CONGRATULATIONS TO MISS KREINER ON WINNING GOLD MEDAL AT WINTER OLYMPICS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion with the unanimous approval of the House pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Following the tremendous achievement of Miss Kathy Kreiner of Timmins, at the Winter Olympics, and because her success for Canada seriously challenges our Canadian humility, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That through you, Mr. Speaker, this House express its great admiration for Kathy's ability, courage and dedication, and that this House honour Kathy for her remarkable success, by acknowledging her contribution to the glory of Canada and our athletes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The motion in accordance with the terms of the standing order can be presented only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN OPERATION OF ADMINISTRATOR'S ORDER IN IRVING CASE PENDING ESTABLISHMENT OF APPEAL PROCEDURE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43 under circumstances of urgent and pressing necessity which do not require expansion on my part. I would therefore move, if unanimous consent is given, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that:

This House requests the Governor-in-Council, acting under the provisions of Section 24 of the Anti-inflation Act, to vary his order pursuant to Section 22 to include reasons for the decision to allow an intelligent consideration of the question of appeal procedure and to delay the operation of the order until appeal procedures have been published.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED FREEZE PENDING ACTION ON REVIEW BOARD STUDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the findings of a study commissioned by the Food Prices Review Board that Canadians are paying from 4 to 7 per cent too much for food because of declining competition and corporate concentration in the retail food business. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urge the government to impose an immediate freeze on the retail price of food until it has time to take permanent action based upon the findings of the study.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST THAT CHAIRMAN AND ADMINISTRATOR EXPLAIN DECISION IN IRVING CASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an extremely urgent matter requiring our immediate attention.

As the recent decision of the Anti-Inflation Board, condemning the Irving Company to a $125,000 fine for having wanted to share its profits with its employees by increasing their salaries, is immoral, repugnant and unacceptable; as that ruling will allow companies to increase their profits without sharing them with their employees under the pretext that they will be fined for so doing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

Anti-Inflation Board

That this House order the chairman and administrator of the Anti-Inflation Board to appear before it or one of its standing committees to justify their decision in the case of the Irving company which decision is an insult to all Canadian workers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

AIR CANADA

SUGGESTED IMPLEMENTATION OF ESTEY REPORT AND APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. Considering the many weeks since the report of Chief Justice Estey regarding Air Canada was tabled, reflecting upon the many weeks since the resignation of the chief executive officer of Air Canada, and remembering that the last annual report of Air Canada which members of parliament have been able to peruse and question in committee with Air Canada officials was for the year 1972, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the Minister of Transport cease acting like the Prime Minister's pet rock and instead bring forth legislation to implement at least some of the recommendations of the Estey report and expedite the immediate appointment of an executive officer to take responsibility for Air Canada, and that the standard or criterion not be one of language, religion, or any other consideration save capability for the task.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR STUDY AND ACTION BY BOARD ON FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD STUDY OF FOOD PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43. It has to do with the report of the Food Prices Review Board which shows that Canadians are paying anywhere from 4 per cent to much more for food because of concentration and lack of competition in the retail food industry. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

[Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve).]

That this House call upon the Anti-Inflation Board to immediately examine the findings of a report commissioned by the Food Prices Review Board into concentration and the lack of competition in the retail food industry, and the report conclusion that this lack of competition results in food prices that are anywhere from 4 per cent to 7 per cent too high, and further, that if these findings are substantiated, the supermarkets be directed to roll back prices forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS CONCERNING COMMITMENTS UNDER CROP INSURANCE LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on an important matter to the agricultural industry in Canada. In view of the statement of the President of the Treasury Board in December, 1975 that there would be a $10.1 million reduction in federal contributions to crop insurance, and according to provincial agreements neither side can unilaterally change its contribution to the program without having given five year's notice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker):

That this House request that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Agriculture be called before the Standing Committee on Agriculture immediately, the former to be questioned as to this statement, and the latter as to his commitments under existing crop insurance legislation, and to explain their positions.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RECOGNITION OF THIRTY-FIVE YEARS OF SERVICE BY ASSISTANT DEPUTY SERGEANT-AT-ARMS

Mr. Speaker: I know all hon. members will join me in taking a moment before beginning the oral question period. I wish to call to the attention of all hon. members that this afternoon the Mace was carried into the chamber by the Assistant Deputy Sergeant-At-Arms who celebrates 35 years of service to the House of Commons and who is retiring on this day after that rather splendid and outstanding record. Mr. Jean-Gaston Angrignon is in this chamber at the moment, and I know all members would like to recognize that fact.

REQUEST FOR APPEAL PROCEDURE WHICH WOULD NOT NECESSITATE INDICATION OF UNWILLINGNESS TO COMPLY WITH BOARD ORDER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the apparent situation that no appeal can be launched against a ruling of the Anti-Inflation Board unless that party risks the defiance of a ruling of the board or the administrator. In order to preserve something like a traditional approach to law, and therefore necessary respect for the program itself, is the government by amendment, administrative order or some other way prepared to assure the right of a direct appeal of board rulings without the necessity of a party defying the board before such an appeal can be launched?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board has made it clear that in a situation where the board arrives at an opinion with respect to either a price or a compensation settlement, the opinion being that they would exceed the guidelines, and the parties indicate that it would not be their intention to abide by that opinion, the chairman of the board would make an early reference of that matter to the administrator for the purpose of the administrator's determination. Of course, the decision of the administrator in that regard can, if any affected party wishes, be appealed through the procedure laid down by the Act.

Mr. Stanfield: Why is it necessary for the government, through the board, to encourage parties to a collective agreement, for example, to indicate they are not going to comply with the board ruling before they can appeal to a higher authority? In what way does it encourage support for the program, and for what reason is it necessary for a party to a dispute to indicate defiance or refusal to accept a ruling of the board before an appeal can be launched?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. gentleman has it exactly the opposite way around. The encouragement on the part of the government, the Anti-Inflation Board and I hope on the part of all right thinking Canadians is that the guidelines which have been set out should be complied with, and that therefore where parties have submitted to the board either a price change or a compensation decision upon which the board has rendered a decision, the emphasis is that the parties should comply rather than the opposite.

Mr. Stanfield: Why in this democracy in the year 1976 is it not possible for a party in a dispute to appeal a ruling without indicating that the ruling is unacceptable and will not be complied with? The Minister of Finance indicates that it is only where a party to a dispute or both parties to a settlement indicate they will not comply with the board's ruling that such a matter will be referred by the Anti-Inflation Board. In what sense is that position necessary? In what sense does that help fight inflation in this country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I indicated, if a party does not agree with a decision of the board, then the board will refer the matter for the decision of the administrator. This does not necessarily indicate non-compliance on the part of the parties. Just to put it in the context of the normal judicial procedure, parties who are satisfied with the outcome of litigation normally do not appeal.

REQUEST THAT REASONS BE GIVEN WHEN DECISION RENDERED

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In light of the fact that the ultimate appeal is to the federal court, which under the provisions of section 28 can review a decision on the basis that there has been a failure to observe a principle of natural justice or that there has been an erroneous finding of fact, will the government arrange to call in its former civil servants who are temporarily acting as the administrator and as the appeal tribunal to the Anti-Inflation Board and the administrator's decision and advise them about the facts of life and the necessity of giving reasons for judgment when a decision is made?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the act has provided for procedure whereby there is the Anti-Inflation Board, the administrator and the appeals tribunal, and in due course appeals can be taken from their particular decisions, if a party wishes, to the federal court. It seems to me that parliament having made that provision, it would be entirely reasonable for the parties appointed pursuant to the statute to carry out their responsibilities without the intervention of myself as the minister.

Mr. Baldwin: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister during the course of his answer, may be able to explain how you can appeal judgment unless you know the reasons for the decision. In any event, will the minister, in terms of section 17(3) of the Act, at least make a report to this House, get the report from the administrator and give it to the House indicating the basis of the rationale of the decision, why it was made, the circumstances under which it was made so that those people affected and this House will know instead of this decision being made in secret?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that report was tabled on Friday.

Mr. Baldwin: Oh, nonsense. There were no reasons in it.

DECISION IN IRVING PAPER CASE—REQUEST UNION BE GRANTED RIGHT OF APPEAL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the order of the administrator reduces the terms of the collective bargaining agreement from 23.8 per cent to 14 per cent as of May 1, 1975 and in view of the fact that the said decision adversely affects the workers of that company who are signatories to the agreement, and since under section 30 of the Anti-Inflation

Act any person against whom an order has been made by the administrator has right of appeal, I want to ask the minister first of all if he is certain that the union in this case has no right of appeal? I would think under section 30 they have that right of appeal since they are adversely affected. If they have not, however, is the minister prepared by administrative order or the introduction of legislation to give those who are affected by the decision of the administrator, the right to appeal to the appeal tribunal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is asking me for a legal opinion in the first instance. If its turns out that a person affected by a particular order does not have the right of further recourse, then of course every attention would be given to possible amendment in that regard.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that this right of appeal which the government spoke of so glowingly when the legislation was going through the House, is increasingly becoming a farce since the person aggrieved cannot appeal to the administrator except with the consent of the Anti-Inflation Board or the government, and now cannot appeal the decision of the administrator to the appeal board and since they cannot take the matter to the federal courts unless they have been before the appeal tribunal, has the time not come for the minister to introduce legislation immediately to give any person who is affected by a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board the right to go directly to the appeal tribunal and, if not satisfied, to go directly to the courts?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied that the hon. gentleman's two presumptions are accurate and it therefore seems to me that his questions are premature.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, if I have not got the facts straight I would certainly be glad to be enlightened. The minister has not been good at that in the past. It may be that I am not very bright or it may be that the minister is trying to evade giving an answer. I want to ask the minister if he is prepared either to state the intent of the legislation or to clarify the legislation so that any employer or group of employees may have the right to take a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to the appeal tribunal without being denied access to the administrator except by order of the Anti-Inflation Board or cabinet?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, he is not asking for a statement of the facts; he is asking for a legal interpretation of the law which has been passed by parliament. I would suggest to him that the law speaks for itself. It would be for the appropriate legal process to determine the application of it.

Mr. Baldwin: I agree with Dickens: "the law is a ass" in this case.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Why did you vote for it?

Mr. Baldwin: I did not vote for it.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBILITY OF COMPLETING ORGANIZATION OF TWO OFFICES IN ROBERVAL CONSTITUENCY

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the President of the Treasury Board are absent, I shall direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

After the statement of the Treasury Board concerning the opening of two income tax offices in Arvida and Shawinigan, which represent total investments of more than $15 million to accommodate some 1,300 civil servants for the Income Tax Branch, does not the minister think it would be more urgent to complete the organization of the two unemployment insurance offices in the constituency of Roberval promised since the beginning of the year to give justice to the unemployed, which would better comply with the anti-inflation legislation?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will pass these suggestions along to the minister. Perhaps I should add this: the decentralization of the income tax office is part of the general policy with which I thought my hon. friend would agree.

FOOD PRICES

STUDY INDICATING EXCESSIVE MARK-UPS—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and arises from the assurance he gave the House on November 7, as reported on page 8951 of Hansard, to the effect that the Anti-Inflation Board would be examining, "the gross profit margin" of companies and determining if there are unreasonable mark-ups in food prices. My question is prompted by the news today that a study commissioned by the Food Prices Review Board shows excessive mark-up in food prices ranging from 4 per cent in eastern Canada to 7 per cent in the west resulting from what the study calls lack of competition, and concentration. What does the minister propose to do about this situation which seems to be seriously undermining the government's entire anti-inflation program?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raised several points. The Anti-Inflation Board, obviously, will pay close attention to the immediate impact of the matter, particularly in light of returns anticipated from a number of these companies by about the end of this month. The returns will be submitted for the purpose of determining their gross profit margins.

To affect, in the long run, competition not only in this area but, indeed, in all areas of Canadian business, the government will bring forward at an early date the second stage of the competition policy for the purpose of ensuring better competition for Canadian consumers in the Canadian market. I hope the hon. gentleman and his colleagues will support these important changes to Canadian competition law.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the predictions of the vice chairman of the Food Prices Review Board in January that food prices would continue to rise, especially after supermarkets lifted their voluntary freeze of food prices, which we are experiencing now, may I ask the minister what steps the Anti-Inflation Board has taken to establish clearly to the people of this country that it is doing something to restrain prices, especially food prices? I ask this as it is apparent that this is not being done and as such lack of action is affecting seriously the government's attempt to attack inflation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I point out that the freeze itself, which has been operative for several months, is the first evidence of the impact of the board on pricing in the food distribution sector. There will be variations in prices as the winter goes on because of the importation of fresh fruits and vegetables to Canada. Really, there is little opportunity to avoid variation especially in such commodities, and such variations may occur from time to time.

In general terms, to respond to a point raised in the previous question, the gross profit margins of these firms will be under close scrutiny by the board, particularly after the filings which are expected at the end of this month.

ENERGY

GASOLINE—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION SETTING MILEAGE STANDARDS FOR AUTOMOBILES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Bearing in mind that the United States has already enacted legislation in the field of energy, the announcement that gasoline prices are to rise next summer and the need for us all to be energy conscious, does the minister intend to introduce legislation during this session, to provide for greater efficiency in automobiles and light trucks?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we intend to introduce some mandatory measures.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the legislation contain penalties, to induce automobile manufacturers to produce more efficient vehicles, or is it intended to implement the legislation by way of taxes on the public, which must buy these cars, even though they may be less efficient?

● (1430)

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the measures will deal with new gas mileage standards. They will be aimed at increasing, on a fleet average, the gas mileage standards by 1980. The second period will be 1985. Those measures will be comparable to those introduced by the United States. Therefore, it should not in any way penalize Canadian manufacturers and their workers.

COW-CALF STABILIZATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ALBERTA PROPOSAL—POSSIBLE DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, might I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In as much as the minister has indicated on a number of occasions that he will be initiating a specific stabilization program for beef in the calendar year 1976, what action is his department and the government taking with regard to the proposal advanced by the minister of agriculture of the government of Alberta specifically outlining a cow-calf stabilization program of which the costs would be shared 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the provinces?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that proposal was submitted several weeks ago, actually before Christmas. As I said before in this House, there is an ongoing committee of provincial deputy ministers and officials in Ottawa. They have not as yet come to a conclusion.

Mr. Mazankowski: Instead of the minister's continual evasiveness and procrastination, will he tell the House whether in fact he will initiate any kind of program specifically for the cow-calf producers of this country—yes, or no?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I said we would have a program for the calendar year 1976, from January to the end of December, for beef.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR ALTERNATIVE FACILITIES IN VIEW OF HOSPITAL CLOSINGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the anguish, fear and dismay caused by the proposed closing of several hospitals, particularly in rural areas, I would like to ask the minister if health care centres or other facilities are being planned to look after those needing care and, also, if any provisions are being made to look after the approximately 5,000 people who will be unemployed.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly understand the concern expressed by the hon. member. However, as he well knows, the administration of health services is the exclusive responsibility of the provincial governments. I might advise the hon. member that discussions are underway with the provinces in order to try to develop lower cost alternatives to hospital care in the various provinces so that Canadians will all be well covered with regard to the care they need at a price the country can afford. These discussions are under way. As I said, in a previous reply, my officials will be meeting with provincial officials in March. I hope to then be in a position to call a federal-provincial conference of health ministers in April.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTRACT FOR LONG-RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS FOR COMPLETION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he will be making a statement on motions today or tomorrow to explain his complete reversal of position on the long-range patrol aircraft contract?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not be making a statement. There has been no reversal of our position.

Mr. McKinnon: Is the minister seizing upon the difficulties of Lockheed to enable the government to back out of a contract under which the government found, to their surprise, that they were expected to pay part of the production costs for the planes they were buying? With respect to the reply of the Minister of Supply and Services last week that the technical problems concerned long-term financing, is it not closer to the truth that the technical problems are actually short-term financing and that it is the Canadian government and not Lockheed that is unwilling and unable to put up the front-end money?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, at this stage it is the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services as the purchasing agent for the government and National Defence, to complete the negotiations and contract with Lockheed. Those negotiations have been made more difficult as a result of the difficulties Lockheed has experienced in recent days and weeks.

HEALTH

CLOSING OF HOSPITALS—SUGGESTED CONSULTATIONS WITH ADMINISTRATORS AND STAFF

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is supplementary to that asked by my colleague from Simcoe North. In these discussions he mentioned provincial authorities. With regard to the more efficient use of health delivery facilities, is he prepared to take into consultation not only the provincial authorities, the administrators, who are the same people as he has, but also senior nursing staff and doctors working in hospitals, and not necessarily only the doctors who put people in hospitals?

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the provinces would look very dimly upon any attempt by me to go behind their backs directly to hospital administrators.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the minister misunderstood. I asked that these people be included along with the provincial authorities so that some actual experience on how to efficiently run hospitals could be obtained right in the field.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have had over the years several meetings with the official representatives of these professional bodies, the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Hospital Association and the Canadian Nursing Association. In addition, I do not think the provinces would very much like the hon. member's comment that they do not know how to run these institutions.

STUDY INDICATING EXCESSIVE MARK-UPS—REQUEST FOR ACTION—POSSIBILITY OF PRICE FREEZE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the report of some 170 pages being prepared by Dr. Mallen for the Food Prices Review Board, the fact that the prime finding of the report is that there is a very high correlation between corporate concentration in retail food stores and excess profits, and earmarks where the excess profits are, what immediate steps will the minister be taking to eliminate those excess prices and profits in those specific markets?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already responded to that question from the hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the fact the minister sloughed this off to the Anti-Inflation Board, will he now advise whether the government is considering imposing an immediate price freeze on retail food prices until they have time to evaluate this report and bring in any legislation the report might recommend?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, parliament set up an agency to deal with prices in Canada. It makes some sense to deal through that agency.

CANCELLATION OF FLIGHTS FROM MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the House as to how many and why so many Air Canada flights have been cancelled out of Montreal today?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can indicate that when the flights should have started this morning, some ramp employees of Air Canada were not present. The matter is being investigated. I do not have a report or explanation at this time.

POSSIBILITY REFINERY AT COME-BY-CHANCE WILL CLOSE—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ENSURE CONTINUED OPERATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister made inquiries into the future status of the refinery at Come-By-Chance in Newfoundland and can he tell us whether, given the 400 jobs and the 100,000 barrels a day in output which are involved here, the government has any plans, through Petro-Can or whatever, to ensure the continued operation of this facility?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the difficulties at the Come-By-Chance refinery at the present time. I am also aware that Petro-Canada has made it their business to find out what is the problem. I cannot say more than that at the present time.

Mr. MacKay: Can the minister tell us what the effect will be on the supply situation in eastern Canada should this facility close?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MINISTER'S VIEW ON EFFECT OF PRODUCTION CONTROL PROGRAMS

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact Secretary Butz has made it quite clear that any country which advocates and promotes a controlled production concept will ultimately destroy its ability to compete on world markets as well as destroy man's ability, desire and initiative to produce, will the minister inform the House whether he agrees with Secretary Butz?

● (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I saw the same program, Mr. Speaker. I asked Secretary Butz last year whether he was proposing control measures. He did say on that program that he had intervened several times in marketing arrangements in his own country and that he would continue to do so as long as he was Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Hurlburt: Would the hon. gentleman assure us that he will acquire a transcript of the production for a showing in the Railway Committee Room and invite all Members of Parliament to review this outstanding film.

PENITENTIARIES

MAXIMUM SECURITY PSYCHIATRIC INSTITUTIONS—STATUS OF INSTITUTION PROPOSED FOR DARTMOUTH

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Solicitor General or the Minister of Public Works. It has to do with the program for the construction of maximum security psychiatric institutions in various regions of Canada. With regard to the program apparently selected for Dartmouth in Nova Scotia, I should like to ask whether its status is such that consultations have now taken place with the Province of Nova Scotia and city officials in Dartmouth with respect to the location of the institution.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): I will take notice of that question, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PARKS

STUDY OF FEE SCHEDULE—REQUEST FOR REPORT AND CONSULTATION WITH INTERESTED GROUPS

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In his absence, I will direct it to the parliamentary secretary. When can the House expect to receive the results of the study promised by the minister into the effects of last year's alterations in the fee structure relating to the national parks?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I do not have a direct answer for the hon. member but I am sure the minister will be able to give him a precise date very shortly.

Mr. Johnston: Can the hon. lady tell us whether the minister is now prepared to discuss the results of the study and any proposed change in the fee structure with operators of businesses in the parks, interested groups and individuals who have made representations to him, before any new fee schedule is announced?

Mrs. Campagnolo: The minister has made it clear that he is willing to consult with such people and he has already done so in some cases.

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCTION IN PERSONAL INCOME TAXES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the government's stated intent to hold down increases in its expenditure to approximately 14 per cent in 1976 as opposed to 23 per cent in 1975 and 28 per cent the year before, is it the intention to decrease personal income taxes this year as part of the fight against inflation while at the same time stimulating the private sector of the economy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman will recognize on reflection that he is asking for the kind of statement about fiscal intentions which is normally made in the budget.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

POSSIBLE UNIFICATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AND MANPOWER OFFICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): One supplementary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration having to do with the curtailment of expenditure. As part of its stated program aimed at reducing expenditure, has the government considered unifying the services provided by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and Canada Manpower? If so, when can we expect such an integration to take place?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): This possibility, along with other options with regard to amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act is before us now. I cannot give a definite answer as to whether, or when, such a change will be made. But we are seriously considering the suggestion.

AIR CANADA

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport when the government intends to announce the appointment of the Chief Executive Officer and other officials at the head of Air Canada? Will the announcement be made this week or in the very near future? Can he give us a definite indication of the date?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): A meeting of the Board of Directors of Air Canada is taking place today and I expect to discuss this important question with the board. It may be that after the meeting I shall know more about the exact timing of any announcement.

Mr. Murta: Will the announcement be made in Montreal or Ottawa? If it is to be made in Ottawa would he be prepared to make the annnouncement in the House?

Mr. Lang: The location will depend to a large extent on the timing. I will consider the hon. member's suggestion—whether it can be made in the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY IVAN HEAD CONTRIBUTED TO SOLVING DIFFICULTIES BETWEEN ANGOLA AND SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell the House whether the Prime Minister's special representative, Mr. Ivan Head, was able on his recent trip to Europe to make a contribution to a resolution of the difficulties between the MPLA and South Africa resulting from the occupation of certain Angolan territories by South African military forces?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would not think so, because that was not the purpose of his journey.

ANGOLA—POSSIBILITY OF RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): On Friday last, the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont asked the parliamentary secretary a question having to do with the recognition of the people's republic of Angola. Events have moved since that date and I wonder if the minister could now tell us whether conditions have reached the point at which serious consideration is being given to such recognition.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not concluded that recognition ought to be extended at this time. The matter is under consideration.

MANPOWER

POSSIBILITY NUMBER OF ADULT TRAINING COURSES WILL BE INCREASED

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration which I gave him notice of last week.

Considering the increasing number of applications at manpower centres for adult training and the growing need for minimal requirements to meet the needs of the labour market, could the minister tell the House whether he is prepared to offer more adult courses next year?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The amount of money allocated to adult training over the last two years has increased very considerably. I would refer the hon. member to the very substantial increase effected in the budget of June of last year. There was, it is true, a modification—some expenditure cuts—in December, but it still adds up to a very significant allocation of resources. I doubt very much that we shall see additional funds made available during the financial year 1976-77, desirable though that might be in certain respects.

ENERGY

OIL—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO INCREASE EXPLORATION—LEVEL OF PRICE INCREASE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Surveys of the oil industry indicate that for the sixth successive year Canada will experience a deficit in conventional crude oil supplies, that is, production will exceed findings. Will the government be presenting any new plans to forthcoming meetings with the provinces designed to bring about increased activity in the exploration field?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We shall be reviewing a number of measures including the question of raising the price of oil by July 1 of this year. Incidental to that, of course, would be a larger share to the producer for the purpose of increasing exploration and development in Canada.

Mr. Ritchie: Will the government be pressing to raise the price of oil to world levels on July 1?

Mr. Gillespie: We have always made clear that it is government policy to raise the price toward world levels. I do not want the hon. member to understand that it is proposed to do so in one step. My predecessor and I have always made it clear that we shall be moving toward world levels in a series of measured steps.

MILK—REDUCTION IN PRODUCTION AND PROVINCIAL QUOTAS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture? It arises from the critical situation in which the dairy industry in Manitoba now finds itself, and the minister's past statements that because of present surpluses, milk production will have to be reduced and that no increase in financial subsidies will be considered. Will the minister indicate whether at the time marketing shares for each province are being established those provinces that have not met their present marketing share will not be asked to accept further reductions?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the marketing share quota committee operates with very little, if any, interference at all from the Minister of Agriculture. They are the ones who decide among themselves how they will share the quota.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF APPEAL PROCEDURE IN IRVING CASE

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Last Friday, the minister announced to the House the important decision to impose to the Irving Pulp and Paper Company a fine of $125,000 for refusing to meet the requirements of the Anti-Inflation Board. However, the procedure the Irving Pulp and Paper Company should follow to appeal that decision has not been clarified or indicated clearly. Since this important case will establish a precedent in that area, can the minister now inform the House of the nature of this procedure and indicate at the same time what new developments have taken place?

[English]

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I believe the Minister of Finance has gone into that very thoroughly. This is a question of following the procedures outlined in the act, and I do not think it would be appropriate for me, as a lawyer or as the minister, to tell him what procedure should be followed.

RADIOACTIVE WASTE DISPOSAL SITES IN OTTAWA AREA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it arises from questions I asked last week in respect of radioactive substances in the national capital area. At that time the minister indicated he would be able to make a report on the location of those sites and the disposal involved. Has the minister had a chance to look into that matter and can he give us a report today?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the matter and have been discussing with my department the list of various locations in the Ottawa region, as well as other areas in the province of Ontario, and I hope to be able to make that list public toward the end of this week.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for that answer. When he is making that list public, will he at the same time be making a statement in respect of the disposal of the material, the methods to be used, the criteria to be followed and other matters that are important on this question?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I will see that this particular aspect of the question is covered.

POSSIBLE UNIFICATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AND MANPOWER OFFICES

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Manpower and Immigration at long last inform us whether he will be announcing this year that the offices of Canada manpower and unemployment insurance will be amalgamated so there can be better coordination between those who know where the jobs are and those who are unemployed?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I made a comment on almost an identical question asked by the hon. member's colleague just a few minutes ago.

Oral Questions

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO IMPROVE NATIVE AND RURAL HOUSING PROGRAM—NATIVE REPRESENTATION AT VANCOUVER HABITAT CONFERENCE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs whether he can report to the House on what plans the corporation might have to accelerate the native and rural housing program implemented two years ago which to date has achieved less than one per cent of its target?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member gets his figures, but two years ago the figure of starts in that whole area was something like 42. I recall indicating to hon. members how much of an effort it was to get the program started. The most recent figures I have are 3500, and if we maintain this level of acceleration of activity I think we will be doing a great deal along the line of reaching our target. I have been meeting with the native people just this past week. This has a high priority in my ministry and in CMHC. We are working well with the native people. It has been much slower getting going than we expected, but I think with that rate of acceleration we are making good progress. We are running into problems of administration but those are better than problems of frustration.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the figures I have quoted in the House of 50,000 homes come from a report from the minister's own department. The houses that have been started and achieved to date are 410. I should like to ask the minister if it is his intention, and the intention of his department, to allow native people to establish a presence during the Habitat conference at Vancouver since it only takes a 15 by 20 piece of property to demonstrate a native housing unit in Canada?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, which is really not a question, certainly I do not know what part of the program he is referring to, but the total impact is on 3500 housing units. In so far as Habitat is concerned, the native people will be represented in the Canadian delegation.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASES IN FUNDING

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and is in reference to media reports over the weekend regarding statements allegedly made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the future of LIP funding. May I ask the hon. minister how soon he may be in a position to announce further LIP funding because of the high unemployment rate, especially in the Atlantic provinces, and with particular reference to Cape Breton Island where it is now in excess of 25 per cent?

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can hold out no hopes to the hon. member for increases in the allocation of $100 million that is committed for 1976-77. I have indicated to the House, and confirm again, that this is a slight reduction in the allocation from $135 million. There will be an increasing shift of these funds to the high unemployment areas. This may be at the expense of lower unemployment rated constituencies, but the figure is to remain at $100 million on the basis of the information I have as of today.

FINANCE

REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLAN—REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO PROVIDE GREATER FLEXIBILITY

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. This is the time of year when many Canadians are examining registered retirement savings plans, and my question concerns the rule that requires a life annuity to be purchased before the 71st birthday, often resulting in no increase in cash income over the interest that could be earned on existing investments, resulting in the depletion of the estate on death and leaving the unused capital in the hands of the insurance companies. Will the minister give consideration to amendments which would permit registered retirement savings plans to retain existing investments and to be depleted at will, providing of course that the amounts taken out would be included in income in the year of receipt, in order to provide greater flexibility and to remove inequities that exist at the moment?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the operation of this particular program has been under scrutiny. Of course, any change of that kind involving a change in fiscal status would very likely have to be made in the context of a budget.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSIONS FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR—REASON FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact it would cost only about $9 million a year to provide the pensions for prisoners of war recommended in the Seventh Report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, and in view of the fact that the government has spent sums many times that size, in quite a few cases, since the restraint program was brought in last October, would the Minister of Veterans Affairs give us the assurance that it is not a problem of finding $9 million that is delaying action on this report regarding POW legislation?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as far as the question is concerned, when I finally have the conclusions of the government I will bring them before the House and the hon. member will be aware of them at that time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will that be this week?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON SENDING POWDERED MILK AND LUMBER TO AID EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding Guatemala. Can the minister clarify the situation regarding the sending of 100 tons of powdered milk to Guatemala, and whether there is evidence that this milk is filling the nutritional needs of that country? Secondly, can the minister indicate whether Canada will augment this by sending lumber and galvanized tin for the construction of dwellings before the rainy season starts in that country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have a long report from our representative in Guatemala indicating the background of the request for supplies of powdered milk. The requirement for powdered milk was developed in consultation with authorities in Guatemala and in consultation with nutritional authorities. Without going into all the details at the present time, there is a continuing need for powdered milk as an important element in the diet of the population of Guatemala. Continuing requests are being made for powdered milk for rural areas, for orphanages and particularly for nursing mothers.

Mr. Roche: I have one supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister did not answer the second part of my question concerning the sending of lumber this leads to my supplementary. I should like to ask him whether or not the Canadian government would support the 14 principal non-government organizations that are going to launch a $2 million campaign for long-term application in Guatemala and whether the government would match that $2 million with $2 million to make a total of $4 million available by Canada for long-range application in Guatemala.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the second part of the first question, as yet there has been no request from the Government of Guatemala to provide building materials, although I understand the Government of Guatemala is attempting to define, in co-operation with the United Nations, its immediate and future requirements so that an international request can be made upon a more defined inventory of needs and we will obviously co-operate with that.

I have stated already in the House that we would be prepared to readjust our own development program in Guatemala to co-operate in the rehabilitation of that country on a short-term and long-term basis. In other words, we will restructure our whole aid program to reach that objective and will consider co-operating with the NGO's.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ADJOURN FROM 5 P.M. FEBRUARY 19 UNTIL 2 P.M. FEBRUARY 23

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That this House shall adjourn at 5.00 p.m. on Thursday, February 19, 1976, and shall thereupon stand adjourned until Monday, February 23, 1976, at 2.00 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion at this time has been presented, with due notice. It is a debatable motion. I see the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) wishes to participate in the debate. Simply in order to maintain the regularity of the proceedings, I wonder if we might conclude the routine proceedings and then revert to motions in order to debate this particular motion. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

DECISION OF ADMINISTRATION RESPECTING IRVING PULP AND PAPER DISPUTE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) the adjournment of the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 26, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the state reached in the collective bargaining process as signified by the decision of the Anti-Inflation Act administrator in the Irving Pulp and Paper dispute. An agency created by the federal parliament and, accordingly, responsible to that parliament, has become involved in the normal course of the collective bargaining process, but has provided a right to appeal only to the employer and not to the union, as signified by the Irving case. This is creating an inequitable situation which has prolonged the resolution of the strike in the Canadian pulp and paper industry and portends the total breakdown of free collective bargaining throughout the economy, with consequent labour unrest and social dislocations. Therefore, there is an immediate need to debate the decision of the administrator and the process whereby that decision was made.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The popularity of this subject has been evidenced not only by repeated applications pursuant to Standing Order 26 but, in addition, through numerous questions raised during the question periods that have taken place during the currency of this strike which is now of some six months' duration. Today's question period, of course, was no exception because representatives of all opposition parties put questions. In the past, questions have been put by representatives on the government side. So there can be no doubt about the importance of this strike and its very wide-ranging effect, as well as the desirability that this House might address itself to the problem.

However, there are two or three continuing questions, not the least of which is that it is a strike in the private sector, as I indicated the first time it was raised. I indicated last Wednesday that there was some trouble with the question of jurisdiction. May I say to all hon. members that there can no longer be any trouble with the problem of jurisdiction. The strike existed prior to the introduction of federal controls in respect of wages and prices. However, the operation of the statute, the operation of the Anti-Inflation Board, and the decision now of the administrator, clearly establish a connection with this parliament vis-à-vis this particular strike which otherwise would in no way come under the jurisdiction of this parliament. Therefore, the jurisdictional question can be laid to rest now.

That, however, does not eliminate all the problems facing the Chair. One is, that with repeated applications under this Standing Order, it would appear that continued rejections by the Chair begin to draw the Chair into taking sides in the merits of the dispute, which is certainly not what I want to do and, I hope, is certainly not seen in that light by hon. members. The fact is that last week, when the matter was raised, I indicated that the administrator, pursuant to the legislation, was in the course of commencing his duties as envisaged by that legislation. If it was the case that he had been derelict in those duties and had not investigated the situation, or had failed to act or failed to come to a decision which was precipitating a work stoppage, that might be one side of the coin. The fact of the matter is that at that time I refused an application for an emergency debate because the administrator was just beginning his examination of this situation.

In the interval, it is obvious—as is contained in the notice of motion of the hon. member—that the administrator has completed his work and has made his decision. That is the normal function of the administrator as envisaged in the legislation which was, of course, passed by this House a short time ago. I could scarcely hold that the normal operation of the administrator within the intent of that legislation could be constituted as an emergency which should precipitate a debate. Whether that has an effect on the collective bargaining system generally, surely must have been envisaged in the legislation, and if it is a matter of general concern about the collective bargaining system and its welfare that, again, might be a proper subject for discussion on an allotted day. But if there is a situation in the Irving case and its example to the rest of the nation, one of the difficulties is that the workers are at work in the Irving company, and if the rest of the nation were to follow that example, presumably anything but a continuing difficulty would exist and other strikes might be settled—I do not know.

The fact is that I can scarcely consider the Irving example as an emergency, nor can I say that the administrator does not appear to be fulfilling his duties within the terms of the legislation as envisaged. If I were to extend the precedent pursuant to Standing Order 26 every time an administrator, pursuant to this legislation, comes down with a decision one way or the other, or is called upon to intervene and make a decision, this place might be looked upon as a court of appeal against his decision. If I were to accept that example of the effect of the administrator's decision in the Irving case, how could I refuse it in a number of other cases in which the administrator might be involved in the near future? I do not think I could: it seems to me it would be extending the precedent too greatly.

On the other hand, again I say that if through the days that follow there is a continuing work stoppage in other areas of this industry, and if in fact there is some breakdown of the understanding of the legislation, or it fails to operate, that might be a cause for reapplication. But the fact of the matter is that the administrator has functioned as envisaged in the legislation, he was put in place as the legislation envisaged, and he appears to have acted, and acted quickly. The workers in the Irving case are at work; the plant is operating. Unless there is some dereliction of duty, a breakdown in the functioning of the legislation, or some work stoppage to which the House could address itself that is clearly important, it would seem to me at the moment the legislation is functioning as was envisaged by this parliament when it was passed a short time ago and, therefore, for the moment at least I ought not to grant a emergency debate.

I again say that I regret the fact that repeated applications under this rule are beginning to draw the Chair into the position of taking sides in the issue. I have tried very hard not to do that and to simply decide whether there are some grounds, with reasonable precedent, upon which I ought to set aside the regular business of the House in order to precipitate a debate pursuant to Standing Order 26. However, as long as the legislation is functioning as it was envisaged when it was passed by the House a short time ago, I fear that, without stretching precedents beyond all control, I cannot consider such a debate at this time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,581, 3,757, 3,762, 3,782, 3,811, 3,814, 3,820, 3,898, 3,904, 3,916 and 3,936.

AIR FARES

Question No. 3,581—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the total amount paid in air fares in each of the past three years for which figures are available by the Department of External Affairs to (a) Air Canada (b) CP Air (c) other airlines including their identity and the specific amounts paid in each case?

2. What is the name and job designation of every official in the Department who decides which airlines will be used and on what basis are such decisions made?

3. Has any person in the Department ever been offered any fee, present, reward or inducement of any kind by an airline before or following business placed with that airline and, if so (a) what is the name of the airline (b) what are the names of the persons receiving such offers?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The information requested is not recorded in a manner which would facilitate reply. Expenditures for airfares are, in most instances, recorded under the names of the employee(s) receiving the services, not by specific airline. A definitive response would require a review of approximately 9,000 files and almost 60,000 travel claims in addition to an analysis of some 4,200 Post Financial returns. It is estimated this would require some 1,200 man days at a cost of approximately $50,000.

2. It is not in the tradition of a non-political public service to disclose names of officials who perform tasks in the course of their public duty. Travel arrangements are made in Ottawa by a number of clerks, most of whom are rotational employees, and at posts abroad by administrative. Clerks and officers, either on foreign assignment or locally engaged. Foreign Travel and Removal Service is responsible for travel. The section is part of the Staff Relations and Compensation Division. Whenever practical, Canadian airlines are used. However, the services of all airlines are utilized, as needed, when Canadian airlines are unable to provide the services or reservations required.

3. Like any large organization whose members are involved in a substantial amount of travelling, the Department is the recipient of occasional offers of various kinds from airlines in the context of their promotional activities. Records of such offers are not kept. In keeping with Government and Departmental policies, employees are not permitted to accept fees, presents, rewards or inducements offered by airlines for the purpose of acquiring Departmental business.

TOTAL COST OF ADVERTISING MADE NECESSARY AS A RESULT OF POSTAL STRIKE

Question No. 3,757—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total amount of public funds spent by all departments for extra advertising made necessary directly or indirectly as a result of the recent postal strike?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): $329,702.42.

BUDGET AND EXPENDITURES OF PARKS CANADA

Question No. 3,762—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In 1975, what was the (a) total budget (b) actual expenditures of Parks Canada?

2. What percentage of such expenses were recovered from tolls and fees instituted during the year?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) $143,114,000; (b) $142,485,000*.

* Includes actual expenditures for eight months to November 30, 1975 and four months projected expenditures to March 31, 1976.

2. 8.1 per cent.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—TOW WEAPON SYSTEMS

Question No. 3,782—Mr. McKinnon:

1. (a) How many TOW weapon systems have been purchased by the Armed Forces and are on issue to the troops as of December 1, 1975 (b) what fraction or percentage of the total order for TOW weapon systems does this figure represent?

2. What is the cost of the TOW weapon systems that have been purchased and issued up to December 1, 1975?

3. (a) How many TOW missiles have been purchased by the Armed Forces and are on issue to the troops as of December 1, 1975 (b) what fraction or percentage of the order for TOW missiles does this figure represent?

4. What is the cost of the missiles that have been purchased and issued up to December 1, 1975?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) 149 systems are being purchased. However, none have been issued to the troops as of this date. (b) Not applicable in view of 1(a) above.

2. Total program cost including Launchers, missiles and ancillary items is estimated to be $30,097,000.

3 and 4. See 1 and 2 above.

ACCA PROGRAMME

Question No. 3,811—Mr. Marshall:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,174 regarding the ACCA Programme (a) what were the (i) names (ii) type of firms that applied (b) what was the amount requested (c) what were the results of each such application?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): (a) (i) The Department of National Revenue advises that in accordance with Section 241 of the Income Tax Act, the names of firms submitting ACCA applications may not be released. (ii) The 11 applications were submitted by the petroleum industry. (b) The total amount requested was $88,247. (c) Six applications for $54,893 have been approved; Two applications for $21,926 are under review; Three applications for $11,428 have been withdrawn.

SERVICE COLLEGES—ENTRANCE REQUIREMENTS

Question No. 3,814—Mr. Howie:

Are entrance requirements in terms of scholastic attainment for English and French speaking students uniform for entrance to (a) the Royal Military College, Kingston, Ontario (b) CMR, St. Jean, Quebec and, if not, what is the difference?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The entrance requirement to RMC and 1st year CMR is senior matriculation standing based on provincial secondary school standards. There is no preparatory year at R.M.C., however, entry into CMR for the preparatory year only requires junior matriculation standing based on provincial secondary school standards.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—RECRUITING OF ANGLOPHONES AND FRANCOPHONES

Question No. 3,820—Mr. Jelinek:

1. What was the total amount paid by the Department of National Defence for Armed Forces recruitment ads on French-language television in the Province of Quebec in (a) 1974 (b) 1973 (c) 1972?

2. How many unilingual (a) French (b) English speaking persons entered the Armed Forces in (i) 1974 (ii) 1973 (iii) 1972?

3. How many unilingual (a) French (b) English speaking persons were accepted into the officer training programme in the Armed Forces in (i) 1974 (ii) 1973 (iii) 1972?

4. What was the total number of unilingual French speaking persons in the Armed Forces in (a) 1974 (b) 1973 (c) 1972?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (b) FY1973/74, $177,782. (c) FY 1972/73, Nil.

	(a) Francophones*	(b) Anglophones*
(i) FY 1974/75	2,876	5,773

*NOTE 1: Francophones and Anglophones denotes primarily French and English speaking respectively, not necessarily Unilingual.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MILITARY AND CIVILIAN STRENGTH—DECEMBER 18, 1975

Question No. 3,898—Mr. McKinnon:

What is the (a) military (b) civilian strength of National Defence Headquarters as of December 18, 1975?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Statistical data on strength is compiled at the end of each month and is not readily available for each day of every month. The data given below is as of November 30, 1975. (a) 3,100, (b) 4,169.

DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL HISTORIC PARKS AND SITES IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 3,904—Mr. Marshall:

1. With reference to the speech of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on November 28, 1975, what are the names of the thirty parks and sites to be developed in the Province of Newfoundland?

2. How much remains to be spent out of the future years estimates on the Gros Morne National Park in the Province of Newfoundland?

3. As a result of the government's reduced spending under Indian Affairs what, if any, reductions will affect the development of the Gros Morne National Park and what are the details under Parks—capital $13.5 million and operating costs of $6.4 million and/or other?

4. Where it is feasible, what are the details of the government's plans to introduce low intensity recreational activities at national historic parks and sites?

[Mr. Richardson.]

5. What plans are being made to upgrade and improve the interpretation programmes at the Gros Morne National Park in Newfoundland?

6. Has the government discussed with the Province of Newfoundland a commitment to develop linear land and water systems under the ARC Programme and, if so, what are the details?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. This speech refers to 30 National Historic Parks and Sites which will be developed across Canada within the coming three years. Of these 30 priority sites one, L'Anse aux Meadows, is located in Newfoundland.

2. The following are the proposed 1976-77 capital estimates and 1977-82 capital program forecast for Gros Morne National Park. 1976-77, $2,569,000; 1977-78, $3,754,000; 1978-79, $3,660,000; 1979-80, $2,404,000; 1980-81, $2,264,000; 1981-82, $4,076,000; Total: $18,727,000.

3. The only capital project in Gros Morne National Park affected by the $13.5 million government restraint program is the reconstruction of highway 430. $800,000 was taken out of the 1976-77 estimate year and deferred one year. Of the $6.4 million reduction in operating costs only $34,600 for goods and services was taken out of Gros Morne National Park.

4. Where feasible, it is the intention to increase the visitors enjoyment of our larger National Historic Parks and Sites by introducing various complementary facilities. Such facilities may include picnic areas, nature trails, beaches, interpretive kiosks and period restaurants as in Louisbourg. These low intensity activities will only be permitted where there is no conflict or encroachment upon the historical integrity of the site. It is our belief that the natural features of many of our larger National Historic Parks and Sites are an important part the historical experience which should be enjoyed by the Canadian population. As for L'Anse aux Meadows, paths and visitor circulation will be developed for the viewing of building remains. Picnic facilities are also being recommended because of the isolation of the site.

5. Two significant basic steps have been taken which will help develop and maintain a high quality program at Gros Morne: (a) a Chief Park Interpreter has been hired. (b) an Interpretation plan of the Park has been completed. Currently, the staff of Gros Morne National Park contribute articles to the regional media in order to raise awareness of the Park. This effort will be continued. To supply information and orientation on arrival, a new Visitor Reception Centre is being designed. This new centre will provide significantly improved exhibit and theatre capabilities. Steps have been taken to acquire improved resource material from which high quality programs can be developed. Among these steps are: (i) a Human History bibliography of the Park has been completed. (ii) photographic resources have been enlarged to supply material for exhibits and displays both inside and outside the Park. (iii) two detailed interpretive story area plans will be ready for this summer. This plans will state where and what kind of media will be placed in certain sections of the Park. Several new interpretive facilities and programs have been instituted. These will contribute to the Park experience of many Park users. Among these facilities and programs are: (a) a new car caravan route and brochure are now available. Each visitor stopping for information upon entering the Park will receive the brochure along with other material about the Park. (b) a new exhibit for the Lobster Cove Lighthouse is in the design stage. (c) a new interpretive trail has been established at Lobster Cove. (d) several hiking trails have been extended and will be available for interpretive purposes. Contact with local people through interpretive programs keeps the community informed of Park activities and provided information on a significant community resource. Park personnel are available to visit local organizations and present programs about the Park. In addition, Park staff will, upon invitation make presentations to school children and youth groups to enrich their knowledge of the Park and its story. Gros Morne also hosts many groups who make special arrangements to visit the Park. Several groups such as nature federations and birding groups have already made arrangements to visit the Park this summer.

6. Negotiations have begun with the Province of Newfoundland to determine the potential of the Avalon Peninsula as a corridor under the ARC Program. A joint planning process, including a joint planning team, has been outlined and discussed by both governments. Subject to the approval of the Government of Newfoundland, a joint feasibility study will be undertaken and should be completed within three months.

MOTION TO ADJOURN FROM 5 P.M. FEBRUARY 19 UNTIL 2 P.M. FEBRUARY 23

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with an earlier agreement, the House will revert to motions. The motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), seconded by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), has been put. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) in the debate.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to speak on this motion. As I go through this little talk this afternoon, perhaps we may all gain something from it no matter what side of the House we are on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jones: Very early in life, amongst other things, we are all taught to say at least two words "Yes", and "No". As we grow older we are taught what these words mean, when to say them and when not to say them. This is one reason why nations and governments in this world find themselves in such difficult circumstances. Leaders in all sectors of society have been reluctant to make positive use of the words "Yes" and "No", but have been more concerned in obtaining and retaining office and power.

On Thursday last, in response to a request by Mr. Speaker for unanimous consent to entertain the motion in question, I exercised a right, a right to dissent, a right which any member of this House has. From certain corners there was grave despair. Be that as it may, I have made it clear on several occasions that when unanimous consent is required, if those who are desirous of having the motion passed quickly want my consent, they should at least have the common courtesy to ask me for consent or consult with me. The leader of the party which is holding a leadership convention this weekend, obviously on misinformation and poor advice, forced me to become an independent and abused all Christian and democratic principles to make certain that I be rejected and refused admittance to that party and candidacy for his job. He has been assisted by others in this conspiracy.

An hon. Member: Balderdash!

Mr. Jones: In view of the fact that the real reason this motion has been introduced is to accommodate members of parliament from that party so they can attend and participate in that convention, I could put on record the history of the so called "Jones affair" since May, 1974.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Jones: It is very interesting and would prove to be a real horror story. It points up some of the abuses that can, and are, practised under the political party system in Canada today. It indicates how injustices, inequities and undemocratic procedures can be, and are, followed by the backroom boys and by those at the top echelon of the political party for the sake of keeping control of a political party. But today I am not going to relate to you that story except to say that one can be duly nominated by a constituency association and unduly rejected by a national leader; duly elected by the people, undemocratically rejected by the executive, but endorsed again by the people at the grassroots level.

Political parties in Canada must be for, of, and by the people—all people—people from the base of the triangle or pyramid to the apex; from the grassroots level up; from the first rung in the ladder to the top; from the lowest plain to the highest peak, regardless of their status in life. Yes, political parties must relate to people. If this philosophy and thinking is not followed, then Canadians will continue to be cynical and distrustful of political parties, the party system, governments, parliamentary democracy and the institution of parliament itself.

Leaders of this nation should be preaching and practising productivity and efficiency at home, at work and even at play. Each and every member of parliament would do well to practice productivity and efficiency right in this House. Certainly we should oppose poor legislation, but support good legislation. If we oppose or support legislation, we should say so, say it quickly and get on with the business of this House and with the business and problems of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Simplistic.

Mr. Jones: One serious problem is that the members of this House are kept in the dark with respect to several of the operations of government. Millions of dollars are spent annually and this House has little or no control. This must stop. All political parties must clean up their acts. The people of Canada are awaking from a deep sleep only to find that the democratic institutions established over many years are being eroded and watered down. Parliament must clean up its act, and certainly government has the duty to clean up its act. People must not only become involved in the political process; they must be permitted to share in the party process itself.

Incidentally, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is to be commended for going to British Columbia along with a number of his cabinet ministers. This is an excellent precedent. But I would suggest that trips of this kind should not be conducted when the House is in session. Annual cabinet sessions could very well be held in each province, and every member of parliament from that province, regardless of his political or non-political affiliation, invited to participate and share in the work. A great deal more could be accomplished on this non-partisan basis. I have always felt that full cabinet meetings should be held outside Ottawa occasionally on a regional basis, and I would now suggest that the Prime Minister arrange for such a meeting in Moncton as soon as possible. I would be pleased to assist in any way. This is taking government and parliament to the people. It is a grassroots understanding of these problems.

After I said "No" on Thursday last, one person said, "That wasn't very sporting of you". I smiled, because I never thought that the business of this House should be taken lightheartedly: this is no sporting event or even an athletic happening. It should not be a mutual admiration society—but maybe it is. Like you, Mr. Speaker, I believe that as a member of parliament I have responsibilities. My responsibilities as a member of parliament are first to my constituency, then to the nation generally, and then to my conscience; and if I belonged to a party, I suppose that then my allegiance to my party would come next. I sometimes wonder if this is the priority followed.

I wish to point out quite clearly and emphatically, and in as explicit and clear terms as possible, that if the proponent of this motion had had the common courtesy to come to me prior to its introduction, I would have been more than pleased to go along with unanimous consent. I would even have consented to allowing the House to have Monday, February 23, off because I feel certain that the Progressive Conservative Party is going to need all the time it can obtain to get a leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jones: However, the fact of the matter is that no one,—not one soul—had the courtesy to come to me and discuss unanimous consent; and, incidentally, no one has yet had the courtesy to come to me. This House has many serious and important matters to handle. There are problems arising from inflation.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jones: Is there someone on this side who wants to speak after me? There are high interest rates to deal with, Anti-Inflation Board decisions, unemployment, housing, social problems, capital punishment, abortion, defence, and government waste. The list goes on and on. The question of taking time off for a political convention is a doubtful one. Possibly we should have passed the Heritage Day bill and let them have that weekend off.

Since I have been in this House as a member of parliament, duly and regularly elected, I have endeavoured to conduct myself with a sense of fairness, justice and fair play. But I have made it clear on several occasions that in view of the fact that I have been forced to sit as an independent, I intend to exercise my rights and privileges and also to assume my responsibilities to the fullest. Until such time as I become a member of a recognized political party, I have no alternative but to use my own good judgment.

Hon. members will have to admit that there has been a total resistance by the recognized political parties to co-operate and permit me to become a member of any standing committee of this House. I ask: Is that fair? Does it discriminate? Is that parliamentary democracy? Is that morally right? Is that the type of justice meted out to members of this House? Does that type of action pass the four-way test?

In like vein, every other hon. member of this House belongs to a recognized political party whereby 75 per cent of donations up to $500 can be acknowledged with receipts and can be used as a deduction from income tax. This is an even better deal than that given to churches and charitable organizations; but that is the religion of politics. I ask, again: Is that fair? Does it discriminate? Is that parliamentary democracy? Is it morally right? Is that the type of justice meted out to members of this House? Does it really pass the four-way test?

When I first came into this House, I believed many hon. members had ill-conceived and preconceived ideas, for some reason or another, as to my views on several subjects. One of them was bilingualism. I trust hon. members now realize that my suggestion of a nationally-integrated, non-separate, uniform educational system in this nation is the only way to provide harmony, understanding and unity. I said this to the B and B Commission in May, 1964, and I will continue to repeat it because it bears repeating. The present system for the implementation of bilingualism is not working. It is a mess. It is going pretty far when the chief of the defence staff comes to my constituency of Moncton and says, in effect, that the decision with respect to a French language unit at Greenwood, Nova Scotia, was his move and no one was going to make him change it. That is arrogance, and I do not think we in this House have to accept that.

By not accepting my views, and by not permitting me to have the same rights and privileges as other members of parliament—as a certain political party has done—is not only rejecting me but is rejecting my constituents and the views of a large percentage of good, decent-thinking Canadians. I am an independent, not by choice but by compulsion. But I am a member of parliament as much as any other hon. member who sits in this House. However, the difference with me is that I have no party affiliation, and the system—improperly—does not permit my membership on standing committees. Therefore, my forum for dissent or consent has to be right here in the House of Commons, in the parliamentary chamber itself, and I must make full use of this opportunity to express my right to dissent as well as my right to consent.

Recent events certainly indicate that I have been excommunicated from and rejected by the Progressive Conservative Party. Perhaps now that both Liberals and Progressive Conservatives are more knowledgeable of my views on bilingualism, the other path for me to follow for admission into the PC party is to follow the route adopted by so many other persons who have gained admission into that noble party, namely, through the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jones: Even the recently departed former minister of finance—a fine fellow, mind you, but as a minister of finance I question his success because of his last four or five budget failures—received a personal invitation to lead the Tories out of the wilderness. It makes one think. At this point I wish to make it abundantly clear that I am going to make my presence in this House felt even more from now on, and if unanimous consent is required at any time I believe my vote for consent or dissent is as valid as that of any other member of parliament.

In closing, I want to issue a caveat—which I expect every hon. member of the House to read in Hansard—regarding standing committees, donations to my organization and the obvious injustices perpetrated upon me, a member of this House, and consequently upon my constituents and other good-thinking Canadians. Therefore, I ask hon. members to co-operate by assisting in having two private bills which I presented on these matters enacted immediately.

I have no obligation whatsoever to the House leaders or to any leaders of any party, and in particular to the Tory party now. Any relation or connection now is purely coincidental. If the new Tory leader is not a member of the caucus, his caucus will be in no different spot than I am. They, too, will not have their leader in the House. I could expand on this, but I leave hon. members to think of other combinations and permutations of the results.

I express the grassroots-level views of a large percentage of Canadians. These views, ideas and thoughts, are important to me and I trust they are important to every hon. member of this House. I find myself in the position where I have the large support of the people of this country, and not just in my own constituency—but, for better or for worse, not from the top brass of any political party.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you very kindly for permitting me to speak on this motion. I believe it has given me the opportunity, briefly, to put a few important views on the record without unduly wasting the time of this House, as has been done on other occasions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) has raised a number of matters which deserve consideration and which could be discussed with considerable interest.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Are you inviting him into your party?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He has already invited himself to go into the Liberal party, and from there to the Tory party. I think the point which most of all deserves consideration is that when we are seeking to do things by unanimous consent, if the hon. member is here on those occasions he should be asked if he gives consent as well.

However, it seems to me that what is now before us is a very simple motion. All it calls for is for this Thursday evening and all day Friday to be taken off for a purpose which I think is fairly well known. I do not think this motion lends itself to discussion of the whole parliamentary system or the trials and tribulations of the Progressive Conservative Party. I think it is a matter of common courtesy. This House has taken time off for Progressive Conservative leadership conventions in the past, for Liberal leadership conventions on previous occasions, and recently for the leadership convention of this party. I think it should be done now. Maybe no more speeches will be necessary. I am sure the Progressive Conservatives will vote for the motion, and on this occasion I think I can speak for the Liberal majority in this House as well. In other words, it is unanimous. We are all prepared to vote for the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Friday, February 13, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in connection with motions Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and the amendment to motion No. 7, I must say that I generally and largely support the intent and the principle underlying Bill C-58 in connection with the deduction for advertising expenses in that they should not be available to advertisers who advertise on a foreign broadcasting station whose primary market is directed into Canada. Until recent days we have not questioned the validity of this policy because, on the face of it, its merits have been self-evident in the terms of national interest.

Bill C-58 has been largely viewed by the public and parliamentarians as a bill whose primary thrust, if not its whole thrust, was in the area of periodicals, and the controversy surrounding the Time and Reader's Digest question became the preoccupation of everybody connected with the bill. My view changed somewhat while I was flying westward on January 13, 1976, to Victoria to attend the funeral of my former colleague, David Groos. While I was going out west, I took advantage of the opportunity to visit the Canadian subsidiary of KVOS in Vancouver whose transmitter is located in Bellingham. I must admit that I was quite impressed with their operation, and particularly with the amount of work that was done in Canada by their Canadian subsidiary. For instance, they employ an average of 150 part-time and full-time Canadian employees, the majority of whom are professional and technical people in the broadcasting and program production field.

There is no doubt that those directly involved as Canadian employees of this subsidiary find it almost impossible to believe that their own government would bring forward legislation that would relieve them of their employment. I am not saying we have to adjust laws in this country or make laws that take into account, in every given instance the well-being of every individual employed in Canada. There can be no question, however, that when the Government of Canada and parliament act in such a way as to adversely affect individual Canadians, they must only do so for very, very important, substantive reasons.

The Canadian subsidiary of the Bellingham station to which I have referred sells in Canada all the broadcasting time to Canadians, which represents about 80 per cent of the total air time of that station. The money from these sales substantially remains in Canada, and taxes on this income are paid to Canada, which means that KVOS is the only border station that operates in this manner. There is no parallel between their operation and those of Buffalo border stations with which I am more familiar. In addition to this, the KVOS production company, Canawest Films, Vancouver, and Canawest Master Films, Calgary, between them are the largest full-line film production entity west of Toronto. They are all subsidiaries of KVOS, B.C., Limited which in turn is the subsidiary of KVOS Television Incoporated, Bellingham, and all its employees are Canadian. These companies operate one of Canada's largest animation studios producing prize-winning, animated commercials for clientele not only in western Canada but in eastern Canada and the western United States. Their exports into the United States and abroad brings into Canada annually an additional half million dollars' worth of business.

The main distinction to be made is that many of us, as parliamentarians, are under the illusion that this aspect of the bill effectively prohibits the draining of funds from Canada into the United States—and with that principle I think all of us would agree—whereas in this case it appears to me that quite the reverse may be true. Canada, in economic terms alone, appears to be a net beneficiary of KVOS, B.C., Limited.

We have legislation called the Foreign Investment Review Act which effectively allows foreign purchasers to take over Canadian industries if it can be demonstrated that such a takeover would be "of significant benefit to Canada". Perhaps, within this act, we have a key to dealing with this unique situation. Surely all parliamentarians would agree that we do not, as a group, want to minimize benefits to Canada and to Canadians. Therefore, it might be considered as advisable to insert a clause in respect of this aspect permitting such border stations as KVOS to continue their Canadian operation providing it is of significant benefit to Canada. Such a provision would not permit them to continue to operate, but it would make it possible for them to continue if a decision were made that such continuance were in the national interest.

In light of the fact that I have only recently become aware of the factors that I am referring to in this speech, it is perhaps unreasonable to expect that an amendment dealing with this complex problem can really be dealt with adequately at this stage or our deliberations. Perhaps this provides a classic example as a case for sober second thought by the other place on the questions I have raised.

Many Canadians question the validity of the role of the other place from time to time, but those of us who know its genuine function realize—I am confident, having been exposed to the wisdom emanating from that place—that they will, indeed, take a genuine look at this broad question of broadcasting, not in any way to change the principle underlying this bill, which I strongly support in respect of broadcasting, but to make sure that nothing we do, will in fact, be contrary to the public interest. Perhaps we should also give direction to the kind of provision that exists in the Foreign Investment Review Act and provide that Canadian subsidiaries of foreign stations may operate in Canada if it is in the broad public interest for them to do so.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the amendment now before the House. In so doing, I should like to commend the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) for his outstanding contribution to this debate. I do not do so in any partisan way. Lucidly and eloquently, he put his finger on the nub of the matter which concerns many in this House.

Nobody quarrels about the plight of certain Canadian broadcasting companies, especially those located near the United States border. No one denies that we must protect Canadian broadcasters from unfair competition from U.S. border stations broadcasting television, AM and FM signals. Neither would anyone quarrel over the government treating Reader's Digest as a special case during this debate. Arguments in favour of such a special case have been put forward by members on all sides of the House and the government, to its credit, acquiesced. Obviously, it was moved by the force of arguments emanating from all sides of the House.

I appreciate the concern of the broadcasting industry in Canada, a concern voiced for a number of years. We know that millions of advertising dollars go to U.S. border stations for advertising directed at essentially Canadian audiences. We see it happening in Ottawa. We receive signals from upper New York state television stations. Indeed, one television station in that state to all intents and purposes is an Ottawa station. We see the same thing happening in Montreal. That city is served by stations in upper New York state. Broadcasting stations in that state send their signals to that major market. We see this especially in southern Ontario, the so-called banana belt around Toronto and Hamilton, sometimes known as the great golden horseshoe. The Buffalo stations are gobbling up millions of Canadian advertising dollars which should be directed to Canadian stations. That money should be paid to Canadian stations which provide Canadians with good broadcasting service.

In broadcasting, as in the magazine industry, there should be exceptions. Reader's Digest is an exception. Similarly, as the hon. member for Ontario argued forcibly, an exception could be made for television station KVOS. I come from the eastern seaboard, and have never seen the KVOS signal. I have never experienced that station's television fare. The station has its transmitter based in the United States. It is licensed by the United States Federal Communications Commission. I have been much impressed by the comments of the hon. member for Ontario and of hon. members from British Columbia on my side of the House, and I have been favourably impressed by the sensible recommendations made to the committee by representatives of station KVOS.

To all intents and purposes, KVOS is essentially a Canadian television operation. The difficulty is that it operates under a licence from the United States government. I read the material provided by the company and heard evidence adduced before the committee. I am satisfied that although the company operates under a United States government licence, it subscribes to all Canadian broadcasting laws. That, obviously, is in its interest. It subscribes to the code of ethics of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, although it is not a member, and to the code of conduct relating to advertising directed at children which is endorsed by the CAB and broadcasting stations in Canada. Station KVOS does this although it is not a Canadian-based operation. More importantly, the station operates in Canada, employs Canadians and has spent millions of dollars in this country. Those are compelling reasons for making KVOS a special case.

The same cannot be said of the Buffalo stations. Neither can it be said of the Plattsburgh, New York, stations or for the Watertown, New York, stations. These stations essentially aim their signals at the larger Canadian market to their north. On the other hand, I submit that a special case could be made for that unique operation, station KVOS, which came into being not to serve the small town of Bellingham, Washington state, but essentially to serve the larger Vancouver market and the market of the lower British Columbia mainland. It has been providing the Canadian audience in Vancouver and on the lower British Columbia mainland with good television service and good public service. It has been a good corporate citizen and has been employing, directly, 150 Canadians in highly-paid jobs. It has pumped hundreds of thousands of dollars into the Canadian entertainment and film industries.

I find this debate somewhat strange, something of a paradox. Here we are, debating legislation which would deny Canadian advertisers the right to advertise on U.S. border stations, legislation which would put a good corporate citizen like KVOS, to all intents and purposes a Canadian station, out of business, when we operate under a broadcasting policy which licenses and encourages Canadian cable operators to bring into this country U.S. television signals. I find that a paradox.

We are debating a bill aimed at the U.S. content of Time magazine and at preventing Canadians from advertising on KVOS, a U.S. border station, when at this very time we license Canadian cable companies to bring into this country U.S. television signals generated by the three major networks. Those signals are directed to major Canadian markets.

An hon. Member: Only provided they delete the advertising.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the city of Regina is a long way from the nearest U.S. city.

An hon. Member: Cable companies have to delete U.S. commercials.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, St. John's, Newfoundland, is many hundreds of miles from the nearest U.S. station in Bangor, Maine. It is far from the major markets of this country. Yet it is obvious to me that the government's cable policy has troubled Canadian broadcasters deeply. We talk much about Canadian content. While we plead with the CRTC to enforce regulations to do with Canadian content, that commission, operating under authority delegated by parliament, is undermining the very existence of television stations in this country. It is doing this by adhering to a cable policy which not only licenses but encourages cable companies to bring the signals of U.S. networks into this country. Pick up your TV Guide here for the city of Ottawa. What is the major station serving Ottawa? It is not the CTV station; it is not the CBC station: it is the station in Watertown, New York, the signal of which is brought to the city by a cable company licensed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. I find that a paradox. We can talk all we want, but the fact remains that the CRTC now realizes its ludicrous position.

One hears of directives being given to black-out U.S. advertising on the cable system. What kind of cheap, buccaneer policy is that? On one hand, the CRTC licenses Canadian companies to bring in U.S. signals. On the other hand we say, "You must black out the commercial signals." In other words, we are to get the benefit of the programs those stations broadcast, without having to pay any part of the price. That is unfair and unjust, and this situation is becoming one of the major sores affecting Canadian and U.S. relations at present.

People who have had experience with the U.S. government and U.S. congress know of the impact and the strength of the U.S. broadcasting lobby—and don't think our action has been lost on them. Congressmen and influential senators from the state of New York and the New England states have made their views heard in Ottawa through the U.S. state department. I say that our present cable policy makes no sense to anybody. I suspect that the cable policy, the brainchild of Mr. Juneau, now carried into effect by his protégé, the present chairman of the CRTC, is not a good policy for Canada. In fact, it is a bad policy for Canada. It operates counterproductive to the policy of encouraging Canadian content. For me, it represents a paradox.

Far from trying to make it difficult for a station that can reach this Canadian market without cable, we should have in front of us today a bill that would really do something for the broadcasting industry of this country. It should be possible to operate on an equal footing, without having to compete in areas that are far from the receiving signal of the U.S. stations, by a policy that encourages cable companies to bring these stations into these areas. I have already referred to the city of Regina which is now awaiting the implementation of a licence for a cable operation. There is the city of St. John's, Newfoundland. Cable is going into Edmonton, hundreds of miles away from the nearest station.

The cable industry in this country is a big industry—a $120 million industry. It functions solely on the importation of United States signals. Without these U.S. signals there is really no justification for this substantial expenditure of Canadian funds for the cable industry. One certainly cannot say very much for the community channels which are a condition of licensing of every cable operation in the country. The programming is abysmally bad. It is so terrible that these community channels have a viewer audience of practically zero. They exist because they have to as a condition of licensing.

I say the cable policy of this government is bad; it makes no sense. I have the greatest respect for the present minister, a woman who has a background in broadcasting, a woman who understands the broadcasting industry in this country by virtue of her experience as a professional broadcaster. I hope she will bring in policies that will help undo the very serious damage that has been done as a result of the Juneau policies on cable in this country. More particularly, I hope this House will come to its collective sense.

We were able to make a special case for Reader's Digest because the people of Canada want it and it made sense to make a special case in this instance. I believe we should make some kind of provision to allow Time magazine to continue to provide us with the Canadian section. even with all its shortcomings, because we will continue to get Time anyway. We made a special case for Reader's Digest, and I submit that the same arguments are just as compelling, logical and rational for a special case for KVOS, a good corporate citizen of this country that is providing good television to the city of Vancouver.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak in support of the subamendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) to remove the government objective regarding CRTC involvement in this revenue deal. I endorse the remarks just made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). He said that if you can make a special case for Reader's Digest, there is every reason in the world to make a special case for KVOS.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: I also endorse the remarks about the cable position and the commercial deletion question. It can be said, in the words of the underworld, that cable is a fence for the CRTC to sell stolen goods. It is totally immoral. That is just an aside from the points I would like to make.

I heard the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé), her parliamentary secretary and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) speak on this subject. The CRTC were recently in the west. They were ready to take four American channels off the air. We were briefed ahead of time that this would happen. The members from British Columbia were told, not consulted. They do not have to account to the public! We were told on November 25 and on December 16 that four American channels were coming off the air. They have great power, power that I never suspected parliament or my country would give to them. It is time that people here learned that we in the west are different. KVOS is different. People here should stop planning for us as though we do not exist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Possibly we should develop a western nationalism so that these people would learn about the west. Maybe we should narrow ourselves off and show what greatness we have. We are not Ontario, nor are we Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Nor are we so immature that we require our cultural supplies, initiatives and dictates to come from that quarter. We have different geography, different sociology, different life-styles, tremendous untapped talent that is bypassed by the Toronto and Montreal cultural clique, and we have great strength and quality that easterners neither understand nor accept. They simply pass through the west. If we have an Olympic swimmer, Maclean's does a token article. It just does a wrap-up type story. It names one or two westerners, one or two far easterners, and calls itself national. Perhaps it is envy, and with that the attendant resentment at our great qualities and great blessings. Perhaps the great physical divider, the Rockies, has isolated us from them and them from us. That is very unfortunate. I believe in a federal nation, a nation undivided. In many ways, we have greater compatibility in the north-south direction than we have with the chauvinistic and parochial east, that harbinger of narrow nationalism that extends about as far as Bloor Street in Toronto.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: People here do not realize that the west is different.

I will now speak about KVOS, the CRTC, which is primarily eastern-oriented, and my colleagues whom I really respect. I respect the minister very much for her background in the media. However, she may not know what KVOS means and gives to us in the west. KVOS-TV has been a good corporate citizen since 1955, not quite as long as Reader's Digest and Time. They pay their taxes in Canada and have been in Canadian business since that time. Substantial amounts of their profits have been reinvested in Canada. Canada, has employed Canadians in the production industry from 1955 to the present. There are a few of my colleagues who say they are getting hot-to-trot to do something now that they are in trouble. However, they have been producing. They tried to get production going. They have won international awards and sent a product produced by Canadians all around the world. They have been doing this since 1955.

In 1971, KVOS wanted to start a huge production studio, but the CRTC turned them down. Is the CRTC the government of Canada? This company has subsidized western Canada's largest film and animation company both in Vancouver and Calgary. Look at the jobs and untapped talent, the opportunities Canadians will never have. We now have that opportunity. It is like Reader's Digest. Reader's Digest now has a special privilege, but is it to advance Canadian talent and culture? No. They can rip a page out of Harper's down in the United States and rewrite it in Montreal. KVOS has employed more Canadian writers, artists, actors, musicians, film technicians, animators and other production people throughout the years than any independent English TV stations based in Canada, except for Toronto.

● (1600)

The Government of Canada seems to have had respect for this television station. It has recognized it, because Canada Manpower has worked with Canawest to help in the training of these people who are working in Vancouver. In the nine years from 1965, company reinvestment has been made possible and funds have been put back into B.C. in the form of taxes, payrolls and other public and private expenditures to the tune of $26 million—$76 million in nine years, That is hardly peanuts. KVOS is different. The west is different. It isn't a border station out of Toronto. But because of the myopic outlook in the east, they can only see the west in relation to what fits their pattern in the east.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: We are different. We have a different world. It is not fair to compare a corporate citizen of British Columbia who has lived in the spirit of what Canada wants of Canadian subsidiaries with all the other border TV stations. I cannot argue the case for Buffalo, though I suspect that they probably have a case too. That is for responsible Ontarian people to decide.

Mr. Collenette: Rubbish.

Mrs. Holt: I do not say whether it is rubbish or whether it is not rubbish. That is for you to decide. I will take the care of the west in this case because I know the west; I am a westerner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Let us at least leave an opening in this bill, through this amendment, so that if KVOS can come up with a plan which is better for broadcasting in B.C. than the punitive effect of this bill, it will have an opportunity to do so. And the bill is punitive. George Bernard Shaw said—and I repeat this over and over again—that when you set out to kill, that is assassination, and assassination is the extreme form of censorship. We are out to kill these corporate landed immigrants. Let us find a better way to handle this issue. All right, let's Canadianize them, help them to Canadianize, encourage them to Canadianize. It is a tax bill, it is not a content bill, it is not a game you are playing; and any time you handle law in the way this law is being handled, you are allowing the law to fall into jeopardy and to be destroyed. It is time those who seem to control so much legislation in the House—they and their agencies—learned about the west. I repeat, we are not Ontario and we are not Montreal.

Non-Canadian Publications

Incidentally, I wonder what would happen if the Americans were to decide they would not let us have their shows at low cost. What would happen if they said to us, "Okay, you will pay the same price for our shows as we expect from Americans." I believe a half-hour show costs $150,000 in the United States and $2,000 in Canada; for an hour, $250,000 in the United States and $5,000 here. What would happen to poor old Kojak on CBC and CTV? What would happen to our advertising? There would not be enough advertising revenue to keep our own networks going. The CBC and CTV sell tens of thousands of dollars worth of advertising around these shows. We are willing to take this material when it makes money for us. Is this nationalism? We won't allow the same thing for Reader's Digest. Well, we have allowed it in a way, but it is hardly Canadian content. Or for Time. Canadian networks and stations could not produce Canadian programs if it were not for the profit made on U.S. shows.

The dishonesty of Bill C-58 is exemplified by the fact that we juggle it around to make it fit what we want to achieve. I hear we have now allowed another exemption in respect of some newspapers in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, each time we allow another exemption the intent of the law becomes more apparent. It is determined to kill border stations like KVOS, or debilitate them and destroy Canada's editions of Time. I am from the west, in the far west, and I like to get those eight pages together with the rest of the international content. If we debilitate the border stations, we debilitate a lot of our own taste, our culture and our advertising. Let me point out that it will only be the big advertisers who will be able to afford the local networks because they are going to raise their prices—and they have contributed very, very little to cultural development in the west.

I wish to refer now to justice in the contents of this bill. There is no justice in the bill, and once justice is violated it can be destroyed. The same can be said of freedom. If freedom in the media is violated, the danger is apparent: it, too, can be destroyed. Justice and freedom are delicate pillars in a democracy. The slightest erosion can cause the collapse of our free society.

I think this bill is an extremely serious matter. I am not sure that everybody is with me. Indeed, I am positive that my colleagues are not with me. I cannot understand why they fail to see the magnitude of this issue. Every journalist in the country, every editorial writer in the country has been saying the same thing. There is only one paper which has taken a different view, and that is the Toronto Star which seems to be a bedmate with Southam's which has an interest in some of the cable and television companies which are now being protected by this legislation.

An hon. Member: That's incest.

Mrs. Holt: I don't know. It may be a queer relationship. Now we see bad law being adjusted, manipulated, changed. We see exceptions made and introduced. And when exceptions are made, what kind of law is being created? This law has been drawn up to meet special interests, adjusted and juggled for reasons of political expediency, it seems. I would hate to think that was so, but when this happens it is not the law of a just society but the law of tyranny, the measure of whose design is individual profit or punishment.

To design law in order to get rid of one you dislike, whether it is Time, Reader's Digest, or human beings, is an act of despotism, and I would hate to see such a law passed through the parliament of my Canada. A law of this sort is in great danger of being held up to ridicule and contempt if it is not consistent and, God knows, what has happened in the past week has shown that it is not consistent, that it is without plan and without structure except to destroy several corporate citizens. It has become a ludicrous mass of contradiction.

In the periodical publishing business we cannot have continuing arrangements. The electronic media and the newspapers are totally dependent upon continuing arrangements. Instead, we are putting a knife in the back of small businesses. Our combines bill, C-2, was designed to ensure that competition is not impaired by powerful cartels and monopolies as exemplified by the big three who control newspapers in Canada, specifically, Southam's and the Maclean-Hunter Publishing Company, a multinational corporation which just so happens to have its base in Canada. Hardly nationalistic. All this in the name of nationalism—not patriotism, but nationalism. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in his great and remarkable wisdom which we all admire so much, in an interview with Peter Newman—would you believe, Peter Newman, the great nationalist—on September 29, 1975, had something to say about nationalism. These are the Prime Minister's words, not mine:

My feelings about nationalism and . . . prejudices against it lie in the very history and meaning of the word. I never thought the nation should have preponderance over the individual . . .

I am against nationalism in the broader sense, it is a rationale for the establishment or the governing classes or those who have power with it to bring in solutions which are deleterious to individual freedoms—

I would repeat that for emphasis—"to bring in solutions which are deleterious to individual freedoms". Let me continue with the Prime Minister's words:

The word nationalism—particularly economic nationalism, though it applies to cultural nationalism too—is very often a vehicle of the ruling classes to transfer wealth to themselves.

Bill C-58 does just that. It is a bill to transfer wealth from the conglomerates to themselves, to keep out all competition and to deny the whole thing the government is intending to do; that is, protect the right of citizens to a free choice.

In this whole plan called Bill C-58 as it involves KVOS, Time and Reader's Digest—and I think Reader's Digest is still threatened regardless of a contemporary concession—MD, Canadian Medicine, etc., there is absolutely no understanding of the isolation and difference that exists in the west. Time provides us with the only in-depth Canadian news as well as a marvellous insight into the whole world. Yes, we can continue to buy Time, just as we can buy U.S. News and World Affairs, Newsweek, Playboy and Oui but none of the latter has Canadian content. They are not published in Canada. The centrefold of Playboy only once had Canadian content, as far as I can remember.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mrs. Holt.]

An hon. Member: Was it 80 per cent different?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: It was "substantially the same." If you have seen one centrefold, you have seen them all. We hear this over and over by the proponents of this bill, that we can still get Time, Reader's Digest and all these other magazines. They still maintain we have all the freedom in the world to buy these United States magazines and watch these American shows. But there is a big difference. These American magazines do not provide jobs in Canada. They do not provide opportunities to writers and the allied trades. We have settled in respect of Reader's Digest so that takes care of Montreal. But the Time people are going to lose jobs out in the west. Perhaps these people who say we can still get these magazines are too naive to understand what the difference is between importing them and having them home-developed, and I maintain that Time and Reader's Digest are home-developed.

Canadian writers, editors and printers work for Time and Reader's Digest, and in the case of KVOS there are animators, cartoonists, artists, writers and actors who are getting, very often, their first and only opportunity to use and develop their talents. Let this station fold, and where will these people go? I suggest that they will go to Hollywood and other places. They already have contracted out of Vancouver for Hollywood.

These people already have done such things as 52 segments of the "Abbott and Costello" cartoon series, plus work on the "Beatles", "Moby Dick" and "Samson and Goliath". In 1972, they had additional subcontract animation work for "Gidget" and "The Last of the Curling". In 1973 and 1974, they producted 13 half-hour segments of "Wait Till Your Father Gets Home", an adult cartoon series, and two segments of "Count of Monte Cristo". Those are just a few of the things which are being done in the west. These opportunities for the people in this trade are going to be lost.

I cannot tell whether the proponents of this bill who say we should receive Time and Reader's Digest, U.S.A., in the same way we do other American imported magazines are deliberately telling us falsehoods or just do not understand what is being discussed here. I am also tired of the misconceptions being peddled by those who say that these media groups have been receiving special privileges. That is not true. It is the advertisers who receive the privileges and the right to advertise wherever they want. If only Canadians could understand the principle so deeply involved here! I wish I could convey this to my colleagues, because I feel so very much alone.

Mr. McGrath: You are not alone, Simma; we are all with you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member, but her allotted time has expired.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I thought I still had four minutes: I have been watching the time.

An hon. Member: You have more time now.

Mrs. Holt: What is being debated here is the right of choice by corporate citizens, small business of large, to advertise wherever they choose, and to use, if they so choose, the marvellous resource of a long-time landed citizen in Canada. It is the right of the advertisers to advertise in a magazine that to all intents and purposes is Canadian in that it has been a resident here for 32 years or, in the case of KVOS, here on invitation and eagerly welcomed into this country some 20 years ago.

We were happy to get them in the west. They came there after the CBC, and before the CTV. We in the west have a need, and also a right, to read about our country in objective style and in depth and in detail as a part of the entire world scene. We also have the right to watch KVOS and the American networks from across a border, only 30 miles away from Vancouver—just as we have the right to see American network stations on CBC and CTV. If we could find other stations that can give us this programming, we would watch them. When the satellite and converters come into operation, we will be able to get this programming from all over the world.

Will we have cable deletion then? Will the CRTC become the fence, then, for selling stolen goods to Canada? Is that what commercial deletion is? Our cultural diet seems to be forced on us from this part of the world in Toronto, both in the published and the electronic media. I have said this before, that no one has the right to use the law in the wide reaches of this huge country to deprive us of the choice to read and to see and hear what we wish, nor the right to force us to rely on the mean, cynical, parochial and narrow nationalism of the Toronto-controlled media.

This bill, quite certainly, was intended and designed for the assassination of Time, Reader's Digest, MD, Canadian Medicine, KVOS and other border stations. Once more I repeat, because they are so appropriate, the words of George Bernard Shaw who said "Assassination is the extreme form of censorship".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering if we should have a minute of silence so that members on the government benches can put band-aids on their backs to stop the flow of blood.

An hon. Member: They need more than band-aids.

Mr. Epp: I have a few things to say to the minister, and I hope she will start listening. Obviously, up to the present time she has not made a habit of listening to other people.

Mrs. Sauvé: I will listen to you, chum.

Mr. Epp: That is a step in the right direction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, every time I get up to speak, it seems the deputy whip over there wants to make a speech sitting down. Perhaps he might like to change the procedure and get up and make a speech on his feet.

An hon. Member: He can't speak on his feet.

Mr. Epp: Perhaps he cannot stand and speak at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: If you have something to say, say it or sit down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Have you got something to say? We are listening.

Mr. Epp: I can understand that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) would not be too pleased with the preceding speech, but I am afraid he will not have any more luck in what I am going to say, either. He is obviously rather touchy, so this must be getting to him.

● (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Would the hon. member address his remarks to Bill C-58.

Mr. Epp: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad that I now have the attention of the minister and may proceed. During the hearings held by the committee, most of the concentration on the provisions relating to television was concerned with the Buffalo operation and KVOS, Bellingham, Washington. I do not wish to spend too much time on that aspect. I am pleased the minister is in the House this afternoon because I shall try to point out the effect this bill would have in a very restricted local area. After this presentation to the minister, hopefully some positive change might be effected. The hearings regarding the two areas I mentioned, Buffalo and Bellingham, involved the CRTC regulations and the proposal that KVOS placed before the members of the committee by which it is willing, in order to expand the industry it started in British Columbia relating to animation and film production, to have "X" number of dollars, to be decided by the CRTC, plowed back, so to speak, into the operation.

The minister shakes her head, but I think this is a proposal which goes much beyond any proposal made by any other television station. I think it bears research and re-examination. KVOS beams into the lower mainland of British Columbia. At the recent CRTC hearings in Vancouver it was revealing to those who live there to discover that members such as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) were completely supported by most residents of British Columbia in that they want KVOS to remain on the air. I believe the representations that were made to the CRTC, regardless of what the minister or the members of the government might feel, made it obvious that most people in British Columbia who now receive KVOS service do not want that service reduced or eliminated in any way.

Non-Canadian Publications

It is rather astounding to one who does not live in British Columbia to discover that members of the committee from British Columbia, such as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Raines) did not support an accommodation for KVOS in order that it might continue to operate, but in fact seemed very often to be in the forefront of the effort in the committee to have KVOS destroyed and taken off the air.

After the CRTC hearings held in Vancouver regarding the expansion of CBC television in that area, I do not see how members of the government, having fooled their constituents regarding this matter, could be in the forefront of the committee hearings making comments which seemed to fly directly in the face of the views of the people who elected them to this House. Surely it is their function to determine what their constituents feel about such an issue and to make their views known during debate in this House. They have not done so. In fact, they have been in the forefront of the fight against the service which is desired by the people of British Columbia. It is absolutely astounding, to me, that members from British Columbia could make the comments they have regarding the future of KVOS, such as the statements made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour.

I wish to point out to the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) the effect Bill C-58 already has had on television coverage in southern Manitoba. During the twenty-ninth parliament a number of applications were made by Manitoba cable companies to the CRTC for cable expansion. These hearings were convened in Winnipeg by the CRTC. The applications were heard at that time. It was felt by a number of residents in my riding, specifically in the Pine Falls area, that in view of the fact that they are some 80 or 90 miles from Winnipeg and have very marginal service from the CBC television station in Winnipeg, they should be able to have cable coverage in the Pine Falls area so there would be improved television service in that area.

They had received the support of a cable company in Winnipeg. This company was willing to move into the area to provide the desired service. So the cable company made the application, with the backing of the local people, in the hope that the application would be approved. All they were asking was that the same cable service be granted to a rural part of Manitoba that is presently being offered in Winnipeg. That was the essence of the application. In view of the attitude of the former minister of communications and the former chairman of the CRTC in respect of cable applications, that application is still pending. That occurred during the twenty-ninth parliament. We are still awaiting a ruling on that application. Every time we make an inquiry we are told that the application has neither been approved nor disapproved. We are told they are awaiting a cable policy announcement by the government.

Having heard the application and having deferred the decision, the CRTC, in essence, to the present time has made a negative decision because the service these people had hoped for has not been forthcoming. The people in that area ask why, when they are willing to pay for it, they cannot have the same type of service that is available in metropolitan areas such as Toronto and Winnipeg? I would appreciate the minister giving an explanation at some time, when she feels it necessary to intervene in this debate, in respect of this question which I believe is fairly straightforward.

In the debate on Friday last, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), a co-operative and active member of the committee, as recorded at page 10930 of Hansard for February 13, 1976 said:

> In a brief answer, Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member—

He was referring to the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Wise).

> —will look at the accelerated program that has been introduced in this House to allow places of 500 population or more to receive programming.

I want to point out to the hon. member for Bruce-Grey that we also have difficulties with the so-called accelerated plan. What has happened in respect of Bill C-58 is that for a number of years there has been a so-called border station—or private station as some people are in the habit of calling it—KCND, Pembina, North Dakota. This station, which is close to the forty-ninth parallel, but located in the United States, was beaming generally into the Winnipeg market as well as the surrounding rural area. It was providing for southern Manitobans a third English language television station with the proposals in Bill C-58. I am not trying to say to the minister that it was simply because of Bill C-58 that it happened, but it was part of the package, I feel. KCND felt that if advertisers advertising on KCND could no longer use money spent on advertising as tax write-offs, they would have to stop operations. They did so, and the assets of KCND, Pembina, North Dakota, were sold on the provision that with a successful application to the CRTC by Canawest television, these assets would be sold from KCND, Pembina, North Dakota, to KCND, Winnipeg, associated with Canawest.

Furthermore, KCND is presently associated with the Global network, and so far Winnipegers—I am not speaking of cable users, but viewers in general—now, again, have three English speaking networks, namely, CBC, CTV and Global. Residents living in fairly close proximity to metropolitan Winnipeg are also recipients of those three English television networks. The result is that in the so-called remote areas the CBC—and I chuckle when I hear the word "remote" when I talk to CBC officials, because I am not talking of great distances from metropolitan Winnipeg but, rather, of the towns and villages 50, 60, or 70 miles away from Winnipeg about coverage of CBC in the extreme southeastern part of Manitoba—can supply very few, if any, satisfactory answers.

What happens is this. When KCND went off the air and Global came on, we lost television coverage in southeastern Manitoba in places such as Sprague, Piney and the surrounding areas. The people in this area at least receive KCND, Pembina, North Dakota, extremely well and the coverage is good. The CBC or CTV coverage in that area is virtually non-existent. It depends where you live. In some areas it is better than in others, but on balance the coverage is not good and people have resorted to buying boosters and television antenna rotors in an effort to pull in at least a marginal signal in that area. With the removal of KCND in this area, people have been deprived of the only good television coverage they receive. I am speaking now of the quality of the signal, rather than of programming.

It is an obvious fact that CBC's purpose is, first of all, public service rather than to show a profit, and these people being Canadian citizens, being taxpayers and contributing to the annual budget of the CBC, should have the right to CBC coverage. Petitions in the area have been drawn up—I think we are at number three both for French and English CBC television coverage—in an effort to bring to them Canadian coverage which is taken for granted in Canada's metropolitan areas—and not only coverage which is added through cable and through the other networks. People in that area, myself included, approached the CBC asking them to start telecasting in that area under the accelerated coverage plan, or ACP. After a number of petitions and a lot of good work from the CBC, the only thing that the CBC has now told us they will do is make an application to CRTC some time in 1978. No one knows when that application will be approved, much less does anyone know when we could expect CBC coverage in that area if the application is approved.

I want to express to the minister, in very clear terms, the effects of Canada's cable policy and of Bill C-58 in a small area, one might say, but nonetheless, an important one. Surely Canadians there are entitled to the same coverage by CBC as any other Canadian in other areas of Canada. For example, we see great expansion under ACP in northern Canada; there is no argument about it. But I find it somewhat difficult to understand, when an area is 60 miles away from a large metropolitan centre like Winnipeg, that we should have to wait until 1978 before an application is made by CBC, much less a decision reached. The lack of coverage is partly due to the fact that we have lost one television station which was giving us a quality signal. Whether or not we want to talk about nationalism, it behooves the ministers responsible to take a look at situations brought before the House by members. We have brought forward these cases in letters, also. I am trying to be difficult about the situation, but I believe our concerns are real.

If the effects of the government's decision were fully understood by the minister, and a clear decision and commitment was made, there would be a lot less opposition to the provisions of Bill C-58. Regarding television coverage at present, all I have seen in my area is a negative result. We have not received the commitments which the people in my constituency deserve as Canadians.

I feel that three things are needed. Possibly they are not that startling, but I believe they bear repeating. First of all, a national broadcasting policy is needed in areas such as I have mentioned. People in these areas will then feel they are part of the national broadcasting network, that they are not second-class, and that they should not have to wait until 1980 before they might get signals when other areas in Canada have had them since the early 1950s. We are speaking about a time lapse of 30 years. Surely that is not acceptable. Second, I hope that the various ministers will use their influence to get the cable matter decided once and for all.

The decisions that are pending before the CRTC, where individual companies, with the support of the residents in various areas, want to expand cable, should be made as soon as possible. I do not think we should simply say that the urban areas should have cable and that the rural areas are not entitled to it. If there are private entrepreneurs and subscribers who want to pay for that service, the area should have it. We have spent much time on this question, and I think that in order to resolve this matter, officials of both the Canadian and the U.S. government should meet. I know that one meeting has taken place. They should meet to discuss the problem of border television on both sides in a mutually co-operative fashion in an effort to solve this problem so that we can move forward.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to prolong the debate, but I want to correct some erroneous impressions put forward by hon. members of the opposition in the Conservative party, and particularly by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) about what good corporate citizens KVOS and other border stations are.

Let us quickly look at the history of KVOS and how it hopes to benefit from the amendment before us. The KVOS television station first began broadcasting in June, 1953, and its market was Bellingham, in the state of Washington, and northwest Washington. However, after a year of operation it became apparent that this television company would not be able to make a grand profit or a booming success based on that very limited market. So in 1954, KVOS moved its transmitter to Orcas Island so that it could beam more clearly into the Vancouver area. The intersting thing is that it made that move with the approval of the FCC, the American equivalent of our CRTC. The FCC, that same agency, now deletes not just commercials but whole programs from coming into American areas in order to protect local stations.

The FCC realized that to make a television station a success, a certain maket had to be guaranteed, and boundaries are set up to prevent competitors from entering that market to the point where neither television station can survive on the limited commercial revenues there. The FCC accepts that principle. It is realistic and understands the logistics of television advertising revenue, so the FCC does not allow non-local stations to beam into an area which has been licensed to another station. Yet here we are talking about a serious problem for Canadian stations which face the problem of American signals in their areas, which is allowed under international convention.

At the same time that we allow American signals to come in, we allow Canadian advertisers to advertise on these foreign stations and get an income tax deductibility privilege which was designed primarily only for Canadian stations. All this bill seeks to do is end that anomaly and the unfair competition Canadian stations now face.

I heard the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway lauding KVOS for setting up a branch plant in Canada and for doing wonderful things for Canada. The way she was extolling this company gave me visions of thousands of jobs, and hundreds for Canadians. Let us examine a little more carefully the nature of KVOS. In British Columbia it employs a grand total of 30 people. As of 1974, Canawest, its film subsidiary, employed a grand total of 18 people. Let us compare that with employment in Canadian stations under CBC, BC television or a very small and struggling VHF station, CITY-TV in Toronto, which has none of these advantages. The latter does not employ just 18 or 30 people; it employs 105 full-time employees out of revenues which are less than half those of KVOS in Washington and British Columbia. Let us keep things in perspective when we talk about the number of jobs and the great production facilities KVOS provides for Canadians, and compare that with what Canadian stations have been doing out of revenues considerably smaller than those of KVOS. Let us remember that KVOS in Washington gets 90 per cent of its revenue from Vancouver, from Canadian advertisers. It gets 10 per cent of its revenue from the area it was licensed to serve.

KVOS is not licensed by the CRTC to serve the Canadian market. That is important to remember when we consider how our broadcasting system is organized. Because KVOS is not licensed by the CRTC to serve a Canadian market, it does not have to conform to any of the regulations of the Canadian Broadcasting Act which regulates every other television station in this country. KVOS does not have to conform to the 60 per cent Canadian content regulation, which is a perfectly acceptable thing, in my opinion, but is certainly a liability for a number of Canadian stations which have to find revenue to produce unique Canadian programs. KVOS is not bound by that stricture because it is licensed by the FCC in the United States. Any move it makes to conform to the Canadian Broadcasting Act and its provisions, such as the 60 per cent Canadian content provision and the provision to promote Canadian culture and identity for binding Canadian citizens together, is only on a voluntary basis. If we accept any of these amendments, that contribution could be changed at the whim of KVOS.

There is no legal way in which the CRTC can get KVOS in the United States to conform to the requirements of the Broadcasting Act, and to accept the amendments proposed by the Conservatives, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), would be a contradiction and a violation of the very Broadcasting Act this parliament passed and which hon. members on both sides of the House supported.

Let us keep things in perspective when we try to find loopholes by way of amendments. These amendments are completely in contravention of the Broadcasting Act. We learned in committee that United States border stations siphon off annually some $20 million in advertising revenue which normally would go to Canadian television. Why do our advertisers advertise on American television? It is partly to reach an audience, but I think it is important to realize that up to now, by doing so they have been able to get an income tax deductibility privilege whereby they can write off the cost of that advertising.

This bill will not prohibit advertisers from advertising where they want, but it will reserve that tax deductibility for advertising on Canadian television stations only. I think that is perfectly consistent with wanting to strengthen the Canadian television and broadcasting industry. How can we expect Canadian television to expand its broadcasting facilities and develop new and better programs if we continue to encourage an annual outflow of $20 million? Let us remember that Canadian television must cover the same geographical area as does United States television. Canadian television stations and companies are expected to have the same quality of service and programming as the United States, without the vast financial resources available to American broadcasters.

● (1650)

I wonder if members of this House have ever stopped to calculate the outflow of funds since this kind of advertising policy began. In my estimation, which I have checked with other sources, to date Canadian television has lost about $250 million in advertising revenue. This year KVOS alone, siphoned off $7 million in advertising revenue from the Vancouver market.

Mr. Friesen: Where did it spend it?

Mr. Symes: What does that mean? Money that should have been available for new television stations coming on stream in the Vancouver and Toronto areas is going out of the country. It seems to me the amendment before us leans over backwards to help foreign stations as opposed to Canadian stations. What does that $250 million mean to Canadians, in real terms? It means that about 8,000 man-years of work for Canadian citizens have been lost. I am calculating that at one job for every $30,000 gross revenue. It means that millions of dollars have been lost in tax revenues to the federal government. That outflow of money has meant the loss of hundreds of hours of production that could have provided new and improved Canadian shows. That outflow in the hundreds of millions of dollars of advertising revenue has been undermining the attempts to build a unique Canadian culture—a view of the world and ourselves through new and innovative programming and expanded television service.

Mr. Speaker, I listened again to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway telling us how KVOS has bent over backwards to bring about programming that is of interest to Canadians. I was very interested to read the transcripts of the hearings of the United States committee on foreign affairs, of the House of Representatives, which met on April 25, 1974, at which the president of KVOS was a witness. He spoke of how his station tries to consider the unique Canadian aspect of its audience. He submitted as evidence a list of local public affairs programs of the station for the previous year. It included 421 subjects, of which only 41, or less than 10 per cent, had any relevance for a Canadian audience. I think we should keep this in mind when we hear about how KVOS is a good corporate citizen of Canada. We have heard of the Canawest film subsidiary of KVOS and how it employs 18 Canadians and is producing films and helping the film industry in Canada. Indeed, it is the largest film industry west of Toronto. But it was set up primarily to design video commercials for KVOS. That is the bulk of its business—and we should not forget that, Mr. Speaker. We should keep in perspective the fact that American television stations receive all kinds of protection which we are only seeking to a small degree for Canadian stations.

I should like to refer to a submission of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the professionals in the field in Canada, who fully support the legislation. They point out that American program producers give special protection against Canadian television signals beaming into some of their markets. For example, the Detroit-Windsor area is regarded as one market, with the result that neither the CBC, CTV, Global or any Canadian television station can broadcast into the Windsor area any program which is broadcast by a Detroit station. If Canadian broadcasters buy these programs, it is on the express condition that they may not be shown in Windsor if Detroit has them already. This means that Windsor residents, Canadian citizens, cannot see the full Global or CBC schedule or, previously, the CTV schedule when Windsor had an affiliate.

This is the kind of situation that exists. We have an American group of television stations in the Buffalo area making provision to help their stations against Canadian signals. In the case of KVOS, we have the FCC supporting that station when we know full well it is not licensed, nor can it be the success it is by just beaming into the Washington area. What is at issue is a strong and viable Canadian television broadcasting industry, an industry that is expensive to operate, one that needs funds to improve and expand its operations. For us as a parliament to continue to allow millions of dollars to be siphoned off by encouraging it through a provision in the Income Tax Act is a backward and regrettable step.

It is time we, as Canadians, stood up in support of a legitimate Canadian industry and the concerns facing it in these troubled times.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—External Affairs—Cuba—Possible review of aid program in view of involvement in Angolan war; the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski)—Veterans Affairs—Delay in processing pension applications—Government action; the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)—Air Transport—Possibility of restrictions on unilingual pilots—Government position.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think at this point it is important for me to intervene, although I have already spoken in this debate, to put straight some of the things that have been said. I refer specifically to the arguments brought forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I respect the opinions she has expressed on this problem, but I think it is important to let her and the House know that on the government side we view things a little differently. The hon. member argues that if a special case has been made for Reader's Digest, we can make a special case for KVOS. I think that right from the beginning the hon. member has to be stopped in that kind of argumentation. There is no special case for anyone; the same rules will apply to everyone. That is, there will be no exemption for taxation purposes for any American enterprise in this country of the nature we are talking about. There will be no exemption for anyone.

If we recognize there is a special difficulty with Reader's Digest because of the very nature of that publication in that it reproduces articles from the entire world and that it is very difficult to define Canadian content in that particular case, we have tried as conscientiously as possible to deal with that problem. It cannot be argued that we have made a special case for Reader's Digest. It is especially difficult, therefore, to see how Reader's Digest can fit into our criteria.

In regard to this particular station on the border of Canada and the United States, some members speak as though all hell had broken loose. The world will not end because we are to prohibit taxation exemptions in their case. Strangely enough, in English one says "Hell has broken loose," whereas in French one says, "Le ciel nous tombe sur la tête." In French we refer to heaven instead of hell. The sort of arguments one has heard in this House suggests that indeed hell has broken loose.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In English we say, "The sky is falling."

Mrs. Sauvé: Well, "Le ciel nous tombe sur la tête" means that there has been a catastrophe. Why argue that advertisers in the Vancouver area will not be able to advertise? There will be new outlets. Two new stations in the area are to come on stream and advertisers will have the opportunity to advertise their products. Also, if there is any surplus advertising—and hon. members should think of this—it should go to the magazines, journals and newspapers in the Vancouver area. Why send it down to the United States in order for it to be fed back to Canadians? We can use our own media to place our own advertisements.

Mr. Symes: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sauvé: The hon. member argued that KVOS is a good Canadian corporate citizen. I do not know how one can say that. As I understand it, KVOS is a good American corporate citizen, not a Canadian corporate citizen. I can understand why the station wants to be thought of as a good Canadian corporate citizen. I am told that it took $8 million in profits out of B.C. last year. It cannot be considered as a Canadian corporate citizen. It is not even regulated by a Canadian regulatory body or agency. It is regulated by an American authority. Equivalent enterprises in Canada are regulated by the CRTC, the Canadian regulatory body. KVOS cannot, by the very fact that it is in the United States, identify with our needs and our particular sensitivities.

Mr. Wenman: What is the government's position on freedom of choice?

Mrs. Sauvé: One has heard arguments about compensatory measures, about the creation of a fund in order to help us build up the Canadian industry, and so on. Those are totally unacceptable trade-offs. We do not need those trade-offs. We need to protect the revenues of our television industry.

Mr. Wenman: You mean, to protect mediocrity.

Mrs. Sauvé: We need to protect it from loss of revenue so that it can operate on its own and feel its strength in our country and particular environment. We must see if the industry can be viable on its own. We do not want compensatory measures which would confuse the whole picture.

Mr. Wenman: How do you know what the people want?

Mrs. Sauvé: We want our own television stations to earn our money in order that we can build up our own original, indigenous television industry. We want our industry to earn those revenues and so allow artists, artisans and writers of this country to earn their living in this country. Already they find it difficult to earn a living.

An hon. Member: I am sure they earn a living now.

Mrs. Sauvé: If the hon. member will look at statistics on earnings of Canadian artists and artisans in this country he will see that it is difficult for any of them to stay in that field. Revenues are hard to come by. Their scope is limited and their livelihood precarious. I made this speech the other night and I will not repeat it. I hope the hon. member will read it.

Mr. Wenman: I have read it. It says nothing.

An hon. Member: You were not here.

Mr. Wenman: I was here, and I have read it.

Mrs. Sauvé: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway suggested that the government wants to enact this legislation because it does not understand the west. She suggested that we cannot look beyond the Rockies and do not know what is going on in that part of the country. Since becoming a minister I have been out west several times. I know some things about the west. I do not pretend to know more about the west than the hon. member. But I know that the west is not indifferent to the necessity of creating jobs for artists in Canada and of protecting the Canadian television industry.

Mr. Wenman: Is that exactly what the west says?

Mrs. Sauvé: The west sees things our way and knows that we must protect the industry from losses of revenue resulting from American stations broadcasting to this country.

Mr. Wenman: But people want a choice.

Mrs. Sauvé: It is bad that some hon. members, when arguing this problem, should emphasize the so-called alienation of the west from the east. Such arguments are calculated to exercise under pressure on the issue. They arise in connection with just about every problem we discuss. I think that is wrong. It is just as if I raised the so-called French Canadian problem apropos everything we discussed in this House. Such an action would have bad consequences to Quebec. You just cannot do it. We should resolve arguments through logic. That is the sort of discussion I should like to see regarding Bill C-58. Let our discussion be on Bill C-58 and on nothing else.

Some hon. members ask what would happen if the Americans decided to retaliate and charge us the full price for the American shows we view in Canada. They saw, "Would it not be terrible if they charged us the full price?" There is no danger of that. Hon. members opposite should know that. I do not blame the hon. member who raised this argument because she is probably not acquainted with the pricing practices of the television industry. The American industry is following normal marketing practice. The United States runs cost so much and reruns in other countries are priced substantially below the initial price. This is the philosophy underlying the pricing of television shows. The present practice is not abnormal. The United States networks would not change their marketing practices just because they might want to retaliate. To begin with, they negotiated with those who created the shows, with the producers and artists, so much to run in the United States and so much to rerun in Canada, Sweden, France, Spain, and so on. They cannot change that. There is no danger of the kind of retaliation referred to, as if we should be afraid of retaliation any way. Who cares about retaliation? We want to do our own thing. We shall do what is good for us. We are not worried about retaliation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sauvé: I think I have covered many of the arguments raised. I should like to answer the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who complained that I was not listening to him. I sat here and waited for him to say something. In the end he said a few things to which I should like to reply. Unfortunately, he did not stay in the House and wait for my reply. This will be bad for the hon. member for Provencher, because when he produces copies of his speech to his constituents in order to show that he spoke about radio and television stations in southern

Manitoba, some of his constituents will already have read my speech and will say, "Here are the answers; how can you refute them?"

I spoke on this bill previously and I have kept my present remarks short. I merely wanted to set straight some misconceptions and to make a few necessary points.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment to motion No. 7 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie).

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed amendment stands deferred.

● (1710)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock) moved:

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in clause 3 by striking out line 12 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"of being extended or renewed; or

(c) a written agreement entered into after the coming into force of this section with a Canadian subsidiary of a foreign broadcasting undertaking if not less than seventy-five per cent of the voting shares of the said Canadian subsidiary are beneficially owned by Canadian citizens and a percentage of the gross revenues of the said Canadian subsidiary, to be agreed upon by the said Canadian subsidiary and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, less only normal advertising agency and sales agencies commissions, is allocated directly to Canadian television program production, extension of Canadian television service, or other broadcasting objectives for the benefit of Canada: an allocation so made to be pursuant to a plan made by the Commission and approved by the Minister of the Department of National Revenue.".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

And the result of the vote having been announced:

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think that inadvertently I was counted twice. I do not want to overdo my welcome among my colleagues. I think that I was counted twice because I shifted from my seat. The first vote only should be counted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. To answer the point raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I am sure it will be quite easy to verify, by checking the record, whether or not a vote or two was accidentally cast on my left. We can certainly check that. Because of the figures announced it is obvious, in any event, that no inaccurate result has been recorded or intended, I am sure. Accordingly, we can check the record and make sure that Hansard accurately reflects the votes cast.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Denis on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order, since it is our right to do so. We should make sure that the hon. member who has just said how he voted is really the only one who has voted in this way. But, unless I am mistaken, it seems to me there are many hon. members in the same situation and I would like them to tell the House how they voted in the division we have just taken. I think it may be a good idea to check right away what will appear tomorrow in Hansard.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, in response to the hon. member's remarks. I think that you, Mr. Speaker, explained the position clearly. I think the record will signify how my vote was cast, and my first vote is the right one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, while you are dealing with that point of order, will you tell the House what you intend to do about the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) who walked out in the middle of the taking of the vote on the amendment to motion No. 7?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was hoping that neither matter would be brought to the attention of the House. The fact is that it appears that a number of members to my left have voted twice. I hope the House will agree that, if after verification it is shown that some hon. members voted a second time, they did so inadvertently, as they explained to the House. It is their first vote of the two which, I take it, shall apply. That does not in any way change the result.

With respect to the point of order involving the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott), his action clearly contravened a custom and rule of the House, namely, one which says that no hon. member shall rise or move about during the taking of a vote. It is abundantly clear that during the taking of the vote on the amendment to motion No. 7 the hon. member for Mississauga rose while the yea votes were being counted. He resumed his seat during the taking of the votes against the amendment, then rose and left the Chamber. His actions clearly contravene the rules. Again, and fortunately for the House, that does not in any way interfere with the results of the vote and, for the moment, perhaps the best thing would be for the Chair to take under advisement the question as to whether any action ought to be taken in respect of the actions of the hon. member.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With regard to the next two votes on motions 8 and 9 it has been generally understood that these motions are tied in with No. 7. We hoped to show our support for the amendments and displeasure with the bill on division, and wish to dispose of that part of the bill without calling for a recorded vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is it the sense of the House that, a not uncomplicated result having been obtained on motion No. 7, motion No. 8 shall be deemed to be lost on division and that motion No. 9 shall be deemed to be lost on division? Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 8 (Mr. Friesen) negatived.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Friesen) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: There is before the House the further deferred division on motion No. 11 in the name of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). Shall the same result obtain as for the other two motions?

An. hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on motion No. 11.

The House divided on motion No. 11 (Mr. Wenman) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare motion No. 11 lost.

Motion No. 11 (Mr. Wenman) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: In earlier discussion it was understood that motion No. 10 was consequential upon any one of motions Nos. 7, 8, or 9. I take it that those motions having all been lost, there is no necessity for a division motion No. 10. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 10 (Mr. Friesen) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: There has been some suggestion that the House adjourn until 8:30 instead of eight o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, some hon. members would like to reflect on what they have done.

Some hon. Members: Hear,hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: By order of the House I therefore leave the chair until 8:30 later this day.

At 6:34 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8:30 p.m.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, with reference to motion No. 5. the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) indicated to me before dinner that she did not intend to proceed with that motion. I have passed this information on to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock and we should therefore proceed with motion No. 6.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there unanimous consent that Motion No. 5. be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 5 (Mrs. Holt) withdrawn.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock) moved Motion No. 6:

That Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended by deleting clause 2.

He said: Madam Speaker, the amendment I have submitted covers a small and seemingly innocuous provision in Bill C-58, but one which actually has subtle and far-reaching implications.

I would begin by referring hon. members to the record of the meetings of the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts at page 31:20. The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) was appearing before the committee and I should like to read the statement he made on December 4, 1975. He was answering a question put to him by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte).

If you take a look at what the Canada Council is doing in terms of supporting book publishing and supporting publishing in the literary field, in the social sciences and the humanities, in the learned journals, plus some of the things we are doing in the Department of the Secretary of State, you will see that collectively constitutes the elements of the cultural policies and the objectives that those policies are designed to serve.

I could provide that for you, I just do not have it here, but I have it in that form in my office. I would be pleased to let you have it if the committee were interested. In fact, I would frankly welcome a discussion by the members of the committee on that broader subject, because I often find that people do not fully understand what we are doing. That is obviously not correct.

This scares me. I think it is not only the prerogative but the responsibility of the Secretary of State to provide cultural facilities to the people of Canada. But when the Secretary of State begins talking about providing a cultural policy for the people of Canada I become frightened, because as I page through the history books I find stories of other nations which put forward cultural policies for their people and which came to a sad end. I invite the government to disassociate itself from any plan which proposes a cultural policy for the people of Canada—Cultural facilities, yes; a cultural policy, no!

