eight or ten members of Parliament, whose names I could give, who, since the last election, in three short years, have been elevated either to the bench, to Lieutenant-Governorships or to some other office of emolument. This is the way in which the independence of Parliament has been maintained in accordance with the declarations, promises and pledges of the present ministry. Then the next matter was "reciprocity of trade." That is a very prolific subject. The United States people were told by these gentlemen that if the Liberal party in Canada could only obtain power, they would make such and such concessions to them, which would result in the freest trade between the two countries. They went to Washington and came back with their thumbs in their mouths. They went there two or three times afterwards; after having interfered as they had done with the negotiations which were going on between the United States ministers and the Conservatives. We all know the result. I need not elaborate upon that point. They are no nearer reciprocity now, however much it may have been desired, than the Conservative party were, nor are they as near it. The estrangement to-day is greater than it has been for the last quarter of a century. I do not believe—and I have given utterance to that opinion repeatedly, and I believe that it is the sentiment of the great majority of the people of Canada, to-day—that we are so enamoured of reciprocity as we were formerly, nor is reciprocity a necessity for the prosperity of this country. We are marching on upon our own responsibility, and though there might be some little advantage in reciprocal trade in some articles, it is not necessary for the prosperity of Canada. Beside their tariff has placed it out of the power of obtaining anything from the United States Government. Those articles which we do not produce, and which are easily grown and produced in the United States, are put upon the free lists in this country, and the consequence is, that they have nothing to receive from us which would be of advantage to them, having obtained all through the stupidity of those who framed the tariff. The next point was that we were to have a "tariff for revenue only." How far that has been carried out by the adoption, to a very great extent, of the national policy, needs no elaboration. Then we were to have "protection of labour from monopolies." We all know that nothing has been accomplished in that respect. We do know that in the Custom's Act a proposition was made to punish monopolists, under certain conditions and under certain circumstances, but has any attempt ever been made to reach any monopoly that existed in the country. We had an Alien Labour law placed upon the statute-book. I stated at the time, in this House, to the leader of the government, as many will remember, that the wording of the Act, and the provisions of it, were such that it would prove a fraud, and that the people who were interested in the carrying out and enforcement of the Act would be deceived. What has followed? When application has been made for the enforcement of that Act, when it has been violated in the province of Ontario, the Minister of Justice declines to proceed with the prosecution. We all know that not one individual, no matter how much he may be affected, can take the first step towards the enforcement of this Act, without first having the authority and consent of the department of the Minister of Justice. The next point was "no railway bonuses." It is not necessary for me to go beyond the measure which we discussed yesterday to furnish an illustration of how they have carried out that pledge. They have bonused less than half a mile of road to enable private parties to get to a wharf. They have bonused a couple of miles of road in order to enable a manufacturer to get from one portion of his manufacturing establishment to another portion, or to a wharf. They have subsidized fifty miles and a hundred miles of railway in other portions of the country. They have done more. They have doubled the amount of subsidies which were given by the late government when Sir Richard Cartwright made the declaration that there should be no more subsidies. The next plank was "voters' list by local officials." All we have to do, is to look at what the effect of transferring our franchise and the power of carrying on an election by the local authorities has been; look at the result of the elections in Brockville, West Huron, South Ontario and West Elgin, where it has been proved that under the local authorities and local management the grossest frauds and iniquities that the human mind could conceive, have been perpetrated, in order to carry them. These are the results of having local lists. Then we were to have "no gerrymandering." This Senate put a stop to the attempt to gerrymander which was made, if gerrymander it might be called. It was an abortion in the manner of readjusting the Redistribution Act. Then Sir Richard says:

> There is simply no single one of these objects which the Liberal party have not been fighting for, moving resolutions for, and doing their very best to obtain any time during the last twenty years.