I would therefore like to begin my speech this evening by offering some background information which I believe is pertinent to the discussion in which we are engaged. When we talk about cultural values we are, ultimately, talking about a conflict between the new and the old, between revolutionary and traditional values. There is a very delicate balance between the two, and I submit the legislation before us helps to destroy this delicate balance in our society.

I would begin by referring to the words of an individual who was very concerned about his culture, a man with whose work I am sure all hon. members are familiar. I refer to W. B. Yeats, a great Irish poet and a great Irish nationalist who was concerned not only with revolutionary ideas but with Irish tradition, working in areas like the theatre, poetry and the other media. What he wanted was a new Ireland, for himself, his family and his descendants. But the idea I want to impress upon the House is this: as much as he was imbued with revolutionary thinking and as much as he wanted a new world, a new Ireland for his children, when it came to his concern for his own daughter he left his revolutionary tendencies aside and wrote:

And may her bridegroom bring her to a house
Where all's accustomed, ceremonious . . .
How but in custom and in ceremony
Are innocence and beauty born?

It was all well and good for Yeats to be a revolutionary thinker, but when it came to his concern for his own daughter he looked not for revolution but for security. I might set against this two lines he had written a little earlier:

For arrogance and hatred are the wares
Peddled in the thoroughfares.

This, I believe, is the trend in our culture today. We are losing respect for the past, we are losing respect for those things that have been handed down to us, and we are coming quickly to that point to which Yeats referred when he said:

● (2040)

For arrogance and hatred are the wares
Peddled in the thoroughfares.

—because we do not have that connection with the past anymore. I would suggest to hon. members that in our quiet moments what we are looking for is not change as much as security.

Let me suggest, Madam Speaker, that Bill C-58 disregards this need for security when it includes in its measures a provision such as Section 19(4)(b) which states:

(b) any publication the principal function of which is the encouragement, promotion or development of the fine arts, letters, scholarship or religion.

I see no reason why we should single out these areas which are the preserves of our culture and give us ties to the past and security to the present. There is no reason why we should work on them.

I would, with your indulgence, Madam Speaker, like to present a rather lengthy but, I believe, consistent argument as to why this motion of mine should be adopted, and why journals relating to fine arts, letters, scholarship or religion ought to remain in Canada unmolested.

This is an age of specialization and I have heard it said that a specialist is someone who knows more and more about less and less. In our society we are demanding specialization ever earlier each year. It used to be that no one had to major or know what they were going to major in until late in their university years. Now we require high school students to know what their majors will be, and we are even beginning to require this of junior high kids, and pretty soon it will be that elementary school children will have to know what their majors are to be, and will have to know what they plan to do when they are adults.

More and more we are moving to this age of specialization. University students must specialize in their last years and become proficient in one field. The whole field of research forces the individual to focus on an ever-narrowing spectrum. There was a time when courses in biology, chemistry, physics, English, history and mathematics were enough and were sufficiently adequate. The more we discover about each field the more our curiosity became inflamed and, the more we gave closer and closer attention to the minutest detail. Now we have come to the place where there is no such thing any more as an insignificant detail. The microcosm today is just as important, if not more important at times, as a macrocosm, and perhaps even more mysterious and fascinating.

Years ago in biology one professor was doing research on one enzyme, and the guess at that time was that there were hundreds of enzymes to be studied. This man was studying only one. Now the study of biology is only at the beginning of the threshold of knowledge in that field and we are moving into areas of bio-physics and bio-chemistry, and on the other side into bio-mass. The more we specialize the more we are awed by complexities but also the more abstract we become.

Not too long ago a friend of mine was having trouble with her hand. She went to a general practitioner whom she usually consulted and that man sent her not to a specialist, not simply to a hand specialist, but to a specialist who specialized in the right hand. This is how abstract and how specialized we are becoming in our science today.

Where would we be today but for neurosurgeons, eye surgeons, aural surgeons, internal specialists, heart specialists, and maybe plastic surgeons? All of these specialist face the impact of extracting the area of specialization from the rest of the person.

It so happens that when patients visit doctors today they are no longer patients, they are cases. Social workers do not have people anymore, they have case loads. Doctors do not operate on people any more, they perform appendectomies, dentists perform extractions, psychiatrists treat manic depressives, paranoia, schizophrenia, etc. They do not treat people. We have become so specialized in terms of the ills of our society we are not treating people anymore, we are treating sicknesses. This is the threat of being professional. The organ demands all our attention till we forget the organism. The organism is so intricate we forget the psyche, and the psyche is so complex we forget the person. The astounding fact is that we are all three; we are body, soul and spirit. All three of these are related and all three need attention.

We have been so mesmerized by professionalism, with the abstract sections separated from the whole, that the parts too often have lost their meaning to the whole. I am reminded of a writer of some 150 years ago who found this particular situation facing his particular society. When we would have still thought it primitive he was already concerned with the complexities of his society when he said:

And he can read lectures upon innocence;

A miracle of scientific lore,
Ships he can guide across the pathless sea,
And tell you all their cunning; he can read
The inside of the earth, and spell the stars;
He knows the policies of foreign lands;
Can string you names of districts, cities, towns,
The whole world over, tight as beads of dew
Upon a gossamer thread; he sifts, he weighs;
All things are put to question; he must live
Knowing that he grows wiser every day
Or else not live at all, and seeing too
Each little drop of wisdom as it falls
Into the dimpling cistern of his heart:
For this unnatural growth the trainer blame,
Pity the tree.—Poor human vanity,

That is the tendency.

Mr. Sharp: Beautifully done.

Mr. Friesen: I see that the individual who is standing in for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appreciates poetry, and I compliment him for that.

An hon. Member: It's better than your usual speech.

Mr. Friesen: He could not but enjoy Wordsworth.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): He said that you are better than average tonight.

Mr. Friesen: The fact is I think so too!

An hon. Member: If it were only shorter!

Mr. Friesen: The fact is that we have abstracted ourselves in another devastating way. We are so pleased with what we have accomplished we are walking about, like Nebuchadnezzar saying, "Look at this great Babylon I have built; look what I have accomplished." We are just the same as he, so impressed with what we have accomplished we have forgotten that all our accomplishments are built on past wisdom.

Some months ago the Secretary of State introduced Bill C-33 and we passed it. It was designed to preserve our antiques, our works of art, and our cultural artifacts. That was a good bill, because you see the past is the prologue to the present. From the past we gain reference points which we need for today to measure ourselves. We think today that we have accomplished a lot by our architecture, our science, and our engineering. If we look at only our accomplishments and think we have arrived at a reasonable design and development, then all we need to do is look into the past and see that there were other civilizations which had done equally well, and in some cases maybe even better.

The anthropology books and the archaeology books are full of examples of past societies in which the plumbing, I am sure, was in many ways as good if not better than ours. The library in Alexandria was so filled with books that when the Turks captured the city they used the books as fuel for 20 years. Where would we be without the mathematics of Newton and Kepler, or the research of Pasteur?

Non-Canadian Publications

What would Buckminster Fuller have done without the mathematics of the Egyptians? Where would medicine be today without the work done by the Greeks and Moslems, and where would Picasso be without the exposure to the primitivism of African art? Bertholt Brecht learned from Shaw, who learned from Shakespeare, who learned from the Greeks. Here we have wheels within wheels within wheels. Unless we catch the inextricable bond we have with the past we lose our moorings, we drift on a sea of disassociated human entities.

An hon. Member: You are adrift.

Mr. Friesen: Some people here missed the drift a long time ago. Today we have become so cocky we have conned ourselves into an existential nightmare thinking that we can never discover our authentic selves unless we cut our moorings from each other and from our past.

An hon. Member: Look at yourself.

Mr. Friesen: Sometimes I do. I do examine myself on these scores. When we disassociate ourselves from the past that is where the confusion begins and is compounded, and we actually lose our identity. The beautiful part of life is that we find our identity when we relate to each other not separate from each other. We become persons when we identify with people rather than disassociate ourselves from them. We find our wholeness in cosmic relationships, not fragmented abstract ones. That is precisely what publications like M.D., Art or religious publications are all about. These publications are here not to see what they can get out of us but what they can impart to us.

They want to leave with us their richness and the fullness of relatedness. These periodicals join us to our humanity; they unite us to our total being. They enrich us by relating us to our past and to our present. These are the humanizing vehicles. They give the doctor, the engineer, the physicist, and the layman contact with themselves, and contact with their past. They do this so that these people can better relate to the people around about them.

Specialty periodicals abound. They sharpen the intellect. There are some whose total mission is to tenderize the heart. They are here to serve. And we want to make it more difficult for them. We want to see how we can complicate their work and make it more difficult for them to operate in Canada. Have we become so small, so smug, so isolated in our nationalism that we feel we have need of nothing? And is our national identity so fragile and our economy so brittle that we feel threatened by a few thousand magazines? Have we become so dehumanized that we have not only lost all feeling but do not even remember what it is like to have that need?

If we deny publications like M.D., fine arts periodicals or religious periodicals the right of free access into our offices, into our minds, and into our hearts, we are of all men most miserable. We will in fact hasten the day of 1984, a brave new world, a clockwork orange. If we let our feelings grow beyond our intellect we will become as confused children. But if we let our rational being, our intellect outstrip our sense of feeling, we will become machines, robots, goose-stepping our way to self destruction. We get periodicals like those I have mentioned not simply or primarily to preserve the periodical but rather to preserve ourselves and our humanity.

I know there are members in this House who are in the medical profession. I would like to pay a tribute to the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) who spoke on behalf of the periodical MD before the Christmas recess. He spoke in glowing terms of what a periodical like MD meant to him in his profession.

I recognize also that there are other members in this House from the medical profession who do not care for the magazine. I listened to the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) who said it was worthless so far as he is concerned. That is a choice he can make. I would simply refer hon. members to the editorial pages and to the letters to the editor, and let them read for themselves the testimonials other people have given to the periodical. They have stated what this magazine has meant to them. If there are hon. members in this House who feel it is of little value to them, let them ignore it. That is a choice they can make. But why should that be a reason to deny other members of the medical profession the right to the pleasure of reading this kind of a periodical?

I would hasten to point out that the purpose of this periodical is to provide that kind of information, that kind of cultural content that will give the doctors a new dimension in their practice, that will help them relate to their patients in a new and vital way, and which will in fact humanize their practice.

There are members of the profession in this House who have testified to that fact. When I read the letters to the editor and when I consider all the people who have asked for reprinted articles from MD I recognize that that publication serves a very valuable function in our society.

I know there are members in this House who feel that a periodical that goes to members of the profession free of charge threatens the publication industry. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) has indicated that it would in fact threaten industry in Canada. Really there is no such threat. MD of Canada does not compete with any other journal in Canada. Thus its elimination will in no way strengthen any other periodical in Canada because there is no periodical like it, nor does there seem to be one intended for the profession. If members think that a periodical that has its origin in the United States is a threat to us, we still have the Foreign Investment Review Act that has jurisdiction, and in that way we can consider any industry in Canada that has relationships with a foreign country. So I would simply ask members of the House to look at this periodical to see in what way it is a threat to the periodical industry in Canada, and to see whether the asset of having this kind of publication in our country outweighs the detriment.

We are in no way threatened by the periodicals. We are in fact the benefactors. Their research, skills and culture will make us richer for having these periodicals with us. I would ask hon. members to consider this motion and adopt it in order to preserve this dimension in our society.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) is always so eloquent with such beautiful phrases that I cannot bring myself to say anything against him, so I have researched the subject and I have come up with something that hon. members opposite will cherish just as I have cherished the words of the previous speaker.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is quoted in Hansard of June 14, 1965, as saying:

> I do not believe the two publications that are singled out merit this rather favourable treatment they are receiving.

As a matter of fact hon. members opposite at that time were busy arguing that the government had simply not gone far enough. However, at the outset I would like to re-emphasize my support for Bill C-58 and for our government's efforts to encourage healthy and independent Canadian magazine publishing and broadcasting industries. After all, that is the main objective of this legislation and it is an objective which I would hope no member of this House could disagree with or lose sight of through the course of this rather turgid debate in which we have engaged for some time.

However, much as I endeavour to extend Christian charity to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock—and of course we all know that we must extend charity to members opposite in this trying time for them—I can well see the new leader of the Tory party coming into his first caucus and addressing his colleagues, after being greeted with loud applause as he enters. He will select the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock and say:

> Speak the speech, I pray you
> As I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue;
> But if you mouth it, as many of your players do,
> I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines.

I need not go on, but that is the way it may be.

I find it difficult to reconcile the hon. member's amendment to Bill C-58 with the important objective of this piece of legislation. The hon. member is asking us to delete clause 2 from Bill C-58 or, in other words, to leave in the Income Tax Act subsection 19(4) which classifies as Canadian certain foreign owned publications which have as their principal function "the encouragement, promotion or development of the fine arts, letters, scholarship or religion." In return, of course, the Canadian edition of these publications must have made at least a token move toward the inclusion of Canadian content and Canadian editorial direction.

As far as this goes I considered it to be quite acceptable, but let us look for a moment at the government's reason for wanting to delete this clause and the arguments being put forward for its retention. The government has decided that, whatever contributions these magazines may make to Canadian culture, Canadian arts, letters, scholarship or religion, or to the Canadian publishing industry, such contributions do not justify the profits that they have made solely because of their artificial status as "Canadian" magazines.

The arguments against this move have ranged from the intrinsic quality of the magazines to nothing less than the "freedom of the press" and the "cultural deprivation" of this country to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock's own alleged concern about "the free concourse of information in a society" and his rather histrionic allusions to the decadence of imperial Persia and the fall of the Roman empire. I find it rather difficult to draw those analogies to this particular argument when what we are really speaking about are these magazines. It is hardly the Persian empire. In any event, really the most important part of these magazines' objections to their sudden disenfranchisement as ersatz Canadians is only one point.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member permit a question from the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Friesen: It pains me here, Madam Speaker, to hear this. I would just like to correct the record. I made no reference at all to either the Persian empire or the decline and fall of the Roman Empire.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mrs. Campagnolo: I should like to return to the question because I think it is very important, that we define what is really at the root of this disenfranchisement of these magazines since Bill C-58 does not prevent them from publishing in Canada. It does not prohibit them from writing about Canadian events or about events of interest to Canadian readers. Neither does it censor their contents, no matter from what source they are derived.

In reality all this bill and this section of the bill do are one thing. The bill prevents them from making as much money as they could if they were still to be called "Canadian" magazines. That is what is at the bottom of all this. It sounds rather mercenary, does it not, when it is put so bluntly? But stripped of its legaleese jargon that is the consequence of this part of Bill C-58 and, I submit, stripped of all the pious frothings over a selective interpretation of "freedom of speech" and "government censorship", that is the real concern of the magazines affected by Bill C-58. They are not concerned with cultural, religious or any other freedom, but the freedom to make a buck. That is what they are worried about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: The passage of this part of Bill C-58 will cost the specific magazines affected by it a considerable amount of money. I must state to the House that I would have a great deal more respect and even sympathy for the arguments that have been made by the publications affected by this legislation if these arguments at least had the intellectual integrity, not to say honesty, to admit that it is money that is at the root of the opposition to Bill C-58.

These magazines are in business to make a profit, and if they were not then they would not be in business. It is as simple as that. There is nothing wrong with making a profit. The passage of Bill C-58 will reduce or eliminate that profitability unless they conform with the requirements of the new law. Is that not, with all the fine words removed, the real and basic issue that we are facing?

I will cite as an example one of the magazines which I would like the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock to think about. He has pleaded for the continuation of its Canadian status under subsection 19(4). This is the magazine called MD of Canada, and I use it as an example and show it to members not because it is best in the field or for any other reason except that it happened to be at the top of my correspondence today when I was thinking about the hon. member's amendment. It is not because the arguments in it are any better or any worse than those in any other magazine attempting to avoid this provision of Bill C-58. What are the arguments of this magazine?

MD of Canada is a magazine owned by MD Publications Limited, a foreign and, to the best of my knowledge, U.S. corporation. It is "sent to Canadian physicians on a regular controlled circulation basis", that is what it says on the magazine, and it is free of charge. In other words, its revenues come solely from its advertising receipts.

MD of Canada's first objection to Bill C-58 is that it is "a publication of unique richness and quality both in cultural content and style". This is certainly true and I am the first to congratulate them on creating a book that is both visually beautiful and highly erudite. The content of their publication is without fault, I am sure, but this, I must point out, in no way makes it a Canadian magazine.

There are many beautiful and interesting magazines in this country, but unfortunately very few of them are Canadian. Why this justifies a continued artificial status for MD of Canada I simply cannot comprehend.

Then there is the argument that section 19(4) is designed for the benefit of Canadians wishing access to cultural and scientific journals and that they should be retained for the sake of these people. This is the hon. member's freedom of information argument. MD of Canada, we must note, is one of the magazines which would qualify as Canadian under this ruling.

However, this magazine goes on to point out that fears for Canada's cultural independence are not justified because the government can prevent other similar magazines from being established in Canada through the Foreign Investment Review Act, if it so desires. Of course what it does not state is that this would lock it in its own position as Canadian and free it from the threat of competition, much like the fox already inside the chicken coop urging the farmer to lock the door so that all those other foxes cannot get in. It is an argument which would do wonders for the magazine's bank account, but not, I am afraid, a great deal to justify its concern over the free movement of information within this country.

Moving along to the third line of defence we find MD of Canada arguing that the passage of Bill C-58 would probably result in its ceasing to publish in Canada, thus depriving 30,000 Canadian physicians access to the only journal of medico-historical writing available to them, and of course, the implied ceasing, according to their presentation to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, of world-wide coverage of Canadian medical events and the bringing to the attention of physicians around the world outstanding Canadians such as Banting, Best, Grenville and, Lord forbid for I cannot understand it, Stephen Leacock.

While this last argument does not merit serious criticism in the context of any reputable international medical journal, we should look for a moment at the first problem, that is, that Canadian doctors will no longer receive MD of Canada. I submit that it does not require too great a stretch of the imagination to assume that within a very short time Canadian physicians will be receiving the MD magazine from the United States on a regular controlled circulation basis. So what is the real loss to Canadian physicians?

The Canadian content in the January, 1976, issue amounted by a generous count to 12 pages including letters to the editor, the title page, and a review of American movies about British detectives, as well as a large photograph of an alley which might have been a Canadian alley. The real loss to MD of Canada is the advertising revenue which makes it a profitable business, and that is what we are talking about. That is the real and basic issue, and I find that I am beginning to have a decreasing amount of respect for foreign owned corporations which do not have the honesty to admit that that is why they publish magazines and broadcast in Canada.

The same argument hon. members opposite will find holds true for that outraged paragon of virtue whose cause they have seen fit to adopt, Time Incorporated. Time's objection to the Cullen rule is based on nothing else but a desire to make money at the expense of us dumb and gullible Canadians, and for Time to say otherwise is the sheerest hypocrisy.

Subsection 19(4) of the Income Tax act has been in effect for over 10 years. Why did we hear nothing from Time Incorporated about its so-called unholy censorship until the government moved to have that subsection, which applied to them, removed? Canadian magazines have not complained. Why did Reader's Digest all of a sudden cease to be concerned about this vile censorship once it found that digests were not covered by the wording of the clause? The answer is obvious. The answer is just and only money.

The hon. members opposite who have risen to the defence of that poor outraged near-virgin Time Incorporated, and its sister neo-Canadian publications and television stations, are either blindly naive in their pursuit of a rather strange version of justice or are just perhaps incredibly opportunistic in their desire to make short term debating points at this sensitive time and at the expense of the government. Knowing the opposition to be totally sincere in their abhorrence of opportunism, I ask the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock to give serious reconsideration to his amendment to this bill. As the bill currently stands I, and I believe a good number of responsible members of this House can, do, and will support it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, first I should like to compliment the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) who did such an excellent job in her speed contest. I think she is the fastest speaker I have ever heard in this House, and I want to compliment her on that.

An hon. Member: She is the fastest reader.

Mr. Rynard: Somebody said she is a fast reader. That does not matter; I could not read that fast.

I should like to speak in favour of this motion which asks for the complete exemption of Modern Medicine, or

MD, fine arts magazines, religious magazines, medical magazines and scientific journals. It must occur to all of us that scientific knowledge from around the world is something against which we should not put up barriers. When we consider that Canada has a population of 22 million and that this year we cut back on research, we need all the more to get all the information we can from every country in the world. Surely we want to be as well informed as possible.

Modern Medicine examines medical research from around the world, and all one has to do is look at a copy to see the abstracts which are studied and the list of scientific and medical men reviewing those publications. In Canada there is no way we could review to the same extent. When we say Canada is producing this, it is true, Canada does produce it, and I am proud of it. It is printed in those journals in other countries to advertise Canada and its research.

I want to say that those publications are made possible, and they are dealt with in hundreds of abstracts and papers written by the world's most eminent authorities. They are produced from the top specialists in the world, and of course Canadian articles are published as well. They are distributed in other countries and keep them informed of what we are doing in Canada.

Medical magazines, scientific magazines, and religious magazines all tend to enhance our knowledge of scientific achievements and research. To put a wall around Canada and say that with our 22 million people and some 27,000 doctors we are capable of producing this is a misnomer. In the United States there are ten times that many, and around the world Germany, Great Britain, France, Japan and other countries are producing people who are doing wonderful scientific research. This would be the most retrograde step one could imagine for the world of science or research.

This year we cut back about 10 per cent of our research because of a lack of funds. If we ever needed this scientific knowledge, it is right now. Medicine and science are universal and international. It is absolutely imperative to have foreign sources of medical literature to keep up what we are doing. The attractive formats of those magazines are seen in doctors' offices and in other professional offices.

Modern Medicine goes into 25,000 Anglophone doctors' offices and 7,000 Francophone doctors' offices. This will hurt those Francophone doctors more than the Anglophone doctors, who can pick up scientific journals from the United States to read.

On a qualified circulation basis, as the hon. member said, it is true that they do not pay anything for it, but it comes in. It is read because it is produced in a very attractive form.

● (2120)

Here is a sample of what comes in through Modern Medicine: "New Perspectives in the Search for Non-Narcotic Analgesics"; "A Falling Hemoglobin Signaled the Problem"; "Drug Interference with Chemical Tests"; "Failure of Cardiac Pacing in Hyperkalemia", which we do not know all that much about. "How much do You know about Clinical Psychiatry?" Then "Abstracts" pages 880 to 943.

"Books and reviews" from around the world pages 946 to 950. Also "In a Jocular Vein", so that it puts everybody in a good humour.

Now let us take a look at MD of Canada, about which we are talking. The editorial essay is "The Magic Moment", then "Mirror of Medicine—Brazil and the Conquest of Diseases". In other words, here in Canada we will know what is going on down there in Brazil, a huge country that is growing fast and has great development taking place. And then "MD Letters—What the Medical Profession is Thinking about Itself". "MD Voices, Medicine and Scientific News", in other words, the voice of the people in the medical field.

Next there is, "National Conference on Breast Cancer", one of the big killers in the cancer field in the world today and one we are all worried about and trying to find a better method of handling than we have now. All you have to do is look at the statistics.

We read "Symposium on Headaches", "Medicine Around the World"—would we not use a treatment if it came from Japan, China, or the Far East if it would cure cancer? I just leave that with you. Then we have "MD Pictorial—Kenya's Flying Nun" about the type of work she is doing. "World of Medicine—Armchair Anthropologist", "Lonely Lyricist", "Renaissance Realist". Then, "MD Entertainment: Reviews" on films and books read and recommended; "Camera Eye"; and finally "Product Index".

I would submit that in itself proves the necessity of allowing those magazines to come into Canada and of allowing them liberty in the tax field.

Mention was made in this House recently of Lassa disease, Madam Speaker, and very few members knew anything about it. I had not heard of it myself until it was mentioned to me by some missionaries. In Africa the disease has a mortality rate in the ordinary healthy person of 20 per cent to 25 per cent, and for pregnant women the mortality rate goes up to 50 per cent. It was discovered through the research of three nurses who went to Africa to study it.

Usually in that part of Africa if you get sick you have either malaria or typhoid. They dose you with quinine, and if that does not effect a cure then you get the typhoid vaccine. The nurses had a patient who died, then one nurse died, and another. The third nurse was taken ill and was flown back to New York City. At Columbia University it was discovered the disease was caused by a virus in the blood, and so by 1971 it was labelled as a virus disease suspected to come from a rodent. The scientific journals did not know whether the disease was due to a bite or food contamination, or why it came from a rodent in west Africa. These matters are still to be researched.

In the U.S. they were able to take blood from the nurse and isolate the virus. The blood could be used as a toxin finder or a complement fixation test to diagnose the disease. All this means is that if you have the disease and are among the lucky 70 per cent or 80 per cent who get better it is because you have in your blood the antibodies that kill the virus. By using that blood they can diagnose the disease in the next patient. The only places where this complement fixation test can be carried out are Atlanta, Georgia; New York City; London, England.

Non-Canadian Publications

I want to give credit to members for speaking their minds in the way they have. This is a free country, and surely the greatest freedom of all is that these scientific journals can enter this country from all over the world. We are all part of humanity, whether black, yellow or white, whether we live in the Far East, the Middle East, or North America. Anything we can do to help disseminate knowledge in the medical field or scientific field must be done. The Russian and American astronauts must have had an exchange of ideas to accomplish what they did. It would be a backward step not to accept this amendment.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, for a change this is going to be very brief. I want to register my support for the motion proposed by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

I can never match my friends and colleagues, the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) and the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) for glibness and articulateness. They, after all—and they have made it quite clear to me—have worked long in the electronic media. Although I have hundreds of hours in radio and television, it was not my whole career.

Since I have lost the battle—I do hope I have not lost the war—in this fight over content control and freedom, I just want to say one thing. I would say tonight Canadian nationalism, has become rather a farce in this House. In debate on the amendment regarding medical publications underline this. A heart is a heart is a heart, regardless of whether it is American, French, or German or if it comes from Afghanistan; cancer is cancer is cancer, whether it is American, French, or German or comes from Afghanistan. But here we are Canadianizing heart disease and narrowing it into a nationalistic frame, because of advertising and a strange and warped law. This magazine is to be driven out of Canada.

I should like to remind this House that in the last ten years since this tax equality—I will not call it tax privilege because I do not go along with that myth—it is not a benefit to the periodical publisher, but a right to the advertiser, there were 88 new Canadian magazines born since 1965, and they are flourishing and have a circulation of over 10,000 each in Canada, 70 of them in English and 18 in French. They have a combined circulation of 209 million annually.

We are fighting this bill. At this time, when certain periodicals are developing, growing in what is a tenuous market, big magazines all around the world have died. The Minister of Communications said that only 30 jobs are involved if the KVOS animation studio closes in Vancouver, for example. The field is small and highly specialized. I wonder if there are 60 animators in international TV and movie production in all Canada. Our periodical business has grown, and anything done in this House, any attempt to damage the magazine business, I shall fight.

I therefore support the amendment of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to join this debate, to become involved in the fray and to make a few comments. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) made an ethereal speech this evening.

Mr. Nystrom: A flowery speech.

Mr. Young: It was flowery, as my colleague across the floor says. I was bothered by some of the things he said in support of his amendment. He asked for a special exemption for scientific, technical, and cultural magazines. In other words, he wants advertisers in these magazines to enjoy continued exemption from tax.

It is unfair to ask the average Canadian taxpayer who does not receive these magazines, because their circulation is controlled, to bear the tax burden which ought to be borne by the advertisers in those magazines. Why should advertisers be given such benefits free? My colleague from Skeena amply illustrated the benefits and profits such magazines enjoy. In the long run the Canadian taxpayer must bear the cost if taxes are deferred or lessened. Why should the average Canadian taxpayer pay for the advertisers' costs?

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock referred to medical, scientific, and cultural magazines. I point out that members of the medical profession, who are among the wealthiest professionals in the country, receive medical magazines entirely free. The drug companies pay for publication and circulation, and the profits derived from such a small circulation are enormous. Ordinary magazines charge what the market will bear. I do not think increased costs to the advertisers would affect advertising in such magazines.

Hon. members speaking to this amendment and speaking in the debate generally have raised fatuous and phony arguments about censorship. They suggest we are trying to close the borders to magazines, that we want to prevent the inflow of technical, medical, and scientific knowledge. Nothing is further from the truth. Bill C-58 in no way attempts to close the border to the inflow of knowledge. It is a tax measure only.

We discussed censorship in committee. Actually one could draw an analogy between our copyright laws and Bill C-58. Our copyright laws guarantee property rights in material which has been written or published. The copyright law says that no person shall in any way use language which is substantially the same as the original covered by copyright or in any way use it, print it or publish it, in order to make a profit. We protect the property right of the originator, the creator of the material written or published. Bill C-58 merely says that you cannot reprint or republish in this country, in substantially the same form, material which was printed or published originally in another country, and claim a tax exemption when so doing. I know that is a rough analogy only between our copyright laws and Bill C-58.

The committee mentioned the copyright aspect to various publishers and writers appearing before it, and we noted that they were all in favour of copyright laws. When we showed them that copyright laws work as Bill C-58 will work, they changed their attitude on the question of censorship; not one of them wanted to repeal our copyright legislation.

An hon. member opposite earlier this evening suggested that some hon. members on my side of the House think magazines like Modern Medicine and MD of Canada are worthless, or not worth protecting.

Mr. Friesen: Who said that?

Mr. Young: It was said on the hon. member's side of the House. I remind the hon. member that I had the distinct pleasure of speaking with and examining Dr. Gibson, the publisher of MD of Canada. Many hon. members congratulated him on the excellent magazine he and his colleagues publish. Nobody on my side of the House feels it is not a good magazine. It is an excellent magazine.

An hon. Member: Not all Liberals think that.

Mr. Young: I will do my best to change the opinion of the hon. member from Halton. It is an excellent magazine. I am not a medical person, but I enjoy reading it and told Dr. Gibson as much, even though our views on Bill C-58 were not the same. I told him how interesting I find the magazine and asked him to continue sending it to me. I know that once we pass Bill C-58 I shall still receive my copy of MD of Canada and still enjoy reading it I know the good doctor will send it, because he is a man of exemplary character. I do not expect Bill C-58, after it passes, to prevent my receiving the magazine.

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock wants us to grant a continued tax exemption for advertisers who advertise in Modern Medicine, MD of Canada, and several similar magazines. Why should we continue to grant special exemptions for such magazines? We did it several years ago for Reader's Digest and Time. Now, several years later, we must correct the problems our earlier actions created.

We know that initiatives are being taken at this time to allow foreign publications to become involved with the scientific, technical, and religious magazine fields in this country. Already I foresee that if we do not encourage Canadian companies in this country to publish in these fields, if we do not act quickly, we shall find ourselves facing some of our present difficulties again some time in the future. We will have the same problem in this one isolated field in another ten, 15 or 20 years down the road, and we will have to go through the same thing again.

In the early stages of this debate and in committee we heard from members opposite. I do not think I would be taking them out of context if I were to say that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and others on that side had no great concern over the basic principle of Bill C-58. If they had a question as to what we were doing, it was with the mechanics of it. As to principle, there were voices of agreement that the principle was right and that maybe we should have done it all ten years ago.

I find it passing strange that having to come to this stage of the debate we now find members opposite saying "No, no, we cannot do this, we do not believe in it." If anything has changed, it is their principles. There is now an outcry that we should create for ourselves another problem which will come up again if we do not look after it now. They have now begun to argue against the basics of the earlier points they tried to make.

My colleague from Skeena spoke extremely well on the situation of profits and just what is involved in operating these magazines. It is true from our investigations we found that all the profits either go out of the country or are held in a corporate or separate account in this country. The share-holders who have a right to the profits are outside this country. The profits which in large part arise because of the tax write-offs do not help the Canadian consumer but flow outside the country.

These are limited circulation magazines paid for by the drug houses, not the doctors. There is no reason why, at the extent of adding two or three more pages of advertising in either of the magazines, they would not be up to the same ground as if C-58 had not taken place.

An hon. Member: But the doctors pay a subscription.

Mr. Young: The doctors do not pay a subscription now. Perhaps they should pay a subscription. That would make more sense than burdening the average Canadian taxpayer.

These magazines have an almost virtual control of the field in Canada at the present time. The arguments put up by members opposite sound very much like arguments almost requesting or pressing for the protection of a virtual monopoly. There are few magazines engaged in this field. If there is anything that does not need protection in the course of business today it is someone with a near monopoly of the market.

The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) said that scientific, medical and technological bodies to a large degree are the same the world over. I would not disagree with that. As far as medicine is concerned, the body here is the same as in China, India, South America or wherever. Our doctors may treat diseases in different ways, but really we do not differ.

Bill C-58 will in no way close the borders of this country to the inflow of medical, technical and scientific knowledge. It is for the simple reason that these are the same the world over that the information will continue to come in, before C-58 or after. It is the same reason that doctors in this country will continue to receive and to use the same type of medical knowledge now as they ever have. That is true whether it is a Francophone doctor or Anglophone doctor. The case is the same, the body is the same, the technology is the same, and the information will continue to come into this country.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the origin of Section 19(4) of the Income Tax Act was founded in a spirit of phony or pseudo-nationalism in 1965. I remember very well the time of that budget when these proposals were initially made. I make no apology for the things I said at that time, criticizing the proposals in the context they were made at that time. However, to take out of context quotations made in 1965 on a bill presented under much different circumstances is to distort the truth.

It was almost a collection of cheap shots that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mrs. Campagnolo) was making tonight, reading as though it were from a prepared text from I don't know where, just trying to get things on the record.

I am a little more interested in the tax aspect of this than the so-called benefits or tax advantages enjoyed by publications that are subject to Section 19(4). Are the profits or the benefits for those publications? They are not. The expense is that of the Canadian taxpayer advertising in those magazines, placing advertising directed to the Canadian market.

My colleague, the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), speaking on MD and Modern Medicine said that they are technical magazines for the benefit of Canadians. The research, knowledge, writing and choice of articles that appear in those magazines are for the benefit of Canadian as well as American doctors. To say suddenly that these publications are for the entire benefit of the publishers is absolute nonsense.

Why should a Canadian business concern, whether it is a subsidiary of a foreign house or an entirely Canadian owned or controlled pharmaceutical house or medical equipment manufacturer, be deprived of what is reasonable, what is the custom, and what is given to all taxpayers?

My heart bleeds for the concern on the other side for the ordinary taxpayer. A lot of humbug has entered into this debate with regard to this special treatment of taxpayers. The taxpayer is the Canadian business that advertises in those magazines. After all, the publication is carried by a Canadian company. There is no foreign publication that can carry on business in Canada unless it is a taxpayer. This idea of siphoning off all the profits to some foreign jurisdiction free of Canadian tax, and that is the suggestion, is totally wrong.

If anybody from outside this country carries on business in Canada as a corporation, and they are all corporations, they are obliged to register as foreign companies and they become Canadian taxpayers. The Canadian government levies it income tax in such cases in the same way as it does on Canadians generally. The Income Tax Act says nothing regarding the nationality of corporations as far as these provisions are concerned. So it seems to me that hon. members who have suggested that somehow profits are favourably syphoned off to other jurisdiction because they do not pay Canadian taxes, totally miss the picture.

Take the position of a Canadian advertiser in these publications. I will refer to Modern Medicine and MD. No one has suggested that these are poor magazines. They are highly qualified technical journals. All right, they are paid for by advertising and many of the advertisers are Canadians who are entitled to deduct a legitimate business expense from their incomes when arriving at their taxable income. Simply because the material, under the Cullen rule, an arbitrary rule and therefore a reprehensible one, comes from foreign sources, Canadian doctors and others will, in effect, be deprived of benefits they have derived if the magazines are not circularized in Canada. I think the publications themselves could quite legitimately say they would restrict their gratuitous distribution to Canadian doctors and to others interested in medical matters. But simply because these magazines might get their editorial content from a foreign source, these publications are to be placed out of bounds. The acceptance of Canadian advertising promoting Canadian-made or distributed goods, and therefore for the benefit of a Canadian operation, is to be curtailed.

If this is the type of business expense which is to be curtailed because it has a foreign taint, what about the expenses incurred by businessmen attending conferences abroad? Their expenditures are made away from home. The knowledge is picked up elsewhere. There are many types of business expense which are legitimately incurred abroad. This is an introverted attitude toward what Canadian business ought to be able to do. It seems to me that here we are inviting the reverse. Remember, these swords are two-edged. There could be Canadian publications which would carry, say, American advertising directed to Americans. I do not know whether the volume is very great. But can you imagine the reaction of hon. members opposite, who so assiduously—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): So blindly.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —support this bill, if the United States government were to cause to be enacted a similar measure under the United States income tax legislation? There would be cries of outrage from that side.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Tears of rage.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My hon. friend from Grenville-Carleton says there would be tears of rage. His language is perhaps more flowery than mine, but the meaning is the same. In many of these provisions which relate to income tax we should treat others as we expect them to treat us. I do not think United States law is as chauvinistic as this particular proposal.

Should we follow such a course as this for reasons of cheap nationalism? After all, the minister has made his peace with Reader's Digest. He has not disclosed what kind of a deal has been made, and this will be the subject of some remarks by my colleagues later in the debate. What about some of the other publications concerned? Has peace been made with the owners of the Red Deer Advocate and other newspapers in British Columbia, as announced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) in Red Deer on Saturday night? What was the deal there? What are the circumstances and what will be the application of the Cullen rule? It is very easy for the Advocate and the others to take the line they did with regard to publishing. But what about the content? This is something to which a lot of members object. It is arbitrary. We do not have anything like it on our statutes.

I find it passing strange that ministers like the President of the Privy Council, and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) should now adopt the mantle of protectors of Canadian publications. I ask: which ones though, primarily? Is it the gang in Toronto? Is it the friends of the government in the publishing field?

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CUBA—POSSIBLE REVIEW OF AID PROGRAM IN VIEW OF INVOLVEMENT IN ANGOLAN WAR

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on February 6 I directed a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with regard to CIDA loans to Cuba. My question was as follows:

> Will the government be reviewing any CIDA loans or grants to Cuba now its troops are engaged in the Angola conflict, and if Cuba has managed to become involved in wars, should this not disallow its receipt of aid as an underprivileged country?

● (2200)

The Prime Minister completely evaded my question when he stated "Our aid program is not linked to the ideology of a particular country". His answer in no way related to my question.

I then questioned the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), asking him if there was a clause in CIDA contracts to cut off aid to a country if it suddenly finds it has money to fight in a war, and the minister stated there were no such clauses. There definitely should be such a clause in CIDA or CUSO contracts.

The idea behind CIDA aid is to help underprivileged people in underprivileged countries. Cuba cannot be considered underprivileged when it is engaged in the Angolan war. War is a costly business today and Cuba must be spending millions as it is reported to have had 12,000 troops in Angola for the past four months. Now a statement out of London by Zaire's foreign minister Karl Nguza says he has "reason to believe" Cuban and MPLA troops will be tempted to invade his country after the war in Angola ends. Canadian taxpayers do not want their tax dollars sent to communist countries which are engaged in wars.

I want to make it perfectly clear that I am referring to aid and not to trade. Canadians generally have no objection to having a sound trade agreement with a communist country, but supplying aid and cash to a communist country that is engaged in a costly war is an entirely different matter. The Cuban intervention appears to be on a large scale and must impose a considerable burden on the Cuban economy. If Cubans can engage in a war, they do not require CIDA grants and low interest loans. The loan figures range from $23 million to $100 million at the ridiculously low interest rate of 3 per cent. Many Canadians would like to have such a low rate of interest in order to buy homes or other commodities. At the moment Cuba has an outstanding line of credit of $10 million and the question is, is this money being used to finance its involvement in Angola?

CIDA published a strategy paper last September that warned there are a number of third world countries which have entered a period of permanent emergency. Our aid should be directed to those countries, not countries which can afford to become involved in a war. The majority of Canadians, I am sure, do not object to doing our share in helping starving nations.

The Prime Minister's visit to Cuba and the comments he made while there have certainly caused confusion around the world. To add to the confusion the Prime Minister has dispatched Ivan Head, his foreign policy adviser, to London to explain what the Prime Minister said or did not say while in Cuba. That is another matter and not what I am mainly concerned about tonight.

I want to repeat that in the future CIDA contracts with underprivileged or underdeveloped countries should have clauses under which aid would be immediately cut off if those countries became engaged in a war, or their economic situation improved. In addition, an immediate examination should be made of the present CIDA contracts to see if there is any possible way of halting aid to Cuba while she is engaged in the Angola war, and I certainly hope there are no negotiations going on at the present time to grant further aid or cash to Cuba.

I hope the parliamentary secretary can enlighten the Canadian people on this very important subject tonight. In closing, let me say that the latest report today states that Cuba has up to 7,000 troops and advisers in the Middle East, 4,000 men in Syria, 3,000 in south Yeman, and 2,000 in Africa apart from the 12,000 in Angola. Cuba hardly seems like a country which needs CIDA aid from Canada.

Mr. Walter Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a few details on the Canadian help program extended to Cuba. I would first mention that that country's poverty is below the $500 per capita level per year, which compares with Trinidad and Tobago, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Jamaica and other countries with which Canada pursues a cooperation program. I would further note that the Cuban government has given very high priority, in its development efforts, to the redistribution of goods and services, and that its whole plan is closely linked to the social and economic development of the Cuban people. The Canadian help program is related to the top priority areas of Cuba's development plan. Our effort is basically aimed at providing goods and services capable of generating development.

To date, the total Canadian help extended to Cuba amounts to $14.2 million of that amount, 35 per cent will have been spent before the end of the current fiscal year, and the remainder will be spent during the following 18 months.

The technical assistance program totals $4.2 million, in the form of grants. It includes projects such as these: The CUJAE project, aiming at increasing the number of specialized engineers in Cuba, with $1,147,000 grant; the animal health research project, with a Canadian grant of about $154,000; the citrus industry development project, a $505,000 grant; the fishing industry stimulation project, $1,705,000; the project involving the establishment of a research and development centre on conversion of sugar cane residues into paper, a $300,000 grant; the project aimed at reinforcing the medical equipment maintenance system in medical and hospital centres, a $275,000 grant.

The other programs are similar in nature and always meet specific needs. The government of Canada takes the required steps so as to ensure that Canadian funds are used for the projects they were intended for.

A line of credit of $10 million under the form of a loan at an interest rate of 3 per cent has been granted to Cuba. It supposes the purchase from Canada of equipment necessary to the development of Cuba in priority areas like agriculture, public health and scientific research. All the items supplied through this credit are submitted to a close interdepartmental study to ensure that they are in keeping with the objectives agreed on at the time the credit was granted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary but the three minutes available to him have now expired.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to refer to a matter I raised on February 10 pertaining to applications by veterans for pensions. At that time in reply to my question the minister gave a stock answer which he had given me three years earlier, and followed this up in reply to a question by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) with another stock answer. I tried to pursue this matter further because I was not satisfied.

I should like at this time to recite the chronology of the events leading up to that question. An applicant submitted an application in May, 1973. He waited about six months and then wrote to the Pension Commission, who in turn informed him it would take about a year and a half. He waited until the following February 19. Then he gave me a copy of the letter he received from the government in which he was told it would be about 18 months before he would have any kind of a response.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert at about that time rose on the subject, and I did not feel it was necessary to duplicate his question. At that time, as I have said, the minister gave the stock answer in respect of the number of applications processed and so on. I then went over and spoke to the minister personally. I also wrote him a letter in which I told him that I had been advised that if we asked to have the application withdrawn it would lose its priority and go to the bottom of the list. I went to the minister with the thought that if he made an appeal this might speed up the application.

I then wrote to the applicant, informing him that I had spoken to the minister. I received an interim reply from the minister in a lengthy letter explaining the situation in the same terms he had explained to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) why it took so long. I sent a note to the applicant giving the minister's reply.

I then received a letter from the minister stating that he had checked with the commission and that the application was put on a priority basis. That was in May, 1974, about a year after the application had been filed. This was done on a priority basis, I was told. In January I heard from him again. I had assumed that everything was in order. At this point I had other applicants with similar cases which they asked me to check into.

In January of this year the applicant suggested that something must be sadly wrong when one can fight a war in six years but an application cannot be processed in three years. I then contacted the special assistant to the minister.

We are constantly being told that we should not bother the commission because if we do, the individual application will go to the bottom of the pile. Surely the commission has enough intelligence to label these applications. Application No. 160 would come between 159 and 161. Surely they can pull out application No. 160 and see what the order is, and then give the applicant an idea as to when his application will be processed. However, I could not get a response from them.

Having gone through all the trouble of trying to help this applicant I think I have a legitimate grievance after three years, and perhaps the commission should wake up, if that is what is necessary.

What really concerns me is that the commission and the special assistant to the minister keep telling me, every time we make an inquiry, that we should not ask to have the application brought forward because if that is done it will lose its order of priority. Yet the minister gave me an assurance that it was taken care of on a priority basis. If I cannot ask a question concerning an application, how can I be of any use to my constituents?

I feel there is something wrong with the commission. Unfortunately, I believe they should be given a jolt. The applicant suggested to me that I should not bother them because he believes the commission is antagonistic toward him. Other applicants have told me the same thing. I do not want the commission to feel antagonistic to any applicant. These veterans have a right to apply to the commission and to receive some consideration. Certainly they deserve quicker service than they have been receiving from the commission. Any citizen of Canada is entitled to that much, and certainly veterans are entitled to that much more consideration than they have been receiving to date.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): It is a pleasure to reply to the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) regarding the processing of pension applications.

At the present time it takes about a year to prepare the statement of case after an application for an entitlement board is received. The staff working in this area has been increased substantially so that the time lag is being rapidly reduced, and by the end of the year should be no more than four to five months.

The number of first applications awaiting decision was 3,182 as of the end of January, 1976. The number of claims considered at that level in 1975 was 9,239. In the same period there were 2,721 applications for entitlement boards and over 2,200 such claims were heard.

In so far as delays in adjudication are concerned, there are no cases at the first level of which the commission is aware which have been outstanding for anywhere near three years. At the end of January, 1976, there were only 28 on record on which the decision had been outstanding for 15 months or more.

The commission has been steadily reducing the time lag between the date of application and the date of decision. The average length of time required to adjudicate a pension claim is now 6.8 months. A year ago it was close to 12 months. It is now 57 years since the end of World War I and 30 years since the end of World War II. Most of the claims now being made relate to conditions which did not manifest themselves for possibly 20 to 60 years after discharge. The commission has the responsibility under the Pension Act to find evidence and ways and means of relating today's disability to a time factor or possibly an episode which may have occurred 34 to 60 years ago, and these include heart conditions, deafness, arthritis and so on. These are afflictions of age, but the commission tries to separate the age aspect from the attributability aspect and relate the condition to the period of military service. In many cases this is an almost impossible task. The relatively simple claims such as gunshot wounds were considered long ago.

The purpose of the Canadian Pension Commission is to inquire and to try to arrive at the true state of affairs, and not to try to advance or defeat any particular point of view. The commission examines the facts and tries to determine whether a claim is valid. There is no adversary system. The commission does not oppose a claim, nor does anyone else. It examines the evidence and available information, and makes a decision.

I should just like to say that the hon. member for Mackenzie quoted a particular case, and I know the minister and myself would be glad to look into it again for him to see just what is the difficulty.

AIR TRANSPORT—POSSIBILITY OF RESTRICTIONS ON UNILINGUAL PILOTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to speak about the question of language use in air traffic control. I do so not as a politician but as a professional pilot who has ten years' flying under my belt in international and national air spaces, and I am still actively flying. I take this opportunity to avail myself of a rather useless forum simply because I have something to put on the record. I say useless because there are only five of us in the Chamber tonight, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is not one of them.

A policy has been implemented in Quebec where two languages are being used in air traffic control. I do not speak tonight of anything other than safety, and I want to put on the record that safety in the air lanes in Canada over Quebec air space is being jeopardized for the sake of political expediency. I forecast that there will be a disaster. It will be a fatal disaster, of minor or major proportions, and the minister and the government will be entirely to blame.

In the seven minutes I have there is no way I can advance all the arguments I have to propose with respect to the jeopardizing of safety, but I want those who are here tonight, and perhaps those who might read these remarks, to imagine themselves on the flight deck of an Air Canada flight with the weather being 3,000 feet overcast, with perhaps two miles in fog. That is pretty good weather for an approach to, let us say, the airport at Quebec city. The wind is calm, and we on the Air Canada flight deck have been cleared for an ILS or instrument landing system approach. We have just changed to tower frequency on a radio which carries 380 frequencies on one of the radios on our flight deck. We call up the tower saying that this is Air Canada established on the ILS. The tower replies that we are number one. That means we are number one for landing.

Now you are over the outer marker and you want to tell the tower this, but you have to wait while the following conversation takes place between the tower and another aircraft.

Tower says: "Are you ready for immediate, United?"

United answers: "Affirmative".

Tower: "United, you are clear to position and hold",

United being on the ground and being ready to taxi out for take-off.

You say: "Air Canada inside the marker gear down."

Tower answers: "Air Canada continue".

I am leaving out names and flights and numbers in this narrative because I am telling you something that actually happened in the air over Quebec air space on January 25 last.

At this point you do not know, on the Air Canada flight deck, which runway the other aircraft is occupying. Remember, the wind is calm. But you would not have to be very clever to at least suspect that the United flight is in front of you on the runway you are about to land on.

You say to the Tower: "We are down to 500 feet," and you call for landing clearance.

Tower comes back: "United clear for take-off; Air Canada clear to land."

As I say, Madam Speaker, this happened. As the tower says this you are passing through 400 feet, still in cloud through ILS approach. You have already decided, on the flight deck; you know the aircraft is there. You suspect it is on the same runway, and if it is there you are going to go around again.

At 300 feet you come out of cloud and get a view of the rear end of a 727 starting down the runway. You say to the first officer, "Go around." That does not go across to the tower. You say to the tower, after you have paused while your hands are busy in the cockpit on the go around: "Air Canada going around."

Tower pauses a few seconds during which Air Canada, with you on the flight deck, re-enters the cloud and you pass over the United flight.

Tower says: "United abort your take-off"—this said by a different voice than before.

In this instance all ended happily, but my point is that if you just change this scenario into a bilingual situation, remembering the seconds that you have with aircraft, and the combined approach cruising speed at 1,200 miles an hour in some situations—what if no one is prepared? Change that scenario into a two language situation, lower the limits a little bit, and instead of 400 feet you have 250 feet or 300 feet—you do not have two miles, you have one mile. Perhaps you have the makings of a disaster. Indeed you will.

The controller made an error in this situation. Anyone can make a mistake, but remove the ability of the other parties in airplanes to monitor air traffic at any airport and that mistake will not be known—it will not permit the captain of an airplane to analyse the situation and make decisions which might avoid a disaster.

This situation ended happily, but with a bilingual situation there would have been a major disaster. That is what is going to happen.

I speak only to the question of safety and I urge the government to reconsider very ill conceived policy of implementation of two languages in one of our provinces before a fatal disaster occurs—a fatal disaster for which only the government can be blamed.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I first address myself to my hon. friend's beginning remarks about this particular proceeding in the House of Commons being, to use his words, "a useless forum." We on this side do not consider it to be a useless forum. We take this so-called "late show" very seriously. I suppose my hon. friend does not, because unfortunately he is here so infrequently.

To deal with the matter which was mentioned in his actual question to which his notice referred today, which had to do with the possibility of restrictions on unilingual pilots as far as their licences go, this is the point to which I should like to address a few remarks this evening. It relates rather directly to what he has said this evening. I can assure him and all Canadians that there is no intention on the part of the government to impose any restriction on the pilot licences of either English-speaking or Frenth-speaking pilots flying in Canadian air space. In this connection it is the responsibility of every pilot to operate only within the limits of his competence, including that of language, as contained in paragraphs 504 and 817 of Air Regulations.

Specifically, paragraph 504 states that:

> Prior to commencement of any flight, the pilot-in-command of an aircraft shall familiarize himself with all available information appropriate to the intended flight.

Paragraph 817 states that:

> Nothing in these regulations shall be held to relieve the owner, operator or flight crew member of an aircraft of the consequences of any neglect in the use of lights or signals, or of any neglect to keep a proper lookout, or neglect of any precaution that is required by the ordinary practice of the air or by the special circumstances of the case.

The portion of this paragraph which is relevant to the question before us this evening is the portion which reads:

> . . . neglect of any precaution that is required by the ordinary practice of the air or by the special circumstances of the case.

Further, those occurrences to which my hon. friend referred as "near misses"—that is the American terminology while in Canada we use more technical language to refer to such occurrences as "loss of separation between aircraft"—may involve varying degrees of seriousness ranging from a technical loss of separation to more serious occurrences, but are not language problems per se.

I wish to allay my hon. friend's concern and assure him, earnestly, that the Ministry of Transport will continue to ensure the highest possible degree of safety in Canadian air operations. We will also want to permit the use of Canada's two official languages where it is possible to do so consistent with that high safety standard.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

PROPOSED MODIFICATION OF MILK POLICY TO FAVOUR PRODUCER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Since the producers of manufacturing milk have experienced for the past months a loss of income as a result of amendments to the dairy policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the Standing Committee on Agriculture be asked to consider immediately the dairy policy of the government and report to the House as of March 15, to enable the Minister of Agriculture to make the necessary amendments to the dairy policy on the basis of demands from milk producers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, the motion therefore cannot be put.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

SUGGESTION INFORMATION BE OBTAINED CONCERNING LOCKHEED TO AVOID CONTRACT DIFFICULTIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent and important matter.

In view of the serious financial difficulties of the Lockheed Aircraft Company with which the government of Canada is negotiating following the decision to buy 18 Orion aircraft for nearly $1 billion, and since this American aeronautical company has been shaken up by great scandals over bribes offered to politicians from various countries to obtain contracts, a situation which can paralyze the company fairly soon and create prejudices for the government of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House immediately discuss the schedule of payments under the Canadian contract as well as the next negotiations of the government with Lockheed Aircraft Company concerning the questions being asked on the integrity and viability of this company, to encourage the government of Canada to be very careful and reserved so that they do not bear the consequences of the still greater difficulties this American company could have soon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR APPEAL PROCEDURE WHICH WOULD NOT NECESSITATE INDICATION OF UNWILLINGNESS TO COMPLY WITH BOARD ORDER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of information given in the House yesterday by the Minister of Finance to the effect that it is the intention of the Anti-Inflation Board to refer cases to the administrator and hence open up the appeals procedure only in those instances where a party to a settlement or an agreement has indicated an intention not to comply with the ruling of the Anti-Inflation Board. Is the Prime Minister prepared to review this rather perverse situation, which means that no appeal from the Anti-Inflation Board is available except to those who are prepared to act in defiance of the Board? Is the Prime Minister prepared to review this so that appeals will be open to those seeking appeals without requiring defiance of the board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of the question. I do not have a copy of Hansard here. I was not here when the minister made his statement yesterday. I will have to increase my understanding of this matter before answering the question.

Mr. Stanfield: Well, as a former minister of justice and a man who has written with considerable passion on the subject of equality before the law and due process of law, what is the understanding of the Prime Minister now as to the appeal procedure with regard to the anti-inflation program? Is an appeal open, or is it circumscribed, as the Minister of Finance seemed to suggest yesterday?

Mr. Trudeau: When I was minister of justice this law had not been passed, and I would have to take notice of the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ask Castro.

Mr. Stanfield: I am disappointed that the Prime Minister has not been sufficiently interested to ascertain what is going on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not blame the hon. gentlemen opposite for being a little upset about this question. I would not like to apologize for it either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE OF DECISION ON EXPORT LEVY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister when we may expect some information about the decision of the government regarding the export levy which the Minister of Finance indicated would have been settled last week but could not be settled then because the Prime Minister and part of his cabinet were out of the city? Can the Prime Minister indicate to the House when we may expect a decision of the government on a matter of such vast importance to our export industries, and indeed, to our whole economy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is only with the greatest reluctance that I ever interfere with a question of the Leader of the Opposition; however, I really have no way of seeing a question on export development as supplementary to the original question on the subject of appeals under the statute. Unless there is some connection—

Mr. Stanfield: I accept your ruling, of course, Mr. Speaker. I only entered that field because the Prime Minister did not seem to know anything about the first one I mentioned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

ESTABLISHMENT OF RULES OF PROCEDURE FOR APPEALS—BASIS FOR FEDERAL COURT DECISION IF EVIDENCE ON APPEAL CONFIDENTIAL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I was going to pursue this line of questioning with the Prime Minister so he might get some on the job training, but if the Minister of Finance would be kind enough to answer, I will ask him. There is a limited period of time for appeals from decisions of the administrator to the appellate tribunals. As there have been no rules of procedure, no publication of the form of notice of appeal required by the statute, when will this be done so that prospective appellants can know how to comply with the procedure laid down in the act?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has responsibility for convening the tribunal, which has already been established. I would suggest that any party which feels it might like to launch an appeal should do so by addressing itself to the acting chairman.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question. Foregoing the opportunity to deal with the Minister of Justice, as the Minister of Finance is one of the ancestors of this bill of doubtful parentage, may I ask what assurance he can give to the House that the rules for presentation of evidence and the practice and procedures will be consistent with those of a judicial body in so far as appeal practices are concerned? In particular, as the hearings of the tribunal can be held in camera, on what basis could a federal court—proceedings of which are held in public—give a decision if all the evidence is to be held in confidence?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The federal court would in due course have available the full record of the hearings at the appeal tribunal. In the case of evidence of a confidential nature—as frequently occurs in cases under the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission—it could decide to take certain evidence before it and I presume would do so.

DECISION IN IRVING CASE—POSSIBILITY OF INTERVENTION BY CABINET

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance regarding the decision of the administrator in the case of the Irving Pulp and Paper Company which adversely affects the employees and imposes a heavy financial penalty on the employer. In view of the fact that section 24 of the Anti-Inflation Act empowers cabinet to intervene in respect of the decision of the administrator, may I ask the minister if the government intends to intervene in this matter with a view to re-examining any aspect of the administrator's decision?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made it clear that I have no intention at this point of recommending to my colleagues that any intervention be taken against this decision. The administrator has obviously given careful attention to these facts, and in particular to the fact that the parties went ahead knowing what they were doing would be contravening the guidelines, it seems to me the administrator's decision is entitled to be supported.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN APPEAL PROCEDURE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In the Globe and Mail of January 29, the Minister of Finance is reported as having made statements to the press indicating that there may be some amendments to the Anti-Inflation Act which would give trade unions the same right of appeal as that enjoyed by the corporation and to remove the necessity of breaking the law in order to get a case before the administrator. I would therefore ask the minister if the government is prepared to introduce two amendments. First, an amendment to provide for the appeal by any party affected by a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to the administrator and second, an amendment which would allow any person affected by the decision of the administrator to appeal directly to the appeal tribunal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I said on that occasion, in response to the question of a reporter, was that we would give consideration to that point of view to which the hon. member has referred. As I said in response to a question yesterday, we will of course be prepared to give consideration to an amendment of that kind if it appears it would be necessary.

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF INDEPENDENT APPEAL TRIBUNAL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since the government has not yet appointed the permanent appeal tribunal, which I can well understand in view of the fact the legislation is drafted so cleverly that no one is likely to get a chance to appeal, and since the government has set up an acting appeal tribunal made up of one civil servant and two former civil servants who, with all respect to the gentlemen in question, would not be considered by anyone as being an independent and unbiased body. How soon is the government prepared to appoint an appeal tribunal which will be independent and appear to the Canadian people as being a body unprejudiced, unbiased and divorced from the government bureaucracy?

● (1420)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the three appointees in question are unprejudiced and unbiased. They have been good servants of Canada and the imputation against them involved in the hon. gentleman's question is totally unjustified.

Mr. Baldwin: They will go back to the civil service when they have finished.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The tribunal has been established, as the hon. member said. My colleague has proposed that when amendments come forward, the responsibilities of this particular tribunal should be given to the tax appeal board for this purpose. The board would, therefore, be able to discharge these responsibilities in addition to those which it has under the tax act. That, I believe, will be in accordance with the views often expressed by the hon. gentleman's leader, that there should not be an increase in the bureaucracy in this regard, which seems to make sense.

Mr. Baldwin: You are afraid to get a judge.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It seems to make sense to put the matter under the tax appeal board for this purpose.

If I may answer the imputation made by the hon. member for Peace River against the tax appeal board, let me tell the hon. gentleman that they are a devoted and very capable group and I reject totally the suggestion implied in his imputation.

Mr. Baldwin: You are afraid to get a judge.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baldwin: The people on the government side are experts in shame. The whole party is shameful.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED ANNOUNCEMENT OF DAIRY POLICY BY MARCH 15

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that for some months industrial milk producers have been suffering financial losses which in turn unbalance many producers' budgets, is the Minister of Agriculture willing to present the government's dairy policy around March 15, in order to give the producer's union enough time to indicate their views on such policy before the beginning of the dairy year which will begin on April 1?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we met with representatives of the dairy farmers of Canada yesterday. The program will be announced as soon as possible, although I cannot promise the hon. member that it will be very soon. The dairy farmers of Canada know what they must do.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary.

As the minister just said to the House that he met with representatives of the dairy farmers, and as representatives of industrial milk producers made representations to some members of parliament and as it would be in the interest of Canada, of industrial milk producers and of the dairy industry in general that such policy be known as soon as possible, can the minister make a little effort to present this policy before the last day of March?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the main difficulty for industrial milk producers of Canada stems from the world surplus and from surplus production in Canada. We have not cut back subsidies, as some people say. We are still paying the same amount of money for the proper amount of dairy products, including industrial milk. As I said, we will announce the program earlier, if we can.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTION THAT A CHANGE BE MADE IN APPEAL PROCEDURE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I am sure he has followed what has taken place with greater care and more attention than the Prime Minister has; therefore I direct my question to him. If it be true that it requires the publication of the rule that has been made in order to bring on an appeal, as the Leader of the Opposition suggested, does the minister not think that a change should be made in this regard, because what has happened smells of much of the worst in Star-Chamber.

Mr. Trudeau: You are against the monarchy!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the right hon. gentleman, but I was a few minutes late getting into the House. I did not hear his leader's question, so I am not aware of the subject to which it relates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer is very proper. The minister is always here. He was not present to listen to the Prime Minister show his entire ignorance of what is happening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, these interrupters do not know that there is a rule of law. They do not realize that. I ask the minister if he will look into this situation, for on the face of it it smells of deep injustice. It cannot be justified in any way. Will the minister immediately bring before the House the regulations providing for appeal and in general the terms thereof as required by the statute? As it is now, civil servants order, civil servants determine and the courts do not know what the facts are because they are confidential. Surely the minister, the keeper of the Queen's conscience, will do something to protect the individuals of Canada.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that both the Queen and the Prime Minister are quite able to look after their own consciences.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Don't associate them together, having regard to the Prime Minister's statements.

Mr. Basford: Although the right hon. gentleman did not state it, I take it he is referring to appeals under the Anti-Inflation Act. The rights of appeal of parties are set out in the Act and in terms of the Federal Court Act. If there should be further clarification required for the guidance of parties as to the conduct of appeal, I am sure that the chairman of the appeal tribunal will indicate those.

NATURE OF NOTICE IN WRITING AND FORM PRESCRIBED FOR APPEAL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, provision is made for the appeal in Section 31(2) which reads:

> An appeal to the Appeal Tribunal shall be instituted by filing with the Tribunal a notice in writing in a form prescribed by the rules made pursuant to subsection 27(2).

Those rules have not been promulgated in any way. Will the minister now tell the House what is the nature of the notice in writing and the form prescribed by the rules that has to be followed in order to make an appeal or is the minister unaware of the form?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the procedures for appeal will be made known shortly and in such a way as not to prejudice any of the parties wishing to make an appeal.

INDUSTRY

STEPS TO PREVENT BANKRUPTCY OF REFINERY AT COME-BY-CHANCE—POSSIBILITY OF ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who I understand has just returned from the salubrious area of Come-By-Chance. What steps does the government of Canada propose to take to prevent this major oil refinery, which is such an important employer in the Atlantic provinces, from going under?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice. It is a fact that I held some meetings over the weekend with interested parties and talked to others on the telephone from Ottawa. It is not clear at the moment whether any action by any federal agency would be capable of preventing certain steps which are already in train and have been taken by some of the main parties, including for example, the government of Newfoundland and the ECGB financing agency in Great Britain. I will be meeting with Premier Moores later today here in Ottawa. Undoubtedly this subject will come up. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in response to a question, indicated that some initiatives have been taken as a result of his actions to keep an eye on the situation. About the best I can tell the hon. member now is that we are very close to all the parties concerned and as soon as something emerges which might make it possible for the federal government to assist we shall consider it in the most sympathetic way imaginable.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the prospect of this plant having to close down, albeit for a short time, say two years, what plans does the government have to find alternative employment for the 500 employees, many of whom are the minister's own constituents?

Mr. Jamieson: This is one of the matters I discussed with some of the workers concerned over the weekend. It was only, I believe, on Friday that the government of Newfoundland suggested the establishment of a federal-provincial task force. I indicated at that time that we would be quite prepared to co-operate in the establishment of some group through which we could determine what alternative sources of employment might exist. I want to say, however, in fairness and honesty to the workers in the area—and the hon. member will, I think, appreciate this—that finding four or five hundred additional jobs will not be the easiest thing in the world to do in the short run. But we will certainly do what we can.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO FREE VOTE IN CAPITAL PUNISHMENT BILL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I addressed a question in his absence to the Solicitor General concerning the proposed government bill to abolish capital punishment. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the answer given by the Solicitor General, as reported in Hansard at page 10,870 represents government policy. The hon. gentleman said:

> There will be a government bill to which the government will be committed but members of this House who are not with the government will be free to vote on it as they see fit.

Is that the free vote the government proposes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The whips will not be on for the purpose of this vote.

Mr. Woolliams: May I put a second question to the Prime Minister? In light of the fact that the cabinet will not have a free vote—only backbenchers will have a free vote—how does the right hon. gentleman reconcile this situation with a free vote? Because that sounds about as free as a hog on ice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDUSTRY

DOUGLAS AIRCRAFT—POSSIBILITY OF POSTPONING LAY-OFFS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and it relates to a recent statement by officials of the United Auto Workers' Union with reference to Douglas Aircraft. Is it true that the federal government will provide financial assistance which will permit the company to postpone lay-offs indefinitely? How long is "indefinitely", and how will this work?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): If I had the answer to all those questions I would be a very happy man. The position at the moment is that there was a proposal by McDonnell-Douglas to post lay-off notices affecting between 400 and 500 workers on Friday of last week. I met with officials of the company and as a result they agreed to postpone those lay-off notices indefinitely. As to how long "indefinitely" is, it is exactly what the word says. We are not sure. In the interim we are trying to find additional work for the plant in Toronto which will help, at least, to prevent these lay-offs taking place.

I undertook to try to get some answers within the coming week. We are looking at a number of solutions which may appeal to the company and which may lend themselves at least to giving us enough time, perhaps a year, in which to determine what role, if any, the company might play in the restructuring of the aerospace industry.

PERFORMING ARTS

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF QUOTA AGREEMENTS ON DISTRIBUTION OF FILMS AND REPORT ON MONITORING OF QUOTA

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State and it concerns the film policy announced last August with application to the major film chains, Odeon and Famous Players. The minister indicated at that time that performance with respect to the quotas would be monitored and the results published regularly by CFTC. May I ask when we can expect to see some figures published as to the effectiveness of this new quota system? Can the minister tell us, also, when the actual contracts or agreements were signed and when they will be made public?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): The contracts themselves are still under negotiation. I hope the negotiations will be concluded this week. The monitoring of the quota is in place and I believe published results will be available on a quarterly basis, but I would have to confirm that impression.

POSSIBILITY OF INVESTIGATION OF FILM DISTRIBUTORS BY COMBINES BRANCH

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the action recently taken by some of the major Canadian film makers—Pierre Berton, F. R. Crawley, Allan King, Gordon Pinsent and a number of others with a view to getting a combines investigation launched by way of a formal petition to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with respect to the monopoly situation which prevails in the exhibition of films in this country, may I ask whether the minister has conferred with his counterpart on this subject and whether he has taken any appropriate action to investigate or to inquire from the leading distributors whether or not the conditions referred to do, in fact, exist?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, that seems to be quite a separate approach to the problem and it is in the hands of my colleague.

COMBINES

POSSIBILITY OF INVESTIGATION OF FILM DISTRIBUTORS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Perhaps, then, I might ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he has had a chance to study this submission from the film makers, and in view of the interest taken in the possibility of a monopoly situation can he tell us whether he has responded to the petition or whether he has instructed the Combines Investigation Branch to launch a full inquiry?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member surely knows that when appellants publicly declare they are requesting an inquiry, the administrator is naturally bound to initiate such an inquiry and assume his responsibilities pursuant to the act.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION OF EXCESSIVE PROFITS BY FOOD CHAINS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises from the report, commissioned by the Food Prices Review Board, pointing out that there is a high correlation between excessive profits and corporate concentration in food chains. What specific steps does the minister responsible intend to take to roll back prices in the seven cities which were designated as the cities in which the outlets were making excessive profits, namely, the four cities in the West along with Thunder Bay and St. John's?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am in the process of studying this report. I have asked some of my department officials to examine more particularly the points of emphasis in this report. As for excessive profits I shall take up the matter with my colleague who is in charge of the Anti-Inflation Board.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

COMBINES

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF PART TWO OF COMPETITION BILL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In view of the fact that the report confirmed what we in this Party have been saying for years about corporate concentration and high profits in the food industry, can the minister give the House a definite date by which he will introduce the second part of the competition bill or any other legislation which might deal with the recommendations contained in the study? Can he be specific as to a date?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As soon as possible, at the beginning of next session, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF HELICOPTER FORCE AND USE OF AMATEUR RADIO OPERATORS FOR COMMUNICATING WITH STRICKEN COUNTRIES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, before addressing my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs I hope I might be allowed to pay tribute to those dedicated and courteous public servants in the consular division of the Department of External Affairs, as well as in Guatemala for their tireless efforts to locate Canadians missing in Guatemala and to reassure worried relatives in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My question is this: in order to avoid a recurrence of some of the communications problems which revealed themselves during the earthquake disaster, has the government taken any steps to set up a standing emergency helicopter force which might fly to stricken countries in case of need in order to improve internal communications in such circumstances. Also, has any effort been made to enlist the support of Canadian ham radio operators so as to improve communications between Canada and stricken countries? I know ham radio operators are ready, willing and able to co-operate.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As to the first point, the hon. member made a constructive suggestion recently that we might make a helicopter, or a number of helicopters, available to the Guatemalan authorities. We investigated that proposal and found that in the circumstances the airport facilities in Guatemala could not service more helicopters than were in use at that particular time. Therefore any contribution that we might be willing to make would, in the circumstances, be redundant.

I believe that the suggestions he has made with respect to emergency preparedness in future situations are constructive and I will certainly have them examined and, if feasible, acted upon in the department and in CIDA.

DATE OF RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could he tell the House whether the presence of Cuban shock troops in Angola makes up a major obstacle to the recognition of the government of the People's Republic of Angola and, if not, does the minister expect to announce recognition at an early date, because the MPLA controls more than 80 per cent of the territory and several countries of western Europe announced their intention to do so?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope to have an announcement to make on that subject within a day or so.

POST OFFICE

INJUNCTION RESTORING UNION RIGHTS OF TORONTO EMPLOYEES—EFFECT ON SUSPENDED OTTAWA EMPLOYEES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Arising from the interim injunction granted last Friday by Mr. Justice John O'Driscoll of the Ontario Supreme Court preventing the Toronto CUPW executive from interfering with the rights of members of the union who crossed the picket line during the strike last fall to attend a membership meeting last Sunday, and also restoring the suspended members' right to vote and accept nomination for office, would the Postmaster General inform the House whether this injunction also protects the rights of 170 members of the Ottawa Local who find themselves in a similar position?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure to how extensive a jurisdiction the decision of the judge applies. I know that in essence what he said was what I said in the House earlier, that there is a union constitution, that the constitution spells out the procedure whereby a person may be suspended, and that in his opinion this procedure had not been followed. The judge therefore granted an interim injunction until each and every person who had been suspended does have an opportunity to make his or her defence against suspension. It was based on his appraisal of the Toronto situation that he granted the interim injunction.

I have asked my officials knowledgeable of the situation whether or not this would require similar action on the part of a suspended individual in each and every local across Canada. I would hope that the Canadian Labour Congress, the responsible governing body for labour in this country, would look very closely at this decision of the judge and see whether in their opinion it is not time to introduce some degree of democracy into the trade union movement so that it is not always subject to a negative public press.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ARRANGEMENTS FOR BROADCASTING PROCEEDINGS OF CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. I wonder whether the Secretary of State would contact CBC radio and make a determination whether or not they have made a decision not to start their broadcast of the Progressive Conservative convention, to be held in Ottawa on Sunday at the Coliseum, until four o'clock in the afternoon, rather than at the beginning of the voting, as they did when the New Democratic Party had its convention and as they did when the minister's own party, the Liberal party, had its convention in 1968? Or are we going to have to suffer through a continuation of the policy of being shafted by CBC radio, as was so obvious during the 1974 election campaign?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look into that for the hon. member.

MANPOWER

EFFECT OF PLACING PROVINCIAL WELFARE OFFICERS IN MANPOWER OFFICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is in regard to the recent decision by Ontario to put jobs before welfare and placing welfare officers in manpower offices in the province to help welfare recipients get work and to make sure they accept available jobs. This would have some impact on the job vacancy rate and the unemployment rate. I would ask the minister whether there are any special measures agreed on by the minister and his counterpart in Ontario to assist in helping welfare recipients get work and, even more important, making sure that they accept available jobs. If so, would the minister give us some indication what it is all about, or will he be making a statement in this regard in the very near future?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended making a statement but I will be glad to elaborate in more detail when my estimates are before the committee in the not too distant future. I think this is an encouraging co-operative arrangement between my department and Ontario. Indeed, we have had similar discussions with other provinces—British Columbia and New Brunswick—and I believe it is a progressive move to provide people on welfare with placement services and counselling, as well in some cases as training courses, etc.

Oral Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBILITY OF FORCING CLAIMANTS TO ACCEPT AVAILABLE JOBS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I hope the minister also approves of the idea, as reported, of making sure that welfare recipients accept available jobs. This to me is an indication that perhaps the same thing could work with respect to UIC claimants accepting available jobs; this has certain merit. I wonder whether the minister is thinking along these lines, and is it his intention to bring in legislation making or forcing UIC claimants to accept available jobs?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Provision regarding availability for work and acceptance of suitable jobs is already embedded in the Unemployment Insurance Act, and is being monitored within the guidelines and regulations attributable to that legislation.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STUDY OF FOOD PRICES BY REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary arising from the question put by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The report submitted by marketing expert Bruce Mallen for the Food Prices Review Board was tabled yesterday. It appears from it that Canadians are paying about 4 per cent too much for food and that this seems to result from the quasi monopoly which eliminates competition among the four major food retailers, namely Dominion, Weston-Loblaw, Canada Safeway and Steinberg. Is the minister now in a position to clear up this question or can he inform the House if he intends to implement the recommendation contained in the report to present legislation to enable the chain supermarkets to expand again, particularly where they already serve large areas ranging all the way up to 94 per cent of the market?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a very interesting suggestion which deserves study. However, I repeat what I have said earlier to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, that this report was handed down to the director of combines investigation so that he might study the section concerning the overly large corporate concentration.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATUS OF MANITOBA CONTRACTS FOR ORION PARTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. On December 1, 1975, in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, he stated that $560 million of contractual work would be done in Canada in the manufacturing of parts for the new Lockheed Orions, and that $50 million of this work would be done in Manitoba. Can the minister inform the House what is the status of these contracts in light of the latest development—that the government may not be purchasing the Orions?

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, none of the arrangements for industrial benefit are themselves in jeopardy; but, as the hon. member knows, the contract itself is in its final stages of negotiation by the Department of Supply and Services.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. At the committee meetings the minister stated that the work "would be starting now", meaning December 1, 1975. He further stated that Standard Aero in Winnipeg will not have to wait but will start to get work now. Has Standard Aero actually started making parts for Orions?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, until the main contract has been signed there will be no work for any companies in Canada.

POSSIBLE OPENING OF SUFFIELD RANGE FOR GRAZING

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. It relates to the recent decision by the Department of National Defence to close the PFRA Suffield community pasture near Medicine Hat. In view of the fact that this decision means that approximately 5,000 head of breeding cattle will have to find new homes for summer grazing or be put on the market, I ask the minister if he will give immediate consideration to rescinding the departmental order in view of the recommendation from PFRA to his cabinet colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, that this pasture should be operated as a permanent PFRA pasture and not on the present temporary basis.

● (1450)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the general practice over the years has been that the Suffield range was opened for grazing in emergency circumstances, particularly in a very dry season. As the hon. member knows, the grass crop has been excellent, so there has been no emergency and therefore it was decided not to open the range for grazing this year.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister then indicate if he is now able to supply copies of the three reports I have requested in writing which deal with this very urgent situation and especially the report from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I will look at the hon. member's request and if it can be carried out it will be. I do not know what the reports contain.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MERCURY POISONING—STEPS TO PROVIDE ALTERNATE SOURCE OF FOOD

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and arises from a series of questions that were asked concerning mercury poisoning in northwest Quebec. The Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated there were plans issued to provide alternate protein sources or alternate livelihood for those people, some 20 of whom now have symptoms of poisoning and at least three of whom have been confirmed as having the Minamata disease. Could the minister advise the House specifically rather than generally what he intends to do to provide a protein source for those Indians who now are reaching the fishing season and will have to find something to eat; secondly, what he intends to do to give those who depend so much on fishing an alternate livelihood.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the hon. member, it is my understanding that arrangements are being made for an alternate protein source. I am sorry that I will have to check and give the hon. member the details concerning the question. Alternate economic development. It is similar to the situation in northwestern Ontario, and it is a slow and difficult process to develop in these areas.

TESTING FOR MERCURY POISONING AT CAUGHNAWAGA RESERVE—REASON REPORT ON CEDAR RAPIDS NATIVES NOT RELEASED

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the testing results at the Caughnawaga Reserve have now been released, showing the levels there. There are some levels as high as 11.7 parts per million which is well above the standard of .5 for Canada for example. The TB levels are also very high. Can the minister advise whether any testing is going on on the Caughnawaga Reserve on the potential of mercury poisoning in that area and would he also advise why the report on the Cedar Rapids Indians which was done last November has not yet been released to the public so that these Indians will know whether or not they are suffering.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the questions on the report should be directed to my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I think it will be found that fish is a relatively minor source of protein so far as the Caughnawaga Reserve is concerned. It is not like the other locations.

DATE ON WHICH TIME FOR APPEAL IN IRVING CASE STARTS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, this is a question for the Minister of Justice. It follows an earlier series of questions about the fairness of the appeal proceedings. Can the minister assure the House that the time for the appeal in the Irving pulp mill case will run from the date of promulgation of the procedures and not from the date of the administrator's order.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to give that assurance without specifically looking at the wording of the act. As I indicated, the procedures will be laid down without prejudice to the parties and that will be very soon.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DATE OF HALL REPORT ON PENSIONS FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the numerous requests I, and I am sure many other members of this House, have been receiving in respect of railroad workers and the Hall report, could I ask the minister if he could give us a progress report in this regard or tell the House when we can expect the report which is long overdue.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member is referring to the question of pensions for railway employees and my advice is that Mr. Hall will have his report out at the end of February or toward the middle of March at the latest.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR NEW PACKAGING REGULATIONS—POSSIBLE EXEMPTION OF SMALL BAKERIES

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns the March 1 date which has been set for the regulations to be brought in with regard to labelling and packaging of consumer goods. I should like to ask the minister if he is giving consideration to extending that March 1 date so that retailers can use up more of the packages they have on hand? Second, I should like to ask him if small bakeries in small towns which cater only to the local trade and package their goods over the counter will be exempt from these regulations.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my answer to the first part of the question is no. As for the second part, arrangements will be made by the officials responsible for supervising the application of that act to facilitate the transition for the companies and spare them too many difficulties. On the other hand, where small companies are concerned which deal in cakes and bread, recommendations have already been submitted to their association with a view to finding some accommodation.

NATIONAL PARKS

JASPER—DATE OF REPORT ON REMOVAL OF RAILWAY FACILITIES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Some weeks ago the minister was good enough to tell me that the intradepartmental parks department paper or report with regard to the moving of railway facilities from Jasper National Park would be made to the minister. Has he yet received the report? If not, when does he expect to receive it and to make it public?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have received the report. I am just going through an analysis now. I will have a look at it. I do not see any reason it should not be made public virtually immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on January 3, the day I departed for Innsbruck for the primary purpose of acquiring—

● (1500)

Mr. Jelinek: —an even better understanding of the organization and procedures in preparation for the Olympics, I suggested that was something which the government should have done a long time ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: On that day the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council brought to the attention of this House statements I had made the previous evening during the adjournment proceedings, one of which referred to Your Honour. I would like to take this opportunity to put on the record that that particular comment of mine was an offhand remark and, that I had absolutely no intention of casting any reflection on the Chair. If, however, that remark was given a different interpretation by others, I should like to take this opportunity to apologize to you, sir, for the misunderstanding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which stems from a question I asked in the House two weeks ago on Monday of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At that time I asked the minister if he could report to the House on reports that the Canadian embassy in Havana had been invaded by the Cuban police and that personnel and members of the press from Canada had been manhandled during the incident. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said he would look into the matter and report. Since 15 days have gone by, and the Prime Minister was there at the time it happened and is sitting right beside the minister—if he does not run away—surely the minister could tell the House now exactly what happened.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I did look into the question raised by the hon. member and I discovered that, as is normal, Premier Castro had some security people with him on his visit to the Canadian reception. There were some slight misunderstandings which were rapidly cleared up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,330, 3,535, 3,644, 3,771, 3,883, 3,888 and 3,902.

[Text]

AMENDMENT TO INCOME TAX ACT

Question No. 3,330—Mr. Brisco:

Has the Department of Finance considered allowing interest on first and second mortgages paid on a house in which the owner is resident, as a deductible item for the purpose of calculating personal income tax?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): An amendment to the Income Tax Act to allow a mortgage interest deduction has been considered by the Department of Finance on a number of occasions and each time has been rejected. Reasons for rejection include the very high cost of such a deduction, the fact that it would discriminate between those who have mortgages and those who do not, and the fact that it would increase the demand for borrowed money, thus driving up interest rates.

Question No. 3,535—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, does the general objective spelled out in Schedule "C" represent a departure from the original aims of the Plan, especially in light of the absence of any reference to improved social conditions?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: No.

CONTRACTS AWARDED TO INTERIMCO LIMITED OF OTTAWA

Question No. 3,644—Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra):

Since 1972, have government contracts been awarded to Interimco Limited of Ottawa and, if so (a) by what department or agency was payment made (b) for what specific purpose (c) in what amounts (d) on what dates?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by all departments and agencies as follows: No.

DREE—GRANTS TO CONSTITUENCY OF CHAMPLAIN

Question No. 3,771—Mr. Matte:

1. Since its inception, has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion offered subsidies to businesses for the purpose of promoting regional development in the Constituency of Champlain and, if so, what has been the annual amount?

2. For each subsidy granted in the Constituency, how many corporations have accepted such offers?

3. What was (a) the name of the corporation (b) the amount of the subsidy (c) the year it was granted (d) the number of jobs created?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes. Under the authority of the Regional Development Incentives Act (RDIA), the annual amounts offered were: 1971, $136,442; 1972, $387,106; 1973, $395,125; 1974, $219,200; 1975, $539,550.

2. Twenty five offers have been accepted.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON FORMS STANDARDIZATION

Question No. 3,883—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the nature of each and every form sent to businesses on a routine basis by the government including (a) the department or agency sending the form (b) the type of business to which it is sent (c) the type of information sought (d) the uses to be made of the information gathered (e) the regularity with which each form is sent to a single business (f) the number of businesses to which each form is sent?

2. What measures, if any, are being taken by the government to reduce the amount of paperwork businesses are required to complete for the government?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The Interdepartmental Committee on Forms Standardization reviews and standardizes governmental forms. This function is carried out for the purpose of creating greater economies of scale in the printing area. The Committee would not normally consider forms sent to businesses and has neither the manpower, the financial resources nor the requisite authority to solicit government departments to determine the nature of forms sent to businesses.

ANNUAL INCREASES OF ASSETS OF EACH CHARTERED BANK

Question No. 3,888—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Between 1967 and 1974, what were the progressive annual increases of the assets of each chartered bank?

2. In each case, what was the origin of such increases?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. The assets and liabilities of each chartered bank, broken down by categories in accordance with Schedule M of the Bank Act, are published monthly in Part I of the Canada Gazette, including the period 1967 to 1974.

CANADA-USSR JOINT FISHERIES CONSULTATIVE COMMISSION

Question No. 3,902—Mr. Marshall:

1. Has the Canada-USSR Joint Fisheries Consultative Commission been established and, if so, who are the two members appointed by the government?

2. To the knowledge of the government, has the USSR appointed a fishery official to provide statistical information with regard to fishing operations in the North West Atlantic and, if so, what are his terms of reference?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Agreement between Canada and USSR concluded December 22, 1975 provided for the establishment of a Joint Fisheries Consultative Commission to be composed of two Commissioners from each side. Both Governments are in the process of determining appropriate Commissioners to be appointed in the near future.

2. The same Agreement also provided for the appointment of a Soviet fisheries official in Halifax. This official has not yet been appointed by the Soviet Government.

LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 3,858—Mr. Bawden:

1. How much will the government be spending in the current fiscal year for language training courses?

2. How many members of the Public Service will participate in such courses?

3. How many days were involved in public servants taking language courses?

4. How many public servants, within their last two years prior to retirement have taken language training courses in the current fiscal year?

5. What reason was given for the $36,000 loss by Statistics Canada through a language training contract for which no service was received?

6. How many Statistics Canada employees were needed to meet the guaranteed minimum and how many actually participated in a language training course?

7. What are the criteria for measuring the success of the language training courses?

8. According to the criteria in Part 7, what percentage of public servants have successfully completed each grade of language training and have achieved an acceptable level of fluency in the language studied?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, during the past two days I have been making a study of the number of questions that the parliamentary secretary routinely asks the House to make orders for return. Then I looked at the questions to see what kind of answers were given. Unless there is some justification given in the House, I feel that they should not be made orders for return automatically, either because of the length of the answer or for some other reason. Those answers are buried in the office downstairs, and often they are the most embarrassing to the government.

I suggest that there be a change in the procedure and that the hon. member should explain why he is asking for the extraordinary procedure of making them orders for returns. It is only an exception to the request where an answer is written. Therefore, I think the House should watch this matter very carefully, and I would ask the parliamentary secretary to justify his reasons every time he asks for this procedure to be followed.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, may I say, on that point, that we do not attempt to have a reply to a question made an order for return unless we feel—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Unless the House feels.

Mr. Blais: —unless we feel that there is too much material to be printed in Hansard. We simply move to have the question made an order for return if the reply is voluminous. The hon. member is free to request, as he has done on a number of occasions, some explanation as to why, in a specific instance, there is need to make a question an order for return. I simply wish to indicate to him that in the past few days we have had a number of voluminous replies, even though they may have been partial answers to questions. In those instances it was justifiable to seek permission of the House to make them orders for returns, and that permission was always granted.

As to whether the answers are buried in the depths of this chamber, may I point out to the hon. gentleman that the hon. member who seeks a reply, whether the answer is printed in Hansard or made an order for return, receives a complete copy of the return upon its being tabled in the House. Yesterday I must have sought permission to get 12 replies made orders for returns, and I fail to see why in all instances I should enumerate the reason we wish to make orders for return in the case of answers, some of which are 40 pages long. I find it unjustifiable. The way we have proceeded in the past is reasonable. It generally has met with the approval of the House, and to my recollection the only one who has objected from time to time has been the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point has been raised many times before. It is the normal practice of the House that the parliamentary secretary should seek leave of the House that certain questions be made orders for return, to which the House must give its consent. It is the right of any member who feels aggrieved, either by the individual application of the practice in general, to withhold that consent. It has been suggested in the past that that procedure be altered. That suggestion, I hope by automatic process and with guidance from the Chair from time to time, has been passed along for the consideration of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Until there is consensus forthcoming from the House on the need for a change in the procedure, it would seem that the practice must continue. If, however, any hon. member feels aggrieved either by the individual application of that practice or by the practice in general, he always has the right to withhold agreement to the request by the parliamentary secretary for leave of the House to make an individual order for return.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

DECISION OF ADMINISTRATOR RESPECTING IRVING PULP AND PAPER DISPUTE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the immediate need for the government to amend the Anti-Inflation Act to provide for a right of appeal from a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board and/or the administrator to either party affected by such a decision, a necessity vividly illustrated by and urgently warranted in response to the decision of the administrator in the Irving Pulp and Paper case whereby one of the aggrieved parties, namely, the union, was accorded no right of appeal from a decision affecting the livelihood of its members, and the further necessity of preventing a total breakdown of the free, collective bargaining system throughout the economy by ensuring an equitable appeals process and the compelling need for the House to debate the necessity for such an amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member yesterday put forward a very similar motion, and at some length I indicated that with considerable regret I was not able to accede to the request. With slight modification, with all due respect, the hon. member has repeated the application today.

It is the nature of the Standing Order that if circumstances change, then in fact not only is it possible for hon. members to bring forward for a second or third time an application under the same Standing Order, but on occasions in the past the Chair has invited hon. members to do so. However, where repeated applications are made one day after the other without any suggestion that the circumstances have changed in the interval, it is very difficult for the Chair not to regard that simply as an attempt to appeal on Tuesday the ruling of the Chair on Monday. I say that only by way of general admonition to the hon. member.

On the other hand, there is not substantial disagreement about the circumstances of the case, nor is there any disagreement on any side—obviously, by the nature of the questions asked again today—about the importance of the matter. Where there is fundamental disagreement between the hon. member and the Chair is whether Standing Order 26 ought to be used to reopen legislation which was passed recently by the House and which in its operation is perhaps aggrieving a substantial number of parties in the country. But in fact it is doing so by the operation of legislation which must, in the opinion of the Chair, have been envisaged when the legislation was passed by this House.

The difference between the hon. member and the Chair in this instance is that where pressure, as his notice of motion puts forward today, is for an amendment to that legislation, it is the opinion of the Chair that amendment ought to be sought in the way it is being sought daily, through questions and, presumably, in other ways which are open to hon. members to seek amendments to legislation.

However, where there is no indication that there is some dereliction in the performing of duties under the legislation, or some breakdown in it, I suggest, with the greatest respect to all hon. members using the question period, that the "late show" is available; that the estimates of the minister will be tabled, I understand, tomorrow, and the minister will be before the standing committee where he can be questioned in much more detail and in a much more continuing manner. There are a number of ways open to all hon. members to seek improvements and amendments to the legislation.

Where there is disagreement is that if the legislation which was passed by this House a short time ago is having precisely its intended effect, and parties are aggrieved by it, I do not see that that is a cause for the use of Standing Order 26. There is a fundamental disagreement between the hon. member and other hon. members and the Chair in that respect. However, that is the opinion the Chair holds, and this is the second consecutive day upon which the Chair has made that ruling.

If there is in fact some circumstance which alters the situation, the Chair is more than open to entertain further applications under the Standing Order. But I should repeat that where the allegations are, as they are in the notice of motion of the hon. member today and yesterday, that the legislation is having an effect which aggrieves certain parties but which is the intended effect of the legislation, it is the view of the Chair that that is not a ground for the use of emergency procedures pursuant to Standing Order 26, no matter how important that effect may be. There is no doubt, particularly backed up by the questions of hon. members again today, that it is an important area and that it is having a very serious effect. The only disagreement is about the use of Standing Order 26 in that particular situation.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Monday, February 16, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I adjourned the debate at ten o'clock last night. It is fortunate that there are no regulations in this bill to be implemented by a minister, thereby creating a serious situation, and we would certainly be as rough on a minister of national revenue if he were guilty of laches in preparing and presenting regulations. I think I have traversed all the arguments I wished to put forward to this House with regard to the amendment before us, and I seek the support of hon. members opposite and earnestly ask them to vote in favour of the amendment. On that note, we are ready for the vote.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State) moved that Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion adopted on division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Some hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Speaker: At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of information. Is there no debate on third reading?

Mr. Speaker: The motion first put after the disposition of motion No. 6 was simply a motion for concurrence in the bill, which concludes the report stage. The next question was, "When shall the bill be read the third time?" Of course, without leave the bill cannot be read the third time until the next sitting of the House. Debate is, of course, possible upon a third reading motion at any sitting.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, through usual consultation the order of business will be Bill C-68.

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Monday, February 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I am amazed that the federal government should bring in a bill to limit doctors' incomes to a rate of increase far below the rate of inflation, particularly in view of the fact that they received an increase of only 4½ per cent in 1971 and no further increase until 1974. That was a three-year interval without an increase. Then in 1974 they received an increase of 7.75 per cent, far below the inflationary factor. It is hard to believe that this child, national medicare, was brought in to give the highest quality of medical care to all individuals in Canada regardless of their resources or where they live. That any government dedicated to such high principles as the government of the late Lester B. Pearson—a Liberal government at that—could now, so hypocritically, attempt to destroy those worthy principles is hard to understand.

I believe doctors will continue to give the highest quality of medical care they are capable of giving, in spite of the efforts of politicians to lower and undermine the standard of medical care in Canada. Most doctors realize that the strutting politician of today occupies the stage of time for only a brief moment, after which he is gone, leaving the good or harm he has done as a tiny scar on the face of humanity. It is hard to conceive the reasons for which a government beset by scandals and under the table deals involving bookkeeping no auditor would ever pass, would have the temerity to bring in a bill affecting a group whose increase in pay has been far less lavish than the pay increase granted to its own members or its own increase in spending. The bill is wrong; the principle is wrong.

The cost of medicare is declining in relation to the gross national product. Hospitals, it is true, have been running into trouble—I give the minister credit for pointing this out—but they are running at a lower rate of inflation than the government. What is the reason for making health care costs the whipping-boy, the unwanted child of a government which has surely committed worse follies? I wish to quote a statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) who brought this act into being. I do not in any way blame the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) for the mess we have got into, though I wonder sometimes whether he has made the best use of the talents he possesses; whether he could not do more to influence his provincial counterparts and create an atmosphere in which the job could be done together. These are the words which were spoken by the former minister of health:

> Health is not a privilege tied to the state of one's bank account but, rather, a basic right which should be open to all.

I want to put on record, too, the fact that at the federal-provincial conference held in July, 1965, then prime minister Pearson announced the federal government's resolution to provide financial support for provincially-instituted medical care plans. At that time he announced his government's intention to share 50 per cent of the cost of medical services provided the provinces met his principles—eligibility, comprehensiveness, universality, public administration, and portability.

The minister of national health and welfare at that time confidently estimated that the net cost of the scheme to the two levels of government would be $80 million. I should like to point out that the treasurer of Ontario, when made aware of the contents of the legislation, inquired prophetically, "What guarantee have we that within a few years from now the federal government will not dump the whole responsibility for this program on the province and close off or limit its contribution after it has obliged the provinces to embark on its slippery slope?" That was the statement made by Hon. Charles MacNaughton in November of 1968.

Basically, then, opposition to the federal government's proposal came from two camps and centred on two distinctly different concepts. The provinces maintained that the Medical Care Act represented a federal encroachment upon exclusively provincial jurisdiction. I wish to emphasize once again, though I have already made it clear on a number of occasion, that this program has now become a federal-provincial program and it was the federal government which made it so. This aspect was stressed by the provinces themselves after the federal government had entered the field. During the discussion which preceded the introduction of the program, the provinces also maintained that their priorities were distorted by the availability of federal dollars, that the program was untimely and uncalled for in light of other considerations and existing provincial health care systems, and that the provinces had very little control over administrative costs, procedures or priorities.

I would remind the minister, further, that when Hon. John Robarts, who was premier of Ontario, embarked upon this scheme he was forced into it by the federal government collecting from him, legally or illegally, the cost of the medicare program. Ontario had its own scheme. As to the implications of the bill before us, I would draw the attention of hon. members to a statement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) in 1969. He said:

> The cost of health services has risen so rapidly in Canada in recent years that three alternatives are imminent:
> The standards of health care now available can be reduced, or
> Taxes, premiums or deterrent fees can be raised even higher—

That was the second suggestion. I ask the minister why medicare was brought in if there was going to be a deterrent fee. This is exactly the reason it was brought in. That is number two of the premise. The third was as follows:

> Ways must be found to restrain the growth of cost increases through better operation of the health service structure now in existence.

That statement was made in 1969—seven years ago. I am not blaming the present minister; I have a great deal of confidence in him, and he is working very hard to do his job; but it seems to me he is having to take care, as it were, of an automobile which must be kept on the road somehow, though it is in extremely poor shape; he has to make the best of it, but his best is simply not good enough in the circumstances. At any rate, he and his colleagues have had seven years in which to do something about it, but they have preferred to ignore it.

Today we find hospitals which charge patients $50 a day being closed in rural parts of Ontario, while hospitals in Toronto charging $150 a day are still open. I ask the minister how he intends to deal with people who fall sick in areas where hospitals are closed. Has the federal government considered its priorities carefully? I also ask provincial governments whether they have reviewed their priorities in the fields of education, transport, and so on, because I think this whole matter has been handled very badly.

The former minister of finance, Hon. John N. Turner, maintained that the cost of health care had risen by almost 20 per cent compared with last year. He was correct—but what he discreetly failed to mention was that almost the whole of this increase was the direct result of escalating expenditures in hospitals, not medical care.

This is a bad bill, and I say that very emphatically. It is a direct attempt to introduce shoddy medical care into one of the highest standards of medical care in the world. It is an attempt to downgrade the quality of medical care. This bill will stand long after the anti-inflation legislation has gone. We all know inflation tends to have a run after controls are taken off, but this bill will stay on and only an act of parliament will remove it.

The minister was very proud when speaking to Senator Edward Kennedy the other day about the cost of medical care in Canada compared with the United States. I know the minister thought he was absolutely right, but I happen to have been in hospitals in the United States. I did some of my training in them, and these hospitals are doing research into many things that we do not do in Canada. They have a population of 220 million, yet they are doing far more research than we are, with a population of 22 million scattered across Canada. This is why their costs are higher. They are giving the world much more research than we are. So I do not think the minister's comparison was quite fair. I know he meant well when he cited the figures, which I know are accurate enough; but, as I say, things are done in United States hospitals that are not done in Canadian hospitals.

The minister must concede that no group has conducted itself as well as the medical profession. I suppose the government takes a look at the votes of the doctors and thinks there are only 30,000 of them. Since these votes are a drop in the bucket, they say, "Let the doctors squawk." This may sound very political, but the government is being even more political by bringing in this bill. It is also cutting research. It is cutting personnel in order to pay health care costs. It is sacrificing research now, when research would lessen health care costs in the future. Again I should like to refer to the United States which spends 20 times the sum Canada spends on heart research. A further tragedy is that there is less and less opportunity for bright graduates to find a position that enables them to do heart research in Canada.

Canada is not looking after its alcoholics, either. The minister spoke about costs. Some statisticians believe that alcohol is the number one killer, ahead of cancer and heart disease. Yet thousands of our alcoholics have to go to the United States for treatment, according to Dr. George Strachan of Sydney. The government lowered the drinking age, which in turn increased the number of alcoholics requiring treatment in our hospitals. I might point out that each alcoholic requires the services of five people, which means a tremendous cost in caring for alcoholics. Preventive medicine, properly applied, could cut the rate. Health care costs will definitely go up and at a faster rate in the future. Millions of dollars over and above what is being spent now will be required for research.

I am sure that the minister realizes that in Canada today we have an aging population. He knows as well as I do that any person 60 years of age or over requires three times the health care of a person of 20. This is why costs will increase; there is no way to stop it. We do not have sufficient food to feed the young population of the world, and the old people will suffer even more. The pattern of medicine has changed. The fastest growing group in Canada today is the elderly. I remember a few years ago a well known preacher stating that this was the age of youth, and at that time half the people in Canada were under the age of 25. What he forgot in his enthusiasm for the growth of youth, of course, was that the pill and scientific medicine had knocked this idea into a cocked hat. The over-60 age group is now the fastest growing group, and as a result we have created a socioeconomic problem. I emphasize that fact because I have heard no mention of it in the House or at medical boards, university meetings I have attended, and so on.

We have a new breed of patients of which we have only limited experience. I refer to those 50 years of age and over who suffer from degenerative diseases. They are not cured by a pill or an antibiotic, and they create new problems in medicine. This field of study is known as geriatrics. To deal with this ever-increasing problem we have one chair of geriatric medicine in one university in the whole of Canada, namely, in the city of London. I think I am correct in saying that. The only one I know of is at Western University, and even they had to go to Great Britain to get a competent professor. Every school of medicine should have a chair of geriatrics so that prevention and treatment could be effectively applied.

The reason three times as many people fall sick at 60 as at 30, people requiring three times the amount of hospitalization, is degenerative diseases. We are entering an age in Canada where we will require more and more hospital care to take care of our aging population. We are trying to bring down the cost of hospitalization by keeping these people working if possible. But we are learning that diseases affect the elderly a little differently, and in some cases much differently. This is why the government should be doing research and establishing chairs of geriatric medicine. This must be done if we hope to cut costs. I give the minister credit for his exercise campaign, and so on. However, he is not going far enough and is not getting to the heart of the question. He does not understand the problem. Having only one geriatric chair in the whole of Canada is ridiculous.

In the field of medicine, 60 years ago pediatrics was in its infancy. Today there are over 800 pediatricians in practice. Has this paid off? Let us look at the track record. About 50 years ago disease was the common killer of people up to the age of 40. By adopting the scientific approach of setting up chairs of pediatrics we have almost eliminated disease and today accidents are the most common cause of death of persons up to the age of 40. In addition, we have almost eliminated disease among children. This approach has so changed the span of life that life expectancy, which in 1900 was 45 years, is over 75 years today, putting more and more people into the old age group who are requiring more and more medical care. Again let me emphasize my point to the minister: how in the world are we going to cut costs if more and more people are getting sick?

Our aim must be to spend more money on research in order to prevent, later in life, degenerative diseases as much as possible. This means doing research to find the cause of cardiovascular and other degenerative diseases and preventing them. These diseases can only be prevented in infancy. Research into these diseases is being conducted now in Canada with the 20 to 30 age group, but this is far too late. In the Korean war it was found that 50 per cent of young people between 20 and 30 years of age were already suffering from coronary disease. This research must start in infancy, not at the age of 30 when 50 per cent of the people affected by the disease show evidence of arteriosclerosis in their coronaries.

This is a bad bill because more and more money, not less, is required to reach this group of people with degenerative diseases. More and more money must be spent on research so that we may well be able to prevent degenerative diseases and treat the ever-increasing number who are reaching the age of 60. Further, the bill will denigrate the quality of medical care in the have-not provinces. I do not want to see the minister stay with something that is sliding down the hill. I have quite a high regard for the minister. I do not want to see him sitting on something that is so bad. If he will look carefully at the statistics I have presented, I ask him how in the world there will be less sick people when we have these statistics concerning the aging population. What has he done in the last five years to stop the erosion of facilities which have been provided? We might look at what is happening in Ontario, where through the closing of hospitals people are being frightened to death. What is happening? I quote from an article by Dr. Munro:

Mr. Lalonde has stated that "relative to any other groups in society, doctors' salaries have remained the same since the introduction of medical care when they took an increase."

However, research by Ronald Neilson published in the Ontario "Medical Review" in the summer of 1975 shows they have declined.

In summary we can expect from looking at past behaviour and current trends that there will be increasing governmental interference in medical practice. There will be an increase in the number of administrators and administrative costs of hospitals and medical care. There will be increasing waiting lists for medical treatment and lowering of medical standards.

The standards of excellence in treatment in Canada and Ontario that the public has learned to expect will become less obtainable. There will be a progressive drift from Canada of those people in medicine who demand excellence as the criteria for their practice of medicine. Those people now entering medicine will rapidly become disillusioned.

Ultimately, the only people remaining or entering medicine and allied fields will be second-raters who accept less than the ideal. Patients will soon learn to accept these standards, as they have in Britain, because there will be little else obtainable.

There is no indication to show that Canada, or any other country, can produce a leader who has the moral guts and leadership to admit past errors, and more equitable system. "Politics", said Robert Louis Stevenson, "is perhaps the only profession for which no preparation is thought necessary".

In conclusion, I want to say to the minister that I have much hope for him. I know that in his mind and heart he knows he is not doing the right thing in this field. However, he has hold of a political machine which must be operated and he must do the best he can to patch it up. When he tries to get out of this by saying it is a provincial matter, he is evading the issue. This was squarely laid down by Lester B. Pearson and others. At the time the provinces were subjected to this they said that they should be allowed to run their own show. From that date on, the federal government must accept responsibility in respect of any province where the Medical Care Act and the hospitalization situation is in difficulty. So I say to the minister that there is no way he can evade his responsibility. I hope that on sober second thought, as he attends the conferences he has been talking about and meets the people from the province of Ontario he will remember his duty and the fact that the responsibility rests with the federal government.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I also appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in respect of Bill C-68. It appears to me that the government has shown very little interest in this debate. This is a matter of great concern to Canadians. Although members of the opposition are often criticized for their participation, I believe we have an obligation to point out what we feel are the negative aspects of legislation such as this.

I think this legislation is a prime example of the Liberal philosophy. First of all we saw the federal government badger the provinces to join the medical scheme and practically ram it down their throats. After successfully pushing the provinces into the program, the federal government wishes to limit the expenditures it will contribute to it. Once again we see how this government, which thrives on confrontation, operates. So often in the past it has used the big club, so to speak, to push its views down the throats of the provinces. We saw this in the area of natural resources through the Petroleum Administration Act and Petro-Can. Now we also see it in the area of transportation.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has come down with a decree concerning what he will do in respect of the transportation system, without consultation with the various regions. I fail to see why the government does not consult more with the provinces in these pertinent areas if it ever hopes to achieve any harmony in the country. With regard to this specific piece of legislation, the federal government wishes to save a certain amount of money. That is understandable. I ask, however, why it does not look into the area of hospital costs, because my understanding is that approximately 80 per cent of the over-all costs related to medical costs are consumed by hospital care or institutional care, while only 20 per cent of the over-all costs can be attributed to physicians' services?

I believe something is drastically wrong with our system when hospital costs are over $100 a day for room and board. This is an area which the federal government should investigate. It should investigate whether the amount it currently pays for high cost, in-hospital active treatment care in these cost-sharing agreements with the provinces could be reduced. I do not believe this bill covers hospital costs; it is applicable to only 20 per cent of the over-all medical costs of physicians' services. We must also ask ourselves whether control in this area is justified. I should like to quote from the brief of the Alberta Medical Association. In that brief the association points out the following:

> Before examining the implications of the ceilings on federal contributions to Alberta, it is worth while to determine whether, in fact, control is justified. In his budget speech, Mr. Turner stated that last year federal contributions to the provinces in respect of the hospital and medical care insurance programs had to be increased 19.8 per cent over the previous year.

The Alberta Medical Association then went on to point out that the average per capita medical care costs for the ten major provinces rose only 5.9 per cent from the fiscal year ended March 31, 1973, to the fiscal year ended March 31, 1974. I hope the minister will respond to this question because I ask him to justify the large discrepancy in the figures. The federal government states that the contribution had to be increased by 19.8 per cent over the previous year, while the Alberta Medical Association points out that the per capita medical care costs for the ten provinces rose by only 5.9 per cent for the fiscal year. I ask the minister, in his statement at the end of this debate, to explain that discrepancy and tell us why there is a difference of some 14 per cent in the two estimates, that of the former minister of finance and that of the Alberta Medical Association.

I also ask the minister what type of over-all effect this bill will have on medical research. It appears to me that drastic cuts will have to be made in medical research. I think it is very important that we repeat some of the statements which were made earlier by hon. members in this debate, because most of what was said prior to my entry into the debate is crucial to the discussion on Bill C-68. The few further comments that I would like to make were well covered by one of my colleagues who cannot be with us today because of the illness of his wife, a classmate of 1974 who raised several excellent points. I should like to quote the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) as reported on page 10499 of Hansard of January 30, 1976. He said:

> It seems to be the concept and the philosophy of the government that the more control it can have over the individual, the more effective and better lives the people of Canada will have. This has been proven historically to be wrong over the centuries. Civilizations have gone down to complete failure and doom where this sort of situation has developed. I hope the government will see fit to begin to reverse its stand whereby it takes away all responsibility from individuals.

I think this bill exemplifies this government's philosophy according to which they know better what is good for the average individual than the individual himself. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has stated this repeatedly but, as the hon. member for Oxford said, this philosophy has been proven to be wrong in the past. It is also my hope that the government will see the error of its ways and will reconsider the implementation of this bill. On Wednesday, January 28, our spokesman replied to the minister with regard to this bill. I feel that some of what he said should be repeated. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) said:

> The present Liberal government which, unfortunately, is governing this country, has a long history of confronting various groups, whether they be provinces, professional groups, labour unions, business or private citizens. This bill represents once again a provocative confrontation with provinces and with professional groups involved in providing medical service to Canadians. The government's present attitude in this regard is shameful. This bill represents unilateral action on the part of the federal government. It is arbitrary and has been brought forward without meaningful consultation with the provinces. Indeed, it indicates a lack of concern for the opinions of provinces in matters concerning federal-provincial agreements.

The hon. member for Athabasca, who is our critic and our spokesman on these subjects, received limitless compliments on what he said with regard to this bill. I think he has proved his competence in this area, and I consider it an honour to be his colleague on this side of the House. It is interesting to note that even the leader of the NDP complimented our critic on what he said in the following words:

> Madam Speaker, I should like to say regretfully at the outset that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) was not listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), and that is unfortunate because that hon. member has made one of the finest speeches on the subject of medicare I have hear anywhere, here in the House of Commons or outside . . .
> His speech was an extremely thoughtful and competent approach to this very serious problem . . .
> Unfortunately, the minister paid not one bit of attention while that official spokesman for the opposition did such a fine job . . .
> That is unfortunate, Madam Speaker, and it shows something of the attitude of the minister who ignored the official spokesman of the Conservative party just as he has ignored, during the past year, the provincial health ministers of every province.