I do not propose to elaborate that portion of the subject further. The hon. gentleman said a few moments ago that one of the reasons for the large expenditures this year was the necessities of and the growing trade of the country. Expenditure is growing to such an extent that it is unparalleled in any past history. I should like to ask him whether the expenditure of a large amount of money in the construction of wharfs on Lake St. John, some couple of hundreds of miles north of Quebec, is in the interest of the trade of this country, whether it is necessary, whether it is anything more than an appropriation for private parties who own one or two steamboats on that lake? There is no trade there to justify it. Was it necessary to incur an expenditure, or try to incur an expenditure of $70,000 to build a wharf down in Gaspé in order to induce the present member for that constituency to withdraw his resignation?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And that too at a place where there is no water. I am informed by those who know the locality well, that you might spend hundreds of thousands of dollars, and then would have to go miles out into the sea before you could reach a depth of water sufficient to enable the seagoing vessels to land at that wharf. Then there is an appropriation which I look upon as one of the most iniquitous in all the public appropriations that could possibly be conceived. Any one who has been up the Richelieu River and visited the island called Ile aux Noix, made famous in Parkman's history and in the history of our country, as the spot where fortifications were erected during the American war. No one lives on that island except the caretaker, and he is there to look after the old fortifications which are going to ruin and decay, I know when I was Minister of Militia I visited, with the General, that part of Canada. The island lies nearly in the centre of the Richelieu River and not far from the United States boundary line, and an invading force coming down that river would have to pass this island, and hence in the old days, even the Indians fortified it to protect themselves against other tribes. The government have handed over the old fortifications to a yacht club, who have turned it into a pleasure resort, where the members go to spend their leisure hours. I do not see any objection in that. It used to cost the country something to keep those fortifications from falling down. I know the old pensioner appealed to me to increase his pay while I was there. He was only getting twenty-five cents a day in addition to his pension to look after the fortification. When I came home I doubled it, as I thought fifty cents a day was little enough for the service. Now, what have the government done? The island has passed out of the hands of the government, and they are now actually appropriating a large sum of money for the construction of a wharf on that island for the accommodation of the Montreal and St. John Yacht Clubs. Is that an appropriation in the interest of the great and growing trade of this country? I could go on for an hour, if necessary, and point out such appropriations. The Minister of Finance has himself taken $20,000 or $30,000 for wharfs and improvements in his own constituency in Nova Scotia, besides railway subsidies. That gentleman had no seat in Parliament. It was necessary for him to secure a seat in the House of Commons to hold his office, and the then member, Mr. Forbes, magnanimously retired and took an office at $50 a year. However, he was not long until he got a judgeship, and he is now living on the income derived from that. These are appropriations which the hon. gentleman says are necessary for the development and encouragement of the trade of the country. It will be for the people to say whether they are or not. There is another item to which I shall allude. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island knows the particulars as well or better than I do. There is a United States firm who have been doing business in Prince Edward Island for more than thirty years, because the claim which they have against the government and recognized is twenty-one years old. That claim arose out of the non-enforcement of the Washington Treaty in 1871. It is known that at that period a difficulty arose in reference to Prince Edward Island and it was understood at the time that though Prince Edward Island was not included in the provisions of that treaty, whatever duties were paid upon fish and fish oil sent from Canada into the United States were to be refunded by the United States Government. By some misunderstanding, as usual, the United States authorities refused to make these rebates, which amounted to some $60,000 or $70,000—I am speaking subject to correction.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—That is right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The British Government did not think it worth while to create any friction between the two governments in reference to this question, and they intimated to the Canadian Government that they had better pay it themselves. The Canadian Government, in considering the question, refunded out of our own funds that which should have been paid by the United States, to all British subjects who had been carrying on a legitimate trade and had paid duties to the United States Government on fish and fish oil. This United States firm, not being British subjects, made a very large claim. We declined to admit it. I say "we," because that claim has been made on each and every government. Mr. Fitzgerald, now a judge, was appointed by the late government to investigate and report upon the subject. He made a long and exhaustive report. He did show that Hall & Myrick had shipped, for British subjects on the island, a certain quantity of fish, and that duty had been paid upon them. We recognized those claims. I say that, because I was in the government at that time, and we refunded the money to the British subjects, but declined to pay the claim of this United States firm who were not then, nor are they now, British subjects. They have steadily refused to take the oath of allegiance, although they have been there thirty years, to the British Government. Every election that has taken place for the last twenty years these people made demands on the government to pay them the amount they claimed. At the last by-election it cropped up again, and these gentlemen were among the most active and energetic supporters of the present member, and they succeeded, through their influence and the employés they have on the island, in defeating our old friend Mr. Hackett. I received a letter from the island immediately after the election took place explaining how Mr. Hackett had lost his election; and it was said "Watch events and you will find Hall & Myrick's claim will be recognized by the present government." True enough, here it is. Here is a Yankee firm that has been pressing this claim for over twenty years, a claim which has been refused by every government, including the Mackenzie government, as unfounded, and now it is recognized. It looks on the face of it, as if this claim of over twenty years standing is paid to these people for the support they gave the government candidate in the election in East Prince. There are the facts. Hon. gentlemen can draw their own conclusions from them. This Yankee firm had no more right to that $15,000 or $16,000, then my hon. friend beside me; but it is a sample of the manner in which the funds of this country are being voted away, for, shall I say, corrupt purposes. That would be unparliamentary, but I leave hon. gentlemen to draw any deductions they like from the facts I have presented. These are only a few, a very few of the items in this bill to which I might call attention. Now, what are we asked to vote? I will give a summary of the contents of this Supply Bill which we have either to swallow or reject. I do not suppose any one will take the responsibility of rejecting the bill, though I think if there ever was a case to justify a rejection of a supply bill, this is one of them. It is true the government have the power, and they must take the responsibility. The Supply Bill shows the supplementary estimates for the year 1898-99, which we have already passed, amounting to $2,647,628. The main estimates for 1899-1900 amount to $46,286,550. Further supplementary estimates, $5,497,343, a second further supplementary estimates, $12,451. Then we have the Drummond County Railway purchase, $1,600,000. I am not drawing a distinction now, between that which is charged to capital account and that which should be charged to the current expenditure of the year. I am giving the total amount which this Parliament is asked to vote in this Supply Bill, and the Supply Bill which we have already passed, being the amount to which the country is pledged either to expend during the coming year or in the future. They amount to $56,043,972. But that is not all. You have the railways and bridges subsidies amounting to $6,540,293, and if you capitalize the vote of $140,000 annually to the Grand Trunk it pledges the country to a payment of $4,421,898. Then we have the $60,000 that is given to assist the city of Ottawa. Deduct the $15,000 from that, which has been paid in the past, and which has no right to be added to the demands of the present government, capitalize that for ten years and you have $386,295. Then we have our proportion of the cost of the Pacific cable. It is true that received the support of every member of both Houses, but that does not affect the fact that we are pledged to an expenditure of $2,361,111, or making a total for current expenses and capital account for which the country is pledged in the future the magnificent sum of $69,753,569. I know my hon. friend, if he were to attempt to answer these figures, would say a large proportion of this is expenditures for the future. I admit that, but it does not change the fact that in one session the country is pledged to an expenditure of within a fraction of $70,000,000. That is the manner in which the economy to which these gentlemen pledged themselves has been carried out, and it will be for them to reconcile their conduct with their professions when they appeal to those who have the power to retain them in the positions they occupy, or reject them at the polls. After the statements made by the hon. Minister of Justice, I thought it was only proper that I should place before the House and before the country the view that I, at least, and those with whom I act, take of the growing expenses of the country and the exorbitant demands made upon us, and to point out some few cases in which the appropriations are not only not unjustifiable, but I might add, criminal in their character.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It is not within our province to go into all the details of this bill, and if we were disposed to do so, we have not the time or the opportunity at this last hour of the session. The Minister of Justice referred to the expenditure which we are making under the bill as being justified for the improvement of the highways of commerce. If the expenditure within the four corners of this bill was legitimately confined to the improvement of the highways of commerce, it would receive no opposition whatever from the members of the Senate, but when we look at the various items which are embraced within that bill, we find there are many other items there than those which should be designated as expended for the improvement of the highways of commerce. The hon. Minister of Justice referred to the flourishing state of the revenue of this country, and I am very pleased to agree with him that the revenue of the country has been flourishing, and therefore that it, in some measure, justifies an expenditure greater, possibly, than had been made on any previous occasion; but