When I was travelling through my constituency I came across a good friend who is a doctor from Fort Saskatchewan, Dr. Sheppard, who is a daily recipient of Hansard. He said our critic had made a fine contribution on behalf of the Conservative party. I think it is evident, especially in our region of the country, that this government thrives on confrontration. We hope to bring light upon this subject in the House of Commons, but unfortunately all too often what we hope to bring to the attention of the minister or the government falls on deaf ears.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I should like to pay tribute once again to our critic, the hon. member for Athabasca, by quoting from the statement made by the leader of our party when he spoke in the debate. As reported in Hansard of January 30, 1976, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said:

> I was also unable to be present in the House when the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) spoke, but I read his speech with great interest. I thought it was a thoughtful and strong speech on the subject . . .
> The hon. member for Athabasca said just about all there is to be said about the bill when he described it as an arbitrary, unilateral act by the federal government . . .
> Here we see the government attempting to impose a ceiling unilaterally, not on the cost of medicare in this country but upon the federal government's contribution toward the cost of a program which the federal government itself has insisted that the provinces establish and administer. Madam Speaker, surely treachery is not too harsh a word to use to describe conduct of that kind. There is no other word for it. I must say it is consistent with the behaviour of a government which seems to regard itself as in no way bound by its word.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Madam Speaker, first of all I should like to say that I agree with the previous speaker regarding the remarks of the Conservative critic on the bill, and I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the former leader of this party, a man who knows a considerable amount about this subject. I think the speech of the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) showed a degree of sensitivity about medical care that his profession seems to be showing increasingly these days. I see he is blushing slightly, but I may have some things to say about doctors that he may not be so thrilled about.

In any event, I think the medical profession is maturing in terms of looking beyond the needs of the profession and toward the needs of the public in terms of the provision of medical services. The minister is one of the more sensitive and progressive members on that side of the House. That has been the consensus of people in the opposition for a long time. I strongly suspect that this bill is somewhat distasteful to the minister, but I think he is bound by the cabinet decision on the subject and I hope he will address himself to this question at some time. If he had his way, I suspect he would prefer to see the expansion of medical services in this country, and of the federal government's share in those services so that the objective of all of us to see that there is a standard of medical care in Canada which is the same in Newfoundland as in British Columbia, and the same in P.E.I. as in Quebec, is reached. But when the government abandons that position it is taking a step toward a kind of medical chaos which we see south of the border.

This bill is one of several which demonstrate a significant change in the philosophy of the government, the decision to cut back on CYC, LIP and OFY and all those programs which go along with the essential philosophy that we can no longer afford the just society and therefore will have to move in another direction which says "Let the devil take the hindmost."

This legislation does make provision for some increases in medical care. I think the figures are 13 per cent in the fiscal year 1976-77, 10.5 per cent in 1977-78, and 8.5 per cent thereafter. Then, as I recall, the legislation allows the government arbitrarily to set that portion which it is willing to share. It is the height of arrogance for a government which has a deficit of something like $5 billion to $6 billion this year to start dictating to the provinces about fiscal responsibility. It should be the provinces teaching this government to balance its budget. The provinces should be telling the federal government how to spend money.

Mr. Lalonde: What about the deficit in British Columbia?

Mr. Leggatt: I would take the deficit we have now in British Columbia ahead of the one the federal government projects each and every year. British Columbia has a very modest deficit compared with the one for which the minister is partially responsible in terms of some of the wasteful spending which goes on here in Ottawa. However, it is typical that the federal government feels it knows best in terms of spending money.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) pointed out that we have entered the second phase of the delivery of medical care. The first phase was to remove the financial burden, and we have done that very substantially. The second phase now is to get into those programs which will reduce medical costs, but initially we may have to increase some of our programming. In other words, we must enter the preventive area. We must provide care for the chronically ill in extended care units, properly shared by the federal government. We must consider life-style modification. There is a very interesting report in British Columbia, by Dr. Foulkes, entitled "Health security for British Columbians". Dr. Foulkes did a rather exhaustive analysis of current medical problems. I think this is the most recent major report on the subject. He pointed out that life-style modification through government advertising is at a very preliminary stage because life-style modification through commercial advertising, the promotion of alcohol, the promotion of cigarettes and the promotion of unnecessary drugs in society, is a fairly major life-style determinant.

The government has to redress that balance, not necessarily through censorship but we, as representatives of the people, should be out there balancing that prejudice in favour of bad health, and we should be out there pushing nutrition and a denticare program. A denticare program would be initially more costly, but in the long run there would be a reduction in the total social cost. It is just that it would be transferred from the private area into another area.

Another recommendation in the Foulkes report was routine examination for the apparently well. That would be provided through the use of the community clinic system. Again, the idea of a community clinic and the provision of medical services through a different style than through an independent doctor is one which should be embarked upon as a pilot project so that we could compare the effect of that kind of service we now have in the private medical sector. However, with this kind of legislation, provinces are going to be faced with the significant problem of how to raise money for new programs which obviously the federal government will not share.

The logical approach would be a deterrent fee. A deterrent fee is all right for somebody who makes the salary of a member of parliament, but it is not all right for someone at the low end of the income scale. A deterrent fee is a deterrent, presumably, for those seeking unnecessary medical attention. There are a few, but the number is much exaggerated because, in our society, if people are so upset with themselves that they have to get some kind of advice, surely we have a responsibility to provide at least that much service. I think many members of parliament find that a good number of their calls tend to be something of a catharsis for people who indeed may be in need of some consultation or help. I do not see any reason why that kind of service should not be provided.

In considering the situation which could develop from the abandonment by the federal government of its responsibility, or at least this step in that direction, it is interesting to look at the way in which medical services are provided in the United States. One of the things which makes me proud to be Canadian is the envy with which this country is looked upon by others with regard to the way we provide medical services. We have a long way to go, but at least there is a degree of sensitivity and civilization in seeing that those people who are poor and without adequate medical services are cared for. Somehow, that in a sense distinguishes the Canadian character and it is no coincidence that Senator Kennedy was here recently investigating the way in which we provide medical services.

I found it shocking that doctors in California thought it necessary to withdraw services because the premiums for their liability insurance were so high. In the state of California a person under the medical program can go to a doctor on a reduced premium system, but the doctor does not have to accept that person; so there are people in California crawling from one doctor to another asking to be taken as patients. There are a number of doctors who take them, and a number who do not. The good doctors who take them are flooded with patients under the medical program. That is not the kind of service we want for Canada, and neither does our medical profession.

I will not deal with the Saskatchewan strike because I think it raises issues which are unnecessary to dig over any more. Probably the parties in that dispute have learned something in terms of a humane and civilized approach. I do not think there is any need for the medical profession suddenly to go on salary or to become civil servants, but the profession and the government should examine the possibility, particularly for remote areas where there is difficulty in getting doctors, of community clinics and the provision of specialty services through the community clinic system. There should also, perhaps, be a lateral service so that a patient can decide whether he wishes to use the government community clinic or private medical services. That kind of pilot project is certainly worthy of examination.

With regard to cutting costs, we should examine the amount of equipment in private doctors' offices and the amount of intensive use it receives. There are many medical clinics in this country with laboratory and x-ray equipment receiving little use compared with equipment at the hospital level. There should be some thought given to the rationalization of the very expensive equipment which doctors have to buy and the total cost of medical services as a result. You do not have to get into this business of making a unilateral decision not to share the medical costs above a certain level. In British Columbia, a few pilot projects for home nursing care have started to cut medical costs. In this way people are released from hospital earlier and beds become available.

The reluctance of the medical profession to make home visits is understandable. It is much more convenient for a doctor to visit his patients in hospital, especially if they are all in the same ward. The fact is, however, that such a system is extremely expensive and the cost per hospital bed is high. Home nursing, with adequate care provided, reduces the costs substantially, so the provision of additional delivery services does not always mean an increase in costs.

I think the decision unilaterally to refuse to participate in expanded programs—because that is really what the bill is about—exposes a philosophical departure by the Liberal party. It exposes the bankruptcy of the just society that was so successful in this country around 1968, and it exposes a level of pragmatism that disappoints those of us who have been proud of the health delivery system in Canada. I should like to be able to continue to point out, when I travel abroad, that Canada has a fine medical services system even though it needs improvement in a number of areas. We certainly are not leaders in the field when compared with some of the Scandinavian countries, but we have been proceeding in the right direction. I think this departure is something that the government will regret, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil)—Government Administration—Government position on contribution to crop insurance fund; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Anti-Inflation Board—Reason for reducing amount of wage increase for University of Toronto library workers; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Penitentiaries—Maximum security psychiatric institutions—Status of institution proposed for Dartmouth.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Monday, February 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I decided to rise on this bill because I think it may enable us to understand the illness gnawing at the economic health in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-68 aims at controlling the annual per capita cost increase of services provides under the health insurance or the medical insurance plan. In short, Mr. Speaker, the government wants to ration medical services under the pretext that they are too expensive. It is not because Canadians do not need health care, but because this care costs too much. It is not because Canadians are all in good health, but once again because the services are too expensive.

Mr. Speaker, a proverb says that good health is the greatest of riches. But the government says: Good health is fine, but only if it is not too expensive. This, in effect, Mr. Speaker, is what the government is saying to Canadians by introducing a bill such as this one.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) said so very clearly in a speech he gave on September 15 last before the Richelieu Club of Montreal, when he stated:

The expansion rates of certain services, including those of the health care industry, are now above our means.

Mr. Speaker, the government therefore feels that it cannot afford to allow medical care to develop according to the needs of the Canadian people. All those who have studied this bill are concerned because they know that financial restrictions in this area will automatically affect the quality and quantity of medical care needed by Canadians.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, here is what Dr. Grisdale, chairman of the Canadian Medical Association, stated to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in a letter written on December 10 last. He wrote and I translate as follows: Must we now consider that the main priority of the medicare program is now financial and that in the future, the program will be modeled according to financial requirements of the time and not according to medical criteria?

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that this fear is shared not only by doctors but also all Canadians, and yet the government thinks it will contribute to right the present economic situation with Bill C-68. It hopes that by cutting down the expenditures made in the area of medical care, it will solve the problems that paralyze the economy of this country. In fact, the main effet of this legislation could be to make the area of medical care as disorganized and as badly off as the economic area.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the government does not see the real problem. It does not see the primary cause of all present difficulties. Yet, that cause is as visible and obvious as an elephant in a living room. The real cause of present difficulties lies in the economic and financial system in which we live.

Until the government is prepared to reform the present system, it will be faced with an unsurmountable obstacle. It is not by reducing health services that the government will improve the economic system. Nor is it by controlling prices and salaries with an army of public servants paid $50,000 a year that the government will solve the problem of inflation. Nor is it, Mr. Speaker, by letting hundreds of businesses go bankrupt that the government will improve the situation. No, Mr. Speaker. If the government really wants to solve the problems upsetting our economy, it will have to come to grips with the roots of the illness—the monetary and financial system. Mr. Speaker, Social Crediters never hesitated to make their solutions known.

Ever since Social Crediters came to the House, the government never had any excuses for its lack of action. The government certainly realized that as long as there will be a gap between available production and the consumers' purchasing power, the economic system will remain wrong. The Social Crediters say that the purchasing power of the people should be increased so they can get the available goods and services, particularly health services and goods. Mr. Speaker, I mean available goods and services.

Indeed, no one would dare say that here, in Canada, we do not have the technical means to provide all Canadian citizens with first class medical care, according to everyone's needs. We have doctors, and on this subject, I would like to add something. We have doctors, but not everywhere. In the major areas, yes. But in areas like ours, no. We also have hospitals, as well as technology and drugs. What is missing, Mr. Speaker? As the minister said, we are short of money. It is not because of a shortage of doctors that the health minister wants to reduce medical care in Canada. The reason is not a lack of drugs either. It is just that he finds it too expensive. He believes that we cannot afford it. We could ask ourselves about the logic of such a reasoning. We have everything we need as far as competence, technology and drugs are concerned. However, we shall have to do without medical care. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because the minister tells us we do not have enough money.

The Social Crediters say that purchasing power, and availability of money must correspond to our physical capacity, our technical or physical means. A system in which we deprive people of medical care under the pretext that money is scare is absolutely ridiculous. However, this is what this minister proposes. He says that it is too expensive, that we have to restrain the extension of medical care even if doctors say that they could not give more care than they do now.

If we have the technical means and the doctors required to give a better service—and, as I said earlier, in some areas like larger centres there are doctors—the financial system should serve man and meet his needs according to our actual capacities and not our financial capacities. The Social Crediters want the financial system to be at the disposal of man and not the reverse. This makes the whole difference between the program of this government and the program of the Social Credit. This government does not want to change our financial system and prefers reduced medical care. They would rather attack the production system and drive companies to bankruptcy. And all this because it is too expensive for the financial system.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this government should consider seriously what Social Crediters have been proposing for several years. If the government changes the financial system it could solve the problems there are in that field and in the field of medical care. This problem is particularly acute in areas distant from larger centres. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for remote areas like Abitibi, Témiscamingue, Lac Saint-Jean, and the Gaspe Peninsula to get doctors. For instance, Mr. Speaker, I heard the minister say some time ago that there was in our area in 1968 one physician for 769 inhabitants and now there is one for 586 inhabitants.

Mr. Speaker, I would very much like to know where the minister has taken his statistics when you find only three general practitioners in a constituency of 12,000 people such as mine. No wonder that their patients must wait 15 days or more to get an appointment. Here is the best example I can think of. About a month and a half ago I wanted to have one of my children examined. I had to wait a month and a half for an appointment.

This does not mean that the physicians do not do their utmost to help the people, but since there are only three of them for 12,000 people, they are simply overworked. The case I have just mentioned occurred at Chibougamau, in the constituency of Villeneuve; at Senneterre, there is one physician for 8,000 people and in Lebel-sur-Quévillon, two for 7,000 people. Then the minister tells us that he wants to reduce expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, how can a physician be expected to give good service under those conditions? The minister also said a while ago that they were afraid to train too many doctors.

I enjoyed the remark of the hon. member for Roberval: Is he really afraid there may be too many physicians or is he concerned because this would reduce their earnings? But in areas such as Lake St. John, Abitibi, Témiscamingue, Gaspesie and the North Shore, I am not worried, because doctors will always be able to make a good living.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that in my area we could do with more doctors, I do not mean one, two or three, but a dozen to take care of the people I have mentioned. It is said that this happens in farming and rural centres, and I agree. But why should rural centres have to put up with such a situation and have no medical care, particularly in the field of surgery?

Mr. Speaker, I realize the statistics are erroneous because specialists and doctors serving the people are lumped together and sent to the large centres instead of being helped to settle down in our areas.

As I said a while ago, it always boils down to a matter of money. If doctors could get an isolation bonus as some others do, I am convinced they would be willing to settle and practice in remote areas like ours. Unfortunately, because the government gives priority to money matters over medical problems, it refuses to act and solve that serious problem. It would rather reduce medical services and thus deprive the population of some services rather than alter the financial system.

The quality of the medical services Canadians are entitled to must not be lowered. As long as the government tries to solve the problems by cutting down medical services, those services will deteriorate and the situation will worsen. The government should roll up its sleeves and attack the real problems, the urgent problems such as that of reforming our economic system.

Mr. Speaker, a while ago I said that the government does not want to help—at least, it gives no indication of wanting to do so—remote populations such as ours. Bearing in mind the fact that remote areas are faced with very serious problems at this time with regard to the quality of medical services because of a shortage of doctors, and I am referring here to areas like Gaspé, northwest Quebec and Lake St. John, particularly the Chapais and Chibougamau areas. For several years, people in these areas have asked the minister concerned, either provincial or federal, whether it would be possible to provide those areas with doctors. The only answer they get is that this matter is within provincial jurisdiction. I agree that this is within provincial jurisdiction, but one could also ask, since the federal government is subsidizing programs within provincial jurisdiction, like the teaching of French, why the minister could not do the same regarding doctors. I believe that the whole population in my constituency, as well as the population in the constituency of Roberval and many others I am not aware of, would be enormously satisfied with the services they could get, and would be satisfied with the minister representing them today.

[English]

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is important to address ourselves to the subject matter of this bill. The minister has always been concerned about the health and safety of Canadians: he places great emphasis on health. I suggest that this is not the time for sheer opposition for opposition's sake. I know that some hon. members opposite who are personally interested in the health of Canadians and in the extension of medicare to the most remote areas of Canada have made interesting and valuable contributions to this debate. However, a number of opposition members have lambasted the government for proposing to bring in ceilings on the rate of escalation which will be recognized under the medical care program for the next several years. These hon. members do so on the grounds that this will represent a destruction of the standards of service built up, the reversing of co-operative federalism and, on occasion, even the undermining of confederation.

● (1700)

I would like to comment on these charges. These are the same members who continually insist that we should reduce government spending. However, it seems that in this case, because of the horrors of the woods and the ghosts in the closet, this government must overexpend or go further to chase away the demons. Reasonably complete information is now available on the experience in the ten Canadian provinces from 1971-72, the first full fiscal year of participation of all the provinces in medicare, to 1974-75. While final data is not yet available for 1975-76, such data as is available is compatible with the experience for the previous years. During this period, by far the largest factor affecting the increase in per capita costs of physicians' services was the increase in the number of physicians per 1,000 injured persons, which increased at almost twice the rate of increases in fee schedules and rather more than three times the rate of the population growth or the normal growth in utilization per capita of physicians' services.

A year ago, at the request of and in collaboration with the provinces, the federal government closed the door on unrestricted immigration of physicians from abroad through the device of assigning zero points for physicians as a class and requiring that physicians, like any other occupational group, show evidence of need through a firm job offer or other device from the province in which they intended to locate. This measure has given the provinces a great measure of control in determining how many and what type of physicians they are prepared to admit from abroad, and also in what localities to permit practice. This is certainly not taking away from the co-operation between the federal government and the provinces in giving the provinces good and almost complete control in the development of the physicians in their provinces.

We have evidence of a substantial decline in the immigration of physicians from abroad during the latter half of 1975, and undoubtedly this trend will continue throughout the years to come, although it is obvious that any province which feels it needs additional physicians is free to permit their entry. This substantially reduced immigration of physicians, which immigration, at times had exceeded 50 per cent of the total increase in the Canadian supply since medicare, should have a substantial moderating effect on the rate of cost increase of physicians' services from now on. Because of this, and in view of the fact that proposed ceilings are by no means out of line with the actual historical experience in recent years when there was no ceiling on the federal contribution, the ceilings should not cause any particular problems to provinces in relation to meeting the necessary costs of physicians' services. This is particularly so because of the superimposition of the federal anti-inflation program which not only limits the rate of increase indirectly in fee schedules and other forms of physician remuneration, but also should have an ameliorating effect on the cost of overheads on the one hand and cost to consumers on the other which figure in fee settlements.

Fears have been expressed that the proposed ceilings will reduce the quality of medical care, but there is absolutely no reason why this should occur. As a matter of fact, the ceilings proposed for medical care are not as unrealistic as some critics have alleged, since the allowable percentage increase proposed for the fiscal years 1976-77 through 1977-78 is actually greater than the increase experienced from fiscal year 1971-72 through 1974-75. The ceilings will actually permit continuation of the present high level of medical care and even reasonable increases in doctors' incomes.

I would remind hon. members opposite that the estimated reduction in the federal contribution to the provinces under the first year of the ceilings proposed under Bill C-68 would amount to less than 2 per cent of the provincial estimates received prior to the anti-inflation program and, consequently, may well turn out to be somewhat less than that. It may well be that the federal share will still equal 50 per cent of the program costs. In any event, many opposition speakers have taken a rather remarkable turn in advocating that instead of attempting to restrain the cost of physicians' services, and indirectly of hospital services, the federal government should forge ahead in cost-sharing any health expenditure that any province is currently making. This is, surely, one of the most bizarre suggestions that I have encountered, considering all the cries for cuts we have heard and all the promises to reduce budgets by billions and billions of dollars, when we all know that in this area we cannot reduce beyond the point of no return. Even when we put it in a way that gives this House some manner in which we would have some say, some manner in which we would be able to predict what might happen, members opposite cry for us to forge ahead in an irresponsible manner.

If taken literally, this would mean that the legislature of each individual province would have the prerogative of determining what taxes would be paid by the residents of every other province, since the federal government would be automatically drawn into cost-sharing any health expenditure that each province decided to make. This would be so even if the particular health expenditure was simply unique to the tastes of that particular province, whether it dovetailed in any way, shape or form with similar programs in other provinces, no matter whether it was available to all residents on uniform terms and conditions or whether it was something provided through subsidized private insurance arrangements on a restricted basis and with all sorts of deductibles or other limitations.

Quite obviously, only this Chamber can legislate taxes that apply to all Canadians or lay down conditions that will govern the payment of taxes by all Canadians. To follow this advice would not only be to create an open-ended program of totally unpredictable magnitude, but also to create a great, crazy patchwork quilt of arrangements in Canada with no guarantee of portability, interchangeability, accessibility or common cost experience which enable any type of sensible federal-provincial cost-sharing arrangement to be arrived at. As an alternative, we are proposing a logical extension of coverage, using the existing health insurance acts which guarantee universal accessibility, comprehensiveness, portability and non-profit administration within the areas which are determined. The government has already had numerous discussions with the provinces and determined those areas in which there is a high degree of consensus.

Advancing coverage in these areas will certainly maintain the national aspects of our program which are so essential for a mobile population. What is required is the firm commitment on the part of the provincial governments to adhere to the targets in respect of hospital, medical and other important services which they have outlined to departmental officials during the discussions that have occurred during the past year. With such commitments the federal government can foresee, to a large extent, its essential obligations. So can provinces whose costs are directly or indirectly influenced by the expenditures made by other provinces. If the federal-provincial partnership in health care, which in my view is so essential to Canada, is to survive there must be more than lip service paid on both sides to understanding and agreement as to the course which must be taken. This has not always been the case in the past, and I suggest that many of the sins have also been on the provincial side.

I sincerely hope that as a result of the renewed negotiations which we expect to occur in the near future, a more effective federal-provincial partnership will emerge which will safeguard the interests of the provinces and the federal government, as a result of which the health care system in Canada will make further progress to the advantage of all Canadians.

An hon. Member: Ha!

Mr. MacFarlane: And it is important to remember, rather than saying "Ha!" three times in a row, that this minister has always given the program his highest priority and that with his kind of expertise it will be possible to say from this side of the House where we are going, and not where they think we should be.

● (1710)

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today is one which has to do, really, with the government's attempt to combat inflation. If hon. members opposite care to listen to my observations, I think they will hear something which may be of use to them. What we are considering is, in effect, a panic-stricken effort on the part of a government which is facing rolling inflation whose consequences are endangering many government programs as well as the private security and peace of mind of most of the people of Canada. I say at the outset that the government had better listen to speeches such as that made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and think about them carefully, because what the hon. member was saying today concerning the needs of his people is applicable to every riding in this country.

The subject has personal interest to me—a painful one, too. I attribute the major cause of my defeat in 1968 and of being turfed out of parliament for four years to this very issue, and even though I can say, personally, that I was innocent, someone got on the CBC about ten days before the election claiming to be a Conservative and said that if the Conservatives got in in 1968, medicare would be stopped. As a result, four or five Saskatchewan MPs went down the drain in that election. That is one of the issues which sent us down to defeat. There were others, of course. I mention this as a warning to hon. members on the other side of the House.

In almost every country in the world, whether it be socialist or relatively freely organized, as is our western world, the question of medical care is probably the most sensitive area with which parliament can deal. In the western world we were slow to embark upon social welfare legislation. As for the type of programs we brought forward, we had to rush into them and that is the only excuse for much of the stupidity which has gone on in this area in North America for the last 30 years in connection with social programs.

I am glad to see in the Chamber today a minister who once held the portfolio of National Health and Welfare; I refer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). I think we would be a witness to the truth of much of what I have to say. Perhaps when I have finished members on the other side will recognize the need to put pressure on the government in order to free themselves from the narrow considerations which guide the building of policy by virtually all governments in Canada when it comes to the subject of health care.

The bill before us has been described by many people who understand its details far better than I do as amounting to an opting out on the part of the government from its own program. The reason given by the government, in justification, is a legitimate one in their peanut brain. They think it is a way in which to reduce costs. They are frightened by the tremendous increase in the cost of all these openended programs which now account for 80 per cent of the tremendous spending power of the federal government.

Some of us are old enough to remember the great enthusiasm in the United Kingdom during the war years when a nation sorely troubled by physical and economic dangers was fighting for survival. Some of us remember the excitement which went through the ranks of the troops as they heard announcements about "cradle to grave" social welfare programs which were being proposed at that time. They gave great hope not only to men and women in the services but to people in the civilian ranks of war. They encouraged a belief that a more equitable social order could be brought into being after the war. It was all going to be worth while.

I recall going back to Saskatchewan and witnessing the birth of the basic hospitalization plan—and I give full credit to the hon. member who now sits in this House on my left for being the father of that proposal. I believe he was aware that he was trying to get Saskatchewan to catch up with the western world by providing some form of egalitarian service in a field of vital interest to the people. I recall how the province of Saskatchewan undertook a statistical study in connection with the scheme, on the basis of which it was ascertained that out of every 1,000 people in the province, 66 received hospital treatment in the course of a year. Because the government was proposing to bring in a universal plan, it was thought likely that more people would take advantage of the plan, so in calculating the costs it was estimated that 100 people out of every 1,000 would go to hospital each year. If I am wrong as to any detail, I hope the House will pardon me, because I am trying to get an idea across.

Here was a government with great sincerity, and a firm sense of social purpose, trying to provide for the people of Saskatchewan no matter where they lived or how much they earned. They went into the legislation with honesty and sincerity. Yet within four years a great fear came over all of us who were watching the hospitalization scheme in Saskatchewan. I remember being called into a private meeting at which we were told about the rising costs of the scheme. An appeal was made to members in all parties to do our best to solve this problem of escalating costs in order to save the scheme. This was a private meeting. I recall a list of six causes of the overly large use of the plan. Within four years of the plan starting, instead of having an expected 100 per 1,000 going to the hospital each year, the figure was 326 per 1,000. At this rate of escalation, members of all parties knew the plan would be so expensive that it would put in great danger a scheme that everyone wanted.

The matter came up for debate in the house on a series of proposals to restrain and hold back these rising, openended costs. One unfortunate member of the legislature on the opposition side, in all sincerity reported to the House that in his municipality they once had a hospital fund, with so many mills on the tax bill to pay for it. When the people found out it was universal and that for the same number of mills everyone had free access to the hospital in the municipality, the number of people who decided to go the hospital was away above expectation, and as a result costs increased. They had to place a negative, deterrent fee on each individual to bring back the cost of hospitalization roughly to what it was before.

If you can, Mr. Speaker, let your imagination visualize the scene. With roughly 50 members of the legislature, at least half of them, if not more, were trying to catch the Speaker's eye. They all wanted to say that this was not their view. My colleague from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands will probably remember the scene. The Speaker gave the floor to the hon. member from Saskatoon, and he used a phrase that I will never forget. He said that he didn't care if he spent $1 million, he didn't want one sick person kept out of hospital in Saskatchewan. Up jumped the leader of the Liberal party, who said that the views expressed by the opposition member were not the views of the Liberal party. In due course an election came and that poor, unfortunate member was defeated.

I simply tell that story as a warning to members here. People want some form of universal medicare, unemployment insurance and accident insurance as part of the egalitarian movement in all countries of the world. Naturally we must be concerned about cost. This is why many of us have taken to wondering what positive way we can evolve to find a scheme that would take away none of the essential services, yet provide people with what they want. By this time some of us had access to figures relating to the United Kingdom scheme. The United Kingdom had brought in hospitalization and medicare with a great rush, without the infrastructure being present. The cost of the scheme had escalated 300 per cent to 400 per cent in the first two or three years. The question was whether all the people in the United Kingdom could afford these services, with the tremendous utilization of those services, with costs climbing at such a rapid pace.

Therefore, a number of us put forward a plan about which I will speak in a few minutes. This plan attempted to grapple with the problem of rising costs when you provide a needed service on a universal basis. Before I refer to this plan, I want to step ahead in time and say that the party that I belong to had come out for prepaid hospital services and prepaid medical services in Saskatchewan at our convention in Moose Jaw in 1936. When we formed the government in Ottawa in 1957 we started to look at the various proposals that we had and at the tremendous amount of detailed figures that were available. We agreed, as a government, to set up a royal commission which became known as the Hall commission. This was under the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Having read and listened to a number of speeches in this debate, I get the impression that no member has gone back and examined the basic conclusions of the Hall report, as if it made no difference that it was the only definitive study in the history of Canada and that of other countries, including China and Russia, of such a medical scheme. Apparently no one wants to introduce that knowledge into the debate we are now having.

I would recommend that the views of people who were strongly for the principle of a universal medicare plan across this nation, as put forward in this report, should be remembered and that these views should be reread. They had in the back of their mind that they had to put forward a program that not only met the needs of the people but which also had a built-in control mechanism that would keep costs within the capacity of the economy to pay. For example, they recommended that proposals be brought in across Canada in a series of stages. The first of these was diagnostic services, which I think were estimated to cost about $5 per person. In other words, as you introduce medicare, you first of all provide clinics in every community, rural and urban, to which people could go, get diagnostic treatment, find out what is wrong with them and then get the proper type of service. That was the first proposal.

There were many others, Mr. Speaker, such as setting up a scheme for training nurses and doctors. Various levels of accommodation were provided for all kinds of illness in all parts of the country. If this were done step by step, you would avoid the mistakes that were made in the United Kingdom. In addition, the commission had the benefit of the Saskatchewan situation. I am not quarreling with the sincerity of any member of a party in this House who has a common desire for a universal hospitalization scheme, prepaid medicare, and so on. I am simply saying that the time has now come to direct our thinking into what is going to destroy this scheme. I contend that what will destroy these open-ended schemes of ours is our failure to get at the driving motives of the people themselves.

As you listen to me, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are thinking that the principle of universality creates a demand factor many times greater than any ordinary planning would consider normal. That is true. We see it today with unemployment insurance. At least half of those drawing unemployment insurance have discovered the technique of beating the act, and they are professionals at it. Yet every one of us here wants this security; we want to know that unemployment insurance is available if we become unemployed. How, then, do we provide the incentive not to abuse this type of open-ended legislation? Even though I am dealing here primarily with medicare, we have to look at the picture in its whole perspective. I am not going to go through all the recommendations contained in the Hall commission report. I am suggesting that the people whom I know are interested in saving these schemes look at the recommendations in that report to see whether, even at this late date, there is not something of value left.

I know time has passed on. We ignored the whole recommendation and plunged ahead with medicare. By means of this bill we are now trying to fight our way financially out of the situation. I suppose that a reading of the whole report would be redundant, but at least in doing so we would have an idea of the practical changes suggested at that time that would have avoided what we are presently facing. So I now come back to the second proposal put forward by the Diefenbaker government, which has largely been ignored by the economic historians. Certainly it has been ignored in this field of social services. My colleague, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), knows about this proposal.

Some of us who wanted to save these schemes and make sure they would work and would be schemes that we could afford, proposed a package which would include hospitalization, medical care, unemployment insurance and, yes, accident insurance—that must come. We would pay into those schemes as we normally do, obviously on a reasonable actuarial basis. A certain amount of each payment would be set aside in what we would call the social fund to look after those who are chronically ill, chronically unemployed, or unable to cope with their social responsibility. The remainder would be placed in an individual fund for each individual.

If at the end of a worker's life, using the ages 20 to 65, the worker had not been unemployed too often, was not in hospital too often, was not sick too often but had just the normal amount, the excess of his payments into this fund, with interest applied at the normal rate, could be added, when he retired at any age he liked, to his old age pension. At that time it was calculated on the basis of 1958 figures. The calculation was that if a person was sick the average amount, unemployed the average amount, and had the average number of accidents, he could add $125 to his old age pension, which was then receivable at age 65. The amount added would be for the normal 60 per cent or 80 per cent of us who are not sick chronically. This would act as an incentive for people not to be coaxed into hospital or coaxed into a doctor's office too often. We know the percentage of people who use these schemes.

I recall the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings speaking on that proposal. I also spoke on it. All the people to whom we spoke about it were enthused. They said they would respond to such a proposal.

I for one am sorry that 12 or 13 years later nothing has been done. Here we are in this House facing the penalty for nothing having been done. If one would take a chart showing the amount of money spent in the last 15 years on these open-ended statutory items such as medicare, one would see the growing upward curve and one would understand what is terrifying the Treasury Board and the men who look at the finances of the nation. That is why the government says that we cannot cut government expenses, or that all that is left for us to cut is 20 per cent because the other 80 per cent is fixed.

I shall make a statement which I may not be able to qualify quantitatively. However, I suggest that on unemployment insurance, hospitalization, and medicare, without taking away a single necessary service to people needing them, the cost could be reduced on this type of package proposal by between 50 per cent and 60 per cent because what we have in this proposal is an individual incentive not to abuse this universal program. We would not get into the situation we are in now of having a negative deterrent.

In Saskatchewan when the hospitalization costs rose a new government was elected under the premiership of Mr. Thatcher. He put in a negative deterrent. I believe it was a few cents, or perhaps $1.50 or something of that nature, that was charged when a person went for a service. When we look at that individual negative deterrent introduced by the Liberal government of Saskatchewan we see that it was the sick person who suffered. That government was defeated. That was part of the reason for its defeat.

I give this warning to the government. I know that the members of the government have abdicated their responsibility as politicians and representatives of the people, and have turned the question over to the mandarins in the civil service. When the mandarins say "jump", members of the government do not say "which way", but rather "how high?" In effect the mandarins are not told that, for survival purposes, in the mix the government would like them to consider some sort of proposal like this.

I know the figures I quoted for 1958 are many years obsolete. I also know that if you take the rate we calculated in 1958, together with the present figures, and take unemployment insurance which I think was 36 cents and is now $3.30, almost ten times higher, I would think at age 65 a worker would have $400 or $500 to add to his pension if those figures were interpolated forward. I do not have the machinery to do this calculation.

I would say to the government, particularly to its members who have backgrounds in this House before 1972, that they should remember the past, and that if they want to be reminded of the past there is a book written by an ex-cabinet minister by the name of Miss LaMarsh, called "A Bird in a Gilded Cage". I suggest they read this book written by the ex-minister of health and social welfare and see how she started out with great sincerity and idealism to bring in programs such as medicare, and then see what happened to her and who ran the show. They should read that history again and read who it was in the cabinet at that time who opposed medicare. Where are they today?

I ask this House not to forget the simple elementary rule that any nation that does not learn from its mistakes of the past has no future. This is the truth I am trying to put forward. We have made horrible blunders, and not with any lack of sincerity. Perhaps we thought we would win an election or two by using these things as promises. I say we must not let this program be endangered by the type of negative deterrent this bill represents. It is not an individual negative deterrent but rather the worst deterrent of all.

The provinces were pushed into this scheme in a brutal manner in 1968 with no controls on their expenditures, then a ceiling was put on, the government backed off, and when there is a problem in respect of hospitalization it will back off further. Before you back off and throw the load on to the provinces who have to face people because it is their responsibility, give a thought to alternative proposals which are constructive, I believe, which are worthy of consideration, and which get away from these negative deterrents.

In speaking on second reading of this bill I should like to say that those of us who are conscious that progress continues at different speeds at different times should realize that we should not be ashamed as members of legislatures and members of parliament of the progress we have made in the last 30 years. The progress we have made should not be endangered by our refusal to challenge the orthodox economics of people who can only think in terms of restrictions and negative controls. The human mind can produce ideas that can harness the positive and the good in people, and I think that the great majority of people in any nation—60 per cent or 80 per cent, I do not know—will respond to positive individual incentive to get these programs to work and to stay within their economic capacity.

The only person who has reason to fear it is a person who is so tied up with the idea that he wants the maximum pension when he quits work at the age of 65 that he would rather die first than lose a nickel. You have to be pretty far gone to have that kind of philosophy. That is the only effective argument that can be used, but a great deal of work has to be done in doing the arithmetic. I think that all parties would support the government in that type of positive approach because these schemes, which the great majority of Canadian people want and accept as fundamental rights, will be destroyed if you let escalating costs climb and climb. You cannot nibble off 2 per cent savings here and 2 per cent there and save them.

When you re-read the speech of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) speaking for his 12,000 people in the bush in Quebec, you will realize that he is speaking for 22 million people across this country. This is how they will judge us if we allow this type of shortsighted, negative restrictions to be put through under this bill.

As I said earlier, I have a personal interest in this because of my own political defeats, and I warn hon. members that no matter how popular they may think they are in their ridings, if they touch the fundamental needs of their people they will not last very long.

Mr. Lalonde: You are worried about the province of Ontario.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I am worried about every provincial government which was forced into this scheme and which is criticized the same as is this government here. They have the same pyramidal civil servants who want to continue these programs in their own way. They are aware of other alternatives, and yet they do not support the ministers who do not speak for the people any more. Until we can impose our will on mandarins in the civil service who have these ideas, the end result will be that not only these programs are endangered but the very individual existence of members of parliament and cabinet ministers will be endangered.

No man is in greater danger in the cabinet than the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is today. He is bound to his civil service on matters of family allowances which he brought into the House, and he is bound to his civil servants with regard to this type of negative deterrent. But he thinks he will ride along forever. However, people have a way of catching up with these great men, and putting them on their knees to be humble again. All I can suggest is that when the term of the government is over, some of its members will remember that they were warned.

I should like to conclude by saying that no Canadian knowing the social history of this country, knowing the needs of the people, and knowing that inflation is not being fought with this type of measure—inflation is fought by attacking the basic causes of inflation, and the anti-inflation Bill C-73 which we put through does not fight it—will respond in a positive way.

You have to get at the fundamental costs and there must be a control mechanism in the universal plan. The control mechanism must be an individual one under which the individual citizen and the whole country benefit from controlling the plan, and then the great majority of the people will respond. If we are to save these plans, this is what I think the course will be. I hope that the government will take a look at this type of thinking, and then it will receive the support of all members of the House.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of filling in the time until the dinner break, and perhaps beyond it. The reason I wish to take part in this debate is that I have been a member of the House for some time, and when the minister presented the bill it raised some revulsion within me for the simple reason that I thought we were being asked to second-guess ourselves. I imagine that will be my principal point in this debate.

Over the years one is asked to judge on many particular points of legislation, to make an assessment of what the government does. In this case I can remember being asked to give my approval or my opinion as to whether we should have medicare legislation, which is now being implemented in this country. Before that I can remember fighting on the hustings for what I believe is the right of every Canadian, the right to the best health care possible.

When forced to look back at those days I cannot even recall what the arguments against were, because I think we had all made our points so well about ten years ago in the House that there should be proper medical care for Canadians and no persons should be ever allowed to suffer or forced to have every last thing they saved in their lives taken away because of illness. I believe that. I stand up here tonight almost in a state of bewilderment as to why there should be any restriction on that sort of thing because I really believe no one in this Chamber should ever have to go through the humiliation of having to sell everything, or try to sell everything he has in life to maintain his health.

There may be very few things we start with which will give us some kind of break in life, but I should like to think that we all started out from the gate with at least the right to health. I think that has to be important to the Canadian way of life. I know that each and every hon. member of the House who is listening to me will agree that there are things we can fall by the wayside on, but on health, no. We should be given a reasonably decent environment and a reasonably decent assurance that we do not have to fall by the wayside on health.

I am bothered because I thought we had decided, and decided well, that irrespective of party and the like, we had fought that battle, and it was over with. I really think this is a mistake which will haunt us for a long time. Suddenly we start to preach restraint, and this and that. If this is virtue, it should have been drilled into this House ten or 20 years ago, not now. This should not be happening at the last moment in some strange shape and form.

I object to this bill for that reason alone, but I also object to it for other reasons. I will present them as best I can, and then sit down at six o'clock. My first objection is that we made a statement in principle years ago, and now something has happened so that we are supposed somehow to negate, obliterate or water down the principle we adopted.

I suppose because doctors form a very successful part of the community they must somehow be singled out for what they get out of medicare. That is wrong. I think doctors perform well in today's society, and I say that because I come from a community where there is one of the leading medical schools in the world, but there are also many people who have given themselves to the medical arts.

I suppose I should declare a certain self-interest at this moment. I have an uncle who was at one time the president of the Nova Scotia Medical Society. I have a son-in-law whose life's work is to try to cure cancer. He is a physicist. I now have that out of the way. Those two people are well able to look after themselves, so I do not have to go to bat for them anywhere in the land. However, their work is important.

I am informed by people in whose advice I believe that the cost of physicians' services as a percentage compared to the total federal expenditure has decreased from 3.9 per cent in 1971-72 to a possible or projected 2.9 per cent in 1975-76. This in itself would be a reason to say that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has not proven his case beyond a reasonable doubt. In fact, he has not proved it at all, and he will have to do so before I accept the suggestion that what he is trying to do with Bill C-68 is popular, necessary or essential.

I say that doctors are underpaid, and I am not a doctor myself so I can make the statement perhaps much easier than almost anybody else in this Chamber who is not a doctor. However, I realize that some of the doctors here support me in that statement. As a matter of fact I think I have the acclamation of my good friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and he probably would stand up and say that yes, doctors indeed are underpaid.

Mr. Paproski: He better or he won't get their votes next time.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps he does not need their votes, but he needs a certain amount of credibility in the community, and I suspect he will have to scout and fish for a long time before he finds it. I do not want to see doctors made some kind of whipping boys in this age when people are very concerned about prices and about how much their dollar is able to do for them. I think it would be invidious if we took doctors and made them whipping boys.

The final point I wish to make is one I made years ago on many occasions. I think we should treasure our intellectual resources. We should be happy to promote our universities, those who will be students and those who will be adding something in order to advance us in the field of scholarship, and if we take Bill C-68 at the value which the Minister of National Health and Welfare places on it and accept it, we would be taking steps backward and not forward. That would hurt us in every way, shape and form in our desire to have Canadians better cared for. I think it would be a step back, and not only a short step back but a long one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. McCleave.]

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I do not often intervene in debates on medical health. There are others more qualified and experienced in this field. I do believe, however, that this is one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before this parliament. It affects very many of my present constituents, it will affect more in the future, and many more who will be living in my constituency when I am no longer around. For that reason I am glad to contribute to the debate on Bill C-68 which is to amend the Medical Care Act.

The reasons for our position on the bill are well known. To begin with it embodies cuts in health care. If there is one field in which economies may well turn out to be short-sighted and counterproductive, it is this field of health care. The Health of the people of Canada is obviously one of Canada's greatest assets, and any so-called economies that have the effect of depriving Canadians of health care services would be a false economy indeed.

There was a time when the Liberal party proudly acclaimed as one of its contributions to the nation the legislation by which parliament assumed 50 per cent of all insured services provided under the agreement. In addition, the federal government contributed roughly 50 per cent to hospital and diagnostic services. These measures were and are important to hundreds of thousands of Canadians. They were, of course, pioneered by the CCF in the province of Saskatchewan, but the Liberals boasted—and I think perhaps justifiably—that it was their legislation that provided the means of procuring a decent standard of health care for all Canadians from Bonavista to Vancouver Island. This symbol, and it was more than a symbol, of Canadian unity will be shattered by Bill C-68 which we are asked to approve.

The 50 per cent rule is to be replaced by maximum contributions in the federal field and diminishing contributions in percentage amounts. The effect can only be to impose heavier burdens on the poorer provinces and deprive some of the citizens of those provinces of medical services that are urgently required.

In the budget of last June the then minister of finance gave notice of the eventual termination of federal contributions to hospital and diagnostic services. I know that these services are not covered by the bill we are discussing, but are related to it. This bill shows how the wind is blowing. It gives notice of the threat hanging over the heads of the provinces, even if some new agreement is eventually negotiated. The minister's announcement was made eight months ago and I understand there have been no negotiations with the provinces to replace the former agreement.

That raises the subject of health care programs to which the federal government makes no contribution by means of cost sharing. I am referring to programs like pharmacare, home care, and programs for supplying medical appliances. Their cost to the provinces is about $1.5 billion, and will rise to $2 billion. We hope the federal governement will negotiate cost-sharing agreements with the provinces and assume some responsibility for these programs. I ask, when is this to happen?

Negotiations on new methods of cost-sharing have been under way for years. In 1971, the Department of National Health and Welfare proposed a new arrangement for sharing medical and hospital expenses. Basically the proposal was that the federal contribution would be based on the amount payable in a base year, and increased according to percentage changes in the gross national product on a per capita basis. A joint study by the provinces showed that most would experience a serious shortfall in revenues under this proposal and subsequent modifications.

In January, 1975, the federal government again tried to obtain agreement on a new formula for cost-sharing. None was reached. Instead, at the urging of the provinces, a committee was established to study the inclusion of other health services under cost sharing. The work of this committee was sabotaged by the June budget and the limits placed on federal contributions in Bill C-68.

The provinces boycotted a proposed meeting of federal and provincial officials in Victoria, in August. I understand that the minister toured the provinces in September, in hopes of getting the provincial ministers back to the negotiating table in January or February. The minister recently told us that there is to be a federal-provincial conference in April, but did not say what would be discussed. I want his assurance that he will discuss a plan to replace the cost-sharing agreement affecting hospitals and as cost-sharing arrangements for programs at present borne entirely by the provinces.

Why is this legislation necessary if medical service costs and doctors' fees are major items of cost? Is the government not confident with its own anti-inflation policies? I understand that the Manitoba Medical Association agreed to keep fee increases within guideline limits, on the assumption other medical costs would be effectively restrained. I understand that the minister said the government would take into account provincial legislation to enforce the wearing of automobile seatbelts, which would minimize the number of injuries, and other, similar cost saving measures. I think Manitoba and Ontario have already enacted seatbelt legislation. How will that change the minister's plans?

Clearly it is desirable to cut costs where possible. But there is a danger of cutting them at the wrong places, at the expense of the old, the ill, and others who need medical and special preventive services access to which should be a matter of right.

I submit that this legislation is backward, regressive, and turns away from sound principles which the federal government and the Liberal party adopted. I hope parliament will review it at a serious conference with the provinces, after which a better scheme could be worked out.

It is not my job at this stage to discuss savings which can be made in federal expenditures. I am firmly convinced that savings which deprive Canadians of the best health services available are false economy, wrong, and often cruel. I therefore urge parliament to reject this measure.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, may I reply to an argument raised by several hon. members opposite, particularly by the previous speaker, that this bill represents an arbitrary, unilateral decision by the federal government, a decision reached without consultation with the provinces.

I submit that negotiations regarding the revision of health insurance legislation and federal-provincial cost-sharing have been going on with the provinces more or less continuously for about five years, since 1970.

The provinces have been long aware that the federal government deemed it necessary to place some sort of restriction on the open-endedness of our health program. Indeed a number of provinces indicated that they were in favour of such a course, as they had found it difficult to meet their part of their financial obligations. This became increasingly evident during the last two years when, as mentioned, costs of hospital insurance rose almost 45 per cent over the previous level. The urgent economic situation which led to many stringent measures in the June budget and which, incidentally, had an impact far beyond the health field, forced the federal government to take action at that point in time. It is true that the provinces were not apprised of the specific budget measures prior to their announcement in this House but, as hon. members know full well, it is customary not to divulge specific budget provisions prior to their presentation in the House of Commons.

There were two measures in the budget which had to do with our health insurance programs. The first gave five years notice of the federal government's intention to terminate existing agreements under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act after the conclusion of the five-year notice period, in 1980. The second placed a ceiling on the rate of escalation of the medical care program which would be accepted for sharing purposes during the next several years. I stress that the measure placed a ceiling on the rate of escalation. It constitutes neither a cutting back nor a freezing of the program. It seeks to control the rate of escalation of costs incurred in the medical care program.

I am sure most provincial ministers were not surprised at the serving of notice under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. It had become apparent from discussions of the last several years that this program could not remain open-ended. Indeed several provinces had suggested possible approaches to capping it. It must be noted, however, that the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and regulations can only be changed by mutual agreement, and any one province could block the incorporation of changes favoured by the remainder.

Although theoretically the present agreements could be amended without notice being served, it would be unrealistic to expect unanimous consent by the federal and provincial governments. With notice served on the present agreements, an up-to-date act, taking into account all the tremendous changes which have occurred in the health care picture in Canada during the 23 years that will then have intervened between the passage of the act and its replacement, will certainly follow.

There was really very little reaction from the provinces about serving notice under the Hospital Insurance Act. No question. There was a rather stronger reaction to the announcement of the ceilings on the Medical Care Act, but this has become much less pronounced since the anti-inflation program was implemented. The provinces had certainly been aware from the negotiations preceding the budget announcement that a commitment on their part to restrict higher cost services, both hospital and medical, at least in relative terms, as the population grew would be a clear condition of the federal government's sharing in any additional areas. In fact the resumed discussions which had begun in January, 1975, were based upon a provincial offer to consider restraining growth of the high cost areas in return for additional federal sharing in lower cost areas.

I believe that the provisions of Bill C-68, as amended, are consistent with the principles agreed to at the January, 1975, conference of health ministers and indeed should facilitate negotiations that were anticipated at that time. Progress in the negotiations to the point of the budget announcement was such as to indicate that the provinces were committed to the principle of restraining the growth in high cost services and determined to inaugurate lower cost but equally effective programs and services where possible.

I should also say that the amendments which have been introduced at second reading stage were a product of direct consultation with the provincial ministers. In that sense the charge that the bill represents a unilateral decision of the federal government is a misstatement. The new amendments provide the mechanism for renewed negotiations whereby new insured services can be shared under the Medical Care Act and not be subject to the ceilings for a period of at least three years. The federal government has taken the necessary positive steps to ensure that any agreements reached with the provinces on the basis of the agreed principles can be brought into being.

Rarely in the history of our confederation have the provinces acted in unison. To suggest that the federal government should only act when all ten provinces can agree, in effect suggests that nothing should ever be done. Over the past few years individual provinces themselves have often acted unilaterally, for example, in wage and fee schedule negotiations or in introduction of new programs to the detriment of other provinces. Frequently we have seen wealthier provinces, such as British Columbia or Ontario, make wage settlements with health workers which severely imperilled other provinces, particularly the poorer ones, because of the resulting increased pressure for wage parity or equal benefits.

Once a precedent is set the domino effect carries it across the country, particularly in a highly-structured hierarchical-type system such as the hospital field. Such decisions are generally made without regard for the economic impact, either on other jurisdictions or on the country as a whole. One need only recall recent statements by the premier of Saskatchewan who has stated that his province will opt out of the federal anti-inflation program partly because it wishes to re-establish parity with nurses' salaries in neighbouring provinces. I am not condemning his approach because he is in a difficult position, but surely any measure which the federal government can take which discourages or slows down the leap-frogging or whip-sawing effect of wage, salary or fee negotiations between provinces can only be to the benefit of us all.

[Mr. Milne.]

In conclusion, I listened with great care and interest to the excellent speech this afternoon by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He made some excellent points. I want to assure him and others opposite that neither myself nor the government have changed our commitment in any way to universal health care, nor lessened our concern for high level health care for all Canadians. It would not be responsible financing if we did not look at the escalating costs. Surely in the delivery system we should be able to effect some new efficiencies. If we can deliver the same level of health care for less cost, in the future it will be possible to deliver even more health care for those dollars.

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that it is indeed a pleasure for me to address the House this evening on such an important topic as the Medical Care Act. No doubt some of what I have to say will be in conflict with the previous speaker. Perhaps that is understandable. I wish to state that it is good to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in the House throughout this debate.

I must admit to finding myself in somewhat of a difficult position due to the quality of that most comprehensive address delivered by my colleague, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), in this very House on Wednesday, January 28. He covered the ground concerning Bill C-68 so extensively that there is not really a lot more to be said without becoming somewhat repetitive. However, I do feel that there are some key points concerning this bill that do bear repeating, and perhaps the odd argument that has not been previously brought to light.

First, we must consider the shameful and shabby manner in which the federal government has chosen to treat the ten provincial governments. It is hardly news that the federal government has made a unilateral and arbitrary decision to draft and present this legislation which so affects the provinces. It is hardly news that provincially related legislation is prepared with next to no negotiation with those most concerned. It is not news, of course, because this kind of action is standard practice for the government. What we see here is simply another tiresome and increasingly frightening example of the heavy handed approach of the government in its dealings with the provinces, with this House, and with the people of Canada.

We first heard that there would be negotiations with the provinces. There have been none—talk, yes; negotiations, no. It is just not possible that real negotiations could have taken place. The ten provinces are all dead set against this legislation, and are most upset that they have not had a say in its formation.

We now hear that there have been and will continue to be consultations between the two levels of government. At least that is the present posture of the federal minister. If consultations mean calling together all interested parties and then proceeding to tell them what is to be done despite their unanimous opposition, then I suppose there have been consultations. I have no doubt that future consultations on the further ways and means of operating this legislation will be conducted in the same manner.

The provinces no longer trust the federal government. This is a most serious situation in a country like Canada whose very existence depends on a system of co-operative federalism. The House has seen ample evidence of the opposition of the provinces to this bill. Statements have been entered into the record from nearly all provincial ministers of health at one time or another during this debate. I do not propose to quote them further at this time. We have all heard them, and the obvious question still lingers; in the face of such unanimous opposition, why is this bill still before us now? Why has the government not taken the honourable course and withdrawn Bill C-68?

The federal government will no doubt say that it is an attempt to cut government spending, and that health care has become too expensive. That is a sham argument, and we all know it. I will have more to say later on the relative costs of health care. But, regardless of costs, the bills still have to be paid, and if not federally then provincially, and if not there, then where? By the ordinary people of Canada, of course.

Before I continue further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one point abundantly clear. I do not stand against the reduction of federal government spending. On the contrary, I am very much for it. What I am against is the prevailing approach of the government, an approach which is sweeping and indiscriminate in nature, and which in this particular case is succeeding only in transferring the financial load to the already overburdened backs of others. It represents, as well, another example of the government choosing to cut back in the wrong area of expenditure. The government is lackadaisical in its approach, thus failing to get to the heart of its spending difficulties. There are several other areas of government expense which could be cut back drastically without causing harm to the provinces or to the general health of Canadians. The singling out of the medicare program by the imposition of spending ceilings is a truly incredible piece of folly.

I do not propose to become embroiled in a debate over general government spending practice at this time, Mr. Speaker. That is reserved for another occasion. For the edification of members opposite, however, I might refer them to the recent report of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce on this very subject. It contains a wealth of worth-while advice on this subject which the government would be wise to accept.

Allow me to return briefly to an earlier statement—that the provinces no longer trust the federal government. Why should they, for they have been cheated? The very presence of Bill C-68 before us is a clear indication of that. Ordinarily I do not like to use such strong language in the House. In this particular instance, however, there is no way round it. The provinces have been cheated, and even as I say it I have an uneasy feeling that the real sting has yet to come.

The provinces were dragged into medicare against their collective wishes, even though assured that the federal authority would pay its way. They were led down the garden path, so to speak, and are now faced with the unhappy though not altogether surprising prospect of having the rug pulled out from under them. One cannot help but wonder just how far the Liberal government would really like to go on this matter. Is this just the first step to an eventual opting out of the program altogether? Some provinces fear this may be the case and, if it is, then it is the duty of the minister to tell us so right now.

The government is guilty of yet another transgression. I refer to the publicity surrounding Bill C-68. Press reports about this legislation and projected costs in the last budget speech have misled the public by combining medicare and health insurance costs and then picking out the medicare program for specific action. The inference is that increased medical care insurance costs are the major factor in escalating health care costs. This is clearly not the case, and the government is fully aware of it. The proportion of our gross national product spent on medical services in Canada has in fact declined from 1.3 per cent in 1971-72 to 1.1 per cent in the 1975-76 forecasts. The average annual payment increase incurred by the federal government is less than 12 per cent, well below the average yearly increases in over-all federal spending.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that opposition to Bill C-68 is not restricted to the provincial governments, but that such groups as the Canadian Medical Association and the ten provincial medical associations stand firmly against it. The Canadian Medical Association takes the justifiable position that these arbitrary budget controls will produce definite hazards for Canada's health care delivery system. They state that the budget controls will have the effect of restricting the availability of health care to the point at which it would have to be rationed. Obviously such an action could endanger the quality of medical services available to Canadians.

In a letter to the minister, a letter which has apparently been ignored, Dr. L. C. Grisdale, President of the Canadian Medical Association, says:

> The permanent cost increase ceilings proposed will result in the rationing of medical care; the cost increase ceilings will inhibit, if not prohibit, the introduction of new medical procedures and make it impossible for them to be made available to all Canadians who would benefit from them. This will be particularly true for those Canadians who live in less wealthy provinces—frequently those areas where improvements in the health care delivery system are most needed.
> The effect on the 'have-not' provinces is particularly significant. Since the introduction of medicare, these provinces with less developed health care systems have benefited from the federal-provincial cost sharing formula. The imposition of a ceiling on federal contributions will deprive these less wealthy provinces of further opportunity to improve the level of medical services in their communities. It will be impossible to evolve a uniform program of equitable availability and quality.

As has been noted previously by many of my colleagues, the CMA resents the sledgehammer approach of the government. Surely the Minister of National Health and Welfare is aware that increases in medical costs have been less, on a percentage basis, than have increases in most other areas.

Let us examine more closely some of the figures involved. The increase per capita of medical care costs in Canada from 1971 to 1972 averaged 6.9 per cent. At the same time the average increase per capita of the gross national product at market price was 12.8 per cent. The consumer price index during the same period rose 7.9 per cent, while average weekly wages and salaries in the industrial sector rose by about 8.5 per cent. Obviously, then, the increases in per capita medicare costs have been lower than in most key areas of the economy.

The medical profession has exercised restraint in the setting of its own fee structure over the past several years. Indeed they have been one of the few organized groups to act in such a responsible manner. Over the past five years Ontario physicians co-operated with the Prices and Incomes Commission and held 1971 fee increases to 4.5 per cent. At their own expense they commissioned a study of the medical profession in Ontario in order to enhance its functioning. Also, an increase in the fee schedule, expected by the members, was deferred at that time.

One of the recommendations of this study was that changes in fee schedules be negotiated with the provincial government. This has been done, and in the face of inflation extremely modest increases of 7.75 per cent for 1974 and a meagre 4 per cent for 1975 have been accepted. Yet this group, undoubtedly eligible for catch-up, is now being dealt with more harshly than the average group of working Canadians. Unlike wage and price controls, which one assumes to be temporary, the income restrictions inherent in Bill C-68 will last as long as the bill is in effect. To think otherwise would be to distort the realities of the situation.

A letter I received from the Canadian Medical Association states:

> There is as well a further reason why we are opposed to Bill C-68. Its very introduction infers an untruth, i.e. that it is necessary to control unwarranted increases in the costs of medical care. In fact, such increases have been modest, particularly when they are compared with increases in other component parts of the total health care bill. Is it ethically defensible to introduce legislation which could well inhibit the introduction of new life-saving but costly medical procedures?

That is a question to which we on this side of the House have been giving serious consideration. It is a question which merits a more serious response from government members opposite. Elsewhere in the same letter the Association's support of worth-while provincial programs is expressed, as is its concern for the quality of health care delivery. Allow me to read one brief but significant paragraph:

> We have encouraged the provincial government in its support of nursing homes as an alternative to hospital bed care. We have encouraged our provincial government in its experimentation with different methods of paying for medical care, including new methods of organizing groups of physicians and paramedical personnel to determine efficient patterns of payment and of practice. If some of these patterns prove to combine efficiency with good quality care, we will be the first to promote them with our members. Surely, the reduction of moneys available can have no other result than to endanger quality, by imposing untried methods of health care delivery just because they are cheaper.

As we are all aware, Madam Speaker, there still exists a critical shortage of doctors in this country. Many rural areas and out of the way communities do not have a general practitioner to care properly for the sick and otherwise attend those in need of medical attention. Citizens of these unfortunate areas are often forced to travel many miles to find competent medical treatment, often at times when it is inadvisable for them to do so.

Yet in the face of truths such as these the government does not take adequate steps to encourage more needed young people to enter the medical profession. In fact just the opposite now appears to be true. Bill C-68 will certainly do nothing to encourage the practice of medicine as a career. It will likely accomplish just the opposite. Shortages will probably increase, service will no doubt decline, and valuable research will go undone. The health of many Canadians may soon be seriously affected. I hope that the government is prepared to accept this responsibility.

It is not often that I cannot see at least some redeeming aspects to a piece of legislation brought in by the government, but there is no redeeming aspect to Bill C-68. The bill is totally without merit, and in my opinion serious consideration should be given to its withdrawal.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, on January 28, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) made a rather detailed and I think precise statement on the history of medical care in Canada. But although some of my colleagues and some members on the government side made a few remarks on parts of the minister's statement, I think that until now all members have failed to discuss it. Since I have in hand the English version of the minister's speech, I shall read it in English and continue my remarks in that language, because all the reports I have here are in English and despite all my efforts, I think the translation would suffer.

[English]

The minister spoke frankly on a subject that has elicited a great deal of comment, a lot of it emotional, by people who, if they would only admit it—at times I might even put myself in this category—were not sure of their facts. I have tried to be as careful as possible in dealing with this subject to eliminate what I consider has always been a danger in many speeches made in this House, and that is gut emotionalism which does not always resolve questions at issue.

I should like to refer to something the minister said as reported at page 10407 of Hansard. He was discussing the doctor-to-patient ratio. He said:

> In 1968 the doctor-population ratio was 1:769. By 1974 this ratio had become one doctor to 586 inhabitants.

He took some satisfaction on behalf of the medical services plan from the fact that this had surpassed the ratio of one doctor per 650 population that the 1964 Hall Commission on Health Services had set as its goal in 1991. The minister went on to say this, and I must confess my absolute astonishment at the naiveté that has been displayed by the minister and his senior advisers in accepting this reaction:

> In fact, at the moment there is concern among some people—including doctors themselves—that we might be heading towards a surplus of doctors. In fact, we may have reached or surpassed that point already in some specialties. Governments themselves have become concerned about the rate of growth in the number of doctors and measures have been taken to restrict immigration.

The last part of that sentence is the important part. I say, Madam Speaker, that that is the most absolutely rotten tripe. The executive of the Canadian Medical Association has apparently had some influence on the minister and some of his political advisers. They have placed themselves among concentrations of doctors in major metropolitan centres where doctors, inflated by the prestige and, shall I say, the incomes derived from specialties, have succumbed to what I as a layman, reflecting the attitude of the population, consider to be a development that is contrary to the public interest.

The more lucrative specialties have concentrated themselves to the extent that in a province like Ontario many, if not most, of the specialists have opted out of medical care. They now bill the patient with their fee and the patient is reimbursed on the basis of the agreement reached with the Ontario Medical Association. And the average patient then pays a premium.

In the province of Alberta that is not quite the case. There are not so many who have opted out. The doctors have agreed—

Mr. Rodriguez: Things are always different in Alberta.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Let me tell the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that the doctors of Alberta have agreed to an increase in their fees within the income guidelines. That shows the responsibility of those doctors and of the government of that province in regard to health care costs.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Go back to sleep, Rodriguez.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Frankly, Madam Speaker, I have never been more astounded by some of the representations I have received from individual doctors and from the Canadian Medical Association, whose former president, now a minister in Ontario, had the unmitigated gall, and I think foolishness, to say, according to press reports, that there were too many foreign students in Canadian medical schools, particularly Toronto. Of course some of them are so chauvinistic that anyone who is non-Caucasian in appearance becomes a foreign student.

● (2050)

Many students have parents of foreign origin whose skin is not white, but their intelligence and other attributes exceed all too often those of some of their native Canadian-born colleagues. They are prepared to work a little harder and dedicate themselves to their university preparation with a greater degree of sincerity. I regret the unseemly spectacle of some months ago when the former President of the Canadian Medical Association lumped together Canadian-born of non-Caucasian origin with the foreign born, and presumably non-white, as foreign students, and therefore presumably undesirable in Canadian medical schools.

All I say to the members of the profession is that if they endorse the actions of their former president, shame and double shame! I say also to the minister, shame and double shame on him because he has accepted this sort of thing. In his statement he says that curbs have been imposed on the immigration into Canada of foreign trained doctors.

Let us look at how many doctors there are in Canada, how many graduates we have had annually from our Canadian medical schools since 1971, and how many physician immigrants we have had admitted to Canada since that time. I also have some statistics, thanks to my colleague from Mackenzie, who placed a question on the order paper as to doctors practising in Canada. The answer of January 23, 1975 also shows the net loss of Canadian trained doctors to the United States. In addition I have had provided to me by the Canadian Medical Association the estimated cost of training a doctor in Canada for his total career. According to these statistics we can show how nonsensical the restriction has become.

I think the testimony of every one of my colleagues, and of every one of the minister's colleagues who represents a rural population will show whether Canadians are overserviced or over-provided with doctors. Let them go to any small town any place outside of the major metropolitan centres and ask the doctors who are there, and ask the nursing superintendents in the local hospitals, those little 30-bed hospitals, what the difference of one doctor means.

Mr. Rodriguez: Ontario is closing them all now.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Ah! The member is trying to make political capital out of that. I will tell the hon. member for Nickel Belt that in the past 15 years across Canada, in respect of hospital and school construction, all that was necessary was "ask and you shall receive." Some of the older hospitals should be closed. Prodigality was rampant in this country in the past 15 or 20 years in respect of many of the things built. They were monuments to the glorification of certain hospital boards.

An hon. Member: And certain governments.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The demand for which was initiated by many of the colleagues of the hon. member. Let him not stand up "holier than thou." His ears have already flopped down to his shoulders from the weight of his halo.

Now, Madam Speaker, from our statistics—and I must confess here that I am a little bewildered by the results as I see them.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are right on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for St. Boniface—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I paid you a compliment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You know, Madam Speaker, the chief government whip this afternoon was constrained to ask the Minister of Labour whether he had music with him. If he would ask a question now he might get the information. Instead of that the hon. member had to bellow out. That is his chief capability. In any event in 1973 Statistics Canada gave out our latest figures which show that there were 36,095 active physicians in Canada. If hon. members want the information I can give the breakdown in respect of provinces as to these figures. I can go back to 1969 as a matter of fact. In 1973, just to show the disparity—

Mr. Roy (Laval): Nineteen seventy-three!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will tell the hon. member that I think we should have something later than 1973. Stats Canada cannot give us anything better than 1973. However, I will tell the hon. member that in so far as a so-called socially backward and maligned country like

South Africa is concerned, its 1975 year book which appeared last week on my desk has statistics all the way to June, 1974.

Mr. Rodriguez: We do not read it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is right; the obstinately blind refuse to read. All I say is that in this area I think we are not as well served by Statistics Canada as we should be, because in this debate when considering the number of active physicians in Canada we should have figures more recent than 1973. As a matter of fact it is even better than that; it is not only Stats Canada. My source of information is actually the health manpower planning section of the Department of National Health and Welfare in its publication of February, 1975. That is how far out of date the minister's own section is.

When we talk about the number of physicians in Canada this includes all active civilian positions including interns, residents, and physicians employed by federal and provincial governments as well as pharmaceutical companies. It also includes those working as full-time teachers or researchers. There are very few, if any, who might not be counted in this definition, so I presume it might include physicians in the uniform of the armed services.

In 1973 Newfoundland had 605 physicians, Prince Edward Island 105, Nova Scotia 1,353, New Brunswick 677, Quebec 10,150, Ontario 13,726, Manitoba 1,597, Saskatchewan 1,186, Alberta 2,526, British Columbia 4,120, Yukon 18, Northwest Territories 29, and unspecified as to their provincial affiliation 3, making a total of 36,095.

In 1975, according to the Canadian Medical Association, there were 1,572 graduates from Canadian medical schools.

Then we looked at how much it costs to produce a graduate medical student. I tried to get the statistics from various universities and from the CMA as to what it costs per student per year of study, and there was such uncertainty and such variation in figures that nobody wanted to venture a hard figure, so I left it alone. However, CMA has indicated a very rough estimate, but it should be knowledgeable about this.

It was estimated that the total cost of medical school for a doctor in Canada is in the neighbourhood of $150,000 per student; in other words it costs about $150,000 to produce a graduate doctor here in Canada. Of that amount the medical student will pay approximately 10 per cent in fees because I think the medical studies, as do others, are paid for approximately 85 per cent from government contributions, 10 per cent from student fees, and 5 per cent from grants and scholarships. This is information that I have obtained over a number of years from the federation or association of Canadian universities in testimony before committees of this House.

Further, we have been able to ascertain that the Canadian Association of Medical Colleges quoted a 1974 U.S. study which found that in 1972-73—there has been a change because of inflation and I must counsel hon. members about this change—in the United States the cost was approximately $12,650 per year per student. Considering that a doctor normally takes about six years to graduate to the point of internship, this would represent around $75,000 per annum in 1972-73. I am subject to correction here because these are rough averages, but in any event it shows that it costs more in a Canadian medical school to produce a doctor than it does in the United States, because there is no way that the estimate today of $150,000 translated back to 1972-73 would in any way compare with the figures I have given with regard to the United States. There is some appreciable percentage difference. It may be 10 per cent and it may be as high as 20 per cent, but there is a distinctive margin between the countries.

Now here comes "la bête noire" of the minister, the CMA, and many others. In 1969 there were 1,347 immigrant doctors who came to Canada, in 1970 there were 1,113; in 1971, 987; in 1972, 988; in 1973, 1,170; in 1974, 1,080; and in 1975 on the basis of a preliminary estimate, 825. These are the statistics obtained from the Department of Manpower and Immigration in reply to my colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), in their answer of May 30, 1975. He put his question in January, 1975.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are all mixed up.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, there is no mix up because it is the department which has given the figure of 825 on the basis of a preliminary estimate for the year 1975.

We have gained so many doctors by graduation from medical school: in 1975, 1,572 doctors at approximately $135,000 per individual in cost to the public. This comes to $212,220,000 to train our own Canadian medical graduates. That was the bill for the graduating class in 1975, that is, the public contribution. It was more if we consider their 10 per cent in fees, or another $15,000 individually, which means another $22,500,000 or thereabouts. What about the 825 doctors who came into the country? We did not pay one blessed red cent for their training, but the cost of training an equivalent doctor—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What is it?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young) will have an opportunity to make his speech.

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has referred to me, but I made no comment during his speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. This is far from a question of privilege.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the hon. member is so keen to identify himself, he may speak. I apologize to my friend, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), whom I know better under a more familiar name.

Mr. MacFarlane: I accept anything you have to say about me.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I apologize to the hon. member. I recognized him gratuitously. He should bow and thank me for indicating to his constituents that at least he was in the House during this debate.

Now the cost of educating 825 foreign doctors, if we undertook it, again using the $135,000 cost of producing a doctor, would come to $112,377,000. I am using rough figures, but even if there are errors of approximation of anywhere from 3 per cent to 5 per cent in the over-all total, will the hon. member say that the comparison is unjustified? Let him come up with a speech to criticize this in principle.

Having received 2,397 doctors into Canadian society in 1975 at a total cost of $212 million to Canadians, surely hon. members will realize that our net cost for the provision of continuing medically trained personnel—and by that I mean physicians—is not quite halved, but at a rough estimate is cut back by something over 40 per cent.

The minister has said that we must place a curb on the number of doctors coming into this country, and in fact the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) says that any doctor coming into the country must have that manpower form 1234. A bell is rung with an offer of employment, unless of course the doctor has sufficient funds, perhaps $100,000 or $125,000 in capital.

Mr. MacFarlane: How do you get that?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) asks how I get that. I get it from direct letters, and if he wants I will show him the letters from the ministry showing that doctors coming to Canada now must have an offer of employment which is approved by Manpower.

An hon. Member: That is the same with everyone else.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Why?

An hon. Member: Why should they be special?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Who is going to hire the doctor for the small town in northern Alberta or for the small towns of the rural areas in Ontario? Not the government.

An hon. Member: The provinces.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, is that what the hon. member thinks? Is that going to provide doctors from out of the country, from the United States, doctors trained at Trinity, Dublin, or one of the great teaching hospitals of London, or some of the Chinese doctors who are, frankly, more capable with one hand tied behind their backs than many Canadian trained doctors?

Mr. Parent: My seatmate is a doctor.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I could take him out and introduce him to some of my friends.

Mr. Parent: If he ever operates on you, you've had it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I hope I will never have to defend the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Parent) in a traffic case. He is very eloquent from his seat.

Mr. Pelletier: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) would talk to some of his eminent friends from the medical faculty of the University of Sherbrooke, a good medical school.

Mr. Pelletier: I have, and that was the best part of your speech.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member has only parochial knowledge. They will not dispute my general conclusions, but I will say that on the basis of the restrictions on immigration with regard to medical graduates from the United States, Great Britain, Ireland, India, the Philippines, and Hong Kong, we are depriving many if not most of the rural areas of Canada of medical services.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The vice premier of Alberta would not do that. Dr. Horner wouldn't do it. You are wrong, and you know it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He is not in medical practice. He has nothing to do with this. I am simply saying that I do not care whether the decision was made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the provincial ministers of health, and when some of my contemporaries in the city of Edmonton, who are specialists enjoying fat cat practices in the hospitals, say that we should put a curb on the immigration of doctors, I must say that my language becomes very violent. I then offer to take them out and show them where and how that is wrong, and a number of them reasonably take a different attitude.

Because that was the main point of my speech I should like to hear the hon. member who is a physician tell me that I am wrong, that the CMA, the department of health and the department of education—

Mr. Philbrook: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the hon. member has something to say against me, let him make a speech.

Mr. Philbrook: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member realizes that I have already made my speech. If he attended the house a little more regularly, he would realize that.

While I am on my feet, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will take it at the end. There are many opportunities for the hon. member to make more speeches with regard to this bill, and I invite him to do so, on this particular point.

I asked the minister the other day whether he would have his officials take into consultation not only opposite numbers of bureaucrats and others with regard to the control or the re-examination of health delivery costs, and I asked him to take in not just doctors—particularly not the doctors who put people in hospitals, because it seems to me that that is too easy—but that when it comes to controlling costs in hospitals and appropriate supervision, medical superintendents, administrators and particularly supervising nurses should be called in so that they can say when patients should be discharged.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Hear, hear! That is the point.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am a little worried, because when the hon. member for St. Boniface agrees with me I have doubts as to whether I have a valid point. The other point I should like to put up for examination here in central Canada—and here I am open to correction—is the manner of practice in Ontario, which seems to me a very high cost method of operating medical services. Here in the city of Ottawa if I have an ingrowing toenail—or, as a better example let us say I feel ill at ease and have a pain inside—

An hon. Member: Now you know how we feel.

● (2120)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should see a neurosurgeon as he is suffering from softening of the brain.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That's because he is sitting on it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If someone in Ottawa feels in need of medical service, even though he may have a friend who is a general practitioner or a friend who is a surgeon, it is still likely that he will have to be referred to another doctor. There has to be that double contact. Strangely enough the first contact is paid for by the Ontario Health Insurance Plan as well as the doctor ultimately consulted.

In my province of Alberta there exists generally what is known as clinic practice, with some specialists gathered around major teaching hospitals. An individual goes to a clinic, is examined by a general practitioner and is referred, within the clinic, to a specialist in the group. Only one fee is charged unless in specific cases reference is made to an outside independent specialist.

In Ottawa, unless an individual has the inside track, it can take three or four weeks for a doctor to see him. That does not happen in group practice.

Mr. Rodriguez: Come and see me.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to see those members of this House who are doctors speak out in this regard and tell us whether we as laymen are right or wrong in our estimates of what it costs for the average individual to see a doctor in most provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but without the unanimous consent of the House, he cannot continue his remarks.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members sincerely for their courtesy and I shall try not to abuse it.

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

The last point I should like to make considering the type of health care—the hon. minister may feel a bit skinned but I will be glad to hear his ultimate response—

Mr. Lalonde: I have been the first one to propose you carry on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is fine. I hope the patient does not die. I think we want to look at the type of health care that is provided. I realize some of the provinces do not have the resources, but this is an area for a great deal of co-operation and study between the federal and provincial governments.

It is unfortunate that in some provinces patients are kept too long in active treatment hospitals and at a great cost. The reason for this is usually a lack of convalescent or chronic care beds. I realize it is not within the capability of all provinces to provide the services in the correct proportion, but it is one area that should be examined if we are concerned about the swiftly escalating cost of the delivery of health services. I suggest it is an area ripe for potential savings.

In the area of home nursing services some provinces have commendable programs and I hope the Ontario program is not adversely affected by proposed cut back. The Victorian Order of Nurses, in Ontario as elsewhere, is one body that has provided admirable service in this field at very low cost. It should continue and be encouraged as a model of service that can be provided under an ideal health care scheme.

Secondly, there should also be a conversion, not a closing of some of the large hospitals.

An hon. Member: What about Frank Miller?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not knowledgeable, nor is the hon. member, of the factual Ontario situation. I have seen conversions of some of the older hospitals in Alberta—although not since 1971—into convalescent or chronic care hospitals. They have been modernized at a reasonably low cost per patient and do fill a real need.

I have not seen auxiliary hospitals in Ontario. These occupy the gap between active treatment hospitals and the nursing homes. Physicians are on call and patients who require constant care are usually transferred to active treatment hospitals so the overhead expenses are not high. A lot of additional service rendered comes from volunteer groups in the community.

It might be a good idea for the provinces to provide extensive nursing home facilities where people could be taken care of but not treated for actual illness. The cost to the government is low in these places because the patient bears most of the expense. The fee generally does not amount to any more than it would cost the patient to live in a one room cold water flat or a basement room or, as an unpaid babysitter as happens in far too many cases. They are able to live in greater dignity and comfort in a nursing home.

I thank hon. members for the opportunity of speaking at this length. On the question of the provision of doctors I do not believe a case can be made to restrict the immigration of qualified doctors to Canada. As I have pointed out, there are still many fruitful areas for co-operation in the field of public medical care.

There can also be fruitful consultations with regard to the length of time people have to spend in hospitals, and these should not be just with the CMA. They are the people who put people in hospitals and unfortunately, most of the time say when they are to come out. If the health plan is in difficulty, that is where a lot of the responsibility lies. I also say that administrators of hospitals, nursing supervisors, and nursing staff should be consulted about the length of hospital stay.

Knowing how the health care system was forced on the provinces, I can only say that the minister has approached this difficult problem with a battering ram. For that reason I, at the moment, withhold my consent to the passage of this bill.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) standing up for immigrant doctors. It is too bad his party will not let an immigrant businessman run for its leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: However, I did not come here this evening to talk about Tory politics. The Tories have their own problems this week end.

An hon. Member: Why did you come here?

Mr. Rodriguez: I came here to pour coals on the head of the Liberal government for seeking to pass Bill C-68. This bill seeks to amend the Medical Care Act and to limit the increase in federal contributions to help meet the rising costs of the provinces. The bill imposes maximum yearly percentage increases in federal contributions. The increases are to be 13 per cent in 1976-77; 10.5 per cent in 1977-78; and 8.5 per cent after 1978. Keep in mind that under the present Medical Care Act the federal government pays 50 per cent of the cost of a province's medical care program. There is no federal funding for home nursing, denti-care, prosthetic appliances, and pharmacare. Many provinces fund these programs entirely on their own. Poor provinces cannot afford these services.

Keep in mind that the federal act provides for the addition of these services. Interestingly, the government has not added one of these services since the passage of the act in 1968. Many provinces, particularly poor ones, have been unable to extend services under the act. Any services they try to implement cost them plenty of money as they have no control over the collection of income tax.

We, in Canada, have taken for granted many of the programs we fought years to achieve. We fought hard for free collective bargaining and thought we had won that fight, only to see the government pass Bill C-73, thereby destroying free collective bargaining with its wage controls.

An hon. Member: What bill are you talking about?

Mr. Rodriguez: We fought for the right of our children to a decent, basic education, and won that fight. My party, especially, fought hard to give Canadians a decent standard of health care. We thought we had won that battle; then we find that the Liberal government brings forward a bill which will take away that hard-won right. It is doing it by cutting back federal contributions to medicare. We have seen the government destroy our collective bargaining process; now it is trying to destroy the medicare program it initiated in 1968 and encouraged the provinces to join.

I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) runs around smiling like a Cheshire cat, purring that if we are to reduce health costs we must improve our life styles and environment. He criticizes the provinces for not introducing seat belt legislation which will cut down the cost of treating automobile accident injuries, and for not discouraging the consumption of alcohol and cigarettes; yet he travelled to Israel on the jet of one of the biggest liquor barons in North America.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rodriguez: He also suggested that the provinces should embark on programs of preventive medicine. No doubt he is correct. No doubt health costs can be reduced if we reduce hazards in the work place. But the federal government has a responsibility in the area; it cannot get off the hook so lightly.

It is true that health costs could be reduced if the provinces reduced health hazards. As I say, the federal government too has responsibilities in the area. What has the government done to improve our lifestyles and environment? Where are the tough, strictly enforced standards for air and water quality which the Department of the Environment should have developed?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They are non-existent.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why do we have high levels of arsenic emission in the Northwest Territories, and evidence of mercury poisoning among people living there? Why, for that matter, are unsafe conditions permitted in the uranium mines at Elliott Lake, which are under the jurisdiction of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited? Why is the government not enforcing the law and ensuring safe conditions in the uranium mines? Who is to compensate workers who have developed silicosis? Who will pay the shot for maintaining their families?

It is all very well for the minister to go around the country smiling and telling the Canadian people they must improve the environment and their lifestyles. The government can do much to improve health care; it could introduce programs of preventive medicine. But it has not done this. Instead, it inflicts on this country this particular bill.

Where can one see evidence of the model health and safety programs which federal departments and Crown corporations ought to implement? Where is the evidence of information programs for the country's industrial workers, which could warn them of potential hazards on the job? Where is the evidence of research into such hazards, and research with regard to preventive programs?

The recent speeches of the minister have been self-congratulatory. In them he has mentioned the thoughtful study which his department released just before the 1974 general election entitled "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians." If the minister had actually read the study he would have noticed that it talks about preventive medicine programs being necessary if we are to improve significantly the health of Canadians. But in order to do this we need to devote more resources to health care. We need more paramedics, more clinics, and alternate care facilities, pharmacare programs to reduce costs and remove income barriers to needed drugs, etc. In other words, we need health care programs which Saskatchewan, Manitoba and B.C. have provided on their own. If the federal government were serious, were concerned about the health of Canadians, it would shoulder the costs of these programs.

Let's look at it this way: The federal government is trying to make the provinces conscious of the rising cost of medical care. But the provinces know this very well. They must pay 50 per cent of the increased cost, without access to income taxes. Not only must provinces pay their share of the costs of the medical care program; they must pay the total cost of services not covered under the act. That cost the provinces $1.5 billion in 1975.

The federal government is determined that the provinces must pay more. It argues that by putting a ceiling on contributions it will provide an incentive for provinces to cut their own health costs. Placed in this position provincial governments will have to increase provincial sales taxes, cut medical care services, or charge user or deterrent fees. Any one of these alternatives is regressive, and would constitute a reduction in health care for Canadians.

In Ontario, for example, we see how the provincial Tory government is coming to grips with the problem. First it implemented seat belt legislation. Now the Ontario health minister is running around like the grim reaper, as he was described by the Ontario Liberal leader, with a coterie of press people in tow, announcing grandly that this hospital will close and that hospital will close.

It is interesting to note that in every case there was no consultation with the community. There was no consultation with the personnel in the hospital to be closed. Incidentally one hospital in my constituency was closed. There was no consultation about that action. It was completely arbitrary. That is one of the detrimental aspects of this kind of legislation. It forces the hands of the provincial governments.

With this kind of ad hocery afoot, one group of Canadians will suffer most. There is no question about it. It is those who lack money, those who lack economic power, the poor. It is a well known fact that those who have little money, the poor, have the poorest health. Indeed it was primarily because of this fact that a Liberal Senator, David Croll, a man most sensitive to the needs of the poor, in response to the June announcement that the government would cut back on this said, and I quote:

> It is wrong in concept; it is divisive in practice and in my opinion it is wrong, wrong, wrong, a thousand times wrong.

The cost of Medical care has gone up, but that does not mean the provinces stand condemned as wasteful. In a report by the Geneva based International Social Security Association no let up is seen for rising expenditures on sickness insurance. They say in their report, and I quote:

> ... mankind is increasingly beginning to regard medical care as an absolute necessity, a belief fostered by the rapid progress of medical science....
> The reasons for the spending increases are complex, but include several basic ones in most developed countries:

Here are those factors:

> The majority of populations are in the older age brackets and older people tend to consume more medical goods and services than do the younger age groups.
> Medical consumption is regarded as a priority need that must be satisfied at any cost, regardless of income level.
> Medicine has gone through a "complete upheaval" in the last 50 years, becoming both more effective and more expensive, and people appear prepared to pay the increased price.
> Medical care is becoming more and more specialized and often caters to the individual rather than to the masses.
> For example, the introduction of systems for the electronic examination of heart patients has increased the cost of hospital treatment. Every year in the U.S. 15,000 patients receive a cardiac pacemaker that costs $1,500 and has a life expectancy of about three years. Now, a pacemaker has been developed with a nuclear battery than can last 10 years, but costs $5,000. The report says this means that every year 15,000 Americans may be paying $75 million for heart pacemakers alone.
> The association says that doctors tend to contribute to increasing medical cost. Because they have a wide range of means of diagnosis and treatment at their disposal, practioners tend to consider that their duty toward a patient demands that every form of examination and treatment that may be of use to them should be applied, even if the prospect of success is small.

Should the government be putting the screws to medicare in this fashion? The only answer that we in this party can come up with is absolutely no. The other question which we must face is: what should the federal government be doing? In the Department of National Health and Welfare publication "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians" it was suggested that if the health standards of Canadians were to improve and in the long run be made less expensive, it would be necessary to start spending more money on preventive medicine rather than just providing programs to patch up the damage. It does not look as if the people on the benches opposite have been reading the publications of their own departments. Or perhaps they simply do not care. They will be able to afford doctors.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Don't worry, I get my practice.

Mr. Gilbert: He runs around the riding.

Mr. Rodriguez: I run around the riding trying to get Liberals to feed it.

Early diagnosis through health centres is absolutely imperative. If we can identify early a cause which results in silicosis for a miner and can correct that cause, it will certainly be a relief to the taxpayer in terms of the medical program. We can certainly identify symptoms early in children. Take, for example, mental illness and emotional disturbances. With early identification and treatment we can save the taxpayers a lot of money.

The government is interested in saving money in health care, but does it do those things? No. We only have to see what it does with these people. It brings them to court, locks them up, and puts them in solitary confinement when they do not conform. They are not exposed to treatment. I suppose shortly we will hang them. No attention is being paid to that area. It is easier to bring in this kind of a bill and say let the provinces sink or swim.

There certainly ought to be convalescent centres. It costs Canadian taxpayers as much as $200 per day to maintain a chronic case patient in an active treatment hospital. It would be cheaper to put that person in the Carleton Towers at $30 or $40 a day. There would be a saving to the Canadian taxpayer. But we do not do that. We say the funds are not available.

Those who are the poorest in this country can never get into convalescent centres. Therefore we have these chronic care patients in active treatment beds, at great expense to the taxpayers.

The use of paramedics would reduce the reliance on doctors. In many of the northern parts of my constituency we could certainly use paramedics. We would not have to transport a patient to an active care hospital at great expense to treat him. No work has been done in the area of paramedics, but it would certainly cut down on the cost of using doctors.

We have not done anything in the area of cottage hospitals where minor surgery is done, with the patient staying in his own community where he can be cared for by his family. Much minor surgery could certainly be carried out in a cottage hospital; such a system has worked well in other parts of the world.

Again, we provide no dental care programs for children across Canada through which dental problems could be identified and corrected early. If such programs were put into effect, medical costs generally could be reduced. In poorer provinces which cannot afford to support such programs on their own, such childhood complaints are left unattended until eventually they prove very costly. But the government ignores reasonable solutions. Take the oil situation, for example. It thinks it can crank up the price and thus cause people to use less. This seems to be a Liberal approach—if you can make the cost of a commodity or service prohibitive the demand for it will be reduced. But who are the ones who suffer? Who are the people which the government seems to want to punish? In this case it is the users of the health service.

Where else could the government cut the costs of health services? There is one obvious way, but it is hard to expect a Liberal government, or indeed a Tory government for that matter, to act along these lines. In Ottawa the majority of lung-related diseases are due to smoking. In my riding, the majority of lung-related diseases are due to living near the smokestacks of INCO and Falconbridge. And the first thing that happens, whenever corporate profits look as though they might just possibly be dipping, the first thing to be curtailed is expenditure on anti-pollution equipment. That is the first thing to go out. There is one nice thing, though.

The International Nickel Company is acting on this matter, and it gives me pleasure to say that in my riding it has now raised its smokestack 1,200 feet into the air. As a result, I understand the sulphur fumes coming out of that stack lately are falling here in Ottawa. I am happy about that. I hope these fumes will invade the brains of members opposite. I bet you dollars to dimes you will see them taking action fast because they will be receiving the benefits of that pollution.

An hon. Member: It got to you.

Mr. Rodriguez: I see I have touched a tender spot in the sensitivity of members over there.

There might be something else the government could do in its own backyard affecting its own employees. Perhaps it could become a model employer. In the public service in 1974-75 there were 22,218 accidents costing directly more than $7 million. Out of the figure I have mentioned, more than 10,000 people were injured in the department of that friend of labour, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey). Almost 7,000 of those injuries were disabling, and the total cost was $3.5 million. That doesn't include the health costs, but I have a feeling a lot more money could be saved in that area if the government really cared to save money by starting up an industrial safety program among its own employees.

There is another question which arises when I consider a proposal such as we have before us. We look around the country, Mr. Speaker, and we are amazed at our priorities. We marvel. It is interesting to note that the country can find the resources to build a one billion dollar Olympic set-up. To do what? We can spend $100 million to secure 1,500 athletes for two weeks. We can do this without batting an eyelid, for the sake of somebody's ego tripping. I do not understand the mentality of Liberals. It is quite clear they have a false sense of values. I realize that this touches a sensitive issue.

An hon. Member You voted for the Olympics.

Mr. Rodriguez: We did not. If the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Parent) wishes to make a speech I will certainly yield the floor to him.

An hon. Member: He is good at interrupting.

Mr. Rodriguez: He is good at interrupting, not at speaking. He had better go and take a poll among his constituents.

Where are our priorities? We can find dollars to put on a fantastic Olympic spectacle, and no doubt we shall be paying for it by having an Olympic lottery for the next hundred years. But we cannot find the money to provide health care services.

Mr. MacFarlane: That's not true.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where are we going to find it? We shall all have to find it.

Mr. MacFarlane: Because you shout louder does not make it true.

Mr. Rodriguez: They say preparations for the Olympics are moving ahead on schedule, moving toward an improvement in the muscles of a very small group of Canadians. But sometimes I wonder about our mental health. When we pick up the papers today it seems to me we are constantly reading about cases of people going off the deep end because of the pressures which modern society generates. The government should reorganize its priorities.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) called the bill a law of the sea bill—women and children first. We can add one more category to that list and say: women, children, and sick folk. The government took on the 65 year-olds when it amended the Unemployment Insurance Act. It took on the lower income families when it cut off the indexing of the family allowances. Now we see it cutting back its responsibility for medical care. It is determined to destroy the program of medicare which was built with great success, by a provincial socialist government in this country.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the spokesman for the government if he can confirm the business we shall be discussing tomorrow.

Mr. Lalonde: Tomorrow we shall be concluding, we hope, third reading of Bill C-58.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40, deemed to have been moved:

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONTRIBUTION TO CROP INSURANCE FUND

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, up until a few moments ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was in the Chamber. I am disappointed he has left because I am directing my remarks specifically to him.

● (2200)

On February 9, 1975, as reported at page 10742 of Hansard, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that under th Crop Insurance Act the federal government is committed to a certain level of contributions based on the number of farmers covered; in view of the fact that the crop insurance section has estimated that the required federal moneys for 1976 will be about $62 million; and in view of the announcement by the minister that the amount of the federal contribution will be cut by about $10 million, reducing the contribution to $52 million, can the minister advise what will happen if the required contributions by the crop insurance board exceed $52 million, and will he advise further when the government plans on obtaining additional funds, or will it renege on its commitments?
> [Mr. Rodriguez.]

The President of the Treasury Board replied:

> Mr. Speaker, this question is rather technical. I do not think I can give an answer at this time, but I think that all sectors of the economy, including this one, must participate in the federal government's restriction program.

Subsequently the President of the Treasury Board was good enough to write to me advising that if federal costs exceeded $51,900,000 the requirements of the Crop Insurance Act would be honoured.

In the January 24 issue of the "Report on Farming", Mr. Glenn Gorrell, an official of the federal crop insurance board, is quoted as saying:

> —we're just trying to encourage them (the crop insurance boards) to sell a minimum of insurance.
> "This is a good time to take a hard look at crop insurance, because benefits seem to have escalated beyond costs. Are we restoring out of pocket costs to the farmer, or guaranteeing a profit?" he asked.

It is interesting to note as well that on February 9 the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Pelletier) in the adjournment debate stated that the Minister of Agriculture had written to the provincial ministers of agriculture explaining the reasons for restraint in the expenditures of the crop insurance program for 1976-77. It seems rather inconsistent that in his final paragraph the parliamentary secretary should state that it remains the intention of the government to support the crop insurance program as a primary means of assistance to producers who suffer severe crop losses as a result of natural hazards.

Since its inception the crop insurance program has become increasingly popular with the producers of western Canada, and each year sees an increase in the number of participants. Recently the various provinces in the prairies got together and decided to equalize their coverage in the prairie region. I think one could safely compare the crop insurance program with the unemployment insurance program which we have in Canada, because the crop insurance program provides the producer with a reasonable income to carry on in a year when he has suffered either partial or complete crop loss as a result of natural hazards. It is a program which is open to all producers, and a cut back in federal expenditure on this program can only lead to the shifting of the burden to the provincial governments, or to a reduction in the coverage that is available, or to a limit on the number of participants in the program. Will the provinces be required to turn to applicants who want to participate in the program and say, "We are sorry, we have not got sufficient money to allow you to participate"?

Since I came here in 1972 the Minister of Agriculture has always held himself out as a friend of the farmer. He spends a great deal of time travelling around the country telling the public what he has done to assist the farmer. I find it very difficult to understand that he personally would be party to any reduction in a program that was set up to assist the farmers in times of distress, and I would certainly like to hear him say publicly that he personally agrees with any cutbacks in the program.

We recently passed a grain stabilization bill, but of course this was presented to the House by a different minister because of the divided responsibility in the field of agriculture. At the moment I do not hear the government indicating any intention of cutting back on the contribution to that program. However, it may be that in a year or two the government will find that the stabilization program is costing it more than it anticipated, and in the interests of restraint will start to cut back on that program. Quite frankly I am disappointed at the Minister of Agriculture not standing up for the western grain producer and making other cabinet members aware of the importance of agriculture to Canada.

There is no question but that the government must exercise restraint in its spending, but quite frankly when you consider many of the government programs and expenditures, there are many areas where cuts could be made which would create little or no hardship. I am reminded of the $88 million expenditure for language training facilities at a Canadian Forces base in the province of Quebec over the next three or four years. One need only examine the latest report of the Auditor General for further examples.

Agriculture is not only vital to Canada but is vital to the whole world in this time of population explosion and starving millions. The farming industry must remain viable. It can remain viable only if the government supports the programs which it brings into effect on a long-term basis. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture to see that the programs receive the support of the government. Only time will tell whether the minister is known, or will remain known, as a friend to the farmer.

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before giving the official answer of the department, I wish to say that I am extremely surprised by the comments that have just been made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), when he said that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) takes very little interest in western farmers' problems.

I believe that the minister has shown on several occasions his concern for agriculture in Canada, not only in the western provinces, but in Quebec, in the Maritimes and throughout Canada. I consider the hon. member's comments that the minister does not seem to be concerned by these problems as totally unjustified, useless and making no sense at all.

[English]

I am surprised to see this question before us again tonight. As the House will recall, this matter was discussed on February 9, just one week ago, when it was raised by the hon. member for Okanagan-Boundary (Mr. Whittaker). There is nothing further that can be added to what was said last week. I would, therefore, refer the hon. member opposite to page 10779 of Hansard wherein this subject was fully discussed. In addition, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has advised me that he sent a letter to the hon. member in which the facts were once again placed before him.

As the hon. member was advised on these occasions, a letter was sent to all provincial ministers of agriculture. Provincial officials are continuing discussions with officials from Agriculture Canada. Until these discussions result in a mutually satisfactory agreement it will remain impossible to advise of the precise manner in which this decision will be implemented. Nevertheless I can assure the House that the requirements of the Crop Insurance Act will be honoured.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite has raised questions about agriculture in the world, its importance, and so on. I think that when dealing with a matter such as the one he raised tonight, that is crop insurance, it has nothing to do with the world population, or with anything else. He should have dealt mainly with crop insurance. If one wants to deal with everything happening in agriculture, with anything at all, no answer can be given. If the hon. member is not satisfied with the answer given to him, this is because he has asked this kind of question three or four times within two or three weeks.

The minister has given an answer, he is concerned with what happens not only in eastern and western Canada, but throughout the country. He met with provincial minister of agriculture and public servants, to get this program to work. Therefore, I hope that they will finally begin to understand.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD—REASON FOR REDUCING AMOUNT OF WAGE INCREASE FOR UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY WORKERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first announced his so-called anti-inflation program, members of the NDP opposed the proposal made by the Prime Minister and have opposed it ever since. We said then that the program would not work, that it would be inequitable in its application, and that while it might control wages it would certainly not control prices or profits. Even we did not realize how correct we were and how quickly the truth of what we were saying would be demonstrated.

On February 10 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to explain why, despite the fact that in the debate in the House and in explaining the provisions of the legislation in the committee the minister had said that people making less than $3.50 an hour would be exempted from the 10 per cent maximum increase in wages and salaries, the Anti-Inflation Board scaled down the terms of the agreement reached between the Canadian Union of Public Employees on behalf of its members working in the library at the University of Toronto and the University of Toronto. The minister simply replied that he would discuss the matter with the board, but of course there have been no explanations from the minister and no change in policy by the Anti-Inflation Board.

Let me put on the record very briefly what the case is about. The union and the University of Toronto reached an agreement after a 20-day strike, under the provisions of which employees at the bottom of the wage scale at the University of Toronto working in the library would get an 18.5 per cent average increase in their wages. The wage increase to employees at higher rates was substantially lower.

The university refused to implement this agreement which they had negotiated because the Anti-Inflation Board advised them that the maximum it could agree to was a 12.2 per cent increase. This was because the board ignored the fact that the minister had said that people earning under $7,000 a year could get more than 10 per cent. This was also despite the fact that the wage earned by people at the bottom end of the scale working at the library of the University of Toronto was $5,771 a year, and that the increase which they negotiated of 21.3 per cent would leave them with a paid rate of $6.92½ cents an hour, or $355 a year below the figure permitted by the regulations if the whole increase which the union negotiated with the University of Toronto had been implemented.

I say that the board ignored the guidelines as laid down by the minister which, in my view, it had no right to do. It did that at a time when the board was consistently awarding, to other groups of employees, substantially more than the 10 per cent to 12 per cent permitted under the guidelines. The teachers in Norfolk county in southern Ontario reached a one year agreement which gave them a 34 per cent increase, but the board reduced it to 24 per cent. In Renfrew county the agreement called for 29 per cent, but the board reduced it to 23 per cent. I could go on and on talking about what has happened to teachers. Teachers are getting in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent.

To show how ridiculous the situation is, the union exercised a right which it had under the provisions of the Ontario labour relations act to call for arbitration. Under section 37 of that act the arbitration board which it provided for has the duty to look into the case and to make a finding which is binding on both parties. Today that board made a finding: it directed the university to implement the wage adjustments as outlined in the collective agreement to the extent that it is permitted by law to do so. What law? These people are governed by provincial law; they are provincial employees. They have argued that the federal government has no right to set their wages until the legislature of Ontario passed legislation, which it has not done.

In the moment or two which I have left let me compare the tough attitude of the Anti-Inflation Board with its attitude with regard to price increases and profits. On February 5 the Ottawa Journal reported that the Anti-Inflation Board was going to issue tough directives governing the profits made by banks. That is not surprising when one realizes that in the three months ending October 31, 1975, the after tax balance of revenue of banks, which was the equivalent of after tax profit, rose by 87.5 per cent from the year earlier. This is permitted, but the Anti-Inflation Board was going to issue a very tough series of regulations.

One day later, before the regulations were ever promulgated, the Montreal Gazette carried a front page story saying that the Anti-Inflation Board regulations limiting banks were expected within a few days but were likely to be a watered down version of restrictions contemplated last month. One banker said the industry screamed bloody murder over the initial proposals. Apparently the board accepted the industry's protests against inequities after negotiations involving the Canadian Bankers Association and the banks.

That is the kind of inequity about which we have protested from the day the Prime Minister announced his program, and I suggest to the parliamentary secretary, who has the unenviable job of explaining this matter, that it is that kind of unfair rough justice the government has talked about so much which has so alienated the working people of the country.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not necessarily accept the first part of the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I think he was quite correct when he stated that the minister would carefully review the question and submit it to the Anti-Inflation Board. That part I do accept. Some of his other statements were incorrect when he was assessing the situation when he took part in the debate when it was first introduced.

With regard to the point raised in the question by the hon. member I should like to say that the Anti-Inflation Board at its meeting of January 14, 1976, reviewed the collective agreement between the University of Toronto and the Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 1230, library technicians. I believe that is the concern expressed by the hon. gentleman.

The agreement was reviewed by the Anti-Inflation Board in light of its decision to approve an increase between the arithmetic formula in instances where an historical relationship has existed with another group or groups of employees. The board was satisfied as to the existence of an historical relationship between bargaining units in the Toronto area. However, the board considers that the historical relationship would be maintained if compensation increases were provided within the permissible limits defined by the formula behind the arithmetic guidelines. Therefore, the Anti-Inflation Board concluded that it could accept increases in total compensation of up to 12.2 per cent for CUPE local 1230.

Mr. Orlikow: You don't believe that nonsense, do you?

● (2220)

Mr. Trudel: I did not interrupt the hon. member when he spoke, and I wonder if he would have the courtesy to listen. It should be noted that such an increase would be within the limits of the anti-inflation guidelines for this group and applies to a total average increase in compensation for the group.

Part 4, division 1, section 43(2) on page 41 of the regulations reads:

> ... the compensation of an employee in any guideline year may be increased—(a) to $3.50 per hour, or (b) $600 or, where the compensation is paid for less than a year by an amount that bears the same proportion to $600 that the period for which the compensation is paid bears to a year, whichever results in the greater increase.

The application of increases for this group which would average up to 12.2 per cent does not preclude certain individuals within the group receiving increases in compensation of up to or even higher than $3.50 per hour or contravene in any way section 43(2).

Employees who receive a total hourly rate of compensation of less than $3.50 may, along with all other members of this group, receive a maximum average increase of up to 12.2 per cent. If this amount does not bring their total compensation to $3.50 an hour, the employer may proceed to do so within the necessity of costing in the additional costs to the permissible maximum.

I think if the formula is understood by the hon. member he will realize it allows that group to get the relief they are seeking.

PENITENTIARIES—MAXIMUM SECURITY PSYCHIATRIC INSTITUTIONS—STATUS OF INSTITUTION PROPOSED FOR DARTMOUTH

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. parliamentary secretary remaining in the House this evening and taking time from being with his family in order to respond on behalf of the minister.

My question is a fairly straightforward one which I raised on behalf of residents who, if present plans go ahead, will find themselves living in proximity to a maximum security psychiatric institution.

I raised this matter to ascertain what the status of the planning and consultation is with the province of Nova Scotia and the city of Dartmouth. When the matter came to light a couple of years ago it was understood there would be full consultation. It has become apparent in recent days that planning for the institution has advanced in a number of significant ways and without consultation with officials of the city of Dartmouth—unless our distinguished mayoress has failed to take into her confidence the aldermen for the ward concerned.

There is no question of the need for updated and secure care and treatment facilities for—and I have consulted a dictionary with respect to the correct phrase and it is expressive—the criminally insane or those who have been committed by the courts for a variety of disabilities.

It was my understanding at the outset of discussions about the location of such an institution—and there is no doubt that it is required—that it would be located in close physical proximity to the existing Nova Scotia hospital structure. I was led to believe it would not be necessary to go outdoors or use transportation to remove people who required psychiatric care from the hospital to the new institution. In other words, it was understood that a tunnel or hallway, or some other means, would be used which would combine the requirements of a maximum security psychiatric institution and those of the federal penitentiary service. It is now my understanding that the institution is to be located about three quarters of a mile away from the Nova Scotia hospital. The hospital has, of course, for many years housed people convicted by the courts who required psychiatric or psychological care and confinement. Now we have the spectre of the new institution being at some distance from the Nova Scotia hospital, which incidentally is one of the best in eastern Canada. This raises the question of security in the transportation of patients.

The questions I want answered this evening, Mr. Speaker, are these: Has the province been consulted? I assume the answer is yes, because the land is provincial. Has Dartmouth been consulted; if so, to what extent? What assurances will be given with respect to the security of the residents of the area? The proposed plan indicates that there are to be residential properties on at least three sides of the proposed maximum security institution.

What security is involved in the transportation of prisoners from the maximum security institution to the Nova Scotia hospital, for care and treatment? Is it contemplated that existing facilities of that institution will be used to treat inmates of the maximum security institution? Will this mean an additional burden, in terms of beds and patients, for the Nova Scotia hospital?

What plans does the government have to advise and consult with the residents directly affected? In other words, what is the status of the consultations and planning? It is important to know as some plans have, sort of, been leaked to the public. It is essential to know what consultation has taken place so that the fears of the residents can properly be answered. The answers to such questions can allay the fears of the residents of the area. Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the parliamentary secretary's attending in the House this evening.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has raised a matter which is of great concern to himself and to residents of the area he represents. The matter comes under the Department of the Solicitor General and it is the policy of the department to consult both with provincial and municipal officials. I hope that I can assure the hon. member that the province has been consulted.

If the hon. member were in my position he would see why, up to this point, there has not been complete consultation with Dartmouth, nor at this time consultation with the residents. Consultation with the municipality and the people will take place, if that is the wish of all parties, before any site is chosen for the new penal institution. In fact, in many cases penitentiary officials engage in public meetings in order to explain to local groups of citizens the plans which the penitentiary service is considering for their area.

This co-operation between federal and provincial officials is evident in all facets of correctional services. For example, in some areas, including Nova Scotia, federal officials use provincial jails to house some of their inmates. This is done in cases where it is beneficial to move the inmate and at the same time represent no threat to public safety.

With respect to plans for regional psychiatric centres, may I state the following: the Canadian Penitentiary Service plans to provide for the operation of a regional psychiatric centre in each of its five regions of Canada, namely, Atlantic, Quebec, Ontario, prairies, and Pacific. One centre is now in full operation at Abbotsford, British Columbia, for the Pacific region. One centre is now under construction in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, for the prairie region. Approval in principle has been obtained from the Treasury Board for the construction of three more such centres, two of which are planned to replace the obsolete physical facilities now in use in Kingston, Ontario, and in Laval, Quebec, and the third to be constructed in the general area of Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, to serve the Atlantic region.

Since early 1975, various meetings were held in the Atlantic provinces between the federal and provincial governments concerned. As a result it was agreed that a psychiatric centre was to be planned for construction in the province of Nova Scotia, to meet the needs of the Canadian Penitentiary Service and of the four Atlantic provinces, as indicated by them. The province of Nova Scotia was agreeable to this project. Subsequently meetings were held with representatives of the Department of the Attorney General of Nova Scotia for the purpose of defining the requirements of the penitentiary service treatment facilities and of defining a preferred geographical location best suited for this purpose, such as close proximity to existing professional treatment resources, namely, universities, professionals and semi-professional support.

Subsequently it was agreed that the federal and provincial departments of public works would co-operate in identifying potential sites for the location of the proposed centre. As an example a site was identified at Elbow Lake, and as a result of consultations with the municipal authorities this proposal was abandoned.

At present the federal and provincial departments of public works are considering two other sites and propose to consult municipal authorities as soon as the Department of the Solicitor General has had an opportunity to study the report of the Department of Public Works and has determined a possible course of action for consultations with the concerned governmental authorities.

With regard to the other questions that the hon. member raised, we attempt to find those answers for him. I see my time has run out. I cannot continue at this time.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:33 p.m.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. It is prompted by a press release of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) in which he instructs Commissioner Smith of the Yukon, in his capacity as Chairman Smith of the Northern Canada Power Commission, to conduct an investigation into certain cost overruns in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. The minister then instructs Commissioner Smith to convene the public utilities boards of each territory to require Chairman Smith to report to Commissioner Smith as to the investigation and report to the minister. That is like asking the Mafia to audit its own books.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That a full and independent public inquiry be established pursuant to the provisions of the Inquiries Act to inquire into the entire operations of the Northern Canada Power Commission with full power to call for persons, papers and things and to report its findings and recommendations to this House within three months of its establishment; such findings and recommendations also to be submitted to the legislative assemblies of the Yukon and Northwest Territories respectively for approval, adoption or otherwise by those elected assemblies on behalf of the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE OF PROVISION IN BAIL LAW GUARANTEEING FREEDOM OF SPEECH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 concerning the report of the unique and incredible decision of Mr. Justice Bélanger in the case of Dr. Henry Morgentaler, which prevents a Canadian citizen, as a condition of bail, from speaking, not merely about his pending trial, which would be unusual but not unique, but goes further and prevents a citizen of this country from speaking on a subject of general interest and importance. This is the only case of its kind in the history of Canadian jurisprudence and a clear violation of the right to freedom of speech which is guaranteed under the Canadian Bill of Rights.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this House go on record as deploring this judicial decision and that this matter be referred to the Minister of Justice and the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for recommendation of changes to the Bail Reform Act so that freedom of speech may receive the protection in this country guaranteed under the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion can only be debated with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—PROPOSED CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC TO AVOID PROBLEMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important issue of pressing necessity.

Considering that the sponsors of LIP projects in Quebec experience many difficulties in carrying out their projects as a result of the order governing the construction trades, since those projects are temporary and do not compete with the construction industry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House urge the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to have talks with the Quebec Minister of Labour to find a solution enabling the sponsors of LIP projects to carry out their plans without taking into account the regulations of the Quebec Labour Board and thus losing substantial amounts paid by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF RESIGNATION OF DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RESEARCH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to make a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. The Director General of the Health and Welfare Research Branch has resigned because of "intolerable interference" by officials within the department, outside the three level peer review process in selection of applications for grants under the National Health, Research and Development program. Since the minister has refused to meet a request that would put an end to the alleged ongoing interference with the research program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the minister make a statement on motions explaining the reasons behind the retirement of the above-mentioned director general and whether any action has been taken to remove the difficulties that led to his resignation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

INCOME TAX

POSSIBILITY OF DEDUCTING MORTGAGE INTEREST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Since the government's proposed measures to deal with the housing shortage are inadequate and will not allow every Canadian to buy his own house, and considering that it is urgent and necessary to implement appropriate measures to cope with the housing problem, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House urge the government to allow any taxpayer to deduct from his personal income tax the mortgage interest paid on his house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, the motion therefore cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM NEW BRUNSWICK LEGISLATURE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning oral question period, I know that all hon. members would want me to call to their attention the presence in the gallery of a very distinguished delegation in the form of some members of the Special Committee on Procedures of the New Brunswick legislature led by their very distinguished Speaker, the Hon. William J. Woodroffe.

[English]

REQUEST FOR APPEAL PROCEDURE WHICH WOULD NOT NECESSITATE INDICATION OF UNWILLINGNESS TO COMPLY WITH BOARD ORDER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of the assurance he gave yesterday that he would increase his understanding of the appeal procedures in connection with any operation of the Anti-Inflation Board. In view of the fact that appeal from a decision or ruling of the board is available only to those who either defy or threaten not to comply with a ruling of the board, can the Prime Minister assure us that he is looking into this problem personally and that a defined appeal procedure will be set up which is direct, which does not require a party to an agreement or dispute to put himself in the position of actual defiance of the law and criminal behaviour?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, reflecting on the economy of the legislation as passed by this House, the way I see it is that the administrator is in reality the person who applies the law with all its teeth and force. The Anti-Inflation Board is the body which is enjoining, counselling, admonishing, advising, or jawboning. They have no power to impose any penalty or any binding order. Therefore, it seems perfectly normal to me that when the Anti-Inflation Board has issued its directives, completed its enjoining, its jawboning, and so on, the parties or party should then decide whether or not to listen to the admonition. If the party does not listen, the matter is dealt with in a quasi-judicial way by the administrator who has effective law enforcing powers. It is at that stage where the parties are more than counselled. It is at that stage where the parties are obligated, under the law, to follow a certain course of action; and, therefore, it is at that stage, properly, that an appeal should lie, and an appeal in effect does lie. Frankly, I cannot see the worry of the Leader of the Opposition about this being against the spirit of the legislation and justice as we practise it in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I must say, it is an extraordinary misfortune for Canada that the Prime Minister is not able to see the injustice of this situation. I ask the Prime Minister how employees or groups of employees are to proceed if they consider the ruling of the Anti-Inflation Board unjust but do not wish to defy the ruling of the board? How is it possible, under present proceedings, to be in a position to appeal the ruling of the board, without putting oneself in the position of breaking the law, defying the board and being subject to criminal law sanctions?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the persons who would break the law would be only those who are breaking it after the administrator has issued an order. The Leader of the Opposition shakes his head. I do not hear what he is thinking, but I should like him to state how he believes people are breaking the law just because they are not listening to the Anti-Inflation Board.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am reluctant to interfere with this line of questioning, but it seems to me we are entering two dangerous areas: One, the interpretation of the statute and, the other, the hypothetical area as to what would happen if such and such a thing were to happen. I do not like to confine this. I shall recognize the Leader of the Opposition for a final supplementary question at this stage.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I hope others will pursue this question beyond my final supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Let me ask the Prime Minister simply if he believes it proper that a party to a collective agreement should be able to appeal the ruling of the Anti-Inflation Board without having to defy the board, without having to indicate that it does not intend to comply with the ruling of the board; should a party be able to do that before getting access to the administrator? Is it commensurate with our ordinary considerations of administration and justice in this country that one cannot bring an appeal unless one is prepared to defy the board, or indicate defiance of the board.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, having read Hansard of the day before yesterday, it seems to me that the Minister of Finance dealt with that in indicating that people who are appealing the ruling of the board, to use the words of the Leader of the Opposition, are those who disagree with the ruling of the AIB. This seems to me to be the normal course of procedure. I am just saying that I do not call that an appeal. I am saying that we are really changing the nature of the operation at that point. The Anti-Inflation Board is not a court of justice; nor is it even a quasi-judicial board. But the administrator is, and therefore an appeal lies from his orders to the appeal tribunal.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO APPEAL PROCEDURE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? I find it difficult to believe that a civil libertarian, as he is, does not understand the injustice of the situation.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not understand that particular aspect of law? Does it not appear unusual and alarming to the Prime Minister that the situation the Leader of the Opposition has described for two days to the Prime Minister has given rise in this country to an inflammatory situation? Given those facts, which must be apparent to the Prime Minister, what does the Prime Minister intend to do about them in terms of his own program?

An hon. Member: Arrange to have you deflated.

● (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is jawboning, but I cannot give a different answer to him than I gave to the Leader of the Opposition.

ALLEGED THREAT OF CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS TO WITHDRAW REPRESENTATIVES FROM GOVERNMENT BODIES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to follow up the general line of questioning to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of plans by the Canadian Labour Congress to withdraw its representatives from all government advisory bodies, including the minister's own council on collective bargaining, and what steps is the minister taking to head off this further dangerous polarization within this country?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member is doing a service to either the Canadian Labour Congress or this parliament by misrepresenting what the Canadian Labour Congress said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The Canadian Labour Congress did not say they were withdrawing. They said they were reviewing the position with respect to these boards. There is quite a difference.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The minister is quite correct. There is indeed quite a difference. Does the minister not see the potential for inflammation of a very serious situation in this country that is now being aided and abetted by the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister who is stonewalling with respect to natural justice in so far as this question is concerned?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it seems that by his unintentional misrepresentation the hon. member is contributing more to an inflammationary situation than anything I have ever seen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Now we are being hit by the jawbone of the minister.

Oral Questions

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN APPEAL PROCEDURE TO GIVE RIGHT OF APPEAL TO EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It is a follow-up to the answer he gave to the Leader of the Opposition. In his answer, the Prime Minister said there was the right of appeal after the case got to the administrator. The Prime Minister did not say that in the law, the right of appeal is only open to those against whom an order has been made. Since, as illustrated by the Irving case, this specifically excludes the right of the trade union to appeal such a decision, will the government consider changing the legislation so that the right of appeal is open to both the employers and the employees?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a different problem. It certainly raises a different set of answers. In view of the fact that the whole purpose of the operation is to get at the causes of inflation, it seems proper to me that the law should indicate that the actions should be against the person who is directly causing the inflation. In this case, if the employer is paying wages that are higher than permitted by the guidelines, it seems proper for the order to issue against the employer, not the employee. Therefore, it is the employer who should have the right to appeal if he does not agree with it. In the case of the employee, he is receiving money. If it is no longer paid to him, he cannot claim there has been an injustice operated against him. He is not the party who, by his positive action, is causing inflation. It is the person who is issuing salaries higher than the guidelines who is the cause of inflation. After all, the whole spirit of the legislation is to get at the causes of inflation and not those who are the victims of it.

Mr. Broadbent: Since in all situations like the Irving settlement, and we are going to get many like that in the weeks and months ahead, it is a fundamental fact that there is an agreement involved to which both parties are signatories, both the union and the corporation, is the Prime Minister saying that simply because of the way the law is now written, it is the corporation that would technically be held responsible and that the employees have no direct interest in the outcome of such a decision? If so, does he think this is compatible in any way with an elementary sense of economic justice?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me, regrettably, that the hon. member is asking both for an interpretation of the law and for an opinion by the Prime Minister as to a question of legality, both of which subjects ought to be pursued in debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Three o'clock!

[Mr. Baldwin.]

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC REGARDING REPATRIATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell whether there have been new developments with regard to consultations with provincial premiers about repatriating the constitution? Could he also tell clearly what are his government's true intentions in this respect, and whether it is possible that everything be settled on the next visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would care to look for it, he would find that I have given a detailed answer two weeks ago to a similar question, except as regards his concern for the Queen. Perhaps I might inform the hon. member that the government of Canada and those of the provinces can act on this matter without the presence of the Queen in our country.

REASON FOR ATTEMPTING REPATRIATION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since we are still talking about repatriating the constitution and since several federal-provincial conferences have been held on that subject, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister when was the Canadian constitution expatriated and whether the provinces had been consulted then. If not, why do they have to be consulted now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is asking an historical rather than constitutional question. If he will refer to the debates that took place in the 1860's, he will see that as a matter of fact the provinces as we now know them did not exist. There was Upper Canada and Lower Canada and other colonies of British North America, and it was representatives of the people and the delegates of that time who decided, for reasons the hon. member may understand, that the constitution should be made in England, rather than in Canada. So, rather than passing the British North America Act in Quebec or in Charlottetown, it was passed at Westminster, where, I think, no representative of the Social Credit Party was sitting at that time.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO MILK POLICY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Because of the ill-conceived dairy policy announced by the minister last April resulting in a surplus situation in Canada today which is proving to be just as costly to the producers of this country as to the consumers—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. McGrath: —I ask the minister what he intends to do about the disgraceful dumping of milk on world markets at prices cheaper than those prevailing in Canada and, further, what he intends to do about the disgraceful waste of powdered milk which is being used for animal food?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): As usual, the hon. member is making statements for the sake of sensationalism rather than reality as far as I am concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: These facts have been known since last November when I made a statement about the fact that we were facing a surplus milk powder problem—that the dairy farmers were becoming too efficient and producing more than the domestic market could consume. Furthermore, there was a surplus on world markets. For instance, skim milk powder sold in the United States is more expensive than skim milk powder sold in Canada. The subsidy program is actually a subsidy program to consumers, not to producers, to enable them to afford to buy dairy products which, in turn, enables the farmers to stay in the dairy business. The hon. member must understand that before he makes any more of his nonsensical statements.

● (1430)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: The real tragedy in this, Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that powdered milk prices in Canada to Canadian consumers have risen by 4.7 per cent since last July, and in view of the fact that the dairy farmers of this country are going to have to pay dearly for the minister's mistakes, would he do himself and the country a service by announcing his resignation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, let me answer the hon. member by saying that I did what the dairy farmers of Canada asked me to do. I developed a policy better than any other nation in the world has. The dairy farmers of Canada are some of the most efficient in the world. They have two million cows now giving the same amount of milk that three million gave only about 15 years ago. The hon. member wants to study the whole situation.

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF NOVA SCOTIA BEING SUPPLIED WITH ELECTRICITY FROM CHURCHILL FALLS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the president of Newfoundland and Labrador Hydro has stated that enough water was spilled at the Churchill Falls hydro plant last year to supply 70 per cent of Nova Scotia's total consumption, at a saving, I might add, of some 6.5 million barrels of oil, has the federal government made any plans or carried out any studies which would enable these power sources in Labrador and Newfoundland to be transmitted to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, two provinces that share the dubious distinction of having the highest hydro rates in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the government of Newfoundland and had some very extensive discussions about the development of the lower Churchill. More than that, we announced about a year ago a system of grants amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars to assist them in the transmission of those new resources by tunnel as well. Unfortunately, the Newfoundland government has not yet been able to put together a composite and viable plan whereby they can bring those resources into production.

CREATION OF AN EASTERN POWER GRID—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I thank the minister for that reply and may I ask a supplementary question. Is the federal government giving any consideration to the creation of an eastern power grid, tying together Churchill Falls output hopefully with Fundy tidal power, providing a power supply that will meet the requirements of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland as well as Quebec, thereby relieving us from the necessity of being dependent on high priced oil, which is becoming increasingly short of supply every year?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already indicated that one aspect of such a grid has already been taken care of in the proposals we made to the Newfoundland government. We have also made a number of arrangements with the New Brunswick government. I am talking, of course, about the financing of the nuclear plant in New Brunswick. We have worked out an interconnection with the province of Prince Edward Island and we are in discussion with the province of Nova Scotia. We are quite prepared to sit down and try to work out with the Atlantic provinces a system of interconnection and a system that will enable them to lessen their reliance on foreign oil.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF COLLABORATION WITH UNITED STATES TO EXTEND JURISDICTION OVER MARINE RESOURCES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Law of the Sea conference is only a few weeks away and that the United States government has passed through two houses a 200 mile fishery zone, would the minister indicate whether there is any planning between the two governments to collaborate on a position at the Law of the Sea conference, and what are the objectives in this regard?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government and the United States government are in touch from time to time, both at the ministerial and at the officials level, on questions concerning the Law of the Sea. As my hon. friend knows, it has been the view of the United States administration that the multilateral solution is the preferred one in regard to extension of fisheries jurisdiction.

On the question of extended fisheries jurisdiction the positions generally of Canada and the United States are compatible in the sense that we are both seeking to extend our jurisdiction to 200 miles. We have noted the action that has been taken by the legislative bodies in the United States, but that drama has not yet been fully played out and it is not clear at this stage at what point in time the proposed extended jurisdiction of the United States will become operative. Certainly that time is of considerable interest to Canada.

AGREEMENT WITH FRANCE ON A 200 MILE FISHERIES ZONE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister clarify the situation in regard to separating the fishery zone from an economic zone or continental shelf? Is it the objective of the Canadian government to try at least to get agreement on a 200 mile fisheries limit? If the minister has time, would he also reply to the question of the equidistant line between Newfoundland and St. Pierre and Miquelon with a view to getting agreement with France on a 200 mile fisheries zone or economic zone?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the second point, I know that consultations have taken place between Canada and France. I should like to check the present state of these consultations.

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION OVER MARINE RESOURCES ON PACIFIC COAST

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. I should like to ask him whether he will be making a statement in the House on Canada's stand on the extension of Canada's boundaries, particularly the line A-B in northern British Columbia and the extension through the Straits of Juan de Fuca out to the 200 mile limit, and is the minister aware that the use of the equidistant formula, that he has suggested might be used, would in all likelihood lose Canada a large portion of the salmon catch on the west caost?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may secure your indulgence I should like to answer the question asked earlier by the hon. member with respect to separating out the fisheries aspect of the Law of the Sea conference. Certainly, it would be within Canada's objectives to seek a separate fisheries treaty if other important objectives were safeguarded at the same time.

With respect to the question asked by the hon. member, obviously these matters would have to be finally decided on the occasion when the Minister of State (Fisheries) and myself actually issue under the law orders in council establishing the extended jurisdiction for Canada. Before doing this or at the time it was done, we would make a statement to the House and clarify this very important point mentioned by the hon. member.

CYPRUS—CANADIAN POSITION ON TURKISH MILITARY PRESENCE

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of meetings which began yesterday in Vienna between Greece and Turkey to discuss the future of the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities, has the minister expressed Canada's concern at the continuing Turkish military presence on Cyprus and Turkish oppression of Greek Cypriot refugees?

● (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all I am pleased to note the resumption of intercommunal talks between the Turkish and Greek Cypriots which are really the basis of any forward movement toward a settlement. Canada, at the United Nations, has supported a resolution in respect of the continued occupation of Cyprus by Turkish forces.

HOUSING

ALLEGATION OWNER OF 800 RICHMOND ST. WEST, TORONTO, CHARGED RENTS HIGHER THAN AUTHORIZED

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that an owner of a limited dividend building located at 800 Richmond Street West in Toronto charged tenants of two-bedroom apartments in the building $189 a month in February, 1975, and increased the rent to $205 commencing in February 1976, whereas the rental agreement between CMHC and the owner of the building stipulates that the rent be $173.25, will the minister direct CMHC to have the owner return the over-payments to the tenants forthwith, and not to permit any increase in rent until CMHC and the landlord have negotiated a new rent increase based on actual cost to the landlord?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if it is really envisaged that any hon. minister would have this kind of detail at his command during the question period.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE OF DECISION ON EXPORT LEVY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last Friday the Minister of Finance would not say when the government would discuss and decide what to do with the export levy. Now that the Prime Minister has consented to drop in here for the second day in a row, I wonder if he could tell the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lawrence: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, not that the Prime Minister is required to come in here, but I wonder if he could tell the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell the House when the whole matter of the export levy will be dealt with?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I heard the Minister of Finance give a very detailed answer to this question, probably in the absence of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I would have to look up the date, but I think it was the Friday before I made that very useful trip to British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is still the same, that we are trying to get the provinces to agree to this voluntarily. At the meeting of finance ministers several of them objected to the export tax and various alternatives were discussed. When I was in British Columbia, we heard briefs from various groups which were suggesting alternative ways of meeting the same purpose as the export tax. We are endeavouring to discuss these with the provinces and with the various organizations involved. I raised the matter at a meeting I had with Premier Bennett of British Columbia and some of his ministers during my very useful trip out there. We agreed together that rather than have the federal government act unilaterally it would be much more profitable to continue the discussion in the way we were.

Mr. Lawrence: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that if those words had been said—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question perhaps he can put it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE WHEN ALL PROVINCES WILL HAVE SIGNED AGREEMENTS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, if the statement had been made in the House rather than outside we all would be better off. If the Prime Minister had been here he would have heard his minister say that no "fresh signatures" on provincial agreements had been made, and he did say there would be several more this week. I would, therefore, like to ask the Prime Minister whether he now has any firm idea when his program will become nationwide, or whether a special first ministers' meeting is being considered by him or the government to resolve what must be very serious differences between several of the provinces and this government?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You can go away for a month now, Allan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is possible that the matter would have to be resolved at a meeting of first ministers, but for the time being I do not think so. The provinces have asked for, and been given, a fair amount of time to work out their reactions in detail to this.

Mr. Lawrence: How long?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member asks how long. The Premier of British Columbia asked if he could have a little time longer because he had just been elected, and it seemed reasonable for me to give him that time rather than force it down his throat. I am surprised that the opposition is urging us to act unilaterally in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO ACQUISITION OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT DURING DISCUSSION OF CONTRACTUAL LINK WITH EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and has to do with discussions he had several months ago with his confrères among the European Economic Community regarding some formalized form of contractual relations with that group of nations. I wonder if I might ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether in the course of these conversations, either directly or through his officials, the question of acquisition by Canada of military equipment came up, whether this was part of the discussions that followed with officials under his jurisdiction and the several jurisdictions in Europe, and whether in fact if the question of acquisition by Canada of military equipment came up did it in fact involve naval replacement programs or tank replacement programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the discussions of the contractual link or form of economic agreement or exchange with the European Economic Community this matter did not arise, or certainly not in my presence, and I doubt whether it would have arisen directly with officials. Of course, in so far as the application of economic co-operation is concerned, it is possible that certain purchases of military equipment are envisaged. I do not know, but I say they were not discussed in my presence. It might be relevant to the hon. member's question though, if I said I did discuss the question of NATO when I was in Europe, and very often with the same people with whom I was discussing economic co-operation. It was not in the context of the Common Market, it was in the context of NATO countries. Therefore, there may be some confusion in the hon. member's mind as to the heading under which I was discussing this. I did discuss this under NATO.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might then ask the Prime Minister if I can properly interpret his response, which I appreciate, to cover the proposition that in the eventuality of replenishment for the Maritime command, the likelihood is there will be an opportunity to participate in this replenishment program, and this would first of all be available to Canadian competency and capability?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the talks I had with the leaders of these countries who are members of NATO had to do with the various roles that Canada could perform in a NATO situation. I was telling them that we were reviewing these various roles and, as the House knows, that we had some decisions to take, for instance on tanks, on LRPA's and on anti-submarine warfare and so on. The discussions I had with them were only directed to getting their reactions to various hypotheses that we were envisaging. In other words, did they think that tanks had a higher priority, for instance, than anti-submarine warfare and so on. This kind of question was discussed, but no announcement of Canadian intention was made.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF REGULATIONS FOR DRILLING FOR OIL AND GAS IN NORTHERN REGIONS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Following the questions that I put to the minister before Christmas, I wonder if he has cleared up the complications to which he referred at that time, and when can the House expect the oil and gas regulations to be brought before it?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I are working very closely on this. I am optimistic that in the next few weeks we will be bringing something to our colleagues in the cabinet.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STATUS OF PROPOSAL TO CONSTRUCT MINIMUM SECURITY INSTITUTIONS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the vote recently taken by the city council of Saint John, New Brunswick with respect to planning for security prisons in that province, could the Solicitor General inform the House what is the present status with regard to the proposed construction of minimum security prisons in New Brunswick?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we have had consultations with the government of New Brunswick, and with the city of Saint John on placing a medium security penitentiary in the Saint John city area. They had indicated a site to us and there has been some controversy with respect to the site, but recently the city council of Saint John voted in favour of that site and agreed that we should go ahead with it. It is likely that we will go ahead with it as soon as possible.

NATIONAL PARKS

SUGGESTION SENIOR CITIZENS BE GRANTED FREE ADMISSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On April 11, 1973 I proposed a motion under Standing Order 43 requesting that all senior citizens be granted free admission to all the national parks in Canada. Would the minister assure the House that every effort is being made by his department to allow senior citizens that privilege?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I indicated last summer that we would be making a thorough review of our fee structure this winter, and I expect to be making an announcement in the next two weeks on it. I can assure the hon. member that his representation will be given very serious consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—MEETING OF MINISTER WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the down-at-the-heel state of the Canadian footwear industry—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: —and the minister's recent statement that he will meet with the heads of the industry, will he inform the House if he has met with this group? If not, will he meet with them prior to his departure on his Asian trade tour?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I met with a few of them individually last Friday. While I have not met with the association yet, it is likely I will within the next two weeks, as the hon. member has suggested.

PROPOSED CHANGE IN BAIL LAW TO PREVENT RELEASE OF RAPISTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Recently in Burnaby, British Columbia, a rapist was apprehended, brought before a judge and then released on his own recognizance. The young man then went out and promptly committed a second offence. I should like to ask the minister whether the promised peace and security legislation will limit the power of judges to release apprehended rapists on their own recognizance?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I hope the legislation which was passed by the House a couple of weeks ago, and is currently before the other place will be dealt with expeditiously by them, then will become law, so that changes in the Bail Act will become effective as soon as possible. It will be these provisions that will deal with the situation that the hon. member raised.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF DUTY FREE SHOPS—REASON FOR WARNING TO CONSUMERS ABOUT PURCHASES AT DUTY FREE SHOPS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the hon. gentleman inform this House on the progress, if any, that is being made in investigating specific complaints into certain aspects of duty free establishments?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say to the hon. member that even before I received the document he sent to my office, the newspapers were already informed of the matter. This shows that the publicity around this whole issue was more important to him than a real investigation by my office.

In any event, I immediately referred the files to the director of investigations who has the responsibility under the law, to investigate and publish his conclusions only after the investigation.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer, but I was not referring to my complaint but to another one of which, I am sure, he has knowledge.

Will the minister table or state briefly the reasons why he authorized a warning to consumers in the October 1975 issue of his own departmental publication entitled "Consumer Contact" which said in part:

> Some articles, like brand name cameras, can sometimes be obtained at Canadian department stores at lower prices than at duty free shops.

On what basis was this done, and was any research done by his department?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: The officials of my department who write articles for this publication do so in good faith and I cannot accept what the hon. member said, which seems to question the good faith and the integrity of those who prepare such articles for the department.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN CONCERNING EASIER REFERENCE OF DISPUTED DECISIONS TO ADMINISTRATOR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of a press report this morning which quotes Mr. Pepin, the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, as saying that he and the Minister of Finance have "agreed to try to make it easier" to refer disputed AIB decisions to the administrator. Does that statement by Mr. Pepin, which was concurred in by the Minister of Finance, represent government policy and, if so, does this mean that the government is prepared to introduce an amendment to section 17 of the Anti-Inflation Act so that either employers or employees can appeal a decision of the AIB without getting consent from the AIB, or has the government some other procedure which it proposes to follow?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): What it means essentially is that Mr. Pepin, the Anti-Inflation Board and the Minister of Finance are reviewing this situation with a view to submitting various alternatives to cabinet. There is no government policy on it yet; the matter will have to come to cabinet. Personally, as I think is obvious from some of my earlier answers, I am not inclined to think that there is an injustice here. However, as the hon. member has just pointed out, the Minister of Finance is reviewing that situation and there will be a report to cabinet. If any action is decided upon, we will of course report to the House.

GOVERNMENT INTENTION WITH REGARD TO PERMITTING APPEAL DIRECTLY TO TRIBUNAL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Is the government also considering the possibility of amending the act so that an appeal can be made directly from a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to the appeal tribunal bypassing the administrator and letting the administrator later be the person to enforce the decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board as amended by the appeal tribunal, which would short-circuit this prolonged process and also give to both parties who feel aggrieved the right, either jointly or separately, to appeal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is a possibility. I think it is obvious that in a country where controls are being imposed there is an evolution of thinking on this matter. I repeat that my own thinking was made clear earlier. I think the law as it is presently conceived is a good way of attacking inflation, with the Anti-

Inflation Board playing the role of enjoiner, propagandist, adviser, and so on, with legal action then being taken by the administrator and with an appeal from that. This is my feeling, Mr. Speaker. I repeat, the government does not have a closed mind on this. If we find better ways of achieving the result—and I hope we all want to have a lower inflation rate in this country—the government is open to persuasion.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON CONSIDERATION OF PENSIONS FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Tomorrow, it will be one week since the promised statement on legislation implementing recommendations of the standing committee. I wonder if the minister can report on what progress he has made with his cabinet colleagues to permit him to announce the introduction of legislation to assist former prisoners of war.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the progress has been very good to date, and possibly consultation will be completed tomorrow.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMISSION RESPECTING PROVINCE OF ALBERTA

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to section 19 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter E-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, to lay upon the table of the House a certified copy of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Alberta, 1976.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I suspect his point of order pertains to the difficulties about which he posed certain questions respecting the Anti-Inflation Board. I simply ask the hon. member's indulgence and invite him to delay making his representations until the conclusion of routine proceedings.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1976-77

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a message which Your Honour read to the House and by which His Excellency the Governor General is transmitting estimates for the service of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1977.

Mr. Speaker, the main estimates for 1976-77, which I am tabling today, amount to $38.4 billion for budgetary items and $1.1 billion for non-budgetary items. They include for the first time old age security and guaranteed income supplement payments, which in other years were paid out of a special account.

Throughout the current fiscal year, I have—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I feel the hon. President of the Treasury Board is making a statement as a minister and this calls for an answer from representatives of all political parties in the House. In addition, there will be a question later. If such is the minister's intention, I urge him to continue, if not we shall have to remain at the document tabling stage.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, it is also my impression that the hon. gentleman slipped rapidly from the tabling of documents to statements by ministers without Your Honour calling that order of business. I was assuming that was the case and that it would be subject to the usual restrictions and the rights of hon. members on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the indication now from the minister that it is not his intention to make a statement at this time, but simply to table the document.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I feel I must make a point clear. I believe it is in keeping with tradition to make a statement under those circumstances and shall do so after meeting with the other parties' representatives. However if it is deemed preferable that I do not make a statement, Mr. Speaker, we can—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is now evident that the President of the Treasury Board seeks to make a statement which, of course, will be replied to by other hon. members and there will be a question period. There are still a number of routine proceedings, not the least of which is the point of order of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. Therefore, I wonder if hon. members might agree that the statement by the minister, as has been our recent practice, might be deferred until the conclusion of routine proceedings in order to permit his statement, representations by other hon. members and questions to follow.

ELECTIONS

REPORT ON WAYS OF REDUCING ELECTION PERIODS—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on February 10 I tabled a copy of a report by the Chief Electoral Office of Canada, dated December, 1975, entitled "An examination of possible ways of reducing the electoral period". I have had discussions with the House leaders of the other parties. I appeared before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections yesterday and it seemed to be unanimously agreed that it would be useful to refer this report to the committee. I wonder whether the House would agree unanimously to that being done.

Mr. Baldwin: We are prepared to agree. Having in mind the way the government is going, it might be a good idea to shorten the period for an election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree wholeheartedly.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the proposal of the President of the Privy Council. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,332, 3,670, 3,763, 3,807, 3,998 and 4,016.

PUBLIC WORKS—RENTAL OF SPACE—TORONTO-DOMINION CENTRE, TORONTO

Question No. 3,332—Mr. Beatty:

1. Does the government rent space on the top (54th) floor of the Toronto-Dominion Centre, Toronto, Ontario and, if so (a) when did it first do so (b) for what is it being used?

2. What is the present cost per assignable square foot and what was the cost per assignable square foot when first leased?

3. How many square feet are being rented and how many were rented when space was first leased?

4. When was the present lease signed and what is its duration?

5. What attempts were made to secure other less expensive space for this purpose before space was rented on the 54th floor and for what reason was it decided that this particular location would be the most suitable?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes (a) November 1, 1973 (b) Part by Public Service Appeals Branch (1,798 sq. ft.), remainder by Revenue Canada Regional Appeals Branch (4,500 sq. ft.).

Order Paper Questions

2. Present cost $12—Cost when first leased $12.

3. 6,298 sq. ft. current—6,298 sq. ft. when first rented.

4. November 1, 1973—1 yr.—renewed March 1, 1975 with an expiration date of May 31, 1977.

5. It is a stringent requirement of the Revenue Canada Regional Appeals Branch that it be located in the same building as the Department of Justice, and an equally desirable requirement of the Public Service Appeals Branch that they remain in close proximity to the Public Service Commission. In the past, Justice and Regional Appeals shared space on the 24th floor of the subject building, held under lease terminating on May 31, 1977. Justice needed to expand on the 24th floor which necessitated relocation of Regional Appeals. The Public Service Appeals Branch shared accommodation with the Public Service Commission in space on the 8th floor of the subject building, under lease also expiring May 31, 1977. Both branches of the Commission were experiencing expansion problems which could not be resolved in the existing or adjoining space on the 8th floor, which necessitated the relocation of one to permit the expansion of both. The subject space of this submission, 6,298 square feet on the 54th floor, was originally leased to accommodate the Airport Inquiries Commission (Pickering), the Hon. Mr. Justice Hugh P. Gibson, Commissioner, for a fixed term of one year from November 1, 1973, to October 31, 1974, under Treasury Board Minute No. 725154 dated February 14, 1974. The lease was subsequently extended on a month-to-month basis to February 28, 1975, to provide continuing accommodation for the Airport Commission and the Steel Profits Inquiry Commission, The Hon. Mr. Justice Willard Z. Estey, Commissioner, which by mutual agreement shared a common staff of officers and support personnel. Full consideration was given to the only other alternative means of providing for the requirements which was to relocate the Revenue Appeals Board and the Public Service Appeals Board into new leased accommodation in the immediate vicinity. It was readily apparent that implementation of that solution would have resulted in a much higher cost to the Crown due to the prevailing rental rates and attendant high cost of tenant improvements over a short term.

PRODUCTION AND SALE OF REPLICA HAND GUNS

Are there any legal restraints for the production and sale of replica hand guns and, if not, are any being proposed?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): If a replica hand gun is not capable of being fired or adapted to enable it to be fired, it does not fall within the Criminal Code definition of firearm. There are no legal restraints under federal law concerning the production and sale of replicas and none are being proposed at the present time. There are, however, provisions in the Criminal Code concerning the use of imitation weapons. Under section 83 of the Criminal Code, it is an indictable offence to carry or possess a weapon or imitation thereof for a purpose dangerous to the public peace or for the purpose of committing an offence. In addition, pursuant to section 302(d) of the Code, every one commits robbery who steals from any person while armed with an offensive weapon or imitation thereof.

Order Paper Questions

NEHEMIAH RICHARDS

Question No. 3,763—Mr. Cossitt:

Has a deportation order against nineteen year old Nehemiah Richards of Toronto been delayed while the Minister of Manpower and Immigration reviews the case and, if so (a) how long will the review take (b) will the Minister agree to giving at least a minimum of one month's notice if any such deportation order is to be reinstated (c) will the Minister agree to do everything possible to permit Nehemiah Richards to obtain immediate landed immigrant status in Canada so that he can remain with his family?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): A review of the humanitarian circumstances involved in the case of Nehemiah Richards was completed in December 1975. The deportation order against him had to be executed, but since Mr. Richards' presence was necessary in Toronto in connection with the adoption proceedings (since he is over 18 years old) by his father, no immediate enforcement action was taken. Nehemiah Richards departed for Jamaica late in January and re-entered Canada February 5 on a Minister's Permit. As soon as immigration procedures have been completed, authority will be sought from the Governor-in-Council to land him.

DREE—NEW BRUNSWICK REQUEST FOR FUNDING

Question No. 3,807—Mr. Howie:

Did the Province of New Brunswick request funding from DREE over the next five years for (a) Fredericton-Westmorland Street Bridge (b) upgrading of Route 7, Fredericton to Saint John (c) upgrading of Route 8, Fredericton to Chatham (d) upgrading of Route 8, Fredericton to Newcastle (e) upgrading of Route 10, Fredericton to Chatham and, if so, in each case (i) how much (ii) how much financial assistance is DREE prepared to give?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is: In response to a request from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the province of New Brunswick submitted to the Department an outline of the provincial plan for highway constructions and improvement to be undertaken over the next five years. Although the projects listed in this question form a part of the overall provincial plan, there has been no specific request from the province for DREE assistance to them. The question of what assistance, if any, might be provided is being considered in the continuing process of federal-provincial discussion regarding DREE activities in New Brunswick. (i) Not applicable; (ii) Not applicable.

PUBLIC FUNDS SPENT FOR ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 3,998—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the total amount of public funds spent for St. Lawrence Islands National Park during (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975?

2. What is the estimated amount for 1976?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) $311,000; (b) $397,000; (c) $544,000.

[Mr. Basford.]

2. $775,000.

LIP—GRANT TO CONSTITUENCY OF MACKENZIE 1975-76

Question No. 4,016—Mr. Korchinski:

1. What amount was originally allocated to the Constituency of Mackenzie for 1975-76 under the LIP Programme?

2. (a) What was the total amount, in dollars, of applications received from the Constituency (b) what amount was finally approved?

3. Were any funds directed out of the Constituency and, if so (a) in what amount (b) to which constituency were they appropriated and for what reason?

4. How many applications received required as much or less funds than those which were redirected and from which communities did they originate?

5. Of the amounts allocated for LIP Programmes in the Constituency of Mackenzie, were applications approved for harvesting ice and construction of ice houses and, if so, what amount was spent (a) within the boundaries (b) outside the boundaries of the Constituency and in which locations?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. $345,000.

2. (a) $774,089; (b) $345,000.

3. No. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable.

4. Not applicable.

5. Yes. Two such projects were funded. (a) $133,644; (b) Nil.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 3,577 and 3,778 could be made orders for returns, those documents could be tabled immediately.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the two questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary shall be deemed to have been made orders for returns?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I rose on this point and it was not an idle gesture on my part. I have discussed the matter with the parliamentary secretary. Today there is no reason given why this should be done. I should like to add to my reasons for raising this point. If the answers are tabled, they go to the parliamentary returns office. It is true that hon. members can go there, and if there are interested members of the press they can go there; but there are thousands of readers of Hansard who have no opportunity of seeing the answer.

I agree that there are occasion when this exception may be granted because answers are sometimes too voluminous, but the practice as it now stands is that the parliamentary secretary simply states the question number which is asked to be made an order for return. Not one hon. member of this House has the opportunity of going down to see what number it is, or of being consulted as to whether he agrees or not.

I have suggestions to make in this regard. The parliamentary secretary could phone the opposition whips and tell them which questions are proposed to be made orders for return on a particular day, and if hon. members have any objection they could let him know or state whether they are prepared to accept, or reject, the request which is presently based upon the opinion only of the parliamentary secretary that the question should be made an order for return. I do not think the present method is fair. That is not the purpose of these questions, and unless we can get some co-operation I withhold my consent.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has asked whether it is the pleasure of the House that the questions referred to by the hon. parliamentary secretary shall be made orders for returns. It is not the pleasure of the House at this moment.

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, the hon. member for Edmonton West has not raised a point of order which can be responded to. He has simply withheld his consent that the two questions be made orders for returns at this time.

Mr. Blais: May I move to motion?

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COPIES OF ALL COMMUNICATIONS RELATING TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AS IT RELATES TO FISHERMEN

Motion No. 78—Mr. Baldwin (for Mr. Marshall):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, letters, telegrams between the government and the Province of Newfoundland relating to changes in the unemployment insurance system as they apply to fishermen.

[English]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned, a search of the Unemployment Insurance files relating to fishing regulations did not reveal any correspondence between the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Government of the Province of Newfoundland relating to changes in the unemployment insurance system as they apply to fishermen. Therefore, we request the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which comes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am only calling on the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby pursuant to his notice of motion under Standing Order 26.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Matters relating to Standing Order 26 are not supposed to be called until the last item before orders of the day. We have not yet reached that point.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have asked for deferral of the hon. member's point of order, as well as the minister's statement, until such time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have asked for deferral of both those matters until such time as we complete routine proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The last, remaining item on routine proceedings is items under Standing Order 26, which come before orders of the day. I have asked the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to put to the House his notice of motion pursuant to Standing Order 26, after which I will hear the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on his point of order, after which we will hear the minister's statement.

Labour Conditions

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

IRVING PULP AND PAPER—CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS REACTION TO DECISION OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), the adjournment of the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 26, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the revelation today of the announced intention by the executive of the Canadian Labour Congress representing almost two million Canadian workers to withdraw from all areas of co-operation with the federal government in every province, this decision arising from the now clearly demonstrated and acknowledged absence of the right of appeal under due process of law for all those affected by decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board and/or the administrator, and leading inevitably to further breakdown of civil order in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), pursuant to Standing Order 26, has given the Chair notice of his intention to put before the House the motion which he has described to the House. The Chair has had the matter under consideration for the two previous days of this sitting and on other days, as will be shown in the records of the House. In applications pursuant to Standing Order 26, the Chair has to make a basic decision, and that is whether the matter is one that is proper to be discussed pursuant to the provisions of the Standing Order; that is to say, is it a specific matter of importance, requiring urgent consideration?

Previous motions have made reference to the necessity for amendment of the anti-inflation legislation in order to cure certain alleged shortcomings. I have taken the position that such amendments ought to be sought in other ways. I have no reason to alter my thinking in that regard. Even in those rulings, however, I want to some length to indicate that there was general agreement of the House that the matter was of considerable importance; that it was of considerable scope. Indeed, it had been raised on both sides of the House by way of applications pursuant to this rule and by way of questions. In fact, in the last few days it has been the subject of questions by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and by members of other parties throughout the question period. It has been the subject of questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as well as to other members of the cabinet.

There was a problem at one time with the question of jurisdiction. That question has now been set aside. I indicated in previous rulings that there were many ingredients that made this an ideal subject for discussion pursuant to the Standing Order, except that it relates to the amendment of a statute which was passed by this House very recently and I thought, therefore, it ought not to be, in that form, the subject of discussion pursuant to Standing Order 26. The motion put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby in this instance, however, refers principally to a different ingredient, or a different development altogether, and that is—and I quote:

—the relevation today of the announced intention by the executive of the Canadian Labour Congress representing almost two million Canadian workers to withdraw from all areas of co-operation with the federal government in every province—

The hon. member has also added some words about the basis for that decision. May I express the opinion that the opinion that the basis for the decision is not the guiding factor in this particular instance as far as the Chair is concerned, except that it does relate to the anti-inflation measures that are before the House in one way or another and, which therefore clearly ties it into the jurisdiction of this House. Surely, if such an act on the part of the Canadian Labour Congress is contemplated and is announced publicly by them, as is alleged in the notice of motion, it is not for the Chair to make an independent determination as to the truth of that but, rather, to accept it at its face value. Surely, therefore, the matter is both important and urgent.

Secondly, having considered that the matter is important and requires urgent consideration, I think it ought to be said be very clearly that it is not in the interests of this House or the interests of the country to await the actual event before extending to hon. members of this House the opportunity to express themselves—that is to say, members on both sides of the House and at every level—in advance of any further deliberations of such a serious move within the Canadian Labour Congress and in advance of any consultations which may take place between that important congress and this government.

Therefore, I fell that this subject is a proper one to be discussed pursuant to Standing Order 26. If the hon. member has leave of the House to put the motion, it would be my disposition that it be considered by the House at eight o'clock this evening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 26, I must therefore ask whether the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has leave of the House to put his motion at eight o'clock this evening.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I am rising now on a point of order which arises from a decision Your Honour reached in today's proceedings not to accept a question I put to the Prime Minister concerning certain aspects of the anti-inflation law. At that time Your Honour said it was your view that what was involved in the question was an interpretation of law. With all due respect to Your Honour, I should like to suggest that that was not the case. Earlier in the question period I had asked the Prime Minister a question with reference to the same law, in answer to which he indicated general agreement on a point of law, namely, who would or would not have the right to appeal under section 30(1) of the law. That was the earlier question. There was no dispute; no question of interpretation. Just in passing, the Prime Minister indicated acceptance of an interpretation of the law on my part which was part of an earlier question.

Once the Prime Minister indicated that he agreed with that conclusion, my question to him was not concerning an interpretation of the law, but given the agreement on the point of law which was shared by the Prime Minister and myself, this was the force, if not the exact words, of my question. I asked did he not agree that it was desirable for the government to bring forward amendments to the law in order to change it so that the grievance or injustice perceived by myself and other vis-à-vis workers who are excluded from having a right of appeal might be changed? My question did not ask for an interpretation of law; it did not indicate that I was concerned about the interpretation of the law. I wanted the Prime Minister to indicate that the government might be prepared to change the law.

I suggest that Your Honour might reconsider your previous ruling. I know the Prime Minister at the time was rising to his feet to answer the question. If you decide that he may answer, perhaps the Prime Minister would do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, I do not think the opportunity to reconsider is given to me. I felt that the hon. member was asking about two matters with which I had some difficulty. He asked for an expression of opinion, as to whether certain rights lie with certain people under the terms of the law; further, whether it was the opinion of the Prime Minister that something further might be done about that. I confess that I rarely interfere with questions, particularly those asked each day by lead-off members of each party. I may have been influenced in my approach to the particular matter today, in deciding that this was a matter for debate rather than a matter for the question period, by the fact that I knew, and hon. members had no way of knowing, that I intended to rule in favour of a debate on the whole matter this evening. It is not something I would take as a general indication or precedent.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask if, to Your Honour's knowledge, the estimates have been tabled and if we are entitled to a copy at this time from which to prepare our questions?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that I am to make a statement and receive comments before tabling the document. However, since someone has taken the document to the table, I can only say this: if the authorities at the table want to distribute copies of the estimates, that is their privilege. They are not under my control.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It would be my understanding that the document now having been tabled, it ought to be distributed to hon. members forthwith. In accordance with the earlier agreement of the House, the House will now revert to statements by ministers.

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the main estimates for 1976-77, which I am tabling today, amount to $38.4 billion for budgetary items and $1.1 billion for non-budgetary items.

[English]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As chairman of the public accounts committee, I have more than a passing interest in the figures to be tabled today. Can those figures be made available? I see that the page is now distributing copies of the documents to hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member's point of order was dealt with seconds ago. Copies of the document are now being distributed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, representatives of the three opposition parties will receive information which will allow them to comment on my statement.

They include for the first time old age security and guaranteed income supplement payments, which in other years were paid out of a special account.

Throughout the current fiscal year, I have continued to state the government's intention to hold the growth of expenditures between 1974-75 and 1975-76 to 16 per cent or less. I am pleased to say that there now is every indication this target will be achieved. This has been done, in the face of strong inflationary pressures, only through the exercise of great restraint on new expenditures, and through the actual reductions in previously approved expenditures which I announced last June. The 16-per-cent increase in federal expenditures during 1975-76 compares favorably with a number of recent indicators for the private sector of the Canadian economy. During the third quarter of 1975, for example, business non-residential construction and business investment in machinery and equipment were expanding at annual rates of 18 and 16 per cent respectively; the growth of personal expenditures on consumer goods and services reached 14.3 per cent during the same quarter.

[English]

I now state my intention to keep the increase in federal expenditures under the ceiling of 16 per cent again in 1976-77. In both cases—that is, in the result now expected to be achieved for 1975-76 and in the intended result for 1976-77—I mean all expenditures, including the non-budgetary items which do not appear in the main estimates.

It will not be easy to reach this target during the coming fiscal year. While it is to be hoped that inflationary pressures will abate, they will still remain strong. Aside from the upward drift in the cost of inputs from rental payments to materials, equipment and supplies which federal departments and agencies, like other economic agents, will have to bear in 1976-77, the main estimates reflect the higher salary and wage rates which will have to be paid under existing collective agreements.

The House should note that the average annual compound rate of increase in wages and salaries provided by federal public service agreements signed in 1975 was 14.4 per cent. Thus, the federal government's performance in this respect was somewhat better than that of other sectors of the Canadian economy. While I am conscious of the need to deal fairly with public servants in relation to other categories of wage earners, I hope that in keeping with the government's anti-inflation program, and with the co-operation of public service unions, our performance will further improve during 1976.

[Translation]

Inevitably, higher expenditures could not be avoided for the Department of Transport and certain agencies such as the RCMP and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which are responsible for policies to which the government attaches a high priority. In addition, a large increase in government payments to the Unemployment Insurance Account was made necessary by conditions in the labor market during 1975; and subsidies for the two-price system for wheat are included for the first time in the Main Estimates. Nevertheless, subject to unforeseen developments during the new fiscal year, I hope to keep the growth of federal expenditures below the 16-per-cent ceiling.

I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to a new summary table of the Blue Book, Table 7, which classifies budgetary expenditures by type of payments. This new table shows that the federal government, far from being the "big spender" it is sometimes said to be, is the key agent for income redistribution in Canada. In fact, fully 70 per cent, or $27 billion of the monies included in the main estimates for 1976-77 will not be spent directly by federal departments or agencies, but rather will be redistributed, in one form or another, to Canadian householders, Canadian industry or other levels of government.

[English]

Nevertheless, as I announced last December 18, we are continuing our efforts to curb the rate of increase in the size of the public service. I remind the House that the expansion averaged 7.1 per cent in the two-year period ending 1974-75. We initially set it at 4.1 per cent for 1975-76, but later reduced it to about 3.1 per cent by freezing part of the new manpower resources already authorized. Last fall we set a new and much lower 1.5 per cent ceiling on the growth of the public service during 1976-77. At 1.3 per cent we are well within that limit in the main estimates, and we still have a small margin to meet unforeseen requirements.

Net growth in authorized man-years was held to this low level by reducing the staff of many departments and agencies in order to be able to increase resources in others where requirements were considered more urgent because of government priorities in such fields as economic management, domestic security and essential services.

[Translation]

The year-to-year budgetary expansion in the Main Estimates for 1976-77 over 1975-76 is $6.2 billion. The programs which make the major contributions to this expansion, in absolute terms, are the following:

	($ Millions)
Public Debt Charges	1,075
Government Contribution to the Unemployment Insurance Account	810
Hospital Insurance and Medicare	614
National Defence	573
Old Age Security	537
Transport Ministry	291
Post Office	230
Fiscal Transfers to the Provinces (Including Contracting-Out Payments to Quebec)	226

Almost all the items I mentioned are statutory expenditures in whole or in part, which means that the government had virtually no flexibility to exercise further retraint. To put it another way, about 55 per cent of the Main Estimates of budgetary expenditures (including OAS-GIS) were of a statutory nature in 1975-76; and next year, the proportion will be 57 per cent, which, among other things, shows the control we have exercised on the non-statutory side.

Almost all the items I have mentioned are statutory expenditures in whole or in part, which means that the government had virtually no flexibility to exercise further restraint. To put it another way, about 55 per cent of the main estimates of budgetary expenditures, including OAS-GIS, were of a statutory nature in 1975-76 and next year the proportion will be 57 per cent which, among other things, shows the control we have exercised on the non-statutory side.

The 1976-77 booklet, "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent", is being distributed to all members, together with the main estimates. The booklet is a more compact version than that of previous years, reflecting our concern for greater economy. At the same time, it is a highly informative and analytical document which I am sure many will find useful.

However, Mr. Speaker, before concluding, I would like to add that some hon. members from the opposition parties, in particular my good friends the NDP members will say this expenditure budget is too restrictive, whereas the Progressive Conservative members will argue we have not made enough cuts. That is the simplest explanation I can give: when it comes to budget cuts, we should remember this popular French folk's song which says: Everybody wants to go to heaven but nobody wants to die".

[English]

Mr Speaker: Order, please. Before calling on the hon. member for Edmonton West, it has been our practice since last Easter that statements by ministers would result not only in a statement by a representative of each of the opposition parties but also by a period of questioning. While that practice certainly has prevailed with some considerable benefit to the House, I would suggest, in general statements by ministers on motions the fact is that the practice of introduction of estimates by the President of the Treasury Board today is part of a practice which is to initiate a whole series of questioning and studies before the standing committees of the House about the estimates, and so on.

The President of the Treasury Board will appear before the standing committee, as will other ministers, in defence of the estimates tabled today. Certainly we will proceed with statements by opposition spokesmen in respect of the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board. While that is taking place, I wonder if some thought might be given to whether it was ever the intention, in this particular instance, for the House to attempt to question the President of the Treasury Board when he is simply initiating the practice of being questioned in one way or another for the next three months.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, there is no point in my continuing questions. I am all right; I am in the lifeboat. I have had an opportunity afforded to me to question the minister and his officials on certain points. I hope that I can keep my remarks short. I would not like this practice basically to change from that wherein ministers are making statements. We can keep our statements short and leave our colleagues to put questions. Keeping that in mind, I think we can get along. I would prefer to start that procedure rather than on my own, at this moment, to eliminate the questions.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend. If the minister makes a very factual and limited statement, obviously that can be responded to in the same way. If, however, as was noticeably the case here, the minister makes an exculpatory statement in which he assings to himself certain virtues and benefits about which there may be some doubt, he leaves himself open to questioning. As far as I am concerned, we do not intend to pursue that procedure at this time. I utter that as a word of caution with respect to the limited time the minister may have to occupy his present position. He should restrict the nature of his statement and not invite the kind of questions which the statement he just made does invite.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say that I appreciate the gesture of the minister in giving us an opportunity to look at the estimates. Second, may I say that this year the version of "How your tax dollar is spent"—having had an opportunity of going through it—is a considerable advance over last year. Hon. members and the public will be well served by this document; that is, those who are looking for it.

There is one word of caution that I want to bring forward. This relates to the spirit of the comments of my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), with regard to the remarks of the minister being somewhat self-exculpatory. There is a great danger at this time in looking at percentages and constant dollars. The use of percentages is totally deceptive. In addition, the practice or the method of using percentages as much as possible in the format of the old blue book is present.

Here I would like to call attention to the good work being done by the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, arising out of the Auditor General's recommendations regarding these estimates. That advantage will only appear next year and I am not going to make a statement in that regard; I will save it until we have the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) before us.

In the first paragraph of his statement the minister talked about $38.4 billion for budgetary items, and $1.1 billion for non-budgetary items, totalling $39.5 billion. If one goes to page 1 of the what I call the small blue book, one sees that the main estimates for budgetary expenditures, including the cost of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement, have a projected total of $42,150 million, and not $39.5 billion. We have to look for further estimates this year. There is a reserve of $1.5 billion that goes in. There is a separate item of half a billion dollars. Then there are things such as loans, investments and advances of $2,750 million, for a total of $42,150 million. That is what we are talking about for this year. When the minister talks about a percentage of 16 per cent, it is this latter figure that is being used.

If one goes to page eight of the booklet "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent", the total of columns 2 and 3 is in actual expenditures starting in 1972-73 all the way through to 1976-77 and showing the percentage increases. We see that on the basis of 1973-74 over 1972-73, there was a 24 per cent increase. The following year, 1974-75, there was a 27 per cent increase. In 1975-76 there was a 16 per cent increase, and this year there is a 16 per cent increase. With the greatest respect, that is a lot of hokum. It is worse than the shell game.

While $42,150 million is roughly 116 per cent of $36,500 million, the increase of some $5,550 million is already on something that is 116 per cent of the previous year. If there were established a base year as we have in the computation of the consumer price index, we could find out what the expenditures are today compared with what they were ten years ago, and index it. We see that today the consumer price index is something like 180 compared with the base year, 1961. If we wanted to take the $6.3 billion of expenditures by this administration in the base year 1963, and take the $42 billion estimated for this year, the index would be up by some 600 per cent. Then we could see what money they have been spending and what money they have been collecting from the taxpayer. We could see, also, on the basis of a constant dollar, the true relationship and we would be better able to determine the influence which government spending and monetary policy has on the consumer price index.

Hon. members should be very careful about accepting the glib figures presented to us. The minister almost sprained his shoulder congratulating himself on maintaining a rate of growth of 16 per cent—sixteen per cent of 116, and that comes to something rather lower in my book. If we turn to some of the other information which has been provided to us, we see where increases in expenditure arise. The minister has indicated that some amounted to 5 per cent, some to between 14 and 20 per cent, and up and up. There were even some that dropped. I understand that ten ministries are responsible for 80 per cent of the increases in expenditure. According to page 11 of the fact sheet, this year the Unemployment Insurance Commission is going to ask for $1,702 million, an increase of some 90 per cent over the previous year. But this does not cover 1966-67. It is not a forecast. It is merely refilling the pot, because the unemployment insurance fund, in order to cover shortages for 1975-76, has had to borrow $310 million.

I underline the fact that there is not one member of the House who can have any influence at all in connection with the sum of $1,702 million which is to be put into the fund. It is one whole year after the event. I put it to members of the New Democratic Party, and to the Creditistes as well, that in 1972 the party to which I belong objected to amending legislation which lifted the ceiling of $800 million on these advances. If that ceiling had been left in place, the government would have been obliged to put forward a resolution in the year in which the unemployment was experienced before they could get the advance, and parliament could then have had something to say about the policies, or lack of them, which had led to the situation. I trust that nobody will spend more than 30 seconds on this particular item, because it is beyond repair. I simply express the hope that the administration will restore some sanity to it.

My last point is this. If one examines page 54 of the ancilliary book, one finds that the three levels of government in 1974 took 38.9 per cent of the gross national product. The share of the federal government was 16 per cent, the provinces' share is now up to 11.3 per cent, municipalities took 8.3 per cent, and hospital funds, pension plans and so on took 3.2 per cent. Undoubtedly there was an increase in 1975, but the latest figures we have apply to 1974. This House ought to concern itself about the share of the GNP which goes to public spending. I think the House committees, provided they do not become laden down with a lot of other junk, will be able to digest these estimates. Bear in mind one thing, though. As the minister has indicated, 70 per cent of this projected $42 billion is either statutory on non-budgetary. In other words, only 30 per cent of this expenditure is really under the control of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) or of this House.

Perhaps the proportions should be changed if this House and parliament are to exercise a greater degree of control over year to year spending and keep a closer watch on monetary policy. It is conceivable that both the percentage of GNP which goes into public expenditure ought to be cut down and that somehow we showed increase the proportion of the annual expenditure of the Government of Canada represented by budgetary items, rather than statutory items, so that members might express a more effective opinion as to its validity.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my appreciation to the minister for his kindness in giving us a sneak preview of the figures, thus enabling us to reach an early conclusion about them. I should also like to thank him for his solicitude in directing us to the path of heaven. I appreciate there might be some concern on his side of the House, but I can assure him there is no such concern in my party.

I should like to make something clear to the hon. gentleman. He seemed to indicate that there was not much point in the debate. He anticipated, with some degree of correctness, that members to my right in the Conservative party would attack most government expenditure, and he expected that members of the New Democratic Party would be complaining that the government was not spending enough. Mr. Speaker, despite all the years he has been here, the minister does not understand what is going on. What we object to is the direction in which he is proposing to spend a great deal of money. We do not object because the Parliament of Canada is spending more money on the old, on the sick, on research and on many of the things which make our society a better place in which to live. What we do object to is the kind of spending he is recommending to us today. For example, debt charges have risen by 21 per cent, an increase of more than $1 billion. This did not come about through an increase in the public debt alone. It arose, quite clearly—as is pointed out in the information paper before us—as a result of higher interest charges. These higher charges are a direct result of government policy, which has been to raise interest rates until they are now between per cent and 15 per cent higher than those in the United States.

The minister then comes to us and says he is doing something about public spending, when there is a 21 per cent increase in debt charges. What good will this do? It may enrich a few people in this country, but what good does it do in terms of redistributing income, helping elderly or sick people, or providing housing? If anything, it has the opposite effect. That is the kind of spending we do not like and to which we object, yet the government seems to be satisfied with it.

We also take objection to a 90 per cent increase in unemployment insurance payments. Not because we do not think payments should be made when people are out of work. We object because we have a government, that is so inept, that so mismanages our economy that the only way parliament can find to avoid disaster is to pay out unemployment insurance instead of creating job opportunities in this country. That is the kind of worthless expenditure that is being made.

My hon. friend from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) may quarrel about whether it is correct to put this increase into this year's estimates or into last year's, and that is a point that some attention should be paid to. But the disgraceful thing is that the government has no other way of enabling its people to survive. The government puts in a program of hand-outs rather than providing the employment that it is the right of the people of this country to expect.

The government prides itself on holding its expenditures. It has held its expenditures all right on the elevator operator, the secretary and on other people in the public service who never got a great deal of money. But let us look at how it has held its expenditures in the Prime Minister's office. My colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) in response to a question got the following information. There are eight people in the Prime Minister's office earning between $35,500 and $47,500 a year. There are two people in the Prime Minister's office earning between $54,000 and $66,000 a year. That is admirable restraint to show the people of this country! We have had legislation before us that says to people earning $10,000 or $12,000, "Restraint on you". We have in the Prime Minister's office, I am sure, talented and able people. But are they that talented and able to be worth six or ten times as much as anybody else? I do not think so. I do not think the country thinks so either, or that the country will be persuaded to accept the government's restraint program in face of this disparity in income.

Let us look at the growth in SX employees. Again, in response to a question put by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North, the growth in SX employees—they are employees earning between $29,000 and $66,000 a year—went from 402 people in that category in 1969 to 1,082 in that category in 1974. What are they doing—making gold? How many do you need? Other government employees are restrained, yet at the same time there is this enormous increase in people at the upper levels of government. I appreciate that there was a time when people working in the government, particularly at the senior level, may not have been receiving as much as those in the private sector. But the opposite is true now. The point of paying salaries larger than average, or normal, is to attract competent people. The complaint now is that they are overpaying people in the public service, paying away beyond what is necessary to attract able people. The proliferation of people in this category is something that must be looked at. If you wonder why there has been this growth in the non-productive sector of the public service, Mr. Speaker, it is because of salaries of this kind. Those salaries are based on size of department and number of people employed, rather than on the particular talent that people may display.

The government spends, on contract and casual employees, over $900 million. It is hard to get an itemized account of this, particularly when we have all these high-priced people in the public service, why is there almost a $1 billion expenditure on contract labour? In these estimates, the departments which have received the least assistance have been those dealing with scientific and medical research. At the same time there has been an increase in travel expenditure for senior people in the public service, from something over $1,967,000 to $4,310,000. How can one say this government has any decent priorities, when one see things of that kind?

The minister is congratulating himself that there has been an average increase in the public sector of something in the neighbourhood of 14 per cent. I say "something in the neighbourhood" because although these figures look awfully definite, they turn out to be not so definite on examination in committee. The House of Commons estimates have gone up by 19.2 per cent. Admittedly, a great deal of that is due to increased staff because of the increased responsibilities that the Commons has. But if you look at the Department of Justice you find that salaries—and essentially the cost of the Department of Justice is salaries—have gone up by 26.5 per cent.

Perhaps even that we could live with, but we find that the Senate's estimates have gone up by 31 per cent, at a time when the wage guidelines are encouraging people, indeed demanding people, to restrict their demands to 10 per cent to 12 per cent. Until these estimates were tabled, the situation in terms of people's conception of income disparity in this country was bad enough. This is one way in which we differ with our friends to the right. They are worried about the level of government spending. We are worried about who gets it, whether it is friends of the government, in the form of large hand-outs, write-offs and tax concessions, or the people of this country who are entitled to a fair share of income.

Over the last 30 or 40 years there has been no change in income distribution. If the government expects its essentially unfair program of wage and price controls—and it knows it is an unfair program—to be accepted at all, or if it is to have any chance of being accepted at all, one of the things it must demonstrate while the program is in operation is that the gap between those at the bottom and those at the top is being narrowed. There is nothing in the information tabled before us today which shows that the government either understands that philosophy or intends to take that kind of action.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join those who have thanked the minister for inviting us to his office to look at the figures that would be discussed this afternoon.

As concerns the opinion of our party, I would like to make a few comments concerning the expenditures of the Treasury Board. First of all, I must say that we are not surprised that the minister is announcing today that the growth of federal expenditures will be limited to 16 per cent this year, since this government policy has been emphasized on various occasions. Indeed, I do not think that the government had any choice in the matter because its enormous budgetary deficit is forcing it to make important cuts in its expenditures, even if these cuts are painful, especially if it wants to support its own anti-inflation policy. The government must set an example.

But when we look at the whole situation of the Canadian economy, which urgently needs to be stimulated and stabilized, we can realize that the attitude on which the budget is based is just not good enough. On the contrary, it is timorous action which does not aim at supporting the economy, but shows that the government still maintains a defensive attitude as concerns the situation.

Indeed, these is an alarming contrast in this situation. The economy needs to be stimulated, but the government remains on the defensive, and instead of supporting the economic life, it is content with remaining an observer and hoping that things will get better late on. Where, for instance, are the employment creation programs that are needed in these days of high unemployment? Instead of introducing such programs, the government increases its contribution to unemployment insurance by $810 million. It remains inactive, it accepts to fight against inflation, to create more and more unemployment and to increase deficits, which is illogical in this situation, because the government is increasing its contribution to unemployment insurance without introducing in compensation a dynamic program designed to progressively reduce this problem by creating productive employment.

Besides, in this budget, there is a glaring problem of great magnitude, namely the $1.75 billion increase in the cost of public debt.

Who has allowed the banks and loan companies, in 1969, right here in the House, to increase the interest rate if it is not this government? At that time, the same government enacted this legislation which makes borrowing more expensive and deficit higher, thereby enlarging the yearly deficit margin which the government has to pay.

Non-Canadian Publications

The question I wish to ask is this: How long shall we allow public debt expenditures to increase? Must we keep taking more and more out of our budgets and more and more out of the manoeuvering room the government requires for efficient administration? I would like the government members to answer that question specifically and suggest solutions. If they have none, some of us may come up with one.

In short, I can say that the government is trying to remain in power, while we unfortunately know, among other things, that the country will again experience severe economic setbacks in 1976, the farm income could decrease by 20 or 25 per cent according to the experts of Agriculture Canada, and also that the consumer will be affected by various increases ranging from 10 to 15 per cent in food products alone and unemployment is still threatening.

It is wrong to believe that the government could save itself by remaining on the defensive when fused with problems and by letting conditions run out of control. I suggest that this is not a matter of political partisanship, but an administrative issue and a matter of responsibility.

As far as agriculture is concerned, today the minister has tolled his 1976-77 estimates. The 1975-76 estimates for agriculture amounted to 32 per cent, that is $612 million, but in 1976-77, they will only reach 11.9 per cent. When studying those figures, I note that two groups will be more affected than others: first, the farmers and then the Indians, because the estimates for Indian Affairs have been reduced from 29.5 to 17 per cent.

Many other items have been increased. I wonder if the government is not making a great mistake, because, in my opinion, they should know that agriculture is the mainstay of society and even millionnaires must eat. Farmers must remain in business, and get $1,1000 million have been cut from agricultural loans for example, as shown at page 275 of the Blue Book. For agricultural loans alone, $1,100 million, which means a cut of more than a third. And then they will say that they are trying to provide sound administration.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (for the Secretary of State) moved that Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily the proceedings of parliament at third reading would be of a routine nature and often oppositions are wont to let bills that have had committee study, report stage scrutiny, and so on, pass on a routine division; but I am sure it would be irresponsible of the official opposition if we were to permit such a course of action for this grubby piece of legislation. Bill C-58, in the opinion of the official opposition, should be referred back to the committee. A good deal of the evidence that was heard in the committee about the status of Reader's Digest has become irrelevant because of a special arrangement made for that magazine, presumably as a result of pressures exerted, and so on. We do not even know, as parliamentarians, whether the deal is a reasonable one within the terms of the Income Tax Act. Therefore, at some stage of this debate, a spokesman for the official opposition will be moving to refer the contents of this bill back to the committee so that representatives of the Department of National Revenue and the Department of the Secretary of State, as well as officials of Reader's Digest, can bring us up to date on what is obviously a very fundamental change in this legislation.

When speaking for the Progressive Conservative party at second reading, I thought I made it clear that the party had no basic argument about the various tests of citizenship which the Income Tax Act applied to publications. I said at that time—I am rather sorry to have to repeat it—that after so many years in this country it was high time that Time Canada and the Canadian edition of Reader's Digest took out, so to speak, Canadian citizenship. By a curious anomaly, Time was prepared to meet the test of the Income Tax Act and said so during the summer of 1975.

Representatives of Reader's Digest were urged, presumably, by various ministers and various members and, if I may presume to speak for him, my leader and myself to dispose of equity shares up to 75 per cent in order that they could meet the test. This was, of course, unacceptable to Reader's Digest until certain events transpired late in 1975 and early in 1976. We are faced with an entirely new set of circumstances, circumstances that I, for one, am not even prepared to say are wrong because we do not know whether they are right or wrong.

Unlike the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, the people who made the decision affecting the status of Reader's Digest are unknown to us. The regulations under which the deal was made are unknown to us and—unlike the case of CRTC—there have been no public hearings. It was suggested at an earlier stage of the debate that the analogy to CRTC was wrongly drawn. I have always felt that. I have always felt that the tests and the regulations should be subject to some scrutiny, that there should be some notice. It may well be that the government is right; I have no way of knowing because the whole thing is most mysterious.

In any event, we are faced with an entirely new situation because of an arbitrary rule decided upon by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) who told the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts that even if his ruler measurement, as it was described to us by his officials, was found to be beyond the powers of the Income Tax Act and the regulations, the minister would come to parliament with a new statute which would specify that which the courts found to be illegal.

That is how I describe the bill, the purpose of which was rather laudable, which many of us accepted at an earlier stage, but which had gone from one bad arrangement to another. I, for one, an distressed at this outcome; I feel that makes a mockery of the committee system. We go to some trouble to cross-examine witnesses or hear to evidence from various people who are called before the committee, and now all that evidence has gone out the window.

I think that on the second part of the bill it would have been well, and perhaps the debate would have been substantially shortened, had parliament had an opportunity to hear of any special arrangements made by the Federal Communications Department and the CRTC about the serious dilemma faced by Canada because of stations beyond our borders. We were told by various ministers—the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) for one—that discussions were being held by officials. We watched these officials parade into the Lester B. Pearson Building to try to negotiate some understanding about how Canada would treat these offshore stations, and so on. I would have thought it would have been better had we been privy to the plans, arrangements, discussions and agreements. But all that came to nought. The government decided that they would set up a special status for Reader's Digest; they would execute Time Canada; they would not wait for any international arrangement about the offshore stations; and they would proceed with Bill C-58.

I think the government has a good deal to answer for. I am interested in the phenomenon that we witnessed during the past few days of members of the government and of the opposition who have serious reservations about the policy and who have the courage of their convictions. After all, this is a place where representatives of the public have to put before ministers, the government and all of us, their convictions about what is right and what is wrong, or how particular pieces of legislation will affect particular parts of Canada. I do not have any personal quarrel with the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner)—why would I—but I do have substantial quarrel with legislation which is so centrist in its application. It is almost a text-book case of the pressures that are on this federal experiment, of which we are all part, when members from one province in particular who are going to be seriously affected have spoken out about their frustrations. But apparently if the results during report stage are to be taken as read, they are not to be listened to; yet perfectly legitimate frustrations have obviously been expressed both in the government caucus and to the ministers' ears about the killing of Reader's Digest and how that would affect another part of Canada.

Therefore, ministers must not be surprised if we raise questions when an arrangement is made for the convenience of members in one part of the country which results in the saving of one of the instruments of culture, if I can so elevate Reader's Digest, that it is to be safe and sacrosanct under a new arrangement about which we cannot know anything because we do not know the officials who have made the arrangement. Yet other parts of our culture, namely, broadcasting, have been curtailed or cut off.

I do not hold any particular personal brief for an offshore television undertaking. I think we have to understand the pressures on the whole broadcasting system of Canada to understand what this present legislation tries to do. On the other hand, it is much too easy to expect hon. members to sit idly by and see fundamental changes made to the broadcasting aspect in the part of the country they represent, and have other hon. members who apparently are closer to government benches and therefore can have their pressures answered by a changed status of Reader's Digest.

I do not care if ministers and members opposite speak in this debate forever. They will never convince me, and I am sure they will never convince my colleagues, that a special arrangement was made that had nothing to do with what the government planned when it first introduced Bill C-58 with a flourish of trumpets. It is this aspect of the bill that has caused government backbenchers to express their frustration and has caused many members of parliament on this side to take what many might think a substantial amount of time venting their frustrations about special cases.

I was here when the new Broadcasting Act received general approval in parliament. I supported, and this party supported, the direction that that policy was enunciating for our country. What I particulary liked about CRTC was its openness. Obviously, every decision that is made will not find general acceptance in the country. How could it, dealing with something that is almost as pervasive as the weather? Everyone has an opinion on broadcasting; everybody, apparently, has an opinion on our educational system; and everybody seems to know where to complain.

However, having said, perhaps a bit trite and oversimplified, that the CRTC is made up of responsible public people, appointed in the way the statute decreed, who after notice evolved a system of regulations which were public regulations and which, if they were challenged, could stand up under what I like to call the rule of law, I say there is no element of the rule of law when special deals are made in upstairs offices. This is a mistake that a government which espouses the cause of liberal democracy should be ashamed of, and a mistake which this opposition party would be irresponsible not to resist. It is a mistake which it would be wrong of us to allow to pass without serious criticism and comment, not only this afternoon but in the days ahead.

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said in this debate. It has been a long debate which has accomplished very little, and to my mind what it has accomplished is negative. What is more, if the slightest accommodation had been made, simply omitting the provision for the 80 per cent "dissimilar content" interpretation, there would have been no need for this long debate and no need to take up the time of the House unnecessarily: the bill would have received acceptance in a positive way.

The debate has been exaggerated on both sides. The opponents of the bill gave it overkill on the censorship issue. The bill does not present any extensive degree of censorship. The argument regarding lack of legal authority of the Minister of National Revenue, or the abuse of it, has been overdone.

The supporters of the bill have also exaggerated to a great degree. They have greatly overstated the case about the future influx of foreign publications into Canada if the bill is not passed. It is nonsense to say that without this bill our cultural identity would be in danger. It is also nonsense to say that there is a privilege involved which is extensively abused by some publishers. When it is said that this bill really does not propose significant restrictions on anyone, and that it is a minor tax bill, that is an exaggeration.

I think the answer, and the reasonable position, lies somewhere in the middle—where Liberals normally are but from where we have badly shifted with this legislation. The minister and the government have never accepted consideration of any middle-ground position. When I consider the type of mild amendments which were refused by the government—even amendments which would have been useful without detracting to any great degree from the bill—I am obliged to feel that the minister operated from a point of total inflexibility; I might even say bad will. I do not intend to be mean to the minister, but on some subjects no person is more Liberal to the point of probably being libertarian. That is why it is tremendously difficult for me to understand his inflexibility in this instance. I suppose it is always those who shout the loudest for freedom and liberty who are the first to deny them to others.

I will vote against this bill because it is totally contrary to my Liberal principles and my party's principles. It is not easy to vote against the government of which you are a member, but more than ever I am convinced that a government cannot override a person's or a party's principles. I voted against the Petro-Can bill because that was strictly socialist legislation. I am not a socialist and neither is my party. If I had wanted to support socialism, I would have joined the NDP, not the Liberal Party. I will vote against Bill C-58 because it is against my party's principles, and in my view it is a retrograde piece of legislation.

If only the minister and his officials could have found the Liberal middle-ground which would not have totally offended worthy segments of the publishing industry in this country and the principles of the Liberal party. Instead, I am afraid this legislation demonstrates total lack of imagination and I wonder if that lack of imagination is not intended in order to have the effectiveness of the legislation rest upon departmental interpretation rather than on the legislation itself.

This point was totally confirmed when accommodation was found for Reader's Digest. The opposition has contended that there is something shady about this accommodation, and in light of the previous inflexibility there might well be; I do not know. But it would have taken a mind completely isolated from reality not to recognize eventually that Reader's Digest is not a news magazine like the others. What troubles me deeply is that we are continuing a trend in the cultural field to perpetrate all sorts of inequities and injustices, and treating citizens and groups unfairly in the name of a nebulous, broad principle, while at the same time disregarding other equally or more important principles regarding the rights and opportunities of individuals who are the backbone of Liberalism. As a Liberal member of parliament, my affiliation requires that I should support the bill. As a Liberal member in principle and philosophy, my decision is not to support the bill because those principles cannot be compromised except for very serious reasons for the public good, and this bill does not address itself to any such serious problem.

There have been many arguments pro and con during this debate, but just let me discuss some of the meaningful points which argument and exaggerated and artificial verbiage or positions cannot change, and which clearly demonstrate the undesirability of this legislation. The objectors see a great deal of censorship in the bill, and the supporters see none at all. I think everyone will agree that there are at least some substantial restrictions which would be consequences of the bill. If there were not, there would be no need for the bill and its proposal in the House would be a sham. So there are restrictions which will be imposed by this bill. To whom will these restrictions apply? Most, or all, foreign publications cannot comply with the bill and will not, likely, distribute their publications into this country in any event except from outside the country. So who will the bill affect? It will affect Canadian publishers because the law will be on the books for Canadian and foreign publishers alike. Our Canadian publishers will be restricted, and let us not forget that they have no other country to run to.

It may well be that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and his officials will look the other way when a Canadian publication is involved. Indeed, if they can wring out of their interpretation an accommodation for Reader's Digest, they can surely wring one out for a Canadian publisher. However, the fact remains that our Canadian publishers will have to face this legislation always; and it may be they who will be hurt by it, and not foreign publishers.

What about the discriminatory aspect of the legislation? There is no changing that, in spite of all the debate and arguments. Newspapers and broadcasters are not covered by this bill. The news and editorial content of newspapers and broadcasters can be totally similar to a foreign publication and nobody will say a word. Why could we not come up with a bill which at least does not discriminate between competing media elements? Surely no Liberal principle can tolerate this type of discrimination. Another fact which cannot be changed is that no other country has this type of legislation on its statute books. Are we the only government so lacking in confidence in our people and our institutions that we must be protected by such negative legislation? Are we so weak and do we place so little value on our Canadian culture that it is threatened by foreign publications? Are we slowly isolating ourselves onto an island of culture which runs away from the rest of the world? If one is to take this bill seriously, the answer to all these questions would be "Yes." Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree. I think we are badly misjudging the strength of our Canadian culture by measures such as this.

A big case was made with regard to dumping. If the 80 per cent "dissimilar in content" interpretation was not part of the bill, it would allow a continuance of the terrible dumping that now exists. We have seen the arguments stretched to the ridiculous point of comparing publications and written material with manufactured goods, and calling it all dumping. We have heard how terrible is this published dumping of Time and Reader's Digest—except that now we have agreed that the Reader's Digest dumping is not that bad after all: we find that Reader's Digest dumping is acceptable.

If we are looking at dumping in respect of publications, where does it stop? Does the Toronto Star, published in Toronto, dump its papers in Timmins? Is that dumping? Does the New York Times dump its papers in Philadelphia? Is that dumping? It is an argument that can become, and is, really ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. Suppose for a moment that we agree it is dumping—I do not, but let us suppose that for a moment—what, then, is the consequence of this bill? I say that I accept the economic restrictions, the ownership percentage, the director provisions, and so on, but let us zero in on the 80 per cent "dissimilar content" provision. In that respect, what is the consequence of the 80 per cent content provision? The very simple consequence, and the choice we make by having this provision, is whether Canadian owners or American owners will make the profit on this alleged dumping.

Take Time magazine, for instance. If the 80 per cent restriction is applied, Time cannot comply, so they move their existing Canadian facilities back to the United States; they keep dumping, so-called, their magazines in Canada—and who makes the profit? The American owners. So with the 80 per cent restriction, Americans make the profit. On the other hand if Time complies with the 75 per cent Canadian ownership restriction—and they have indicated they will—and if the government were not to impose the 80 per cent restriction, what would happen? Time keeps its Canadian facilities, it can comply with the act and its new, 75 per cent Canadian owners make the profits on the so-called dumping. And make no mistake, we are talking of practically the same material and the same dumping in both cases. Mr. Speaker, without the 80 per cent content restriction we even conserve the editorial staff in Canada and the Canadian section of the magazine.

The issue is very simple. With the 80 per cent content ruling, Americans make the profit; and without it, Canadians make the profit. Surely it does not take a genius to realize what our decision should be on the 80 per cent ruling under those circumstances. The 80 per cent ruling loses us a great deal and gains us nothing in terms of profits and published material. Taking away the rhetoric, the artificial and forced arguments of the debate, we are left with these facts. The people who will be restricted by the legislation are mostly Canadians. The bill introduces discrimination between different competing segments of the media industry. No other country has adopted this kind of negative legislation. Finally, the profits are Canadian without the content restriction in the bill, and they are American with it in the bill.

I have no time for the people who complain about lobbying, Mr. Speaker. I think all they are saying, in a very narrow-minded way is, "Don't bother me with the facts and figures; I want to make a decision in my own way without knowledge of the case". Nor do I have any time for the people who have based their decision on whether or not the profits of the publishers were high, excessive, or whatever. It has always been my experience that those who criticize and profit the most are not necessarily socialists but people who have never invested a cent in the potential of Canada in any way.

We have been told on several occasions that if we would only read the committee proceedings we would be totally illuminated and would understand everything. I have read the entire committee proceedings and I have attended some of the sessions—as an observer, of course. Those proceedings did not change my mind. I made the necessary allowances for the testimony of vested interests for both sides, I tried to separate the substance from the fiction, and I noticed the large percentage of media background people who formed the government's side of the committee; and I do not say this disparagingly, because I have the greatest respect and admiration for my colleagues. However, surely they would accept that their interest in a sense could not be impartial. They are not, after all, Solomon. Under those circumstances, is it not just possible that the committee study on our side was, to a degree, distorted? After reading all the proceedings, Mr. Speaker, I find we are still left with a bill that is contrary to our Liberal principles and which cannot be justified in light of those principles.

The bill, very obviously, was aimed at two publications—and later only one. If it had been aimed at 50 publications, however, it would still have been contrary to my Liberal principles. When you want to help and assist someone or some industry, you do it in a positive way, not by restrictions. If we want to aid Canadian publishers, then we should find a positive way in which to do it. We should not do it at the expense of someone else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy (Timmins): In committee, Mr. Zimmerman made what I consider to be a very telling statement. He said something to the effect that if the government wants to help the Canadian publishing industry, why not give 10 per cent of the CBC budget to those publishers and they would then have more money than they could ever hope to gain from the total of Time and Reader's Digest advertising.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Just 10 per cent of that monstrous, costly $350 million—I retract that, because in the estimates tabled in the House today the CBC budget is up to $415 million—would mean $41 million to the publishers of Canada and it would not even touch the level of expenses of CBC. It just makes me shiver to think of that particular budget, Mr. Speaker. I think Mr. Zimmerman is right. I think we could take half of the CBC budget and put in into other endeavours. Most Canadians would highly applaud such a move.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was quoted in committee, and I think his words bear repetition here. The irony is that the quotation comes from Maclean's magazine of October 20. This is what the Prime Minister said:

> —for me, I am afraid of the word "nationalism"—particularly economic nationalism, though it applies to cultural nationalism too—is very often a vehicle of the ruling classes to transfer wealth to themselves. In the case of culture, you put tariffs on culture because you want the people to have the culture as defined by you. Now you can and would come back and say that you have taken some "nationalistic measures". I'd say that the test of them is always: are they by and large good for the mass of the people, or are they something which is brought in to protect a small elite group? And to me that is the test, whether it be economic, cultural or even military nationalism. I think the duty of the state is to protect its citizens and to promote a greater exercise of their liberty.

How anyone can reconcile that statement with this bill, I will never know. In conformity with the Prime Minister's statement, I shall vote against this bill. To my mind, it does not meet the test: it does not protect our citizens or promote a greater exercise of their liberty.

● (1640)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), lucidly and logically, put forward the position of my party. I have great admiration for the position taken by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. I know that this bill troubles him. Essentially, he is in favour of some kind of positive action to help the Canadian magazine publishing industry. That has been the stance of the hon. member ever since I have known him, and his point of view is known throughout Canada. My colleague is a reasonable man and looks on this bill—as we all do, regardless of our position—as overkill. Clearly, it is overkill. It is counterproductive and will not assist the Canadian publishing industry.

What will it do? It will eliminate the Canadian section of Time magazine and the 45 jobs of Canadians who prepare that Canadian section. But we shall still continue to receive Time if we want to: Time will still be published and sold to the Canadian public on newsstands and will still be sent to subscribers who want to receive the magazine. Advertisers will still advertise in the magazine, but the cost to the advertiser will have to be reduced to offset the detrimental aspects of the bill; and, of course, costs to the subscriber will rise to compensate for that loss. I listened, also, to the constructive speech of the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy). I know that many on the government side share his views, and before the bill is given third reading I hope we shall hear from those hon. members.

I am concerned about what the bill in its present form has done to our legislative process and to the committee system. I might be well to reflect on the progress of this bill. Closure was imposed on second reading. I do not deny the government's right to impose closure after reasonable debate. Then the bill was given clause by clause examination in committee. The discussion was really on one clause, this being mainly a one-clause bill to do with an amendment to the Income Tax Act. Again, in committee, we found ourselves operating under the constraint of closure. We were given barely one month in which to hear witnesses from the publishing industry, the specialized magazine industry and the broadcasting industry. I submit that was not enough time.

During the committee hearings we asked for the principal witnesses appearing for Time and Reader's Digest to be recalled. Insufficient time had been allowed for the examination of these important witnesses and the important briefs they wished to present. But the government imposed its rigid discipline. I have never previously experienced such discipline. The result was that we were denied the right to recall those witnesses.

We examined the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), during the course of those hearings, on the ruling he had made in October on what constitutes a publication under the Income Tax Act that is essentially the same, or substantially different. We examined him on the so-called Cullen rule, the "80 per cent different" rule. Mr. Speaker, had the government stuck with its initial proposition perhaps I could understand the exercise through which we are going today. But it changed the rules.

Mr. Fairweather: They got greedy.

Mr. McGrath: The Minister of National Revenue, and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), on behalf of the government, intimated to Reader's Digest and Time that in no way would the government change this rule. The bill was reported back to the House; then we discovered that an accord had been worked out with Reader's Digest. What do such actions do to our process of committee examination? Yet, Mr. Speaker, I see an hon. member opposite smiling.

Clearly, Liberal members from Quebec, and especially other Liberal members who are troubled about this bill, made their views known in caucus. They persuaded the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of National Revenue, and the Secretary of State, to reach an accord with Reader's Digest—and rightly so. Reader's Digest has been a good corporate citizen of Canada, employing directly 500 of our citizens and indirectly another 1,000, and spending a great deal of money in this country to support Canadian publishing. An accord was reached.

The present bill is aimed essentially at Time magazine. In view of the announcement of the Minister of National Revenue that an accord had been reached with Reader's Digest, is it not logical and reasonable for those who examined the bill in committee to expect it to be sent back to committee in order that committee members may again examine the Minister of National Revenue and discover what brought on his conversion, examine again the Secretary of State and re-examine witnesses from Reader's Digest and Time?

Time made a reasonable request which was reflected in an amendment moved in committee but rejected by the minister. The request was for a one-year extension during which the magazine could return to the planning tables and see if it could achieve a format which would adjust to the Cullen rule. That request was denied. They asked for only one year. They had demonstrated to us that they were willing to live with the Canadian ownership requirement; but, being an international news magazine, it would be impossible for them to work under the constraints of the so-called Cullen rule. Indeed, no news magazine in the world can be expected to function, let alone publish, in that fashion.

As I say, the magazine was denied that right, it was denied that request, even though at a meeting in April last year with the minister's predecessor who is now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), an understanding was arrived at as to the definition of "substantially the same." Time was prepared to live with that definition on the basis of their understanding. It understood that "Canadian content" involved between 50 per cent and 60 per cent. It was prepared to live with that definition and was planning to produce a magazine with considerably more Canadian content, a magazine which would reflect the Canadian perspective on the international coverage of the magazine. I call that real progress. After all, this bill attempts to Canadianize an essentially American publication; it attempts to make it conform to our laws. It wants to make Time a Canadian magazine. I submit the present bill is overkill.

After Time had prepared mock-ups of the new magazine and said it could live with the definition of "Canadian content," suddenly, in October, the roof fell in. The Minister of National Revenue announced that "essentially the same" meant about 80 per cent the same. I say this is overkill. Frankly, I should like to examine the publishers of Reader's Digest and learn how they can live with the new definition. I am glad they can live with it, glad we will continue to receive Reader's Digest in this country, glad that that good corporate citizen of Canada will continue to contribute to this country's publishing industry. But what will happen if a new minister of national revenue appointed tomorrow, decides he does not care for the present definition and wants to change the rules? I would say that is a very uncertain future to put any company in, especially a company that has tried so hard to live within the rules, to be a good corporate citizen and make its stock available to the people of this country. I do not understand the attitude of the government.

A lot has been said about specialized magazines such as MD, Canadian Doctor, and so on. I will not go into that subject. There is no way in which the medical profession in this country can sustain the publication of these specialized magazines which bring to our medical profession ideas from around the world.

Let us talk about what this bill does and what the Cullen rule does to the bill. It changes the bill. This is not the bill that we had on second reading. This is not the agreement we arrived at during committee stage. This is a whole new situation. We recognize and respect the right of the government to make this definition. That is the rule of the Minister of National Revenue and his officials. However, we have a definition of such proportions as to arrive at an accord totally opposite to what we were told in committee. Surely, in light of that situation, we are entitled to go back to committee and examine the Minister of National Revenue and the Secretary of State. Perhaps an accord can be worked out with Time magazine; who knows? We had only a very brief opportunity to examine the publishers of Time magazine, and an equally brief time to examine the publishers of Reader's Digest, the two principals in this bill.

I believe this is bad legislation. What concerns me even more is that it is setting a very bad and very dangerous precedent. Why did the minister not come before us in committee and say he was prepared to work out an understanding with Reader's Digest and Time to see if they could live within his definition of what constitutes "essentially the same"? Such an understanding is not beyond the realm of possibility. We know that now, as a result of the fact that the government finally recognized Reader's Digest as being a unique magazine. As a digest, it is unique; it is without competition. As a digest, it would obviously have to bring in articles from publications all around the world. In recognition of the uniqueness of Reader's Digest, the accord was arrived at.

I submit that Time magazine is also unique, with its substantial, international news gathering capacity which no publication, given the limitations placed upon it by the Canadian market, could afford. No Canadian publication could afford the international news gathering capacity of Time magazine. Yet this magazine, which has tried to meet the provisions of the legislation, has tried to operate within the framework of the new law and was prepared to become 75 per cent owned in Canada and had in fact worked out an understanding with potential purchasers, has suddenly had the rug pulled out from under it.

What we are left with is some kind of backdoor accord as a result of pressure on the minister by his own colleagues which will allow Reader's Digest to continue at least until we get another minister of national revenue. The Canadian edition of Time magazine which we now know will be lost to this country. Perhaps it will not be long before Time magazine ceases to publish in Canada and has its printing work done in the United States, as is the case with Newsweek, U. S. News and World Report and some of the other American news magazines which get into the Canadian market. If that is progress, if that is helping the Canadian publishing industry, I have to be convinced, and I submit that many members of the House still have to be convinced.

We are worried about this bill. We are worried about what it does to parliament. I look at the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) who has a contribution to make with her substantial background in journalism. She has made a contribution to this debate but was denied the right to make that contribution in committee.

Mr. Breau: That is untrue.

Mr. McGrath: That is true. I have it on the hon. member's own word. The only time the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was heard in committee was when I moved a motion and it was passed by a majority of the members. That is true, and the hon. member must accept the word of his colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway. What about the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart)? The hon. member seems to want to know the facts. He was the chairman of the committee for four or five years, and he was denied the right—

Mr. Breau: Madam Speaker, can I ask the hon. member a question? Is the hon. member not aware that any member of the House of Commons, regardless of his party or standing on the committee, is allowed to be heard in committee regardless of whether he has the right to vote?

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the hon. member who just took the floor, the former parliamentary secretary, has been around here long enough to know better. He knows that members of the House who are not members of the standing committee may only be heard after all other members of the committee have been heard, and because we were operating under closure the hon. members could not be heard; there was no time.

Mr. Breau: You are wrong.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was denied the right to be heard, and she stood in her place in this House and said so.

Mr. Breau: You just admitted you were wrong.

Mr. McGrath: I say now that all the arguments in the world would not make you understand, because you are so partisan that you would not understand the facts.

Mrs. Holt: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Before recognizing the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), I must remind hon. members that they are to address the Chair and not individuals on the opposite side.

Mrs. Holt: Madam Speaker, since I have again been brought into this debate on this issue I would like to clarify it. I was occasionally allowed to be heard, if there was time. That was all. I was not allowed to make motions or to vote, which, after all, is the most important part of my role in parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. That is not a point of order but a matter of debate.

Mr. McGrath: I hope, Madam Speaker, that will settle the argument, because I am sure even the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) will have to accept the word of his colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, on the same point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It was not a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I just want to make it clear to the House—and this is common knowledge—that when a member is not on a committee he is entitled to discuss but surely he should not be entitled to move motions when he is not a member of the committee. On that I have to agree with the hon. member.

Mr. McGrath: All I know, Madam Speaker, is that the record will show that the only time the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was heard in a substantive way and allowed to make a contribution was when I moved a motion that she be heard. The government members on the committee abstained. The majority, which happened to be the opposition as a result of the abstention, carried and the hon. member was heard.

I submit to the minister, who is not now in the House, that he consider withdrawing this bill. Give us an opportunity to go back to the committee. Give us an opportunity to recall the representatives of Reader's Digest and Time. Give us an opportunity to examine these important witnesses in the context of the new definition which may make it possible for Time to continue to publish in Canada as before, with some modification. What concerns me most is that we can never again take seriously the government's intentions with regard to the examination of bills before committees. It is a farce; it is a charade; it is an utter waste of time. Members put in many hours of hard work in committee in connection with the bill before us. The sittings were particularly arduous, having regard to the restraint placed on us by closure. We were denied the right to recall a number of witnesses whose evidence would have been most valuable.

As to the radio and television aspect of the debate, I may say I have no brief for the border stations. I believe the time has come for the loopholes in the Income Tax Act to be closed to protect Canadian broadcasting. But if a special case can be made for Reader's Digest, I suggest that a special case can equally be made for KVOS, a station which is unique, a station which voluntarily follows the restrictions imposed by the CRTC, which complies with all the requirements of Canadian law and which operates essentially as a Vancouver station. I believe the House deserves the right to explore further the aspect I have mentioned in the context of the accord which has been entered into with Reader's Digest.

I know the House will have an amendment before it and I am sure this amendment will commend itself to the well-meaning members on the government side who are just as concerned about this issue as I am. I refer especially to the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) who made such an outstanding contribution to this debate. He put forward a constructive amendment at the report stage, but unfortunately it was rejected by his colleagues. I refer, also, to the hon. member for Timmins who has spoken on third reading and who also made an outstanding contribution during the report stage. He is another who saw his amendment rejected; its intention was to save certain special publications such as MD, Canada. I hope our amendment will commend itself to a majority of the House. Perhaps it will not even be necessary. Perhaps there will be another meeting of the caucus of the Liberal party at which the Secretary of State, that immovable force, will be prevailed upon to withdraw this bill with provision that the subject matter be referred back to committee.

I believe we deserve the right to examine the minister on the accord he has entered into with Reader's Digest and question him as to the possibility of reaching some similar accord which would allow Time magazine to continue to publish its Canadian section and, who knows, even to live within the so-called Cullen rule.

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I wanted to take a few moments at the third reading stage of Bill C-58 to put a few remarks on the record. For some months now we have been discussing this bill at the report stage, committee stage and second reading, and I think some of the attempts that have been made to distort what are two fairly straightforward principles are objectionable to a number of members, among whom I include myself.

I think the public has been misled by members of the opposition. I feel that the remarkable distortions that have been made in two fairly straightforward principles should be responded to to some extent. The two fairly straightforward principles, as I see them, are that first, as the O'Leary Commission concluded so many years ago, the Canadian publishing industry cannot succeed so long as it must compete for revenue with branch plant operations of foreign magazines. That principle was established by the O'Leary commission in 1959 or 1960. The second principle is that the tax laws of Canada should be the same for everybody. That is what Bill C-58 is all about. I find it remarkable that it should take two months of the time of the House to deal with these fairly obvious and reasonable principles of government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stollery: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) a few minutes ago referred to «a grubby business». I do not think a man as well known as he is for his fairness should call fairer tax laws and legislation dealing with equitable tax laws a grubby business. I think it is important business which should be done with dispatch, and I am sure there are others here who agree with me. The public, I am sure, if they had listened to the speeches I have listened to—and I am a member of the broadcasting committee which dealt with this bill, I believe it was before Christmas—some of the comments about censorship, and some of the rather circuitous arguments which have been made in opposition to Bill C-58, would be in a state of confusion. I think they have been misled and deceived. I think it is positively shameful that members should take the time of the House to act as lobbyists for a couple of foreign publications and to make statements which simply are not true.

I think it is appropriate to put on record the facts with regard to Reader's Digest. Reader's Digest is a magazine which, theoretically at least, does not employ writers directly. I say «theoretically» because we all know from reading Reader's Digest that occasionally it does hire writers directly. But the principle is that they take articles from other magazines, dilute them, edit them and publish them in a variety of languages in a variety of countries around the world. Reader's Digest maintains a pool of articles which it purchases from many hundreds of magazines in many different countries. When you sell an article to a magazine, as I am sure many members know, on the cheque it says «For first world copyright rights». Reader's Digest buys the other rights, the second rights, the rights to republish that article.

As I say, they do this on a monthly basis. They edit the articles and maintain a large pool of them. The articles are then purchased by the various affiliates of Reader's Digest around the world and there is some form of intramural payment that is an accountancy arrangement between the parent magazine and its subsidiaries. Any author is, of course, very happy to have second publication rights purchased. In fact, an author will consider himself fortunate to be able to get extra money for an article that he was, I am sure, happy to have bought in the first place by the original publication.

When dealing with the very complex question of a digest, a magazine that does not initiate articles of its own, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) said that Reader's Digest in Canada may obtain 20 per cent of its articles from the pool of articles that is maintained by Reader's Digest international. Some of the remaining 80 per cent of the articles used in Reader's Digest may be obtained from the pool of articles maintained by Reader's Digest international because Reader's Digest international controls the rights to articles supplied to most magazines around the world. But if the Canadian Reader's Digest under the 80 per cent rule obtains articles from the pool, it must pay the going commercial rate. This can be as much as $1 per word, and the editing of the article must be done in Canada.

That, Madam Speaker, seems to me to be a reasonable definition of a digest. It deals in what are called third party publications. It is a very complicated concept to understand, and I must confess that when the arrangement was first arrived at and the decision was announced by the minister I had to think about it a little bit. At first you do not realize that you are not dealing with a magazine but with a publication which provides nothing but covers for edited articles from other magazines. It is a sort of classic comic of the magazine industry. You do not read the original article in Reader's Digest; you read an article that has been purchased from somebody else and has been cut down to make it short and snappy, and it is then sold to us by Reader's Digest. As I say, I think the minister made a very reasonable decision, faced with this very complicated problem of dealing with a digest.

Some hon. members have created the impression that a similar arrangement could be made with Time magazine. Time does not buy articles from other magazines or other publications.

Mr. Friesen: I rise on point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Would the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) entertain a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member for Spadina allow a question?

Mr. Stollery: No, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is not allowed.

Mr. Stollery: If the hon. member would like to ask me a question, he can do so when I have finished. In the meantime, I should like to have the time to try to explain to him something that he obviously has not been able to understand, namely, how the minister's decision will work in practice. As I was saying, Time is an original publication which originates in the United States, with the exception that Canadian Time currently carries some four pages that are written in Canada. I think it is fair to say that when Time magazine officials appeared before the committee, I asked them why in the 11 years they have been operating under the threat of some change in our tax legislation they had made no attempt to enlarge the Canadian section. The president of Time Canada replied that there had not been any legislation to force them to do so, so they had not seen any reason for making some effort to try to Canadianize their magazine. Surely if any piece of evidence was damaging to their claim that they needed time to make changes, it is the fact that in 11 years they had made no changes whatsoever; that they had made no attempt to Canadianize the magazine.

This debate has concerned itself with two publications, Reader's Digest and Time, both of which are entirely separate magazines. They have nothing in common except that until now they have been branch plant operations in Canada, based in the United States. I think any attempt to try to confuse these two separate operations is misleading and is based on fallacy. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the idea that we should not have fair and equitable tax legislation in Canada is very difficult to understand. It is simply fantastic to suggest that more time than 11 years is needed to straighten out this inequity. The suggestion simply lacks credibility.

I did not want to take long to put these few remarks on the record, but having spent the last month or two listening to complete fabrications and to uninformed comment, may I thank you, Madam Speaker, for giving me the opportunity of putting what I consider to be the facts on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock rising to ask a question?

Mr. Friesen: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member for Spadina allow a question?

Mr. Stollery: Yes, Madam Speaker.

● (1720)

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I appreciate and thank the hon. member for Spadina for giving us this lengthy explanation as to how the regulations work. I should simply like to ask him how his explanation now is different from his explanation when we were in the committee?

Mr. Stollery: As far as I am concerned, Madam Speaker, we could have finished with this business some time ago, as I do not think the position has changed since we were in the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to extend this debate which has been long enough, but I think it is the duty of members of Parliament to consider Bill C-58 very closely. However, before the House gives this bill third reading and before it is definitively adopted on third reading, I wish once more to express my views on the bill and also on the various events that took place in committee when this legislation was studied, both at the report stage and on third reading.

Madam Speaker, I remember quite well that during the second reading, I said to this House and to this government that I could not understand how it was possible that an act which had been presented in 1965 by this same government, this same political party, could be put again in 1971. In 1965 and 1971, it seemed right to grant some privileges to Canadian advertisers announcing in supposedly American magazines which were published in Canada, and which in some ways could be considered and were then considered as Canadian publications and magazines.

Madam Speaker, during that discussion, I had simply brought to the attention of the government that Canadian publications were defined so that they did not come under the rule established by the department. As a matter of fact, publications owned in a proportion of 75 per cent by Canadians were considered Canadians.

However, there was an exception for periodicals which in 1965 were written in whole or in part in Canada, and that was the case of both magazines mentioned in Bill C-58. At that time, I had simply suggested that the government apply the law as passed in 1965. That seemed to meet the aspirations of Canadians and also satisfy the people running those magazines. Why come back on that question? We were told that it is to allow Canadian advertisers to have the benefits of that act, those exemptions, and at the same time invite Canadians to publish more magazines in Canada that would also be entierely owned by Canadians.

I think that the act of 1965 which was introduced in this House by a member of the Liberal party must have been considered at that time and examined even in the caucus of the Liberal party. There was agreement to introduce that legislation in the House and that it was entirely reasonable at that time, in 1971. So, why that about face in 1976? That is what I am seriously wondering about, Madam Speaker. What occult powers intervened so as to force the hand of the government to introduce an entirely different legislation and be in opposition with the legislation passed in 1965 and 1971? Furthermore, I wonder quite seriously about the fact that in the course of the discussions on Bill C-58, a great deal of representations were made to Canadian parliamentarians of all parties by the leaders of Reader's Digest magazine to urge them to fight this bill because they considered it unfair to them and they should by all possible means oppose its passage.

Madam Speaker, I am surprised that in the last few days, the leaders of that same magazine seem to have changed their attitude without any change being brought to Bill C-58. According to the statement by the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Cullen), they now seem to be satisfied with that legislation and we are now being asked to give it our support and pass it as soon as possible. Madam Speaker, I cannot change my mind as quickly as that. I am a responsible parliamentarian who must consider very carefully all legislation introduced in this House and receive in a very objective way the representations made by people or groups about such or such a legislation. It is our duty to take those into consideration and I do not accept anything unless we are given valid explanations that we should be asked at a certain moment on third reading of this bill to give it our support and accept it as such.

Madam Speaker, I am convinced after listening in this House to the speeches made by members of all parties who express themselves freely, and even on the government side, we saw a truly serious position being taken that goes against passage of this bill. Madam Speaker, I said: or the government side. I may not have expressed myself clearly, because power does not always mean majority. The Liberal party may have a majority in the House but that does not necessarily mean that they are in power, because I have often felt that the real power was in the hands of persons outside this House, with the result that stands are sometimes taken which are not always in accordance with true ministerial responsibility, and the real responsibility that power entails, from a strictly democratic point of view.

So, Madam Speaker, for all those reasons, I seriously believe that it is my duty to oppose passage of this bill. That is why, when the vote is called, I shall adopt a very clear stand, with no bitterness towards anyone, but as a free and responsible member. I must oppose passage of this bill, because it runs counter to other legislation passed in 1965 and 1971, which seemed excellent then and if it was good then, it still is today. I shall therefore vote against Bill C-58 on third reading.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this third reading debate somewhat perplexed by some of the statements that have been made this afternoon. Since the last debate we have had the benefit of some correspondence from the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), and the reply to that correspondence from Time Canada. Also, an interesting article has appeared in "Citizen Forum" in today's issue of the Ottawa Citizen in which some interesting questions are asked about the debate that is going on at present.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) tutor us on the difference between a magazine and a digest. I suppose we should all be grateful for his attempt to elucidate that rather fine point, except that most of us understood it clearly many weeks ago. Apparently the only two members who did not clearly understand it are the Secretary of State and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen).

One wondered, when listening to the hon. member for Spadina, why somewhere along the line some months ago, or a year ago, he had not discreetly tugged the sleeve of the Secretary of State and given him the explanation that he has given us this afternoon, because I am sure many people wondered why the two publications have been lumped together so long. The hon. member said there was only one similiarity between them, but he missed the real similiarity between them, and that is simply the fact that they have been lumped together in this piece of legislation from the beginning. That is what has made Reader's Digest and Time Canada seem to be the same thing in the minds of some people.

The author of the article in "Citizen Forum" is Mr. Horwood who says that there is an absurdity in all this. He writes:

> The absurdity is obvious enough; it becomes painfully apparent when government must resort to measuring these pomposities in percentages; 75 per cent Canadian ownership, to fortify our national pride; 80 per cent non-foreign content, to protect our Canadian culture. They even argue about such puerile yardsticks. Perhaps 50 per cent would be enough. Well, how about 66 2/3 per cent? No, let's settle for 80 per cent.

We find the same argument carried forth in the letter from the minister addressed to Time magazine, when he wrote with a pomposity that has not been heard for some time. One suspects he probably used a quill pen and black ink, and that what he wrote was written as a present to posterity rather like Lord Chesterfield's letter to his son, something one suspects was designed to live forever in the annals of Canadian letter writing, something perhaps related to a recent bill which safeguarded Canadian treasures. One almost expects to see a price tag of $1,000 on the original of this letter already so that it will not leave the country in some auction of great Canadian art. It is full of the same sort of simple definition that has been provided for us by the hon. member for Spadina.

First the minister confirmed that Time Canada has no grounds for objecting to Bill C-58. Anyone who is based outside of this country knows that he has no grounds for objecting to Canadian legislation in the sense that the powers of this sovereign land are sovereign still and can be used, no matter how foolishly, how ill devised, and how badly written is the legislation.

No matter how many abrupt shifts in policy have to take place, there is still a sovereignty there, and power on the government side is still there. Certainly the public has come to realize this and members on the government side have come to realize it in the backbench revolt which led to the sudden shift of policy with regard to the position of Reader's Digest vis-à-vis that of Time magazine. That was transparently evident to the Canadian public in their response to the appeal from Reader's Digest compared to the response from Time magazine. We did not need a lecture from the hon. member for Spadina this afternoon to teach us that, nor do the Canadian public need it because they have known it for a long time.

The minister writes a sentence which, because of its brevity, is obviously one that is supposed to live forever. He states: "What Time Canada is fighting for is money, not principle." I suppose there is a balance and a brevity there that would rate something for its literary value, but nevertheless it is not just Time magazine that has been concerned about the principle. A good many voices have been raised in this country by independant Canadians, by independent Canadian publications, and by authors who have written that they too are concerned about the principle and they too are concerned about the measure of control that this bill will give to the government over publishing in Canada. They too are concerned that the 80 per cent figure is not in the bill itself and that it lies at the whim of the government and the minister responsible any time in the future. Those are matters of principle and matters of concern. They are very real issues that we must consider. I also join in the call to have the bill returned to the committee.

I agree with the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that it is a good thing that Reader's Digest will continue to publish in this country. I note that there are thousands and thousands of Canadians who wrote letters by hand to members, sometimes painfully with aged and arthritic fingers, in which they told me that they wrote few letters but they wanted to write to tell me they love the size of Reader's Digest because they can hold it in their hands, something they have difficulty managing with other publications. They gave intimate details of their own situations. I know they are delighted that that magazine will continue to publish in this country. The opposition, with some help from some courageous backbenchers opposite, has scored a victory which will be recognized as such throughout Canada.

But that is not the point. The point is that we need to know on what basis the victory was won and what arrangement was made. I should think that the hon. member for Spadina, with his knowledge of what constitutes a digest, would be just as curious, as a member of the committee, to hear that explanation as he was eager to give us the definition that he provided this afternoon.

There is a point that is basic to all of this, that is, that the Canadian reader is not a masochist; the reader who subscribes to publications knows what he or she wants to read. If he does not find it within Canadian publications, he will look elsewhere for it.

● (1740)

While people might occasionally accept an article which will upset and disturb them, they do not want a steady diet which is upsetting, disturbing, unpleasant, and not worth the price of the subscription. That they will not accept, and in recent times that has been provided by Canadian publications.

We heard a fair amount about lobbies this afternoon from hon. members opposite. Another example of a lobby just arrived on the desks of hon. members. I am sure hon. members received the same copy of a publication called Owl with the announcement that it is a new Canadian magazine for children. There are several delightful things about it, but the important thing is the letter which came along with it. It says:

> We think it's an example of the sort of new magazine ventures we'll see a lot more of in this country when the proposed Time-Digest legislation is enacted.
> The benefits to existing Canadian magazines of abolishing the Time-Digest tax privileges will be significant.

It goes on to point out how detrimental the 1965 legislation was to foreign based publications, with the exception of Time and Reader's Digest. It claims that that legislation led directly to the creation of the magazine Miss Chatelaine of Canada. It finally says:

> We predict first-class, vigorous, new magazine activity all over Canada when the legislation is passed. Please vote yes.

That is a very obvious lobby of the members of this House with regard to Bill C-58. When one picks up the publication which accompanies the letter and riffles through it, there is not an advertisement in the entire magazine. There is a subscription rate, but no advertising, so we realize something is being offered. However, if we read the fine print at the bottom of the letter we see the publishers are the publishers of Key to Toronto and Toronto Life, and they sent the whole thing to us.

I think that tells something to the Canadian public who wrote to members of parliament, and certainly to us as members from western Canada something of which we are already aware, and that is that if there is any money which is supposed to be returned to Canada, it is supposed to go to Toronto. It is intended to go to that narrow, limited and self-centred publishing world which is situated in the heart of Toronto and which produces slick publications like Toronto Life with the advertising which it carries.

We know that far too many of what are called Canadian publications are really only Toronto publications and offer nothing to the rest of Canada except scorn. I was attempting to point that out the other evening when I ran out of time, and I will not repeat the argument now, but I think it is basic that if Canadian publications publish for a very narrow and limited audience, then they will not ever be able to attract the advertising which depends on a large readership. That is the basic issue, and that is the challenge to Canadian publications.

If anything, I suspect that the passage of Bill C-58 will limit the role of Canadian publishing in this country and encourage the type of publication which is designed for a fast overturn in large urban conglomerations and which will not provide the quality of reading material the people who wrote in about Reader's Digest want and are willing to pay for if it comes to them regularly. People who subscribe to magazines are very loyal, and they like to give them as gifts. But who wants to send a gift to someone of a magazine which uses the next 12 issues to insult, frustrate, and infuriate to the point where the subscription is cancelled or is simply allowed to lapse at the end of the year? That has been the fate of much Canadian publishing.

I urge that Bill C-58 be returned to the committee because I do not think it should be pushed through the House. I expect closure will be used if it is not returned to committee and an explanation will not be provided to us about what enabled Reader's Digest to comply. We know what prevents Time magazine from complying with the legislation. I think possibly the explanation lies in the remarks made by the hon. member for Spadina. He talked about the differences between a digest and a magazine, and I suspect that it is in that regard that a way has been found. Because of the different nature of the two publications it is easier for one.

Reader's Digest should be praised because it went much further to make itself more truly Canadian when it had the opportunity. The task was easier for it. However, that is not quite enough. I join in the general rejoicing that Reader's Digest will still be available in its Canadian format and in its French version, which also would have been lost to this country which has two official languages. However, I also join in urging that this bill be sent back to committee so that we can find out some of the facts about this important case, and so that the government will have time either to amend the bill or to make definite what the plan is so that publishers in Canada will know what they will be up against in the years ahead. That is imperative.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Madam Speaker, it is surprising that this House finds it necessary to have such a long debate on this question as I think that its objectives serve entirely the actual interest of our country and that a few days of debate would have been enough. In no other country in the world a measure serving so well the national interest would have been fought so fiercely. In a normal country where people really have the interest of their country at heart a consensus on such an issue would have been very easy. Madam Speaker, beyond the immediate implications of Bill C-58 I think that this debate reveals the mentality of a colonized country and the lack of desire to live as an autonomous community in this country. I am afraid this country does not have exactly the spirit it should have. I think that some people would prefer our country to be nothing more than a poor replica of our southern neighbour.