when we look back at the record of the gentlemen now composing the majority in support of the government, and remember the statements which they made broadcast throughout the country, when the expenditure did not amount to anything like the sum that it does now—when it was $15,000,000 or possible $20,000,000 less than the expenditure proposed during this session—when we remember that these gentlemen called upon the people to oppose the government which then ruled in the country because they were imposing such vast taxes upon the people of the country by their extravagant expenditure; when they told the people of the country that every individual in the Dominion of Canada was taxed to the amount of forty dollars. When they told them a few years ago that the expenditure had been increased up to fifty dollars a head of the people, or $300 for every family within the country, will it not appear evident to the country that that was the greatest clap trap, the most absurd denunciation that could be given to the people when we see these very gentlemen now, when in power, increasing the expenditure and justifying it to Parliament and to the country. Does it not show that their utterances at that time were the veriest buncombe that could be uttered? The course which the government of the day has pursued during the present session is a justification of the course pursued by former governments. It shows that the epithets which were hurled against them for extravagance were not justified at the time, and that these outcries against their predecessors were for political ends. It is true the revenue of the country is flourishing, but I may remark that there are many respects in which the country stood on a higher plane in former years than at present. Where is the shipping that was owned throughout every one of the maritime provinces twenty or thirty years ago? We have no such fine ships on the register of those provinces now as we had in those days. That is one evidence of the flourishing state of trade at that period. It is true we have a very large importation now. Our imports have swollen enormously, I might say, in some respects; but have our exports kept pace with the imports? They have not. The result will be that in a few years this country will have to be trying to collect money in every possible way in order to send it abroad to pay for the large amount of goods imported, with our exports falling so much short of the amount of our imports. We all remember how a few years ago the maritime provinces were referred to as the "shreds and patches" of the Dominion. It is true that epithet was hurled against us at the time when we returned a Conservative government to power. Since then they have changed and returned a Liberal majority, and the "shreds and patches" are now being bound together by wharfs in every corner of some of these provinces, where they were formerly erected by the people, and were the means of earning a livelihood from the business at these wharfs. Now, the government have stepped in and are building wharfs in places where it never was the intention of the government up to the present time to build wharfs. They are also, under the measure which we have before us, erecting public buildings in various places throughout the country where the revenue derived from those places is not sufficient to justify such expenditure as is provided for under this bill. These expenditures increase largely the amount which we are voting for the public service. Many items which are within the bill are justifiable and liberal sums for the improvements of the country, but I maintain that outside of those there are a great many appropriations which are not justified by the circumstances of the country, or by anything except, possibly, the necessity of the representatives of the places at which these expenditures are to be made. At the late period of the session at which the appropriation bills come in, it is impossible for members of the Senate—perhaps it may not be altogether their duty—to criticise or examine all the various items of which the Supply Bill is composed; but at the same time, we may speak in a general way of the different appropriations which are made and which, without the approval of the members of the Senate, would not have the sanction of law. I consider that the appropriations are more liberal than the circumstances of the country justify. The Senate is not responsible for the amount of that expenditure. The members of the other branch of Parliament who have passed these items, and discussed each appropriation in the Supply Bill, will be the men who will have to justify the course that they have taken before the country.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Although I said the other day that I was opposed to our practice of carrying the estimates three times around the table and saying amen, and that I would have something to say about them this time, I shall not occupy the attention of the House for any length of time on the present occasion. This session of Parliament has been a most extraordinary one. The people of this country will think and say so. There is an increase of expenditure in every department of the public service. The government have increased every expenditure in the public service.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Excepting the indemnity.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Well, they increased the indemnity to themselves, but they forget the members of the House of Commons and the Senate. They increased the salaries of ministers of the Crown, and the legislation is retroactive. I do not think the hon. gentleman from Glengarry was here at the time. He was away on business, but if he had been here he would not have had occasion to put that question to me. If we were to go over the Supply Bill item by item and compare it with the pledges which the members of the government made to the people of the country, it would take a month, and it would be difficult to accomplish it in that time. I listened to the remarks of the Minister of Justice. His party said at one time that it meant ruin to five millions of people to spend thirty-eight millions a year, and the Minister of Justice said it could be done for $4,000,000 less. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the members of the Conservative government were "robbers great and robbers small," but the hon. gentlemen are now in power themselves and it is all lovely. They receive a good salary themselves and they manage to pension their poor relations on the people of this country, their nephews, their uncles and their aunts, and they are perfectly satisfied. I can tell them that everything is not lovely with the people of this country. The people are watching them, and the hon. gentlemen will have to give an account of this session of Parliament to the people of the country, and the sooner the better. They have increased the expenditure and cannot give any proper explanation of why they propose to spend all this money. They have increased the railway subsidies, and I am satisfied that it is against the interests of the country that they should be increased. They should be cut down to the smallest amount possible, and confined to assisting the people that are suffering for want of railway accommodation in the thinly settled districts. But that is not the true object. The object is to get support for this government who have violated all the pledges they have made to the people. They know they have to do something before the people will support them. The report goes forth now that the country is prosperous. I can state that the hon. gentleman knows very little about it. The government have increased the indebtedness of the country by millions and they are now discounting the future, and they say that the country is prosperous because the imports are large. I do not care about the imports, but I want to see the exports increased. I know that members of Parliament and ministers of the Crown will tell you that the more you import the better off you are, the more you buy the better you are off, whether you pay for it or not. I do not hold that view, but this government appears to be going in that way. Speaking of docks, I have been told that some of the docks in the county that the Minister of Finance represents are going to cost from $1,000 to $70,000. I have been watching the discussion in the House of Commons, and a gentleman tells me that a frog cannot get water enough to swim in at some of the places where they are going to build docks. Of course that does not refer to all of them. What is that done for? The Finance Minister has the fear of the people before his eyes, but has not the fear of the Lord, and he must spend money to get the people of the county to support him. This is the third year this government has been in power. They think they will get a great deal of credit for what they have done to enlarge the routes for trade and commerce, and one would think the country is progressing so rapidly that the trade of the country is going to amount to a great deal. I do not care about the trade of the country unless it pays us something. They are going too fast in some particulars, but there is one matter in which they are not going fast enough, and that is the canals. If the expenditure we made on the canals of this country is going to pay us at all, we must have and we ought to have had long ago, the proper harbours at the head of the Welland Canal on Lake Erie for the commerce of the country. But these gentlemen thought they knew all about it and what have they done? Why did they not prepare this work when they knew the St. Lawrence Canal would be finished in a few years? But they would not do it. All at once, without rhyme or reason, they went to Lake Erie, procured a tug and went to Buffalo and prepared a plan to spend $5,000,000 of the people's money to quarry a harbour out of the rocks at Port Colborne. I have brought this question before the people of the country, and I say that both governments are to blame, as far as the harbours at the head of the Welland Canal are concerned. If any hon. gentleman will look at the Hansard of 1875 he will see that I warned the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie as to what he should do then. But somebody had an interest in covering up a blunder committed formerly, and the government went on and made a woeful mistake. There were two mistakes that were excusable, but I called the attention of Alexander Mackenzie to that when they decided to make fourteen feet of water the draft of the canals from Lake Erie to Montreal and requested the government to select Port Maitland as the harbour on Lake Erie but they did not. That was a sad mistake, but this that they are making now is the worst mistake of all. They are going to spend $5,000,000. The plans are now ready. They have put a small amount in the estimates, four or five hundred thousand dollars—a small amount to do that work. If they spend that money in the way they are doing, it will be lost, and by and by they will say "If we do not continue this work we will lose the money that we have expended." That has been the case all the time in making a harbour out of that gigantic stone quarry at Port Colborne. The government should examine that question thoroughly, and employ independent engineers, not men who are bound to cover up former blunders, I do not care by what government committed. If they procure an independent surveyor, and he will say that Port Colborne is the best place for the harbour on the Welland Canal on Lake Erie, by all means let them take it. Then there are other items. They tell us what they have done for the farmers of this country. Lord help the poor farmers if this government is to run the country very long. The first thing they did was to take the duty off corn. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice told us that the corn in this country was sold at 12½ cents per bushel. He thought it was a great stroke of business to import United States corn to feed Canadian cattle. There is land enough, energy enough and intelligence enough in this country to raise all the grain that we require to feed our stock and our people, instead of going to the United States for it, and it is the duty of the Canadian farmer to raise all the food that he requires to feed his stock and his family. Look at what they are doing in the penitentiaries for the farmer now. They are manufacturing binder twine.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—For their friends.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Yes, and not for the farmers. They started out with the idea that they were going to help the farmers. Of course, we have to feed the prisoners in the penitentiaries and we should employ them if we can, but they should not be employed for the benefit of one political party.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—They sell this binder twine to their friends for about 4½ cents a pound, and these friends combine and sell it for about 13 or 14 cents, for the benefit of the farmers! The government took the duty off binder twine to help the farmers, and took the duty off corn to help the farmers, and now they are not satisfied with that, but they must tax him and put a mortgage on his property. They must discount the future and tax all the farmer has in the world, and embarrass the children unborn by entailing on them the payment of interest on this money that they are going to spend, scattering it to the four winds of heaven instead of getting a just return for it. That is where this government stands before the country to-day, and when they face the people, I can tell them what the results will be. The hon. Minister of Justice says it is necessary to have a large number of ministers in order that they should go through the country and come in contact with the people. He says the estimates are large because we have a large territory. These gentlemen used formerly to speak of $38,000,000 as being an enormous expenditure for 5,000,000 of population, but now they have changed their tune and they speak of our vast territory necessitating this increase. It has been said in the discussion that the ministers think they are not paid enough salary. I want every man to be paid fully for whatever service he performs. We want to pay a good wage for a good day's work. They talk as if $8,000 a year was not sufficient for the gentlemen who are governing the country. I do not say they are governing the country; they are playing at government. They say they should have more salary, and some members of Parliament say they should have double their present salary. They say they could make more in other businesses. Well, I do not know but they might. We have the expression of the late Controller of Customs, Mr. Wallace, who said he got $6,000 a year and was well paid. I know that he is a clever man, he runs mills and keeps stores and all that, but he says that $6,000 is more than he could make at anything else, and yet these gentlemen think they are not sufficiently paid. Let us consider the matter a little. They come here and what stock have they and how much money have they invested?

Hon. Mr. BAKER—In some cases it is very small capital.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I agree that it is small capital. If they had a large amount of brains, of course they might recompense the country some. I do not wish to say anything offensive to anybody, but I think that the people of this country understand that they are paying for brains and that they do not receive the benefit of what they are spending. The ministers of the Crown are very busy now. They are worked to death. In two or three days they will be off to the four quarters of the globe to have a good jollification.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—In private cars.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Yes, and private yachts, and the country has to pay for that. They will go through this country revelling in wine at the country's expense, and then they will call us back here probably next winter, or it may be spring, because they like to keep us here to roast us in the summer, because they think we will get tired and go home. I should have gone home long ago, but I thought I would see the end this time. I have but a short time to live in this world and I want to leave this country a little better than it was when I first came into it. I do not want to leave my children's children taxed for the money that this government is squandering. I say these gentlemen should be well satisfied with their salaries. Many of them pension all their relatives on the people of this country, but I do not say they all do. They have a fine time, but private members of the two Houses come down here and only receive $1,000. Of course we are not so badly off. I can obtain my bread and butter whether I ever come here or not, and I am satisfied that the rest of this body can do so. But look at the members of the House of Commons. They come here and put in five months each year, and they receive the magnificent sum of $1,000. It is a shame and a disgrace for the government to act in that way. They ought to be ashamed to take the money and the enjoyment they get out of it, when they scarcely give the members of the Commons enough to pay their expenses. I make that statement, and I would make it if I was before all the taxpayers of this country, and I know they would approve of what I say, and if I were talking to them I would tell them a little more of the iniquity which is going on in the government of this country and their satellites and supporters. They think the country is made for them. They think that if the Conservative party is allowed to live and breathe it is all they are entitled to do.