I do not think it is normal for Canadians to accept to see in the Canadian reality nothing more than the international reality through the distorting prism of news media which are controlled by foreign interests and in this particular case by American interests. Madam Speaker, there are some signs which worry me very much and which demonstrate very well the spirit that I greatly deplore.

I cannot understand, for instance, how the mayor of the third largest centre in Canada can declare, apparently for electoral and political reasons, that his fellow citizens and himself would rather watch American television than allow into his city not only French television, but Canadian television, French or English. If our country had a soul, if our people really wished to live as a community in this country there would be pressing demands from all parts of Canada to release this government from its moral undertaking regarding the Olympic Games deficit in Montreal.

We think that the others deserve our praise. For instance, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) appealed to the public the other day on television and the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) and maybe some others consider that it is a Canadian event. In any case, I wish to speak particularly about the essence of the bill now before this House.

A moment ago, I heard opposition members say that we should withhold this legislation, send it back to committee and wait for one or two years. Parliament has been concerned with this matter since 1922. In 1922, the Magazine Publishers' Association asked for protection measures to ensure the development of a Canadian periodical industry.

The problem became increasingly serious so that in 1955, Time and Reader's Digest syphoned off one third of advertising revenues from the Canadian periodical industry. That is why the Saint-Laurent administration, a Liberal one, imposed in 1956 a 20 per cent tax on advertising published in Canadian issues of foreign-based publications.

What is surprising, Madam Speaker, is that in 1958 the Conservative government which had been elected on the philosophy that Canada was too much oriented towards the United States, that we should look more to our mother country, Britain, and diversify our relationship, it is surprising that this very government has removed a tax that was brought forward two years before by a Liberal government.

All this reflects the kind of opportunistic attitude of the official opposition which explains for a large part why Canadians are never prepared to trust that party when they are called upon to vote during a general election.

In May 1961, the O'Leary Commission submitted its report. I hear the exclamation of a member of the official opposition. It was a commission composed of qualified, distinguished, non-partisan Canadians who really were on top of the job, who did not spend just a few hours, a few days, to the consideration of this matter but who studied it for over a year, working in task forces. What were the findings of the O'Leary Commission?

Domestic advertising expenses must support a nation's own broadcasting facilities. He recommended that no taxpayer be allowed to deduct for income tax purposes the cost of advertisements directed to the Canadian public inserted in foreign periodicals, wherever they may be printed.

Unfortunately in 1965, that recommendation received partial implementation only with Time magazine and Reader's Digest being exempted. I do not wish to insist unduly on the lobby that did a good job and finally prevailed upon the government to back down. Still that backdown was unfortunate, because if they had gone all the way we would now have a prosperous publishing industry in Canada. In this respect, I would like to quote from the Davey Committee report:

We deeply regret that Time and Reader's Digest were exempted from the O'Leary legislation. It was a bad decision... Frankly we marvel that any Canadian mass consumer magazines have survived in such a forbidding climate. It is a tribute to their skill—and to the fact that Canadians obviously want Canadian magazines. We are certain that, if section 12A (now 19) had been fully applied ten years ago, there would be more Canadian magazines today.

[Translation]

The Senate Davey Committee simply recommended abolishment of privileges granted to Time and Reader's Digest, which in the views of the committee were a menace to the very existence of Canadian publications.

I would quote once more from the O'Leary report:

It is clear that Canadian periodicals are denied competition on an equitable basis with foreign publications publishing so-called "Canadian" editions.

Basically, what we are faced with is a problem of an economic nature. By that I mean that Canadian publications are confronted with unfair competition. This is very easily explained. Time Canada, for example, gets 85 per cent of its material from the American parent company, and Reader's Digest two thirds. They get them at much lower cost than that paid by Canadian magazines for material of the same quality and nature.

Basically, costs have already been written off in the United States; it is therefore easy to offer good terms to Canadian magazines, that is the Canadian edition of Canadian periodicals.

In 1974, the advertising income of the Canadian magazine industry amounted to $39 million. Of that $19 million, that is 48 per cent, were paid Time and Reader's Digest while in 1955, 19 years earlier, their share had amounted to only 33 per cent, which goes to prove the increasing importance of those two publications.

Between 1958 and 1974, Time's income from publicity increased by 819 per cent, that being an average yearly increase of 55 per cent, while that of Reader's Digest went up by 413 per cent representing an annual increase of 27 per cent; on the other hand, that of Canadian periodicals increased by 185 per cent only, giving an annual average increase of 12 per cent.

Madam Speaker, there was obviously a lobby because, things having worked out in 1965, it was hoped they would again. In this regard, I want to congratulate the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) who did not hesitate to take a stand, yet showed some willingness to be flexible, feeling that, to the extent where a magazine like Reader's Digest was truly willing to become a good corporate citizen, as we say, concessions should be made.

I want to close with a few words on censorship. The government has been accused of exercising censorship. What is censorship, according to Oxford.

To censure is to forbid publication. Does this mean that the Reader's Digest and Time Canada will no longer be admitted in this country? Absolutely not. If the suppression of the tax privileges of a periodical meant censure, this would mean that many foreign periodicals, like the Nouvel Observateur and the French magazine Express have been submitted to the censure of the Canadian government since 1965.

I would like to say a lot more on this matter, but I see that it is nearly six o'clock. I will close by saying that a while ago there was mention of a reversal. For my part, I am very surprised to see that some people are motivated only by opportunism. On January 23, 1975, the official spokesman for the opposition on this issue, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) said the following:

Mr. Speaker, in responding to the statement just made I would first like to say, on behalf of the official opposition, that we are pleased the government has clarified this matter at long last. We believe that the move to eliminate the income tax advantage shared mainly by two magazines, Time and Reader's Digest, is a good one.

Yet, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) spoke about a government reversal. What did the representative of the Social Credit Party, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), say at that time? He said the following:

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Social Credit Party of Canada, I should like to thank the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) for his statement which has finally given birth . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, before we say that it is six o'clock, I am wondering—

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, before we call it six o'clock I wonder if the House would consent to revert to routine proceedings so that I might seek the unanimous consent of the House to make questions Nos. 3,577, 3,778 and 3,654 orders for returns. If so I would deposit these returns immediately, Madam Speaker.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES CONTRACTS

Question No. 3,577—Mr. Beatty:

1. With reference to the contracts described in the twenty-eight Research and Development bulletins published up to and including the July 1975 issue let by the Department of Supply and Services, by department (a) what is the total value of the contracts (b) how many were publicly advertised prior to being awarded (c) what were their numbers and descriptions (d) what was their total value?

2. Of the contracts that were advertised before being awarded (a) how many had more than one bid submitted (b) what were their numbers and descriptions (c) what was their total value?

3. Of the contracts for which more than one bid was submitted (a) which contracts were awarded to anyone other than the lowest bidder (b) in each case (i) what were the bids submitted (ii) by whom (iii) for what reason was the contract not awarded to the lowest bidder?

4. Of the persons or organizations awarded contracts (a) what are the names of any who were previous employees of the government (b) on what dates and for whom did they work (c) what previous work have they done on contract for the government (d) at what cost to the taxpayer were the contracts let?

5. What are the names of contractors or principal investigators who have been awarded more than one contract and, in each case, what were the (a) numbers (b) descriptions (c) values (d) client departments?

Return tabled.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 3,654—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since April 20, 1968, what amount of public funds was spent on furniture, equipment, fixtures, carpets, etc. in each department for (a) the department office of the Minister (b) the Parliamentary office of the Minister?

2. What is the total expenditure for this period for all departments?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—CONSTITUENCY OF CHAMPLAIN

Question No. 3,778—Mr. Matte:

1. Since 1970, has the Department of Public Works allocated money for works in the Constituency of Champlain and, if so, how much?

2. In each case, what was (a) the kind of work done (b) the amount granted (c) the year (i) the works began (ii) the works were completed?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): This can be done only if the hon. parliamentary secretary gives the Chair the assurance that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who was opposed to this motion this afternoon, has given his agreement. Is there unanimous consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, may I ask if this has been cleared with the official opposition, since one of their members objected earlier today?

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, there have been consultations through the usual channels with the opposition, and I am advised that this is agreeable to them.

Mr. McKinley: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It is so ordered.

[Translation]

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening, when the House will proceed with a motion moved under the provisions of Standing Order 26 by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

At 6:02 the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

IRVING PULP AND PAPER—CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS REACTION TO DECISION OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD ADMINISTRATOR

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Leave having been granted to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely "the revelation today of the announced intention by the executive of the Canadian Labour Congress representing almost 2 million Canadian Workers to withdraw from all areas of co-operation with the federal government", accordingly the motion is as follows: Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Madam Speaker, for sometime now the New Democratic Party has made its opposition clearly known to the kind of anti-inflation program that the government has brought before the people of Canada. We made that known last Thanksgiving when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went on television and announced his intentions. We followed that up by clear opposition to the bill which was introduced subsequent to that time in the House of Commons. There has been no question about our general opposition to the kind of program that the government has presented to deal with inflation.

Nothwithstanding our opposition to the general program, that is not the issue before the House tonight. The principal concern of tonight's debate is the absence, in the law that has been passed by this House, of the fundamental right of all Canadians to appeal judicial or quasi-judicial decisions which affect them. That is the issue before us and that is the one to which I hope spokesmen for all parties, particularly spokesmen for the government, will address themselves.

On January 28 in the House for the first time in a question I indicated, on belhalf of my party, concrete reasons to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald for believing the appeal procedure set down under this law was, to put it bluntly, a farce. The minister at that time dismissed the question. He suggested that I and one of my colleagues should reread the law. I read the law with considerable care before I raised the issue then. I would like to suggest to the minister, and I wish he were here, that he read his own law and, in addition that he try to comprehend more fully the basic anti-democratic component that is deeply imbedded within it, and take steps to change it forthwith.

The reason for this issue coming glaringly to the surface in the last few days has, of course, been the Irving Pulp and Paper case, the outcome of which has been the fining of the company in the amount of $125,000. Let me briefly outline the chronology of events in this particular case because they illuminate the general situation in a clear fashion.

Last November 30, following serious negotiations between the company and its employees, an agreement was reached through the normal collective bargaining process on what the terms of employment should be. The company then proceeded to implement this agreement. It considered that it did so precisely within the framework of the law of Canada. In particular it paid what it regarded as scrupulous attention to the historical relationship clause in the white paper which preceded the law. It paid, as I said, its workers according to its honest interpretation of the law.

On December 18 the Anti-Inflation Board decided that the company had exceeded the guidelines. However, still acting from within its own perceived framework of the law, the company decided to continue to pay its workers on the basis of the agreed upon settlement with the workers.

On January 23, urged I might add by both the union and Mr. Irving, the Anti-Inflation Board referred the case to the administrator. As soon as the board referred the case, Mr. Irving, acting I submit entirely appropriately, began paying his workers within the framework of what was deemed to be appropriate by the Anti-Inflation Board, putting the amount of money in excess of that in escrow to be left there depending on the outcome of the appeal procedure.

On Friday the minister announced agreement with the board's interpretation of the law and Mr. Irving was fined $125,000. As matters now stand, the agreement originally reached by collective bargaining is in a shambles. Mr. Irving, a law-abiding man, finds he has become unintentionally a lawbreaker, and the pulp and paper workers who are directly affected have no right to appeal.

I believe that in this case Mr. Irving was correct in his judgment—that he was right in thinking the original contract did come within the framework of the anti-inflation guidelines. That is a matter of opinion. My colleagues and I think the case for the settlement agreed upon was reasonably made, especially in view of the historical relationship between wages paid to pulp and paper workers and to the outside workers. A point of greater significance at the moment is this: this case is a graphic illustration of the injustices which are built into the act and which will remain a permanent part of the law of Canada if the act is not changed. The law makes a criminal of an employer and leaves his employees without recourse to appeal in the face of purely administrative decision-making. Could anything more seriously violate the democratic tradition of the due process of law as it pertains to appeal procedures?

The company and the paper workers have been unfairly dealt with in this particular instance but I believe this is simply the beginning of a virtual flood of injustices affecting the working people, cases which will never reach the level of the appeal procedures as the Irving case has done. For reasons I will indicate soon most of them will go unnoticed unless we change the law.

Is it any wonder that, according to news reports in today's papers, the executive committee of the Canadian Labour Congress should contemplate recommending that the labour movement throughout Canada withhold co-operation in all joint projects with the federal government? Is it any wonder that responsible leaders of the trade union movement, perceiving such a profound injustice and perceiving that the federal government is taking no steps to change the law, should have decided that no form of co-operation with the government is acceptable to them? It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, because they, more than any other leadership group in our society, have an obligation to the working people of the country both within and outside the trade union movement.

I want to say something about the appeal procedure as it presently exists. At the moment no decision of the Anti-Inflation Board on wages or salaries can be appealed until it has been dealt with by the administrator. But how does a matter get to the administrator? Can the union refer it? No. Can the company refer it? No. It gets to the administrator only if the board itself refers it to him, or if the cabinet does so.

However, I ask this question: when is it likely that either the cabinet or the board would make a referral to the administrator? Only, I suggest, in the highly improbable event of an employer paying more than the board deems proper. It is for this reason that the Irving case, unjust as it is, is not likely to be typical of the cases which come before the board. Most of the decisions which adversely affect working people will never get as far as the administrator. Yet it is when a case gets to the administrator, and only then, that it is possible to launch an appeal.

I turn now to another crucial step. Who can launch an appeal after the administrator gets hold of the case? The answer according to section 30 is that only a person against whom the administrator has made a ruling can do so. What this means in plain English is that only a company can launch an appeal. As I suggested last month when I first raised this issue with the Minister of Finance, the government never intended, in our view, that working Canadians should have any right of appeal under this legislation.

Mr. Blais: Read section 30. Read section 24.

Mr. Broadbent: You will have your chance to speak later. It is only because we have the very exceptional and, I should add, the very commendable situation of an employer, in this case Mr. Irving, paying more than the board thought appropriate that the case got to the administrator in the first place.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Broadbent: The Liberals over there in their usual anti-democratic, anti-working person fashion are laughing themselves silly over this. I would ask the hon. member who is giggling most to go down to Saint John any day this week and talk to the paper workers who have been dealt with in this way.

This afternoon in the House, in reply to questions by myself, the Prime Minister acknowledged that the facts as I have outlined them with regard to the appeal procedure are beyond dispute. However, we failed completely to understand the undemocratic nature of the arrangement. He agreed with me that under the law as it now stands it is only the employer who has the right to appeal. It is important to notice his reason for approving the present procedure. He indicated that if the administrator found that the employer was paying in excess of the amount permitted by the guidelines it would be he, and not his workers, who violated the law. The Prime Minister then went on to say that as a result no worker or group of workers whose pay was reduced as a result of the administrative decision could claim that an injustice had been done against them. Surely this is legalistic nonsense. What the Prime Minister has done is to define justice in terms of the existing law.

The whole point of our opposition to the law—and our position is shared by spokesmen concerned with civil liberties outside the House as well as by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in the House of Commons—is that the law as it exists is an unjust one and should be changed. For the Prime Minister to define justice in terms of the provisions of the existing law is to indulge in mere sophistry, and surely he knows it.

Surely it is wrong to say that workers who believe that their settlement comes within the framework of the law have no grievance, when a case that goes against their financial interests can be appealed only by their employer. That is what the Prime Minister said in the House of Commons this afternoon. I say to the Liberal backbenchers who are objecting that they should read the record and see what their Prime Minister has been saying. I ask, could anything be more unjust? Are working Canadians to lose all of their basic economic rights? Are they going to be denied, within the context of this law, the general right that all Canadians have taken for granted, which is the right to appeal administrative decision-making through due process? In effect the Prime Minister dismissed that question this afternoon.

We urge the government in the most serious way to bring forth amendments at the earliest possible time to ensure that the democratic right of appeal of all working Canadians be restored under this law. In our view such amendments should take the following form. First of all, they should enable anyone directly affected by a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board—I am thinking of employees and employers here—to appeal directly to some appeal body following the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board. If there is no appeal within a certain prescribed number of days then it would be assumed that the decision is accepted by all parties and that would be the law.

The administrator should have the authority, in our view, to levy fines on employers or employees only after the appeals tribunal has considered an appeal, and certainly not before. Only some such procedure would permit, in our view, Canadian workers, 90 per cent of the people of our land, to have the democratic right of appeal, and also, I might add, put corporations in our country in a fairer position. The injustices that are embedded in the law concerning this farce of an appeal procedure must be corrected.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I want to say something very briefly about the history of the working people of this country. It has been largely since the first world war, resulting from a series of strikes, difficulties, confrontations, in cities as far apart and diverse as Winnipeg and St. John's, Newfoundland, as Windsor and Oshawa, that working people got the collective right to have some minimal say in our industrial system. It has been a very real struggle for a great number of highly dedicated men and women.

In raising this particular issue the New Democratic Party sees it as being fundamentally connected with the history of democratic rights of working people. We see this law that is now on the books, objectionable as it is in its general prescriptions for dealing with inflation, as profoundly unacceptable in its measures for dealing with the right of appeal precisely because they deny that right of appeal.

Having spoken to a number of workers on the scene in New Brunswick and in the city of Ottawa in the last few days, I can now understand more clearly why they have become so profoundly opposed to the whole anti-inflation program. They perceive in this program, clearly illustrated in the complete denial of their rights to appeal, a serious and deep anti-labour attitude.

I submit that the only way that the government has the slightest hope of getting any kind of compliance with its program from the working people in the weeks and months ahead is to make the appropriate change. If it does not make this change but leaves the law in its highly arbitrary and undemocratic state, then I predict—I am not encouraging this and I do not want anyone to suggest I am—that the kind of opposition that we have seen in the last few days will be a mere pittance. It will grow, and grow with considerable depth right across the country. In concluding, I urge that the government come to its senses and make the appropriate changes.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I listened with some attentiveness to what the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said about the Anti-Inflation Board and the question of appeal. I think the matter is clearly on record. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said today that, as he perceived the application of the act, the Anti-Inflation Board would have a jawboning function. It would advise the parties on what it felt was reasonable in the circumstances with respect to a settlement, and then if the parties did not want to adhere to that advice, went off on their own and made an agreement contrary to that advice, the board could refer the matter to the administrator and he would make the ultimate decision in terms of enforcement.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): And impose penalties for contravention.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): And impose penalties for contravention. The board would refer if its advice were not taken. That provision is in the act, and it was in the legislation when it was brought into parliament, so presumably we can study it in that context. The Prime Minister stated that if, as a result of these representations, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) considers these provisions should be in the act, he will bring them to cabinet and we will make a decision as to whether improvements in the procedure can be made. So we are open to persuasion, and this was quite clearly stated in the House today by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Rodriguez: What else could he say?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If hon. members would check Hansard they would see that is pretty well precisely what the Prime Minister said. I do not think there can be any argument about that.

I think the legislation is fair in the circumstances, but if it can be improved in terms of equity we are open to persuasion. The point I should like to emphasize is this, and it was raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. The position of the CLC at the very outset when this policy was first announced was, in a sense, negative. They condemned the policy in all its aspects. Having condemned it completely and said that they would fight it, they then went out on a limb, so to speak. I suppose they felt that it would be inconsistent if they adopted the approach of suggesting amendments or improvements to the act.

I have a very high regard for the Canadian Labour Congress and what it has contributed to this country. I think most of the leaders will attest to that fact, and I do not have to protest my feelings about it to any hon. member. What I am saying is that the CLC having said that it is not pleased with the legislation, having indicated to its membership that it will use all lawful means to combat it and prevent its passage, and having tried to persuade members of the House, and so on, not to give consent to this legislation, might have made a constructive posture by examining the legislation and accepting the invitation of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and this government to come up with needed improvements before the legislation was passed by the House. The CLC did not do this. I feel it missed a very real opportunity to be of service not only to the country but to its membership. I repeat that these were invitations not only by myself but by the Prime Minister, and we could not get any concrete suggestions from any students of this legislation in the CLC regarding its improvement.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): You had scores of amendments in the committee and you did not accept any of them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Perhaps hon. members would listen, keep their minds open and their mouths shut for a moment and hear what I am saying. I am not talking about individual members of parliament or amendments they have suggested. I am talking about an invitation to the CLC as the representatives of labour in this country to make some concrete suggestions in respect of improvements.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Are you blaming them for your bad law?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Wait a minute. This is an over simplified approach by the leader of the NDP who is saying that if we invite people to make amendments or suggest improvements to our legislation, somehow we are acknowledging that we are authors of bad law, yet I suppose if we never asked for any suggestion of improvement you would call us arrogant. You cannot have it both ways.

The fact of the matter is, this was very serious legislation in an attempt to cope with inflation. We put out an invitation that was sincerely advanced in respect of suggestions for needed improvements, and they were not forthcoming. However, that is water over the dam. That opportunity has been passed over by the Canadian Labour Congress in terms of a constructive contribution. This, conceivably, could have been one of the areas in respect of which the legitimate voice of labour in this country could have been heard, as well as in respect of other aspects of the legislation. I would think there is still an opportunity.

I make this appeal in the House tonight. There is still an opportunity, despite the position of the Canadian Labour Congress—and we have all heard that amply stated on several occasions—for the CLC to come forward and make representations to this government. I believe it is constructive on the part of the government to keep the channels of communication open with the labour movement in this country, and I invite them to make representations in respect of where needed improvements should be made. The government is willing to listen, and where they have constructive suggestions we are prepared seriously to entertain them. That invitation is renewed to the labour movement.

Mr. Broadbent: I made that suggestion three weeks ago.

An hon. Member: What happened to collective bargaining?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): You talk about collective bargaining. It has always been the policy of this government to maintain the institution of free collective bargaining, resisting all demands of some of the extremists who oversimplify in this House with regard to abolishing the right to strike. This is well known to members of the labour movement who watch the proceedings of this House, and it is certainly well known to hon. members of the NDP. This has been the position of the government. At the same time, we felt that in order to cope successfully with the inflationary situation we should implement a system of selective controls for a temporary period of time. Of course, that is an interference, for a temporary period, with the free collective bargaining system.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is the first admission you have ever made. Your ministers have denied it and your Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has denied it.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Nonsense; and that acknowledgement of abysmal ignorance on the hon. member's part is really appalling.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It has been acknowledged by many government spokesmen that a selective control system is a temporary interference with, but not a denial of, free collective bargaining.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It is the obliteration of it.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Nonsense; it is not an obliteration. There are all sorts of collective agreements being reached. The hon. member can go into my department and examine the records of them. There are negotiations going on all the time, right across this country. The hon. member can talk to the mediators and conciliators of all the provincial departments of labour and find out about the settlements being arrived at within the guidelines through free collective bargaining every day.

An hon. Member: We don't have to talk to them. We negotiate with you.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Even if it were not for the guidelines there would be situations in this country where even the unions would agree that, because of profitability or productivity, a 12 per cent settlement would not be warranted or possible, and perhaps a 10 per cent, an 8 per cent or even a 7 per cent settlement would be appropriate. At any rate, what I am saying is that it is perfectly obvious that there are all sorts of situations in this country where, because of certain conditions, settlements even at the ceiling of the guidelines are not feasible or possible. Bona fide unions which are totally committed to get the best they can for their memberships must be prepared to recognize the situation and settle for less. Hon. members say it is a complete denial of collective bargaining, but it is not.

An hon. Member: It is.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is not a complete denial of collective bargaining in terms of intellectual honesty.

An hon. Member: Oh, come off it.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is certainly an interference with the collective bargaining system; there is no question about that.

An hon. Member: It is destruction.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It would not make any sense, in terms of a control program, if it were not an interference for this temporary period of time. Obviously, the government did not lightly implement a system that interfered for a temporary period with the collective bargaining system.

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: The heavy hand, again.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): We were convinced then, and we are convinced now—make no mistake about it—that a significant majority of Canadians are behind this program and are supporting it.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, there are a lot of people over there with their mouths wide open and their ears closed. I would think they are pretty insensitive to the feelings that are prevalent in this country in terms of concern about inflation, even in their own ridings. They know very well that the Canadian people are behind this program.

An hon. Member: Why don't you start with prices; that is inflation.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It seems to me that if the assumption is correct that the majority of Canadian people are behind this program as a means successfully to cope with inflation, then what we need is co-operation on the part of everyone involved to make sure it works and works equitably. We have always been asking for that type of co-operation and we now ask for it on the part of the members of this House. Certainly we ask for it from members of the NDP.

Hon. members have asked about prices and profits. I think the position of the board is quite solid in this regard. What has happened here is that the board has intervened in many cases. Where the board has intervened, the companies have not proceeded with what may have been their intended price increases. You cannot very well put a man on an indictment list for having backed off from committing a crime or for not having committed one in the first place. Through the procedures of the board and the accounting procedures that are necessary he has decided not to go ahead with what might have been an intended price increase. This is a very difficult thing to document.

● (2040)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: The first true thing you have said tonight.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am not trying to mislead anybody but I do feel that there has been a significant impact. I should like to point out to some skeptics in the NDP just what has happened of recent date. This dates back to a week ago and it reads:

> The latest consumer price index confirms that the underlying rate of inflation has diminished to about seven per cent on an annual basis. Statistics Canada reported yesterday that the latest three-month rate of inflation, on an annual basis, is 7.2 per cent.

Mr. Orlikow: Give us last year's increase.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The overriding concern of the people of Canada and of the labour movement was to cope successfully with inflation. I say this establishes that the program is working and is going to work continually in the interests of the working people in this country.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On the backs of the workers.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Somebody yells out that old cliche "on the backs of the workers." You can examine what a runaway rate of inflation has done to the labour movement and its leadership in any country where it has occurred. Surely I do not have to give that type of lecture to many of the experienced trade unionists who are part of the NDP. It has played total havoc with the leadership, it has undermined it, and in many cases destroyed it, and has worked in the worst interest of every trade union member in any country where it was allowed to get out of control. Surely that cannot be denied. So when someone says that any government that tries to cope with inflation is not concerned with the labour movement and its members, he is not only deluding himself, he is deluding the Canadian people. I do not believe we have anything to apologize for in this regard. What we are asking for and will continue to ask for is co-operation—

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us how they appeal.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —of the NDP and the labour movement to help make this work.

An hon. Member: How do they appeal? Tell us that.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I should like to deal with another point which the leader of the NDP raised. It is a disturbing element. He indicated—if I am incorrect I am sure he will tell me—that the CLC has withdrawn.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not what I said.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Certainly he has indicated that they are considering withdrawing. I think that is a fairly accurate reflection of what he said. I can tell you what I perceive from the actual wording of the press release and having talked to some people connected with it, that it is not considering withdrawing, unless you want to interpret the words "we are reviewing our position with respect to various government agencies" in another way. But that was the precise statement.

Mr. Broadbent: That is because the executive council has not met yet. I think you know that.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): To try to exploit the situation—I hope that is not the intent of the leader of the NDP but it may be the intent of some others—in terms of creating embarrassment for the government by feeding the flames of confrontation, is doing a great disservice to the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The fact of the matter is that the Canadian Labour Congress has a right to review its participation or involvement in any government agency and no one can deny it that right. But I would like to make it quite clear with respect to the Canada Labour Relations Council that it is not a government agency or a government board. When we are talking about withdrawing from various boards and government agencies I might say that I think that would be very unfortunate indeed, not only for the government in terms of the advice it receives, but for the labour movement in terms of their input into many of the decisions that are made by these boards. In any event, if they should review their position with respect to these boards and withdraw, obviously we will have to inherit the misfortunes that flow on all sides from such a development.

With respect to the Canada Labour Relations Council I think it should be made clear that this is not a government agency or board but a truly tri-partite council in every respect. If one element withdraws, the whole thing collapses. We have a one third interest in it in terms of participation. It is not management, it is not labour. Each one is entitled to operate in it to a certain extent, so that if labour or management should withdraw they are withdrawing from their own agency. They are self-destructing their own mechanism to try to come up with some workable solutions. That would be self-defeating.

I might add here that this board is doing some very useful work indeed. It is involved in the whole area of broad based bargaining as a useful way to diminish work stoppages, both legal and illegal, in this country, and to inject some rationality into the collective bargaining system when we have been faced with some serious figures on a relative international basis of man years lost due to strikes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him has expired.

Is there unanimous consent to allow the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: He has my consent if he would give some consideration to speaking for a few minutes on the subject, which is the appeal procedure.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, he should speak on the subject.

Some hon. Members: Read the motion.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister permit a question? I have been listening with great care to what he had to say. I might have missed the point, but did he acknowledge, and if he did not, does he disagree with the substance of my argument that as they exist now the appeal procedures are undemocratic, and if he does, was he saying earlier that while the government may be considering changing the procedures it intends to amend them along the line that would be regarded as democratic?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. What I did say was that when we envisaged this legislation, we felt it was reasonable. I still feel it is reasonable. To my way of thinking, in terms of full representations before the Anti-Inflation Board, the board renders an interpretation with respect to an agreement. If it is not adhered to it goes to the administrator, admittedly through the board, for a decision by the administrator.

If the hon. member and others claim that there is an element of inequity in an appeal going in the second stage to the administrator and beyond, I think I might say that we are open to persuasion and we are prepared to consider the matter. I think that is the position clearly stated in answer to the hon. member.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Orlikow: Is there any appeal to the courts?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The leader of the NDP in his motion states that this is a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, "the revelation today of the announced intention by the executive of the CLC representing almost 2 million Canadian workers to withdraw . . ." Today the hon. member used the word consider, his motion says "intention to withdraw", and the press release from CLC says "review" its position with respect to all boards. So I think we should be very precise, when we talk about a serious matter of this kind, not to inflame the situation and try to create an atmosphere of confrontation, which could be unfortunate for everyone. We all have a responsibility to avoid that.

● (2050)

I should say that I appreciate the opportunity hon. members have given me to exceed my time limit, and in conclusion I should like to indicate just two other measures which are being looked into by the Canada Labour Relations Council which would provide some really tangible benefit for Canadians generally and for members of the labour movement. We talk about rationalization of bargaining units or broader based bargaining. I think it is essential and in the best interests of the labour movement, its membership and the Canadian people, that this be studied.

An hon. Member: Get off the pot.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Perhaps the hon. member who is again interrupting does not even speak to union membership, let alone the leadership, or he would be aware of that fact.

Another area which has been seriously considered by the Canada Labour Relations Council—and in which labour has been one of the most profound advocates—is the area of trying to develop a central agency for statistical gathering and analysis which would not have a bias, or be perceived as having a bias by either labour or management. It would in fact be responsible to this tripartite council itself rather than to a government agency. At least this would set some reasonable parameters within which collective bargaining could take place at a time perhaps when these controls are finished.

People keep asking why should labour or management not sit on the Canada Labour Relations Council and why should they stand by when we are interfering—not denying, but interfering—with the collective bargaining system. It seems to me that it is in the interest of all of us to be assured that, when the control period is over, the collective bargaining system as such will be a better system so it is not so vulnerable to the attacks which are launched on it daily, to the detriment of labour and its leadership as well as of the Canadian people. This is another area which is being studied very seriously by this council now.

The third area in which labour is fully participating for the benefit of workers on this council is the examination of the whole question of industrial relations in the work place which involves questions of the work environment, job satisfaction, worker participation, and all these matters.

Mr. Rodriguez: Alice in Wonderland.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The cynic over there who talks about Alice in Wonderland should tell that to all the labour people who have been participating in all the studies to make it work.

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Why don't you make your smart aleck remarks to the labour people who are working so hard in some of these areas? I do not think they would appreciate them.

The fourth area which is very much in the interests of labour leadership and its membership is the development of far more appropriate and adequate arbitration services so that union members can have their grievances dealt with more readily and quickly. All these areas are very much in the interests of the labour movement.

So I think it is very much in the interests of the labour movement, its membership, its leadership, and the Canadian people not to let their emotions and their strong feelings with respect to these controls divert them from the course they have always followed, and that course has always been to act in every way in their best interests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Madam Speaker, if I may I should like to ask the minister a question before he sits down.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Will the minister allow a question?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): After listening to the minister for 30 minutes I still have not heard the answer to the main point. Can he name any provision in the Anti-Inflation Act, apart from section 24 which gives the right of appeal to the cabinet, which would give a trade union the right to appeal the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board or to appeal the decision of the administrator?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I think the act is quite clear that the direct way to get the administrator's decision on a ruling is from the Anti-Inflation Board.

An hon. Member: What are you talking about?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I think that is quite clear in the act.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a feeling that tonight is not a very appropriate one for the Leader of the Opposition, so it is perhaps just as well that I am shedding this mantle in a few days.

I feel a little sorry for the minister, and I do not think it is very fair of my hon. friends to press him to defend the indefensible.

I did not support the anti-inflation legislation on third reading—

An hon. Member: You did on second.

Mr. Benjamin: You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Stanfield: I can't have it both ways, but I am one of the few people in the country who has not tried to have it both ways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I was concerned about the administrative procedures established in the bill, and especially about the appeal procedures. I was very concerned about the proposed duration of the program of some three years or more, with very easy provision for extension, so that anybody, whether on the management side or on the labour side, could very well anticipate that we were in for a fairly long haul.

I said in the course of the debates on the bill, and I say again tonight, that it is one thing to ask leaders of organized labour and members of trade unions to accept substantial restrictions on collective bargaining in the public interest for a period of a year and a half or so, but it is a very different thing to ask the labour movement to accept such restrictions for a period of three years or three and a quarter years, and perhaps substantially longer because a government with a majority in this House can extend the duration of this program by a simple resolution which can be debated for only three days in parliament.

So it seems to me that proposing controls for a period of three years or more was a most inappropriate way to get acceptance of the program in the country, and particularly from the organized labour movement, especially in view of the complete about face of the government on the whole issue and the complete lack of credibility the government had in making such a proposal to the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Despite what the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) said here tonight, the government compounded this offence by repeated hypocrisy in the House and by pretending that the government was maintaining free collective bargaining. The Minister of Labour can protest as much as he likes, but I have had answers from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and from the Acting Prime Minister who is the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), time after time in this House, taking the position and adopting the pretence that this legislation did not restrict collective bargaining and that the government was by no means prepared to interfere with collective bargaining. This kind of pretence, this kind of hypocrisy, has added to the general lack of acceptance in some quarters of this country. I did not support the bill on third reading for the reasons I have indicated.

● (2100)

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Stanfield: I heard a member say "Shame," Mr. Speaker. If there is any group in this House that should be ashamed of this issue, it is my hon. friends opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: If I had not been convinced before—well, I will not go on with this; there is no point in talking about the cynicism in the Liberal ranks because it is certainly beyond measurement. As I said, I did not support the bill on third reading for the reasons I have indicated. I also said that I would urge Canadians, and my party would urge Canadians, to comply with the law passed by parliament and to co-operate with the Anti-Inflation Board. I believe that compliance with a law adopted by parliament is essential to the maintenance of democratic government and is essential to the maintenance of an orderly society.

I accept the right of labour or any other group to try to bring about a change in the law through persuasion and through pressure, at least such degrees of pressure as are compatible with the maintenance of democratic institutions. I accept that; but I want to make it very clear that I could not condone or support any massive defiance of the law, and I am not suggesting this has taken place. I simply want to make it very clear that I could not support or accept any declared intention by businessmen or working people, organized or unorganized, to defy a law passed by this parliament. No group can set itself above the law and no group can set itself above parliament.

I do suggest, Mr. Speaker, to hon. members opposite that there has been an unnecessary polarization in the way this program has been developed. It is all very well for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to stand in this House and lecture members of the opposition, expressing the hope that we will not do anything at this time to increase polarization. The very way in which this government has chosen to introduce its program of controls has tended, itself, to work in the direction of polarization and to add strains.

I sometimes ask myself whether this polarization that we are now seeing in the country is not really something that the government, if it does not seek it is at least prepared to welcome. I sometimes wonder whether you can explain some of the polarization that the government has developed simply through the normal amount of stupidity that they demonstrate from day to day, or whether in fact this is a deliberate kind of exploitation, a deliberate kind of polarization.

An hon. Member: It is called divide and rule.

Mr. Stanfield: You can call it divide and rule, or you can call it developing an election issue and running the next election against organized labour on the basis that it has defied a government program and defied a law of parliament. I have already referred to the duration of the program as asking an unnecessary amount of forebearance from the labour movement, asking the labour movement to give up far more than is necessary and asking them to accept very substantial restrictions on the collective bargaining process for such a length of time.

There is also the matter of the appeals procedure. As I understand it, the Anti-Inflation Board makes a ruling and there is no way to get from the Anti-Inflation Board to the administrator, in effect, except by defying the Anti-Inflation Board, by refusing to comply or by threatening to refuse to comply. This, surely, is an intolerable situation.

As I understand, the Irving case—and I should like to be corrected if I am wrong—the Anti-Inflation Board made a ruling, then it was referred to the administrator and the administrator soaked the company with a fine. It was not a case of the administrator saying to the company in question, "I support the finding of the Anti-Inflation Board and order you to comply within a certain number of days." It was simply a reference to the administrator and the administrator treating the company as if it had already broken the law.

Today, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Labour talked about the jaw-boning role of the Anti-Inflation Board. That gives the impression that all the board does is jaw-bone and try to persuade, and nobody does any enforcing except the administrator. It is some jaw-boning if you do not do what is suggested to you, so you get socked with a heavy fine.

Surely the truth is that the government intends the Anti-Inflation Board to have the final say as to what the guidelines are and how the guidelines apply to the particular case. When you remove all the verbiage, the government intends to maintain a very, very strict control over any appeal from the Anti-Inflation Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is set up that way. That is the only conclusion I can draw. Not only is it set up in such a way that an appeal is virtually impossible unless the law is defied, or unless the government or the Anti-Inflation Board wants to see the thing carried a step further, but when the administrator makes a decision supporting the Anti-Inflation Board and imposes a fine, he gives no reasons. The statute provides for an appeal from the administrator based on natural justice, based on an erroneous finding of fact or a mistake in the law. How can a Canadian corporation or a Canadian individual exercise any kind of appeal that means anything if they do not really know what the decision of the administrator was? How can any member opposite defend the failure of the administrator, the lack of requirement for the administrator to give reasons for his decision?

I would be very difficult to find a more arbitrary procedure anywhere. The government says it is open to persuasion but not open to persuasion about how you get from the Anti-Inflation Board to the administrator. Neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Labour indicated there would be any easing of the lid that is really placed upon getting from the Anti-Inflation Board to the administrator.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour said they were open to persuasion with regard to appeals from the administrator and as to whether the union would be given the right of appeal. What must one do to persuade the government that this procedure is utterly arbitrary, without justification and at odds with our traditions of procedure? What must we do to convince the government that if it persists in its course, the Canadian people will not be persuaded that the legislation is fair and applied even-handedly. If the program fails, it will be a disaster.

I will not countenance defiance of this law, but I will not tolerate a government which polarizes the country and encourages people to protest against the program. This evening, that is the point we must consider. We must consider the government's approach to the question. It pretends that a reasonable appeal system is in being, when no such appeal system exists. The Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of Labour, and Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) understand these matters. Do they think Canadian people, particularly those in the labour movement, regard this procedure as fair?

One can find many faults with the program. I say to the Acting Prime Minister, through you, sir, "For God's sake give the program a chance. Pay some heed to the principles of natural justice and our traditions of judicial procedure and give the people a chance to support the legislation and the program."

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, in this evening's emergency debate we shall discuss two issues: the denial of natural justice to working people, particularly members of the Canadian Paper Workers Union who were dealt a cruel blow by the anti-inflation administrator, and the government's attempt, with its anti-inflation program, to destroy free collective bargaining as we know it. I have tried several times to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 in order to discuss these issues and I am glad that Mr. Speaker allowed this motion.

My colleagues, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and myself made a fact-finding tour of some one-industry—paper industry—towns in northern Ontario affected by the paper workers' strike. We met workers and their families, civic officials and businessmen. We learned first-hand how the government's anti-inflation legislation has prolonged the strike of about 25,000 paper workers in this country, sometimes by more than seven months. We heard of families which had used life savings to meet expenses because the $20 a month strike pay was not enough. We heard of families who were thousands of dollars in debt, paying as much as 24 per cent interest on loans. We heard of families who had lost their homes through inability to meet mortgage payments, and of families separated from the breadwinner who had found a temporary job elsewhere in Canada. My colleagues will elaborate on these heart-breaking stories and will tell the House how the government, by its legislation, unnecessarily prolonged the strike to the detriment of many Canadian families.

Mr. Blais: That's baloney.

Mr. Symes: What astonished me most was the lack of Liberal members of parliament in those areas.

Mr. Rodriguez: They run and hide.

Mr. Blais: Baloney. We live there. That's totally false.

Mr. Rodriguez: You people run and hide.

Mr. Symes: The hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) and the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) were not there, even though the workers had asked them to be there. I invite Liberal members from Port Arthur, Cochrane, Timmins or Saint John to return to their communities and explain the rationale of this program to the workers. Let them explain how only a short while ago in the 1974 election campaign those very Liberals argued against the kind of wage controls which this government has now imposed. They argued that the Conservative party would impose wage controls.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) referred to me in his remarks in a disparaging way. I think the next election will be held in 1978. I invite him to run in my riding, if he thinks I was not there. Then he will see.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's constituents will make the proper decision in 1978. We will not see the hon. member back in the House. The Liberal party won the federal election by opposing wage controls. Now, with its program which discriminates against the labour movement, it has completely reversed itself. I shall show how the program this government instituted has victimized the Canadian Paper Workers Union and has actually destroyed the well-being of thousands of workers. Many of those workers have been on strike since July, 1975. They bargained in good faith in the spring of the year, long before the Prime Minister addressed the people on Thanksgiving Day. Previously, the paper workers had entered into a two-year contract. During those two years the paper industry made tremendous profits. The paper industry in Canada quadrupled its net profits, after taxes, from $79 million in 1972 to $320 million in 1973.

Mr. Benjamin: Where were the controls then?

Mr. Symes: It more than doubled its profits in 1974, to $685 million. What did one hear about controls in those days? We suffered from price inflation the extent of which this country had never seen. Yet the government made no move to control that inflation. Meanwhile, the workers were locked into a two-year wage contract. Incidentally, we have yet to see the Anti-Inflation Board make one ruling with regard to rolling back prices.

Between 1973 and 1975 the paper industry increased the price of a ton of newsprint by 52 per cent, and the price of a ton of bleached kraft pulp went up by 118 per cent. In December, 1974, before collective bargaining had begun, Abitibi offered a one-year extension of the wage contract. The union locals turned it down, rightly, since in view of the company's astronomical profits it could afford to pay more. They also argued that they could not accept that kind of a wage offer because just previously the woodland workers, with whom they had always a historical wage relationship, had settled for a higher offer. Meanwhile these great corporations, these good corporate citizens, had been running the mills seven days a week and had been stockpiling paper for over three years in anticipation of a strike. That indicates they were not serious about getting down to real collective bargaining and bargaining in good faith, not when they were making that kind of inventory build-up.

Bargaining began with Abitibi in May, 1975. The strike began in July, after an attempt at conciliation failed. We have other evidence that the companies were not interested in good faith bargaining, that they had a secret arrangement to supply one another in the event of a strike should any company run short of supplies. My colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), will elaborate on this.

What really threw the monkey wrench into the collective bargaining process, besides companies that were not ready to bargain in good faith, was the Liberal government in October, 1975, bringing in a wage control program. Make no mistake about it, that is what it is. It is not a wage and price control program, but a wage control program.

The paperworkers' unions were naturally shocked. They assumed there was some sense of principle left with the Liberal government. They read the white paper that said we will set out a guideline of a 10 per cent increase, but we will look at such things as historical relationships, as they did in the case of inside postal workers and letter carriers.

The paperworkers' union bargained in good faith, assuming that the Anti-Inflation Board would look at the natural historical wage relationship between paperworkers and woodland workers. They thought they would get a fair hearing from the Anti-Inflation Board set up by the government. The companies knew better. The people of Canada certainly know better now about the kind of justice they can get from the Anti-Inflation Board.

While this process was going on with regard to the Irving Company in New Brunswick, the other paper companies throughout the country were not bargaining in good faith. They were hiding behind the anti-inflation guidelines and waiting to see what would happen in the Irving case. The necessity for a speedy decision was evident. We tried to get some kind of information. We put pressure on the Anti-Inflation Board through the government to get a speedy decision so that the bargaining process could resume.

The Irving settlement of a 23 per cent wage increase in the first year was turned down by the Anti-Inflation Board. It ignored entirely the legitimate historical wage relationship between woodland workers and paperworkers. If we think of any sense of elementary justice, surely at the stage when the Anti-Inflation Board turned down the wage settlement the workers who are directly involved as well as the company, who without a strike reached that 23 per cent wage agreement and under provincial labour legislation were bound to abide by that collective agreement, surely both parties should have had the right to appeal to the Anti-Inflation Board and argue their case or get an appeal beyond the Anti-Inflation Board. However, that is not the way the government sets up legislation. The way this legislation is set up, it—becomes very hard. The government does not want appeals. It does not want workers to argue in a logical fashion. It would rather provoke them to go out on strike in defiance of the law of the land.

[Mr. Symes.]

The only way you can get an appeal under this farce of a law the government has created is for the company first of all to disobey the recommendation of the Anti-Inflation Board for a wage rollback. Only by challenging the ruling of the Anti-Inflation Board can the case then go to the administrator. Only when the administrator makes a ruling, and then one of the parties launches an appeal against the administrator—

An hon. Member: The employer.

Mr. Symes: That is the point I am coming to. We assume that, if we had natural justice, either the labourers directly involved by the administrator's decisions through a wage rollback or the company would have the right of appeal. However, the recent decision by the administrator in the Irving case indicates that only the party which the decision was charged against, in this case the company, has the right of appeal to the appeals tribunal.

Where is the elementary sense of justice in that? Only one party, the party that the administrator directly makes a ruling on, can appeal. The thinking behind the administrator's decision is confidential. How can you launch an appeal if you do not know how to argue against the ruling you are trying to appeal because you cannot see the evidence? That kind of a system is a farce and a sham.

We hear from the Liberal members that there is the right of appeal to the cabinet under Section 24. That is a real impartial body. My God, Mr. Speaker, it is the very minds that designed the legislation in the first place. They designed the controls program to thwart the appeals procedure process. Do you think you can get a fair hearing before the cabinet? Can you argue your case? Can you engage in dialogue with the cabinet? This afternoon in this House we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say everything is fine. He does not see anything wrong with the principle of this procedure. This evening the Minister of Labour skirted the issue entirely. What kind of reception or hearing will working people get under that situation? It is incredible to think that there is any real appeal procedure in this legislation.

This anti-inflation program set up by the government and administered by the Anti-Inflation Board and the administrator is one step closer to the destruction of basic human rights in this country. Let us not make any mistake about it. When you look at the government you see that at a moment's notice it could introduce the War Measures Act that destroyed civil liberties and threw people in jail without real evidence. Now we see this kind of program and what it does to natural justice in terms of appeal. Before, we had a War Measures Act. Today, we have a wage measures act. We are coming one step closer to authoritarianism and the destruction of the collective bargaining process.

The government deliberately set out to have the Irving Paper Company fined. It was not interested in hearing appeals on a rational basis or considering historical relationships. It wanted to make an example of this dispute between the paperworkers union and the Irving Company as a signal to every other corporation in this country that if they dared go beyond the guidelines they would get the kind of treatment that Irving got.

The point that should never be forgotten is that that was a blanket and arbitrary kind of rule. It does not take into account past profitability of a company or that Irving, Abitibi, and every other paper company in this country can afford more than a 14 per cent increase in the first year of the wage contract and quite legitimately so. The government is out to put the law of the land behind the employers and to point out to employers that they dare not defy.

Employers, in turn, can say to their workers, "What is the point of asking for more than 10 per cent because, as you know, we shall be fined if we go beyond it? What is the point of going on strike? We, as employers, have the law behind us and we just have to hold out until you people starve or until"—as is probably the case with the paper workers—"you reach the end of the financial resources at your disposal."

A strike is a last resort: it is not entered into lightly. When we look at what is being endured by the families of the paper workers, we see evidence of this. But it is a right, it is a hard-earned right, and it is a right in law. Through its anti-inflation legislation the government is destroying the validity of a strike because it is saying to the companies, "Don't worry about your workers going on strike. We, through the Anti-Inflation Board, have put the law of the land behind you. The guidelines will be enforced and the workers will soon get the message that there is no point in striking."

When you strip away all the rhetoric used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), what they say comes down to one thing: the government is going to fight inflation on the backs of the workers. It is setting out, in a systematic way, to pick on one union at a time, to crush them as they have attempted to crush the postal workers, to make examples of them or, as in the case with the paper workers and their families, to deny them a legitimate wage increase based on historic wage relationships and the profitability of the company.

We have not seen one price roll-back under this anti-inflation program, yet we have seen roll-back after roll-back in the case of wage settlements. To pretend, in these circumstances, that we still have free collective bargaining is to bury one's head in the sand. The government is embarking on a course of confrontation. It is promoting civil disturbances because it is undermining a right which is established in law, the right of workers to take strike action if they consider it to be necessary. What we are considering is a backward step, a regrettable program, and I urge the people of this country to stand up and call for the withdrawal of such an inequitable program.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I understand quite well that—

An hon. Member: He knows nothing about conciliation!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, I am quite sure that I do not know about it as much as the hon. member, but as I spent 23 years there, I am perhaps entitled to speak about it and perhaps as intelligently as the hon. member who cannot refrain from shouting!

Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal briefly with the problem confronting us as well as the Canadian people and which affects workers. I would like to do so not in a demagogic manner but as sensibly as possible.

When it is objected, as we have just heard, that workers have suffered during a long strike, that they have lost their house, that they have paid high interest rates, I understand it because I have probably been through that more than the hon. member. However, we cannot choose at the present time between such a situation and an ideal situation, because we are going through an inflationary period and some people are suffering while some non-union workers are losing their house and their means of living. The question is not to decide whether workers lose something when they go on strike.

In the past, there was no control over the so-called free collective bargaining. I noted it myself when I was a leader of the asbestos strike. There was no obstacle to free collective bargaining. However, the workers remained on strike for four months and a half. We saw those things. The legislation does not necessarily edict that, precisely because our collective bargaining system gives rise to a conflict situation.

And as to the historical link in pay rates, Mr. Speaker, really one must have never negotiated in his life to know that there is no such thing as historical links in pay rates because those links are continuously upset by the relative strength of the parties. At a certain moment, the employer is stronger because the cycle is downward, so he can prevent salary increases. At another moment, the union is the stronger and it gets salary increases unheard of before.

Take the case of the teachers in the province of Quebec and even Canada as a whole. Can you imagine that in 1959 the relationship in salaries with those paid in industry was comparable to what it is today? Everything is changed altogether. And if you want to talk about the pulp and paper industry, fine. The relationship between the pay rates of papermakers who traditionally were represented by the International Brotherhood of Papermakers and the salaries paid to other employees at the plant who were represented by the Pulp and Sulfite Workers of America have always been different because precisely employers preferred to give 10, 15 or 20 per cent to papermakers and force the guys with the pulp and sulfite workers to follow, which resulted in depressed salaries for the pulp and sulfite guys and very high salaries for papermakers.

Do you know how much a machine tender earns, Mr. Speaker? Eleven dollars an hour, and I do not blame them for it. That represents $22,000 a year, without counting overtime. I do not say that it is excessive, I simply say that comparisons are a hoax.

Now the legislation is passed, Mr. Speaker. I find it to be imperfect and I would not be prepared to die for that anti-inflation legislation. What choice do we have in front of inflation? If we let it run away, of course, everyone will say: What is the government doing against inflation? People on fixed incomes, unorganized people will suffer from inflation. The organized workers are not the ones who will suffer, but the unorganized will.

Then, we merely say: What does the government do to ward off inflation? What can we do against inflation? Many things. For instance, there is what we wrongly believed in 1974 when we said to the parties: Try to lower your sight as regards both wage and price increases, that is use the voluntary system among unions and businesses. That proved to be a complete failure. It took the English workers, the Trade Union Congress, which is as important as the Canadian Labour Congress, to defeat two socialist governments before accepting, in 1975, the voluntary control of salary increases. They destroyed their own political party before accepting voluntarily salary restrictions. We tried the same approach in 1974. Some ask: How come you have changed your mind? We have changed our mind because we were wrong, and this I confess, we were wrong in believing that the various parties would voluntarily accept to restrict their claims, price increases, and so on. This was not done. I have always entertained very serious doubts about that because, precisely, our collective bargaining system is not based on a rational process but exclusively—perhaps not exclusively but almost so—on the balance of forces between the parties. That is how our system works. Not only is it working like that, but people want to keep it that way.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has met Mr. Morris some time ago—and Mr. Morris has said so in an interview he had given—in an attempt to convince the Canadian Labour Congress and all the other trade unions that we must try and widen the scope of the collective wage agreement.

It is precisely because we had problems like the handling of western grain when either the grain handlers, the railway workers or the longshoremen went on strike in the West. That is when we see the western members of the New Democratic Party torn between two things, between their so-called labour constitution and the interests of farmers that they want to keep on their side. Obviously the government must legislate all these people back to work.

For that matter, the Conservatives take the same position: What is the government doing to put an end to the strike? Yet all we wanted was first to prevent the grain handlers from going on strike and from stopping the movement of grain in the West, and then to prevent the railway workers and longshoremen from going on strike. And Mr. Morris said: "What Mr. Trudeau wants is to centralize." But that makes a lot of sense and when there is a strike affecting western farmers, I am anxious to see what will be the attitude of our good friends of the New Democratic Party. Why did they not tell the farmers: Come on, pay more, let the workers get more. No, all we get is a big silence and the usual attitude from people who are afraid to stick their necks out.

Mr. Speaker, we had the choice of referring to the parties and in so doing, true democracy would have prevailed. If both parties, the union and the employer, had said: Because of inflation, since it is in the national interest to do so, we shall try to restrict our demands. But this cannot be done and it does not mean there is a lack of good will but the system is built that way. The unions in our country are modelled after the capitalistic pattern. I am not implying they are capitalistic but they bargain in the same way.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Some asked: What is the Wagner Act?. When the Wagner Act was passed in the United States, in 1934, what did it offer which was really new? Two things. It gave the unions the sole responsibility for union representations and at the same time it protected the employer against the AFL-CIO wrangling over union jurisdictions in the United States.

Both parties were very pleased with this extraordinary solution which Roosevelt had found, because the union had the monopoly of representations and the employer was protected against interunion competition. How does the system work out? It operates in such a way that the party which is in a power position will take as much as it can out of the other at a given moment. That is the way it operates.

And that is exactly what the employer does with prices when he tries to get all the market can bear, that is the customers can pay. Now, in times of crises, that cannot be allowed, so the system must be changed slightly. There are those who claim or have claimed that the Anti-Inflation Act denies free collective bargaining. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. To say that is sheer demagoguery. During the war, we had the Wartime Prices and Trade Act. Everything was frozen. The only increases allowed were limited to 25 cents per percentage point increase in the cost of living index. In addition, attempts were made to eliminate glaring disparities and injustices, that is to say, labour councils were only allowed to grant increases where glaring injustices or disparities existed. They had full discretionary powers in that regard. They could deny or remove the right to strike and, notwithstanding that, the labour movement survived, Mr. Speaker. Not only did it survive but it became stronger during the war. I did not like the system. I was in the labour movement at the time and felt naturally that it was a burden for the strongest. For the strongest unions, it was a burden, but for the weaker, it was some sort of relief because, as they could not resort to strikes, they went before the Wartime Labour Board and through it got the salary increases they could not have obtained through their own economic strength.

We have the choice between free negotiations between the parties, bearing in mind the common good, or resorting to a system of controls. We could consider controls under the War Measures Act, but it would mean that before they could be implemented, many would have been strangled by inflation in the country.

Then that solution was put aside. So we tried to attain our end promptly without depriving unnecessarily the workers and the employers of their basic rights, while keeping as much freedom as possible and avoiding setting up a whole institution which would have taken a very long time to build and a very long time to destroy, because I was in the group who came here in Ottawa in 1946-47 with Pat Conroy and Percy Bengough. We came here and asked for the maintenance of price and salary controls, since we were afraid that prices would soar because of the shortages due to the war. I came here in Ottawa. Maybe several members were not even born at that time. They do not know what happened, but I do, and the labour movement was asking for this.

Some hon. members speak of the right to appeal. The way they want to interpret it means on the whole that they are against the anti-inflation program. It means that they are against the guidelines because, even if there were appeals, the appeal tribunal would be bound by those guidelines. It would be impossible to allow more than 8 per cent, plus 2 per cent, plus 2 per cent for catching up, and 2 per cent for productivity. In fact, there is no right to appeal and if appeals were allowed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —of course they are not, that is to say, Mr. Speaker, it is possible to appeal from the interpretation of the guidelines, but not from the guidelines themselves. They are included in the legislation and must be complied with.

Now, if we are talking about an appeal which would allow, for example, the paper workers to get an increase higher than that provided by the guidelines, those workers will argue that the wage relationship between the pulp and paper workers and the woodworkers is no longer the same. Then, let us cancel the program and allow inflation to get out of control, or else, let the New Democratic Party table a resolution asking for a wage and price freeze and a return to the wartime system. If this is what they want, let's play fair. As far as I am concerned, I do not like the program, I would prefer the free bargaining system across the board. We tried, but it did not work. Nobody in the Canadian public would forgive us for doing nothing under the circumstances.

What does the New Democratic Party do, Mr. Speaker? It simply stirs up certain groups of workers who are not the most in need in our society, without offering a worthwhile solution. When you talk about the right of appeal as a right enabling workers or trade unions to go beyond the guidelines, this means that these guidelines are destroyed. And what is proposed if they are destroyed? Yes, they are destroyed without any doubt. I say that all trade unions have a valuable argument about catching up and if pulp and paper workers can catch up, the woodworkers will then say: Well, before that we had such a relationship with pulp and paper workers and we want to maintain it.

And if that is it let us say so frankly, let us stop beating around the bush; this is unpleasant, this is clearly unpleasant. I simply say that it is not true that we have killed the free bargaining process. Now, we are threatened here, we have heard those threats. The Canadian Labour Congress will pull its representatives out of the federal agencies. Well, the CNTU did that several years ago. Let us not forget that, for all practical purposes, the CNTU pulled out of the federal agencies five or six years ago, to my knowledge. It does not even submit any brief. This is what makes me smile, as I know something about the history of the unions.

I remember very well that in 1926, five years after its creation in Hull, the CNTU asked to be accredited by the Minister of Labour. It wanted to be recognized. What is the history of Canadian unions before 1944 or 1945? It was a struggle for recognition by the employers and the government. In Ottawa, the federal government—

● (2150)

[English]

An hon. Member: It was the Liberal government.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It was the Liberal government that enacted C-103 in 1945 which compelled the employer to recognize the union. Don't forget that.

I do not know whether those hon. members can do anything else but shout, whether they can have some valid ideas. I simply suggest that before that time, there was a fight for employer recognition of the union, and then a fight for collective bargaining in order to try and get better conditions.

Unions succeeded in obtaining that the law itself force employers to recognize unions. The second fight by unions was to get government recognition, labour relations boards' recognition, recognition wherever they had interests. The government finally yielded, all governments finally yielded in Canada. Now they are threatening to remove themselves the rights they fought very hard to obtain. Such is the meaning of this.

Who are they threatening in so doing? Nobody but themselves. How come, Mr. Speaker, and this will be my final point although I could go on for a whole hour, how come that labour unions which are—

Oh, stop those shouts through your nose, you wake up people! How come, Mr. Speaker, that labour unions are fighting with employers—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask hon. members to let other members speak. Tonight's debate was requested in order that the views of the various parties be heard. I believe the minister has a right to be heard.

[English]

I think the minister has the right to be heard, and should be heard in this House.

[Translation]

Labour unions have diverging interests from employers and have always been fighting them. They would not accept for a moment that employers cease to recognize them. That is basic, it is now included in our law. It is an essential aspect for the labour movement's and the workers' future. They not only ask employers for recognition, they also made strike after strike to get it. They even fought for government recognition. And now comes that great threat, they now tell us they will cease to recognize the government. The Federation of Labour in British Columbia stated they were following instructions from the Canadian Labour Congress. It is the first time I hear a labour federation or Canadian unions say that they obey the Canada Labour Congress. It is the first time in my life. It is only because they hide behind the congress in an attempt to force acceptance of things which they find it difficult to live.

Then, Mr. Speaker, this threat could as well be carried out. I do not like to say that the right of appeal will give additional rights to workers as I do not believe it. If a more perfect system were proposed I would agree to support it, but if the only things we can expect from this House are demagogic appeals or suggestions which do not improve the situation I consider that we do not serve the interests of workers, of unions, nor those of the people of Canada.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I shall first thank the Chair for allowing us today to discuss a point extremely important as it affects the life of workers and Canadian companies generally.

I listened carefully to the Minister of Environment (Mr. Marchand) who seems much more comfortable as Environment Minister than as Labour Minister. I can understand him very well as he spent, like he said, 23 years in the field of labour management relations and we can very well understand why he talked tonight with so much enthusiasm about a subject he knows so well.

However, I regret that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) was not as eloquent, as straightforward and as clear as the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of Labour did not answer the question before the House tonight, the right of appeal of workers and companies concerning the anti-inflation act. The Minister of the Environment blamed us for fighting the anti-inflation program saying that we did not really wish to stop inflation.

Mr. Speaker, we do not object against the concept of an anti-inflation program, but rather the anti-inflation program of this government. Yet, the Minister of the Environment did not say anything about the causes of inflation. What is the use of talking about the consequences of inflation, of repeating that it has to come to an end, long and passionate speeches which not come to anything, we must truly put an end to inflation.

Nothing is said about what brought it to Canada. Yet, I do remember that within six years this very government has doubled the interest rate in this country and when one considers, for instance, the cost of family houses, one realizes pretty well that the cost of housing is part of inflation. But nothing is done about interest rates. Since the Anti-Inflation Board has started its operations, we have never heard its chairman or any of its member say that they were going to analyze, scrutinize, and if necessary condemn the financial institutions of this country. Not satisfied with plundering the poorest among Canadians, putting them on welfare or just giving them small jobs between two unemployment periods, now they want to fight the well to do through the Anti-Inflation Board.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate—and hon. members of the New Democratic Party are quite understandably alarmed by this situation that has been known for a few days—that the Anti-Inflation Board decisions be practically without appeal. If the government could tell us that this situation will last only one year, but we know perfectly well that this government does not want to be too specific about the period during which this Anti-Inflation Board will be in operation. Nor does it want to give us any assurance about the period during which there will be no appeal procedures in Canada.

And we also know very well when a socialist measure is introduced, for instance during the last world war when direct taxation was removed from the provinces and given to the federal government, supposedly as part of the war effort, it was never returned to them. And when one considers this legislation, one realizes that we have just removed the right to appeal in labour bargaining. Therefore, I am concerned about the fact that this government does not give us any guarantee as regards the period during which the appeal procedure will be suspended.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has not been as specific as the Minister of Environment, who spoke frankly and said that this board's decisions were without appeal. One cannot argue about such a frank, clear, obvious and precise answer. Now, Mr. Speaker, in co-operation with my hon. friends, my hon. colleagues from the NDP, I deplore this situation but not for the same reasons as they do.

We have already begun to realize a few days ago, and tonight in particular, the dictatorial approach that the Anti-Inflation Board has taken and which will be worsening throughout Canada, leading the private sector and the working people to be held within the framework of this board's regulations, that will be made as required, at a moment's notice according to the whims of these hon. mandarins.

Today, we can therefore judge the first decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board. The chairman of the board, Mr. Pepin, said that the board will be strict, that it will be indulgent, that it will be inflexible, and that it will be flexible. In other words, we can expect anything from the board as concerns regulations and the day to day interpretation of these regulations. But the chairman forgot to say that the board would be useless to control inflation.

Mr. Speaker, we spoke against the anti-inflation legislation because, as Social Crediters, we are convinced that this legislation will be completely useless to control inflation, but will be very effective when it comes to creating problems for everyone. Why? Because the board has extraordinary and anti-democratic powers. The board is not a department. It is not accountable to the public like all hon. members of this House who have been elected by the population.

The population voted for representatives who had promised to control inflation and not for members of Parliament who will hide behind the socialistic decisions of the board. The powers and the immunity of the board are stronger than those of any department. The powers of the board are such that it can do anything. Indeed, its chairman said so: it will be strict, indulgent, inflexible and flexible, strict and inflexible. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, what will happen is that the board will be strict and inflexible towards the weak and private enterprise and indulgent and flexible towards the strong and especially finance which will not be touched by it. The board will pit the weak, those who have already been deprived of everything by governments, against private enterprise to create a favourable climate for the introduction of legislation which will be even more socialistic than at the present time.

Instead of trying to control finance which stifles private industry, wage earners and low income people, the board will pit low wage earners against private industry, creating the impression that if the economy is so bad in Canada, we must put the blame on private industry and not on finance. This habit of accusing private industry is well in line with the duties of the board. That is also in line with the attacks of the right hon. Prime Minister who stated recently that private industry no longer works in Canada.

The Trudeau government used every possible means to kill private industry and now, to finish it off, the Anti-Inflation Board will make it easier to run private industry right into the ground. Mr. Speaker, they curtail an industry's operations then after blame it because it does not work. The board has a socialist duty to do. That is why it has been created. Inflation is only an excuse for its institution. Inflation is only an excuse for the government to create a board which will certainly control the whole economy. The collective agreements which the Minister of Environment (Mr. Marchand) just mentioned—or which he is dreaming about—have disappeared from our employer-employee relation system because the government cannot give any guarantee as to when the right to negotiate will be there again.

Mr. Speaker, they would have us believe that the Anti-Inflation Board was a temporary measure. Maybe it will be temporary but the tentacles and the traces it will have engendered will remain as long as other much more realistic, more sensible and less socialist economic measures are not devised to stimulate the general economy. The Anti-Inflation Board could have tackled the monopoly of finance which is causing our current economic confusion and inflation. We do not control causes of inflation but the results.

We will have to deal with the consequences of a bad financial system monopolized by the banks which today endangers the private sector by causing inflation. Bank monopolies make billions in profits every year but the board will not touch them. It would much rather concentrate on the few hundred thousand dollars of profit in the private sector.

The government wanted to lay its hands on our production system in Canada and the best way to succeed was to create an Anti-Inflation Board to harass the private sector which has already been affected by the bank monopoly. There are a number of businessmen who have now acquired the mentality of those who live off the welfare system. They have no more motivation, no sense of risk, no love for work left. They were ready to invest more in the economy of the country, but to do so they would have needed the confidence of the government. Governments should treat them as responsible individuals, responsible for our production and not for causing inflation, as the Anti-Inflation Board seems ready to do. Facing the socialist threat of our present government, they are ready to liquidate their business, restrain their activities, reduce their risks and emigrate somewhere else, as many others have done in the last five years.

When they see our government ministers, or the right hon. Prime Minister on television, or when they read the newspapers which are constantly telling us that we are going towards a new society, Mr. Speaker, businessmen in Canada soon understand that Mr. Trudeau's new society is a socialist one and this is why all sense of risk and all motivation in business tend to disappear.

We are strongly opposed to the last decision of the socialist board of Mr. Pepin which levied a $125,000 fine against the Irving Pulp and Paper Company. Not because this fine will bankrupt the Irving Company but on a question of principle. The Irving Company wanted its emplyees to share the profits but the board has just directly penalized the Company and fined it and indirectly fined its employees as well.

Irving Pulp and Paper Limited has just been fined directly, as well as its employees and pulp and paper workers in Canada. Mr. Speaker, that Anti-Inflation Board is an almighty bureaucracy and I wonder how far the government will go in bureaucracy in its future decisions. In certain socialist countries, we saw management-labour relations disappear from collective agreements; they disappeared and were replaced by bureaucracy.

A little later, justice disappeared and was replaced by bureaucracy. Well, Mr. Speaker, when a country takes the road toward socialist bureaucracy, there is no limit and that is why we Social Crediters voted against the anti-inflation legislation. We are against inflation, but we are also against the steps taken by the government because as days go by, the board will increasingly give disappointing results. It will give everyone a bad time and will not control inflation because it will not deal with its causes, but only its consequences.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago we had the unusual pleasure of listening to the rhetorical flights of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand). I must say I enjoy a good speech as much as anyone else, but I would have enjoyed his speech much more if he had stuck to the point of the resolution before the House.

This resolution is important. It talks about the breakdown in our society of the relationship between the various elements of society. One of those important elements is organized labour. Others are management, government, business and industry. However, what the minister talked about was the failure of or the difficulties in the adversary system. He talked about confrontation and about the intervention of parliament into organized labour-management matters, as we have had to do from time to time, and every time we have done that we have really stuck a dagger into the heart of the collective bargaining process in Canada. When we have had to do that, something has broken down.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I do not expect the hon. member sitting groaning in the background to understand this at all, but I do expect him at least to listen.

An hon. Member: Stick to your notes. If the minister did not speak to the point, why don't you?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has the floor, and I wish he would stick to the subject.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The itinerant professor from the backbenches is interrupting the debate again, and I am sure he does not intend to add anything more to the debate than perhaps the occasional "hear, hear" or "no, no", and in terms of this debate he will go down in history recorded in that way, as he did yesterday.

Of course the system is imperfect. That is really what the minister was saying. He talked about intervention in the system, but what is happening here, and what worries me about the speech of the minister, is that he threw down a gauntlet to organized labour.

I carry no particular brief for organized labour any more than I do for management or government, but if there was anything clear in the speech by the Minister of the Environment, or anything which rang true, it was that the free collective bargaining system has been interfered with, in some cases stopped, and in the case of the employees of the Irving Company—this is the group of employees we are talking about—certain rights have been denied them. The minister can argue that it is necessary perhaps in the public interest. He can argue that the adversary system is not working, but I suggest that what has happened here is that the collective bargaining system has in fact been interfered with.

We can talk about getting to the root causes of inflation and other difficulties, but in terms of the motion before us it was made amply clear that what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has been harping on for the last few days in the question period, and a long time ago with respect to questions in the House, is that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) tried to tell the House that the collective bargaining system was still intact, the most charitable thing which can be said is that the President of the Privy Council and others do not know what they are talking about.

Tonight the Leader of the Opposition made a very forceful speech. It was one of the last speeches he will make in this House as Leader of the Opposition, and I do not have to tell hon. members his position in the eyes of most Canadians as a man of integrity. What he cried out for tonight, and what he asked the ministers one by one as he went along the front benches was very simple. He asked them to make a very simple inquiry. He asked them to look at that legislation and see the extreme limitations of appeal, which are referred to in the motion by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

The speech of the Leader of the Opposition was applauded by hon. members on all sides of the House, and he asked each member to search his heart and his conscience, and to ask himself whether it is right, fair, just or equitable that a group of Canadians, by the accident or otherwise of draftsmanship, should be denied what is really the fundamental right of citizens in a free society, the right to appeal from a decision of an administrative tribunal.

The Leader of the Opposition asked that simple question with quiet eloquence, as befits him. That is not to say he was not moved. He was very much moved about what he said. No person in this House has been more in pursuit of what could be called simple justice for Canadians than the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Campbell: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I ask the hon. member who just interjected to look at the bill. She is a lawyer, and probably a pretty good one. I ask her to look at section 30 of that statute and ask herself whether in terms of section 30 the working men and women of Canada, who might be caught in a similar situation as these working men and women of the Irving Company are caught have the same right of appeal or have a real right of appeal to some tribunal to have the matter at least heard regardless of what the tribunal may find.

Surely no one in this House, whether he is Liberal, Conservative, New Democratic or Social Credit, could deny the simple fact that the right of appeal is essential. The right of access to the court is an essential part of Canadian justice. The right to know the findings against which an appeal has been made is an essential piece of our jurisprudence.

I referred earlier to a drafting accident, and if this is a drafting accident by someone in the Department of Justice, perhaps it should be looked into. As I listened to the Minister of Labour earlier tonight, I did not think it was looked into. I am sorry he is not in the House now. He was given extended time by this House as a matter of courtesy, and he talked about a tripartite labour council. He talked about the important things upon which it has embarked, the new studies and the things which might replace the adversary system in collective bargaining and which might make the system work, make it more human, and more responsive to the twentieth century. Perhaps replacing the adversary system in some way could be the answer. All of those things may be worth-while, and any investigation would be supported by every hon. member in this House.

I want to say to the Minister of Labour—and I hope he reads this—that if he allows this opportunity to change an unjust society to go by, if he permits this polarization and removes from a segment of our society certain rights and does not give those rights which should apply to every group in Canada—in this particular case working men and working women coming under the aegis of the Anti-Inflation Board—then all the things we want this tripartite council to do will be washed away.

I cannot believe—and someone told me I am a fool not to believe it—that the government would be so foolish as to try to polarize the elements of society in order to create a situation which would call for an election. I cannot believe they would do that. Whether that is the motive, or whether it happened inadvertently, the effect is exactly the same. The peace we want in our society, the industrial peace, the productivity which everyone tells us we need, the incentives we must have if we are to grow, to build and to create a better life for other people, the justice of the just society—which was the catchword a few years ago—will be washed away if we allow this polarization to take place.

I ask members of the House, and the government, to look at the appeal procedures in Bill C-73. A program like this requires some rough justice, and that has been admitted. That it should go on for an indefinite period is wrong, I think; but that it should go on even for a short period, defective in so far as the right of appeal is concerned, is also wrong and this government should admit that and make changes. If it does, it will have the support of all members of the House of Commons. If it does not, it will have to reap the whirlwind of denying that right to a large number of men and women who work and are in unions, unions to which the government has said they give support, involved in the collective bargaining process, a process which they say they support.

I am not carrying any brief for them, Mr. Speaker, and I want the House to understand that. I am carrying a brief for justice, equality and good conscience. If the government denies that right of appeal which is symbolic, and these three matters which are important in a free society, then it is denying to a large group of Canadians something they ought to have. The system could operate satisfactorily if they had those rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) apologize for the so-called anti-inflation program. We all witnessed some of the scenes on television. The minister said he had gone before organized labour and presented the case of the government for anti-inflation and organized labour supported the anti-inflation program. Does the minister forget that we saw the way he was booed at the CUPE convention in Toronto? Does he forget that he was booed in my own riding of Nickel Belt when he came there to sell the trade union movement a bill of goods? He was not permitted to finish his speech because the workers in the Sudbury basin thought he was coming to sell them the way to wage controls.

We also saw the minister booed when he spoke to the British Columbia Federation of Labour and tried to sell them the same bill of goods. He was booed when he went to Newfoundland and spoke to the Newfoundland Federation of Labour. This is the minister who gets up in the House, sweating and panting and trying to put across to the House the message that there is support in the trade union movement for the government's wage controls.

Do we forget that the minister was silent—but of course he was taking the treatment then—when the former minister of finance and other ministers were going around naming labour as the scapegoat for inflation? That minister sat quietly even though he was minister of labour. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will at least stand up for the farmers from time to time, but the Minister of Labour was silent and he was condemned by his silence. Now he comes along, belatedly, saying he has the support of labour.

Next we have the spectacle of the hon. member for Langelier (Mr. Marchand), the Minister of the Environment, the minister who has run through so many portfolios in the cabinet that he has only three or four left. He got up and patted himself on the back; I was surprised that he did not break his arm through doing so. He told us what a friend of labour he is, that he was 23 years in the labour movement. All I can say is—

Mr. Roy (Timmins): That is longer than you have.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why don't you get up and make a speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Would the hon. member please address the Chair?

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) should be as vocal in his riding about the injustice of this legislation as he is in the House. He is a great defender of the workers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): I have already defeated two of your party; sent both of them down.

Mr. Rodriguez: I have already defeated two Liberals. The minister was patting himself on the back. From the condemnation of labour that he has displayed in this House, I can only say he has come a long way since those 23 years when he was active in the trade union movement. Give a man a ministry and a chauffeur to drive his limousine and he soon forgets his roots. The minister said quite bluntly that there was no historic relationship in his wage control bill. He also said, in effect, that the trade union movement needs to be controlled in terms of wages.

Mr. Speaker, last year 90 per cent of the wage contracts in this country were settled without strikes or disruption of services. Surely we will hear shortly from the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey). We know what he has on other occasions; he has said that patriotism is important in wage control bills. I was on the fact-finding trip to New Brunswick to look at the situation with regard to the Canadian Paper Workers Union. Let us consider how dynamic, radical and left-wing those unions are. We seem to think we are talking about workers who would strike at the drop of a hat. The pitworkers' union in Grand Falls, Newfoundland, has not been on strike for one day in 60 years. Paper workers at MacMillan-Rothesay Company, a subsidiary of MacMillan-Bloedell, were out for three weeks in the last ten years. At Irving Pulp and Paper Company, workers have been out for eight weeks in the last 30 years. Workers at the Miramichi Timber Resources Company have been out for eight days in the last 30 years.

Are these radical workers? It is not in the nature of workers to strike. It is not in the nature of workers to walk the picket lines without a pay cheque coming in. May I remind the fat-cats in this House that it is the nature of workers to earn money and to keep their families with their heads held high. These are the kind of workers this legislation works against. Do I see the government moving as resolutely against prices? Why could we not set up a system which says that no prices will go up until approved by the Anti-Inflation Board and then the administrator?

An hon. Member: It is the same process.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not, and the hon. member knows it. Every week I have supplied the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the Anti-Inflation Board with a monitored price list of those items constantly rising by 10 per cent, 20 per cent and even 25 per cent, but have not seen any action by the Anti-Inflation Board to deal with my complaints. At the same time workers' wages are effectively controlled. Not only that, the collective bargaining process is dead, deader than a door nail. Perhaps the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro (Hamilton East)) wants to tell railway workers that it is not dead. I challenge him to tell the railway workers how this program will work.

When I was in New Brunswick I met with union representatives, and met a chap by the name of James K. Irving, the owner of the paper company. I never thought I would see the day when I would stand up for the Irvings or the Taylors in this House. I had a chance to talk to that gentleman and get some facts. He told me that the paper companies had formed an association, that the association had asked him to join the club which would control workers' wages and keep them within the guidelines. He said he refused because he felt he could always paddle his own canoe and settle with his workers as he had in the past. He said he felt he could afford to pay 23.8 per cent. Actually he said it was 21 per cent but the Anti-Inflation Board took into account contributions to pension plan and overtime, and said it was 23.8 per cent. At any rate Mr. Irving said he felt he could afford that settlement.

I also discovered on my fact finding trip that the paper companies colluded one with another. As evidence, we have secured a document with the signatures of four paper companies attached to it. Let me read one paragraph of that document:

> The undersigned undertake in such circumstances to:
> (a) secure the competitiveness of the industry by satisfying to the best of their production capacity the fine paper product requirements for the customers of that or those manufacturer(s) which has (have) ceased operations as a result of a strike; and
> (b) offset the latter's cost of negotiations through financial support.

That agreement was entered into in 1973. The establishment of the Anti-Inflation Board, and the guidelines, exactly suited the paper companies. They were prepared with machinery with which to control wages. Obviously, the association was a cartel. That is the power against which the workers were aligned.

The workers are poor people who could ill afford to strike; but they did strike. There comes a time when one must stand for principle. I know the Liberals know little about principle. I also know that there comes a time when a man must stand for principle. Often we have seen wives of workers recognize that principle and show solidarity with their menfolk on strike by supporting the strike. I have met trade unionists involved with the movement at the federal level and always thought they were mild, reasonable men. They are too logical, and not at all left wing maoists, Marxists, or whatever one calls them. I always hoped they would show more spunk and more backbone in dealing with the country's corporations. I am glad to see the Minister of Labour return to the House. As I said, I challenge him to tell railway workers how the government's program will work.

To revert to what I was saying, those leaders of the trade union movement in this country have been forced, by the government's action, to withdraw their participation in the very system by which they can correct labour legislation passed in this country. Things must be pretty serious if they are pushed to such extremes. As I said, I was always impressed by their quiet approach, by the mild attitude which has characterized their relationships with the government. I always hoped they would be more aggressive. Now we find that they have taken this hard position.

What has been the cause, Mr. Speaker? The immediate cause is the government's enactment of that infamous Bill C-73, by which the government intervened in the free collective bargaining process. In the present instance the administrator of the anti-inflation program, Mr. Tansley, has fined the Irving paper company $125,000.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

What was the company's crime? Mr. Irving was paying his workers what he had agreed. I have often said, "Fine companies which do not do the right thing by their workers." Now we find that the government fines companies which have done the right thing by their workers. I really do not understand Liberal thinking.

Mr. Benjamin: Nobody does.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is a sort of "Alice in Wonderland", thinking. But then the government is consistently anti-labour. Mr. Tansley made his decision and brought down his judgment. And whom does he name in the judgment? He names the Irving paper company. Do the workers have the right to appeal Mr. Tansley's decision? That is the question.

I distinctly recall the Prime Minister saying this afternoon that he was dealing with the root causes of inflation and it seemed only proper to him, in law, that action should be taken against the person who is directly causing inflation. I distinctly remember the Prime Minister saying this afternoon, in answer to my leader's question, that if the employer is paying wages higher than those permitted by the guidelines, it seemed only proper to issue an order against the employer, not the employee.

I also recall the Prime Minister saying that the employer should have the right to appeal if he does not agree with the Order. According to the Prime Minister, the person paying salaries higher than those permitted by the guidelines is the real cause of inflation. Well, that is a new one. I never heard that before, never heard of an employer who agrees to pay his workers a fair wage as being the cause of inflation. And there is no appeal from that.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand (Langelier)), who has held pretty well every portfolio in the cabinet, suggested that there is not even an historical relationship. He ruled it out completely.

I can well understand the confusion of the country's trade union movement. First the Anti-Inflation Board says that it is all right for teachers to get 30 per cent in a one year contract, Falconbridge workers to get 18 per cent in a two year contract, and CUPW workers 30 per cent in a two year contract. Then they turn around and say that 23 per cent is too much for paperworkers. Where is the pattern, consistency, and logic to that? What it boils down to is that in every case the worker is being blamed for inflation. He is made the scapegoat when in effect it is the government's inability to deal with the economy so that the resources of the country can be used effectively.

● (2240)

It reminds me of how we think of the rape victim. We always blame the victim for causing the problem. It is the same situation here. We do not blame the corporations for pushing up prices as a result of which the workers are forced to bargain for higher wages in order to keep abreast of the rising cost of living. When you have the same corporate group financing the Liberal party and you have a lobby in the Senate, what can you expect? Can you expect legislation that is just for workers? Not on your life!

I found out something that is very interesting with regard to the Paperworkers Union when I was in New Brunswick. We might think we are dealing with very poor companies. However, they are not poor. They are very rich multi-national corporations. Somehow or other they get some pretty good deals in New Brunswick. For example, there is no stumpage fee for five years. This is to be reviewed at the end of five years. There is no stumpage fee at all. In terms of tax the people of New Brunswick do not get any benefit from that resource. I found out something else that appalled me—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, unlike the pride of the New Democratic Party, I am going to speak to the resolution or the particular reason why we are here tonight.

An hon. Member: You will be the first on your side.

Mr. Mackasey: I can talk about the New Democratic Party. It is not hard. If labour has many more friends like the NDP, it certainly will not need many more enemies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: We have not heard any outbursts by the NDP about the responsible attitude of Premier Schreyer in Manitoba. Let them give their views on that. They do not like to hear the truth. I did not start out in this vein and I would prefer not to, but I can carry it on.

An hon. Member: Patriotism.

Mr. Mackasey: Patriotism is something the hon. member should appreciate. When he says that unions in this country are not radical, he is correct. They are very moderate. It is only the self appointed spokesmen for the labour movement such as the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who create the mistaken impression across this country that labour is as radical as he is. In this country, however, they do not happen to be.

I wish to take advantage of this occasion to say something about the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), in fact the only effective opposition in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: By coincidence I was in the House when the hon. gentleman made his first speech in his new role. It was difficult, even for one of his experience. As I recall history, I think one of my interjections upset him. But as often happens when relationships begin on the wrong foot, we became very, very close friends. Frankly, I think he is probably one of the most under-rated, under-estimated people who has ever sat in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: People in the gallery, and there were many tonight from labour and other segments of society, had a wonderful opportunity of comparing the style of the Leader of the Opposition with the diatribe we have been listening to from those poor people in the corner for the last hour or two. When we read Hansard tomorrow we will see that the hon. gentleman's contribution to the debate was not only much more eloquent, but much more persuasive to the ministers on this side who will now want to look at this legislation extremely carefully in the event that unintentionally there was some denial of the rights of individuals or trade unions.

I noticed something significant when I dug out Votes and Proceedings tonight. With regard to the passage of Bill C-73 there was not one single amendment put forward by the New Democratic Party to strengthen the appeal procedure or, if labour had been unintentionally overlooked, to rectify that at that time when the bill was being examined, debated at second reading, in committee, and on third reading. There was not a word from the NDP about the terrible loss of liberty to the labour movement. It is obvious that they were either asleep in committee or did not attend.

Now they have suddenly awakened in their opportunistic manner when something seems to be bothering the labour union to reinforce once again the adversary concept, making Canadian society so structured that you have the haves and have-nots, which everybody deplores but which that party seems to think is the key to political success. They never seem to learn, because there are no more of them in the House now than there were 20 years ago.

Why are we here tonight on an evening that is so important to members opposite? They have to sit here when, on this Wednesday night, they want to be looking to their own personal affairs. If it was to improve the bill I could understand it. If there were a national emergency I could understand it. That is what Standing Order 26 is all about.

● (2250)

In determining whether or not we would spend a Wednesday night in the House—and remember it is really inconvenient to the staff and everyone else associated with us; never mind the members, we abide by the Speaker's decision—why did the Speaker suggest that an emergency debate was justified under Standing Order 26, a fairly rare procedure as you know? It was not because, in the opinion of the Speaker, there was a flaw in the bill; it was not because the Speaker felt that the bill was unfair or that there was a national emergency. It was because the New Democratic Party unintentionally—I use the word "unintentionally"—misled everybody.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Mackasey: Members over in that corner say "come on". We are supposed to sit here and enjoy their diatribes, but when something is said that they don't like they yell, "Oh, come on, don't be too hard on us". I am going to put of the words of their leader on record—as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), the adjournment of the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 26, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the revelation today of the announced intention by the executive of the Canadian Labour Congress representing almost two million Canadian workers to withdraw from all areas of co-operation with the federal government in every province, this decision arising from the now clearly demonstrated and acknowledged absence of the right of appeal under due process of law for all those affected by decisions of the Anti-inflation Board and/or the administrator, and leading inevitably to further breakdown of civil order in Canada.

Note that phrase "breakdown in civil order". As if the Canadian Labour Congress would suggest violence, or taking to the streets after the fashion of unruly demonstrations in some other countries!

There is no evidence that any member of that party can produce to indicate that the Canadian Labour Congress today has decided to withdraw from all areas of co-operation with the federal government in every province. To suggest such a thing is entirely wrong. And we are here because those words in the motion were taken at face value. In actual fact the CLC said it would consider such a move when the executive got around to doing so. "Considering it" is a long way from making a firm decision.

I know the Canadian Labour Congress as well as the New Democratic Party does, and I know how difficult it is for the president. I do not think the President, Mr. Morris, gets a fair shake in the press. He has a difficult job, as politicians should understand. In many ways he is a politician.

Mr. Nystrom: The friend of labour!

Mr. Mackasey: You are no friends of labour with your radical views. It is your type of view that gives labour a bad name in this country, one it does not deserve.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: That is the tragedy of your type of intervention in the House of Commons.

Mr. Nystrom: Address the Chair.

Mr. Mackasey: Hansard, of course, can't capture the wistfulness of that party hoping—

An hon. Member: Tell us about the appeal procedure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) has the floor. Give him his chance to express his opinions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: —hoping that labour will be as irresponsible as they have been tonight. They say, "We hope it doesn't happen; we are not suggesting that labour withdraw from all the different bodies, the Economic Council and all the other boards to which they make such a valuable contribution." But I am saying that their intervention was an invitation to the labour movement to do precisely that, and that is not in the best interests of the labour movement. The best interest of the labour movement in this country, and of the people in this country, is for the labour movement to participate in the decision-making process whenever it has an opportunity.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Mackasey: They had an opportunity to participate in this fight against inflation from the very beginning and they chose, as is their democratic right, to ignore the existence of the board and not to bring forward the name of a person suitable to the Congress to sit on that board. It was their own decision.

I can understand the problem of the Canadian Labour Congress and I can see the progress that is being made. I can understand their fear, and it is a legitimate one, that somehow this system might be applied unjustly to labour because it is easier to control wages than it is to control prices. I can understand their concern.

But remember, Mr. Speaker, inflation hits the poor, the hungry, the senior citizens, the people who live on fixed incomes. And these traditionally have been areas with which labour is concerned. If we have old age pensions in this country, if we have minimum wages to help the poor, if we have any kind of medicare program, we have to thank the labour movement for it. As Hubert Humphrey said the other day, there are no votes in being a spokesman for the poor any more, or for the underprivileged or for the sick or for the senior citizen. That is a liability in a country which is tending to be very reactionary and losing track of the fact that we have to help each other in society.

Labour, too, is not without sin, and there are times when the labour movement can be wrong. That is something the hon. member for Nickel Belt cannot seem to understand. I do not happen to believe you can eliminate the adversary concept entirely. Collective bargaining is nothing more than a reflection of individual rights. When you talk about industrial relations you are really talking about human relations, and we all have the adversary system built into us as part of our culture.

We shall never solve all the problems which arise between labour and management by everyone becoming idealistic about an objective. That is why we have government. Sometimes it has to do things it would not wish to do under normal circumstances. But take the large labour unions. Last year their wage settlements happened to be higher than inflation. They did not suffer. The people who suffer are the unorganized, those who have to live on fixed incomes, the people on minimum wages. If you want government and members of parliament and the business community to stop taking more out of the system than we can afford, in order to help those very people, is it so wrong or anti-labour to say to organized labour; "You, too, have a responsibility to co-operate, if only for 18 months or two years, in order to help break the spiral"?

I think that in 1976 it is a little much to be talking about "they" and "we", or about the employer as the enemy, or about labour as the enemy. I am glad my colleague mentioned that there are people making $20,000 or $22,000 in the paper industry. More power to them! Let's face it, though, they are middle income or upper middle income people; they are people who have something left over and they want to invest; they want to invest in a country that is prosperous, a country that is going somewhere. They do not want to see their savings eaten up by inflation. They are as concerned about the profit motive as myself, or any member of the House of Commons.

It is ridiculous to think that a family today cannot earn sufficient—those who are working—to have something left over for investment. The working class wear two hats in effect. Are we here talking about the anti-inflation program? Are we talking about labour's role in it? If we are, we shouldn't be here tonight; we should be taking an opposition day from the New Democratic Party to do some soul searching to find out whether the Anti-inflation Board is functioning properly, whether the program is being applied justly, whether we need to make modifications, because for once in our life we have a common objective which is fighting inflation. If we are not fighting it right, let's hear about it.

But that is not why we are here tonight. We are here because in the opinion of the Speaker there is an emergency, and that emergency arises, it is said, because the CLC made a decision to withdraw from all the government boards. I am saying that this is inaccurate. One thing that the mover and the seconder of this motion should have done at the beginning of this debate was to apologize for having unintentionally mislead the House.

An hon. Member: Intentionally.

Mr. Mackasey: If it were not for the passage to which I have referred, the Speaker would never have permitted this debate under Standing Order 26. He might have said the subject could be discussed on the next opposition day, or on estimates, or during the question period. But he would never have allowed this method of allowing a discussion of something which has not happened and is not necessarily about to happen.

I do not want to misrepresent the CLC. I want to be their friend. Compared with the NDP, the Canadian Labour congress is one of the most responsible organizations of the country. They did not say they were walking out of all government organizations, thus negating their influence on behalf of their members. They have an obligation to be on these boards. They exist to look after the workers of this country, and the workers are entitled to be represented on key boards, the Economic Council and others. That is so under the statute. The union has an obligation—not a privilege but an obligation—to make the views of its members known. To the best of my knowledge their contribution has always been equal to, and on most occasions better than that of management or the academic world or any other group.

Now to turn round and have parliament, the press, spectators, opposition members, and the staff here on the spurious—

Mr. Benjamin: Quit crying about it.

Mr. Mackasey: I know the hon. member would sit here seven days a week, 24 hours a day, isolated from reality. The reality is, as the hon. member should know, that we are here under false pretences. We are not here to discuss the Anti-Inflation Board. We are not even here to discuss any alleged weaknesses in the act or the appeal section. We are here because we have been informed that the Canadian Labour Congress has made a decision based on their concern—

Mr. Symes: Read the whole motion.

Mr. Mackasey: If the motion had been worded to the effect that the Canadian Labour Congress was considering the possibility of withdrawing from these various boards in light of their disaffection with the section of the act that may or may not deny them an appeal, then on the strength of that I do not think the Speaker would have called for this debate tonight. But I can understand the Speaker calling for the debate when he is told that the Canadian Labour Congress, representing two million Canadian workers, is about to "withdraw from all areas of co-operation with the federal government in every province", "leading inevitably to further breakdown in civil order in Canada". That is a pretty serious statement.

Is it not an awful condemnation of the labour movement to presume that they would be so irresponsible as to bring about a break down in civil order in this country? Who is causing labour to be labelled irresponsible if it is not the New Democratic Party? I would imagine that the Canadian Labour Congress are about to disassociate themselves from this very radical and rash statement.

Mr. Benjamin: Phone and ask them.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member says phone and ask them. Isn't that a great contribution! He does not go to the bathroom without phoning somebody and asking them if he can go. Without consulting the CLC he would not be able to find his way to the washroom. What a great contribution he makes. I hope he sends it to all of his constituents. He can tell them "I told the government to phone the CLC and ask them". Ask them what? Ask them if they are going to recommend a breakdown of civil order in Canada? The labour movement in this country has never been irresponsible. It has never been radical to that point. I am surprised that his so-called friends of the labour movement are suggesting that the Canadian Labour Congress would be so irresponsible as to start some movement that would lead inevitably "to further breakdown of civil order in Canada." That is a pretty serious charge.

I will not deal further with the New Democratic Party. They stand condemned on the sheer logic of the matter, if I may sum it up in that way. However, I should like to refer to something that must please the members from the Atlantic provinces, and that is that the Irving company is becoming so pro-labour after all these years. That is a wonderful thing! I do remember some of my history, though I say with respect not nearly as much as some other ministers, and if the Irving company really felt so strongly for its workers, it could put some of the money from the increase arrived at through collective bargaining into a trust on behalf of the workers until the administrator came along, not simply to keep their operation going but for the good of the workers. That would be consistent, and until the act were revised, repealed, or amended they could institute an appeal on behalf of their workers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Mr. Mackasey: Why don't they do that? That would get around—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Mackasey: The very fact that—

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. There is no unanimous consent.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, it is indeed a peculiar position in which the House finds itself tonight. We are debating a situation that was predictable from the time the legislation was presented to the House, and which is still predictable. There will be difficulty with it. Sometimes I wonder whether it was intended to work. Sometimes I doubt the credibility of the government that introduced it. I doubt it because it came in with three factors that basically relegated it to a position in which it could not succeed.

First, there were exceptions made by government ruling before the legislation was introduced. Secondly, it was put in a position where price control was second hand and labour control was first. That was bound to make it contentious. Thirdly, it endeavoured, and quite successfully so, to transfer a very major part of the responsibility for control to the provinces.

Since that time the government has proceeded to embarrass everybody it possibly could embarrass. The pattern has been consistent. The minister of health wants to cut his grants from the Government of Canada, and therefore the government is forcing the provinces into the position where they are withdrawing certain services in the health field. We read of provincial governments finding themselves in the position where they must close hospitals, in whole or in part. So it has been a very successful political ploy to transfer responsibility to others, and I submit it is questionable whether the government itself even thought the legislation could work without transferring responsibility for part of it to junior government at the provincial level. It is passing on responsibilities even at the municipal level so as to cut the cake as the government wants it cut. Certainly the legislation was designed to create dissension, and that dissension is apparent.

I was very interested in the remarks of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) as he was sort of pleading with this House and with Canada, and properly so, on behalf of the economic structure in which we find ourselves. We are in a position where inflation is eroding our stability. It is eating away at the very future of our country. So he had a right to plead on behalf of Canada. But I hope he was just as interested and sincere when he stated that, as a result of the remarks of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), there might be some reconsideration of the legislation, and an amendment introduced.

I think Canada will now expect from the Postmaster General, as a member of cabinet, a body of people that must be unanimous in its conclusions, some action to restore equity to the situation. Let us remember that these exceptions were made in order to bail out the Postmaster General from certain problems he inherited and with which he found himself forced to deal. Let us hope that part of his speech was as sincere as his pleading with all Canadians.

● (2310)

The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) spoke in a fashion which indicated that we cannot understand in this House why he chose Canada as his eventual place of residence. It would make one wonder, if that place from whence he came was not satisfactory to him, why he thought he has been so endowed with wisdom he should now run this country. He fled from one, and is it his intention now to try to reduce this country to the level of that from which he fled?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McCain: I did not make one interjection while the hon. member for Nickel Belt spoke—not one and he was a disgrace to the country of his adoption his host country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: If I and other members of this House can sit and listen to the things which would destroy us, then let that hon. member sit and listen while we review the statements he has made. Let us go to that great—

Mr. Gilbert: Attack the argument, not the personality. Deal with the argument.

An hon. Member: How about letting him speak?

Mr. McCain: Are you fellows done over there? Do you mind if somebody else has something to say, in peace and quiet, as did the hon. member for Nickel Belt as far as I am concerned, or are you running off at the mouth to the extent you can't control it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: The people of New Brunswick in the labour movement have exercised great responsibility for a great many years. I submit to you that they have shown they understand the economic problems of New Brunswick and the economic climate in which they work. They chose to work in New Brunswick as members of these unions. I want to thank the hon. member for Nickel Belt for the remarks he made in their support. They are well deserved, and he explained them well. I very much resent the fact that a union in New Brunswick or a New Brunswick corporation should become the victim of a rule when the government itself has already made exceptions for its own employees to solve its own problems. I do not think that is fair to the employer or the employee, and as a result of the exceptions that were made by the government we are now debating this subject tonight as a result of that, and nothing else. This was the exception of an old agreement and the exception of those agreements made before January 1, 1974. This has made a bone of contention throughout the entire structure.

For those great socialists on our left I want to cite the example of a meeting which was held not long ago which involved Canadian elected people as well as Swedish elected people. Among other things that were said, one of the Swedish representatives said if they did not have in Sweden the multinational corporations bringing profits home to his country, they could not support the social system which they have. We, on one hand, are being asked by the socialists on our left for all the benefits which we could possibly hope to extent to mankind, while on the other hand they are denying Canadians, by their propaganda, the right to reap some of the benefits of those companies which do business abroad from this country and who contribute in a major way to our society. They cannot have it coming and going; they cannot have their cake and eat it too.

Let us make up our minds whether we want to live within the abilility of Canada to sustain us, or whether we want to ignore—as the hon. member for Nickel Belt suggested today—the political and economic realities of Canada, cutting the suit to fit his cloth, which I submit would be a very difficult thing to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It is a lot better than your cloth.

Mr. McCain: I should like to add that governments of New Brunswick have had the right to estimate the charges which can be taken from the various resource industries in that area. I submit that the financial records of the pulp and paper industry in that area were taken into consideration as the governments of New Brunswick formulated their policies—whether Liberal or Conservative governments. I submit it ill behooves those who are ignorant of the facts of New Brunswick economics to make statements as irresponsible as those made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt in respect of whether New Brunswick benefits from its natural resources. It benefits because it creates employment and because it encourages development, and if the hon. member for Nickel Belt had not chosen that area as his place of residence, he might better understand some other areas of Canada. I suggest it would behoove him to stick to those things which he knows, rather than to try to speak on a number of Canadian subjects of which he is almost totally ignorant.

I want to compliment not only New Brunswick labour but all facets which make up Canadian society; that is, labour, business and government as represented in this House. Regardless of the workability of the legislation that has been introduced, with all its iniquitous structure we, as Canadians, whether we are in the House of Commons, in the offices of business or members of a union, must take a responsible position toward the long-range business interests of our economy. I plead with those on our left to recognize that there is a point in time beyond which you can go no further. That point has been recognized by the official opposition in its platform and it has been half-recognized by half-hearted legislation on the part of the government. I think this represents the bulk of Canadians, and it is pretty near time for the NDP to take a responsible position. We do not need inciters in Canada today: we need level-headed, clear-thinking realists.

An hon. Member: Like the NDP.

Mr. McCain: We do not need that anaesthetizing which has apparently taken place among certain people who seem to belong to a particular party in this country which is ignorant of the facts of life. They think there is nothing but pie in the sky and all you have to do is reach up, cut it and eat it. It is just not that way, it never has been, and we just cannot make it that way. Let us start exercising responsibility and stop inciting the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I have enjoyed listening to some of the speeches tonight, particularly the speech of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand). His words took me back many years to the days when he was involved with the Catholic Syndicates in Asbestos, and Thetford Mines. I can remember those days when we helped raise money for an industrial union being formed by his colleagues in the Catholic Syndicates. That was a very weak organization at the time, but it had the high principle of establishing a trade union in the area where trade unionism was not developed. We helped them by supplying money in order that they might put up the kind of fight they did over many months. They were eventually able, following the Asbestos and Singer strikes, to establish a union solidarity which enabled them to force the companies into negotiation. This was something that at no time anyone considered possible.

● (2320)

It was interesting tonight to hear the minister, the same man who has been in the trade union movement since that period of time and who was willing to participate in this debate. He made a very good union-hall speech and I enjoyed listening to him make the same type of speech he made many times before.

An hon. Member: The same speech every time.

Mr. Peters: Not necessarily quite the same speech. But I would have appreciated it if he had been able to stand in the House and say he was willing to help as a cabinet minister and ensure that the same kind of justice could flow to people such as workers in the pulp and paper industry whose situation is very different to that which existed some years ago. When he belonged to the Syndicate, they went on the other organizations which they established and eventually arrived at the CNTU. The pulp and paper workers of this country decided not too long ago to establish a Canadian union. They had no money but they were well aware of the fact that the companies were making immense profits. In 1972-73 the profits of that industry quadrupled: the profits of the pulp and paper industry went up from $79 million, after taxes, in 1972 to $320 million in 1973, and they doubled in 1974 to $685 million in net profits, after taxes.

What should the Minister of the Environment have been saying to us, as a trade unionist? I will not speak about the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) because he became obsessed—and I feel sorry for him—with being the member of the cabinet to take on the NDP all the time. He used to have more to say that was constructive, and I think that in the terms of trade unionists he would have been expected to speak for the workers in this country. But what did the Minister of the Environment say, remembering that a company that makes a considerable amount of money under the free enterprise system is a company with a union which will expect to get its share of the profits? There were unprecedented profits, disastrous profits. In one year they paid back 20 per cent in dividends on the equity of the shareholders. That isn't bad. If you can get back 20 cents in the dollar in one year, you can't beat that even if you are in the shyster business and you are taking an unreasonable profit in usury.

I would have expected the Minister of the Environment to say that these workers have the right to get their share from the company. What we are suggesting is that even with the anti-inflation legislation, legislation which has been a total disaster and which has not brought about one favourable decision in terms of cutting prices, in the case of the worker who feels he has been aggrieved, or the employer who feels he has been aggrieved, we will not agree to fight for his right to appeal against a decision which he considers to be unjust.

It seems to me that the least the Minister of the Environment could do is to provide for the workers in the pulp and paper industry and the other workers who are affected by the anti-inflation legislation, leaving aside the judgment of whether it is good or bad, the same kind of opportunity that I and thousands of others had who were in the industrial trade unions in the 1940s. Some of that money came out of our own pockets. I am not asking the minister to do that; I am only asking him to remember the days when he was in the trade union movement and was fighting against insurmountable odds, and the companies in most cases have been facing insurmountable odds. In this case the odds are not only management; they are also government and the full power of the law.

I have spent some time on the picket lines. I can remember spending 8½ months on the picket line in Timmins years ago. The hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) asks why we do not run in the riding. I ran in that riding at one time, long before he was on the political scene, and lost by only 500 votes. It is not unreasonable to think it would be possible to go back there, because already I represent part of the city of Timmins. I had the opportunity, together with my colleague, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) to go into Smooth Rock Falls and Kapuskasing. We talked to the workers and their wives. What they said to us was what I knew to be true after months and months of having to go through exactly the same situation. However, their situation is much tougher. It is tougher because the workers in that industry decided to get out of the international organizations and to build for themselves a Canadian union. They have no strike fund and no moneys put away, yet they have the same vitality, and the same willingness is found among the women to back their husbands in the strike.

There is great enthusiasm among civic officials in these areas to see that the workers get a fair shake. When they organize under provincial legislation they are faced with a cartel by the companies and by the government which passes legislation affecting them, taking away their rights. It is interesting that they were offered in one or two of these cases, particularly in Abitibi, 25 per cent before they went on strike, but they did not think that was reasonable in light of the profits that the company was reaping. Every one of the hypocrites who spoke in the House about free entrerprise would have to agree that if you believe in the free enterprise system, you must agree that the labour movement is also entitled to its share of the free enterprise system.

These people on strike in the pulp and paper industry were faced with, not 25 per cent which they were voluntarily offered by the company, but with 10 per cent because the company said they should be more patriotic than the government itself, and instead of offering the maximum 14 per cent which was referred to in the Irving case they kept it down to 10 per cent. I understand they are voting today and maybe the decision has already been reached on a 14 per cent settlement. That is the increase with which they will go back to work.

How would you like, Madam Speaker, to be one of the strikers who goes back to work, after six months on the picket line, with 14 per cent? You would be doing that, not because the company made you do it but because the government made you do it. All the housewives in the area told us about the increase in the cost of living, and municipal officials told us about the increase in the cost of living and that no taxes were coming in because no one was working in the area—but the costs were going up just the same. What is the answer? I have heard some of the Liberals say that two years from now they can vote if they want. That is little comfort to those who will have to go back to work now. The country will pay dearly for it because there will be no surpluses in the pulp and paper industry. They are not stupid; they will not work seven days a week, or overtime any more and there will not be any inventory.

We are not going to have any exports like we have had in the last few years. The Canadian public will pay dearly for this because the workers are not getting justice. They waited for a decision on the Irving matter. There was no administrator. They had to wait for an administrator. As yet there is no appeal board. We appointed a bunch of temporary people from the civil service. Perhaps there is nothing wrong with them, but the legislation has been drafted. They already received a big increase.

The board members are not really going to be very sympathetic. They will not recognize that workers in the mills will want to be paid a similar amount, in a historical sense, as bush workers in the area. The bush workers are making $1.50 more than the mill workers. For years and years the mill workers were the highest paid people in that area—certainly the bush workers were not—so I think there is an historical obligation for the mill workers to maintain parity with the bush workers.

The Americans have increased the price of paper another $25, and that does not seem like very much. It may be that Canadian companies will not ask to increase the price of paper, but it is interesting to note that in the two years between 1973 and 1975 they have been allowed an increase in the price per ton of newsprint of 52 per cent and an increase in bleach craft pulp of 118 per cent. They may not ask for the $25 right away. They really will not need it, but I suggest they would be awfully stupid to deal on the American market, where most of our surplus goes, if they do not get at least the same price that American companies have to pay for American newsprint. So they are going to get another $25 increase, and the Anti-Inflation Board will not look at that at all.

Where are all the Abitibi plants in my area? I come from northern Ontario, and I speak for northern Ontario. There is a plant at Sturgeon Falls. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) represents that area. The Iroquois Falls plant is in the federal riding of Timmins. The Smooth Rock Falls plant and the Spruce Falls plant are in the Cochrane riding.

I am not too familiar with northwestern Ontario, but I am sure the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) will be able to tell us about those areas. However, it seems to me that those plants will receive an increase in their revenue on top of unjustifiable revenues which they have been making for the last two or three years. They will receive an increase because of the international price, and I suggest there is nothing this House can do to stop that.

All these plants I am talking about in Ontario come under Ontario labour legislation. When I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to use his offices and intervene, I was aware that this came under provincial jurisdiction, and he hastened to point out that he had no responsibility. Mr. Pepin is the labour boss in this country. He will make the decision for every agreement made in this country, and he will set prices. He is now the czar of labour in Canada. The federal Minister of Labour does not matter. He can talk about the little game he has been playing for two years of trying to get management and labour to go along and help him run his business if he wants.

The hon. member from New Brunswick said that other people should not get involved in New Brunswick politics, but the negotiation which took place between Irving and its employees was under the labour legislation of the province of New Brunswick, not federal legislation and not under the Anti-Inflation Act. That settlement was negotiated under the jurisdiction of the New Brunswick labour board, and I think the workers there have the right to take Irving to court to make sure he lives up to the contract which was signed because that was a provincial contract.

We have forgotten that we allowed the total elimination of all jurisdictions in the field of labour by this legislation.

I will close by saying that I sympathize with workers in the pulp and paper industry and those in particular who have been made the bellwether of the anti-labour legislation of the Liberal government. They have led the fight and they are stymied. What can they do? They cannot appeal. There is talk of a one day strike and of withdrawing services. If we lived in a warmer climate I am sure that rebellion would have been talked of, but it is cold here, so the labour movement may walk around 1,000 strong and protest on Parliament Hill. They may do this at provincial legislatures as well, but there is a terrific amount of resentment on the part of every worker in this country who is facing collective bargaining under provincial legislation because workers know that no matter what agreement is signed, and no matter what employers are willing to agree to, an agreement is subject to federal legislation which overrides, eliminates, and negates any benefit which might be had through common, ordinary collective bargaining.

I have known both cabinet ministers who spoke tonight a long time. Both came from honourable backgrounds in the labour movement, and both of them have made contributions to that movement. Never has there been a time when their voices should be raised publicly and in cabinet with greater strength than today, because they have a role to play in telling their colleagues that the whole process of collective bargaining is being destroyed by this legislation without workers in any way seeing any benefit by way of reduction in the cost of natural gas, gasoline, fuel, hydro, or any of the other commodities which make up their cost of living.

Members of trade unions have always been fair and reasonable. I sincerely hope that my two colleagues from better days will make their voices heard on the side of the workers whom they supported, and who supported them for so many years.

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Broadbent: Paperworkers of Toronto, here we go.

Mr. Abbott: I am glad I have 20 minutes because I may have to endure the catcalls of my hon. friends opposite.

At the risk of offending the sensibilities of my hon. friends opposite I should like to confine my comments to the motion which is before us tonight.

Mr. Broadbent: You would be the first Liberal who has tonight.

Mr. Abbott: I may be the first Liberal who has, but certainly from the last few speakers I have heard on the NDP benches there have not been any appropriate comments in connection with the Irving decision which gave rise to this problem.

Perhaps I could say at the outset that I have considerable sympathy for the indignation expressed by the labour movement in connection with this decision because I think that, upon analysis, it has tended to distort the viewpoint that we might have of the anti-inflation program and the possibilities of appeal.

I should like to start by quoting part of the question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

—which would give trade unions the same right of appeal as that enjoyed by the corporations and to remove the necessity of breaking the law in order to get a case before the administrator. I would therefore ask the minister if the government is prepared to introduce two amendments. First, an amendment to provide for the appeal by any party affected by a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to the administrator and second, an amendment which would allow any person affected by the decision of the administrator to appeal directly to the appeal tribunal?

The minister stated that he was going to give consideration to this suggestion. I should like to deal with the first point, which is the appeal from the order of the Anti-Inflation Board which I think is actually a misconstruction of the whole matter. The Anti-Inflation Board was not given the power to issue an order; it was given the power to state that if in its judgment the guidelines had been exceeded by the parties to which it was addressing itself and it then was entitled by the law to make reference to the administrator. Clearly, unless a party states they are not going to abide by the moral suasion exercised by the AIB, it is not a matter of appealing because there is no onus upon them to obey anything said by the AIB until they make their reference to the administrator.

An hon. Member: They get fined if they do not appeal the order?

Mr. Abbott: For the benefit of my friends in the smoking area, the order is applied only by the administrator, not by the Anti-Inflation Board. I should like to trace the procedures which took place in the Irving case. First, an agreement was reached between the parties, as every hon. member is aware. The Anti-Inflation Board studied the settlement and then rejected the contract and set up a revised level of compensation which it stated should be more within the guidelines and should be accepted by the parties.

The Anti-Inflation Board then asked the parties whether they intended to conform with the board's decision. They also advised the parties that if they did not, the board was going to make reference, as it was entitled to by law, to the administrator. On January 23, the two parties informed the Anti-Inflation Board that they, together, were not prepared to modify their agreement. Therefore, the Anti-Inflation Board, following correct procedure, referred it to the administrator. At that point there was no question of appeal. Appeal from what? They were simply asking, "Do you accept, or reject, our suggestion?" The reply was, "No, we don't". Then the board said, in so many words, that the only alternative was to send it to the administrator.

The first part of the question put by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is inappropriate, I believe, because there is never a possibility for an appeal of a morally suasive decision by the Anti-Inflation Board. It is then referred to the administrator. As was indicated in the early stages of debating the Anti-Inflation bill, the administrator is, in a sense, the bulldog with the teeth who simply takes the Anti-Inflation Board's determination. Then in accordance with the act it has the right to bring in other facts, but essentially the task of the administrator is to issue the order.

Section 30(1) says that any person against whom an order has been made by the administrator may appeal, and so on. So the curious feature of the Irving case is that while both parties went through the Anti-Inflation Board, both parties went to the administrator—and both parties and in the administrator's "whereas" clauses—only one party was the subject of his order, Therefore, in accordance with the law, only one party can appeal.

Mr. Broadbent: We are objecting to the law. That is the point.

Mr. Abbott: My point is simply to say I think it is curious and anomalous that the two parties appear equally guilty of not abiding by the law. The administrator, within his jurisdiction, issued an order fining only the one party, thereby excluding the union from appealing. I share the view that there is a party to the agreement, a party who was equally dissatisfied with the agreement, a party who appeared before the administrator, who was stated to be a party before the administrator, and by some strange logic the administrator applied his order only to the employer.

An hon. Member: You want the workers fined as well; is that it?

Mr. Abbott: No, the workers are being penalized by taking the reduced wage. That is not my point. My point, and I assume the point of the Canadian labour congress, is that they are denied the right of appeal because of this order. The due course of law that would have been theirs had they been joined in the order was denied them. I am simply saying that presumably it would be a welcome amendment to the law to say that any party who is a party to the order has the right of appeal.

Mr. Broadbent: That is what we said.

Mr. Abbott: So we have no argument, beyond that I suggest the point made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, or which he implied in his question, is not appropriate in that there can be no appeal from a simple request to the parties to obey the decision of the AIB.

An hon. Member: That was yesterday; that was not the proposal that was made today.

Mr. Abbott: I am not talking about proposals. I am trying to talk about the course that was followed in the Irving case and the law, as I see it, in the statute. I am simply stating that I agree that if the administrator is not going to see fit to join both parties in his order, thereby enabling both parties to appeal, the law should be amended to provide, that both parties to an order should be permitted to appeal.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Madam Speaker, one cannot but be impressed with the sincerity of the New Democratic Party motion. I notice that as one their own speaker is addressing himself to the resolution, only half of their caucus is present. One cannot but be impressed, either, with the wave of piety in the House when we are discussing the dilemmas and problems facing the poor in our nation. I have noticed that members of the NDP really do hate poverty. We in British Columbia know that better than anyone else. As soon as the NDP was elected there, they doubled their salaries—so we know they hate poverty. We had a human resources minister there who had such compassion for the deprived in society that he wanted to work out their problems, but he needed a very expensive assistant to work with him because he hired an executive assistant at a salary of $35,000 a year.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I have been listening to the hon. member with great attention, and I am afraid he is getting a little beyond the motion.

Mr. Friesen: I am coming to that, Madam Speaker. I just want to emphasize that when you hire an executive assistant for $35,000 and then give him a sabbatical, you are not that interested in poverty. I recognize that we are faced with a dilemma in this House. On the one hand we have a government program which is something like the captain of the Titanic appointing a committee to see where icebergs come from. On the other hand, the NDP resolution of the problem is like the crew of the Titanic insisting on a 30 per cent wage increase before they drowned in the icy waters.

Mr. Peters: If they had done that they would still be alive.

Mr. Friesen: The point is, both are irrelevant. The object now is to save the ship, and to do that you must anticipate the problems. That is what we tried to do in 1974 in our party. The problem the government faces today is not simply one of the acceptance of the Anti-Inflation Board's program which they have proposed; it is basically a problem of credibility. When it comes down to the nub of the question, nobody believes them any more.

● (2350)

Why does it take so long for the federal government and provincial governments, and the federal government, organized labour and other elements of the economy, to come to agreements? Surely the reason is that various segments of the economy do not know how they stand with the government. The government's credibility is in question.

In 1974 I well remember the Prime Minister saying to this country's workers, "The Conservatives will freeze your wages." Today the workers of Canada remember what the Prime Minister said in the 1974 election campaign and wonder, "Can we believe this guy any longer." At the same time the NDP "conned" the workers into believing they could ask for ever larger pieces of the pie without increasing productivity. The workers kept asking for more; there was always more to be had from where the last increase came.

If one considers the meaning of the term "collective bargaining" at its face value, one must concede that the motion before the House has some validity. When the government establishes what the wage settlement of workers shall be, there can be no bargaining. When it establishes unilaterally the terms of an agreement, there can be no collective solution. The very terms "collective bargaining" and "administrator" in this context are mutually exclusive. Logically, the Minister of Labour is redundant, a vestigial organ of government. Who needs the Minister of Labour when there is no longer effective bargaining?

The government's program lacks credibility. It should be noted that the Prime Minister has never made a speech in this House on the anti-inflation program. He has spoken across the country on this subject, but never once in this House. We wonder is he really serious if he is not willing to face parliament on this most critical part of the government's program.

The second problem is this: the government lacks consistency in its actions. Today the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) announced spending increases of not more than 16 per cent; but worker's wage settlements are supposed to be not more than 10 per cent. Where is the government's consistency in asking the workers to accept not more than 10 per cent when it, itself, will spend an extra 16 per cent?

Let me allude to another area of inconsistency. Not long ago the House passed Bill C-71 to do with the reformation of the Criminal Code. Features in that legislation were long overdue. Now the government proposes to introduce a bill ensuring greater peace and security. If the government is so concerned about the ideal of justice for everyone in the land, why not extend justice to those in labour engaged in collective bargaining? Why not introduce legislation which will guarantee the right of appeal for workers involved in the bargaining process? On the one hand the government says its program is voluntary; on the other, the program itself encourages the opposition of adversaries and class confrontation.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) was quite right when he said that collective bargaining ought to involve human relations, ought to involve a process in which men and women of good will sit down at the bargaining table, discuss matters of mutual interest and try to come to a reasonable, sensible, and sensitive resolution of their problems. Really this is a matter involving human relations. But you can only bargain if the men and women involved in the bargaining process consider themselves as equals. If one side is waving a club over the head of the other, it is no longer a matter of human relations. If one side has an advantage over the other, again there will not be that element of human relations. Human relations are not involved when there is but a single dimension, a single party, in the bargaining process. There must be provision for recourse to an impartial judge and jury made up to the peers of the parties, who can adjudicate on the situation.

The NDP motion says nothing for the 80 per cent of our work force which has never enjoyed bargaining rights or never entered into collective agreements. Is not the NDP position specious? Why is the party so worked up about that part of the labour force which has been organized some time and engaged in collective bargaining, and not greatly worked up about the rest of the work force, about those who have never been guaranteed these rights and who, so to speak, have been disenfranchised in the labour force? I am led to believe that the socialists are exercised about the matter because the vested interests of the party coincide with the interests of the group they defend, and there will be implications concerning fund raising when the next election comes around.

I agree that the workers who have been on strike nearly one year face an impossible future and unnecessary hardship. As the Postmaster General said, if the parties to the dispute had sat down together and discussed the matter in a human way, in a way involving human relations, the situation would never have come to this pass. There must be other ways of resolving this problem. There has been greed on one side and stubbornness on the other, and we know the result.

I suggest that our plight is serious and that the motion before the House has merit. One could criticize the government for many of the shortcomings of its program. For that reason I ask government supporters to bring pressure to bear on the cabinet and ask the cabinet to introduce a bill which will ensure that the country's workers will have recourse to justice. It is clear that at present there is no such recourse. I commend this action to hon. members on the government side. Let them take the subject matter of the motion under advisement, and let us see if we cannot introduce some righteousness to the way in which we treat the workers of our country.

Labour Conditions

● (Midnight)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, the purpose of this motion was to bring to the attention of the House the fact that the press reports that the Canadian Labour Congress, which represents almost two million workers in Canada, is considering withdrawing its representatives from a number of government-labour-management committees which have been set up over the past 25 years. This is in protest against the fact that in the legislation passed by the government to deal with the inflation problem, there is no method by which workers or their trade unions can appeal against a decision by the Anti-Inflation Board or the administrator, against a decision which they consider to be unfair.

We listened to the greatest demagogue in this parliament, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand), who has had so many portfolios that even I cannot remember them, tell this House that members of this party are being demagogic. We listened to that friend of the Labour movement, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), suggest that members of the New Democratic Party were egging on the labour movement. He stated that if it were not for the NDP, the labour movement would not be opposing the government's anti-inflation program.

Today I got the latest issue of the Liberal party's house organ, Maclean's magazine. That magazine is beholden to the government because of legislation, which I support, that will eliminate Time magazine. It contains an article which I commend to the member who intends to speak. The title is "The Revolt of the Middle-Class Worker". This article was not written by a member of the NDP. It was written by one of the staff of what I call the house organ of the Liberal party, Maclean's. Let me put on record the last paragraph of that article. I quote:

—the federal government is committed to price and wage controls, the labor movement is as unmoving in its opposition to them, and a confrontation is inevitable. When it happens, 1975, for all its turmoil, will look like a year of tranquility in comparison.

That is Maclean's assessment of what we will have in 1976. Why? It is partly for the reason which we indicated in our motion. Had the government listened to the questions we have been asking for the past couple of weeks, had it followed the advice given tonight by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott), and had it indicated it was prepared to amend the legislation so that workers would have the right to appeal against a decision which they feel is unfair, we would not need to have this debate.

In every other kind of situation in which people feel they have been unjustly dealt with by a law, they have a right to go to a court for redress. Let me give some illustrations. Whether there be Liberal, Conservative, NDP or Social Credit governments, the provinces today are in the process of enacting legislation implementing rent controls. There is not one province which will pass a law which does not provide the right of a tenant or landlord to go before an independent appeal board if they feel they have been mistreated under the provisions of the law.

The government of Saskatchewan passed legislation permitting it to take over the potash mines. Written into the legislation are specific provisions outlining how the companies, if they do not agree with the government as to the price to be paid for the companies, will be permitted to take their complaints to an independent board chaired by a judge of the Superior Court of Saskatchewan.

[Mr. Friesen.]

The Minister of Consumer Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) felt that the sugar companies had conspired to raise the price of sugar. He was probably right. But his department and the Government of Canada, took those companies to court. They lost the case, and when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had some unkind things to say about the court and the judge, he was himself called before a court and penalized.

I cannot think of a situation where the government passes a law and then says that its appointees will be the prosecutors, the judge, and the jury all put together. Yet that is what we find in the present instance. We have heard a good deal about the workers being unreasonable in their demands. One would think, from some of the comments which have been made, that workers in the paper mills went on strike for no good reason—that they should have been satisfied with what they were offered by the companies.

Lest anyone is under the impression that these are poor companies I should like to read from the brief which the union presented to the anti-inflation administrator as follows:

The pulp and paper industry in Canada was coming out of a period of unprecedented prosperity which in 1973 saw them more than quadruple their 1972 net profits, after taxes, of $79 million to $320 million and then more than double this figure in 1974 to some $685 million.

That sounded extreme to me. I thought the union might be exaggerating. So I took the trouble, as any hon. member might, of going to the reading room and getting the Financial Post survey of industries for 1975. I turned to the section dealing with the pulp and paper industry. What did I find? I want to put these figures on the record because we shall soon learn whether the employees were being unreasonable.

Here we find the Abitibi Paper Company, one of the leaders in the industry. In 1972, according to their own figures supplied to the Financial Post, they showed a net profit of $8.5 million. In 1973 profits rose to $30 million, and in 1974 they rose to $45,800,000. Here are the figures for Consolidated Bathurst, no relation, of course, to the Liberal Party. In 1972 they made a net profit of $6.4 million. In 1973 net profit rose to $19.8 million, and in 1974 to $47.7 million. Here are the figures for the Price Company: in 1972, $6.6 million; in 1973, $7.2 million, and in 1974, $31.6 million.

It is the nature of the free enterprise system and of real collective bargaining that when companies make large profits, workers in the unions ask, and expect to get, a share of that increased profit. And that is all this union was doing. So they went on strike. When did they go on strike? Before the government announced its anti-inflation program. They had no knowledge this would happen. That is when they went on strike. Some of them were on strike for seven months.

When agreement was reached with the Irving paper company, the Anti-Inflation Board said, "Your increase of 23 per cent or 21 per cent is too much; you cannot have more than 14 per cent". Did the Anti-Inflation Board say what happened to the profits of the Irving company, or to the profits of Abitibi, or Bathurst Consolidated? No. After all, profits of corporations are sacrosanct and cannot be touched. Are their prices going to come down? Of course not.

The clown chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, a former cabinet minister, former director of half a dozen companies, who will have earned the undying support of the corporations so that when he leaves his $50,000 job he will get appointed to a dozen corporations or boards, will guarantee that they are entitled to at least 95 per cent of the profits they have made during the last five years, and of course they will be happy with that. They have never made so much money, so why should they not be satisfied? We know from Revenue Canada that there is no real way to monitor the profits. We know they will go up more than that.

It is no wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the unions went on strike. They went on strike before the act was proclaimed. They reached an agreement before the administrator had been appointed. They asked the administrator as soon as he was appointed to investigate the matter, but he said he could not do so until it was referred to him by the board. Weeks later it was referred to him, and then he made a finding that the company had violated the act. Will the workers who will not be able to get the increase for which they went on strike be able to appeal that decision or go to a court? No. They will not even be able to go to the appeal tribunal.

With regard to the appeal tribunal, it is chaired by a former civil servant with a great record. He was a deputy minister of manpower and immigration and was a failure. So he was moved out of that position and was made chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. He was a disaster there, so they made him chairman of the Tariff Board. Then having failed there, he has now been made chairman of the appeal tribunal. Is it any wonder that the workers are unhappy? Is it any wonder that responsible trade union leaders are withdrawing from all boards and commissions appointed over the years? If we are to have polarization and class conflicts in this country of the kind that we have not seen since the 1930s, it will be because of the unthinking, unfeeling, cynical policies of this government.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wins an election by promising the Canadian people that there will be no wage controls because wage controls are unfair and will harm them. He gets elected with an increased majority on this promise. He then proceeds to steal the program of the opposition party, and then has the gall to criticize all members of the opposition who said we should have controls, when he opposed them, as well as those who opposed controls when he opposed them and who still oppose them, and says we are somehow being unpatriotic or worse. There has been no such act of cynicism in the history of Canadian politics in the more than 100 years that we have been a country. We know parliament has voted on this question and that the government has the legislation it wants enacted.

We know that until the legislation is changed by parliament, or until the courts declare, as I think they will, that parliament has no constitutional authority to pass this legislation, the legislation is law. We know that like any other law it should be lived up to, observed, and obeyed by all citizens of this country. Justice must not only be done, it must be seen to be done. There is no justice and there can be no appearance of justice with a law which, either by accident or by design, is imperfect. I do not know whether this was by accident or by design, but I have been here too long and watched Liberal governments too often to believe this was entirely accidental. It is obvious that this law is flawed and leaves a great deal to be desired.

We did not have to sit here from eight o'clock this evening till 12.30 tonight listening to the sanctimonious approach of the Minister of the Environment and the Postmaster General. We did not need the Minister of Labour to come over here privately and ask us why we do not stop talking because he knows we are right and the government is going to amend the legislation. All the Prime Minister had to do yesterday, a week ago, or today, was admit there was something wrong with this legislation and say the government intended to correct it. All he had to do was be decent and honest enough to do that and we would not have had this debate tonight.

Had the Prime Minister done that we would not now have the responsible, hard working and decent leadership of the labour movement threatening to withdraw from the Economic Council of Canada, from the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee, and from that newborn babe created by the Minister of Labour, the Canada Labour Relations Council. We did not need any of this if the Prime Minister had done what anybody with any decency would have done; simply say he was prepared to amend the legislation.

Any decent and responsible individual would have done this if it were true, as has been alleged, and as I believe is now obvious, that in fact the working people who are directly affected by decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board, arbitrators, and possibly tribunals, do not have the right to appeal, as does any citizen of this country in respect of any other law passed by a government, federal, provincial or municipal. Had the Prime Minister done this we would not be here tonight.

I hope those who suggest the imperfection of this law was an accident and not deliberate are correct. I hope in the next day or two, or the next week, we will have the Minister of Labour, or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), who piloted the original anti-inflation legislation through parliament, rise in his seat and move the first reading of a bill amending this legislation and making it clear without any doubt, and without any need to go to court or hire a high priced lawyer, that any worker or union that feels a ruling of the Anti-Inflation Board or an administrator is in fact contrary to the law, will have the right to go to court as would be the case in respect of any other law passed by this parliament or by any other jurisdiction in this country.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the motion that is before us tonight really refers to two items. One is the allegation in the motion that the CLC has announced its intention to withdraw from co-operative action with the federal government—and it has already been pointed out that considerable poetic licence is involved in this: the CLC is actively considering this matter. What a difference between the two statements. The second part of the motion refers to the right of appeal by bodies subject to orders of the Anti-Inflation Board or the administrator to appeal their ruling to the appeal tribunal. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) when speaking tonight indicated that if there were imperfections in the appeal system, he was quite prepared to look at it again and see what changes would have to be made.

I would like to speak for a few moments about the pulp and paper strike that has been going on in our country now for some months, affecting many communities throughout the country. This strike is a broadly-based one, one that affects communities across the country. It is a labour dispute that affects practically every province, and it has tremendous detrimental effect on many communities throughout Canada. Over 25,000 members of the Canadian Pulp and Paperworkers Union in numerous towns and cities have suffered through the long and difficult months, in some cases up to seven months.

I am especially conscious of the harmful effects that this strike has had on the many industrial towns in Canada where these industries are located. My own constituency of Algoma is facing serious economic problems, not only with the shutdown of the E.B. Eddy plant in Espanola but also because of the spillover effects which this strike has had on other related industries. This area in northern Ontario has often been considered economically depressed, so you can well appreciate that a solution of this labour dispute is of prime importance to the residents of the towns and cities in the area. In Algoma, the strike is located in the town of Espanola. This one-industry town literally has been brought low as a result of the strike, with over 1,000 workers affected and the economy of the town hit rock bottom.

Many families have received virtually no financial assistance for these past four months. Family savings and investments have been used up, and many are now facing serious debt. Other services and activities in the town have been cut back or curtailed. The morale of such a one-industry town is severely damaged by this long shut-down. The effects have, however, spread significantly to virtually all communities in the Manitoulin Islands and North Shore. Support industries to the paper mill are closed or are operating under severe hardship. The number of families thus affected is multiplied enormously.

I have been approached by many individuals and small businessmen who are facing serious financial problems because of the strike, asking me to seek government assistance for them. Many residents employed in the areas north and east of Sault Ste. Marie, located in the Algoma riding in the bush operations of the Abitibi plant, are likewise without work. So the effects of a pulp and paper strike ripple out to the entire community, even into the bush lot operations and the small sawmills selling wood chips to the paper mills. The communities in northern Ontario rely primarily on mining, forestry and pulp related operations. Half of them have been idle for four to seven months, and many families have had to move to other locations and even to southern Ontario and cut their social and community ties. The resulting problems for these one-industry towns are enormous.

I believe that a very unfortunate aspect of this strike has been that it affects most severely families in the small communities and towns throughout the country where media coverage is not as good as in our large urban centres. So in some ways, for much of the country in urban Canada it has really been a forgotten strike because the media has not covered it and they have not brought the normal pressure to bear which often occurs with regard to strikes.

While it may be that some companies have suffered because of losing customers to plants in the United States, it is clear that the companies must shoulder much of the blame for lack of settlement in the negotiations. This is an industry which operates on the leader principle where the big companies tend to settle first, and then the smaller companies settle. At least, this is the theory. Often there is not a concerted effort by the smaller companies to negotiate. By the same token, the companies have not had the normal pressure to settle because of high inventories in the pulp and paper business overhanging the market.

In this connection, I do not think the Canadian people have been greatly affected by this strike, although the effect has been devastating in the small industry towns where many of the pulp and paper mills are located. However, there has not been a public outcry because there really has not been any direct shortage of paper. If there has, it has been so minimal that it has not been noticed by the general public.

Another aspect of the strike which I think is important is that many trade unionists believe there has been a deliberate challenge to the new Canadian Paperworkers Union as it is just beginning to get itself established: it was set up in 1974. We need strong unions which can adequately represent the workers in our plants and production centres, and encouragement is due to the members of the CPU because this is a relatively new union. Its resources have been quite limited, and as a result the assistance it has been able to give its membership during the strike has been limited.

During the last week or so I have been encouraged to see that negotiations are resuming in many parts of the country. There have been some settlements, and I hope there will be more. Although some people will criticize some specific aspect of the anti-inflation program, such as the appeal procedure which is the subject of this motion, I believe most people agree with the need for a program and want to see it work to combat inflation. Our inflation and unemployment rates are too high. It can be argued that our rate of inflation is lower than that of Great Britain and our unemployment rate is lower than that of the United States; however, they are both too high for Canada. As a country, we have a special stake in a good price performance and a low unemployment rate. We are a trading nation. A large percentage of our GNP comes from foreign trade, larger than nearly every other industrialized nation, so it is in our own interest to have competitive prices so that we can sell our products abroad and create jobs at home.

Likewise, on the job scene we have special circumstances in Canada compared with nearly every other industrialized western nation, because we have the fastest growing labour force—a growth rate of 50 per cent during the period from 1965 to 1980, and over this period over 3.5 million new jobs will be created. Comparing this with other countries, we can see its significance. For example, in the United States, for the same period 1965 to 1980, there will be a 30 per cent increase. During the same period, most western European countries will have a 5 per cent growth in their labour forces. Countries like Sweden have practically no growth rate. So it is important that we control inflation and create more jobs.

I believe that there is general support for the anti-inflation program, not only to reduce prices but also to help our unemployment problem and to put us in a position where we can take advantage of the general economic upturn which seems to be indicated for the last half of this year. Already there has been some indication of a reduction in the rate of the consumer price index with rates lower in both December and January. The December increase was the lowest for any month in three years, only .1 per cent, and January's was at an annual rate of 7.2 per cent. Both are lower than last year. Likewise, the jobless rate has been reduced during the past month or so.

It seems to me that the price side must be the critical concern of the Anti-Inflation Board in the months ahead. Only if the rate of prices continues to moderate will working people be willing to have guidelines on wages. Some 6,500 firms across the country now have to disclose to the Anti-Inflation Board all their profits, prices and dividends and provide this information to the board by February 27. The profits must not increase even though the volume of sales goes up. As well, 117 major firms and their subsidiaries—which brings it up to some 200—which sell $28 billion worth of consumer goods and industrial materials must give the Anti-Inflation Board 30 days notice of any significant increase in price. The board has the power through the administrator to roll back unjustified price increases and should use this power whenever necessary.

Members of the New Democratic Party, during the years of the Food Prices Review Board, demanded that the board be given power to roll back unjustified price increases, profits and rip-offs. Now we have a board with exactly these powers. Why do they not support it?

Mr. Symes: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I hope the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) would not want to mislead the House. There are no roll-back provisions for the Anti-Inflation Board relating to prices.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Has the hon. member for Algoma completed his speech?

Mr. Foster: Yes.

Mr. Symes: Madam Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Foster: No, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Peters: The answer is not written out, so he cannot give it.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate. I have been bothered for several months because the Canadian people have not paid more attention to this strike in the pulp and paper industry. In mid-December I proposed a motion under Standing Order 26 which was not accepted. It seems to me that in this country, unless something happens in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver or Ottawa it just does not happen. When there was a very serious strike in the Post Office, every minute of every day the press was bombarding the minister. This particular strike, which affects more people and affects the economy perhaps as much as the Post Office strike, drew no attention at all until the situation became desperate. I welcome this debate and I am pleased that we at least have a chance to give some attention to a very serious problem.

We are all aware of the twin scourges of inflation and unemployment. I spoke on this matter at least two years ago in terms of the Galbraithian idea that prices were being manipulated and wage costs were being passed on. I was, therefore, pleased that the sector of the economy capable of passing on these costs was brought under the controls. Companies with 500 employees or more were controlled so that something could be done to avoid the scourge of inflation which is accompanied by high unemployment. The controls were not introduced in 1974, as the Conservative party had wanted. Then our inflation was fed by demand, and controls would only have complicated the situation and made it worse. There would have been a tendency to reduce supply.

By 1975 conditions had changed and we experienced cost-push inflation. At that stage of the game the controls were probably necessary.

In July and August, 1974, labour income was lagging and prices had risen more quickly than labour income. During the period 1974-75 we saw some significant catch-up affecting a significant portion of the country's working people. Some had not experienced this catch-up when the government introduced controls in October. Consequently it included the provision covering contracts entered into before January 1, 1974, special cases, and historical relationships.

I am not happy with the deliberations of the board on these two particular matters and I am not happy with its workings. The board has not adequately assessed historical relationships, for instance, those that exist between woodland workers and those in the mill. It overlooked the significant increases granted to woodland workers, certainly in my area, in late 1974 and again in 1975. These distorted the picture. I do not think that the Irving settlement, if applied to the Abitibi and Great Lakes paper companies, would have been adequate. I do not think the board took into account these historic relationships. I think the board has failed to come to grips with some of these problems, and for a good reason. It does not fully understand what the implications of its programs will be for the labour movement and does not know how its programs will affect the general welfare of Canadians.

We have four paper mills in our town, three Abitibi mills and one Great Lakes mill, on strike. The first group has been on strike eight months, the second for six. It has been a long strike and there is much hardship. As the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), said many families are in real trouble. There is no welfare and no unemployment insurance for most. That situation has created great hardship in our community. It was expected that the settlement would be better than that which the board would allow in the Irving company case. These expectations apparently will not be met. There is a great deal of understandable concern, of chagrin, among the people in our community who have been badly affected by the strike.

There are basic causes for the board's inadequacy. I do not think either the labour movement or the NDP can escape from the consequences of their actions, or from the responsibility for some of the causes leading to the board's shortcomings. What are they?

First, the failure to put a labour representative on the board has caused some of the shortcomings of the board. I well know, as do other hon. members, that the CLC effectively blocked the appointment of a labour representative to the board. The third appointee would have served with Mr. Pepin and Mrs. Plumptre, and would have been a labour representative. I think the board in its deliberations has been less than fair to labour because labour has not been represented. This is an important factor in the board's shortcomings.

There is another factor that is also extremely important. That is in the whole formation of the policy the attitude that labour took when they said they would have nothing to do with it. That is unfortunate because there are things that could and would have been done had the labour movement said that because they did not like it there were some amendments that should be made. For example, I would like to have seen an amendment that would have taken contracts before January 1, 1974, right out of it. Pressure from labour would have had some effect along that line. I hope the appeal process will be corrected. I am sure that if labour had shown more interest and had gotten behind some of these changes, it would have occurred.

In spite of the reaction, not of trade union members but of the trade union movement, I call on the government to make an appointment to the board, even on a temporary basis. If that appointee is not from the trade union movement, he or she should at least be someone sympathetic to the problems of labour. That appointment should be made shortly.

The board will be hearing the terms of settlement of the IWA, the west coast settlement, which I believe is roughly 16.2 per cent. I hope they will look at this settlement very carefully, not reject it out of hand, and not lower it. There is a great deal of justice in that settlement.

I call on the government to bring in an amendment allowing for an appeal as soon as possible. I ask that the cabinet take another look at the Irving settlement, particularly if the board tends to agree with the west coast settlement.

These are the suggestions that I have made: an immediate appointment to the board, a favourable look at the west coast settlement, bringing in an amendment as soon as possible to allow for an appeal, and hearing an appeal from the union. These are the four steps that we must take.

I am very concerned about the future of labour-management relations in this country. I am concerned about the confrontation aspect that is creeping in nowadays. It is not necessary. It is not the Canadian way. It will create a great many difficulties.

There is a need for strong anti-inflation measures such as the present controls. It is extremely important that labour be part of the whole operation. We have to start taking new directions. As the Prime Minister indicated, we may want to look at the West German or Swedish models. At this point it is very important that the trade union movement, labour, be included in consultations. This confrontation business is not going to work. If there had been consultation rather than confrontation we would not be having this debate tonight.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit me a question.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to accept a question.

Mr. Benjamin: I listened very closely to the disappointement which the hon. member expressed with respect to the legislation. During the debate on the legislation, many suggestions were made to make the kinds of improvements the hon. member was talking about, but the government refused. Can the hon. member advise me whether it is correct that he supported the legislation when the bill came to a vote?

Mr. McRae: Yes, I supported the legislation. I should like to have seen some changes. I feel strongly, though, that had the trade union movement been supporting the bill it would have been easier to get some of those changes.

Mr. Benjamin: Would the hon. member permit a further question?

Some hon. Members: No!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the hon. member like to make a speech?

Mr. Benjamin: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Then pursuant to Standing Order 26(13) I am satisfied that the debate has been concluded, and I therefore declare the motion carried.

This House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. this day, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 12.47 a.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO REVIEW RIGHTS AND IMMUNITIES OF MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to propose under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the urgent and pressing circumstances of which have been indicated by certain recent events and certain decisions in this country and other countries. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That a special committee of the House, to consist of Mr. Speaker and seven other members, be appointed to review the rights and immunities of members of the House of Commons, to examine the procedures by which such matters are dealt with by the House, and to report on any changes it may be desirable to make; and

That the said special committee have all the powers given to standing committees by the Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 43 the unanimous consent of the House is required to put this motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), moves:

That a special committee of the House, to consist of Mr. Speaker and seven other members, be appointed to review the rights and immunities of members of the House of Commons, to examine the procedures by which such matters are dealt with by the House, and to report on any changes it may be desirable to make; and

That the said special committee have all the powers given to standing committees by the Standing Orders.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an urgent matter, namely the proposed increase in power rates in the Northwest Territories and Yukon. In view of the fact that these proposals are causing considerable debate among residents of the two territories; in view of the fact that this debate is severely limited by lack of adequate information about NCPC's operations; and in view of the fact that the government's only reaction to this widespread public concern has been to institute an in-house inquiry; I move, seconded by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That a full and public inquiry be conducted into the entire operation of the Northern Canada Power Commission in the Yukon and Northwest Territories under the supervision of either a supreme court judge or a public utilities board from one of the provinces. And further, that the findings of this inquiry be placed before the legislative assemblies of the two territories for approval, adoption or otherwise to ensure fullest possible public participation.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 this motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTION BRITISH PARLIAMENT BE INFORMED CONTROL OF CONSTITUTION LIES WITH PARLIAMENT OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an urgent matter.

Considering that Canada is an independent and sovereign country, that most of its citizens do not wish to maintain our constitutional bonds with Britain, and that this situation can no longer be tolerated, so as to solve the problem of the repatriation of the Canadian constitution, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That a unanimous resolution of this House be sent to the Parliament of Westminster advising it that from now on the Canadian constitution will not in any way come under British legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF FARRIS REPORT ON HOSTAGE TAKING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, in view of today's hostage taking at the B.C. penitentiary, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That the Farris inquiry report on the hostage taking at the B.C. penitentiary last year be tabled in this House immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED TABLING OF INFORMATION ON WHICH RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA BASED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of this government's quick acceptance of the new Communist régime in Angola, and as this country needs necessary assurances and evidence that the MPLA are indeed in control of Angola, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs table documents, correspondence and other papers relating to the government's reasons for deciding to recognize the new Communist government of Angola.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL RHETORIC DAY

PROPOSAL TO NAME DAY IN VIEW OF CONSERVATIVE LEADERSHIP CONVENTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to propose a motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, requiring the prompt attention of the House. As the nation's capital obviously is in the process of being inundated by legions of well-scrubbed, blue-suited Tories—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Symes: —as the city is now experiencing a superheated atmosphere, and as it is urgently necessary to inform local inhabitants and the people of Canada as a whole of the true nature of this curious invasion, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That Sunday, February 22, the day on which thousands of Tories shall be reaching the ecstatic climax of their activities, be hereby immortalized and renamed as National Rhetoric Day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF RAIL PASSENGER POLICY PENDING CONSULTATION WITH AFFECTED AREAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the concern expressed by the western region representatives of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities concerning the lack of consultation on the part of the government with regard to the recently announced rail passenger policy, and in view of the resolution passed by the council of the city of Saskatoon expressing apprehension over the effects of the new rail passenger service on some aspects of transcontinental service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to delay implementation of the new rail passenger policy, pending full consultation with officials of cities, towns and municipalities affected, and that the minister make a statement on motions to the effect that the transcontinental service will be continued between Saskatoon and Biggar.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO RETIRING LEADER OF OPPOSITION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, may I rise on a point of order or question of privilege? I ask to be permitted at this time to say a few words about our friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: This weekend, if everything goes according to plan, the Leader of the Opposition will hand over his job to some other member of his party. Already I feel a little lonely. We have been partners during these past seven years, and in this sense I do feel his departure, and the splitting up of what I suppose could be called "The Odd Couple."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Indeed, it is an odd couple, Mr. Speaker, whose fate has inextricably been bound for several years for better or for worse, as the saying goes. Under some parliamentary conventions, we are in a way paid to oppose one another. However, I believe I have been fortunate indeed to have to face the opposition of such a man who has always shown much distinction and competence.

[English]

Like any couple living and working in the same house, we have had our spats and tiffs. I have been the object of "Big Thunder" rolling over there, as the press have nicknamed the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). He is fortunate in a sense that we can use his nickname in the House. The nickname the press gives me is unparliamentary.

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know them all. If I knew of one that was parliamentary, I would be volunteering it at this time. Apart from the occasional disagreement, we have also shared an exchange of good will and of good and bad days. We have had the responsibility of difficult times when it was essential to work together with a common purpose. My hon. friend has made an outstanding contribution to parliament for which all Canadians, not just Conservatives, are very grateful and thankful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: His public service to Canada and to Nova Scotia has spanned a period of some 27 years. I know his decision to change his job will not mean that he will have less concern for, or less interest in, our country. Throughout his career he has been a man of vision and ideas. I should say that I borrowed a few of them in my day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Although I do not have much direct influence on the outcome of the convention of the party opposite, I know they will be looking for a man of equal competence.

Mr. Hees: Or a woman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Whoever it is, Mr. Speaker, I wish "it" good fortune.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I will miss the constant attention of my original partner. I hope that the change in partners will at least permit him to enjoy some time with his family. His family certainly very strongly supported him. They, too, deserve the gratitude of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, although I have only recently joined this ménage à trois, I should like to associate myself with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in paying this well deserved tribute to the leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). We are paying this tribute to a man who has graced the House of Commons with his presence for the past 8½ years. Those of us who have shared our parliamentary experience with him have shared that experience with a blunt, courteous, honest and witty man.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: When I sat down in my office this morning to put together these few words in tribute to the hon. member for Halifax, four particular qualities of his came to mind, in no particular order—I think they stand out equally in his character. They are personal qualities which appeared to me as his particular contribution to the political life of our land. The first is that he has always shown a strong and serious concern about the dual cultural heritage of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: At times when it was not always politically expedient or popular to do so, he took courageous stands in defence of a long tradition of French-speaking rights which had to find new expression in legislation in our generation, just as they had to find expression in earlier legislation. He stood up to be counted when it was required, and for that all Canadians owe him grateful thanks.

The second quality which comes to mind is his sense of compassion. This has been displayed in connection with various legislative matters which have come before the House and, indeed, on a number of issues which have not. I am thinking of his early concern about the need for some form of guaranteed income for Canada's poor, even though it meant doing battle within his own party, as all of us find necessary from time to time. That kind of attitude toward less fortunate people was something which had to be fought for—and he has made this known on issue after issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The third quality is the hon. gentleman's overriding sense of honesty. This came out in the campaigns. It has been demonstrated in the House and it has been demonstrated in all aspects of his life both inside and outside this chamber. Finally, he has demonstrated, as very few of us do, as politicians, his possession of a sense of humour. I think there is one virtue that those of us who run for political office cannot claim to be ours to the same degree, perhaps, as other people in the population, and that is the capacity to laugh at ourselves. If there was ever a calling in human life that ought to bring forth the capacity not to take oneself too seriously, it ought to be the politician's vocation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Stanfield has even been known from time to time to poke fun at some of his opponents as well. In conclusion, for my party, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that in his new role we wish this distinguished Canadian well. We also hope that down the road he will spend more time in the presence of bananas than of footballs.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in joining the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the NDP Leader (Mr. Broadbent) to express good wishes, thanks and congratulations to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who will resign as Leader of the Opposition this coming weekend.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that, independently from political ideologies, the House of Commons, every member and the whole population have highly appreciated Mr. Stanfield's qualities as a truly great Canadian. We have noted during these seven or eight years that the Leader of the Opposition has beyond any doubt demonstrated his interest for the people and for national unity, being the representative of all Canadian regions and not only one area to the detriment of the others. He really has the stature of a great national statesman—international, I might even say—since he often looked into matters concerning Canada in its relations with other nations. Mr. Stanfield is an honest man who has stirred up the admiration and respect of the people, though it has not necessarily been reflected at election time. But, at any rate, he has deserved the admiration of the population for his sense of responsibility. He has always been at his post and he has commanded respect from the population and hon. members.

We wish happy days to the Leader of the Opposition and his family. Most of all, we wish him good health and much happiness in the years to come, which we hope will be most numerous. Good luck to the Leader of the Opposition!

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the right hon. gentleman and to the leaders of the other parties for the tributes they have paid in initiating this interesting point of order which I am putting into my rule book for future reference. Before the right hon. gentleman spoke, I had considered asking a question. I consulted the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and found a precedent going back to 632 B.C. under the laws of Justinian.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1430)

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. gentleman assures me he was not in the House then, but he is well aware of the precedent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I want to say to my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition with whom I have had the pleasure of sharing this seat, that he came into this House on a great wave of support from ski-jumpers. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that after watching the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) he will now take up the art of wrestling as a very useful and effective means of dealing with the problems of the country.

Seriously, sir, this has been quite a time. A lot of people think of my hon. friend sitting here as Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) while I have been sitting here as House leader, but really it has been an exercise which we call "the education of Pierre." I may say to the right hon. gentleman that we now have the examination papers. We are marking them, and from time to time we will let him know exactly what his mark is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Let me say through you, sir, to members of the House that it has been a great privilege for me to occupy this seat, and a great privilege for me to have been a member of this party which has had the pleasure of working under the leadership and guidance of my hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I say this only in conclusion: he is leaving this party, as an opposition party it is true, but an opposition party which under the democratic system that prevails in this country is a necessary and essential part of the function of a democracy and a parliamentary structure. It has been honed to an edge. We have had some vigorous arguments from time to time, as people are aware, but it is a united, effective and hard working party, willing and able at the appropriate time to walk across the floor to a more suitable position. That is the legacy which my hon. friend has left to this party and to this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): After all that, Mr. Speaker, a less loquacious man than myself would be speechless.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Before this afternoon and these extraordinary remarks, I had sensed that the country might never be quite the same again, but I did not fully realize the extent of the national disaster.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It may be, sir, that in view of this, before taking this decision I ought to have consulted my friend, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other party leaders in this House, or at least the chief government whip who I can see is obviously devastated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I wish to thank members on all sides of the House for their friendship to me while I have been Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Our debates have sometimes been quite animated, but never acrid. I have the very deep feeling that we are united by a sense of mutual respect which makes the grandeur of this House.

I take this opportunity to express my warm thanks to the staff of the French Hansard. They have had to be very patient with me.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I feel I should thank you particularly for your courtesy to me and your understanding of my role from your position as Speaker. I hope I have not caused you too many problems, and I do want to thank you for your impartiality and your consideration of the office that I have had to fulfil.

I want to thank the Prime Minister for his friendship, and particularly for his comments here this afternoon. I might have said, I suppose, that he will not have Bob Stanfield's football to kick around any more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: In spite of the Prime Minister's sense of loss, I hope it will be of some consolation to him to see that I am unfolding as I should.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I want to thank the leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), too, for his friendship and for his very generous comments. I recall that when he was thinking hard about whether or not he should seek his present responsibilities he had some real problems in reconciling what he foresaw as the obligations of the office and the obligations of leadership and his wish to have some time to listen to some Bach. I just want to say to him, sir, through you, that anytime he is in my vicinity I hope he will drop in so I can go over a few records with him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Stanfield: I would also like to thank the Leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada (Mr. Caouette) for his very kind words and for his friendship over all those years.

[English]

I wish to say simply about the leader of the Créditistes that he has always struck me as the sort of man from whom I would buy a used car.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I wish to end on a comment of challenge and a little uplift to all of this. I am, of course, continuing in the House as the member for Halifax, and I want to serve notice on the right hon. Prime Minister and members of the government that as a backbencher I will be even more of a tiger than I have been as leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I had a question prepared today that would bring the government down, sir, but I have decided that in the circumstances I will defer it until next week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SEIZING OF HOSTAGES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I regret I must disturb the convivial atmosphere of the House. I have a question for the Solicitor General. This morning at eight o'clock Mr. Bruce and Mr. Lucas, two of the prisoners who held 15 hostages last June in the New Westminster penitentiary, again seized hostages in the penthouse. Could the Solicitor General tell the House how many hostages were seized, whether they are safe at this moment and what the demands are at the present time.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this morning at 8.20 a.m. Pacific time and 11.20 our time, three inmates from the B.C. pen, namely Mr. Lucas, Mr. Bruce and Mr. Lowe took three correctional officers hostage in the new segregation area of the B.C. pen. No information is yet available as to how the hostages were taken. So far the only demands are for an outside doctor, some drugs and a radio. I wish to point out to the house that the segregation area and the segregation conditions at the B.C. pen were changed recently following a judgment of the federal court that the former segregation area in the building was considered cruel and unusual punishment under the Bill of Rights. After that judgment we changed the segregation area to the one where the hostages were taken this morning. I have been in touch with the penitentiary officials who assure me that everything is being done to resolve the situation.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General whether there were any weapons of any type involved when these hostages were seized and whether it happened during the time when the prisoners were being transferred or what were the circumstances?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, to the best of our knowledge the inmates have two knives. It appears these knives were kitchen knives which they sharpened in some way or other in their cells. These inmates were in segregation which means they were in a place in the penitentiary where they were not loose but it appears they were outside their cells in the corridor, which is also locked, taking exercise when the hostages were taken, but it is difficult to get all the details because the only witnesses to the event were the men who were taken hostage.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF FARRIS REPORT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Would the Solicitor General consider releasing the Farris inquiry report to this House so that we can see the reasons the judge found for the previous taking of hostages? Perhaps that would lead us to some conclusions concerning why this hostage-taking took place.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have been ready to release that report for some time. The only reason it has not been released is that the judge recommended we should not release it while the three inmates who took hostages in the last incident were under trial, that it would in some way be in contempt of court or against the traditions of a fair trial. It is for that reason we have not released the report. I have been ready to release it. I may point out that these three, Lucas, Bruce and Wilson, are still under trial for the last incident and I do not know whether it would be appropriate to release that report while they are under trial.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that my party released the blueprints for the new section of the pen in this House sometime ago—there was a leak in those areas—and in view of the fact that we have received information from some of the security people inside the pen which involves this group, that is information which was not put before the Farris inquiry, which included information that the director and classification people had been told beforehand that it would happen, does the Solicitor General believe that the House and the country would be better off if we overruled the request of the judge and released that inquiry report immediately so that the Canadian people can know what has happened?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I think the information in the report will be of interest to the members of the House and to the public in general, but I do not see how it will resolve the hostage incident at the B.C. pen at the present time. My first concern is to resolve that incident and then make this information public later.

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN APPEAL PROCEDURE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday during the question period the Prime Minister said that no worker in Canada could claim there has been an injustice operated against him if he had received a cut-back in pay as a result of the administrator's decision on a matter that had been referred to him. Has the Prime Minister given further thought to that answer and, in particular, would he agree that a worker in such circumstances does have his financial interest profoundly affected, and does so within the law which gives him no right to appeal. If he is in agreement with that I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would be prepared to consider changes in the law so that there would be a right to appeal along the lines the Minister of Labour indicated in the debate yesterday were being contemplated.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I may respond on behalf of the Prime Minister, we will indeed be giving early consideration to such amendments to be brought before the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister to be a little more specific. Could he tell us if the kind of amendment the government is contemplating would be such as to guarantee the right of appeal to either the employee or employer in terms of the decision reached by the Anti-Inflation Board prior to that being considered by the administrator.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Not specifically, Mr. Speaker. As has been set out a number of times we do not see the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to be of the nature of a legally binding decision. We would anticipate, as I said before, that the chairman in the case where the parties have indicated they would not accept the board's judgment would be proposing to make an early reference to the administrator to include in a legal order the provisions with regard to the particular settlement or price. The question which seems to be raised most effectively in this context is whether there might be any further appeal from the administrator to the appeal tribunal and thereafter eventually to the courts. It is that right of appeal which parties might enjoy which should be considered.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, since the law which now exists makes it virtually impossible for the employee to have an appeal of any matter being raised before the administrator or after would the minister be more specific now in terms of the precise nature, not the detail, of the change in the legislation he has in mind and also inform the House when the government plans to bring it forward.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to debate with the hon. gentleman, but as I have indicated some days ago in the case where either party involved in, for example, a compensation settlement, indicated it was not satisfied with the board's decision the board would refer it to the administrator. So perhaps there is not a meeting of minds between us. So far as we see it the difficulty is from the point of the order on whether the party's ability to establish the right of appeal is broad enough in the act as presently drafted.

HEALTH

INQUIRY AS TO REGULATIONS CONTROLLING SALE AND IMPORTATION OF BLOOD

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

On February 3 last, on Le 60, a television program, it was reported that blood collected by the Red Cross was being sold on a commercial basis by a Toronto firm; photos and pictures were shown. Can the minister tell the House whether his department looked into the matter and, if so, with what results?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, an inquiry was held according to normal procedures. As a result of that investigation, rules were edicted controlling the exports of certain blood products. Those rules came into effect at the end of last year. At the present time, all exports of that type are governed by controls and rules. Additional regulations are now being considered, and I shall soon be in a position to advise the hon. member of the results of that study.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

The minister tells me that exports have been controlled since the end of 1975. Does the same apply to imports? Do companies in Montreal or Toronto import blood from South American countries, for instance, where blood is bought for so much a pint, a half pint, or something similar, and where people are allowed to drink alcohol to increase their blood quantity? I should also like to know if blood coming into Montreal is also controlled?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, with regard to imports, a distinction must be made between two factors: the case where imports are strictly in transit and over which no control can be exercised. We are now looking into specific regulations that could apply to the import into Canada of blood products coming from abroad but intended for export.

DATE OF APPROVAL OF PROCEDURE FOR ANTI-INFLATION APPEALS TRIBUNAL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to that asked by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister advise if the rules of procedure in connection with the appeal structure of the Anti-Inflation Appeals Tribunal have been approved yet, including the form of notice of appeal, and if so, when will they be published?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As hon. members know, the chairman of the board was only appointed last Friday. This morning was the first cabinet meeting at which there was opportunity to report the rules of procedure as they have been passed by the governor in council. They will be registered tomorrow, after the Governor General signs them, and published in the first Canada Gazette. It is a very simple set of procedural rules of some four pages in length. If before they are registered anyone feels the need to appeal, between now and Friday, I am sure a letter identifying the order against which they wish to appeal directed to the chairman would suffice.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEASURES TO INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As Statistics Canada has just reported that during the past two years imports of fully manufactured products, which are the ones which produce jobs, have increased at a rate three times as fast as exports of those products, could the Prime Minister advise the House when he intends to give the House his long awaited report on what the government intends to do to increase productivity and thereby make it possible to reduce costs and selling prices for manufactured goods to retain a reasonable proportion of the Canadian market?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the question of productivity the hon. member will recall that a couple of weeks ago I indicated that we would, in one form or another, be addressing this question. However, with regard to the fact that we are able to buy more manufactured goods from abroad than markets abroad are able to buy of ours, that merely indicates what this government has been saying for a long time, that this government has kept Canada more prosperous than our trading partners have kept their countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister surely knows from studying these reports, the imports of fully manufactured products have been rapidly displacing Canadian manufactured products which normally would sell in this country, and I hope he understands that. In view of the fact that this government treats productivity in the same way it treats the weather, talking a lot about it but doing absolutely nothing to improve it, I wonder if the Prime Minister would assure us that the statement he has promised to the House will be made in a matter of days instead of weeks or months, because it is very badly needed.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the situation is obviously one of concern to the government, and I indicated before on the productivity question that not only had we discussed this in the policy paper of October 14, but that we were going to report further on it. I just suggest that one of the reasons was that we were having an inflationary rate in Canada which was worse than that of some of our important trading partners. That is why we brought in this controls program, and we cannot understand why the official opposition voted against it.

Oral Questions

AGRICULTURE

MILK—POSSIBLE MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS TO REVIEW POLICY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the very serious over-supply situation in the dairy industry in Canada resulting from the minister's excessive target support price in his current dairy policy, does the minister intend to meet with his provincial counterparts to discuss a review of dairy policy, which would have as its principal objective the availability in Canada of a ready supply of milk to consumers at lower prices than those prevailing at the present time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I have always met with my provincial counterparts when requested. I am actually meeting one who is here in the city for another function tomorrow morning, but I want to say that federally we have nothing to do with the price of fluid milk. Each provincial marketing board, utility or whatever it is sets the price.

To put the record straight, the surplus products are not being subsidized one iota by the federal government. The farmers have to look after disbursing that on world markets themselves. The price of skim milk powder here in Canada to consumers, as I said yesterday, is approximately 2 cents a pound cheaper than it is in the United States of America.

SKIM MILK POWDER—SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN PRICE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Since the federal government is currently spending a quarter of a billion dollars a year, or approximately $12 for every man woman or child in this country, on subsidizing the dairy industry, and since the minister has direct control over the price of Canadian skim milk powder, which is now selling in Japan for a third of the price Canadian consumers have to pay, will the minister take steps in this area—which is directly within his jurisdiction—to bring down the price of skim milk powder in Canada which would have the effect of reducing the oversupply situation which the minister has created?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): As the hon. member will remember, when another product sold for three dozen for a dollar, consumption actually went down, so price does not have that much to do with consumption. The hon. member should realize that. I hope he learned that much from all the hearings which took place on that subject at one time.

However, the skim milk powder Japan is getting for so much less is not instantized. It is in 100-pound bags and in raw form plus it is for animal consumption because of age. That is available in Canada, and the skim milk powder which is being made available and consumed in Canada is being subsidized to the tune of 34 cents per pound. It is an instantized product, it is cheaper than in the United States and I think the hon. member should realize that.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

POST OFFICE

EXTENT OF JURISDICTION OF INJUNCTION PRESERVING UNION RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General, and it follows up a question asked of him the other day. In view of the moral obligation of the government with respect to the postal employees who have been suspended from the Canadian Union of Postal Workers since the strike last fall, could the Postmaster General be more specific as to the jurisdiction of the injunction issued by Mr. Justice John O'Driscoll of the Ontario supreme court, an injunction which preserves the rights of the employees while they are appealing this suspension?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the preliminary report I have is that the injunction is limited to that particular local and to the particular problems of the people who raised this matter through the courts. I have been informed unofficially that similar action is now being contemplated in no less than 14 other locals across Canada. I know this only from correspondence which has come into my office from a legal representative of these particular people, and it will be interesting to see if this decision of the judge will be used as a form of jurisprudence in coming to a conclusion with regard to the other locals.

Mr. Dinsdale: Could the Postmaster General indicate that in fact an injunction of this kind does preserve the rights of the employee during the appeal process?

Mr. Mackasey: I can only speak for the Post Office. Whether these workers are members of the union, suspended by the union, or even if they do not belong to the union in no way jeopardizes the rights of postal employees in so far as their jobs are concerned. What I said some weeks ago was that the constitution of the union provided ways and means of appeal and provides an outline very clearly of the procedures necessary before an individual can be suspended. No doubt it was the opinion of the judge that the constitution was not respected by the local officers when they suspended certain individuals.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS OF PRIME MINISTER WITH EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Could he briefly tell the House and the Canadian people how far the negotiations with the European Economic Community have progressed through his personal initiative?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I feel that President Ortoli's visit to Canada represents a very important step in those negotiations. We have heard that the council of ministers of the EEC has approved the principle of negotiations between the Community and Canada, and President Ortoli, my ministers and myself are discussing the exact date when they could begin. We hope very much it will be soon. I am confident that, at the end of the meeting with President Ortoli, we will be in a position to announce the date.

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBLE USE OF SPECIAL TACTICAL UNIT TO DEAL WITH INCIDENT INVOLVING SEIZURE OF HOSTAGES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Solicitor General is somewhat supplementary to the questions that were asked concerning the unfortunate hostage incident at the British Columbia penitentiary this morning. Following the Mary Steinhauser incident a special tactical squad was developed outside the penitentiary to deal with this kind of specific incident. It was attached to the co-ordinating law enforcement unit. I wonder if the Solicitor General could advise the House whether in this incident it is the intention to use the special squad that has been trained in terms of hostage-taking incidents which involves people outside the penitentiary.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, officials of the penitentiary service have been in touch with the British Columbia government with respect to this tactical squad and I am waiting for further information on its use.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBILITY OF APPEALING JUDGMENT CONCERNING SOLITARY CONFINEMENT—CONSTRUCTION OF SPECIAL UNITS FOR DANGEROUS INMATES

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Solicitor General concerning this new crisis in the British Columbia penitentiary. Since Lucas and Wilson participated in the last fatal crisis in which Mary Steinhauser died, and since they have openly declared repeatedly that they have nothing to lose, could the Solicitor General state whether security was diminished in compliance with that celebrated solitary confinement judgment; will he appeal that judgment; and is he considering a special correctional unit for the 2 per cent or 3 per cent like Wilson and Lucas in the Canadian prison system who are too dangerous to be in the general prison population?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should point out to the hon. member that Mr. Wilson is not involved in this particular incident. The three inmates involved are Lucas, Bruce and Lowe. Wilson was one of the three in the last incident but is not involved here. With respect to security, as I pointed out in my earlier answer, these three inmates who have taken the hostages were in segregation and not allowed to leave the segregated area at any time. In the last case, they were in the general population.

In answer to the further question by the hon. member we are going forward with smaller, maximum security institutions. We have just approved a site for two maximum security institutions, one in Agassiz and one in Lillooet.

ENERGY

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REPORTS ON RADIOACTIVE WASTE DISPOSAL SITES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Several weeks ago the minister undertook both inside the House and outside the House, to release reports on the position of the department relating to various radioactive disposal sites across the country and to give the specific locations of the high radioactive readings in the Port Hope area. Can these reports now be released and if not, why not?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I expect to table these reports following the question period today.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY TOLLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport if the government is contemplating an increase in the St. Lawrence seaway tolls as has been mentioned in the press?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question of such an increase has not yet come before the cabinet for consideration. We are planning to look at the whole question of capitalization of the seaway and its basis of operation, but I do not know how many weeks that will take.

Mr. Murta: A supplementary question. In that case would the minister assure the House that there will not be an increase for the 1976 shipping season; in other words, a decision will not be made before April 1, 1976.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the hon. member's representations. If any increase is considered, timing is one of the issues to be taken into account.

HOUSING

REASON FOR ESTABLISHING LOW VACANCY RATE GOAL FOR APARTMENTS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs may I direct a question to his able parliamentary secretary? I understand that the minister has established a 2.5 per cent apartment vacancy rate as his goal for 1976. Considering that housing officials feel this rate must be at least 3 per cent to 4 per cent in order to maintain a healthy rental market, can the minister explain to the House upon which basis he arrived at this figure and why it is so low?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that the rate was about 4 per cent. We are aiming at a rate of about 2.5 per cent. With the hon. member's advice and good work, and with the co-operation of everybody, I hope we will reach that goal.

Mr. Darling: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that housing officials and more specifically Bernard Denault, President of HUDAC, feel that the new ten year loans system to finance apartment construction is inferior to the old one year subsidy system, and considering that apartment vacancies even under the old system approached zero per cent in major centres, how does the minister hope to realize his goal of 2.5 per cent?

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that under the new program we have offered all builders of apartment buildings a loan of $100 per unit. We are hoping that, as they did last year, they will reach the goal that we have set. The objective will be to the advantage of all the economy.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUFFIELD COMMUNITY PASTURE—REQUEST FOR PERMANENT OPERATION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion relating to the closing of the PFRA community pasture at Suffield near Medicine Hat. A very irresponsible and inaccurate press release from wildlife and fish and game interests that states:

> The native grasslands of the Suffield military reserve, approximately 1,000 square miles of what was once one of the ecologically most valuable natural areas left in North America have been almost totally destroyed by the mismanagement of the Canada Department of Agriculture, Department of National Defence and the PFRA administration.

Will the minister give immediate consideration to the full and complete support of his PFRA staff recommendation that this community pasture, a very small part of the total Suffield area, should continue to operate but on a permanent basis instead of the present unsatisfactory arrangement?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there is no need to say that I do not share the sentiments expressed by the Alberta fish and game association. I am questioning their statement. Our department is still very interested in the Suffield pasture, but we will have to continue the discussion with the Department of National Defence which has been going on for some time to find out the best use to which that land can be put. I can assure the hon. gentleman and the House that it is a very important question. I am sure my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, and I will pursue the matter for some time.

TRADE

REASON FOR PERMITTING CHEESE IMPORTS WHEN CANADIAN DAIRY EXPORTS SELLING AT A LOSS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister arises from the serious financial losses confronting Canada. According to recent press reports, one factor is the Canadian Dairy Commission's debt, which has skyrocketed from $100 million to $300 million during the past year, which means that Canada is exporting butter and milk at a loss. Since the Prime Minister is trying to obtain contractual agreements with the European Economic Community, my question is this: Why should we be exporting dairy products at a continuing loss, when the European Economic Community, through their common market, is shipping 50 million pounds of cheese or more to Canada, at a profit to their component producers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian policy in this regard was announced last year. It is to increase gradually the imports of cheese from the common market. Last year the quota was 50 million pounds. Discussions are presently going on to see if we will increase that quota, or hold it at the present level. I think the Minister of Agriculture will have an announcement to make soon.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FRASER VALLEY FLOOD CONTROL PROGRAMS—STATUS OF REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In reply to a question asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, as reported at page 9682 of Hansard for December 3, 1975, and later confirmed in a conversation with me, the then Minister of the Environment stated that flood control in the Fraser Valley was of top priority for the government and suggested that the request for an additional appropriation to continue the program was before Treasury Board. Could the minister advise the House whether a request was before the board at that time or has been placed before the board since, and whether a decision has been made on the request?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I know that the request was made to Treasury Board to increase the contribution of the federal government from $31 million. The B.C. government had paid $31 million. I think Treasury Board approved a $6.5 million increase with regard to the Fraser Valley. This will continue for a number of years not determined in the Treasury Board's decision. I intend to make a request to Treasury Board, in an attempt to treat all parties fairly.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FERRY SERVICE—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN RATES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport relates to the suggestion that there might be some alteration of ferry rates to and from Prince Edward Island. Has the minister conferred with the government of Prince Edward Island and can he indicate if that government has agreed to possible changes in this regard?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the subject of proposed changes in ferry rates came up for discussion during the meeting I had with ministers of transport of the Atlantic region last week, and has been the subject of messages from those governments to myself, as well. They expressed reservations about increases. We asked them for opinions as to the nature of the increases, that is to say, which items would be least sensitive to increases. I have not received a firm expression of view from them on that matter.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of the question, can the minister say if there will be any reference to the government's anti-inflation program in connection with possible changes, and consultation with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the department which signed recently the second phase of the development program for Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the question of development in the region is of great importance to the government. I assure the hon. member that changes in rates will come fully within the guidelines and the spirit of the anti-inflation program. We specifically reserved for provincial and federal governments the right to make policy changes and the degree to which the general taxpayer shall pay for services, as distinct from the user of those services. There is an inflationary impact, no matter whether one considers increased taxes or increased rates. That is a policy matter and, at present, we have decided in favour of some increase in rates.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON COST-SHARING PROGRAM FOR ALASKA HIGHWAY

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I telephoned his office early this morning to give him notice of it. It is this: For some two or three years there have been discussions at the departmental or official level, between Canada and the United States, with respect to implementing a cost-sharing program for improving and paving the Alaska highway. Now that the United States has passed enabling legislation, will talks commence at the diplomatic level? If so, when may we expect some announcement about the implementation by the two countries of this program.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question and wish to tell him that most of the outstanding problems between Canada and the United States with respect to that highway have been worked out. Presently, we are conducting discussions with the government of British Columbia on the right of way and environmental aspects of the project. These discussions are not completed but will be completed shortly.

We have under consideration the terms of an agreement with the United States by which that country will undertake the funding of the construction of the highway and Canada will undertake its maintenance and administration.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the agreement contemplated between Canada and the United States in this regard will displace the 1949 agreement, in which the government of Canada undertook those responsibilities, and others, in maintaining the highway as a defence road.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would conclude, myself, that this would be a superseding agreement. I will check, to see in what particulars it differs from the preceding agreement, and whether the preceding one will still be in effect.

CUSTOMS

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF OFFICER AT RIVERPORT, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Riverport, Nova Scotia, had in excess of 300 deepsea ships sailing from the port in 1975. Since the untimely passing last year of the resident customs official, the minister has been studying the amount of business emanating from this port, in order to determine the nature of the replacement required. I should like to know if these studies have been completed. If so, when can Nova Scotians expect the appointment of a full-time officer at Riverport, since the delay in the sailing of a large off-shore trawler for only one day would cause a loss to our national economy in excess of the wages paid for a year to one government official?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the decision is imminent.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF ALASKA HIGHWAY—PORTION FUNDED BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Am I to understand from the minister's remarks that the United States government is funding the building of the highway in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is the construction of the Haines road, the Alaska highway.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the matter is not clear in my mind. Is the actual area which is being financed by the United States government in Canada, or Alaska?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will have to look at my map. I would have to simply say that it is the section of the highway currently being built by the two countries under the terms of the agreement mentioned.

GUATEMALA—ALLEGATION EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS UNABLE TO USE POWDERED MILK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As Dr. Grace Anderson, an industrial chemist at Wilfrid Laurier University in Cambridge-Waterloo has said that the majority of Guatemalans will not be able to digest the 100,000 pounds of powdered milk which Canada has sent as aid to Guatemala and that only the Spanish, who are basically the upper class in Guatemala, can digest milk, may I ask if the Secretary of State for External Affairs has investigated the veracity of that statement and, if so, can he report to the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the statement was made initially, I asked the chargé to investigate. He reported to me that the decision, or recommendation, to seek powdered milk for distribution in Guatemala was based on consultations with nutritional authorities in Guatemala. They recommended that powdered milk, in conjunction with other nutrients should be used in the diet. Since then I understand there have been demands form local areas. Orphanages, villages and other areas have asked for supplies of powdered milk. All the evidence suggests that the remarks made by the lady in question are misleading.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO COVERAGE OF CONSERVATIVE LEADERSHIP CONVENTION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Is he now in the position to answer the question asked earlier regarding CBC radio coverage of the final day when voting will take place at the national Progressive Conservative party leadership convention?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure that what they have agreed to meets the full approval of that party. However, I am told that radio programming will be moved forward to three from four, but facilities will be made available to allow that to be moved forward to one thirty, depending upon the progress of the ballotting. Full network television coverage will start at twelve o'clock.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair to point out to the minister and the House that this is a major departure by CBC Radio with regard to the treatment of this party as compared with that of the New Democratic Party during their leadership convention and to the minister's own party when they selected the present Prime Minister. I think this is a shocking and shameful departure.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Coates: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I would like to complete my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will see the hon. member again in about seven minutes.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY WHETHER VOTE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT MEASURE WILL BE CONSIDERED VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to direct this question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that other duties have called him out of the House and as the Solicitor General is also absent, I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. With reference to a free vote on capital punishment, the Solicitor General said that in light of the dangers to guards and correctional officers in the penitentiaries, and referring once again to New Westminster, he said, "There will be a government bill to which the government will be committed, but the members of this House who are not with the government will be free to vote on it as they see fit." That is with reference to the bill to abolish capital punishment. In light of the fact the cabinet will have to vote for the bill, does the Acting Prime Minister consider that this will be a vote of confidence in the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the views of my colleagues, they will all support this bill voluntarily.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact the Solicitor General said that the government members, meaning the cabinet, would be committed to voting for the bill and only those not in the cabinet would have a free vote, does the Acting Prime Minister now say that this is a vote of confidence in the government?

Mr. Sharp: As the Prime Minister said yesterday or the day before, Mr. Speaker, the whips are off of members on all sides of the House including the government. I am telling my hon. friend, however, I do not think there is any doubt about the position of members of the government who I believe will voluntarily support this bill.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO THOSE PRESENTING NATIVE LAND CLAIMS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since he has now left the chamber, I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. If an answer is not available, I hope my question will be taken as notice. In view of the very short time remaining before the negotiations into the cutoff lands claims in British Columbia begin, has the minister given any consideration to appointing a coordinator to assist in providing information to those arguing the Indian claim, information that can only be obtained from the files and archives of the department?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the minister will be meeting next week with Mr. Williams, the British Columbia minister with responsibility for Indian affairs. I believe this is one of the items on their agenda.

FISHERIES

DAMAGE TO GEAR IN NOVA SCOTIA—ADEQUACY OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). In view of the fact that the equipment of several fishermen on the Bay of Fundy coast has been so damaged that without virtually full compensation they will be unable to finance a return to their livelihood, is the minister satisfied that the compensation under existing regulations will permit them to return to the profession of their choice?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, since the disaster formula has been in effect in relation to federal-provincial co-operation in cases of this type, it has applied to fishermen in other parts of the country. I think it has applied with some equity. I am certainly hopeful that these damages will be fully covered.

Mr. McCain: In view of the fact that the advertising on this subject indicates the regulations will only permit fishermen to be reimbursed on the depreciated value of their equipment, will the minister investigate and see if in his opinion in this inflationary period this is adequate so that these fishermen may return to their profession?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly willing to look into any suggestions of the hon. member. The fact is the formula is well known. It was adopted by the provinces and the federal government. As I said, it has worked for fishermen in other parts of the country in the past.

ENERGY

ALBERTA OIL SANDS—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ENSURE CONSTRUCTION OF EXTRACTION PLANTS

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is he aware that plans to construct future plants in the Alberta oil sands are at a standstill or shelved indefinitely? Will he say whether the government really expects those plants to be built? If so, what does he intend to do to see that they are built as originally programmed?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, one of the most important things we can do is get on with the Syncrude project and prove its viability. I very much hope we will be able to conclude the lease arrangements in particular with the province of Alberta at a very early date.

FINANCE

ALLEGED INCREASE IN FUTURE OIL IMPORTS—EFFECT ON BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that the situation is getting worse daily and it now appears that by 1985 some 60 per cent of Canada's oil will have to be imported, costing our country between $15 million and $20 million a day? What effect will this have on our balance of payments? Also, does the minister intend to take any initiatives or will he leave this until after the next election and let the new Conservative government solve the problem?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the last remarks of the hon. member put his question into the realm of fantasy.

FISHERIES

FREEDOM OF FISHERMEN IN LAKE WINNIPEG AREA TO SELL CATCH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Fisheries). It has to do with a matter that is critical to the whole area of inland fisheries and in particular to the Lake Winnipeg area. In view of the fact that the fishermen are locked in not only under a licencing system but also a quota system, is the minister having discussions with the province to allow these fishermen the option of selling outside the corporation area, similar to the Lake of the Woods area of Ontario?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be happy to look into this matter with the hon. member. I remind him that as far as quota and licencing are concerned, the management of the inland fishery is under provincial responsibility.

MULTICULTURALISM

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for the multiculturalism policy in our country, something that seems to be evaporating before our eyes. Will the minister inform the House when he anticipates the cabinet will reach a decision on the direction of the multiculturalism policy in view of the fact that institution of this policy was once regarded as a priority by his government?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may have noticed, at the conference last week I reaffirmed the government's commitment to this policy. I indicated that we may be putting more emphasis on two others, the first and second fundamental tenants of the policy which the Prime Minister announced. With regard to other changes in the policy, the government will be giving consideration to those. If in due course any changes in the overall context of the policy are made by the government, that will be announced in the House.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

TAKEOVER OF CHECKERBOARD FOODS BY SWIFT CANADIAN—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the conflicting and apparently premature reports appearing in the national press and emanating from the minister's department concerning the long awaited decision on the proposed takeover of Checkerboard Foods by Swift Canadian Company Limited, will the minister clarify the present status of this application?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the decision is that in so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned, and those matters which come within its jurisdiction, there is no impediment to allowing this particular transaction to take place. There is, however, a question relating to a potential offence against the Combines Act—I suppose one might describe it as that—and this is now being considered by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned, they have met the necessary criteria in that regard.

MULTICULTURALISM

CONFIDENCE OF CABINET IN POLICY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My supplementary question is directed to the minister responsible for multiculturalism. Will he explain the apparent reluctance of the cabinet to discuss the shift in emphasis within the multicultural program with any degree of urgency? Does the hon. gentleman feel that this indecisiveness indicates a lack of confidence on the part of the cabinet in this policy direction?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker. I have detected a high degree of enthusiasm among my colleagues, as well as those on the backbenches for this over-all policy.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DATE OF DECISION ON AID TO NEW BRUNSWICK IN CONTROLLING SPRUCE BUDWORM

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has the minister received any request to assist in controlling the spruce budworm infestation of New Brunswick forests which is now reaching critical proportions? Has he made a decision on the matter and, if not, when may we expect one?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when the officials from my department discussed this problem with the government of New Brunswick several months ago, it was agreed then that my department would not participate in the fight against this infestation because there were other provisions in this regard. We know what happened since then and representations were made at the federal level. There were also consultations between my colleague of the Department of the Environment and myself and they are still going on; but we have not yet reached a decision. We still have to wait before it is made public. I cannot say specifically what steps the federal government will take in this case.

POSSIBLE USE OF UNSPENT FUNDS TO AID NEW BRUNSWICK IN CONTROLLING SPRUCE BUDWORM

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Does the minister not think it would be a good idea to use the funds allocated but not spent in connection with the regional economic expansion program amounting, in the case of New Brunswick, to some $10 million, for this purpose?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what is the allocated but unspent amount to which the hon. member referred. It is possible that funds allocated for an ongoing program have not been spent yet. But if this were to happen before the end of the fiscal year, then both levels of government would have to make a decision. However, we must establish priorities and consider the positive effects of such a decision and money transfer from one project to another.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER HAS RECOMMENDED SENIOR CITIZENS BE GRANTED FREE ADMISSION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has had to leave the chamber, I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. In answer to my question in the House yesterday requesting free admission for pensioners to all national parks, I received the same negative answer as I received in 1973 and 1975. Will the parliamentary secretary inform me whether or not the minister has recommended this proposal to cabinet?

HEALTH

INQUIRY AS TO REGULATIONS CONTROLLING SALE AND IMPORTATION OF BLOOD

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to elaborate on a reply that I previously gave the hon. member for Témiscamingue concerning the importation of blood products. I told him that we had no control over products purely and simply in transit through Canada, and this is true. As for importation of blood products for Canadian consumption, there are controls indeed. We are now considering the possibility of additional controls over blood products imported into Canada but destined to be processed and exported to foreign markets.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I shall try to restrain my anger to an extent—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: This is a matter which affects all members of the House and it is a very serious one. The Secretary of State reports to this House for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and he passes on to the Corporation the feelings of members of parliament with regard to matter affecting the Corporation. I realize he cannot tell the Corporation what to do and I appreciate the concern he showed when I asked my previous question in the House by coming over and discussing the matter with me; he indicated at the time that he wanted to see this matter worked out satisfactorily for our party, and I appreciate that very much, as do all hon. members in this party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: A corporation which gets approximately one million dollars a day of taxpayers money should have some feeling for people in this country who do not have the benefit of television and so could not view programs even if they wished to do so. I might name but one example, Sable Island in Nova Scotia. But I am sure that people in such areas have the same right to hear the Progressive Conservative convention from beginning to end as anyone who is able to buy, and use, a television set in this country.

I believe the Corporation should give consideration to the many thousands, even millions, of people in this country who do not have access to television.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: An officer of the Corporation phoned me and suggested to me that they were not broadcasting the whole of the convention because of traditional programming. This is the first time I have ever heard that the CBC is interested in tradition in this country, and that is certainly a step forward. I believe the Secretary of State should go back to the Corporation to ensure that the proceedings of the convention are broadcast from one o'clock onward, the same as television, so that radio listeners in this country can hear it all.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I was so moved by the question of privilege raised by my hon. friend that I had almost forgotten my duty today. I should like to ask the government House leader what will be the business for next week. This week has already been disposed of.

Mr. Sharp: Today we shall be continuing the debate on third reading of Bill C-58. As the House knows, we shall not be sitting this evening or tomorrow consequent upon the order which was approved. I am hoping we can dispose of the third reading of Bill C-58 simply because I do not wish to bring another order before the House to make up for the time we are losing. In any event, if we were to conclude the debate on Bill C-58 today I would hope the votes could be deferred until next week, either Monday or Tuesday. I just say this in case it might encourage hon. members to conclude the debate on this item.

After Bill C-58 is disposed of we shall return to the discussion of Bill C-68. On Tuesday we plan to give first reading to two bills to amend the criminal law, one dealing with capital punishment and the second with other crimes of violence, gun laws and so on. I should like to have the opportunity of discussing them with the House leaders to ascertain what length of time should be allowed to pass before we begin to debate these measures on second reading. I think a reasonable number of days should elapse so that at least one of these bills can be examined carefully before the debate takes place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yesterday, the Minister of Veterans Affairs informed us he was hopeful that consultation regarding the legislation affecting prisoners of war would be completed today. May I ask the government House leader whether this hope has been fulfilled, and whether a bill implementing the recommendations of the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs having to do with ex-prisoners of war will be introduced shortly?

● (1540)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we had the item on the agenda today, but cabinet did not reach it; nor did we reach a number of other items. It is intended that cabinet will resume again tomorrow morning, at which time I hope a decision will be reached.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I just say that the Conservative convention will be completely worthwhile if our not sitting means that the cabinet can meet tomorrow and settle this important issue.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Two weeks ago I placed a starred question on the order paper. When a member places a starred question on the order paper, it is customary in the House to make an attempt to provide an answer within a week. I have been patiently waiting for two weeks now, and with the House not sitting tomorrow it is possible that I will have to wait three weeks. Not only is this a precedent-setting period of time, but the minister is continually feeding this country with information that he wants the country to hear. I should like answers to questions that I should like the country to hear.

EGGS—NEW BRUNSWICK QUOTAS FOR PRODUCTION AND MARKETING

Question No. 3,682—Mr. Jones:

1. What policies and procedures are established for setting quotas for production and marketing of eggs in New Brunswick?

2. Did a number of large supermarkets in Moncton, New Brunswick, run out of egg supplies on Saturday, November 29, 1975 and, if so, for what reason?

3. What organization is responsible for the setting of quotas for production and marketing of eggs in New Brunswick?

4. Have steps been taken to study and keep egg prices in line and, if so (a) what are they (b) by whom?

5. Are the prices of eggs much lower in the United States than in Canada and, if so, for what reason?

6. What steps are necessary to increase the quotas of eggs produced in New Brunswick, particularly in light of the requirements and demands of consumers?

7. Are any such steps being taken and, if not, on what date will such steps be taken?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. As required by the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act (Section 24), New Brunswick was given the percentage share of the Canadian market it had on average in the five years preceding the effective date of the marketing plan. In 1975 the overall production quota was reduced by 10 per cent except in those provinces with less than 2 percent of the Canadian global quota—New Brunswick quota was accordingly not reduced.

2. The pre-Christmas demand for eggs was particularly heavy in 1975 and this unexpected demand created temporary shortages of eggs in some localities. Quick action by the local Egg Boards and the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency (CEMA) was able to replenish supplies from areas of surplus stocks.

3. Original quota established as No. 1 above. The New Brunswick Egg Marketing Board allocated this quota among their producers based on producers' size of operation.

4. Yes, steps have been taken to study and keep egg prices in line. (a) A provincial model of the farm-gate cost of egg production for the medium size producers was established by an independent management consultant firm in Canada. This formula is used in calculating the monthly provincial cost of egg production by the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency. The formula was accepted by the National Farm Products Marketing Council and tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of Agriculture on July 22, 1975. Public hearings will be held shortly on this formula by the National Farm Products Marketing Council. (b) The Canadian Egg Marketing Agency calculates the average cost of production in accordance with the formula. The National Farm Products Marketing Council conducts an independent examination of these costs. Wherever possible, the cost components are obtained from Statistics Canada, the Canada Livestock Feed Board and/or other independent sources. The Anti-Inflation Board is in place to monitor processor and retail prices.

5. The U.S. egg industry, without controls, continues to operate through boom and bust cycles. Generally, the U.S. industry enjoys lower feed and labour costs and lower investments, e.g., housing costs. Prices in the U.S. rose in November and December from the 55 cents per dozen level of October (N.Y. wholesale Grade A) to a pre-Christmas high of 73 cents per dozen. The comparative pre-Christmas Toronto price was 76 cents per dozen. These levels of prices exist in mid-January. At consumer level, the mid-January prices in New York and Toronto are respectively 99-105 and 92-94 cents per dozen.

6. Section 24 of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act sets out the criteria to be followed to increase quotas within a province. In essence, this states that in allocating additional quotas the marketing agency shall consider the principle of comparative advantage of production. Furthermore, within the Comprehensive Egg Plan, certain criteria are set out regarding allocating additional quota. These include: (a) The principle of comparative advantage of production. (b) Any variation in the size of the market of eggs. (c) Comparative transportation costs to market areas from alternate sources of production. (d) Any shortage in production in respect of any given provincial quota be evaluated. (e) The possibility in any given province of increasing the production available to be marketed.

7. In February 1975, the marketing agency reduced the quota by 10% for all those provinces whose quota was more than 2% of the global quota. This reduction did not affect the provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. Steps are continuously being taken to ascertain that each part of Canada is adequately supplied with high quality fresh eggs to the consumers.

AMOUNT SPENT BY GOVERNMENT TO PUBLICIZE CONTROL PROGRAMMES

Question No. 3,727—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the total amount the government is expecting to pay to publicize its controls programme and to urge the Canadian taxpayer to show restraint?

2. What are the component parts of the total?

3. What is the commission or any other fee paid to Vickers and Benson advertising agency for such services?

4. Were any officials of Vickers and Benson informed of the thrust of the government's anti-inflation policy and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. One million dollars for information is included in the Supplementary Estimate A of 1975-76 for the Anti-Inflation Board. The provision for 1976-77 will be included in the Main Estimate for that year.

2. $100,000 for training seminars; $300,000 for newspaper advertisements; $600,000 for printing re introductory documents including Highlights, the White Paper "Attack on Inflation", the Regulations, various technical bulletins, training and information kits.

3. Nil.

4. On October 11th, officials of Vickers and Benson were consulted on a confidential basis concerning technical matters related to the possible preparation of public service advertising messages to be inserted in newspapers concurrent with the announcement of the policy. This plan was not proceeded with.

AIRPORT SECURITY

Question No. 3,861—Mr. Beatty:

1. By airport, for each year since weapons detection equipment was installed in Canadian airports, how many people have been (a) refused permission to board aircraft (b) forced to surrender concealed weapons before boarding?

2. In how many instances (a) have charges against individuals carrying concealed weapons been laid (b) what were such charges (c) how many convictions were ultimately registered?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a)

INVESTIGATION OF NEAR MISSES OF AIRCRAFT

Question No. 3,896—Mr. Beatty:

1. For 1974-75, in how many instances did a commercial aircraft pass another aircraft in the air with fewer than 500 feet between them?

2. In each case (a) what were the aircraft in question, including their origin and destination (b) on what date and at what time did the incident occur (c) was an investigation conducted and, if so, what were its results?

3. Is it required that an investigation take place where near misses of aircraft occur and, if so, what is the procedure followed?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Transport Canada does not have a category which indicates that aircraft passed one another with fewer than 500 feet between them. In most cases, in view of the speed of closure, it is difficult for pilots to accurately judge the distance in passing. Transport Canada speak of "Air Traffic Services Irregularities" or "Losses of Separation" and they fall into two categories: critical and technical. A technical case is one where a loss of separation was reported but no avoiding action was considered necessary by pilots or controllers, but a report was filed. The critical case could involve a loss of separation where one or both pilots in command took avoiding action, or there was no time to take such action, but the pilots concerned would have instinctively taken such action had there been time. In response to the question the number of critical losses of separation in airspace controlled by Transport Canada during 1974-1975 were six.

2. (a) CF FUS PA 28 Local Flight Edmonton Time Air 37, DHC6, Edmonton Municipal to Edmonton International (b) March 20, 1974, 2015Z. (a) KLM 644, B747, New York to Amsterdam Capital 4902C, DC8, Shannon to New York. (b) October 8, 1974, 0350Z. (a) Pacific Western 415, B737, Vancouver to Port Hardy Air Canada 283, DC 9 Edmonton to Vancouver. (b) November 3, 1974, 1918Z. (a) CF VPK, Aztec Rochester to Toronto Eastern 308, B727 Pittsburg to Toronto. (b) June 11, 1975, 2051Z. (a) Air Canada 290, DC9 Edmonton to Saskatoon Viking 11, Tutor, Local flight at Saskatoon. (b) August 6, 1975, 1529Z. (a) CF HGL, DC3, Moncton to Sydney N7242R, BE35 Sydney to Halifax. (b) August 8, 1975, 1400Z. (c) Following each of the above incidents, the circumstances were thoroughly investigated by an Air Traffic Services Fact Finding Board, and appropriate recommendations were actioned, designed to prevent reoccurrence.

[Mr. Goodale.]

3. All losses of separation are investigated by a Fact Finding Board, consisting of controller operations analysts from another unit and aviation safety officers. Findings and recommendations are made directly to the Director, Air Traffic Services and the Director General Civil Aeronautics whose offices ensure that appropriate corrective action is taken.

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION OF POLICY ON PRIME AGRICULTURAL LAND

Question No. 3,897—Mr. Fairweather:

Will the government consider as a policy that prime agricultural land be officially designated for agricultural use and that such policy govern the use of land for any proposal falling within the jurisdiction of the government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The government is considering all facets of the Canadian land use issue. The development of policies to conserve prime agricultural land is an important aspect of this issue. The government has initiated negotiations with the provinces and established an interdepartmental task force with the objective of developing mutually acceptable national land use policies. The question of designating prime agricultural land for agricultural use will certainly be considered during this process.

CAR RENTAL SERVICES AT MOT AIRPORTS

Question No. 3,918—Mr. Marshall:

As a result of the announcement by the Department of Transport on a new open access policy for the licensing of car rental services at MOT airports, what car rental agencies were contacted for comment and consultation and which ones replied?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Following the announcement of the new car rental policy at airports, copies of the policy were given wide circulation through MOT regional offices and a press release was issued informing interested parties as to where to obtain copies of the policy. A public briefing was held in Ottawa on January 14 and similar briefings are being held across Canada during the period February 2-17. These meetings were extensively advertised in all regions through daily and weekly newspapers. Throughout, members of parliament and senators have received all information concerning the consultation process. The larger companies have expressed their views both orally and in writing. It is expected that many of the independent operator franchises will make their views known during the meetings.

FORCED LANDING IN CUBA

Question No. 3,920—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Department of External Affairs aware of the fact that Canadians, Robert Carter, Greg Sieling, Allan Parfett and Leo Cossetto, had made of necessity a forced landing by air in Cuba on December 30, 1975 and, if so, on what date and in what manner did the Department receive such information?

2. Did Cuban authorities advise the Canadian Embassy in Havana of the incident and, if so, on what date and at what time?

3. Did the Canadian Embassy in Havana communicate such information to the Department in Ottawa and, if so, on what date and at what time?

4. If the Canadian Embassy did not communicate any information to the Department prior to the departure of the Canadians on December 31, 1975, what are the reasons for failing to do so?

5. Were the Canadians subjected to extensive interrogation by groups of Russians and, if so, has the Department requested an explanation from the Government of Cuba, and on what date was such a request made?

6. If no request was made (a) for what reason (b) will one be made?

7. Is it the policy of the government to allow without protest Canadian citizens to be interrogated by agents of the Soviet Union when they are in a country maintaining diplomatic relations with Canada that is not part of the territory of the Soviet Union and, if so, for what reason?

8. Will this entire matter be taken up by the Prime Minister with his counterpart, Prime Minister Fidel Castro, during his visit to Cuba and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, will the Prime Minister make public the result of such discussions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. The Department was notified by phone and telex late on December 30, shortly after the forced landing had occurred, by the Canadian Embassy in Washington and by the High Commission in Kingston, Jamaica. These missions had received the information from the civil aviation authorities at Miami and the Bahamas.

2. No. The Canadian Embassy in Havana received information from the same sources and at about the same time as the Department and immediately contacted the Cuban Ministry of Foreign Affairs to confirm the safe landing of the aircraft, to facilitate its earliest departure and arrange direct communication with the Canadians. The Cuban authorities confirmed the safe emergency landing and assured the Embassy that the Canadians and the aircraft would be allowed to depart. Efforts to make direct telephone contact with the Canadian pilot and passengers were unsuccessful.

3. The Department and the Embassy both received the information at about the same time on December 30 and were in constant communication from that time onward about the case.

4. The Canadian Embassy did communicate fully with the Department about this case prior to the departure of the Canadians on December 31, 1975.

5. According to the pilot, the Canadians were interrogated by Cuban and Soviet personnel. The Department has not requested an explanation on this particular point from the Government of Cuba.

6. (a) It is within the competence of the Cuban Government to designate whomsoever it wishes to assist in security precautions on Cuban territory. (b) No.

7. Answered in 6(a).

8. This matter was not raised by the Prime Minister with Prime Minister Fidel Castro during his visit to Cuba. The Canadian Embassy had already intervened with Cuban authorities to obtain release of the Canadian citizens and the aircraft involved.

Order Paper Questions

CBC PROGRAMME "AS IT HAPPENS"

Question No. 3,929—Mr. Cossitt:

During the past two years, what (a) Liberal Party (b) Progressive Conservative Party (c) New Democratic Party (d) Social Credit Party Members of Parliament have been interviewed on CBC radio programme "As It Happens" and, in each case (i) on what date (ii) on what subjects?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: For the period in question there have been more than 500 "As It Happens" programmes. Each was one and a half hours long, and it would take an inordinate amount of time, work and expense to provide the requested information.

COURT COSTS PAID OR PAYABLE TO P.P.G. INDUSTRIES CANADA, PILKINGTON BROTHERS LTD. AND W.W. BUCHANAN

Question No. 3,930—Mr. Woolliams:

With respect to the order of the Supreme Court of Canada in PPG Industries Canada Ltd. and Pilkington Brothers (Canada) Limited v. the Attorney General of Canada that the appellants should have their costs throughout against the Attorney General of Canada and that the award of costs by the Federal Court of Appeal to W.W. Buchanan should stand, what is the amount of such costs, paid or payable, to (a) the appellants (b) W.W. Buchanan?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): The costs in question have not yet been taxed by the Court. It is therefore impossible to give at this time the amount of costs allowed to either the appellants or to W.W. Buchanan.

REVENUE OF FRASER RIVER HARBOUR COMMISSION

Question No. 3,937—Mr. Friesen:

1. (a) What was the total revenue of the Fraser River Harbour Commission in (i) 1974 (ii) 1975 (b) what percentage came from (i) port facilities (ii) rental of fore-shore lots?

2. (a) How many ships have been unloaded by the new container cranes owned by the Commission since their purchase (b) how many containers does this involve?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) (i) 1974, $2,856,913; (ii) 1975, $3,011,130. (b) (i) 1974, 83.4 per cent; 1975, 82.3 per cent; (ii) 1974, 16.6 per cent; 1975, 17.7 per cent.

2. (a) 14. (b) 1264 Units, 95 Containers, 17 Houses. Total, 1,376.

CBC BUILDING, YELLOWKNIFE

Question No. 3,943—Mr. Johnston:

1. What is the proposed cost of the new CBC building in Yellowknife?

2. What will be the cost per square foot of available floor space?

3. What proportion of the building material expense will be for material imported from outside the Northwest Territories?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Tendered cost is $2,156,800.

2. $87.27.

3. Approximately 85 to 90 percent.

Order Paper Questions

EXPORT PERMIT ISSUED TO ZAIRE FOR BUFFALO AIRCRAFT

Question No. 3,953—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Does Zaire hold an export permit for Buffalo aircraft?

2. Is Zaire in default in any loan agreements with the Export Development Corporation?

3. Are export permits being withheld from (a) Zaire (b) other countries and, if so, on what basis?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Export Development Corporation are concerned: 1. On August 25, 1975 a permit to export Buffalo Aircraft to Zaire was issued to a Canadian company. This permit was suspended on January 23, 1976.

2. EDC does not publish particulars of the status of its loans. It is in relation to the borrower and in a sense to the exporter, in a confidential banker's role. Publication may embarrass both parties as well as EDC, and is not in the interest of Canada's trade. If EDC experiences losses, it is of course its responsibility to report those losses to Parliament. An International Monetary Fund study of Zaire is currently taking place.

3. It is presumed that this question refers to Buffalo Aircraft. As indicated in reply (1) the export permit to Zaire has been suspended. There are no other export permits for Buffalo Aircraft to any destination that are currently under suspension.

MEDICAL INFORMATION RELATING TO PERSONS HOLDING FOREIGN AND CANADIAN PILOT LICENCES

Question No. 3,970—Mr. Nielsen:

1. Under what condition does the civil aviation personnel licensing section of the Department of Transport forward medical information that pertains to a Canadian citizen who holds both Canadian and foreign pilot licenses to a foreign government department?

2. Is a Canadian citizen notified when a Canadian government department divulges medical history information to a foreign government department?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Transport Canada does not as a matter of policy, forward medical information to a foreign government department without the authorization of the licence holder or applicant. However, a statement of medical fitness is provided on occasion to assist a licence holder in obtaining a licence in another state.

2. Transport Canada does not divulge medical history information to a foreign government department, without the authorization and formal release by the licence holder or applicant concerned.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in order to correct an answer that I gave the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka when answering his question about vacancy rates. I think I said "common knowledge". I meant that the common objective of all those concerned is to reach the goal of a 4 to 5 per cent vacancy rate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner for the third reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, it is just over a year now since Bill C-58 was introduced into the House. I am sure many government members would like to be quick to accuse the opposition of delaying passage of the bill, but before they do so I should like to point out to them that it is the government itself that has been very slow in taking action on the bill. The bill was first introduced, I believe, in January, 1975. We did not see it again until June or July when it was before the House for a short time. Then we did not see it again until December. So lest some government members want to point an accusing finger at the opposition for being slow to adopt this measure, I would suggest politely to them that obviously there are members within the cabinet who are not very anxious to see the bill passed. Otherwise it would have received a much better priority rating within the legislative calendar of the government. Perhaps the opposition is doing some members of the cabinet and some members of the government a favour in continuing to press the government for further explanations concerning the weaknesses of the bill.

When the bill was first presented to parliament I had at least a mild, if not more than mild, interest in it. I am always interested in legislation that has a reasonable and wholesome approach to the repatriation of industry to Canada. I believe the provision in the bill calling for 75 per cent ownership within the year is a little precipitous and does work somewhat of a hardship on the companies concerned. However, obviously this is something we can live with. The companies have already agreed to it, so therefore we can accept it.

When we began second reading, some of the glaring weaknesses of the legislation quickly came to the surface. I realize that not only could I not support the legislation, but that I had vigorously to oppose it. As we began to debate the bill, the government became impatient with the progress we made and invoked closure. At that time it was obvious that the government did not appreciate too close a scrutiny of the legislation, so they invoked closure and moved the bill into committee.

One of the things that was striking, even to the casual observer, at that stage was the changes made in the personnel of the committee. Some of the regulars were no longer there even though they had had a perfect or near perfect attendance in the Committee. They were strangely missing from the committee; and that in itself was disturbing. To find that the government used its majority to adopt a modified version of the guillotine in committee was equally, if not more, disturbing.

Whereas the caucus chairmen were allowed ten minutes for their opening remarks and questions, each succeeding member of the committee was allowed but five minutes to examine a witness. I suggest that five minutes is an inadequate amount of time to do any thorough investigation of what the legislation is all about. It seems to me that if the government is serious about bringing forward good legislation, it ought to be interested enough in the process of the committee proceedings to make sure that legislation comes out of the committee in the very best form it could possibly take. If that is to be the case, there must be wholesome discussion and give-and-take in the committee. I also recall that the committee stage enjoyed obvious public and media interest. This was one of the few occasions in the history of the committees that there has been standing room only in a committee. Most of those who attended were members of the media and obviously they knew that their livelihoods were being threatened by this legislation.

I also recall that the members of the committee were honestly trying to grapple—I was going to say "wrestle" but I think that is an overused and misused word in this House—with the terms of the bill. We were having a difficult time because although the bill is a tax measure, the operative part of the bill, the critical feature of it—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I should like to ask the hon. member a question, but if not a question I should like to raise a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A question is not a point of order, but since the hon. member has interrupted, would the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) give consent?

● (1550)

Mr. Friesen: I would gladly permit a question, but I would prefer it at the end of my speech, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is the prerogative of the hon. member who has the floor to decide whether or not he will entertain a question. The hon. member cannot ask his question unless he has that consent. So unless the hon. member has a real point of order—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I believe I do have a point of order. The fact is that the members of the committee could always request a witness to come back a second, or even a third time if necessary. Members did have such an opportunity. There were numerous members of the committee, and five minutes were allocated to each of them for questioning of the witnesses. The fact remains that they could have been asked to return on a subsequent or on a third occasion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member is now getting into a matter of debate. After the hon. member who has the floor has completed his remarks, the hon. member can then stand and the Chair will recognize him if he wishes to make a speech.

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, obviously the chief government whip is a little sensitive about how he conducted the affairs of that committee.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You don't seem to know how it was conducted.

Mr. Friesen: The whip will know for certain, if he examines the records of that committee, that the only witness who was permitted to come back a second time was the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). We would gladly have entertained the president of Reader's Digest on a return visit but, again, the government used its majority on that committee to forestall that kind of move. The government whip ought to know better than make the kind of suggestion he has just made in the House.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is a real and an honest one.

An hon. Member: That is a powerful word, Joe, so be careful.

Mr. Friesen: Before I was interrupted by that "Guay" statement we were discussing a theoretical tax measure, but the operative measures are outside the confines of the bill, and how does one deal with a bill when the most effective parts are not among its clauses? Nevertheless, that became the dominant area of discussion in the committee and in the House concerning the 80 per cent content rule brought down, not by the Secretary of State but by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), and the implied, if not direct, censorship it invokes on the press. The Secretary of State, who appeared several times before the Committee, repeatedly took an adamant posture on the 80 per cent content rule. There was absolutely no conciliation on this point and his position remained totally firm. The 80 per cent different was the rule for all foreign-owned periodicals, including Reader's Digest.

It was suggested to the Secretary of State and others that Reader's Digest, because of the nature of that publication, could no longer function in Canada under that kind of rule. The Secretary of State seemed to think that was rubbish. We questioned him on that and we questioned representatives of Maclean-Hunter on the point. They testified that they had meetings with members of the staff of the Minister of National Revenue, at which time they said they would like to have a 100 per cent rule but could live with the 80 per cent rule. They stated they could not live with a less than 80 per cent content rule.

The 80 per cent rule referred to those articles issuing from a source of continuing relationship with another country and those articles would have to be re-edited within Canada. Those were the terms, and that is what the Secretary of State continuously reaffirmed before the committee and, again, repeatedly in the House. He made it very clear, as did members of the staff of the National Revenue Department, that re-editing was not simply changing prepositions, synonyms, but meant substantial re-editing of the material. Then departmental officials appeared before the committee and we wrestled with them as to how this particular rule was to be measured in respect of each of the articles.

The important fact that I want to bring before members of this House is that there was absolutely no turning from this position in the mind or in the statements of the Secretary of State. He was totally adamant on this point. Then the first week in February, presto changeo, there was an about-face in that position of the Liberal party. Previously, the 80 per cent rule also applied to Reader's Digest, and now, all of a sudden, it did not. Those articles which had been digested in précis form from a foreign source no longer had to undergo revision when they came into Canada.

Mr. Faulkner: Of course they do. You are confused.

Mr. Friesen: The Minister of National Revenue stated in the House, in unequivocal terms, that a publication like Reader's Digest could not function in Canada under what was commonly called the Cullen rule as outlined in October. He said in the House that the Cullen rule would make an operation like Reader's Digest defunct. It is noteworthy that the legislation again was brought forward by the Secretary of State, but the rule and the change in the rule were brought forward by the Minister of National Revenue.

The question is, how did this come about? What happened between the time the committee hearings ended in mid-December and the first week in February which brought about this absolute and total reversal in position? Something happened in the back rooms of the caucus, or the Department of National Revenue. Somebody visited the Minister of National Revenue and gave him a sudden flash of inspiration or insight which made him concede he was being unfair to a publication like Reader's Digest. The question that lies before us in this House is, what went on in the recesses of the chambers of the Minister of National Revenue? What kind of deal was made between the minister and officers of this one publication? What is it that made him change his mind? The minister said in this House that under the earlier version of the Cullen rule Reader's Digest could not operate. Now we see the 80 per cent different rule in respect of those materials from sources of continuing arrangement suddenly changed so that Reader's Digest qualifies.

In view of the fact that representatives of Maclean-Hunter insisted in October it needed the 80 per cent content rule in order to function, it would be worth while to ask what Maclean-Hunter is going to do now that Reader's Digest will be able to function in Canada. What is going to happen to that poor, distraught, undernourished company? What will happen to that tender flower, as it has been referred to in this House? Is it not going to be able to function now that the 80 per cent rule has been changed?

Members of this House, and members of the committee particularly, have a right to know what went on during the negotiations between the board of directors, or the president of Reader's Digest, and the Minister of National Revenue. The parliamentary committee, whose function it was to discern and ascertain what the best solution was in respect of legislation like this, was bypassed, overlooked and ignored regarding those negotiations. It was not advised until the day the press release was issued, and I believe the standing committee has the right to know what went on. Indeed the minister has an obligation to tell the standing committee what went on. It is a responsibility of that minister to deal fairly, honestly and openly with the members of the standing committee so that they may be apprised of the negotiations which went on.

● (1600)

The overriding question which stands before the House today is do we now have the best possible legislation in the form of Bill C-58 as it is presently before us? Obviously if there have been negotiations in the back rooms it is not the best possible legislation. So, Mr. Speaker, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather):

That Bill C-58 be referred back to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts to enable the committee to hear evidence about arrangements made after the committee reported Bill C-58 to the House which will enable the Reader's Digest to qualify as a Canadian periodical.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must bring to the attention of the hon. member that his motion was meant to be seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who is not in the House at the present time. Perhaps the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) would second the motion.

Mr. McKinnon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am sure most if not all members feel as I do about Bill C-58 at this point in time. On the one hand I am grateful that this charade is finally coming to a close. On the other hand I am still as much in the dark as I was several months ago when the government first launched its vendetta against two of the finest publications in Canada. We still do not know, after weeks of deliberation, just why the bill was tabled.

When my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) rose to speak on this bill a couple of weeks ago he opened his remarks by saying that everything that could be said had already been said about the substance of Bill C-58. He added that he was compelled to speak on the bill on behalf of his constituents, more than 90 per cent of whom were in favour of leaving these two magazines alone. I am sure the same applies to many people in the great riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. I know also that many of my colleagues have received great numbers of letters in respect of this bill.

The remarks of the hon. member echoed the sentiments of most members of this House, although many of them did not put those sentiments into words. Like my colleague, I would like to commend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) and the other members on the government benches who had the courage to speak out for their constituents on this vital question. As my colleagues are aware by now, I tend to be a sort of quiet and retiring person, and so I greatly admire scrappers like the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who proved right from the beginning that she had the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) figured out right to the "T". She showed beyond a shadow of a doubt that, while he professed to be some kind of an expert on the publishing industry, he was simply parroting the phrases provided to him by the Toronto publishing clique, the barons of mediocrity.

It should be interesting to see the Secretary of State in the next general election campaign flip-flopping, squirming, and equivocating all over the riding like the infamous generals of Hitler after World War II. He will probably complain that he was only following orders from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Well, we all know what happened to those generals; and I would suggest that the Secretary of State will get some of his own back in the next election. The road to electoral defeat is paved with those members who thought, going into a campaign, that people never remember what happened a few months or a couple of years before.

The worst effect of Bill C-58 will not be the demise of Time and Reader's Digest. No matter what we do here with respect to those magazines, both Time and Reader's Digest will survive, not only in the United States but in the multitude of countries around the world where there is still freedom of the press, and where people still have the right to decide what they will read. The total effect of this bill will be, in the long run, the denial to the people of Canada of right of access to the periodicals of their choice.

If the real purpose of Bill C-58 is the protection of the Canadian periodical industry, then there are two reasons why this bill is out of contact with reality. In the first place, magazines such as Maclean's will not be made better or more prosperous for their owners by the act of eliminating their chief competitors. When I spoke earlier on this bill I described Maclean's as a tender flower which needed much nurturing in order to survive. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I now have had some cause to change. I think this tender flower could be more aptly described as a carnivorous man-eating or plant-eating plant in the sense of devouring its smaller and less successful competitors.

It may be that Maclean's will be the octopus of the Canadian periodical industry. Time and Reader's Digest have never been any real competition to Maclean's for the simple reason that they are not even in the same league. In my view that is like trying to protect the egg market in Canada by prohibiting the importation of apples from Oregon.

In the second place, because the bill cannot possibly affect the economic health of these two magazines, the real effect of the bill is to introduce censorship of a section of the media in Canada. I do not believe this censorship will end with these two magazines. I believe, and other members including the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway believe as I do, that if parliament allows the government to exercise censorship in the case of Time and Reader's Digest, we will be opening Pandora's box.

We will see this same censorship being exercised again and again by the Secretary of State, or perhaps by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). This is simply too much power to place in the hands of a minister, any minister, and especially a minister who has proven that he would use this power to work out a grudge against a particular magazine. Will it be a particular newspaper next or will it be Maclean's, the very magazine that Bill C-58 is designed to promote? Maclean's has lately adopted a policy of publishing laudatory articles about the Liberal government and pages of profiles of Liberal ministers. What if Maclean's should begin to write articles that tell the whole truth about the government and its ministers? Would the Secretary of State lower the boom?

Non-Canadian Publications

The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton revealed another flaw in Bill C-58 when he pointed out that under both federal and provincial law 51 per cent or more ownership in any company in Canada or any kind of property constitutes ownership. He pointed out that even in the case of the recent laws governing foreign ownership of Canadian corporations the law states that ownership is Canadian if 51 per cent or more of stock in such company is owned by resident Canadians. If this is so, Mr. Speaker, then why is it necessary to single out two magazines, or why is it necessary to single out a particular kind of industry and say that the law does not apply?

Why is it important to us to insist that Time and Reader's Digest show 75 per cent or 80 per cent Canadian ownership to qualify as Canadian? I still have not been given the answer to that question, and I still have not found out what happened to the motion moved by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

● (1610)

Speaking of answers, I would like the Secretary of State to come clean on at least one aspect of this mess and tell us about the sweetheart deal the government made with Reader's Digest—or possibly it should be the Minister of National Revenue. I would like to know exactly what was arranged between Reader's Digest and the ministers in question. We have already heard the Minister of National Revenue say on national television that if Bill C-58 does not kill the Canadian edition of Time magazine, then perhaps he would have to consider bringing in much stronger legislation. We have been told that the sweetheart deal made with Reader's Digest could not apply in the case of Time. Why? I would like to know the answers to these questions, and time is running out—no pun intended.

The plain fact of Bill C-58 is that it is directed against the majority of Canadians, people who have expressed their wish to have Time and Reader's Digest remain as they are. Those people know what they like, they know what they want, and at this point in time they are well aware that their wishes are not important to the Secretary of State or the government as a whole.

In conclusion I should like to refer to a statement made in 1760 by Edmund Burke, one of the greatest of all parliamentarians and a staunch foe of oppressive government. In a paper he wrote in support of the repeal of the Popery laws he said, and I quote:

> A law against the majority of the people is in substance a law against the people itself. It is not particular injustice, but general oppression.

That sums up my opposition to Bill C-58. It provides me with two excellent reasons for voting against the bill. First, the bill denies the majority of Canadians the right of access to periodicals of their choice. Second, it opens the door to government censorship of the press in Canada. I challenge hon. members on the benches across the floor to find as good a reason for voting for Bill C-58. I challenge them to vote against the bill and fully support the amendment of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, having spoken before, my fear over content control and the ramifications of such tampering and manipulation of regulations regarding content is well known here. I have also expressed my deep concern about the morality and the reflection on us as a nation over the manner with which we are treating those who were welcomed here one third of a century ago and who now are being ejected in a manner worthy of a banana republic, not that of a free, mature, and democratic nation such as Canada.

The one major concern in this whole debate, the reason I have participated with such vigour, and the reason I rise again on third reading is fear for the fundamental freedom of our country. This fear has been expressed by the most responsible and able people in the media across this nation. We all see it threatened under this tax legislation. We see freedom threatened by giving bureaucrats the power of cultural police, and courts being stripped of the power in this case that should wholly be held there.

There should not be a final decision by anyone in a democracy other than a court. This is a threat to freedom itself. The foundations of democracy, not only freedom of the press but use of law and the court as final arbiter, are being lost in the regulations which are part of all this.

This is all happening as our world grows smaller and the number of free societies is diminishing. It is obvious that the first sign of trouble and emerging tyranny is erosion of a free press. Freedom, so precious but with such fragile underpinnings, is constantly in crisis. It should never be tampered with or treated lightly, because it can quickly collapse. Freedoms throughout the world were virtually lost overnight when a despot took over nations when he could not stand up to the scrutiny of the masses. The first act was inevitably to remove those who exposed him to scrutiny, that is, the published and, today, the electronic media. That thus eliminates freedom of the press, and then there is the freedom to do whatever is desired with the people, and any atrocity is acceptable.

I use this illustration because to understand the normal we must understand the abnormal. The extreme is always a possibility and a danger when freedom is so delicate. Those who watch and report to the citizenry, and those who are known as the fourth estate of society must be with us whether they are good or bad. A free press is our protection. It does not matter that the style of reporting might not make us all happy. I wish it were better in Canada and that there were more self-discipline within the press so that there would never be danger of control over it. Our system of justice, our system of parliament, and our agencies of government must be watched, just as the courts must be watched, by the press. Bill C-58 could be a dangerous step and could shatter the fragile underpinnings of our whole system of public communication.

All of us here, though devoted to our country and our democracy, could share in our own demise. Many here sincerely believe in some high minded objective, some hope of national growth and superiority and, frighteningly enough, national purity against the entry of outsiders. That has happened often in history, and history must be our lesson.

Some of my hon. colleagues express concern and even some disgust that this bill has struggled so long through gestation. It should never have been conceived. Perhaps the parents of this bill are mismatched, and the product can only be a warped, deformed monster. I think there would be greater cause for worry if Bill C-58 had been taken as lightly as some of the committee members wished, or if it had been handled with the casualness of what some have described as a simple tax bill. It is much more than that. It is a twisting of regulations to fit the plan of a cultural assassination to silence certain periodicals because they are not purely Canadian.

Freedom was lost in another country in the search for a pure Aryan quality. The first move there was to silence the press. Once the press or the media was no longer free, the most horrendous atrocities could occur. Millions of lives were destroyed, and no one was there to report that or to account to the nation or the international community, because the nation itself was no longer free. Perhaps that will not happen here, but it was always maintained it could not happen in Germany. After all, Germany was one of the most culturally advanced societies of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. However, it did happen, and thus there can be no guarantee that it cannot happen elsewhere, even in Canada. When any group abuses freedom there is the danger of losing it. Whenever people fail to use self-discipline in their profession or business, the state inevitably moves in and opposes it.