I stated yesterday that I did not want this bill carried round the table three times and passed, but this morning I made up my mind I would not say a word. When I came here and heard what people said about it, I thought I would carry out my promise yesterday. If we live till another session I hope the ministers will be better prepared with their legislation, and that they will be able to give us satisfactory explanations of the bills. We do not like to ask questions and then have to wait and wait for an answer. We desire to assist the government all we can. I know the Senate pretty well, and I know they are willing to assist the government in every legitimate way to do what is right and just and proper in the interests of the country, and if they expect us to do any more I think they will find the Senate is not willing to do it. I am satisfied it is the feeling of every senator irrespective of politics. It is the intention and desire of hon. gentlemen to do so, as no doubt they will when we come back next year. I hope the government will have their measures ready and will not keep us here five months and pay us the magnificent sum of $1,000. I should have said a great deal more on this subject if I had done justice to it, but it would have taken me a whole month. No doubt many hon. gentlemen feel the same, but they are not so outspoken as I am. I shall do my duty without fear, favour, or affection and I shall do it to the end as far as my humble ability will allow me. Within half an hour I shall start for home, and I give my sincere thanks to hon. gentlemen for all the kindnesses I have received from them. They have been always kind to me and I have nothing but feelings of regret at parting with them, but we must go home. We have been here long enough playing at government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the five minutes that I have to spare, I shall have very short time to correct very many erroneous statements made by hon. gentlemen who have preceded me in this chamber. It would take at least a couple of hours to go over the ground that has been occupied by previous speakers, and I shall therefore have to boil down my observations. The hon. leader of the opposition attacked the government because they had failed to carry out their pledges. He said in 1893 they had met at Ottawa and agreed upon a certain programme, and amongst other things had criticised and condemned the expenditure of the previous administration. When the change of government took place, this government felt that the conditions had altered very materially under which Canada had existed in former years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why did you make promises?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We made promises assuming the conditions were to remain the same as at the time those promises were made (cries of hear, hear). Year by year we have been having deficits. For 1893, 1894 and 1895 there were deficits. With the change of government, we brought about an absolute change of policy in the government of the country, and the effect was to bring in wealth to the people of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You made those promises when there were no deficits.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen have talked a great deal about our extravagance, and said that we are loading down the country with debt. One would suppose, from the graphic pictures they drew, that we were seizing the last bed of the last inhabitant. I can only quote a few figures to show how absolutely untrue statements of that kind are. Take the public debt which we have been piling up, according to the extravagant language of the hon. gentleman. Take the two last years of the old administration, the increase in the public debt for the two years was about $12,000,000. In 1897 we added $3,000,000; in 1898 $2,400,000—that is $5,400,000. We added less than fifty per cent to the debt compared with the last two years of the preceding administration. It is too early to speak of what the accounts will show for the past year, but I venture to say there will be a very considerable reduction in what may be called the increase of the national debt. Hon. gentlemen have deplored the falling off in the exports since the change of government took place. I have here the exports for a year or two which I can give to the hon. gentleman. The last year of the late administration, 1896, the exports were $109,000,000, and for 1898 they were $144,000,000. I should like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, who dilated so eloquently on the failure of the export trade of this country, to these figures.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—How much of that was bullion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—None at all. I have taken the exports of the produce of Canada, and our trade for 1898 was $303,000,000, and for 1896 it was $221,000,000. We added $81,000,000 to the trade of this country in that short time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We added!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman say that the policy that produced such a result was not worthy of introduction?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What policy?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The policy of reducing the taxatio.; the policy of allowing people to buy cheaper. The hon. gentleman smiles. I will give hon. gentlemen two sets of figures. I will take the imports for the year 1888 and the imports for the year 1898. In 1888 we imported $102,000,000, in round numbers, on which the duty was $22,000,000. In 1898 we imported $130,000,000, and the duty was $22,000,000. There were $28,000,000 of goods came into this country, either as free goods or paying lower rates of duty. No language can controvert a statement of that kind; it is plain, and speaks for itself. In those two years the duty happened to be exactly the same, but in the last year we imported $28,000,000 more than in the year to which I have called attention.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that an official document?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is from an official document. It will stand the closest scrutiny, and that bears out the argument I used when I said that we had improved the conditions in this country by reducing the debt of the people. The people got richer. They were able to buy more and that was the reason. One evidence to which I might call attention is the fact that in the banks of the country, some amounts bearing interest, other amounts not bearing interest, there is a sum now of between $250,000,000 and $260,000,000 waiting for investment, and at the same time we know very well there never was a period in the history of this country when large amounts were being invested in enterprises, and extension was going on as rapidly as to-day. Take, as an evidence of that, the number of bills passed this year authorizing the construction of railways and other works involving enterprise in carrying them out.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that due to free trade?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is due to the wise policy we adopted in reducing the tariff and in giving a preference to the mother country. But let me ask if there are not further evidences that every man has before his eyes in the improved condition of things. Look at the loan companies. The loan companies of this country found they could not carry on a profitable business at the reduced rates, and they came here and asked to be allowed to unite so as to cut down expenses. They could not get investments. It was not as it was years ago, when we chartered company after company to loan money. Ask the registry offices and they will tell you there is a large falling off in chattel mortgages and mortgages on real estate. Are these not most convincing evidences that this country has undergone a marvellous change?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Read Bradstreets Weekly reports, and the hon. gentleman will find his statement is incorrect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quoting from our own blue books. The hon. gentleman can check them as he pleases. The charges that are made against this government of extravagance and wastefulness are absolutely untrue. I could turn up any volume of the statutes from 1896 back to earlier years and show that in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia large sums were appropriated year by year for the building of wharfs and docks and minor improvements of that kind. I could, if time permitted, show exactly to what the increased expenditure of this year is due. A large portion of it is due to the Yukon and to subsidies we have given in consequence of new developments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear—and useless wharfs and breakwaters.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the few moments I have had at my disposal, I have endeavoured to quote some figures to satisfy the House that the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite in discussing this bill were not correct. In this estimate the government can only be charged with the amount we are authorized to spend, what is contained within those pages, and the total amount of that is $57,724,000, exclusive of the railway subsidies and the subsidy for the Quebec bridge. There is no $70,000,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is $19,000,000 more than the sum you condemned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman in counting the annual payment to the Grand Trunk capitalized. You might as well capitalize all the other items. But time is up.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that item of $50,000 given to the hon. gentlemen's supporter on his right (Mr. Snowball) a final settlement?

Hon Mr. SCOTT—I am not here to discuss items of account, because it is absolutely impossible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I can answer the hon. gentleman. If the hon. gentleman from Northumberland is entitled to $52,000, he is entitled to more, because he was awarded more. They took it out of the category of the contract and awarded him this sum on a report made by Mr. Shanly, and Mr. Shanly awarded him a great deal more. Why they cut it down I cannot understand. If they cut it down to the amount they give him, he is entitled to more than they give him.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

The House adjourned during pleasure.