It has been said by the leader of this side of the House that before the anti-inflation program was introduced, big business, big industry and big unions would not use self-discipline; they would not co-operate to solve the problems of this nation, and so controls were imposed. It frightens me to think that controls could ever move into the cultural field. Some of the most democratic people in this country are actually saying this without awareness of the tyranny into which they can lead all of us, and despite their well-intentioned and seemingly high minded principles. Some members of parliament talk of imposing codes of ethics on journalists.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) talked casually in the committee of a cultural plan for Canada. It is possibly because of what is happening in other areas in Canada that reinforces my fear at this moment. Judy LaMarsh in her commission on violence in the media discusses the possibility of censorship. The CRTC has ordered CFCF Montreal to show cause why it should not lose its licence for doing what is one of the jobs of the media, drawing attention to controversial issues, including the actions, good or bad, of government. The issue of the language bill, Bill 22 in Quebec, and the reaction, a petition with 600,000 names, seem to have angered powerful forces close to the government.

CRTC chairman, Harry Boyle—one of the great Canadian electronic media experts and an eminently just man, one who understands freedom and the delicacy of its life and knows the press as well as any Canadian—explained his reasons for the CRTC threat to the CFCF licence by saying the reporting was not balanced. Surely that is a journalistic judgment and not one that should concern the CRTC. But CRTC power has become almost greater than the government that has created it. It is because of this that I am so concerned about this one other and major step toward diminishing freedom in communications.

Perhaps members of the press have distorted and exaggerated issues and in many cases lost their credibility. Thus at this time, when their voices are loud and clear and uniform on Bill C-58, few in this House, in these seats of power, are listening. It is as though they cried wolf too often, and unfortunately they are not being heard right now.

Virtually every major and minor newspaper and columnist is attacking Bill C-58 as a threat to the basic freedom of communication in our society. They are stressing the inherent danger of control of content and the use of tax legislation to drive publications and the border television stations such as KVOS-BC Ltd. out of the country. But now members of this House will not listen. That in itself is frightening. It means they have contempt for the press or lack of confidence in it; therefore it could be expendable in the hands of ruthless government. It is basic that even a bad press that is free is essential to a free society; when your press is no longer able to watch, no longer able to report, even if the reportage is bad, then your society is in jeopardy.

It has been said that parliamentarians and the press are natural enemies. I think at the present time this can be a very dangerous enmity since parliament seems determined to take unto itself, through Bill C-58, the power to control content in one segment of the media and remove the court's right of final arbiter in the question of content control and manipulation control. This will ultimately, if the law is enforced equally as it should be, affect the whole media. It only needs a small start to spread.

If we were to lose our liberties, the liberty of the press would bring them all back again. The liberty of the press and the liberty of the country must stand or fall together, as one writer said. The loss can spread once it starts with the speed of an infectious disease through the entire body of publications. When this happens, and it can happen, freedom is lost.

As long as the press is free and democratic, a type of love-hate relationship will exist. I think it is healthy that it exists between parliamentarians and the media. It is based on a reliance on each other and the need to work together; the one to enact legislation, and the other to tell it to the public.

For the politicians in parliament there is a fundamental ambition; that is to use the press, the media, to help them get re-elected. And the press, feeling this power only during elections, is inclined to subtle arrogance. But when freedom goes there are no elections and there is no need for those in power to maintain a friendship with the press. There are those dangers.

There is a thought that is passing through my mind as I read the history of democracies that have died. In every case the first action in their demolition was elimination of the press. It has been said so often, I have said it before and I say it again, that even a bad and irresponsible press that is free is better than no free press.

There has never been a time in our history when a responsible and dedicated press dedicated to this nation could be more useful and important to our sociological and economic health and the national well being. The good messages that are coming out of this House, the good things that are happening despite partisan politics in the front rows here, and the debate that goes on across this great hall, all the good things happening here are not being told across Canada. The psychic depression is more devastating, I would think, as a result possibly of press failure to tell the good as well as the bad. It is probably more serious than the economic pressures and worries.

That is not the issue at this time, however. No matter what the press does here it must be held free. Perhaps it may have to use self-discipline, but that is another debate. Even if parliament is not listening to the message about Bill C-58—perhaps because of annoyance—it changes nothing. The vindictive and punitive power used by parliament is dangerous. What is next after Bill C-58?

It is interesting to note that the Toronto Sun, a unique publication that survived and asked no quarter, asked no handout, asked no protection from the government of Canada in fighting the giants of Toronto, the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Star. The Sun's survival is something of a media miracle. The spirit of those who worked on the Telegram moved to the Sun when that paper was demolished in a sense, or taken over by the two giants.

The Sun points out, as many of us have pointed out repeatedly here, that the newspapers of Canada are jammed with material from the New York Times, the London Observer, The Economist, the Los Angeles Times, etc. If the C-58 content rules were applied consistently and as they should be in law, not one Canadian newspaper could meet the 80 per cent measure, a measure that would be made by ruler and probably a pocket calculator in the hands of officials of the Department of National Revenue. It would also mean that Canadians would be deprived of foreign news because the words "essentially different" and the other words "continuing arrangement" which govern this whole bill would ban entry of outside information.

On October 30, 1975, the Vancouver Sun wrote:

> If there are tears to be shed they are not for two magazines that will, without doubt, continue to provide many of their two million Canadian purchasers—and at least twice as many readers—with a different American version.
> Rather, they are for a country that would allow its laws to be twisted by bureaucratic redefinition to apply to two specific publications, whatever the publications . . .

The article continues:

> Whatever else it is, it is not freedom of the press, that "fundamental freedom" enshrined in that limited, neglected and for the most part ineffective act known as the Canadian Bill of Rights. Perhaps it is time that "fundamental freedom" was tested in a courtroom.

In the Montreal Gazette of November 27, 1975, John Meyer wrote, "Thoughtful Canadians have every reason to be apprehensive". He discussed the extremes to which the government is prepared to go, and said:

> That government should be willing to bring its authority to bear to destroy competition as distinct from equalizing it, ought to cause other foreign subsidiaries in Canada to ask when they will be found no longer acceptable.

The list is endless. The Secretary of State repeatedly relied on the Canadian periodical association to support his position. This organization was formed less than three years ago in order to push this bill through for vested interests, not in the interests of Canada. Certainly if I know periodical publishing it is no help to the publishing industry.

The prestigious Canadian Authors Association, an organization of about 850 author members, probably every author in Canada, which fought since 1921 and obtained improved copyright laws and other protections for writers, came before the committee, was given a polite hearing, and that was all. What it said seemed to be ignored. Although the resolution it put before parliament of Canada is not included in the minutes of the committee hearings, may I put part of its resolution on record? It is resolved, in the second paragraph:

● (1630)

... that the intended establishment of content guidelines for periodicals published in Canada as a minimum requirement for determining the "Canadian-ness" of these periodicals is anathema to the principles of freedom of expression upon which this country has flourished and without which it will quickly diminish in stature.

They go on to make this next point:

... that the Government of Canada immediately rescind its current actions in seeking to amend the Income Tax Act so as to restrict any periodical—including our daily press which does not, nor could not, meet such requirements—from publishing whatever content it deems most acceptable to its own readers in the firm belief that Canadians are sufficiently mature to reject those ideas and concepts that hold no appeal for them and in the further belief that maturity can only grow—as the nation itself grows—through the people's own powers of choice.

They wanted to make it clear to the leaders of our government that the growth of Canadian culture can only be inhibited by censorship and unacceptable ownership guidelines such as are currently being considered by the government for such periodicals as Reader's Digest and Time and, in fact, that only by exposure to all Canadians of such vehicles can an indigenous culture develop and flourish.

That statement was ignored, as was the statement by the ad hoc group of 27 authors who wrote a letter to the committee asking the committee not to move in the direction indicated by Bill C-58. Among the authors were included Sydney Katz, Bruce Hutchison and Robert Collins, who are prominent Canadians and good writers.

The national fervor, obviously greed for more and more, is exemplified by Maclean's, that great, multinational conglomerate, and Southam's, which has vested interests in periodical publications and owns its own television and cable companies. Incidentally, among the top 200 Canadian corporations Maclean's ranks as 143rd and Southam's as 88th.

The most interesting example of the motivation for this cultural nationalism is the amusing irony in the recent story about book publisher Mel Hurtig, Edmonton's resident nationalist, the man who headed the "Committee for an independent Canada."

Hurtig, who is perpetually heard crying "foul" about American intrusion into Canadian books and periodicals, provides jobs in Japan and other foreign countries rather than in Canada. He can get his books printed more cheaply abroad. On January 1 of this year Hurtig lost his lucrative Guinness Books of Records. The outcry was horrendous. While he does not want foreign subsidiary houses operating in Canada lest they jeopardize his income, he cried "foul" because the Guinness best seller had been lost to him. It may be the first response to Canadian cultural protectionism, called nationalism.

[Mrs. Holt.]

Hurtig lost one quarter of his income, his "seed money", by the Guinness action. Jamie Portman, reporting for Southam News service, described Hurtig as "hopping mad". Hurtig is reported to have said, "Here it is, happening to me, a Canadian nationalist who has long argued about the way in which we can be affected by decision-making outside our own borders. I never dreamed I would be faced with such a situation myself." Instead of realizing he had created his own disaster he turned his attack on the foreign publishers. They probably knew what he had been doing and were giving him some sort of message. Even the Secretary of State sent a personal letter, I understand—according to Portman's report in the Citizen of December 17, 1975—warning Norris McWhirter of the "serious implications this action could have for the future of the Canadian publishing industry." What a strange argument.

Hurtig wrote:

Your decision, to the Guinness group, means that our publishing company will have a substantial drop in sale thus affecting our ability to publish Canadian books. It will mean more of an outflow of profits from Canada to United States each year.

He was writing this letter to a British book company. He went on:

In general, it will be highly detrimental to both Canadian book publishing and the Canadian market as well.

If Guinness books were looking for the world's record for the greatest distortion of nationalism in the world, that would be it.

Let me return to the serious question of this bill and the danger it represents to the entire body of freedom, not just the freedom of self-serving nationalists.

As quoted by Leonard Lyons of New York Post, April 1, 1959, Nehru said to Khruschev in a meeting:

You do not change the course of history by turning the faces of portraits to the wall.

While we cannot change history's course, the patterns of past history have a consistency which warn we are headed on a collision course with freedom. It begins when a state starts tampering with content of publications, with freedom to publish, and the whole business of censorship, which often goes as far as the assassination of publications. How often have I heard that this bill is not censorship! I don't know what censorship is, if this is not censorship.

The most recent and significant demise of a free press in a democracy occurred in India. When Indira Ghandi's troubles began one of her first actions was to manipulate, then totally control, freedom of the press, thus putting India's newspapers under permanent censorship. The bill she put through her parliament last June was described as so far-reaching that no paper will be able to say, for example, that poverty has increased in India. Banned from publication will be accounts of anti-government demonstrations, arrests, opposition activities, and even speeches in parliament.

Yes, it can happen here—and the Secretary of State announced in committee that he had a cultural plan for Canada. That has happened before, with nationalism as the driving force, the most notable example being the German cultural plan announced in Mein Kampf by Adolf Hitler. It outlined complete monopoly control of public communications—press, film, wireless, exhibitions—by which public opinion is created.

In the fall of 1933 Dr. Goebbels, the propaganda minister, set up his cultural power structure with a government act. It was to be the Reich Culture Chamber, which would exercise strictly centralized control. Then, on October 4, 1933, the inevitable happened. The journalists act was passed. It expressly repudiated the liberal notion of the freedom of the press. Said Dr. Goebbels:

Such an idea proceeded not from people collectively, but from the individual, and in its exaggerated form it has increasingly made it evident that freedom of opinion, the more it was conceded to the individual, the more it reacted to the prejudice of the general good of the whole people.

He said:

... we want no opinionated nonsense. We want frank and honourable utterance.

Entry to the profession was confined to those on a restricted list possessing German citizenship. They had to be Aryan, not foreign. This was a combination of nationalism and socialism. Hitler called it national socialism. Those entering the profession, Goebbels said, had to show all the characteristics "demanded by the task of spiritually and intellectually influencing public opinion. Consciousness of responsibility to state and people, and personal purity, shall decide the entry to the profession of journalists."

And they said it could not happen there; but it did.

Just one year before the journalists act was passed—and I am saying this to show what can happen—there were 4,700 newspapers in Germany, of which 70 per cent were dailies. More than 100 different parties or group ideologies were represented. The largest of these was the Berliner Morgenpost, claiming a circulation of 600,000. It had been founded in 1898 by the House of Ullstein—a father and five sons. When Hitler became chancellor in January, 1933, he immediately caused President Paul von Hindenburg to invoke article 48 of the constitution in order to cancel the guaranteed freedom of the press. Some papers were immediately silenced. Within three months 200 were suspended, and within a year 600 papers were dead. The House of Ullstein, being Jewish, was driven out.

● (1640)

When Germany seized Austria in 1938, publications were again among the first target of the Nazis. Many old papers died including the Wiener Zeitune, founded in 1703. The rest of Vienna's newspapers were melded into one Nazi organ.

I have a Viennese friend who escaped and now lives in the west. She recalls the day that this all happened. She said, "No one can understand what it means to go to bed at night in a free society and wake up the next morning to find that you no longer have police protection or a free press". Every erosion of our own freedom of choice, freedom of publication, can clear the way to despotism.

Can anyone in this House guarantee that when content control and manipulation are handled by bureaucracy, not by editors or journalists, that we are safe, that we will not see freedom of the press in general jeopardized?

Non-Canadian Publications

Most of us here only know Czechoslovakia, with all its artistry and beauty, through the magnificence displayed in its pavillion at Expo 1967, the year before that nation was invaded and enslaved in 1968 because it dared to be free. It lost its freedom in the Nazi deal with Chamberlain in 1939, and then again in 1968 when the Russians invaded. The first victim besides Dubcek, who had been emancipating the country and the press, was the media. The Czech Journalists Union Review reported that, between 1968 and 1972, 1,222 journalists had been expelled.

I feel very strongly, as do many Canadians, about what happens in a nation that is not free. Across this country are descendents of people who fled to freedom. My parents knew the pain and suffering of tyrannical government. They seldom talked about it. They fled as children. My mother first fled to the United States. She recalls fleeing from the Cossacks as a girl of 13 and hiding in a graveyard with her sister-in-law, who was in an advanced stage of pregnancy. She delivered the baby in that graveyard and they managed to flee.

As a boy of 13 my father fled and came to Canada. He came to the prairies shortly after Alberta joined confederation. He only talked of this once, but he recalls with great pain how his little cousins were held up by their feet and chopped in half. I feel very strongly about freedom. Every Canadian whose ancestors fled to this free country should be concerned about erosion in our free press and our free society.

In Viet Nam, while the Americans were there, the press reported American activities freely—mostly the bad news. There was no freedom in reporting the Viet Cong. Thus their atrocities may never be revealed. Once the Americans left Viet Nam, the free open society disappeared, and today a watchful press is not there to inhibit those who use secrecy and privacy to conceal atrocities. Who is complaining now? Who is talking? Who is worried about what is happening in Viet Nam?

In Cambodia's Phnom Penh only 20,000 of its three million residents were left in the city after the Khymer Rouge drove the millions out into the fields. No reporters were there to report the massacres, starvations, tortures and murders. We do not know yet. A young doctor who happened to be in this country visited my office. He is searching for his young wife and three year old baby. He will never find them. They probably died of starvation outside Phnom Penh.

The free press goes, and so does freedom. The slightest interference with regard to content or the control of content, and any kind of dictatorship with regard to what can be written, published and heard, are a threat to our freedom.

The condition of the press in Russia is well known. My parents recall the silent press that would not help the Jewish people. Today medicine is used by the state to imprison and destroy. Insane asylums are used as a device of torture and punishment. There is no freedom of religion, free right of movement, or job opportunity.

The Jews throughout history have been the barometer of lost freedoms, and no place more exemplified this in twentieth century history than did Germany and Russia. Once the persecution begins for them it spreads to others first along religious and political lines, and then indiscriminately. It was said by Heinrich Heine in 1834 that since the Exodus, I presume from slavery in Egypt, freedom has always spoken with a Hebrew accent. Perhaps I feel differently about this bill than some here because I have a different heritage.

This legislation, drafted to set a percentage on content by regulation and with no recourse to the courts for a test of its legality, is designed in the name of nationalism. I still say freedom itself, and the structure of democratic initiative and control by the justice system are threatened.

We probably will survive this, but when and what steps will be taken next in the cultural plan? I return to government interference with the right of the public to buy, to read, to watch what it wants, whether the parent company is Canadian or American. That is a step away from freedom.

And that phoney line: "We'll still get Time magazine" is specious. We will not get it in the way 500,000 Canadians have enjoyed it because content is controlled. Somebody said four Canadian pages. I do not care if it is four or six pages. I thought it was seven or eight. However, it is a balance of national news. There are 500,000 Canadians who have enjoyed its balance of content. If we do not want it manipulated and controlled so as to drive it out of the country, we will get an all-American edition as we do with the other imports.

The jobs in the west will go. Time says that it may keep some jobs in Montreal. It is possible that they will take their magazine and with it all the materials bought in Canada, move across the border and export in the same way as Newsweek and other magazines.

Both Time and Reader's Digest have said that they do not seek special exemptions, special status, or special privileges of any sort. It is the right of the people to advertise where they choose. Lest there be any doubt about the matter, they do not seek a competitive commercial advantage.

I would like to see Maclean's put out a quality news magazine that can compete. I would love to see it become such a good magazine that Reader's Digest would lose some of its circulation. That would be great. However, all they are into is a vindictive, narrow, Toronto-based nationalism that ends on Bloor Street.

● (1650)

In any case Bill C-58 is an assault on the right of the citizen. If a nation values anything more than freedom, it will lose that freedom, said Somerset Maugham. And the irony of it is that if it is money that is valued more than freedom, that too will be lost. We can only be losers in this attempt to push through Bill C-58 which represents a start toward an objective we can only fear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to say that this will be the last time I shall speak in this House under the leadership of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who legally, I suppose, will cease to be the Leader of the Opposition in some five or six minutes time. I am delighted, however, that he intends to retain his seat in the House and I hope he will carry on in public in future the way he does in private, so that the country at large will be able to benefit from his wisdom more than it has in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: I should also like to compliment the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) on the well-prepared speech she has just delivered. She shows an independence of spirit which is very rare. I do not say it is very rare only on the government side. It is very rare on both sides of the House. I compliment her on this, but I warn her that if her philosophy develops along the line it has taken in the last three or four weeks there will be other issues on which she will find herself at odds with the government. From reading her speeches closely I would say there is very little in common between her and, for example, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). Freedom is not limited to the printed word or to the electronic media. So I suspect the hon. member will be joining with members in various corners of the House in future in opposition to other legislation of a nature similar to the bill before us today.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but perhaps I might obtain some information from the deputy House leader of the Conservative party. There was some indication at the time negotiations were going on between the parties to offer the Conservatives the extra hours, this evening and tomorrow, that debate on the bill before us would be terminated by five o'clock and the Conservatives could hold their convention in peace. All members would now agree, I imagine, that for the past week at any rate the debate has been repetitive and superfluous.

I would point out that an amendment has been presented which was not contemplated earlier, and this indicates some reluctance on the part of the opposition to make an effort along the lines suggested. I wonder now whether it is intended that the debate should be wound up before five o'clock. Should this not be the intention of the opposition I can only say that the government will seriously consider moving to obtain extra time in the immediate future to make up for the time which has been lost as a result of the agreement.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member should raise at this point, a few minutes before five o'clock, a matter which he and I in the course of our duty as deputy House leaders had been discussing previously. I recall that I was once chastized, very rightly, by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) for making a statement in the House with respect to a matter which had been discussed among House leaders. I felt so strongly about breaching what I considered to be the traditional protocol which governs these matters that I went to the President of the Privy Council and apologized profusely to him for my breach of etiquette.

I want to say with respect to what has happened today that this is an equally bad-tempered breach of parliamentary etiquette. I do not know whether I ought to say anything further now with respect to the matter. But I hope we all understand that, though the government is anxious to get this legislation through, there are very strong feelings about the bill, not just on this side of the House but on both sides.

If there had been an understanding between House leaders such as the one to which the parliamentary secretary has referred, and if I had had knowledge of such an understanding, I would have indicated as much to the hon. gentleman when he was over here to see me.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I have to say, in response to his intervention, that I do not believe it would be appropriate for me to go further in the circumstances.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Five o'clock!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. Pursuant to special order passed on Monday, February 16, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. on Monday, February 23.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, pursuant to Special Order.

PROPOSED CREATION OF FOOD MINISTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an important and urgent matter.

In view of the increasingly obvious need for adopting clear and specific policies on the food sector which will again be affected this year by considerably higher costs and so affect Canadian consumers as well, and as the farming sector is up against certain difficulties including, for instance, an expected much lower farm income for the year in spite of relentlessly higher production costs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House now study the recommendation made recently by the Food Prices Review Board for setting up at provincial and federal government levels a food ministry entrusted with the formulation of a coherent food policy, and that this House analyze any proposal of similar nature capable of ensuring balance between food production and food consumption, thus sparing all Canadians, producers and consumers, the consequences of the lack of planning in that sphere.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

REFERENCE TO LENGTH OF SESSION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning the oral question period, may I call to the attention of hon. members that the longest session in the history of the Parliament of Canada was one lasting 250 days, the two hundred and fiftieth day falling on May 8, 1967. This day is the two hundred and fiftieth day of the current session of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lawrence: This has been one of the least productive of sessions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON HOSTAGE TAKING AT CANADIAN EMBASSY IN BEIRUT AND SECURITY PROVISIONS AT EMBASSIES

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, may I thank all my colleagues in this House for this very moving expression of their friendship. This is one of the moments when I am proud of being a Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, because of the great concern in Canada over the security of our chargé d'affaires and eight other Canadians who are members of the Canadian embassy personnel at Beirut.

Can the minister advise the House, and the country, what steps the Canadian government has taken and intends to take, subject of course to the threat too elaborate a declaration could constitute by prejudicing current negotiations?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since this morning, we have been in touch with our Chargé in Beirut. As the hon. member has mentioned, the embassy is occupied by a Canadian citizen of Lebanese origin, Mr. Haymour, with a group of companions, who have made a series of demands upon the Canadian and Lebanese authorities. There is no doubt at the present time that lives are at stake. Among those lives are nine members of the Canadian Embassy staff. I also wish to mention that I have been in touch personally with the foreign minister of Lebanon who has assured me that the Lebanese authorities are making every possible effort to secure a safe release of all the hostages. They are presently in negotiation with the persons who are holding as hostages these Canadian and Lebanese citizens.

Mr. Wagner: Given the situation that the minister has explained, and given the fact that these individuals may not be political terrorists in the commonly accepted understanding of that term, can the minister explain how security can be so easily breached in a strife-torn country beset with continuing political turmoil?

Mr. MacEachen: As the hon. member may know, Mr. Speaker, the embassy is, on a daily basis, the place to which many persons go who are seeking to come to Canada. People have access to the embassy for consular business. I conclude that the Lebanese people who are being held were persons in the embassy for business and, of course, the embassy staff were providing services in the normal way. I may add that the female members of the embassy staff were released. However, it is impossible to apply total security when the embassy is open, as this embassy is, to do business with the public.

Mr. Wagner: What assurance can the minister give the House and the country that security at all Canadian embassies and diplomatic premises around the world is being strengthened in the light of escalating acts of terrorism?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member and the House assurance that prior to this present incident, security measures had been re-examined. In various embassies throughout the world, additional steps have been taken to meet the increased problems that are being faced throughout the world. However, the hon. member will realize that it is impossible, in a situation where the public has access, to provide totally effective security, as this incident has shown.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION GRANTING PENSIONS TO EX-PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that last Friday the cabinet had on its agenda the question of implementing the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs having to do with Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war, can the minister say whether a favourable decision was reached and, if so, when the appropriate legislation will be introduced?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I appreciate the hon. member's question but I shall not be able to make a statement today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask whether there will be an announcement this week?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I anticipate there will be.

PENITENTIARIES

DATE AND COST OF TRANSFERRING PRISONERS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General. Since Air Canada has refused to fly the prisoners involved in last week's hostage drama at B.C. Penitentiary to Dorchester, and arrangements have now been made with the Ministry of Transport to do so, will the minister tell us exactly when these prisoners will be transported and at what cost?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): It is correct that arrangements are being made to transport these inmates by government aircraft, but I cannot give him precise information as to when they will be flown to New Brunswick. I can say, though, that it is likely these arrangements will be less expensive than had the men been transported on Air Canada aircraft.

Mr. Reynolds: Since Andy Bruce is scheduled to be returned to B.C. after a cooling off period and Dwight Lucas will have to be returned for trial on a charge of attempted murder, how does the Solicitor General intend to carry out this new arrangement of transporting prisoners back and forth? Is it his intention to buy a plane for the Canadian penitentiary service for just this purpose?

Mr. Allmand: This is not a new practice in the penal service. We have been transporting prisoners for years so as to break up different cliques and gangs in the penitentiaries and ensure better security in our prisons.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLEGATION GUARDS ARRANGED FOR KNIVES FOR INMATES TO EMBARRASS DIRECTOR

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): In view of the fact that Gary Bannerman, a broadcaster in British Columbia, made statements on Saturday which said the staff had arranged for knives for the inmates to embarrass the director, can the minister tell us if there is any truth to these statements and whether his department has found there were inside people involved to embarrass the director of that institution, whose resignation has been called for by all the guards in that institution?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I have no evidence on that aspect right now, but we have set up an inquiry to determine the circumstances of the hostage-taking and I hope to make the information available to the House and to the public as soon as the inquiry is completed.

PROPOSAL THAT BRITISH COLUMBIA CRIMINALS NOT BE TRANSFERRED TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Solicitor General.

Since we have enough problems in the Atlantic Region and more particularly in New Brunswick, would the Solicitor General take the necessary measures so that British Columbia criminals remain in British Columbia?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): As I said, it happens on many occasions that we transfer inmates from one penitentiary to another in order to provide better security by breaking up cliques and gangs. I might point out to my hon. friend that we have several inmates from New Brunswick in British Columbia penitentiaries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ST. JEROME TRICOFIL—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL GRANT FINANCIAL AID

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Undoubtedly the minister is aware of the difficulties experienced by the firm Tricofil of St. Jerome which cannot get bank credit or assistance from the Quebec government. Did the minister have talks with Tricofil which was asking for federal assistance either from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and if there were talks between Tricofil, the government and the department, did the department reach a conclusion?

● (1420)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I believe some such discussions are underway, but I would ask the hon. member's indulgence to take the question as notice. I will get him a detailed answer tomorrow.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF MINISTRY RESPONSIBLE FOR FOOD

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. What action does the government intend to take on the final recommendation of the Food Prices Review Board, released last Friday, which recommends, among other things, the setting up of a ministry of state for food which would have responsibility for keeping an eye on the Minister of Agriculture?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that that was seriously recommended by the review board. Perhaps the hon. member was too busy over the weekend to read the text himself; he might want to ask a better question.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL BOARD TO CO-ORDINATE FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister can assure the Prime Minister that the Food Prices Review Board was, in fact, serious in its final recommendation. Does the Minister of Agriculture intend to follow the other principal recommendations of the Food Prices Review Board, which spoke so critical of him, by setting up immediately a federal-provincial board which would have the effect of co-ordinating and maximizing the production of food in Canada, especially for the benefit of Canadian consumers as well as world consumers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to study the report. It arrived on my desk only this morning and I was very busy this weekend looking after my constituency,—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: —so I have not had time to study it. I have only had time to see what was written in some of the nation's leading newspapers. I do not want to be a super Minister of Agriculture; I just want to be a good one.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON GOVERNMENT CONSERVATION MEASURES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister who sits beside the ordinary "superstar" of the cabinet; I refer to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the government assured the Canadian people more than two years ago that it intended to set a very serious example to the Canadian people regarding energy conservation by means of substituting small cars for large cars in the government service, doing away with a number of government cars by requiring civil servants to use public transportation, reducing the general level of heating in government buildings and by using other methods, would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to come before the House and outline just what the government has been able to accomplish in this regard in the past two years?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to outline to the House what we have been doing in the past two years and what we hope the country and the opposition will support over the next two years. I shall be issuing a report the middle of this week, I expect, and I would seek an early opportunity to have members opposite put questions to me on this very important policy.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I will put a question to the Minister right now. In view of the fact that to the observing public there has been nothing done in any of these regards, would the minister have the honesty to come before the House tomorrow on motions and admit that absolutely nothing has been done to correct the situation?

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

DATE OF DECISION ON ATTEMPT TO TAKE OVER WESTINGHOUSE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister has been unusually silent regarding the Westinghouse matter, WCI and GSW. In light of the fact that he will be going overseas shortly, within three or four days, would he give us some indication of what progress has been made?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, substantial progress has been made. I am glad to see the policeman back in the House too, I might say. In any event, I think the hon. member knows we have been getting representations on both sides of this issue virtually every day. I have now got all the material necessary to make a decision and I hope one can be made very shortly.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for welcoming me back to the House. He knows that I never abdicate my responsibilities, even after having worked so hard over the weekend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Alexander: I might say that I heard the minister make this utterance on two or three occasions, and I should just like his assurance now that he will be able to bring forward a decision to the House prior to the time he leaves on this jaunt which I think he is contemplating at this time. I understand it is to be in three or four days. Will he have a decision on this matter prior to the time he goes away?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, that is my objective at the moment. In so far as I know, there is nothing that should stand in the way of that, but I have to qualify it by stating that, as the hon. member knows, there is new information, and new representations are being made frequently, but on the basis of what I have at hand now it ought to be possible to accomplish what the hon. member asks.

FISHERIES

FISHING BOAT SUBSIDY—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF THE REGULATIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of State for Fisheries. In view of the considerable number of unpaid fishing boat subsidy claims in Nova Scotia, is it the minister's intention to review this matter in the hope that federal subsidies as promised will be paid and, in addition, will he take steps to clarify the present regulations so that fishermen in need of the new boats which will be required when we secure a Canadian 200-mile economic zone will receive assistance, as promised by the federal government, within a reasonable period of time?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take issue with the hon. member's use of the word "promised". The subsidies were given to the extent that they were available up to $4 million, but then there was just not enough to go around. In the marginal cases where we might have led a fisherman to believe that his boat subsidy would be approved, in which case he made a commitment, I decided in favour of the fisherman where I could. There were other cases where fishermen, although having been clearly told that subsidies would not be available, went ahead. In these cases, of course, I could not approve retroactively what they were warned not to do ahead of time.

INCOME SUPPORT PROGRAM—DATE OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of State for Fisheries would indicate if the income support program for fishermen is now ready to be introduced, particularly in view of the fact that about five months ago in committee one of his officials indicated it would be ready in about six months? I ask this in order to relieve the anxiety of fishermen who are preparing for the new fishing season.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that I did spend three hours this morning working on this very question. We are looking at fairly firm recommendations, but they are still far from perfect in my eyes.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the report released by the Atomic Energy Control Board that burial sites of radioactive materials are located in eastern Manitoba, were officials of the Atomic Energy Control Board aware that burial of radioactive materials was taking place in the area of a Manitoba forestry reserve by the Manitoba Cancer Research Foundation and the Department of National Health and Welfare without the knowledge of the Atomic Energy Control Board and without following the regulations of that board relative to the burial of radioactive materials?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants a detailed listing of the events in chronological order I would be very pleased to get it for him.

PENITENTIARIES

POSSIBLE CHANGES IN SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS FOR DANGEROUS INMATES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a very serious question to the Solicitor General. Are there to be any changes made in security at penitentiaries in respect of dangerous and violent criminal persons who appear now to have nothing to lose and everything to gain from jail breaks and the holding of hostages?

● (1430)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that is not true. They have a lot to lose by jailbreaks and hostage-taking. They can have another term of imprisonment imposed upon them and can have their parole eligibility put back several years, but despite that we are bringing in improvements and they will be announced tomorrow.

Mr. Woolliams: What have those dangerous and violent criminals who have been given life imprisonment to lose by a jailbreak or hostage holding?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, they can lose the possibility of parole right now under the law. Some of them are eligible for parole after ten years and up to 20 years. The more they misbehave in prison and the more crimes they commit the longer that parole date is put back. If they had nothing to lose, then they would be prone to be even more difficult.

KNOWLEDGE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL OF REPORTS OF INMATES UPRISING—REASON FOR TRANSFERRING INMATES FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It is known that reports on an inmates uprising were circulating through the B.C. penitentiary for several weeks before last Thursday's hostage taking. Was the Solicitor General informed of these reports by prison management and, if so, what extra precautions were taken.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was not advised. From my discussion with the Commissioner of Penitentiaries and the regional director, it does not seem that they were advised. However, as I stated in respect of an earlier question we now have an inquiry underway and hope to get to the bottom of this.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Solicitor General why these prisoners were taken all the way to New Brunswick, rather than just to Prince Albert a thousand miles away?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in these circumstances there were three correctional officers held as hostages, and the request by the inmates was that they be transferred to Dorchester. We saw nothing extraordinary in that request. As a matter of fact, many people would think that Dorchester penitentiary is much worse than the B.C. penitentiary. So, if they wanted to go to Dorchester for a short while, we thought it was worthwhile to grant the request to save three lives.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PERMIT TO DOME PETROLEUM TO DRILL IN BEAUFORT SEA—DECISION OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. Last week the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicated he would be consulting with the Minister of the Environment concerning the granting of a drilling permit to Dome Petroleum in the offshore of the Beaufort Sea. Would the minister advise if those consultations have been made, and would he also advise the House whether he is recommending the granting of such a permit in view of the report of his department concerning the tremendous environmental hazards in connection with that drilling permit?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Now, I think we have to continue discussions and perhaps have discussions in the cabinet because of the importance of the problem, but no decision has been taken yet.

Oral Questions

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF PENALTY PROVISIONS IN LEGISLATION—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, because the present penalties provide a maximum fine under the Fisheries Act of $1,000 and $100,000 under the Arctic Waters Pollution Act, can the minister advise whether the House will be receiving the new penalty provisions prior to the granting of any permit in view of the complete inadequacy of penalties under the present legislation and also in view of the fact that there is no contingency plan presently in place in accordance with the report of the minister's department, for cleaning up in the Arctic.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman would understand that there are two points we have to clarify before taking a decision; first, whether technology is advanced enough to allow a permit and second, if there should be a blow-out of some kind whether we have the facilities to really make a decent clean-up so that all the ecology is not destroyed. We are discussing those two points and have not reached a decision.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

POSSIBILITY OF NEW SESSION—INQUIRY AS TO DATE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the gentle indication by the Speaker today that this session will set a new record, has the Prime Minister decided on the date of the new session so that we will have a Speech from the Throne debate in which we can discuss the state of the nation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is still a considerable amount of legislation on the order paper. We see no advantage in having a Speech from the Throne at this time. I suggest that if the House leaders would expedite the present business we would be in a position to consider the question raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the Prime Minister is: will there be a cabinet shuffle or diminution of cabinet positions before that time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HEALTH

REGULATIONS COVERING PEOPLE HANDLING FOOD IN RESTAURANTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the increased alarm and fear people who eat in hotels and restaurants have of being served food infested with parasites, I should like to ask the minister what further controls or health certificates are being considered in respect of all people who handle food in such places?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, Canada has a very extensive program of health screening of all immigrants coming into Canada, particularly with regard to contagious diseases. As a matter of fact, Canada has a more comprehensive program in that respect than the United States, Britain or France. Where the problem arises is in the case of non-immigrants, that is, people coming to Canada for short stays which, as the hon. member knows, number in the tens of millions every year. Both my department and the Department of Manpower and Immigration are currently looking at means whereby we can establish some kind of selective regulations. For example, there is the problem of controlling the 40 million visitors we get every year from the United States. The screening of non-immigrants is a difficult situation to regulate. We are working at it and I hope I will be able to report progress to the hon. member in the near future.

PENITENTIARIES

ALLEGED DISSATISFACTION WITH POLICY FOR HANDLING MAXIMUM SECURITY PRISONERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that dissatisfaction and unrest over the handling of maximum security prisoners seems to be universal throughout the penitentiary system, which indicates that the problem lies not with any one institution or individual, can the minister tell us what new programs or policies he is putting into effect by way of general policy changes and improvements?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would reject the suggestion that there is universal dissatisfaction in the penitentiary service over the handling of maximum security inmates. It is true that the Association of Correctional Officers and so on has voiced some opposition but, as I say, we will have to wait for the report of the inquiry to see exactly what the causes were for the most recent hostage-taking. But I would agree with the hon. member that the handling of maximum security inmates is a most difficult task. There are problems and we will announce some new proposals tomorrow in our peace and security package to deal with these problems.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. I should like to ask him by way of a supplementary, which he partly answered, when we can expect some concrete action on the part of the government to produce a maximum security system which is less barbaric to its inmates and more effective in protecting the rest of society. Will that be part of his improved program?

Mr. Allmand: That is an interesting goal, Mr. Speaker. Countries all over the world are seeking such an institution where you can combine humanity with security to a high degree. If the hon. member has any suggestions I would be pleased to look at them.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLEGATION MR. CERNETIC DOES NOT HAVE SUPPORT OF PRISON OFFICERS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Solicitor General. Since it is obvious that there are major problems in British Columbia in light of the hostage-taking dramas of the past several months, would the Solicitor General tell the House exactly what is going on in British Columbia at the present time and why no question has been addressed concerning the management of the prison by Dragon Cernetic in view of the fact that he does not have the support of the prison officers.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I question whether he has or has not the support of his officials. It is true that certain members of the correctional staff voiced dissatisfaction with him but there are many others working in that penitentiary and in the penitentiary system as a whole who have great respect for Mr. Cernetic in the tough and demanding job he has. With regard to that history, I should point out to hon. members that we have been trying to close this penitentiary for several years. We have had great difficulty in getting sites for new institutions. It is only in the last six or seven months that we have found such sites and are able to go ahead with construction of new institutions.

● (1440)

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that 171 employees of that prison voted against the management of the prison by Dragon Cernetic and do not endorse it, how can the minister make that statement? What is being done to deal with the problems of management at that penitentiary?

Mr. Allmand: That may be more evident once we have the results of the inquiry I set up.

AIR TRANSPORT

DATE OF RESTORATION OF SERVICE TO MANITOBA AND SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, following his visit to Brandon, Manitoba on Friday night, and his speech to the chamber of commerce there. Can the minister inform the House when he will be announcing the restoration of air service to that important region of Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I informed the chamber of commerce in Brandon, I was expecting to see a reply from the government of Manitoba either today or tomorrow because the provincial minister informed me in Brandon that he had dispatched a reply to my inquiry some time ago about assistance. Manitoba and Saskatchewan might contribute by offering their service to these communities. I do not know if a reply from Saskatchewan is on its way. I had been awaiting those replies before taking the next step of putting forward specific proposals or deciding on another alternative.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the western Manitoba region has been without air service for three years now, and also the fact that there is a brand new terminal waiting to be put to use, is the minister also considering the Transair proposal, the proposal of the designated regional carrier, to provide jet service into that area without subsidy?

Mr. Lang: I had discussions with the chamber of commerce about the alternative issue of a jet service for Regina, Brandon, Toronto, and I indicated to them that I had read with interest the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission on that subject. There would be some preliminary questions as to the appropriate carrier which might have to be settled in any case, but I certainly think it is an issue worth pursuing further.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NEW BRUNSWICK WILL NOT BECOME HAVEN FOR PRISONERS WHO TAKE HOSTAGES

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is to my favourite cabinet minister, the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that the prisoners who took three hostages are being transferred from British Columbia to New Brunswick, can the Solicitor General assure me that the province of New Brunswick will not become a haven for those individuals who tend to hide behind hostages?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH

SPECIAL ALLOWANCE FOR DOCTORS IN RURAL AREAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since remote areas, such as Gaspesia, Lake Saint-John, Abitibi and particularly the towns of Lebel-sur Quévillon, Chapais, Chibougamau and many others are experiencing constant problems in respect of the number of doctors required to meet the people's needs, could the minister advise the House whether he is considering the possibility of granting isolation premiums to encourage doctors to establish practice in remote regions?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. member that he is sitting in the wrong House, and that this type of question should be raised in the Quebec National Assembly, either by himself or by one of his colleagues.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Immigration holds them back. It rejects foreign doctors.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): I would like to ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that the federal government is regularly spending funds in areas within provincial jurisdiction, like education—for example, the Secretary of State has announced a $250,000 subvention for teaching French in Ontario—could the minister tell the House whether he is prepared to propose to the provinces the establishment of an isolation premium program for doctors, with financial participation from the federal government to pay the cost of such a program?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, again I would urge the hon. member to examine my department's publications, which have been available for many years, where he would find that the federal government is sharing half the cost of medicare, including the premiums to which the hon. member was referring. So there is already a program for sharing expenses in this area. But I repeat once again that if the hon. member would like to pursue the matter further, he should have his colleague in Quebec City raise the matter there.

GRAIN

ASSISTANCE FOR FREIGHT COSTS ON FEED GRAIN—DATE OF DECISION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the promises made some two and a half years ago with regard to feed freight assistance as it pertains to the new feed grains policy, is the minister prepared to tell the House whether or not the government is going to make some move so far as feed freight assistance is concerned?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I cannot predict exactly when that will happen.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I shall put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends in the near future to remove the 5 per cent tax on building materials for non-profit-making housing corporations, even if they are already entitled to some kinds of subsidies?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is asking a budgetary question, Mr. Speaker, and he knows that the government does not as a practice announce tax changes in answer to questions.

POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS ON USE OF "MANHATTAN" TO MOVE OIL THROUGH NORTHERN WATERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Have there been any discussions directly with the minister or with officials of his department and Panarctic with regard to the use of the Manhattan for the removal of oil from northern areas?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I have had no such discussions. I would have to check whether there had been any discussions of that sort.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON HOSTAGES AT BEIRUT EMBASSY

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

Would the minister inform the House and the country about the latest reassuring developments that have taken place at the Canadian mission in Lebanon in the interval that has elapsed since he last spoke about the subject?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since my reply to the question asked by the hon. member, I have had information that the embassy in Beirut has been liberated and all the hostages have been released unharmed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED FOR LONG-RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and it relates to the recent difficulties affecting the Lockheed company and the investigations by the minister with respect to their capacity to deliver the Orion aircraft for nearly $1 billion ordered for the Canadian armed forces. Can the minister give a progress report on that and indicate whether the initial date of delivery is still holding up and whether in fact the Orion aircraft are still on order with the Lockheed Company?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the government decided in principle to purchase from Lockheed but, as has been explained a number of times, we are experiencing difficulties in negotiating the financing and this is holding up the final signing of the contract. The negotiations, however, are continuing.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Can the minister also indicate that the various aspects with respect to the methods of awarding contract and the pay-offs that apparently have been uncovered by congressional investigations have in no way affected any relationship that was established between this government and the Lockheed Company?

Mr. Richardson: We have assured the House on earlier occasions that there was no payment of commissions or any other kind of payment to Canadians. I did indicate that the difficulties the Lockheed Company was experiencing might have weakened the company's financial position, but there has been no evidence that this is to a degree that will prevent them from continuing the contract, provided we can get over the difficulties I mentioned earlier.

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCTION OR REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON GASOLINE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will he be removing or reducing the special excise tax on gasoline as the price of wellhead oil has moved up in July, a tax which was established to pay for off-shore oil supplies, or does he intend to make it a permanent tax feature?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): A fiscal question of that kind would have to be dealt with in the context of the budget.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF FRENCH LANGUAGE COVERAGE OF CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State who has just left the chamber, but perhaps in his absence someone else will speak for him. It is supplementary to the question posed last Thursday by the hon. member for South Shore who requested radio coverage for the past weekend's events. Has the Secretary of State been made aware of complaints concerning the inadequacy of French language television coverage of the Progressive Conservative Convention? Is it the intention of the minister to remind the publicly-financed Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of their primary responsibility to report in both official languages on public affairs of national interest?

● (1450)

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would agree with the premise that, in fact, the corporation has a responsibility to report the important events in both official languages on both channels. I was rather glued to the English channel, so I was not aware of the deficiency of the French but I shall certainly look into it.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO DEPORT DANG VAN QUANG— REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that Dang Van Quang has been living in Canada under a deportation order for going on eight months, seven months at least, may I ask the minister what steps he and his department have taken to deport Quang and whether the department has been in direct contact with the new regime in South Viet Nam?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already described the steps. There have been negotiations on behalf of Mr. Quang with at least one country and there are still pending discussions as to whether that country might or might not accept him as an immigrant. I have pressed for an official decision about this. I expect to have it soon, and then we will make the relevant decision on whether he goes there or back to South Viet Nam.

Mr. Blackburn: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister if that other country, whichever it is, refuses to take Quang will the minister then carry out his responsibilities under the act and deport Quang to South Viet Nam?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, if I do so, it will be a disappointment to the hon. member because he will have to find another issue on which to make himself heard.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

PROPOSAL THAT FISHERMEN IN LAKE WINNIPEG AREA BE PERMITTED TO SELL CATCH OUTSIDE CORPORATION

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries concerning the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. In view of the fact that the co-operative fisheries of Manitoba are meeting in convention for three days this week, would the minister inform the House whether he intends to allow those fishermen fishing on Lake Winnipeg to have the option of selling their fish outside the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation similar to the arrangement in the Lake of the Woods area of Ontario?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen representations on this issue at the present time. I would remind the hon. member the advantage of the corporation has been to protect fishermen from being picked off one by one by those in the brokerage business.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT TO PROTECT SALMON SPAWNING AREAS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, if my voice will permit me, I would like to put a question to the Minister of State (Fisheries). Wednesday last, as recorded on page 11050 of Hansard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) in reply to my question gave the following answer:

. . . with respect to separating out the fisheries aspect of the Law of the Sea conference. Certainly, it would be within Canada's objectives to seek a separate fisheries treaty . . .

He also suggested that this could be done by order in council. I should like to ask the following question: I would like to know whether the orders in council are ready to be promulgated and if so, whether they state our claims concerning the Canadian rights to salmon spawned in our interior waters.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the orders in council referred to by the hon. member are those which would come into force the day when Canada would notify that the 60-day period preceding the extension of the Canadian jurisdiction takes effect.

If such is the case, I would say to him that those orders in council exist. We only have to decide the date on which they would become effective if such decision has not yet been taken.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO FORCE PRODUCTION OF AUTOMOBILE WHICH WILL USE LESS GASOLINE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Because of the fact the department spent $20,000 trying to prove that the heavier cars take more—may I put it this way? Heavier cars cost more money and use more gasoline. Since this is an obvious observation, we have already concluded, may I ask the minister whether he will introduce legislation which will in fact try to prove—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: Wait a minute. Wait a minute. Does he intend to prove that it is necessary to have the public buy smaller cars but that the manufacturers have to manufacture cars that will—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: —will produce mileage performance of the kind that the average citizen wants rather than the type of performance that the government wants. In other words—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: In other words to prove that—

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Korchinski: In other words, will the government buy smaller cars rather than more conventional cars? Will the minister introduce legislation to force the manufacturers of cars to give the consumer a car that will give higher mileage per gallon?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Korchinski: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member resume his seat? The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

MULTICULTURALISM

PROPOSED MULTILINGUAL BROADCASTING POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour in charge of multiculturalism. In light of the minister's expressed hope that the government would take increased steps toward multilingual broadcasting within the context of a bilingual framework, can the minister inform the House if he has raised this issue in cabinet and indeed will a multilingual broadcasting policy be presented as part of the new "emphasis" of multicultural policy?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to raise the matter in cabinet. The power of the CRTC is quite explicit in this regard and I am talking to that agency with respect to it.

● (1500)

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I have hesitated to mention this matter, but I think it is something that needs to be brought to your attention. In asking questions in the chamber, one of the problems that faces members of the opposition is that there are at least two members of the Privy Council who consistently are away from their seats. I can appreciate and have full respect for the fact that ministers do have to be away sometimes, but when a minister drifts in and out of the chamber it makes it impossible to catch the attention of the Chair. I draw this to the attention of the Chair: The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) consistently come into the chamber, sit in their seats, then go out of the House again. This makes it almost impossible for hon. members to attract the attention of the Chair when the ministers are in the House and put a question to them in the question period.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Some time ago the hon. member for Vaudreuil referred to a question that had been, as he said, raised by the hon. member for South Shore. I wish to inform the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker, that the subject matter to which the hon. member referred was not raised by me at any time in this House.

PANARCTIC OIL—PURCHASE OF OIL TANKERS

Question No. 3,301—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the Minister of Transport aware of the statements in the press attributed to the President of Panarctic Oil during the week of October 20 to 24, 1975 indicating the possibility that Panarctic Oil will purchase three Scandinavian crude oil tankers for transport of Arctic oil to market should that be feasible?

2. Is the Minister aware of the extent of participation in Panarctic Oil by the government and its agents and, if so, to what extent is this participation?

3. Has the Minister examined the implications of going outside Canada for such vessels in terms of the long-term viability and health of the Canadian ship-building industry and trade balance and (a) if so, what conclusions have been reached (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, I am aware that a newspaper report on October 21 of the Panarctic oil strike at Cameron Island also referred to exploratory discussions with Scandinavian shipping companies.

2. Yes, I am aware that the Canadian Government has a 45 percent interest in Panarctic Oil. I am also aware that the President of Panarctic Oil discussed the transportation of oil out of the Arctic with a major Canadian ship operator about a month ago. As a result of these discussions being reported to my officials, an interdepartmental group has been meeting to assess the broad transportation requirements and benefits from oil movement by ship from the high Arctic. Preliminary discussions with Panarctic Oil have taken place and a meeting is scheduled for November to define more precisely the project especially as it relates to shipping, but nevertheless including all other aspects of the system to move oil from Cameron Island.

3. No, we have not yet examined the implications of going outside Canada for Arctic ships since the major emphasis is on ensuring the participation of Canadian ship operators, designers and builders.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,528—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, did it include costing arrangements for the full five years of Phase 2 and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: No. Under the economic circumstances prevailing at the time, two-year costing arrangements were considered appropriate.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,533—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. What are the terms of reference for PEI of the Small Farm Development Corporation?

2. Do its activities significantly overlap those of the PEI Land Development Corporation?

3. Has any consideration been given to awarding increased funding to the Land Development Corporation in lieu of Small Farm Development Corporation activities in PEI?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. There is no Small Farm Development Corporation on P.E.I. However, the Small Farm Development Program is a program of Agriculture Canada and information related to this program can be obtained from that Department.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,536—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, did the private sector become as fully involved in Phase 1 as originally foreseen and, if not, for what reason?

2. Does the government believe, as stated in Schedule "C", that the private sector will in fact become more involved under Phase 2 and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes.

2. Yes. Additional emphasis is being placed on private sector development.

Order Paper Questions

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,537—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, did the Joint Advisory Board approve the termination of funding for the Rural Development Council and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reason?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: The Joint Advisory Board was not asked to approve the termination of funding for the R.D.C. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable.

PEI—COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,538—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, what were the names of all groups and organizations in the Province of PEI consulted as part of the drafting process for the new agreement?

2. What general programme of financial assistance is available and what specific grants were made to enable groups in PEI to prepare submissions regarding the Phase 2 agreement?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Information not available.

2. No programme administered by DREE is available to enable groups in P.E.I. to prepare Submissions regarding the Phase II Agreement.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,541—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, what specific arrangements has DREE made to ensure citizen input into the upcoming negotiations on costing arrangements for the final three years of Phase 2?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: None. Costing arrangements are a matter of negotiation between the Federal and Provincial Governments.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,545—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the agricultural sector of Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, what progress has been made on the development of the Skill Training Programme?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: There is no skill training program so identified in the agricultural sector of Phase II. However, methods to assist young and new farmers to develop their skills are being prepared for implementation in April, 1976.

[Mr. McIsaac.]

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,547—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the agricultural sector of Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, have any studies been made concerning the (a) multiplier effect of agriculture on the PEI provincial economy (b) long-range market trends for North America and their relation to the PEI agricultural potential (c) relative beneficial impact of monies spent in the various agricultural sector programmes and, if so (i) who did them (ii) on what date (iii) for whom were they done (iv) what were the major findings and/or recommendations (v) how are the results of these studies reflected in the agreement?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: No studies have been made by DREE in respect of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan concerning (a), (b) or (c).

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,548—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan and the decision to continue the School Consolidation Programme (a) has the Programme been evaluated and, if so (i) by whom (ii) on what date (iii) what were the main recommendations (b) were any groups representing either parents or teachers consulted prior to the decision to continue the Programme and, if so (i) what were the names of the groups consulted (ii) with what person or persons representing DREE or the Joint Advisory Board did these groups have contact (c) what are the specific indicators that have been or will be employed by DREE and the Joint Advisory Board in evaluating the School Consolidation Programme?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: (a) Yes. (i) Verner Smitheram and Robert Mahen. (ii) 1974. (iii) 1. The province should continue with its plans for consolidation and new construction to replace inadequate school buildings. 2. Any new building or any major renovation of existing buildings should be planned in consultation with those who must work in them—teachers, administrators, specialists, non-instructional personnel, and students. 3. Larger secondary schools should be built in the province with sufficient facilities to provide for the variety of programs required to meet the educational needs, interests, and abilities of all high school students. (b) Not by DREE. (i) Not applicable. (ii) Not applicable. (c) A number of indicators will be used in evaluating the school consolidation program. These will include—the quality of education, the proportion of students who complete the grades, the flexibility of the education system, and the relative rating of these indicators to other provinces and the Canadian figures.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,549—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, what provisions are there for thorough and independent evaluation of the Phase 2 sectoral strategies and programmes?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

Evaluation of the Plan is an ongoing function of management. Independent evaluations are provided only when requested by management.

CMHC—LOAN TO QUEBEC HOUSING CORPORATION

Question No. 3,580—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Did the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation grant a loan of $30,193,489 to the Quebec Housing Corporation for 38 housing projects in the Province of Quebec and, if so (a) were some projects related to the municipalities of Saint-Damien and Saint-Vallier in the Constituency of Bellechasse (b) what was the rate of interest (c) for how long (d) will repayments be made (i) monthly (ii) yearly and, in each case, in what amounts?

2. Did the Quebec Housing Corporation reach an agreement with these municipalities in regard to the housing projects?

3. Did the municipalities have financial agreements with the Quebec Housing Corporation and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: 1. To November 30, 1975, CMHC made 31 loans to Quebec Housing Corporation, to finance the construction or acquisition of 1,388 dwelling units and 780 hostel beds, totalling $39.9 million. (a) One of these loans was made for a project in the municipality of Saint-Damien, for $537,863 to finance 30 units, and another loan was made for a project in the municipality of Saint-Vallier in an amount of $292,473, for 20 units. (b) The rate of interest is 10⅜ per cent. (c) The loans will be repaid over a term of 50 years. (d) Quebec Housing Corporation will make annual repayments of principal and interest in an amount of $57,617.24 for the project in Saint-Damien and $31,330.44 for the project in Saint-Vallier.

2 and 3. Information on agreements between Quebec Housing Corporation and the municipalities in question should be obtained from Q.H.C.

BANK OF CANADA

Question No. 3,666—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. On what date was the Bank of Canada established and what is its main function?

2. Does the Bank have its own assets and, if so (a) what are they (b) what is their present value?

3. With what reserves did it start?

4. Does the Canadian monetary system depend on the Bank and, if so (a) what was the Canadian money supply as of January 1, 1975 (b) what fraction was owned by the Bank (c) of what did it consist?

5. (a) On the same date, what financial institutions, such as chartered banks, held the other part of the Canadian money supply (b) for what dollar value in each case?

6. Does the Bank have the authority to establish interest rates in Canada and, if so, is it after consultation with the Minister of Finance?

7. What authority does the Governor of the Bank have on the Canadian monetary policy?

8. What is the percentage of reserves that chartered banks must maintain with the Bank to cover their clients' credit in the form of deposit?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. The Bank of Canada commenced operations on March 11, 1935. Its main function is set out in the preamble to the Bank of Canada Act.

2. Yes. (a) Mainly securities issued by the Government of Canada. A statement of assets and liabilities is published for each Wednesday and for each month-end in the form prescribed by the Bank of Canada Act. (b) As at January 31, 1976, $10,399,911,420.

3. At the official commencement of business on March 11, 1935, the assets of the Bank of Canada totalled $185,455,000 of which $70,441,000 was accounted for by international reserve assets of a kind now held by the Exchange Fund Account of the Minister of Finance.

4. By means of its control of the cash reserves of the chartered banks, the Bank of Canada is able to regulate the growth of the Canadian dollar liabilities of the chartered banking system. (a) Currency outside banks and demand deposits at chartered banks, $15,772 million; Currency outside banks and total Canadian dollar deposits at chartered banks, excluding Government. of Canada deposits, $57,442 million; Currency outside banks and total Canadian dollar deposits at chartered banks, including Government of Canada deposits, $62,124 million. (b) None. (c) See (a).

5. (a) and (b). Bank deposits, which constitute the largest part of the money supply, as defined, are liabilities of the banks and banks do not typically hold significant amounts of one another's deposits. The total held by non-bank financial institutions is not available. The great bulk of the money supply is owned by the general public.

6. The Bank of Canada has the authority to set its own lending rate, the Bank Rate, which is the minimum rate at which it is prepared to make advances. The operations of the Bank have an indirect but significant influence on other interest rates in Canada. See also 7 below.

7. The Governor is the chief executive officer of the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada Act places the responsibility for the formulation and execution of monetary policy on the Bank. Section 14(1) of the Act requires that there be regular consultation between the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada on monetary policy and on its relation to general economic policy. Section 14(2) states: If, notwithstanding the consultations provided for in subsection (1), there should emerge a difference of opinion between the Minister and the Bank concerning the monetary policy to be followed, the Minister may, after consultation with the Governor and with the approval of the Governor in Council, give to the Governor a written directive concerning monetary policy, in specific terms and applicable for a specified period, and the Bank shall comply with such directive. Section 14(3) requires the publication of any such directive. No directives have been issued. In the absence of a directive the Governor must accept responsibility for the monetary policy followed by the Bank. At the same time the Government's power to issue a directive means that it must accept ultimate responsibility for monetary policy.

8. Under Section 72 of the Bank Act the chartered banks are required to maintain cash reserves in the form of notes of and deposits in Canadian currency with the Bank of Canada equalling not less on average during any half-month than 12 per cent of Canadian dollar demand deposits and 4 per cent of Canadian dollar notice deposits. Under Section 72(4) of the Bank Act and Section 18(2) of the Bank of Canada Act the chartered banks are required to hold secondary reserves in the forms therein specified. At the present time the requirement is that these reserves be not less on average during any month than 5½ per cent of Canadian dollar deposit liabilities.

VOLUME OF CURRENCY AND DEMAND DEPOSITS

Question No. 3,688—Mr. McCleave:

1. What factors are used to determine the supply of currency and demand deposits put into circulation (a) who makes such decisions (b) how often are they made (c) who has the ultimate responsibility for such decisions?

2. For each year since 1968, by percentages, how much has the (a) gross national product (b) supply of currency and demand deposits increased?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. The control of the money supply (one definition of which is the combined total of currency outside banks and demand deposits at chartered banks) is a key element in monetary policy. It is based on a broad and continuing assessment of the functioning of the economy, the economic outlook, and the historical relationship of the money supply, as defined, to the trend of gross national expenditure. (a) The Bank of Canada. See also (c) below. (b) The Bank of Canada reviews its monetary policy continuously. (c) Section 14(1) of the Bank of Canada Act requires that there be regular consultation between the Minister of Finance and the Governor of the Bank of Canada on monetary policy and on its relation to general economic policy. Section 14(2) states: If, notwithstanding the consultations provided for in subsection (1), there should emerge a difference of opinion between the Minister and the Bank concerning the monetary policy to be followed, the Minister may, after consultation with the Governor and with the approval of the Governor in Council, give to the Governor a written directive concerning monetary policy, in specific terms and applicable for a specified period, and the Bank shall comply with such directive. Section 14(3) requires the publication of any such directive. No directives have been issued. In the absence of a directive the Bank of Canada must accept responsibility for the monetary policy it follows. At the same time the Government's power to issue a directive means that it must accept ultimate responsibility for monetary policy.

AIR CANADA—COST OF INQUIRY CONDUCTED BY HON. W. Z. ESTEY

Question No. 3,770—Mr. McKenzie: (Supplementary)

1. What was the total cost of the Air Canada Inquiry conducted by the Honourable W. Z. Estey, including the printing costs of the report in both official languages?

2. What was the total remuneration paid to the Commissioner?

3. What are the names of each member on the Commission and the remuneration received by each?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows: Supplementary Information: 1. $408,178.80.

2 and 3. See answers in Hansard No. 119, page 10296 of January 26, 1976.

ELECTRONIC LISTENING DEVICES

Question No. 3,875—Mr. Bawden:

1. Has any department or Crown corporation purchased electronic listening devices or surveillance equipment during the past five years and, if so, which departments?

2. What was the dollar expenditure for surveillance equipment during each of the past five years?

3. Did the amount of expenditure increase during each of the preceding years and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): This reply is made on the understanding that the electronic listening devices referred to in the question are the kind defined in the Protection of Privacy Act. The Protection of Privacy Act sets out the exceptional circumstances in which interception of communications and use of electromagnetic, acoustic, mechanical or other devices may be authorized. The Act is adhered to closely. It is considered necessary to decline to provide information which might adversely affect investigational procedures, except as required by law.

MINISTER OF TRANSPORT—FLIGHT TO CALGARY, NOVEMBER 23, 1975

Question No. 3,882—Mr. Beatty:

1. Did the Minister of Transport travel to Calgary on Grey Cup Day, November 23, 1975 by government aircraft and, if so, was it on official government business?

2. At what time did (a) the Minister arrive in Calgary (b) his aircraft leave?

3. From what point did the Minister's flight originate and where did it terminate?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2 (a) 10:40; (b) 23:25 (Note: Times are Mountain Standard Time).

3. The flight originated from and terminated at Ottawa.

HIDDEN RESERVES OF CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 3,889—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

What are (a) the amounts of hidden reserves on which no tax was paid over the past five years in the case of (i) each chartered bank (ii) all chartered banks (b) the names of the banks?

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The chartered banks and other businesses which extend credit are exposed to losses from bad or doubtful debts and to depreciation in the value of assets and maintain contingency reserves to meet such losses. The banks are permitted to set aside amounts from pre-tax earnings, within limits prescribed by the Minister of Finance which relate such amounts to the level of assets at risk, for the purpose of maintaining General Appropriations for Losses. Prior to the enactment of the present Bank Act at the time of the last decennial revision, the banks included such appropriations in their balance sheets as deductions from related assets. These deductions were frequently referred to as "hidden" or "inner" reserves. Since 1967 the banks have been required to disclose these reserves on the liability side of their balance sheets as "Accumulated Appropriations for Losses". Further disclosure is made through the Statement of Accumulated Appropriations for Losses which analyzes changes in the appropriations accounts. Since 1967 the permitted maximum of General, or pre-tax, Appropriations has been reduced twice. This has meant that, with few exceptions, the larger banks have not been able to add to their General Appropriations from pre-tax earnings. The additions to General Appropriations from pre-tax earnings over the past five years by each bank are tabulated below:

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE—MOVING CONTRACTS

Question No. 3,993—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,788, to the effect that the Department of National Revenue awarded $210,000 in moving contracts to Crismar Enterprises of Ottawa without the calling of tenders, what are the reasons that tenders were not called?

2. Is the Department now calling tenders on such contracts and (a) if so (i) on what date did such procedure commence (ii) what are the dates and complete details of all tenders called (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): 1. On February 5, 1973, the Privy Council Office directed that the Connaught Building be transferred to them in order to convert it into a press centre to support the Commonweath Heads of Government Conference. Privy Council officials assumed control of the building the following day and requested that the furniture be removed immediately. The amount awarded Crismar Enterprises included the moving and storing of said furniture.

2. No. (a) Not applicable, (i) Not applicable, (ii) Not applicable. (b) All service contracts for moving, before and since this emergency, have been arranged and paid for by the National Capital Regional division of the Department of Public Works.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Thursday, February 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner that Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned the debate on this bill on Thursday I was addressing myself to the position taken by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). Although I agree with the philosophy she expressed in her speech, I find it rather interesting, politically, that she should have compared the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) with Adolf Hitler. To the best of my knowledge, the Secretary of State has not taken up painting; but there may be other grounds for leading the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway to infer that there is more than a passing similarity between this legislation and legislation introduced by the Chancellor of Germany in the 1930s. Let me repeat in part what the hon. member said in the House last Thursday. As reported on page 11134 of Hansard, she said:

—The Secretary of State announced in committee that he had a cultural plan for Canada. That has happened before, with nationalism as the driving force, the most notable example being the German cultural plan announced in Mein Kampf by Adolf Hitler.

I think that for this House to consider the Secretary of State in that light is going a bit far. Of course, I must defer to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who has greater knowledge of the hon. gentleman than I have. I was impressed with the hon. member's quotation from Somerset Maugham. Referring to that writer, she said, as reported on page 11136 of Hansard:

If a nation values anything more than freedom, it will lose that freedom . . . And the irony of it is that if it is money that is valued more than freedom, that too will be lost.

As I said on Thursday, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway expressed sincerely her feelings about freedom, truth and censorship. I think her feelings might involve her in further difficulty with the government, particularly if it persists in proceeding with this bill despite the opposition of my party, the opposition in the government party and the opposition in the country.

Parts of this bill offend both the print and electronic media, particularly that part of the electronic media in which current developments have come to a halt. One can hardly expect new owners of cablevision stations to invest money in what were hitherto money-makers if, under the new rules as adumbrated by Mr. Justice Dubé, there will be no guarantee that the owners will retain their licences even if they conform with every last instruction of the CRTC—of which, heaven knows, there are enough instructions.

This government believes in confrontation. It is confronting a major industry of Canada with the idea that it, and it alone, knows what is best for Canadians to watch and to hear; that it, and it alone, can say how these businesses must be conducted. If there were a valuable mineral resource under some new town or under where a new town might be built or, say, under Kincaid, Saskatchewan, or under any other city built on the prairies, I would not give a nickel for the cablevision licence for that community under existing west coast rules affecting cablevision. All this means that capital investment and development will stop entirely. That will enable the government to move in and say that the private sector of the economy is not fulfilling its task, and take over cablevision stations that up to now have been flourishing.

To indicate the difficulties this government is creating for our industry, may I quote a short extract from a letter written by the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia. The letter has to do mainly with Time and Reader's Digest. I do not always agree with the council, but I must concede that it knows about the forest industry of British Columbia and the likely effects of this bill on that industry. The first paragraph reads:

● (1510)

—Bill C-58 could be harmful to our industry's market position in the United States. We urged the government to withdraw the bill and reconsider the position it had taken.

In the penultimate paragraph it states:

As a member representing a British Columbia constituency, you will be well aware of the dependence of this province's forest industry on the U.S. market. Our members are increasingly concerned that U.S./Canadian relations are deteriorating and that this trend may jeopardize access to our principal market.

I wish to say a few words about Canada-U.S. relations and how they are deteriorating. Bill C-58 is an added rough spot in our relations. We seem determined to keep these relations in constant friction. To take dead aim at something like Time magazine is a sure way of ensuring that we do not return to the more tranquil days that we had before this government took office. Conditions have steadily become worse.

When this bill was first introduced, we were given to understand that "not similar content" was 50 per cent different. This was accepted by the trade, the industry and the House, including several members of this party. Our first reaction was that the bill was not all that bad. The ministry then decided to up the ante. They went to 60 per cent. When they found this was not an absolute bar to these two publishers, they went to 80 per cent. I understand the minister said they would go higher, if necessary, to make certain that Time magazine did not manage to continue publishing in this country. This is a very strange attitude for a government to take, singling out a magazine like this, saying it is the wrong thing for our innocent people to be reading. They say that if we prohibit their selling advertising to Canadians as a normal Canadian business expense, everyone will turn to read Maclean's magazine.

Last week I spoke for a few minutes about Maclean's magazine. That was the previous issue. I now have the February 23 issue: that is very fast delivery. I wish to tell hon. members about this magazine that is supposed to replace Time as a news magazine. As I stated last week, I am particularly interested in the foreign affairs section. This week's cover does not have a picture of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The only similarity is that it looks like a mad scientist or doctor who bears resemblance to the Secretary of State.

The world news begins on page 37. Last week there were three pages. This week there are two articles in what is supposed to be a news magazine. In fact, it states on the front page, "Canada's Newsmagazine". The first is an article on Lockheed. It is headed, "The Lockheed revelations imperil the Dutch Monarchy". That is current. I wish to read a paragraph from the article:

Considering the global scope of Lockheed's pay-offs, it wasn't surprising that Canadian plans to spend $950 million for 18 Lockheed Orion long-range aircraft were frozen pending the outcome of emergency talks between defence minister James Richardson and the U.S. aircraft manufacturer. There were fears that Lockheed might not be able to complete the deal although Richardson stressed there was "no question" of any Canadian official being involved in the scandal.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) said that was not the case. He said the only problem was long-term financing. It is nice to see Canada mentioned as a country of the world, but the story does not quite give the picture of actual events. The second article is, "Leonid Brezhnev: a plodder's progress". It is a laudable article on Brezhnev. However, that is all the world news: there is nothing other than articles on Lockheed and the dictator of Russia. There is an enchanting article about young people. It concerns the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery). This is typical of what we will have to get used to if we are to have Maclean's as our news magazine. It states that the hon. member for Spadina has been moonlighting as a part-time cab driver. I admire him for this activity. He is getting out to meet the people. Another quote with which I agree, and the hon. member must have said this to the reporter because it is in quotes, is as follows:

"You get disconnected in Ottawa," he says. "Cab driving teaches you the value of a dollar."

I suggest that the entire front bench take up cab driving to learn the value of a dollar.

"They don't have a sense of value here (in Ottawa). They don't know what a dollar is."

That is true. However, it then goes on with typical Maclean's slush. It refers to the hon. member taking a January walking trip to Central America's mosquito coast, and visits to the close friend who works for France's distinguished Folies Bergère. The article concludes:

"In Ottawa," he complains, "all you can do in winter is skate and that'll freeze your ass off."

That is the kind of cute article Maclean's likes to publish. It makes a Liberal look favourable and then ends up with a crude expression. This is one reason that magazine is unable to compete with Time as far as readership in Canada is concerned. I wish to quote from a couple of letters I have received from constituents who are concerned that they will not be able to continue buying and enjoying their favourite magazine. The first is from a doctor. It reads:

Dear Sir:

As my only direct representative in our federal government, I am appealing to you to use your utmost effort to oppose the government's intention to amend the Income Tax Act, which may very seriously affect the Canadian edition of the Reader's Digest.

I have been a constant reader of this magazine for over 25 years, and have always considered it to be primarily Canadian, as opposed to any other foreign publication. During these years I have had occasion, for somewhat extended periods, to read the English edition. No one would say that this was an "American" magazine any more than the Canadian edition is in that category.

Quite apart from the impressive statistics of the contribution to the economic and cultural life of Canada which the Reader's Digest has contributed, surely the impetus of the hundreds of thousands of readers can only further emphasize its importance in Canada. No other Canadian magazine can take its place or even compete with its worldwide spectrum of interest.

I urge you to use your best judgment, your demonstrated fairness and persuasive powers to defeat this discriminatory legislation.

Yours sincerely,

Moreley R. Elliott, M.D.

P.S. The almost identical argument is applicable to the iconoclastic proposals re the Canadian edition of Time magazine.

● (1520)

I should like now to read from another letter. This comes from a place called Rose Manor, in Victoria. Rose Manor is a home for aged ladies. This is the kind of dear soul you find so often in our constituency. The letter is addressed to me, and it reads:

Dear Sir:

I am writing in protest against the proposed revision of the Income Tax Act and asking you as my representative to vote against it. The bill has nothing to recommend it but the very unlikely prospect of diverting tax money from one magazine to others in an effort to assist the development of a domestic news magazine and to foster national integrity and self-expression. The Reader's Digest does not interfere in any way in this worthy object. It is undemocratic and unjust to discriminate against one firm because it attracts more advertisers, and to use dictatorship against millions of Canadians who admire the uniqueness of this magazine and enjoy reading it. Anyone has the right to compete with it if they wish.

The public is ignored completely. Have we no rights under this government? I am nearly 90 years old and one of the few pleasures I have left is reading something worth while. It is not right to put hundreds of Canadians out of work and to deprive Canada of millions of dollars in revenue. I urge you and all fair-minded people not to allow this bill to pass.

Sincerely,

(Mrs.) Caroline Barber.

I should like to read one paragraph from another letter I have received:

Please leave it as it is. It is clean, informative, full of local and international news. I know of no competition to it.

That is the thread which runs through my mail. Letter after letter tells me it is a favourite magazine which my correspondents would not know how to replace because they can find nothing in Canadian periodicals which is equivalent or which they really want to read. The harm which the bill would do to the Canadian economy should by now be apparent to all. Even so, the $30 million loss to the economy which would result if this bill were passed has not in my view been sufficiently emphasized. The publishing operation would, of course, go back to the United States, and postage on copies ordered would have to be paid by Canadians. Consequently, the money paid as postage for these magazines would be a direct loss to the Canadian government. I am greatly surprised that the present administration, of all governments, would wish to countenance a loss of revenue.

In closing, let me say this. Long ago there were two cities in ancient Greece—Sparta and Athens. Sparta was a commercial success, a militaristic dictatorship. Athens was a city where great attention was paid to culture. All the cultures of the ancient world were welcomed there. The educational institutions were the finest in the world. Today, Athens is visited by millions of travellers from every country who come to see the place where the free society of Athens raised monuments of such beauty in the way of statuary, architecture and tradition. It is still the envy of the rest of the world. By contrast, Sparta, which concentrated on other things, is hard to find: just a few hummocks on the ground is all that is left of a nation which neglected to pay attention to its culture, which tried to seal its people off from the rest of the world and keep them in isolation so that no comparison could be made between their nation and other nations. I believe Canada would prefer to choose the way of Athens rather than the way of Sparta. I urge all hon. members to support this amendment and to send the bill back to committee so as to allow much needed revisions to be made to it at that time.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of entering the debate today. I do so because I have been tremendously concerned about the attitude which has been taken with respect to Bill C-58. Right from the introduction of this measure, or shortly thereafter, we became aware of the direction in which we were going, a direction very much in opposition to the one in which we felt the government should be moving at this time.

I pointed out at a previous stage of the debate that the government have constantly engaged in confrontation. It does not seem to matter what area they are dealing with; they are so confident they are right and that everyone else is wrong that they have never hesitated to use extraordinary means by which to maintain their point of view. This has been the case as far as Bill C-58 is concerned.

In the earlier stages of our discussion, as I am sure the country is aware, a great deal of attention was paid to representations which we had received from the people of Canada. I suppose every member of the House has received a great many communications calling attention to the fact that what the government was doing was not in the best interests of the country and, moreover, that it was contrary to the wishes of the Canadian people. It was made clear that the end result of the program in which the government was engaged would be a serious interference with the rights of citizens of this country to read what they wanted to read and not to be circumscribed in the material available to them.

As far as Reader's Digest is concerned, a great many members, including myself, have pointed out that this magazine is welcomed in most homes across the nation. It is informative, it is entertaining, it is a wholesome magazine, one we are not ashamed to leave on the table in our living room for anyone who enters to pick up and read—and that is something we hesitate to do with some of the periodicals which are published right here in Canada. I do not think we can take the attitude that anything which is printed or owned in Canada is a good magazine or a good periodical, nor can we take the position that what is published outside our borders is wrong or unsuitable.

For all these reasons, I believe we need to take a further hard look at this legislation. If the government will not do so, the opposition will, very possibly, have to carry on until members opposite understand the situation. It seems to me beyond reason that the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) should take the position he is taking, determined to have his own way even though members of his own party stand and take exception to it. His own friends draw attention to the dangers that are involved, and ask him, in the name of common sense, to bring in changes to the legislation. As I say, it is almost beyond my understanding that the minister should refuse, even if he will not listen to members of the opposition, to accept the arguments of his own supporters with regard to what we believe is the right of Canadians to read whatever they wish.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I felt I had to stand and reaffirm my position on this measure. I had the opportunity of speaking on one of the motions introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) and also on some of the motions introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). Here, again, I believe their arguments were appropriate; they were direct, sane and sensible. It almost appears as if the minister is not willing to look at things that are sane and sensible, but is determined to pursue the course he has outlined regardless of the consequences or its effect on this country.

I do not believe we have the right to say, "This is the course we are going to take regardless of any other considerations. It is going to be this way, or none". Several years ago, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was minister of justice, he said—I cannot quote his exact words, but this is the gist of his message—that he looked upon his responsibility as minister of justice not only as being legal adviser to the government but as charting a course for Canadian society. I suggest that is exactly what he has been trying to do. There were those who at that time said he was just trying to find his way. I replied that he was not trying to find his way, that he knew where he wanted to go and was going there. We now have the Secretary of State following that course and supplementing the program that has been announced by saying, "As far as Canadian culture is concerned, this will be it, regardless what the people of Canada think about it. We are going this way, and they can like it or lump it". That position is entirely out of order as far as I am concerned.

Reader's Digest is a magazine that was greatly in the forefront of the discussions that were taking place. We now know that some changes were made. In some way the government and Reader's Digest came to the understanding that they would be able to continue to publish. I do not think the minister has ever outlined to us just what was said or what kind of agreement was reached. I think I ought also to say that while Reader's Digest was very definitely desirous of placing their arguments and the basis for their complaints before us, I do not think they did a very good job of coming back to us and saying, "Well, you fellows put up a pretty good fight, but now we want to tell you what the situation is". It seems to me that if the government will not tell us, Reader's Digest ought to state what the situation is and how they were able to fit in with the plan the government outlined.

We are glad that Reader's Digest will be able to continue publication. I like to have it in my home and I like to read it. Some say that it is not very deep. Just because it is not very deep is not to say that it is not enlightening, informative and pleasant reading. As I have said, I like Reader's Digest and I want it in my home, and I would like to know the basis of the understanding that was reached between the government and that magazine.

Some attention had been give the matter of the "80 per cent difference" provision. This seems to me a mysterious situation. In order to reinforce the position of the government, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) warned the industry, "If you don't measure up, or if you find some loophole to get past, we will soon introduce more legislation so you won't get past". It seems to me absolutely preposterous that a government should take this position regarding legislation presented to the House, legislation that has been opposed by members of the opposition as well as supporters of the government.

Non-Canadian Publications

We have before us a measure that has eliminated Time magazine. Here, again, if people want to read Time magazine and have a Canadian section in it, I cannot see why in the world they should not have the privilege of doing so. But, again, the axe has fallen. We are now finding other so-called Canadian magazines moving in which have no appeal at all to the broad mass of the Canadian people, yet hope to take over the market occupied by Time magazine. They will not be able to do it unless they come up with something vastly different from what they have at the present time.

I have spoken about the printed materials that are affected by this particular measure, and I should now like to turn to its effect on the television industry and on Canadian culture. Canadian culture is a relative thing. What the Secretary of State would call Canadian culture, other people would call garbage, and perhaps vice versa.

Mr. Faulkner: Only Tories.

Mr. Patterson: No; what about your own supporters? The minister does not have his ears and eyes open; he cannot see or understand. His mind is fixed on, "Come what may, you are going to do it my way." That seems to me to be a blatant disregard of the rights of the Canadian people. A rather disturbing attitude seems to prevail among most members on the government side—though, thank goodness, not all—when we begin talking about Canadian culture and foreign influence. The attitude seems to be that if something has a Canadian designation, however superficial, it has to be good; it is worthy of our acclaim and should be revered. This attitude is seen very clearly in a statement made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) some time ago and in the position she took regarding KVOS. The inference is that any group or letter designating a Canadian broadcasting licence automatically makes a TV station a better one.

I suggest that that is not so. I think the essential point in any discussion about KVOS—which is a station that has wide support in my area of the country—one upon which any decision should be predicated, is that KVOS is not just another foreign television station serving Canadian markets. KVOS has—in my analysis of the facts, at least—tried to observe the norms of good corporate Canadian citizenship for more than 20 years. To return to the periodicals, Reader's Digest has been a good corporate citizen, employing a great number of Canadian people. It pays its taxes, enters into the Canadian economy and has made a tremendous contribution. Yet the government says, "That is not good enough. We don't want you here".

KVOS, as I was saying, Mr. Speaker, has tried to observe the norms of good corporate Canadian citizenship for more than 20 years. I wonder whether any hon. member can, or would, say as much about the CBC television network. I, for one, feel that some of the trash that has been broadcast by this TV network, which has more than enough Canadian-designated communication letters to satisfy hon. members representing the government from various parts, indicates that the CBC is not a good citizen at all. Its broadcasting often violates the norms of Canadian society, it offends the sensibilities of vast numbers of Canadian people, and its slant on news stories and other social issues does more to undermine and destroy Canadian values, beliefs and objectives than to support them. The record of objections raised about CBC programming by hon. members in the House will serve as ample evidence of what I am saying. I can find no record of complaint by anyone against offensive material being carried on KVOS. Good corporate citizenship, then, involves considerably more than paying taxes and balancing the books—and those are items the CBC cannot even come close to achieving.

KVOS does pay Canadian income tax in Canada on its Canadian advertising sales and on its revenue from film production. The income of KVOS-TV, B.C., Ltd., is taxed equally by the Canadian and United States governments. Under an agreement between Canadian and U.S. tax authorities similar to that applying to the Canadian radio stations in Windsor serving the Detroit market, 50 per cent of the advertising dollars from Canadian national and retail advertisers becomes a commission revenue for KVOS-TV, B.C., Ltd., and 50 per cent is paid to KVOS-TV Incorporated, U.S., for supplying the on-the-air product to the Canadian corporation. None of the revenue produced by the two KVOS western film corporations, Canawest Film Productions Ltd., Vancouver, and Canawest Master Films, Calgary, goes to KVOS-TV, U.S.A., and tax thereon is therefore paid entirely to the Canadian government.

KVOS-TV, B.C., Ltd., is a Canadian corporation and employs Canadian workers. It pays Canadian taxes and also owns and operates the two aforementioned film companies. These two companies represent, together, the largest full-time film production unit west of Toronto. Approximately 30 full-time persons are employed by KVOS-TV, B.C., Ltd., and its production companies. Depending on production business and schedules, as many as 150 Canadian performers, artists, technicians, salesmen and office workers receive professional income from KVOS-TV at one time. In addition, KVOS invests a substantial amount of its profits in Canada and Canadian enterprise. For example, it has built and subsidizes a very successful film industry in British Columbia and Alberta. It has to date invested a significant amount of money, approximately $3 million, in both short-term and long-term Canadian securities. I could give other examples, but suffice it to say that from 1965 to 1974—nine years—KVOS-TV's contribution to the Canadian economy, the public and private sectors, has been $75,862,000.

I should like to list a number of other significant items that show the essential good citizen character of this corporation. KVOS voluntarily adheres to Canadian advertising regulations. This has been the case in respect of the proportion of commercials per hour in children's programs. KVOS did not wait for the regulations to be changed, but as soon as notification was received from the CRTC the change was voluntarily implemented. KVOS-TV has for 20 years voluntarily followed all restrictions that Canadian-based stations have in the broadcast treatment of Canadian elections and election news. When writing for and/or filming commercials for Canadian or Canadian-distributed products or services, both federal and provincial laws, regulations and codes are adhered to.

I could go on talking about KVOS, but I think this is sufficient to show that this organization is a good corporate citizen, just the same as Reader's Digest was, yet it seems as though it is to be given the axe. The result is that it is going to be in a very difficult situation as far as further contributions to the Canadian economy are concerned.

[Mr. Patterson.]

One suggestion made by KVOS was directed toward what apparently is one of the foremost concerns of the CRTC, and that is how to improve the quantity and quality of Canadian-made programs. More specifically, the offer of KVOS dealt with how to continue to build and strengthen production facilities in the west. KVOS made a submission to the CRTC to pay a percentage of its gross revenue to finance a western Canadian television fund. If the fund had been instituted as suggested, by the end of 1975 KVOS-TV, B.C., Ltd., alone would have advanced well over $1 million toward expending the film and television production industry in British Columbia.

I do not feel I should pursue this particular thought any further, although I certainly could. I have ample data which would enable me to continue to impress upon the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) the reasons this bill should be withdrawn, looked at again and amended. However, my hopes are not very high. I think the attitude of the minister has been shown very clearly. He is just going to sit it out and say, "When those people stop talking and yacking, then we are going to get this bill through and it will become the law of Canada." That is the attitude and reputation the minister has displayed and developed. He does not give a hoot about anybody else but his own program, and he is going to get it through.

I believe this bill should be the subject of another thorough examination. It should go back to the committee. Many of the things said in the committee have gone out the window now because of the deal made with Reader's Digest. This House has the absolute right to know just what happened and what took place before it gives approval to this measure or lets it go through this House.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments in respect of Bill C-58 at this stage. I realize that comments by hon. members on this side have been viewed with some degree of criticism by the minister responsible for the bill. I had hoped that this stage of the debate might have enlightened colleagues on all sides of the House about something that disturbs me. This has been mentioned by some of my colleagues as a question of privilege. I refer to the matter of closure of discussion in the committee and the fact that the whip was heavily applied to those members of the Liberal party who had expressed divergent views on the subject. I also hoped it would be possible to expose and identify the back room dealers and those deals which took place behind closed doors as a late stage when it was decided to treat Time and Reader's Digest differently.

The government almost paid the political price of obscuring this window to the world. The minister will recall that in my first speech I pleaded with him to make a distinction between Time and Reader's Digest. I had hoped this debate would give us the opportunity of finding out what went on behind closed doors that made it possible for the minister to change his mind and examine again the new information which obviously would have been before him at that time.

We are now faced with a different definition for a news magazine and a digest. It is now no longer sinful to bring in literary compositions from the outside, but it is sinful to bring in so-called general news. I suppose Time magazine could be called a news magazine. I suppose it is now bad for Canadians to read news coming in from other parts of the world.

My colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Patterson), who just spoke got the minister a little excited when he said that Canadians at times express concern over the cultural evolution that has been set up for some years through a type of closure which the CBC and the intellectual elitists are directing at Canadians. The minister said that it is only the Tories that are excited. What he meant was that only Canadians are excited, that the elitist group fully understand what is happening, is fully in accord with it and that, of course, they know better. The minister is saying, in effect, that the cultural evolution within our country must be directed, and it is not any longer the right of the individual taxpayer and citizen to express views in this regard.

I have always said that if the government wanted to clean up some of the mess which exists in respect of the newspaper, magazine and publications industry, it would do better if it would bring out some laws that would have the effect of cleaning up the magazine shelf itself. I respect the freedom of all Canadians, even those who like to read Playboy magazine and some of the other filth that is prominently displayed on the bookshelves. However, I would have thought the government would have made a greater contribution to a cultural evolution in our country by bringing in some directions concerning how some of these magazines, which some people find offensive, particularly when exposed to young people and children, should be displayed on the bookshelves. Some of my colleagues have referred to this matter and have alleged that the government's interest in all magazine content is coupled with just another tax law which is being used as part of an effort effectively to wipe out Time Canada.

I should like to address the House on a few specific points surrounding this bill with which I disagree. First let me point out that I hold no special affinity to the publication in question. I would make these comments regardless of the publication that might be concerned. It is, indeed, a sorry state of affairs when a country's laws are allowed to be distorted and aborted by bureaucratic redefinition. I fear this is merely the beginning and that it may become ingrained in our policies. The Liberals think that Canadians are not educated enough or astute enough to have the capability of discerning good from bad. That is what this bill implies. It is ludicrous for the government to believe the foolish notion that this country can be independent only if its publications are 80 per cent different from everyone else's publications. Its interest in editorial decisions is completely outside the law and is an area in which the government has no right or competence.

The desire to give fully-Canadian magazines a more prominent place in the publications business of Canada is commendable, but not at the expense of other magazines which have some redeeming value in this field. It is this kind of authoritarian rule which I fear. The government's desire to set itself above the publishing industry and to decide what constitutes an 80 per cent difference so as to allow tax deductions is a cheap form of pseudo censorship. The government is assuming editorial censorship. It is not doing so legitimately, because it could not be legitimized in any form. It is doing so, instead, by a new tax law—a roundabout way of meddling.

It will place hundreds of jobs in jeopardy if the publication in question succumbs. If the government fears that Time, Canada, is becoming a monopoly, perhaps the assets of Maclean-Hunter warrant a second look. Time, Canada, does not expect any special status and is willing to comply with every government demand except the "80 per cent different" rule. I suggest this might be for the reason that no one has ever defined what is meant by the "80 per cent different" rule. In a legal sense, this is without foundation on the part of the government.

If Time outsells Maclean's and Saturday Night, this is an indictment of our home-grown talent for its mediocrity. If they cannot compete on merit alone, they surely do not deserve to be protected through bullying on the part of politicians and bureacrats. That is obtuse thinking on the part of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner).

This insidious form of creeping censorship must be stopped in its tracks. It is a basic right of all Canadians to read what they choose. We are denying Canadians the right to read and view a full range of publications and programs. The effect of this policy scares me—not the stated intention of the Minister of National Revenue. It is a misconception to delude ourselves with the impression that lost revenue from advertising in Time will go to Canada's Maclean's. This is not the fact. The government says that if Canadians wish to read Time, let them get it from American sources. The crown of life is the exercise of choice. If we wish to read the magazine of our choice, that is our right and there is no reason we should have to pay a premium for that right. This is completely unfair and is no more than misplaced nationalism.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I wish to voice my disapproval over the deal this government made with Reader's Digest. The phrase "any type of continuing arrangement for access to material" is further proof that censorship is involved in this bill. I cannot agree with this interpretation which is completely unsubstantiated by statute and is only meant to run Time, Canada, out of this country.

Another magazine will be affected by Bill C-58. I should like to comment on that as well. The periodical to which I refer is MD of Canada. As I understand it, Bill C-58 is intended to strengthen the magazine industry in Canada. If MD of Canada is forced to discontinue publishing and distributing in Canada, nothing will be added to the objective of Bill C-58. MD of Canada competes with no other magazine of this nature. It is the only journal of its kind in Canada to begin with, so if it is removed, who will benefit? I am afraid that if it is removed, more will suffer as a result. MD of Canada is the only journal of medico-historical significance in this country that is distributed to physicians on a controlled basis.

MD of Canada has vindicated itself over the years. This is proven by the responses of physicians who receive it. Enrichment of the mind is surely the purpose of this journal. From what I hear, MD has met this objective in the medical community. Further, MD is published, printed and edited in Canada and its contents are not duplicated in any other form in this country. To even consider relinquishing the distribution of this unique journal is a negative step. I suggest that the government re-evaluate what they are trying to do by imposing Bill C-58 on this publication.

● (1600)

I should like to make another brief point to do with the electronic media, particularly with regard to KVOS-TV in Vancouver. The government has clearly applied eastern regulations to a very specific and exceptional western situation. KVOS is indeed a good corporate citizen and always has been. It has proved itself more than adequate in the last 20 years. Furthermore, KVOS-TV has paid taxes to this government and it has received no carte blanche concessions, nor has it asked for any. For 20 years they have systematically reinvested substantial portions of their earnings into British Columbia and Alberta and have built in these two provinces the largest film production companies west of Toronto, with Canadian actors, writers, animators and production people of all kinds. They have done this to demonstrate good citizenship, and they have done it at a period of time when there was no competition and no one else to fill the void in Vancouver and in British Columbia.

Now that they have expanded their presence in Canada and have reinvested their profits in other industries, they stand accused of being a bunch of foreigners who are taking over this country. This company has diversified and invested its money in other industries, but the accusation is that they are engaging in a foreign take-over. They cannot win. The minister and the government are determined in any way possible to assume full control over the broadcasting industry in Canada, whether they are using bilingualism as an excuse, the government's intention to bring the French fact beyond a reversible position in Canada, the income tax laws, or whatever other excuse. They are determined to assume complete control of the broadcasting media in our country. That is frightening to most Canadians and, I suggest, to most of my colleagues in the House of Commons.

KVOS is entitled to a second look. I think we are being too hasty in writing it off, and especially in not analysing the KVOS offer put before the broadcasting committee which would repatriate a minimum of $2 million a year directly into British Columbia's broadcasting activities. KVOS has offered to share with CRTC all the profits. They are paying them out in taxes anyway, and they will have to lower their rates by 50 per cent if they want to stay in existence. They have offered to give CRTC 50 per cent of their profits after taxes, and will let CRTC direct this money into some form of broadcasting activity in our country. But this plea fell on deaf ears, and Canadians will be the poorer for it. In my opinion, this would better have met the objectives contained in Bill C-58 so far as British Columbia is concerned than the provisions of the bill at present. Just because there is a different problem in the west which could best be handled by applying a different solution, why should we be stuck with a national policy based on solving an eastern problem?

[Mr. Oberle.]

The government defends this invidious action by saying that the reason we must nationalize the broadcasting and magazine industries is that we have a responsibility to provide some form of news coverage and of cultural distribution to some of the more remote areas of our country, to Canada's hinterland, to mid-Canada and to northern Canada where we talk about the northern extension of the broadcasting system.

I live in the north and I live under regulations that CRTC brings out. As I have said before in the House of Commons, there would have been better ways of achieving the purposes of Bill C-58, particularly if CRTC were receptive to some ideas that come from the north and if some of the policies established by CRTC for itself could be amended to take into account and be more attuned to the needs of the north. I am making particular reference to one CRTC policy, namely, that if there is an area which has been identified as one which has only one national signal, either CTV or CBC, and some entrepreneur wanted to bring a cable program into the area, the CRTC would refuse the application for the simple reason that there is only one broadcasting signal in the area now.

I should like to ask the minister to consider the request which I have put forward on several occasions, to explain the reasoning behind that regulation which says that just because there is one signal or no signal at all in an area, they cannot get cablevision either. To me this does not make sense. I can identify several areas where this is happening. In the city of Prince George, with a population of 75,000, only last year CRTC allowed an application for cablevision because at that time one year had expired since the city had both CTV and CBC networks.

The same is true of the area of Skeena, Terrace and Kitimat—that great area in the province which my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo), represents. There is only one signal there. It happens to be CBC. Yet the CTV network had to sign an agreement with CRTC that eventually, over a reasonable period of time, their signal would have to be extended into the area. However, it is a five-year to ten-year program and until that time there can be no application for cablevision even in an area with a population of perhaps 80,000 to 100,000. They are denied cablevision programming because they do not have any other signal. The same is true of the Robson Valley area. There are not as many people there, but they had no television at all until a couple of years ago and CBC could not go in there because it would not be a paying proposition. So 7,500 people, in an area with a 200-mile radius, did not receive any kind of electronic programming. I admit they have radio, but there was no TV programming at all.

My predecessor in the House of Commons threw up his hands and said that CTV and CBC were prepared to look at the situation again in five years. I made a private deal with the telephone company in British Columbia which put up the tower and put in the signal and the facilities. We finally got CBC to pay an annual rent, because there was no money in the capital budget but lots of money in another budget, so we robbed Peter to pay Paul and we worked out an agreement under which CBC paid an annual rent. Now we have that one program in the area, but it will be many, many years before the other program is put in there, because it is not a viable proposition in the area.

The same holds true of the Peace River country. As I go up the Alaska Highway, that storehouse of resources, that place where Canadians who still believe in the free enterprise system and in the spirit of individuality make their living and carve out their existence away from the concrete jungles, there is no television either. The reason there is no TV there is that CRTC would not ask a company such as KVOS if they would be prepared to spend some of their profits in such an area. They might have done it. Obviously, neither CBC or CTV do—because why should they? They have a captive audience now. They are in all the areas where profits are made, so why should they go up north? There is no competition in the city; it has all been chased out. Why should they go up north?

● (1610)

There is the other matter of saying that satellites are floating around and can be tracked with gadgets. I wrote to Japan about a metal shield that attracts a satellite. A kit is offered for $750 which can be operated in remote areas which have no electricity—although a little power plant is needed to run it. It is possible to pick up the signal from the satellite; but, Mr. Speaker, if you do that you go to jail. In the north, where there is no electricity and no programming, the satellite floats around, paid for by taxes generated in the north, but you cannot track it and put in your own broadcasting system.

Seventy-five miles from Prince George, which now has two signals and will have cablevision, is the town of Mackenzie. I met with the Chamber of Commerce there: they wanted to have the second signal. Some technicians said it would be a simple matter to hook up to it, and the way they explained it made sense. I suggested they should try it out. They took up a collection in town. That is the way they do things, Mr. Speaker. They are resourceful where I come from: they do not go running to the CRTC; they help themselves. If they want to skate, they flood an area at the back of the house. If they want to curl, they build themselves a rink. Sometimes they get a little LIP money. But they are resourceful people. So they climbed up a pole, hung on a reflector and, lo and behold, a beautiful signal appeared on the television screen.

They wanted to know what they would do then. I suggested they should leave the shield up there and enjoy the Saturday night hockey game. What did the minister do? He told them to take the thing down because they were not entitled to it without a licence. It could take a year of bureaucratic bungling to get a licence. First they had to hire an engineer, and then it became difficult. The engineer had to prove the system would work even though they already had a picture on the screen. He spent two or three months, and $20,000, to tell them the system would work. Now they can make their application to the CRTC because they have proof that it works.

As a representative of the north, am I amused when this kind of bill comes to the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker? No. I say it is high time we faced the problem as it exists—and that we all face it, not just the people on this side but the people responsible for the mess we are in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Oberle: As it happens, KVOS was in Vancouver when programming in Vancouver was the way it is today in Dawson Creek. My hon. friend nods his head because he knows the problem is similar and I know he is working hard on it, too, but I should like him to compare the circumstances with Bill C-58—

Mr. Malone: Here comes the minister.

Mr. Oberle: KVOS was in Vancouver when things were like they are in Dawson Creek and in my hon. friend's constituency. Full service was not available at the time. The owners were American—but did they have two heads and seven arms? They were entrepreneurs coming to Canada . All their business was in Canada. Their production facilities were here and they hired Canadians living in Vancouver. There was a steel tower in Bellingham, just across the border, which was a convenient location from which to beam the signal into Vancouver. But that was all that was in the United States, except the owners.

I guess we have to make a decision whether to allow these bad people from the United States to influence our cultural evolution in this country. That is something members opposite have dreamed up with this legislation. The minister laughs, and if it were not so serious I could share his humour. But it really is not funny, Mr. Speaker, particularly when you examine Bill C-58 in light of what it means to KVOS in Vancouver and other entrepreneurs who have made a contribution to our way of life and are now penalized for it.

I have just returned from a trip to the United States where I had the honour of representing this parliament at an Interparliamentary Union meeting with the Congress of the United States. I have taken part in these meetings for the past three years. We discussed some of the irritants that have cropped up since the last meeting. There are always such things as border problems, waste being disposed of in the Great Lakes, the clean-up of the Great Lakes, the International Joint Commission, and such matters. On the agenda this year was Bill C-58. Mr. Speaker, I cannot put it any other way than to say I was ashamed. It was very, very difficult to defend what we are trying to do here, because I do not know what we are trying to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: We are called pirates. Our American colleagues look upon us as a banana republic. What we are doing with Bill C-58 will apply to other serious matters with the United States. There is the matter of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, for instance. One senator told me in private, "We might build a pipeline through your country, and we might put some gas in it in Alaska, but there is no assurance that something will come out at the other end. You might nationalize something going through your country." There is the nationalization of the potash industry, and stealing cablevision in the area. That is what the latest regulations of the CRTC permit.

For the first time, I found that we were drifting apart ideologically from the United States. They are worried about what is happening in this country and what this government is doing. Mr. Speaker, they have every reason to worry. I did not say that publicly down there, but things were extremely difficult, and they will become more difficult. Every year we export 80 per cent of our production to the United States, and import between 3 per cent and 5 per cent of their production. If they should close the border to trade tomorrow, we would be eating our pulp, paper and lumber. They can get it from Russia. We have paid for building sawmills in Russia and Poland, and the United States has a trade imbalance because of the wheat that goes over there. We would be eating our pulp and paper tomorrow if the United States were to decide to trade elsewhere. They will eventually have to bring us to reason, and when they do it will hurt us. We will not be number seven in the world, in terms of our standard of living. We will be number twenty-four in other respects and will be treated in the same way as every other banana republic.

Since it was possible at a quarter to twelve, so to speak, to make a back room deal with Reader's Digest, to save face, why is it not possible to make another back room deal with Time and several other companies as well? Surely the minister realizes that the difference between this country and the United States is not great. The Americans respect our wish to evolve our own culture, our wish to build our own nation. They will not sit back forever and take what we have been dishing out to them. They are upset about our foreign take-over legislation and upset about the foreign investment review law. I know we are telling them not to worry, that the decisions so far have been in favour of those who want to invest in Canada. I know that people attending certain United States hearings have told the Americans not to worry, that the law is not being applied strictly, that it is only on the books to keep out certain foreign investment and is seldom, if ever, invoked. The point is that the law is on the statute books and can be invoked.

It is high time this government reaffirmed our country's friendship with the United States. That friendship works in Canada's favour. Continuing on the course this government has set will be devastating for our country. It will alienate us from our friendly, neighbouring giant who may have caused the odd difficulty but who has been a great friend of Canada's ever since we became a nation.

Again I say to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, please call back the people from Time and KVOS and work out another back room deal. After all, pressure is being put on my colleagues from British Columbia. Although they are not as numerous as those who come from Quebec, whose influence was obviously brought to bear with regard to Reader's Digest, I plead with the minister to reconsider the matter, because as many Canadians are employed in Vancouver and British Columbia by companies affiliated with KVOS as are employed in Quebec by Reader's Digest. Obviously, if the minister will not listen, British Columbia members will be disappointed. One hon. member on the government side in particular will be embarrassed when the government's case must again be taken to the people.

I will not prolong this debate because others wish to contribute. It is high time that we, as Canadians, opposed this kind of skullduggery and asked the government to listen to the people, not merely to Tories or Liberals. The minister cannot say that only he on the government side has received letters on this subject. I will not say that I am the only member on my side to whom Canadians write. I know that the minister and his colleagues are receiving letters of complaint from many Canadians. Before it is too late, I plead with him to reconsider this scandalous course of action and direct this country on a new course.

[Mr. Oberle.]

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, when last I spoke on this bill in the House I was addressing my remarks to comments made by the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé). We are now discussing an amendment to refer this bill back to commitee. I support the amendment. Having attended committee hearings but, unfortunately, having participated only once in the committee's deliberations, I could not help noting how little time the committee was given to hear the evidence of witnesses. This led to frustration. I am sure that many members and many witnesses were not given the opportunity to voice their concerns in committee about this bill. Let me repeat a comment which the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) made about MD of Canada. She said, as reported on page 10991 of Hansard:

> The content of their publication is without fault, I am sure, but this, I must point out, in no way makes it a Canadian magazine.

Magazines like MD of Canada and Modern Medicine, together with agricultural and other professional journals, bring professional and personal enrichment to those who read them. This silly legislation will make such magazines harder to obtain. Some of the present readers may be denied access to them in future. I am sure that the minister and his officials were not thinking of MD of Canada, Modern Medicine, our cattlemen's magazines or other, similar journals when contemplating this law. I doubt if they had ever heard of those magazines. They are not interested in them, and I would not expect the minister to read them; they are outside his interest. But these magazines are part of the lifeblood of professional men, are part of the lifeblood of the various people affected in trades, industries and agriculture. Usually, the reader looks forward to receiving his magazine. Although this law will not make it impossible for people to continue receiving these magazines, it will place constraints on their publication. Perhaps my arguments do not impress the minister; I notice that he yawns. If he had been through the sort of convention I have been through, he might be even more fatigued.

Motion No. 7 was intended to increase television coverage in Canada. The Minister of Communications said that she was concerned about the employment opportunities for Canadian artists and artisans involved with radio and television. She suggested that our artists, artisans and actors did not have adequate opportunities for employment. She went on to suggest that this was an area that required development. She stated it was part of our culture and heritage.

I cannot help but be amazed at the remarks of members opposite when they talk about the need for development of our culture. Last year the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), who is responsible for multiculturalism, was presented with an excellent document, a rather thick manual dealing with the entire subject of multiculturalism. I do not want Your Honour to think I am straying from the purpose and reason for this debate. That manual contained some very valid proposals with regard to multiculturalism. It was very well done. After all, it was a report commissioned by the government. In July, 1975, I wrote to the Minister of Labour asking about this Canadian cultural identity and the need for a multicultural program. Three weeks later I followed up with another letter because I had not received an acknowledgement. Three weeks later I again followed up with another letter; I had not yet received an acknowledgement.

I followed up the initial letter of July, 1975, with an additional inquiry every three weeks until February, 1976. I have never received the courtesy of a reply. That shows how valid the arguments are by those opposite when they tell us they are concerned about the cultural identity of Canada, how they want to improve our culture and open up opportunities for artists and artisans. If that is an example of what they are doing, then truly it is laughable. I must say, with every measure of scorn, that for a minister to take nine months to answer one simple question is beyond all comprehension. Good heavens, consider what a woman can create in nine months!

The minister has expressed concern about artists and artisans. KVOS made a proposal to the minister which would have given the opportunity to some artists to continue in their present employment. Apparently it was not palatable. Rather than give them that opportunity, the minister would deny them such employment. He would rather they went on UIC and followed through with welfare. That is part of the cultural program of this government. It is a program that is truly remarkable in its lack of identity, thrust and recognition. I do not understand it.

The minister is very concerned about delegating foreign authority to KVOS. She said, in effect, that it is improper for us to accept money from the United States which might in some manner be influential dollars. She said it might improperly influence us, change our culture or change our identity. How naive, at the very least, and how untruthful at the very most. I have never heard any debate in this House about any money put into Canada by a foreigh-controlled company such as an oil company or a mining company changing our culture and identity. Surely this is the same thing, but with much smaller dollars. It is better to have something than nothing. Better half a glass of water or half a loaf of bread than nothing at all.

The minister would deny the honest and sincere attempt by KVOS to maintain a presence, a cultural presence at that, in the western part of this country. The minister said, as reported at page 10982 of Hansard:

It is just as if I raised the so-called French problems apropos everything we discussed in the House.

The minister was concerned that we were talking about western alienation. Of course we were talking about western alienation. The minister indicated that this kind of discussion does not take place in the House as far as Quebec is concerned. How very true. It does not need to take place because there are no similar problems in Quebec. We have every assurance that if there were, they would be attended to very quickly. Not so with western Canada. We have every justification in saying there is indeed a problem in western Canada.

Last week the truth of the matter was very evident. We saw the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), his mandarins and ministers, trotting off to British Columbia to solve the problems of the Liberals. What a grand scheme it was. However, I think the appeal of the Prime Minister will have fallen on deaf ears because there are not, and never have been, any tangible results. We see that enormous architectural monstrosity in Vancouver which is called the headquarters of the CBC. I do not doubt that it is very fine on the inside. I wish I could say the same for the outside. When I compare the millions of dollars tied up in that facility to the thousands of dollars that could be spent in my remote constituency in British Columbia, I wonder about the priorities of this government. The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) spoke about the remoteness of his area. I am quite familiar with his part of the country. They do indeed have problems. They are certainly very remote and certainly very northern.

I extend to you, Mr. Speaker, an invitation to come to Kootenay West. You would see that half of our geography stands on its side and a considerable amount is under water. Kootenay West has provided a fortune to the Canadian people. The industriousness of the people has, through Cominco Limited, through mine after mine of silver, lead, zinc, bismuth and antimony provided a fortune in tax revenues of one kind or another. The waterways have provided an enormous source of power—little used in our area, incidentally, because we do not have much industry there; DREE has really not been effective in Kootenay West and has now been withdrawn. Be that as it may, the wealth generated within Kootenay West has contributed a great deal to all of Canada. What has Kootenay West received in return? Consider the communications system. Look at the CBC. We have low-power radio transmitters—LPRTs, as they call them—spotted in three or four areas. In one area the signal goes right by the homes of 350 people, yet they cannot pick it up because the CBC will not spend a dime to enable them to do so; the corporation sends it down the road another 12 miles. How powerful is that mighty signal? Enough to bring it back up the road three miles. How ridiculous!

● (1640)

We are talking about KVOS, about the priorities of the government in the field of communications, whether in print or over the airways. Take the community of Kaslo. They have an LPRT. It has been there several years. The grounding is not very good; people living three miles away cannot pick up the signal. Do we find the CBC very concerned about this? The minister has talked about the legality of these things. We heard the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River tell us about people in his communities having provided their own signals. I suspect it is almost too much to accept as mere coincidence the fact that the CRTC hearings involving the CBC took place at almost the same time as the debate on Bill C-58 began in this House. It was interesting to hear the Minister of Communications talking about legality, telling us this was illegal and that was illegal. Yet I have not heard one word from the hon. lady with reference to the fact that the tower which was erected on Mount Seymour was erected in violation of CRTC regulations. I addressed the hearing in Vancouver and pointed this out, but I have yet to hear a response. I can only assume the CBC will continue to break not only the regulations of the CRTC, with the full approval of that body, but also the provisions of the Criminal Code.

If the minister cares to read my presentation before the CRTC, he will find out that the CBC is violating the law time after time. How laughable it is! The CRTC and the CBC are in bed together, yet the CRTC tells my people that they cannot put in a transmitter or that they cannot put in a receiver. Talk about mixed priorities! The Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) is very concerned about KVOS. I trust she is not laughing over the fact the CRTC condones the violation of regulations by the CBC. I am glad the hon. lady, by shaking her head, gives me reassurance on that point. Right now, CTV is going into Kootenay West having been asked to do so by the residents. After the CRTC changed the ground rules a bit, delaying the plan for a year and frustrating the people in my riding still further, the green light has finally been given, as I understand it.

I know the system being used by CTV is a very costly one and I know, also, it is not likely to show much of a profit for CTV. That is one of the penalties of doing business. Were it not for channels 2, 4 and 6, and channel 7 out of Spokane, the residents of Kootenay West would not have had an opportunity to watch television at all. These stations were there years before CBC ever got off its backside and provided a signal.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the communications history of my riding, and the picture is not much different throughout the outlying areas of British Columbia. At this very moment the people north of latitude 60 have a better communications link than the people of Kootenay West. Surely there has to be something wrong with the government's priorities when it comes to the operation of its communications network.

An hon. Member: The minister is leaving.

Mr. Brisco: How unfortunate. Here I was, making such a sterling address, and the minister has abandoned me. I feel crushed. In any event, back on February 10 the Minister of Communications, as reported at page 10,823 of Hansard, said she was concerned about special tax deals. How, she asked, could a government make some kind of special arrangement with KVOS? That is an intriguing question, and I hope the minister was directing it to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) rather than to us, because the Minister of Finance is an expert at making special appeals when it comes to taxation.

There is nothing original or strange about making some kind of tax arrangement with a foreign firm, whether it is a television company, a mining company or an oil company, whether it is located in the United States, in Cuba or in some other country. I am sure the government has sufficient experience to develop any special arrangements which may be desired. Certainly when it comes to taxation, the Minister of Finance and his colleagues have demonstrated a supreme capacity for making special deals. I see no reason why there should be any difficulty at all in dealing with the tax position as it affects KVOS. KVOS has dealt very well with Canadians when it comes to taxation, just as they have with their own country; that is to say, on the basis of a 50-50 sharing arrangement. Perhaps the ministry in Canada would like more.

In urging hon. members to return this bill to committee, I say this: it is obvious to all Canadians, and particularly to all members of the House, that the debate on Bill C-58 has been prolonged for more than the normal period. Why has debate on this bill, at every stage and on every motion, been so protracted? The answer is, because there is so much which is wrong with this legislation, wrong with the whole thrust and purpose of the measure. Obviously, the government is prepared to wait it out. Let me assure the government that it is not our intention to test its patience; but we, too, are very patient and intend to examine thoroughly, at every opportunity, every facet of the bill that is wrong, as well as those amendments that were defeated by members on the other side.

● (1650)

I wonder how those in the healing profession on the other side of the House, who have so quickly, in such a trained seal fashion, jumped up to support their government, will relate their position when it comes to such professional journals as MD of Canada and Modern Medicine, as well as certain trade and agricultural journals. It may well be that the professionals on the other side of the House are really not interested in these kinds of magazines and they could care less. They are not concerned whether their fellow doctors or fellow farmers or lawyers have the opportunity to enrich themselves with any opportunity for culture or professional development.

Mr. Patterson: They want to be brainwashed.

Mr. Brisco: It may well be that they have some difficulty reading. In the context of this bill it has been said that there may be some form of United States retaliation. This proposition has been rejected by the government, and rightly so. I, too, would reject it. The United States really does not play that kind of game. If it does, it does it in a very sloppy fashion. In talking on this bill, it is our purpose, at least in part, to see that Canada does not have the opportunity to play that kind of game, the retaliation game engineered by members on the other side of the House. I do not suppose for a moment that the United States would take some arbitrary form of retaliation. I am sure none of us is worried about a nuclear strike.

Nevertheless, I suggest the opportunity is there for the United States to say, "Well, we had better keep our signals within the United States. Canadians are not interested in them; they do not want them, or at least the government does not". It is not very difficult, technically speaking, to keep U.S. signals in the United States, though I hope that does not happen. But if it does happen, I suggest there would probably be a subsequent strike within the postal service because it could not handle the volume of mail that the Minister of Communications, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), the Prime Minister, and all members on that side of the House would receive as a result.

The minister is more concerned about our cultural identity than she is about freedom of the press and the airwaves. Regardless of all the rhetoric and speeches that have been made, the simple fact remains, so far as KVOS are concerned, that they are quite prepared to act within the rules. They are quite prepared to accept the same treatment that Canadian stations receive when their signals go across the border.

One critic corralled me outside the House and said, "You are wrong. How can you make statements such as you have just made if that station is not prepared to entertain 80 per cent Canadian ownership?" At least, I think that was the percentage he threw at me. I ask, Mr. Speaker, why should they? Does the United States insist upon 80 per cent ownership of signals originating in Canada? I would be very pleased to hear of just one case. Surely there are some experts on the other side who can advise me whether the United States insists upon 80 per cent U.S. ownership of Canadian signals going into the United States. What utter nonsense!

Let us send this bill back to the committee where it belongs. Let us have a full review by the Secretary of State, the Minister of Communications and all the other experts on that side who have managed to cloud, garble and distort the bill with non-persuasive arguments. Let us then get on with other business in this House. Another most controversial bill introduced by this government, Bill C-68—another cop-out by the federal government—is awaiting us in the wings and requires the attention of the members of the House. There are, of course, other bills waiting, bills requiring the attention of the House. We can only assume that in his wisdom the House leader has decided that debate on Bill C-58 must continue ad nauseam and ad infinitum. If that be the case, the policy of those on this side of the House who are concerning themselves with this particular bill will be "illegitimi non carborundum."

Some hon. Members: Explain.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)—Housing—Allegation owner of 800 Richmond Street West, Toronto, charged rents higher than authorized; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Veterans Affairs—Pensions for former prisoners of war—Position of minister if cabinet fails to support measure; the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt)—Canadian Pacific Railways—Restoration of rail service to Glenwood and Hill Spring—Reason for delay.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner that Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, if there were agreement on the government side that the bill go to committee immediately, then of course I would not need to speak. I would make my speech very short and I think the government would do the country a real service by putting forward whatever legislation might be ready, though I understand the government has no legislation ready, which is partly the reason it is willing to sit out this debate. I do not mind the government taking this time.

An hon. Member: We can wait.

Mr. Malone: Perhaps the hon. member has some constructive comments to make, though I think he ought to recognize that he is dealing with a minister who has put forward a pretty sloppy bill, one that had loopholes which had to be patched up as we went along, a sloppy enough bill that special concessions have now been made to certain groups which the bill originally attacked. I suggest this is all very much in character with the role that the minister himself has played in committee and in the House. He is a minister who, basically, is not in his seat for the question period. He is not in his seat now, during the debate on this bill. I cannot for the life of me believe that a person who would put forward a bill of such interest to the Canadian public would not remain to hear it debated.

● (1700)

I know of no bill that has attracted as much mail sent to members of the House as this bill, yet the minister and other members of the Privy Council are not even in their seats. I think this is a real slam to the Canadian public that their democratic process is being so totally denied. It has been said that the purpose of this bill is to protect our cultural identity. That identity cannot be protected by such a flippant attitude on the part of hon. members opposite.

The purpose of this amendment is simply to send the bill back to the committee. I suggest it ought to go back to the committee because it is legislation which has been etched in the minds of the Canadian public as a disservice. It has caused discontent across this country and has resulted in great protests coming to the desks of members of parliament. We have received literally thousands of letters of protest. My filing cabinet has letters of protest from constituents measuring eight to ten inches thick.

All that is being asked is that the bill be sent back to the committee in order that we can rehear the witnesses under new circumstances which result from the fact that the government has chosen to change the legislation. It originally put forward a legislative measure which would deny Reader's Digest certain tax benefits. The government then changed its mind and said Reader's Digest would qualify, but continued to deny the benefits to other publications. What must be clarified and made crystal clear are the rules of this game. How can any publishing group in this country, Canadian or otherwise, have any sense of security about the publishing industry here when we have a government that changes the rules according to its own whims, choosing its own friends and enemies. That is exactly what has happened.

The claim by some, that this is a Maclean-Hunter bill, has some validity. One only has to look at Maclean's magazine since it changed from a publication every two weeks. It is now, obviously, a Liberal magazine. One only has to count the number of Liberal cabinet ministers who have been on the cover picture of this magazine. The fact of the matter is that this is a bill designed to kill the counterparts of Maclean's, for the protection of the government's own supporters. If that is not the case, then how can one justify the treatment given Reader's Digest and the treatment extended to Time magazine?

The issue here is clear. The reason for sending this piece of legislation back to the committee is to define the criteria—criteria that have become very clouded and, I suggest, very shady. This is a very unscrupulous issue that faces us because of the lack of definition of criteria and lack of clarity in direction. We are now asking the government for a chance to find out, once and for all, what the government is trying to do. It is almost impossible to debate this piece of legislation in this House because it is so pointless and without direction.

By putting forward a piece of legislation without spelling out the criteria in respect of allowing foreign publications into this country, the government forces a subjective judgment, and as long as the judgment is subjective, regardless of what other government considerations may be advanced in support of the bill, the fact is the legislation is a form of censorship. For this reason, we ask that the bill be returned to the committee. Perhaps, more properly, we ought to suggest it be returned to the wastepaper basket. The bill ought not to be before us because of the obvious loopholes, to say nothing of the basic and clear lack of philosophy behind it.

We are asking the government, during this debate, to make it very clear how a publication is to be considered Canadian. We also want to know who is to make the decision. How can any company publishing material for the market in Canada develop a set of criteria when it does not know what the government has in mind? We have had no clear answer in this House whether MD of Canada will fit into the mainstream of Canadian publications. Nor do we know what MD of Canada requires to do in order to fit into this mainstream.

MD of Canada collects its medical information from all around the world, so obviously most of its material is foreign. Is the research in different nations of the world not of value in Canada? Is science and scientific research in any part of the world valid in this country? Is not the fact that MD of Canada is essentially a Canadian-owned magazine, using foreign material, a valid reason for publication in this country?

[Mr. Malone.]

The question at issue here relates to the exemption of Reader's Digest and how it, in fact, meets the criteria, however unclear they may be. Apparently the decision in respect of all magazines is to be left in the hands of the government in order that it can tinker with and shape the minds of the Canadian people. The decisions are to be made at the government's whim. I suggest that if the government has no business in the bedrooms of the nation, is has no business in the minds of the citizens.

We can say with certainty that one of the reasons for this bill is to provide the government with the means of shaping Canadian thought, and shaping it deliberately according to the wish and the will of the government. This is a deliberate and unscrupulous attempt at censorship. It is designed to put forward specific ideas of the government to the Canadian people and to provide patronage to certain areas. It is designed to find favour in respect of certain magazines and to provide employment in specific areas. How else can the government justify its special exemption for Reader's Digest, a privilege that has been withheld from other magazines?

We must have a clear definition of criteria in order that magazines published outside the borders of this country will have some clear direction of what needs to be done to get into the Canadian market. We need some clear rationale in order that people will feel a sense of security in the publishing industry. We must know why some magazines are being denied the privilege of publishing here without having to pay a surtax.

Let us look at the principle of censorship itself. We know that at times there have been valid reasons for censorship in this country, yet the government has denied that censorship. I recall different ministers saying they did not believe in censorship. The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) made this clear in committee. I do not, personally, believe in censorship and I think censorship ought not to be the role of government. Does it not strike you as odd, Mr. Speaker, that thousands and thousands of letters have crossed the desks of members of parliament in protest against certain CBC programs, namely, "Ten Lost Years", "Baptism", and "You Are Going To Be All Right, Jamie Boy", yet the government simply passed these off by saying it would not enter into any form of censorship? On the other hand, we have the present situation. The government has imposed its own will in respect of a change in rules as they apply to a certain publication.

● (1710)

On one hand there is the right to avoid the use of material that might be offensive to some, or reverse the government's choice to ban it, as in the case of Reader's Digest, MD of Canada, Time magazine and, I suppose, even the Bible inasmuch as its content is at least 80 per cent foreign. We certainly must ask what the government uses as its criteria. Partly tongue in cheek, and partly seriously, I suggest that the government might consider the Bible to have foreign content. I notice members opposite smiling. The fact is that if they wanted to be literal in respect of their own legislation, they could put a degree of control on anything they wanted at the whim and will of the government.

I think this brings us to the basic question of the Bill of Rights in this country and the privilege of being Canadian. As I understand the Bill of Rights, it ought not to have a price, a tax or a surtax attached to it. To this government, the right to information means that if the people want certain bits of information they can get it, but at a price.

I should like to know from members on the government side whether this is a philosophy that will apply to all rights in this country, and at whose wish and whim, and at what point, will the criteria be established and set out in legislation so that we will know what allows Reader's Digest in and what keeps Time magazine out, because without that defined criteria there is no doubt that this is a censorship bill. To claim otherwise is to be stupid, because the fact is that no one has yet explained to this House precisely why Reader's Digest was able to obtain a special exemption, and whether or not other companies which have not obtained the exemption can do something in order to meet the qualifications. Is that not a silly way to run a government? Is that not an unfortunate way to operate an institution which exists within a democracy?

The government sets up something which is so loose as to be totally subject to its will. This must be treated as a threat to all Canadians, because although it applies to some little piece of paper such as Bill C-58, which means that we may not get Reader's Digest next month, it is also an indication that this government has chosen to interfere with the basic rights of Canadians because it chooses to stop something without establishing criteria in respect of what might be stopped.

The government makes special exemptions in order to get around the stop-measures without establishing the criteria in this regard. What this boils down to is simply that the government has opted to set up for itself a subjective position in which it says it has the privilege and right to influence the public mind for its purpose. That is a most unfortunate situation. We can claim that the bill does not have a political mandate, and well it does not. Did anyone hear, during any election called by the Liberals in recent times, that one of their intentions was to impose upon Canadians a restriction on certain publications? They know they have been dishonest in their electioneering. They did not put forward any particular set of examples to illustrate to the Canadian people that this was expected. Yet this has been imposed. I think this points out the philosophy of the government of the day. It has the notion it has the right to do whatever it wants. Once they have won, they get the feeling that they might not win again unless somehow they can shape the minds of Canadians.

One way to do this is to try to restrict the information available to Canadians. They do not want to call it a censorship bill because that might bring a strong reaction, so they slip it in bit by bit in an effort to control the minds of Canadians. The bill has as its single purpose an attempt to control the minds of Canadians under the guise of an attempt to protect some irregularities in the taxing system. If that was all the government wanted to do, this bill would have gone through much sooner. I do not think there would have been much objection from this side if that had been the sole purpose.

When members of the government claim that the opposition is holding up this bill, they are simply blowing and sucking at the same time while trying to maintain a whirlwind attack. In this country the people have a right to think. They have a right to think, to read, to hear, to speak and to communicate as a principle of the Bills of Rights. This government is imposing its view in respect of the information available to the Canadian people. I have claimed before that this is a censorship bill because it sets out, in almost its only set of criteria about publications, a set of criteria that is false.

They talk about how foreign publications must be at least 80 per cent different in content to any previous publication. A simple analysis of that boils down to the fact that there is no such thing as 80 per cent. It does not exist. It cannot apply to publications. This government knows that. Percent is a mathematical concept. It is used in mathematical terms. You can talk about mathematical notions and percentages when talking about such units of measurement as length, weight or volume; you can talk about a percentage increase or decrease in the use of numbers. But you cannot talk about percent in dealing with values. That is like saying to someone that a person is 80 per cent right or, "I hate you 80 per cent", or that someone loves someone else 63 per cent.

The government takes a piece of legislation and tries to relate 80 per cent to a value judgment. This is a false concept. Someone can take a look at something, and if they do not like it they can say it is not 80 per cent. If they do not like it they can claim it is any per cent, because there is no unit of measurement for a value judgment. It is only when there are units of measurement that a percentage may be taken. It is a phony government that tries to tell us this criteria of 80 per cent has any validity. Anyone who has taken a course in research knows there is no way one can look at a piece of literature and apply 80 per cent to it with any degree of consistency.

This issue came up during the committee hearings on this legislation. I challenged the deputy minister, who was on hand that day and who had said they would use the length as the unit of measure; I asked him, if we had a piece of information that was 100 centimetres long and boiled it down until it was only 20 centimetres long, but had basically the same concept, whether that would apply. He said yes, to which the minister piped up and said it would not, that it must differ substantically, meaning that it must be different in its content or in what it talks about. This means the government is saying it is putting on a subjective judgment, that the percent notion no longer applies and that this government is censoring the minds of Canadians.

There is no doubt that, and I think it is time the government recognized that they are putting forward a piece of legislation which threatens the very core of what this country is intended to stand for. All the while the debate goes on, and the minister slips in and out of the House without showing sufficient interest to take part in the debate while hon. members have been speaking this afternoon. It is most unfortunate that such an attitude should prevail on the other side, because if we are going to look at a bill which has as one of its objectives the influencing of Canadian culture, the least we could ask is that the debate be approached with a less flippant attitude.

We know that the government accepts certain magazines and rejects others, without establishing any criteria, that it talks about 80 per cent when percentage should not apply, and that it censors the minds of Canadians. In fact, it tries to shape this country in such a way that the publishing industry is led to failure. The government would like to support Maclean-Hunter so its members can have their pictures week after week on its front page. It does all that, simply to try to maintain power. The whole bill is aimed at nothing else than destroying the whole notion of parliamentary democracy.

How can the government be bothered with this piece of legislation when there are so many inequities in the communications field with which they could be dealing? If the minister is really sincere about doing something for Canadians, how is it that the citizens in east central Alberta and west central Saskatchewan, who cannot pick up the CBC radio signal at night, receive a reply to their complaint from the Secretary of State, only a week ago, in a letter which stated that the CBC tests the strength of the signal in daytime, and if the people cannot get a night signal that is unfortunate? How is it that the television reception in the same communities is totally inadequate, yet the response of the government has been that perhaps by 1978 there will be some opportunities to put up another satellite transmitter?

Why is it that this bill is before us and takes up the time of the House, when people in the Northwest Territories, such as in Yellowknife, have to receive their news between midnight and one o'clock in the morning? I suppose the only justification for that is that when the Liberal government is in power the news is so bad that the government must set up a protective policy for the people in the north. Why is it that people in Yellowknife, when the weather is 40 below, have to listen to weather reports stating that it is raining outside, because the signal comes from Vancouver? Why is it that people whose natural trading links are with the northern cities of Edmonton and Saskatoon are unnaturally linked with Vancouver? This is a bill which should not be before members of parliament because the citizens of this country are asking for consideration of other issues in the field of communications. This is a bill which imposes on people, not responds to the needs and wishes of the citizens of this country.

Let us take a look at another portion of this senseless bill, a bill which indiscriminately opposes borderline broadcasting whereby U.S. stations beam their signals in Canada. I accept that there could be some real and genuine concern if all our culture were to come from the south across the forty-ninth parallel. But rather than react in the way in which the government has reacted in such an uptight manner about Americans influencing our culture, why do they not recognize that in the age in which we live, in the 1970s and the 1980s, and in the compressed world in which we can communicate instantaneously with any continent, instead of restricting any communication across the border we should open it up, and instead of requesting borderline conferences on communications between our two countries we should request the U.S. to encourage considerably more Canadian programs in that country?

One of the objectives of this bill was to increase opportunities for Canadian cultural development. How can it be done better than by opening up the market to Canadians? However, that is not possible for a restrictive government which wants to control. This government does not care about the expansion of cultural concepts, but would rather control broadcasting. If it really cared to expand our cultural influence, it would open the market wider and it would not have taken such a hard position on KVOS, one of the best examples of good Canadian corporate citizenship. KVOS, over 20 years ago, on its own initiative approached the Canadian government and asked to pay Canadian income tax because it recognized that a significant number of its dollars came from Canada. Some of the money from this company started Canawest, which now employs hundreds of people in the animated film industry in the production of animated advertisements not only used in Canada but used in the television market throughout North America and the world.

This piece of legislation, insensitive as it is, takes the position, on the one hand, that we should try to expand Canadian culture, and on the other scrambles the eggs by beating the chicken. There is no sense or logic in the legislation before us, and I submit the least that members of the government could do would be to send this bill back to the committee for the purpose of hearing more witnesses and to try to crystallize and clarify what is now a totally hazy, foggy and subjective approach to legislation the aim of which seems to be censorship.

To suggest that this legislation can be given third reading is to be naive beyond belief. It has not been prepared in any kind of finite detail. The government cannot tell us honestly in the House the ramifications of this bill with regard to any foreign publication, because it has not established the criteria. It does not know what will happen to a company which is foreign owned if it sells its shares to a Canadian operation, because it has not established its criteria. All we can say is that because the government cannot accept the challenge to send this bill back to the committee, it is chicken and it does not want to hear the Canadian people give testimony and bear witness in a way in which might be embarrassing to the government. The government could well improve its position if it could swallow hard and realize that this bill is as flippant as the minister himself. It should recognize that it would be much better to withdraw it or, failing that, send it back to committee to be tightened up.

● (1730)

Members of the government have become turncoat on Reader's Digest without telling us why but they are still hard-liners on Time, and without telling us how. They are a subjective government making decisions which affect the lives of Canadians, without reason, without criteria, without concern. Their position on this legislation is symbolic of a much greater issue, one which relates to the Bill of Rights and the concepts and freedoms we find therein. This legislation in its present form would put a price tag on certain freedoms which would then fall into the domain of privilege, with the government having the power to extend or restrict them at will. What folly for any government to take that position.

The plea of this party is that the government extend the time for consideration of this bill in committee so that an attempt can be made to iron out the problems that remain and so that we can understand more fully the intention of the legislation.

I consider it a threat that the government would take the position that it should control the flow of knowledge and has the right to shape the minds of Canadian citizens. It is playing foul with the heritage of this country without reason, without concern, and certainly without the consent of the citizens, and I think it is high time that members of the government answered for that.

Three times in committee and in this House, Mr. Speaker, I have issued the challenge for anyone on the government side to explain what unit of measurement will determine the 80 per cent rule, but have never had a response. The plain fact is that there is no such thing as a percentage in a value judgment. If something cannot be measured by weight, volume or length, as greater or smaller numerically, there is no such thing as a percentage. The government knows it is playing with a false notion.

The government is making a deliberate attempt to mislead the Canadian people by saying, "We will allow at least 20 per cent foreign material into the country". The truth of the matter is that percentages do not apply. The government is playing censor and ought to be called for that, and called because it is being dishonest about the intent of the legislation. I think it has been deliberately dishonest, Mr. Speaker—dishonest about the fact that it hoped this legislation could be used as a tool or a ploy; it is a malicious attempt by the government to shape the minds of Canadians to its own advantage.

I issue the challenge to any member of the government who wants to respond in this debate to rise and tell us the unit of measurement of the value judgment that applies. How is it measured? How do you look at a painting and say it is 80 per cent pretty? How do you look at literature and say it is 80 per cent different? It cannot be done. The government's position is false and it really threatens the whole parliamentary system if it thinks this kind of unscrupulous and untidy legislation can pass.

The Liberal government is trying to sneak this bill in through the back door without considering the wishes of Canadian people. Across the nation many Canadians are voicing their concern about the communications system, their concern about violent and abusive material on television and in the media, while the government chooses to censor Reader's Digest, Time and MD of Canada without giving reason. Then the next news was that Reader's Digest was acceptable.

I note that the minister has returned to the House from his vacation in his office. I wonder if at this time we might adjourn my speech and suggest to him—oh, I see he has left again. I suppose he thought I was going to make a suggestion to him and did not stay around for it. I would suggest that the minister rise in this House and tell us how it is possible to apply percentages to a value judgment. I do not believe the minister can honestly tell us that the 80 per cent criteria is even slightly honest. He knows a bureaucracy has been set up to attribute to a piece of literature any percentage it likes—according to how it likes the literature. There is no way to attach a mathematical concept to a value judgment. If the minister cannot define it for us he should face the fact that the government is submitting a censorship bill and attempting to play with the minds of Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, this is the third or fourth time I have spoken at various stages of this particular legislation. This is a bad bill. The objectives and intentions of the minister that led to the legislation were good objectives and good intentions, and I say that without reservation. But it is bad legislation.

Given the good intentions and good objectives I suggest that the legislation was conceived in ignorance, drafted in a world of fantasy and, if passed, will be implemented in chaos. I do not know the way out.

Mr. Malone: The wastepaper basket.

Mr. Jarvis: The motion put forward by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) suggests that the matter be referred back to committee. I support the motion, for a number of reasons. First, I have faith, possibly a naive faith, in that particular committee. I served on it for more than three years, did battle in it with esteemed friends opposite, enjoyed my battles, and enjoyed the results of some of those battles.

● (1740)

In the last parliament the committee considered broadcasts in Gaelic for Cape Breton. I remember the consideration regarding the export of Canadian cultural property. I remember complimenting the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) on third reading. Yes, we have had harsh words in that committee, but we have always served under a fair and just chairman. His successor, the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), was no less an honourable chairman. Therefore I support this motion because these difficulties cannot be resolved in the House and there is some hope, albeit remote, of resolving them in committee.

I regret the atmosphere of the committee hearings. I am not debating who ought to have been on it and who ought not, who said what and why, and who could sit on it and who could not. I also regret the lack of time the committee was given to examine witnesses whose expert evidence was worth hearing. I found an atmosphere of acrimony. I did not see the adversary system working. I believe in the adversary system. No, I found "chippiness," a lack of flexibility and a lack of respect for opposite viewpoints. This I had never seen in that committee. I do not think this legislation will destroy the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, but I do know that what we do with this bill may affect other legislation coming before the committee. This is not easy legislation; the citizenship bill will not be easy legislation either. I know I am straying, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate your indulgence.

It is my opinion that the only hope for this bad bill lies in that committee. I want to see the integrity of the committee restored because, in my judgment, what it did with Bill C-58 eroded its integrity. In saying this I do not point my finger at the minister, whip, or government supporters on the committee.

I am happy to see my good friend, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) in the House. He spoke on a motion dealing with the broadcasting part of the bill, and made a good speech. We gave him a rough time when he spoke. I compliment him for speaking. At least I know how he feels. I do not know what the Secretary of State and Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) feel because the government's position has changed radically since the introduction of this legislation. At least I know where my colleague from Bruce-Grey stands, even though I know he is wrong.

Second, I think the committee could resolve the uncertainty surrounding this legislation ever since January 1975. Difficult legislation like this inevitably leads to uncertainty. I find some aspects of the bill completely acceptable. I favour a healthy magazine industry in Canada. I accept that we must protect that industry from unfair competition. I accept the ownership provisions of the bill, although I do not know if there is any magic in 75 per cent. I enthusiastically support provisions concerning editing and publishing in Canada. Frankly, they do not go far enough. The minister might have gone further to Canadianize the publishing industry. Why are there no provisions concerning circulation, advertising, personnel, accounting, and so on, provisions which could Canadianize to a greater extent the publishing industry? I will not make an issue of this.

Let me tell the minister what I cannot accept. I am against two aspects of the bill. I oppose the government's content approach. I would be willing to consider an anti-dumping approach. I do not know how difficult this would be. I am sure the minister and his officials are much more expert in this field than I am, and perhaps they have considered the anti-dumping approach. Let me make my position clear: I prefer the anti-dumping approach, by way of legislation, to the content route. However, I suppose it is too late in the day for this. As I say, I wish the minister and his officials had taken that route, instead of the "substantially the same" route. Actually nothing I have heard in this House or elsewhere suggests that the government has even considered this approach.

The second aspect I cannot accept is the aspect of back room deals. Mr. Speaker, back room deals are destroying the integrity of the Department of National Revenue, destroying the integrity of a department whose integrity must never be in doubt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: I cannot accept the wheeling and dealing. If the wheeling and dealing were laid on the table, were opened up for all to see, there might be justification for it. We do not know the government's reasons for wanting to get rid of Time but to keep Reader's Digest. I do not accept that process. It is not an honourable process to which this House should be party. Possibly the committee might resolve these two difficulties. I do not know, but I think the minister ought to be fair and try it.

Several other areas of the bill concern me. The minister indicated he might look at the distribution system. I understand that 13 of 14 magazine distribution companies working in this country are U.S.-controlled. I know I may be out of order, Mr. Speaker, but the system of distribution of periodicals concerns me very much.

The minister may be fed up to the ears with hearing about Time, but one point merits repeating. Time was misled. I do not say it was deliberate. When the magazine presented its first mock-up to officials of the Department of National Revenue it understood that Canadian content meant roughly 42 per cent of content. The officials in good faith were thinking in terms of 50 per cent or 60 per cent. Why did Time return shortly afterwards with a revised mock-up? I do not understand why the department did not respond to that mock-up, unless somewhere along the line somebody pulled a switch or pushed a button and said, "Stop; we cannot win what we want with this mock-up." If you are going to be cynical you could say the button was pushed because Maclean-Hunter said they needed 80 per cent. I am not going to be that cynical, but it is a conclusion one could draw.

● (1750)

There is no doubt that something happened at some stage, probably on May 5 or 6, 1975, to cause the officials in the Department of National Revenue to say stay away from the Time mock-up deal because we are not on that any more. Something happened in October and, all of a sudden, it became 80 per cent. Again if one were cynical one could say that Maclean-Hunter really wanted 100 per cent, but they could get away with 80 per cent. I am not saying that because I am not cynical.

The other magazine that really concerns me is MD of Canada. I do not understand why it is being executed. One member opposite, I believe the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy), proposed an amendment to solve that problem. I forget the exact words, but it included all scientific publications. I supported that amendment.

I cannot understand the objects. First there is the anti-dumping object and, second, the encouragement of the Canadian industry. Why are we on a witch-hunt against MD and similar publications? If Reader's Digest can be accommodated through a back room deal, why can MD not get into the same room? There are other publications in the same general category as MD of Canada. I do not know if it is a locked door into that room. If so, it is very unfortunate because that is not the experience I have had with the Department of National Revenue over the years.

I usually hear cries of "obstruction" and "filibuster". I thank members opposite for not saying that today. However, I was prepared to accept it as being reasonably accurate. In January, 1975, there was the removal of what is called the grandfather clause subsequent to which there was no consultation of any significant nature with those against whom the legislation was drafted to operate. There was no reasonable consultation basically with Time and Reader's Digest.

This is tax legislation. Therefore it is penal legislation. A lack of consultation with those being penalized gives little credit to those in government responsible for the legislation. Therefore I do not mind speaking on this at length. I do not mind if many of my colleagues in this party join me in this. If that is obstruction we should not be reluctant to accept the label.

In May, 1975, Time was misled by the then Minister of National Revenue with regard to this mock-up. If that were to happen again it would encourage me to obstruct again or filibuster.If that is the label, I accept it. If someone had been considered Canadian under our laws for a substantial length of time and was misled by an arm of this government, namely the Department of National Revenue, I see no reason why those in opposition and, frankly, those on the government benches should not obstruct or filibuster.

In October, 1975, we were confronted with the so-called Cullen rule, the result of which was to change the content percentage. The second result was to give publishers ten weeks to conform. I do not mind obstructing that kind of legislation or rule. If that is filibustering or obstruction, I will accept the label. When I saw the atmosphere in the standing committee and what was done to make that committee less effective than it had been historically, I saw good reason to stand up and obstruct. I do not consider that obstruction negative. I consider it positive.

The only hope for this legislation is to let it go back to committee. I am almost sympathetic with the fact that the government has a political football and it does not know whether to kick, pass or run. Therefore it is fumbling. It has pretty well consistently fumbled from January, 1975, to February 23, 1976.

I again say that this is bad legislation, conceived in ignorance, drafted in a world of fantasy and, if implemented, will result in chaos. I urge this House to accept the motion of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. In my judgment the only hope for this legislation, if there is any hope at all, lies in the standing committee.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thought it might be appropriate for this discussion to end now by calling it six o'clock, but there does not seem to be the inclination to do that. It is important that I take part in this debate to a limited degree, having regard to the damage done to my voice over the week end.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Where have you been?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asks where I was. I was taking part in an event which will have great national significance as we look ahead to the future of our country and the future government of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am delighted that that significance has not been lost by the members on the other side. May I now call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, before the dinner adjournment I was apologizing to my colleagues on both sides of the House as I must now apologize to you, for the condition of my voice. I want to assure you, Madam Speaker, that this condition arose from my participation recently in an occasion of great public importance—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —and, as I tried to say before the adjournment, an occasion which will probably change the course of Canadian history over the next few years.

The difficulty about the bill before us is that its provisions, coupled with the rules which have been promulgated by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), imply a new departure in the field of legislation. I know of no other instance in which a bill, in relation to its most important principles, leans for support on something which is outside the bill, namely, something which can be changed, interpreted or adjusted according to the outlook of a particular minister or a particular government. This is why the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) moved that the bill be referred back to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts to enable that committee to hear evidence concerning the arrangements made after Bill C-58 had been reported to the House, the arrangements being those which would enable Reader's Digest to qualify as a Canadian periodical.

The extent of this arrangement is an important thing for the Canadian people to know. One legislative sin has already been committeed, and that is the acceptance of the so-called Cullen rule. The second sin is the government's failure to come clean with the House, as it were, about the line it is taking in this respect; as matters stand I really do not know how the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) feels about this. He has been silent. A very important part of the package is not included in the legislation and is subject to change without ever coming before the House.

Speaking just before the dinner adjournment, the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) indicated on behalf of this party that we find the "content" approach taken on the part of the government, albeit toward a worthy object, unacceptable to us. We would like the minister, instead, to consider, adopting an anti-dumping approach. We cannot accept any arrangement which even appears to have a tinge of a back room deal about it. Even the appearance of such an arrangement lends some credence to a charge of this kind when that charge is not denied.

● (2010)

We are concerned as well about whether or not the particular attitude evinced by the Cullen rule accompanying this piece of legislation could be extended by a government to other forms of periodicals and reading material such as newspapers. I think it is important to remember that as this debate began the newspaper editorial writers and commentators indicated that the word censorship used in terms of this legislation was too strong. Then as the case unfolded the attitude of these same newspaper columnists and commentators changed, to the point where now they are almost universally opposed to a system of justice which is akin to that described as justice according to the length of the chancellor's foot.

My respectful submission to this House is that this matter ought to be reconsidered by the government. The government ought to disclose to the House the background to the arrangement, and who made it. The reasons for the arrangement ought to be explored in depth by a committee, and witnesses should be called so they can be questioned by members of the committee. A complete parliamentary re-examination of the bill should take place. Without that kind of examination this bill, the regulations accompanying it, and everything that flows from it will be a blot on the legislative landscape of this country.

For that reason, Madam Speaker, we intend to support the amendment and would be very happy to see the minister recant his position and thus shorten this debate. The principle we have discussed is an important one. It look a long time for it to be recognized by the public press of this country, but it is now so recognized. The government owes this parliament, its own supporters, and members of the public an explanation as to what went on when this change was made.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I would strongly support sending this bill back to committee so that the so-called Cullen rule, which appears to be nothing more than a rule designed in the head of the minister of the day, or of some civil servant to fit the needs of any given situation, can be examined. As a result of this sweetheart deal with Reader's Digest which has gained it Canadian status, everything becomes very murky and the thing smells of political patronage. Obviously Reader's Digest was desired by a large number of Canadians, but more important its offices were situated in the city of Montreal. Time is entitled to ask why its position should not be re-axamined in light of this so-called Cullen rule. In fact the whole magazine industry may well be placed back in the situation it was before.

In effect the government has nullified about 25 per cent of what it hoped to save on advertising—some $10 million in Time and some $7 million in Reader's Digest, the balance being in the broadcasting media. For more than a decade Canadian companies advertising in foreign owned publications aimed primarily at the Canadian market have not been permitted to deduct advertising costs. This shows a great deal of decision by the revenue department. Just the other day I noticed an advertisement by CP Air in Newsweek designed for the Canadian market, since it showed only airline routes in Canada. The new rule applies to editorial content that is not substantially the same as the content of a foreign publication with which there is a continuing relationship. It is this "continuing relationship" that I think needs examination.

I think the government hopes to save about $40 million, though this has been cut to $30 million. There is no reason for assuming that the government ever will save $40 million, but let us examine what has happened under this sweetheart deal and the application of the Cullen rule. Although the terms of the bill are the same as originally, the government is putting a different interpretation upon it.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Last October the revenue minister decreed that "not substantially the same as" meant "80 per cent different". Since neither magazine felt it could meet this difference, they had to cease publication. The government has now come up with a different interpretation. The phrase "not substantially the same as" remains unchanged; it is still 80 per cent different. The new interpretation relates to what constitutes a "continuing relationship". The aim of the bill is now entirely different.

The revenue minister has suggested that Reader's Digest can still operate in Canada if its editorials fall into any of three categories. The first is that of original articles written for Reader's Digest of Canada. That is fairly easy to achieve; all that has to be done is to publish an article in Canada first and then send it to the United States for publication. It is really a negation of the whole concept of what is an original article for Reader's Digest of Canada.

The second category concerns articles that have appeared in other publications with which Reader's Digest of Canada has no continuing relationship. Obviously this could relate to any of the sub-companies owned by Reader's Digest.

The third category is articles purchased through Reader's Digest of the United States which have been chosen, edited, and condensed by Reader's Digest of Canada. Again these articles must be chosen from publications with which Reader's Digest of Canada has no continuing relationship. It is this third category that is the crucial one.

In effect, Madam Speaker, the government is saying that Reader's Digest of Canada has no continuing relationship with Reader's Digest of the United States if Reader's Digest of Canada merely buys articles through Reader's Digest of the United States; in other words, if it buys articles that appeared elsewhere, using Reader's Digest of the United States as an intermediary. The whole situation is so complicated that it can be interpreted in any way the revenue department wants.

As a result of this interpretation of what is a continuing relationship, Reader's Digest of Canada is completely whitewashed. It is now in the category of being 80 per cent different. Time of Canada cannot buy articles through Time of the United States because the Time organization originates its own material. Therefore Time Canada can buy only from Time of the United States and thus is considered to have a continuing relationship. Obviously it was a sharp eyed person in the department who spotted that and used it to fabricate a rule to keep out Time but allow Reader's Digest of Canada to continue. This House should have a look at this problem to find out why one is allowed in and the other is not. It is obvious that Time will not be allowed because it represents competition to the hopefully to be published Maclean-Hunter weekly.

Let me say a few words about two or three medical journals that will be affected by this legislation, and I have specifically in mind MD Canada, Modern Medicine and The Medical Aspects of Human Sexuality. These are small but very well published magazines. MD Canada is a standout because it portrays the history of medicine. The articles are well written, much like those that appear in the heritage works of the Horizon magazine from New York, which is probably the most outstanding in the world. It seems foolish to get rid of these magazines.

The opportunity to publish the results of Canadian research is very thin at the best of times. Much of the work the National Research Council does in respect of medical matters is lost because there is no way of publishing it. When a researcher is finished he sends his material to the archives here in Ottawa where it sits on a shelf gathering dust. No one ever sees that work again. Very soon the Research Council forgets about it and appropriates another $50,000 or so to research the very thing that was done in the first place.

The Canadian Medical Journal is the only medical magazine published in Canada and distributed widely, and I suggest it would not be published were it not for the large fees that physicians have to pay in order to subscribe to it. I suggest it is read by very few doctors. It is of little value because of the fact the medical field has been split into so many specialties, and the Canadian market is so small no medical magazine in Canada has the resources to do the research work necessary to inform the medical field. By and large U.S. medical magazines are much wider read in Canada than the Canadian publication.

The $50 million or so spent by the National Research Council is largely lost because the results of research are not able to be published. The removal of these few magazines will further diminish the amount of medical knowledge that flows freely to Canada from throughout the world. This will make Canadian doctors even more cut off from the rest of the world.

In fact we have seen what has happened in the drug industry as a result of the passage of drug legislation a few years ago when potents were taken away from drug companies. Many drugs developed in the United States, in the United Kingdom, and in Europe are being marketed around the world, but in many cases there is little knowledge of these drugs in Canada. I suggest this is another result of drug legislation. With such programs as Parcost and provincial efforts to curtail drug prescriptions we have seen a reduction in the quality and certainly quantity of drugs being made available to the Canadian public. Advertising is extremely important to the drug trade. Many people think drugs are widely known throughout the world by all physicians, but that is not the fact. Most physicians learn about drugs through reading about them in medical journals and from details supplied by drug travellers.

One of the most widely read medical journals in this country is MD of Canada. Many drug companies advertise their products in this magazine, and the revenue from this advertising in large part allows the magazine to be printed. Most of these drug companies are based in Montreal. Without this advertising almost certainly the knowledge about new drugs would diminish substantially, and only the Canadian public is the loser.

Canadians have benefited more than most from medical discoveries throughout the world, and that is because most of the great discoveries are not made in Canada but in western Europe and in the United States. There is an enormous outpouring of medical knowledge from the United States which is freely available to the rest of the world. In fact our food and drug department does very little but phone Washington and ask what is being done in respect of certain drugs that are being tested, and new drugs becoming available.

MD of Canada has a special place for people involved in medicine, and a special place as well for a small number of people who are not involved in the medical world. It is a very enriching magazine to its readers. It includes a written medical history that is extremely interesting, covering times from Julius Caesar, Napoleon and so on. This magazine is subscribed to almost exclusively by physicians so it is not in competition with any other journal or magazine. In fact there are no other magazines in which many of these companies can effectively advertise. The removal of these magazines from the Canadian market will in effect mean the end of this advertising.

Just a short time ago the Department of National Health and Welfare discontinued the practice, set up when the drug act was passed, of sending out selected drug information. Obviously the department felt that the bulk of this information ended up in the wastepaper baskets in doctors' offices.

Articles in MD of Canada are world-wide in scope, and many contain elements of history art, and music and their relationship to medicine. I have always appreciated the work of the originator of the magazine, Dr. Felix Marti Ibanez. Unfortunately he passed away at a very young age. He was the chief health officer of the Republic of Spain before the Franco civil war. That is probably equivalent to the position of deputy minister of health.

Modern Medicine, which is the corollary to MD of Canada, is also to be a casualty. Its value was in the fact that it contained condensations of many interesting articles from around the world. Thousands of medical articles are written but only a few can be read by any one individual. Modern Medicine has been a useful magazine in that it condenses many of these articles for the busy physician who does not have time to read extensively.

These magazines translate many of these world-wide articles into English so that doctors can take advantage of the information available. These articles are translated from Russian, Hindustani, French, Italian, Spanish and many other languages so that this information then becomes available to us. There is absolutely no possible substitution for these translations in this country, so again the information available to Canadian scientists will be restricted. I do not know what the point was in picking out these particular magazines.

Turning to the larger issue I should like to mention the CBC. I think the problem of the CBC is that it cannot stand some little competition. The CBC always attempts to inform the people what Canadians should do, think, and believe. But everywhere I go I notice that most radio and television sets seem to be tuned into American stations. What does this indicate? By and large it indicates that the CBC is not interesting. It is obvious when one listens to the CBC that it is trying to tell us something, that it is trying to lecture to us, or tell us we should do such and such a thing and should not buy this or should not do that. The CBC attempts to direct the public's morals. The CBC suffers because of this. When the CBC was established it was supposed to spread radio and eventually television around the whole of the country. In my riding a considerable area has been without television for a long time. Instead of embarking on many of the things in which it is involved, the CBC would be doing much more for the country if it provided a minimum of television service to all parts of the country.

I feel this bill should be returned to the committee where we might hear what the sweetheart arrangement is between the government and Reader's Digest. I would hope we would hear what is the real meaning of a continuing relationship between Reader's Digest U.S.A. and Reader's Digest Canada, and why the same cannot be applied to Time Canada and Time U.S.A.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, at the third reading stage of the debate on Bill C-58, the bill which would end some of the income tax privileges for advertisers in non-Canadian magazines and also on non-Canadian television stations, I wish to make a few comments on behalf of the New Democratic Party.

We supported the legislation when it first came before the House. We saw it as long overdue. We have had some reservations concerning the interpretation by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) as it pertains to Reader's Digest, but on the whole we support the legislation and wish to see its passage at this time.

I really think my friends in the Conservative party are flogging a dead horse, a horse probably of their own creation, when they level charges of censorship and other kinds of wrongdoing at the government.

We debated this bill for months. It was first introduced over a year ago. The debate on second reading was prolonged mainly as a result of Conservative opposition. Very extensive hearings were held by the committee. The amendment before us to send the bill back to the committee seems to me to be a backward step which will not achieve anything.

In the committee we heard testimony from the officials of the Department of National Revenue concerning their interpretation of the 80 per cent different rule. I do not see how sending the bill back to the committee at this stage would further clarify that or in any way improve the bill.

It should be remembered that the main purpose of the bill is to promote a healthy Canadian periodical industry. Under the provisions of this bill the government will give tax advantages only to advertisers in bona fide Canadian magazines. The magazines must be 75 per cent Canadian-owned and they must not be substantially the same as a foreign parent magazine, which is defined as 80 per cent different. They also must not have an ongoing licensing arrangement with the parent company. Any magazine that fulfills those requirements by definition becomes a Canadian magazine and under the Income Tax Act their advertisers may deduct the cost of that advertising for income tax purposes.

In reality the bill before us provides an incentive to Canadian industry, in this case the magazine and television industry. I see nothing wrong with that principle. We have applied it to Canadian industry and manufacturing, and belatedly are applying it to the periodical industry in recognition of its importance to the cultural, news, and information heritage of this country.

This bill is long overdue. Back in the early 1960's a royal commission recommended that unless we took this kind of action to sustain the Canadian publishing industry, this industry would slowly strangle from lack of advertising revenue as foreign magazines, mainly Time and Reader's Digest, set up branch plant operations in Canada and gained much of the advertising dollar. The government of that day, which happened to be a Conservative government, allowed an exemption for Time and Reader's Digest and a few other minor scholarly magazines, and said that for the purpose of income deduction for advertisers they would be classified as Canadian magazines. The consequence of that mistake, perpetuated by Liberal governments, is that today we find these two magazines, Time and Reader's Digest, have gained the lion's share of the advertising revenue, to the detriment of Canadian magazines.

I am not talking about Maclean's which is a healthy magazine but rather about many of the other small magazines which have been struggling to find a few advertising dollars which would make the difference between their continuing and expanding, or going under.

We have seen how the government has reacted to the tremendous lobby of Reader's Digest. It is estimated that in excess of $200,000 was spent on this lobby campaign with the general public and members of parliament. Indeed we have not for a long time seen such intensive lobbying on the Hill.

Tremendous pressure was placed on the Minister of National Revenue. They argued their case forcibly. They argued that theirs is a special case, that their magazine is a digest and therefore should be given some special consideration. We see this once again in terms of the minister allowing Reader's Digest to have access to a pool of original articles that the parent company collects. However, there is a condition, which we in this party accept, that if there is to be any editing or digesting it must be done by Canadian editors and that the going rate must be paid for any of the articles that are bought from the pool of the parent company. Of course they must also conform to Canadian ownership requirements.

I think that helps to allay many fears we had that somehow we were back in square one. The only criticism I have of that arrangement is that by virtue of the fact that the pool of articles that Reader's Digest Canada will choose from is a pool of articles decided by U.S. editors, in some roundabout way we could construct the argument that there is still a degree of editorial control in the United States. But the problem of course is that Reader's Digest in the United States has exclusive licensing arrangements with most major magazines, and therefore Reader's Digest Canada had to come to this kind of special arrangement with the Minister of National Revenue.

The only other thing that we see as a bit troublesome is the amount of discretion that the Minister of National Revenue has in determining how the act will apply to various magazines. We had hoped that this would be spelled out in more detail. However, this would mean major amendments to the Income Tax Act because that discretionary power of course rests with the minister as it applies to other industries and individuals, and I do not see the government coming forward at this time with such amendments. So we had to accept the bill as it is, although it is imperfect to some degree in the areas that I mentioned.

We also support the bill because it seeks to end an outflow of advertising revenue to television stations, to the amount of some $20 million a year of Canadian advertising revenue which goes mainly to Buffalo stations and KVOS in Washington state, and hopefully then the advertisers would redirect these funds to Canadian television so that our stations can expand and produce more Canadian programming. In no way does the bill prohibit them from advertising on those stations just as in no way does it carry any degree of censorship provisions with respect to advertisers in magazines.

We support the bill. We have not put up many speakers because we saw the delaying tactics of our Conservative colleagues. They have aired the issue thoroughly, the Canadian people have had the chance to judge, and I believe that at this time the Canadian people want to see the bill passed. We are of that opinion in this party, and for that reason I urge my friends in the Conservative party, having put up the fight that they have, that they now accept the bill of the House so that we can get on with passing this piece of legislation and turn our attention to equally important legislation which lies ahead of us.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Madam Speaker, I am not anxious to take up too much of the time of the House but I do want to take a few minutes to express some views which I had mentioned back in November of last year regarding this bill, and in particular to support the amendment of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) that the bill be referred back to the committee for further study.

When I spoke on this issue in November of 1975 I was very concerned about the Canadian content portion of the bill. I never interpreted it as censorship. On the other hand, as I think I explained very clearly at the time, I interpreted it as editorial interference. At that time I made a case for certain scientific publications. There are a number involved in the medical area such as MD of Canada, Modern Medicine and Medical Aspects of Human Sexuality. I was somewhat concerned to find that there seems to have been some back room negotiations made with respect to Reader's Digest, while other periodicals were not given the same consideration.

I would like to think that there would be some recourse so that these periodicals or journals could be reassessed by the committee to see whether or not a formula could be devised to ensure their continued publication on the Canadian scene.

I should like to refer again to one of these periodicals of which I have a great deal of knowledge and which I have enjoyed over the years, that is, MD of Canada. I want to speak of it in particular because it is somewhat unique. As you know, the editor is Dr. Gibson who was invited to become the editor of that journal in April of 1973, following a great deal of searching on a world-wide context and following the death of the renowned Felix Marti Ibanez who was the founder and original editor of MD of Canada. As you know, Dr. Gibson is an internationally known physician and medical historian and he was a colleague of Dr. Ibanez.

When we look at MD of Canada it is important to realize that its own staff does the research and the writing and that the research and writing are done for physicians in the international context. We must remember that these are in-depth studies which add a great deal to the medical profession. I also want to point out that the news section is written by professional journalists. The head office is in Montreal. The medical news articles cover the major Canadian news of the day and meetings of various Canadian physicians.

I think that perhaps the most important thing about MD of Canada is that it is unique and that it has a humanistic concept which is not present in other medical journals with which I am familiar. It combines a cultural and historical interest greatly to the liking of physicians and professionals. If you look at MD of Canada and other medical journals you will find a striking difference. To quote Dr. Ibanez himself, he said it is the integration of medicine, society, and humanity translated editorially into a magazine of medical culture and cultural medicine.

I indicated some time ago that I have a very personal interest in this journal, and to try to demonstrate to the House the type of content found in the journal I had occasion earlier today to go back to some earlier publications of MD of Canada because, as I indicated previously, I had found some of these articles so interesting that I had kept them over the years.

As hon. members may know, I have a particular interest in the north and I would like to refer them to an excellent series of articles which appeared in the March, 1973, issue of MD of Canada. The cover story and feature article in that issue relates to the Arctic and is entitled "Arctic".

● (2050)

The lead article was written by Peter Freuchen. It is a fascinating, literary piece of writing and I should like to quote a little to give you some indication of the literary style of the journal:

> You feel an undeniable sense of harmony as you stand listening to the beat of nature's heart, as your eyes penetrate endless horizons and your mind experiences a touch of eternity.

This article describes the Arctic very well. It goes into detail of the geophysics of the Arctic, the climatology of the Arctic, the flora of the Arctic, the population of the Arctic, and some of the recent developments in technology. I suggest that this kind of article is important in view of our interest in the recent developments in the northern part of Canada.

In this same issue of March, 1973, there is a superb article entitled "Icebound Nomads" about the Inuits and Eskimos, of whom there are 35,000 to 40,000 in the universe, about 10,000 of whom are in Canada.

There is another article which deals with the humanistic aspects of medicine and science combined. This article entitled "Polar Pioneer" is about the Norwegian Roald Amundsen and gives an excellent background of the Inuit people not only in the Canadian context but in that of other countries.

A further article "Cold Comfort" describes the anthropological background of the Inuit people in northern Canada and northern Quebec. There are two more articles about the Arctic, which gives you some idea of the proportion of this magazine which was devoted to the Arctic. One article "Viking Beauty" related to art.

I want to stress that MD of Canada is a unique journal. Its editorial content is quite different from routine medical journals as we traditionally think of them. I have tried to impart to the House that the editorial attitude of MD of Canada is as universal as medicine itself. I indicated earlier that this concept was perceived by Dr. Marti Ibanez who was recognized internationally as a physician and humanitarian. This concept recognizes that physicians are members of an international medical community. Any other view of physicians would be too narrow, and the feature articles I have referred to reflect this concept. They attempt to combine the humanistic approach to man, his environment and, life style with the traditional reports on diseases. I emphasize that the literary component of the magazine is most important.

It should be recognized that the object of this journal is to stimulate medical culture, and this aspect of the magazine is unique. This is one of the reasons why I think it extremely important that the amendment before us be carried so that this specific publication can be reassessed by the committee.

Over the years I have found it interesting that lay persons are surprised that a magazine designed for the medical fraternity devotes such a share of editorial content to the arts or the humanities. These are the cornerstone of this particular journal, however. It is extremely important that the magazine be reassessed by the committee to see whether the same exception can be applied to it as has been applied to Reader's Digest.

The journal MD of Canada and the other MD magazines which I will refer to in a moment are really not designed for consumption just in Canada but for physicians everywhere. They are basically universal in nature and of interest to all physicians, whether they practice in the United States, Canada, Southeast Asia, Europe or wherever. Of course some of the articles touch on local aspects. In the ones I referred to, although they are international in context, a good deal of the information is based on experience in northern Canada, the Northwest Territories, northern Quebec and the Yukon territory—wherever the Inuit are found.

It is important to understand the MD concept. MD of Canada is no more a facsimile of MD, the medical news magazine of the United States than it is a facsimile of MD Espanola or any of the other international MD magazines. The complete editorial content of MD of Canada relates to the Canadian scene, and most of the news it covers is unavailable to Canadian physicians from any other single source. Reports or highlights of various medical and scientific meetings in Canada which are often not reported in other media are covered in MD of Canada. The "clinics" section deals with new findings in the international context. MD of Canada is the only source of this news which is so helpful to physicians in keeping abreast of problems in today's fast moving world of medicine. The publication is sent to all physicians in Canada at no cost. The news section is different from what is contained in the United States edition or MD Espanola or the one that appears in southeast Asia.

● (2100)

From the beginning the magazine was published in Canada. It is important to remember this. It has been printed in Canada. The Canadian edition is not an edition printed outside and then brought into Canada. It is printed on Canadian paper, from typeset and plates manufactured in Canada, and mailed in Canada through the facilities of the Canadian Post Office, utilizing mailing lists provided by Canadian mailing houses. All advertising is solicited in Canada by the sales staff located in Montreal and in Oakville, Ontario.

I emphasize the importance of the free flow of medical information, regardless of its source. This free flow is essential to public health in this country and internationally. It should be considered as a magazine separate and distinct from any magazine published for the laity. MD of Canada has received favourable comments from thousands of physicians across this country, which illustrates the important contribution this important journal is making to the practice of medicine. It is doing this by supplying information of medical value, of value, I might say, to physicians around the world. I emphasize that the exchange of scientific information internationally is most important and I find unacceptable any curtailment of the international exchange of scientific information, or flow of scientific information to those interested in scientific ventures.

To sum up, MD of Canada is a controlled circulation magazine without subscriptions or revenue. Paid circulation magazines might choose to send non-Canadian editions to Canada, for sale to readers. That choice is not open to MD of Canada. Its only revenue source is advertising. If this important medical publication, which has been sent to this country's physicians for more than 15 years, were to cease publication in Canada as a result of Bill C-58, our medical profession would be the losers. The magazine could not be replaced, in the Canadian context.

I repeat that MD of Canada is not a Canadian edition of a foreign magazine. It is not a split run edition magazine; neither is it sold here as part of the overflow circulation of a parent magazine. It is a fully integrated Canadian medical publication which publishes material of value to the medical profession. It warrants repeating and emphasizing that the magazine's concept, its viewpoint, is important. It is unique in the field of medical journalism. It combines humanism, art, culture, and medicine.

MD of Canada purchases its typesetting, printing, labelling and mailing services in Canada. By definition, MD of Canada is a magazine of medical culture, and of cultural medicine, as I have emphasized. It carries a completely Canadian medical news section.

Again let me emphasize the importance of this special publication. It is unique—I say this with all due respect to other medical publications which may be affected by the bill, publications such as Modern Medicine, or those to do with the medical aspects of human sexuality. This unique magazine combines material which is of scientific interest to practitioners of medicine, with art, culture, and the humanities. I ask the House to consider seriously the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock and refer this bill once more to committee to see if there is some way for this magazine to continue publishing in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, a few moments ago I heard the hon. member from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) say that the consideration of this bill totally lacked any logic as regards the length of the debate. He also suggested that the bill had been introduced a year ago and that debates had continued ever since in this House.

It is certain that the public, through magazines or newspapers, heard the pros and cons but I cannot agree that this bill has been before the House for too long. I have no regret or any excuse to extend to anyone about the length of the debate in this House. Particularly if the House has a bad bill before it it is not an excuse to say, we debated it long enough, now it is time to pass it. If this bill is in the wrong direction and based on unsound principles we are going to oppose it. It has been demonstrated that the opposition got results with the length of debates. Changes were brought in by the government which watered its wine, and there was an arrangement made for Reader's Digest. We were going to lose Reader's Digest and undoubtedly related operations because it is rather a congromerate of businesses for the Montreal area. Several members opposite undoubtedly exerted strong pressures on the government so it would make an arrangement with Reader's Digest. I wonder what certain ministers involved said. We must have an explanation about that. Why not do the same thing for Time magazine? It should be known that Reader's Digest insisted not once but a thousand times through representations made in the form of circular letters sent to members of Parliament as well as through the claims that were made in committee. First of all they were opposed to the rule of 75 per cent Canadian ownership.

Well, afterwards they very quickly realized the content. I would like to see Liberal members and NDP members justify their positions. Naturally, they show intolerance for any opinion other than theirs. That is why they are prepared to accept the principle of this bill.

[English]

You know, Madam Speaker, this is narrow nationalism; it is cheap nationalism. Actually some of the arguments used to justify this bill are not worthy of a banana republic. But some forget that this sort of thing is a two-way street.

A lot of Canadians operate abroad. There are jobs for Canadians abroad. By God, do we not feel proud about the operations of Canadian firms and Canadian personnel in other countries? Yes. But if these countries were to move in on Canadian firms in the same way as the Government of Canada proposes to move in on these two publications, there would be screams of protest which would burst anyone's eardrums. We do not consider that there must be two standards, one way that you behave in Canada toward outsiders with, as I say, banana republic chauvinism, and then the standard that other countries must exhibit toward we lily-white Canadians.

● (2110)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Us, not we.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will accept the hon. member's correction in grammar.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hansard would correct it anyway.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am surprised that we insist upon this course of conduct in one area. We show many other countries an example of what I call petty nationalism. We then complain because we get treated the same by them. There are a lot of countries that look to Canada as an example of how they should act. What an example we show them when we put on a performance like this.

My colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), has put in concrete form the suggestion that was made during the report stage that this bill be referred back to the committee because, while report stage was being considered, the miracle of Reader's Digest was announced to the Canadian public. The uncritical public was relieved at being spared from buying a totally American Reader's Digest which would, of course, come into Canada, possibly in almost the same numbers but with the profits going entirely to the United States.

None of the operation would be carried out in Canada. Not even the Post Office would get anything out of it, not a blessed cent. With mail subscriptions emanating in the United States, the entire revenue would go to the U.S. postal department. Newsstand copies would be carried by express or freight, whether by rail or road. The Canadian government would not get anything out of it. There would not be any, or very little customs duty. The net revenue to the Canadian government would decline under the operations of this bill in its original form.

Somehow a face-saving has been found for Reader's Digest. I am going to ask, what was the deal? Was it the pressure of government backbenchers that caused the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and the cabinet to modify the strictures and restrictions of the Cullen rule and certainly that new minister's interpretation of his powers and what he would do to whip everybody into line?

Let us have Reader's Digest tell the members of the committee what promise they got from the government. I am not unhappy. I am not criticizing Reader's Digest. I think they acted properly to save employment and revenues for Canada with regard to income tax, postal service and so on.

A tremendous amount of the cost of publishing Reader's Digest, both French and English versions, will remain in Canada for the benefit of Canadians. It was going to be thrown out, totally. What saved it? Surely the members of this House are entitled to an explanation.

When they appeared before the committee the representatives of Reader's Digest said they could not live with the restrictions in this bill. The government was obdurate. The net result was that Reader's Digest was going to go. Now there is a deal. It is owed to this House by the government and Reader's Digest to furnish the explanation.

An hon. Member: Let's vote on the bill.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I hear a muttering about voting on the bill. That is not going to bring out the explanation. Do government caucus members know what the deal was, or were they merely told to accept it on the good faith of the ministry? Were they simply told that it was a good deal?

What is the attitude of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt)? What about the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy), the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), and the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Flynn)? What do they say about this bill?

An hon. Member: Fantastic.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is it fantastic? The hon. member for Scarborough West says that it is fantastic.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to correct the hon. member. I made no exclamation after his reference to me a little earlier.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Very well. One of his colleagues must have some form of ventriloquism. The word was fantastic. It must have been his neighbour.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are fantastic.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I always knew that. I am glad to see the member opposite confirm this opinion. My colleague, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), indicated that when it comes to that, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is a slow learner.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): At least we can take a joke.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As I was saying, I want to find out the arrangement with Reader's Digest. That being out, what about Time Canada? I have no particular brief with regard to the content of Time Canada. Some people pretend that that magazine should contain more Canadian news. When I look at the average issue of Time, even the United States edition, and considering that the United States has ten times the population and a great deal more activity around the world, proportionately I think that Canada gets more space than does the United States on the world scene. To that extent the suggestion that Canada should rate more coverage in a world-wide magazine is unrealistic.

● (2120)

I am looking now at the new format of Macleans. There is a lot more Canadian news. It is not world news. It is Canadian, shall we say local, events. I am not complaining about that. It always struck me that Macleans magazine existed mainly for the benefit of the Toronto school of writers, the "in" group. The editorship seemed to move around like musical chairs. They all praise one another. It was a self-serving operation. They may not like what I have to say, but I should like something to break that up. They don't supply a substitute at all. I don't suppose they really need to supply a substitute on a world-wide basis.

If Canadians are restricted to reading Time magazine as it will be brought in from the United States, the postal revenue will, of course, be lost. Printing revenues will be lost. All the effort and materials which go into Time Canada will be totally lost to us. Mr. Speaker, there is such a thing as cutting off one's nose to spite one's face and in this action on the part of the government we are witnessing the same sort of thing. If it wants to encourage Canadian publications let it do so by all means, but not by the regressive and repressive methods proposed in Bill C-58.

I heartily endorse the amendment put forward by my hon. friend from Surrey-White Rock. I also submit that if the government and the New Democratic Party are unwise enough to reject it and draw a veil of secrecy over the whole situation, the House would be well advised to reject the bill entirely. This is bad legislation operating entirely on a false premise. If you apply to other nations the same principles as are applied here you would deny the operations of many Canadians abroad. There is no logic in this approach, and I consider that the minister's recommendation in favour of this legislation should be entirely rejected.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to say a few words about this bill I must admit I have not been studying it as carefully as I might have done during the last few days. This is because I have had some other things on my mind and I hope they are reported in the Canadian edition of Time magazine when it comes out in the coming week. I look forward to seeing its comments on the leadership convention which has just concluded.

I support the amendment to send this bill back to committee. I am concerned about the deal made with Reader's Digest. I rose to speak on this matter originally because of the many letters and representations I received from constituents who feared that the Digest would no longer be delivered in their mail boxes. To their relief they find that some deal has been made which will allow Reader's Digest to continue as a Canadian publication.

I sympathize to some extent with the feelings of those who desire to encourage a sense of Canadian nationalism. The problem about this bill is the 80 per cent content rule, and this was the subject of a great deal of discussion which went on in the committee. I do not believe governments should become involved in deciding what the content should be of any magazine in this country.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) discussing MD of Canada. He told us that this was a staff-researched and staff-written publication and that all these articles were researched and written for physicians in Canada. He pointed out that the editorial content reflected a unique humanism which combined the cultural and historical interests of the physician with his professional interests. This was the striking difference between MD of Canada and other medical publications. I recall recently reading one of the articles in MD of Canada. It concerned the life of one of the wives of King Henry VIII, Anne Boleyn, and the reasons for her various medical problems. This article was of great interest to me, as I am sure it was to a great many people.

We all know there is a great deal of unemployment in the country at the present time. If we force these publications out of Canada, jobs will be lost. The rate of unemployment, now running at about 7 per cent, is of such concern to me that I believe the effect of the bill upon the employment situation will in itself be a basic consideration. I do not believe we encourage Canadian magazines by restricting the content they are allowed to print.

In the last few weeks I have been talking to many of my constituents about this bill. I find they have been reading about it in the press. Some have been reading Hansard. And people are still confused. Some believe we are subsidizing Reader's Digest by giving that publication special tax considerations. Others say we are not. Some people are asking whether we did offer both Time and the Digest special concessions at some time or another. Having regard to this situation I suggest we spend a little longer on this legislation, send it back to the committee and discuss the arrangements which exist as between the government and these publications.

I am also concerned, as an agronomist, lest various magazines of interest to my profession may be restricted by the legislation before us. I listened with interest to what the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) had to say about publications in the field of agriculture. He suggested that livestock advertisements might be covered by the bill and that the results might adversely affect Canadian farmers trying to sell livestock in the United States and elsewhere.

● (2130)

For all these reasons I felt I should enter the debate to-night to lend my support to the amendment of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock which seeks to send the bill back to committee for further study so the committee can deal with a number of considerations raised by many hon. members during the debate in this House.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a great misfortune that apparently the minister and some of his backers do not see fit to think about some matters that are of fundamental importance to the Canadian people. I refer to freedom—economic freedom, freedom of the press, and freedom of worship. These are the three basic freedoms on which this country has been built. They have meant much to Canadians of all races and creeds, but apparently they mean little to the minister and those who support him.

I have a great deal of respect for members on the government side of the House who disagree strenuously with the minister about the legislation he has presented to the House. I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy), who suggested that it would be well to take a portion of the CBC's budget to assist publishers in this country. The waste of the CBC would probably never be noticed since its budget is so large. When the hon. member for Timmins asked why we should not give 10 per cent of the CBC's budget to the publishers who would then have more money than they can ever hope to gain from all of the Time and Reader's Digest advertising, he raised a point of fundamental importance. If we were to do that, or something like it, there would not be the fear of this legislation that exists on this side of the House.

The fear that we have is related to interpretation. We have gone over this and I hope that the minister will eventually take heed of the matters with which we are greatly concerned. Section 19.1 specifically states that "in computing income no deduction shall be made in respect of an otherwise deductible outlay or expense of a taxpayer made or incurred for an advertisement directed primarily to a market in Canada". This is where this question of interpretation comes into focus and it is why the amendment of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) should be passed and the bill sent back to committee. The minister should tell the committee exactly what he means when he uses the phrase "advertisement directed primarily".

I have been in contact with some of the officials in the Department of National Revenue and they do not know the answer to that question. I should like to know whether or not the minister knows, and I feel the committee has the right to ask that fundamental question.

It has been suggested that ample time has been given when the legislation went to committee. I am sure you are very much aware, Mr. Speaker, having been chairman of parliamentary committees, that when five minutes is offered a member of a committee to question the minister, and he perhaps has only that one opportunity during the meeting, he can only touch on the outer parameters of his questions before his time expires. Some other member of the committee continues his questioning on other aspects, and as a result not sufficient time is given for the questioning that should take place in connection with a very fundamental principle of Canadian democracy, freedom of the press.

We have seen what happens when freedom of the press is lost. With today's communications it might be said that the world is becoming smaller. We can no longer live unto ourselves alone. Many governments are run on socialistic lines; we even have socialists in this House. However, governments that do not mind interfering with freedoms have no reservations about taking them away from individuals and allowing government, or governmental officials, to make decisions. Communism began in Russia, moved into China, into southern Asia, then into South America and now into Africa. Our North American continent remains relatively free of governmental control.

I think you would agree with me, Mr. Speaker, being the honourable man that you are, that we should protect this principle of freedom to our last drop of blood. Let no one interfere with our freedoms even though they are being eroded away one by one, principle by principle, in other countries. It may not be long before we too have none left.

As I said earlier, we have our basic freedoms—economic freedom, freedom of speech, and freedom of worship. Whether the legislative controls under which we now have to live are good or bad is beside the point. They are nevertheless controls, and once controls are put in place it is very difficult to get rid of them. We have found that out from experience. We all remember that income tax was supposed to be a temporary control. It was introduced many years ago, yet it is still with us and has quite an impact on society today. As I say, if these regulations are put into place they will be very difficult to remove.

Governments in Canada of one form or another are spending 40 cents of every dollar of our gross national product. In other words, 40 per cent of our economic freedom has disappeared. We do not know how long this will continue. I point out that in some socialist countries today the percentage is 70 or 80 per cent. Certainly I hope this country can put on the brakes quickly and firmly enough so we do not find ourselves in the same position.

So it is with our other freedom, freedom of the press. Why should we allow a minister or a member of his department to interpret what constitutes Canadian content? I do not think anyone in this House of Commons, however intelligent he may be, could adequately define what Canadian content is in all situations and on all occasions. I think that is an absolute impossibility. Why then should we give this authority to a minister? I see no reason in the world why we should do that, and certainly not because the tax dollars we are speaking about are a very small or minute portion of the total tax dollars, or small in relation to our gross national product. The minister certainly is not playing fair with government members, members on this side of the House, or the Canadian public, and I have to take exception to that situation.

● (2140)

I pay honour to those members on the government side who feel about this bill as we do on this side. Let me spend a little bit of time in support of what the hon. member for Timmins has said. That hon. member suggested that this bill does not present any extensive degree of censorship. The hon. member referred to "extensive degree", but he then went on to say that there is a degree of censorship. Why should we allow any individual to propose censorship or control in respect of what Canadian people wish to read?

The hon. member then went on to say that the argument regarding the lack of legal authority of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) or the abuse of it has been overdone. I cannot agree with him in that, because I think the minister has not been flexible enough in this legislation. The only flexibility shown by the Minister of National Revenue was in respect of the provision for Reader's Digest. He made a change which allowed Reader's Digest a place in the Canadian plan of things.

The point I am trying to impress upon the House is that we have the right to know why and on what basis the minister decided it was in the best interests of the government to make this decision in respect of Reader's Digest. Unfortunately under the rules of the House, of which you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, we are not allowed to question policies or the reasons for legislation now before the House. We all recognize this rule and try to abide by it. However, this does create problems in certain situations such as the one we are dealing with at the present time, because we cannot ask the minister why and on what basis he changed his policy. This could be done in the committee, and that is why it is of fundamental importance that the bill be sent back to the committee where we can question the minister, and perhaps call further witnesses. Perhaps representatives of Reader's Digest would also have something to say in respect of this change in the legislation.

The hon. member for Timmins went on to say, and this is very important, that the answer and the reasonable position lay somewhere in the middle between what the minister is suggesting and what we on this side are proposing. I think it is reasonable to expect the minister to show some flexibility. Up to the present time he has not done so.

[Mr. Towers.]

The hon. member for Timmins went on to suggest that the minister and the government have never accepted the consideration of any middle ground position, and considering the type of mild amendments which have been refused by the government, even amendments that would have been useful without detracting to any degree from the bill, then he felt that the minister was operating from a point of total inflexibility and maybe even from bad will. Why should we in this House of Commons have to deal with inflexibility of this nature? It would seem to me that at some time the minister should stand and state unequivocally what was involved in this change he he made for Reader's Digest.

The hon. member for Timmins then went on to say it might well be that the Minister of National Revenue and his officials will look the other way when a Canadian publication is involved and that, indeed, if the government could wring out of its interpretation an accommodation for Reader's Digest it could certainly wring one out for a Canadian publisher. However, the fact remains that our Canadian publishers will have to face this legislation always, and it may be that they will be hurt by it while it may not necessarily hurt foreign publications.

Before this bill receives third reading I hope the minister will stand in his place and tell us exactly what happened that resulted in this change of interpretation. I hope he will tell us exactly what happened between his former position and the one he is now maintaining. This is of fundamental importance because there are other magazines involved.

I proposed an amendment to this House which was rejected, I must say to my regret. That amendment was referred to by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). It had reference to foreign owned magazines which aimed their advertisement at the Canadian market. As I said earlier, this world is becoming smaller, and surely there should and could be an arrangement whereby the United States and Canada could benefit from magazines published in each country. We both have much to gain by a common understanding and a common purpose. There is not much difference between their thinking and ours. Their well being is closely associated with ours, and to a great degree our philosophies are the same. If we could have an interchange of ideas and thoughts surely it would be to our mutual benefit.

One other matter of concern to me is in respect of research. We heard from officials of the Department of Agriculture that research is falling badly behind because we are unable to keep up with technical change. One official went on to say that much research is being done in the field because the department is falling behind in research at headquarters.

It would seem mutually beneficial to all concerned if we had exchange of information back and forth across the 49th parallel. We all realize that many of our magazines received in Canada are published in the United States.

It was my privilege for some time to serve as the superintendent of a Presbyterian Sunday school organization, and I have no hesitancy in telling you about this. There are a great many people who belong to that church, but they are still not in a position to publish their own Sunday school material. In view of the fact that we must rely on American publications for the edification of our pupils to a great degree, why in the world can we not have a mutual understanding between the two countries as we have between the two church bodies?

● (2150)

According to this legislation if an organization, a corporation or whatever, wished to advertise in a magazine directed to the Canadian market it would not be eligible to have that advertising expense treated as a deduction for income tax purposes. I think this is wrong. I believe we actually are dealing with peanuts so far as the government is concerned, but it certainly is not peanuts when one considers the church organizations which must depend on public support for their sustenance. I should like to hear the minister tell us whether this legislation is actually aimed at this type of advertiser or publication. Surely this is not the case, because sometime he also will die and I am sure he would want to know where he is going. I believe many people at this point in time would like to tell him where to go, and where to take this legislation.

We must realize that this matter is of fundamental importance. Many letters have been received from people involved. No doubt down the road there may be other innocent bystanders who will be caught up in this. Surely the minister could give this further consideration because of the fact that it is open for interpretation.

As I suggested before, the minister basically is a good fellow. Many of us are prepared to trust him because of the fact that he has proven that he is trustworthy, but what guarantee can he give us that he will always be in that position? He cannot give that guarantee. What guarantee can he give that the present government will always be the government? I hope it is not and I do not believe it will be.

If the time should ever come when we have in Canada a government that has no hesitancy in taking away the freedoms of the people then certainly it would not be very difficult for a person, a minister, or a government to change the interpretation. We must realize that interpretation is one of the significant factors involved. That is the reason why there are so many church groups in the world of today. Interpretations differ. So many people interpret the basic philosophy in a different manner.

In the realization that this is a matter of interpretation and relevancy I find this legislation to be abhorrent. I would hope the minister would stand up in his place and say he would agree to accept this amendment, take the legislation back to the committee and thereby give the committee an ample opportunity to quiz the minister, and perhaps hear further witnesses because of the fact that I do not think they have had a full opportunity to present their case adequately to the committee.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Sharp: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been some discussions among the representatives of the parties. It is my understanding it is the general wish that the motion to dispose of the amendment and third reading of this bill would be put on Wednesday as the first order of government business, and that there will be no further debate.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is right, Mr. Speaker, but I wonder whether the government House leader would have any objection to the calling of the vote on the amendment this evening, or on both if he should see fit, and then let us have the two votes back to back if it should go that way.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the only point I make is that we cannot call the vote on the second one until the first one is disposed of by the House. We could call the vote on the first one, defer it to Wednesday, and have a gentlemen's understanding that on Wednesday there would be no further debate on the main motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There seems to be agreement that the vote on the amendment should be called but that the registered vote would be taken on Wednesday as the first government order, but only with agreement that this would be followed by a vote on the third reading. Is this agreed?

If hon. members are not clear I would hope they would rise and so state. The Chair would like to make sure it is agreed that the vote on this amendment will be registered as the first government order on Wednesday next.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): With no debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No further debate on third reading would take place before the vote. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the order previously made, this vote stands deferred and will become the first order of government business on Wednesday.

HOUSING—ALLEGATION OWNER OF 800 RICHMOND ST. WEST, TORONTO, CHARGED RENTS HIGHER THAN AUTHORIZED

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, February 18, I asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) the following question:

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that an owner of a limited dividend building located at 800 Richmond Street West in Toronto charged tenants of two-bedroom apartments in the building $189 a month in February, 1975, and increased the rent to $205 commencing in February 1976, whereas the rental agreement between CMHC and the owner of the building stipulates that the rent be $173.25, will the minister direct CMHC to have the owner return the over-payments to the tenants forthwith, and not to permit any increase in rent until CMHC and the landlord have negotiated a new rent increase based on actual cost to the landlord?

I thought the Minister of State for Urban Affairs was prepared to answer the question at that time but the Speaker thought there was too much detail and did not permit the question.

● (2200)

May I review with you very shortly and quickly the details. There is an owner of a limited dividend project at 800 Richmond Street West in Toronto who entered into an agreement with CMHC, and as of February, 1975, the agreement called for rent of $173.25 for a two bedroom apartment, but the landlord of that building charged the tenants not $173.25 but $189. Then in February of 1976 the landlord charged the tenants $205. If you look at those increases in rent you will note that the first rent instead of being $173.25 was $189, an overpayment of $15.75 a month or $189 a year, and the second increase to $205 amounts to an overcharge of $31.75 a month, or $381 a year.

What the landlord has done regarding rents in one bedroom or three bedroom apartments in the building I do not know, but for two bedroom apartments he certainly has overcharged. When the tenants became aware of this overcharge they contacted CMHC which said to them that they can take the problem to the Ontario Rent Review Board or, if the landlord does not repay these overcharges, they might call in the mortgage because of the breach.

What should CMHC have done in these circumstances, and I am assuming that the facts are correct because I received them from responsible people? Surely what they should have done is to order immediate repayment to the tenants of the overpayment to the landlord, and if the landlord failed to make the repayment they should have taken immediate legal steps with regard to the breach of the legal contract.

However, there is a bigger issue in this problem than the overcharging of rents, and that is the role of tenants concerning agreements entered into between CMHC and the owners of limited dividend buildings. Last summer the Minister of State for Urban Affairs met with representatives of the Metro Federation of Limited Dividend Tenants and they asked for three main items to be discussed. One was standards of maintenance in limited dividend projects, the second was a grievance procedure with regard to problems they would have concerning the building, and the third was participation by the tenants in discussions and negotiations between CMHC and the landlord. These are reasonable requests but to date I have heard nothing, and neither have they, from the minister with regard to these problems.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Surely the tenants have the right to have knowledge of the basic terms of the agreement entered into between CMHC and the landlord. When I talk about the basic terms I mean the rent, the maintenance, and the terms of the contract, because with regard to rent under the Anti-Inflation Act and with regard to the limitation imposed by the Ontario government they are only entitled to costs such as increased taxes, heating, electricity, maintenance and insurance increases. If the tenants are forced to pay increases they should know what these actual costs are so that they can determine whether these costs are right and reasonable in the circumstances.

The agreement between CMHC and the landlord should not be a secret document; it should be a public document, and the tenants of CMHC buildings, both in limited dividend projects and public housing projects, should get a summary of agreements entered into between CMHC and the landlord so that they know just what the rent is, what the term is, and what other terms affect them.

With regard to the limited dividend projects, the moneys that are applied to mortgage financing are public moneys. Surely the tenants should have the right to know what the problems are. I am rather shocked that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has not taken the initiative to publicize the terms of the limited dividend agreements entered into between the landlord and CMHC.

I look forward to the answer of the parliamentary secretary. He is a reasonable person and I am sure he has documented the problem and will give a good answer.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond on behalf of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) who is currently on a very important mission to Africa and the Middle East, where he is meeting with various heads of state for the purpose of discussing participation in Habitat, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, to be held later this year in Vancouver. Knowing the hon. member's strongly held humanitarian views on proper housing and living conditions, I know he will be a vigorous supporter of that conference.

With regard to the question he has raised tonight, it is gratifying to have the hon. member support the minister's efforts to provide reasonably priced rental accommodation for Canadians.

I think the minister would agree with him also that we should look into the three points he raised with regard to the standard of maintenance, grievance procedures, and participation by tenants. I will look into them and see if anything can be brought forward and if the hon. member and I can continue studying these matters.

As to the specific case the hon. member has described to the House, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is currently reviewing the developer's operating costs for 800 Richmond Street West, Toronto, in order to decide what level of rents is appropriate. The building was financed under section 15 of the National Housing Act, where an operating agreement between the developer and CMHC forms a part of the mortgage. The terms of the agreement make provision for a review of operating costs when the developer requests an increase in rents. If the agreement is violated, the corporation may institute foreclosure action, or seek other remedies through the courts under the agreement. It should be pointed out, however, that CMHC does not have the power to direct the owner to make refunds of payments in excess of the authorized rents. The minister expects to have the results of the CMHC investigation by the time he returns from his trip. I am sure he will advise the hon. member and the House of his conclusion.

I appreciate the hon. member's remarks on the other points he made. I shall take them up with the minister and try to get some answers to the problems.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PENSIONS FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR—POSITION OF MINISTER IF CABINET FAILS TO SUPPORT MEASURE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Railton) in the House. I was hoping the minister could stay but I am sure he is quite busy.

I raised a question on the legislation that was promised to provide compensation for prisoners of war on the basis of the length of time they were incarcerated. On January 28 the minister indicated that he would make an announcement, probably within two weeks. On further questioning by myself and by my colleagues, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), the word was always the same, the problem was being considered in cabinet. Mr. Speaker, I wish they would take that word consideration out of the English language. It appears the only answers we ever get are that the matter "is under consideration".

On February 13 the minister replied again that it was being considered by cabinet and the House leader, who seems to support the procrastination in cabinet to deny these veterans, promised me a long outstanding date which is now overdue. I do not know what they are waiting for. The amounts involved are insignificant, particularly compared with next year's spending estimates of $42 billion. One wonders why nothing is done. One can only presume that the government is leaning on the backs of veterans in restraining its spending.

According to figures I have, $2.3 million could be spent on Japanese theatre prisoners of war, and $6.7 million on other prisoners of war, making a total of about $9 million. A number of former prisoners of war have passed on, which will probably reduce that total by $1 million. I see, from looking at the new estimates, that spending under the veterans land administration, legislation which was phased out against the wishes of veterans, is to be reduced from $13 million to $9 million. If the parliamentary secretary wants to know where extra money can be found, surely the government could use the $4 million it saved for the benefit of prisoners of war.

The members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs have supported the minister, as have the veterans. We all think, with due respect, that he has brought in good legislation, and introduced many improvements to existing legislation, which we have supported. But, as he himself says, so long as veterans are alive, we shall need improvements in legislation, if only to cope with veterans' needs.

Inflation being what it is today, it is obvious that veterans' allowances and disability pensions are not keeping up with the increase in the cost of living. The Canadian Labour Congress brought this to the minister's attention. It showed that some veterans on war veterans allowance are getting less than they would get if they earned even the minimum wage. Inflation today is badly hurting our five million poverty-stricken people. Statistics Canada figures show that a family of two needs a minimum of $5,000 today to survive. So it is obvious that there is a need to increase pensions and war veterans allowances.

I mention this because I want to draw attention to those prisoners of war who were incarcerated for up to two and a half years. The Hermann report mentions the pre-aging process. The parliamentary secretary, who is very capable and served with distinction as a medical officer, realizes the effect of incarceration on prisoners of war, even at this late date.

It is now four years since the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs recommended that the plight of former prisoners of war be studied and the Hermann report commissioned. We, on my side of the House, want to know facts. Let the parliamentary secretary say, either yes, or no, will legislation be introduced soon. Today in the House when answering the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre the minister indicated that probably in a week he would have the answer for us. He told me on January 28 he would know the answer in two weeks. He said much the same today. Does his answer of today mean we must wait one week, two weeks or three weeks? The question is, how long must veterans wait.

It is an insult when the minister says that the matter is "under consideration". We have supported his position in cabinet. The Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs is not partisan. We understand the situation, and the minister's position in the government, and we want a yes or no answer: can we expect the legislation soon; or, when can we expect it? We need to know, to allay the fears and concerns of veterans across the country who expect the legislation and look forward to it, because it was promised. Hopefully the parliamentary secretary this evening will give us the answer to our question, and say that the minister will announce a date by next Friday.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Here is your chance.

Mr. Railton: —the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) as usual spoke well of the situation affecting prisoners of war and other circumstances to do with veterans. He has strongly urged the minister to say when the legislation will be announced. I will not use the words "it is under consideration" this evening.

Adjournment Debate

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Norfolk-Halidimand (Mr. Knowles) are as interested in this matter as much as any of us on this side. I can state that the veterans are just as interested to have this matter settled. The minister has great concern. I can use that word honestly. He has been fighting hard for the welfare of veterans in every way. Actually in the minister's answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre today, I thought he said he was going to say something this week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what he said.

Mr. Railton: That is a little better than a week from now. There have been a great many factors holding us up, such as a full cabinet or full cabinet committee. There have been a great many vacancies because of certain trips and one thing and another. It is very important that the people who have the final say discuss it and say it.

The minister is perfectly honest when he says he has the matter under advisement completely. I think he has it completely in his hands to give the hon. member an answer this week, and that it will be forthcoming.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—RESTORATION OF RAIL SERVICE TO GLENWOOD AND HILL SPRING—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I just cannot believe that the minister did not see fit to be in the House tonight or at least to appoint somebody. Oh, I see he has appointed someone.

On November 7, November 18, November 21, December 2, January 28, and January 29 I directed questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in an effort to have a railway bridge repaired in Glenwood and Hill Spring which was damaged by floods in June, 1975. On November 7 I asked the following question:

In light of the fact that the CPR informed me over four months ago that a bridge would be provided in the Glenwood-Hill Spring area in order to facilitate the movement of grain, and in light of the fact that this has not even been started, will the minister assure the House that every effort will be made to have this situation corrected immediately?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I think there may be a requirement and a role for the Canadian Transport Commission in relation to the bridge on this particular line, but I will look into the matter.

On November 18 I asked the following question:

In answer to my question in this House on November 7 regarding restoration of rail service to Glenwood and Hill Spring, the minister informed me there may be a requirement and a role for the Canadian Transport Commission. Since that time the CPR has notified Mr. Harold Boucher, President of the Chamber of Commerce in Magrath, that it is awaiting word from the CTC. Would the minister inform the House where the confusion lies, since the CPR says the bridge has to be restored in order to provide service?

● (2220)

The minister replied:

—we have been considering the question of the use of trucks immediately to move grain from that area, and some steps are going forward toward this end.

I then asked the following supplementary question:

In view of the fact the minister has stated that the bridge has to be repaired, would he inform the House why the CPR hauled 15 loads over the bridge but now refuses to haul any more and has cut off service to people in the area?

The minister replied:

I am not sure at which stage the hon. member refers to the materials having been hauled. As I understand it, the bridge is not safe for service and therefore cannot be used to provide service in the ordinary course.

On November 21 I asked the minister the following:

In light of the fact that at a meeting held in Magrath, Alberta in November of 1972 the ex-minister of agriculture, Mr. Olson, informed the meeting that "If any producer suffered any loss due to inability to deliver grain as a result of plugged elevators, CP rail would be responsible", would the minister inform the House whether or not he has instructed the CPR to restore service to Glenwood and Hillspring?

The minister's answer was:

I rather think the former minister of agriculture's words have been taken out of context. The question of restoration of service is one, as I have said before, that depends on certain action on the part of the CTC.

In my supplementary I asked:

In view of the fact that the Minister of Transport has informed me that he has to get a hold of the CTC, that the CTC has told me they have to get a hold of the CPR, and that the CPR has told me they have to get a hold of the Minister of Transport, would the minister please inform the House how I go about restoring service?

And this was the minister's answer:

As I told the hon. member earlier, we are all trying to get a hold of each other.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I quote my question of December 2.

On November 21 the minister received a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce in Magrath as follows:

Advise what arrangements made to move grain from Glenwood and Hillspring elevator. Situation desperate. Grain piled on ground. Deteriorating daily. Surely you can order CP Rail to move grain either by rail or truck.

Again, this was the answer:

Any such instructions would have to originate from the CTC. The problem with grain movement is that there is difficulty with a bridge that can handle ordinary service. There is real doubt about the ability of anyone to order a movement by truck. However, we have been negotiating toward a specific truck movement of grain. We are attempting to put the final details of that movement in place. I hope to be able to tell these communities in short order about that plan.

On January 28 I put my next question as follows:

On November 7, 18 and 21 I asked the minister questions regarding the restoration of rail service to Glenwood and Hill Spring and the minister replied in part on one occasion that the CTC had a part to play in the matter, a bridge was under repair and that the CTC, CPR and the Minister of Transport were all looking for one another. Will the minister inform the House whether or not he plans to do anything about this serious situation?

To which the minister replied:

I will check the exact dates on which certain steps were taken in this regard and bring the hon. member up to date on the matter.

On January 29, in the course of a further question, I said:

There is to be a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce in Glenwood tonight to discuss methods which might be used to restore grain transportation. Will the minister assure the House that he will contact the Chamber of Commerce in Glenwood before their meeting tonight with a statement of his intentions?

This the minister did as promised. I should like to read a telegram which was later sent to the minister as follows:

Our executive express sincere appreciation your wire January 29 advising you had requested president Canadian Pacific Railway to immediately repair bridge Cardston Glenwood Line. Have they agreed to do so and when may we expect normal service? Advise.

As of this point in time Mr. Boucher has not been advised of anything. The trucks are not moving grain. The bridge has not been repaired. I just wonder what the answer will be tonight. Will it be that the CPR tenders are let and that an announcement is forthcoming? Will it be the trucks are too expensive? Will it be that nobody wants to work? I think the CPR has been the scapegoat for the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the name of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) I would like to tell the hon. member I hope to be able to satisfy him with an answer tonight. Before getting to the heart of the answer I should like to summarize briefly the event which caused the disruption of the CP Rail Cardston subdivision run from Stirling through Cardston to Glenwood, some 73 miles.

Last summer a flash flood damaged a bridge, cutting the line west of Cardston to Glenwood and isolating two elevators at Hill Spring—two primary elevators with a capacity of 160,000 bushels—and Glenwood where there are four primary elevators with a total capacity of 250,000 bushels.

Mr. Hurlburt: I already know that.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): This incident caused 15 rail cars to be marooned by the flood between Cardston and Glenwood. Immediately reacting to this situation it was possible to winch rail cars one at a time across the bridge. Evidently the ministries concerned did not stop there. We carried out an initial examination of the various alternative means of restoring service and their respective cost elements. This examination indicated that trucking the grain out from these two elevators would be preferable to rebuilding the bridge, bearing in mind this is one of the lines which is being looked at by the Hall Commission whose report is expected by the end of the 1976.

A closer examination of the costs proved that the truck option was higher than the initial indication, because if all the grain were trucked out to Cardston it would create congestion problems at Cardston. Also, trucking distances to the alternate delivery points of Brocket and Fort MacLeod would be greater and would be over roads that have severe load limitations during certain times of the year. Furthermore, the trucking option would involve a second elevation with increased costs.

The higher than anticipated trucking costs caused us to ask the Canadian Transport Commission to carry out a full study of the various rail options. On the basis of the CTC study it became evident that it was preferable to rebuild the bridge at an estimated cost of $75,000. On January 30 the Minister of Transport wrote to Mr. Burbidge, president of the CPR, and asked CP rail to rebuild the bridge. Canadian Pacific rail has agreed and confirmed that in fact construction crews were already on site and CP rail estimated that reconstruction would be completed in approximately six weeks.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER RELATING TO PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Under the terms of Standing Order 15(6) private members' hour on Mondays and Tuesdays is suspended after being reached 40 times. Since this session has been prolonged abnormally, private members now have at their disposal a much smaller proportion of our time than our rules intended. To correct this situation I would move, with unanimous consent, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean):

That beginning on March 1, 1976, and for the remainder of the session, Standing Order 15(6) be suspended.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED STUDY OF EFFECT OF TARIFFS ON EMPLOYMENT IN TEXTILE INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the economy of the Eastern Townships, in Quebec, depends largely on the textile and clothing industry that provides 32.5 per cent of the jobs in that area, but is now experiencing a serious recession, and in view of the fact that the CSD, Centrale des syndicats démocratiques, has just published a report indicating that unemployment in the area could reach 10.6 per cent by the end of April, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House now discuss the Canadian tariff policy and its impact on employment and investments in the textile industry, in order to take as soon as possible the necessary steps to support this industry and ensure that new industrial sectors will be able to absorb the surplus manpower from the textile sector.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF INADEQUATE COVERAGE OF CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION BY FRENCH NETWORK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of national interest and of pressing public importance.

In view of the obvious inadequacies in the television coverage of the recent leadership convention of the Progressive Conservative Party by the CBC French network, and more particularly in view of the fact that this network did not broadcast in their entirety, as did the English network, the speeches of the candidates, I move, seconded by the hon. members for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) and for Laval (Mr. Roy):

That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, so that the management of CBC can be heard.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. According to Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PLANS FOR BASE CLOSURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. In view of the concern expressed by the president of the Union of National Defence employees with respect to base closures in the maritime provinces, particularly CFB Shearwater and CFB Greenwood, and the enormously disastrous effect this would have on the Annapolis Valley and the metropolitan area of Dartmouth and Halifax in economic terms, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Minister of National Defence not later than Thursday of this week undertake on motions to give to this House, the provincial and municipal authorities involved, the fullest explanation respecting the status of any base closure plans, and to reiterate the firm assurances given by previous Ministers of National Defence and himself that no base closures will take place without the fullest consultation with these officials and this parliament.

PROPOSED PROVISION FOR RE-OPENING CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS OF WAGE SETTLEMENT REJECTED BY ANTI-INFLATION BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that after ten months of negotiations, after assistance from a conciliation commissioner and subsequent consultations with the Anti-Inflation Board, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians (NABET) had reached agreement on all issues, including the monetary ones, for a new collective agreement, and in view of the fact that last Wednesday negotiations broke down because the CBC refused to agree to the inclusion of a clause which would permit re-opening of negotiations in the event the AIB reduced the proposed monetary settlement, I move, seconded by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories:

That this House urge the Secretary of State or the Minister of Labour to make clear to the CBC that it is the view of the government that all corporations, whether public or private, as a necessary part of bargaining in good faith during the period in which the anti-inflation program is in effect, should include a clause in all contracts which would lead to the re-opening of negotiations in the event a wage and benefit settlement be rejected by the Anti-Inflation Board.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, unanimous consent is required before this motion can be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a very urgent and important matter, and I am convinced that because of its importance, no hon. member will oppose this motion.

Whereas the Canadian people have very strong feelings on the highly controversial question of capital punishment and that the decision either to abolish or to maintain capital punishment cannot logically be left solely to the Canadian parliamentarians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House recommend the holding of a referendum on this matter and, in order to avoid an emotional debate, that the time required for holding such a referendum be as short as possible, and that members of the House abstain from campaigning in favour of or against capital punishment so as to really know the views of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTED CANCELLATION OF LOCKHEED CONTRACT IN VIEW OF ALLEGED CORRUPT PRACTICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has admitted paying at least $22 million in contract kickbacks in such countries as Turkey, The Netherlands, Italy and Japan, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie:

That the Minister of National Defence consider cancelling immediately any contracts with this corrupt corporation, a part of the dry rot of the all-powerful military and industrial complex about which the late President Eisenhower tried to warn the free world.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43 unanimous consent is required before the motion can be put. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

ALLEGED INCREASE IN DEFICIT—SOURCE OF FUNDS TO COVER INCREASE—REASON FOR FAILURE TO REVEAL FINANCIAL POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will put my question to the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Another red Tory.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Now that the festivities of the weekend are over, and in view of the fact that there are several potential leaders of the opposition to follow the hon. member, I wonder whether we could simply receive them as hon. members, the way they were the week before the convention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: As the 1977 estimates show that budgetary spending in fiscal 1976 will be almost $2 billion higher than the forecast in the June 23 budget, would the Prime Minister explain to the House how such massive over-spending could take place in a time of expenditure restraint; and is it now fair for the House to assume that there will be a deficit this year of $5 billion, not $3.2 billion as forecast earlier in the June budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the President of the Treasury Board tabled the estimates he made a statement on this subject. I can understand that the hon. member was away and this is why he did not hear it.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As government revenues have lagged far behind expenditures in 1976 to the extent that there will be at least a $3.2 billion deficit and possibly something over a $5 billion deficit, would the Prime Minister explain to the House from what sources he hopes to raise money in the coming year to pay for the additional $3.7 billion in spending forecast in the estimates for 1977? I should like the Prime Minister to specifically answer that question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks for a specific answer to a budgetary question. He should know that the budget is dealt with in a way other than by answering questions.

Mr. Stevens: A further supplementary question again for the Prime Minister, particularly in view of his reply to my first two questions. Since most groups of working Canadians, whether they be members of a union or a corporation, must now submit their past, current and future financial conditions to the scrutiny of the Anti-Inflation Board, would the Prime Minister indicate why the government is not coming clean with the Canadian people and revealing its own revenue, expenditure and deficit projections to the public, and specifically holding to those projections once they have been revealed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making a completely unsubstantiated allegation. He should know that this House has budget dates. The estimates appear in the blue book which was tabled last week, accompanied by, I repeat, a statement which he obviously failed to hear.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REFERENCE OF MAIN ESTIMATES TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT CONFORMING TO DIRECTIVE OF BOARD

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that section 12(1)(e) of Bill C-73 imposes on the Anti-Inflation Board the duty of commenting upon the "implications of the failure of governments to co-operate in combatting inflation", and also in view of the fact that the bill specifically provides for the law to be binding on all levels of government, would the President of the Treasury Board refer the 1977 main estimates to the AIB for an anti-inflation acid test; and in view of the 16 per cent increase would he say when he expects a reply from the board detailing what inflationary impact the proposed increase will have on government expenditure and whether there will be a revision of that expenditure?

● (1420)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am terribly sorry that the hon. member has so low an opinion of the House of Commons, because there will be a debate on the expenditures and so on, and I think we have provided the House with all the information required. We made a statement in December, and I am sorry the hon. members do not want to handle the problem themselves but want it referred to someone else.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that Bill C-73, being the government's own legislation, imposes a duty on the government to observe all the strictures of the Anti-Inflation Board in regard to its expenditures? In view of this legislation does the minister expect that this government will confirm with any directive from the Anti-Inflation Board and, if necessary, the administrator? This is their own machinery.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are obligated to conform with the legislation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Why don't you then?

Mr. Chrétien: Out of 130,000 employees of government who negotiate their contracts with government we have settled with 75,000 of them all within the guidelines.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the minister has failed to answer the question in so far as the total expenditures of government and its proposed expenditure increase of 16 per cent this year in the estimates are concerned.

ENERGY

OIL AND NATURAL GAS—POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF WELLHEAD PRICE IN ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, as one of the older leaders of a party in the House of Commons I have a question for an even older one. I address it to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the statement in the white paper on inflation that the government intends to permit the price of oil and gas to rise "toward world levels", and considering that the Premier of Nova Scotia has described such a position as hypocritical because of its lack of consistency with other aspects of the anti-inflation program, I would ask whether the government has given serious reconsideration to including the wellhead price of oil within the framework of the anti-inflation guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I missed the beginning of the question, but I can assure the hon. member that there will be discussions with all the premiers on what the appropriate price of oil should be after the expiration of the present agreement which expires on July 1 next.

OIL—IMPACT PRICE INCREASE ON COST OF LIVING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can he inform the House whether the government has now decided to at least not make a commitment to raise the price of oil to world levels, and has his department or any other department of government considered the impact of an increase in the price of oil of say $2 a barrel on the cost of living, and particularly on the cost of energy in the Maritime provinces where oil is used as the major source of fuel for the production of electricity?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member realizes that as a matter of policy the government has been trying to cushion the effects of high international oil prices on the Maritime region. That region, perhaps more than any other in Canada, benefits from the cushioning, the subsidy or the compensation account. As the hon. member is fully aware, there will be discussions on this question. I think he has also indicated that we should try to cut government expenditures. He must realize that as we are becoming increasingly a net importer of oil there is a very much greater cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, prior to reaching a decision, if the government has not already done so, will it undertake to make a study of the impact on the economy of Ontario, as the largest user of petroleum products, of an increase in the price of oil particularly because this will have a marked affect on the price of all manufactured goods produced in this province which must be consumed elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, these are the types of questions we are taking into account as we approach the discussion to which the Prime Minister alluded.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH LOCKHEED

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Following the international news leaks concerning Lockheed Aircraft Corporation Ltd. of the United States, the minister has met with the new directors of the company to discuss a contract of about a billion dollars. Has the minister reached any conclusion, has the contract been awarded or is the matter still under consideration?

[English]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think that is very similar to a question I answered yesterday. The specific details of the contract are being negotiated by my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, who has that responsibility. I have also met with senior officials of the Lockheed Company who have assured me there were, as I said, no commissions or payments to any Canadian connected with the purchase or proposed contract, but we are still continuing to negotiate the terms of the contract.

INQUIRY AS TO CONTRIBUTIONS BY LOCKHEED TO POLITICAL PARTIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the right hon. Prime Minister.

As that same Lockheed company has been accused of having paid $23 million to election campaign organizations in foreign countries, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether Lockheed contributed to the Liberal party campaign funds?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the new Canada Elections Act makes it mandatory for political parties to reveal what funds they receive. We were pleased to publish our own reports. I have not checked whether the Social Credit Party of Canada has received funds from Lockheed, but I am eager to look into the matter.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have one last supplementary.

Lockheed Aircraft Corporation Ltd. stated it had given $23 million to political parties throughout the world. For the information of the Prime Minister, the Social Credit Party of Canada received no funds from that company. I am asking whether the Liberal party—I am not asking the Progressive Conservatives: they will make their reports later on—has received any money from Lockheed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to check, but as I said before, reports on what the various parties got, including our own, are now published. The hon. member says he has received nothing, but I remember that, not long ago, in the House, he spoke of people who had received something, and later on changed his mind.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER TRICOFIL REQUESTED FINANCIAL AID

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the traditional weakness of the textile industry in Canada, and particularly in Quebec, and considering the specific problem faced at the moment by Tricofil of Saint-Jérôme following the refusal of banking institutions and credit unions to give them the credits required for the maintenance of their activities, can the minister tell the House whether he did receive a request for financial assistance from this industry of Saint-Jérôme, either under the programs of his department or through the Federal Business Development Bank?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question because it gives me an opportunity also to reply to the Leader of the Social Credit Party. The answer is that there have been no requests or any form of representation to us in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce by the company in question. I am still looking into it to see whether there is anything we might be able to do, but so far as I understand it the relations have been purely between the company and the Government of Quebec.

REASON FOR DELAY IN STARTING SEARCH FOR MISSING FISHERMEN—POSSIBLE REASSESSMENT OF SEARCH AND RESCUE CAPABILITY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. It is prompted by a sense of outrage over the loss of two more Canadian fishermen off Canada's east coast, making a total of six so far this year in three separate incidents. My question to the minister is whether he can explain to the House why from the time the fishing boat was reported missing on Sunday to the Halifax Rescue Centre at 7.50 p.m., it took almost 14 hours to get search aircraft into the area which was 500 miles to the east of Halifax.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must be referring to the fishing boat, the San Juan. According to my information, it was accompanied by a coastguard vessel. When the National Defence forces were called on, we sent a tracker aircraft and discovered the San Juan which had capsized. We are not yet certain what became of the two persons who were on board. As far as I am aware, the armed forces carried out their duties with great skill and discovered this vessel.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister why it took a total of 14 hours to get aircraft into the air from Halifax to the scene which was 500 miles away, and will he undertake to investigate whether or not this costly critical delay could have resulted in the loss of the lives of these two fishermen. Perhaps while he is at it I might ask the minister how many more Canadian fishermen on Canada's east coast have to die before we will have a reassessment of the search and rescue capability of the forces.

Mr. Richardson: I will look into those facts, but it certainly does not seem to me that the armed forces would need 14 hours to reach the vessel. When we examine the facts we might find that they took a much shorter time and succeeded in their mission so far as their part in air and sea rescue is concerned.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF DELAY IN STARTING OPERATION TO RESCUE MISSING FISHERMEN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries. The information which I just gave to the House was given to me by the air and sea rescue centre in Halifax. May I ask the minister, who has a great deal of responsibility and a deep compassion, if he would undertake to make his own investigation into the time lag in providing an air and sea rescue operation, especially into the last three incidents which have resulted in the loss of the lives of six fishermen.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly undertake to look into this matter and do whatever I can. However, I would not want the hon. member's allegations to be taken to mean that National Defence and MOT have not helped fishermen in other circumstances, and I want it on the record that they have helped and have saved lives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OIL—IMPACT OF PRICE INCREASE ON PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him if he has received special representations from the government of Prince Edward Island with regard to the expected future increase in the cost of petroleum products because of the unique position of our province in that it will not only be affected directly by any increase in the cost of petroleum products but it is dependent entirely on the electric power generated from oil and therefore is doubly affected in that regard. Is the minister giving special consideration to Prince Edward Island, at least until such time as the island's grid system can be tied into that of the other Maritime provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the premiers of both provinces and the ministers of both Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia have laid emphasis on the dependence of their systems upon imported petroleum and have pointed this out to us in past discussions. We are certainly aware of this problem and we will be considering it fully in the discussions that will be coming up during the course of the spring, both with regard to the pricing of oil and the equalization payments.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF BASES IN NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and arises out of the concern expressed by Mr. Joe Power, president of UNDE and other municipal and provincial authorities in Nova Scotia with respect to widespread rumours, apparently well founded, that consideration is being given by the Minister of National Defence to recommending to his cabinet some time in March that CFB Greenwood be closed and that there be a substantial reduction in the number of people, both military and civilian, employed at Shearwater. Can the minister indicate to the House whether or not it is a fact that under the base closure program progress in this direction is being considered and, if it is being considered, whether or not, together with that consideration, the assured promises of this minister and his predecessors are being followed with respect to full consultations with the provincial and municipal authorities directly involved.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member used the right terminology when he said there were widespread rumours. No recommendations have been made to cabinet concerning the base infrastructure study. As I have said before, we do have the objective of trying to reduce the overhead and the support services in relation to our operating capability, and that study is proceeding. It may mean the reduction of some bases, it may mean an increase in others, it may mean a consolidation of bases. I cannot comment on the individual bases concerned until the study is complete and the recommendations have been made to cabinet.

Mr. Forrestall: I apologize for my voice, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of National Defence indicate, just to make clear, that in fact recommendations and plans in that particular area are being considered, and can he tell the House whether those recommendations will go to cabinet in March of this year or some time later in the year?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I would expect the recommendations to be ready by March but I cannot say how long cabinet will wish to study them after they have been made.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REASON FOR FAILURE OF FRENCH NETWORK TO GIVE ADEQUATE COVERAGE TO CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State which arises out of a question asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Vaudreuil, yesterday. What is the CBC's explanation for the unsatisfactory coverage by Radio-Canada of my party's leadership convention, the results of which will have profound effects on the future of our country?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the CBC French television network covered the Progressive Conservative convention in a Thursday evening telecast and Friday evening telecast.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Only summaries.

Miss Campbell: On Saturday they gave summaries from 11.10 p.m. to 12.40 a.m. due to the fact that a simultaneous translation had to be given to the French audience. As well, on Sunday they covered the total convention from 2.30 p.m. to the end of the convention at 9.10 p.m.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED BUGGING OF BALLOT COUNTING

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Would the parliamentary secretary be so good as to investigate the allegations made in the press today of the bugging of the voting during that convention by the CBC, particularly in view of the great importance we all place on the protection of privacy?

● (1440)

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am also informed by the CBC that a press release is going out in connection with this article and that the Conservative Party officials within that room mistook a transmitter for a microphone.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Campbell: When they discovered the mistake, they quickly reconnected the transmitter, and the Conservatives had it reconnected. The reason the transmitter was in this particular place was that it was the centre of the arena, and for transmitting back and forth to the newsmen from the box the transmitter had to be in that particular spot. As I have already pointed out, as soon as the mistake was made the Conservatives quickly reconnected that transmitter.

Then, will he consider expressing to the government of Uruguay the revulsion of Canadians to this and appealing to Uruguay to accept an impartial international investigation of such allegations?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Concerning the meetings which have taken place and the one referred to by the hon. member, for the purpose of finding solutions to the present unemployment crisis in Cape Breton, the hon. member is aware that recommendations have already been made and that others are being studied by the two levels of government concerned. We all hope that decisions will eventually be made and that we shall thus be able, with all the resources at our disposal, to bring about a solution to this unemployment question. To what extent will the minister's department address itself to the serious problem of overpayments to claimants, which is now estimated to be in the range of $40 million to $50 million per year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, an answer to this question would require some detail, and in fact this has been the subject of discussion and explanation before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. When my estimates are before that committee again—that is, the estimates of the Unemployment Insurance Commission—I will be glad to set forth the very efficient methods of administration of the commission for dealing with that particular problem.

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, obviously consultations are held between both departments concerned about job generating and opportunities offered to companies which request our department's financial assistance to help them rebuild their facilities. Generally speaking, one can say that there is a close cooperation between both departments and the possible employers.

RELATIONSHIP OF INCREASE IN CHEESE IMPORTS TO CONTRACTUAL LINK WITH EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to say that the government policy to increase importation of cheese to 10 per cent is related to the contractual link he attempted to make with the European Economic Community?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the so-called contractual link is in the process of being negotiated. The question of trading with the European communities is, of course, linked to that, and the matter of cheese is also linked to that. However, I answered this question a few days ago to the effect that we have undertaken to increase the quota of imports, but this year, because of national circumstances, we had not increased the import but held it at the previous level.

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN CHEESE IMPORTS—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT OF MINISTER WITH POLICY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that an increase in imported cheese of 50 million pounds would automatically cut back the requirement of Canadian milk, is the minister still in full agreement with this policy, or is there a trade off and has he been had by the Prime Minister?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member is talking about because the Prime Minister said once before in the House, and he said again today, that there would be no increase in the quota on cheese. Last year was the first time we imposed a quota on specialty cheese coming into Canada, making it 50 million pounds. That is what it is going to be this year. We had further discussions here the other day with the head of the European community about the problem we are confronting with regard to dairy surpluses. Even if we abolish the whole 50 million pounds of imports, of specialty cheeses, that would not solve the surplus problem.

STUDY OF EFFECT OF RED FOOD DYE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that scientists and government agencies in Canada and the United States sharply disagree as to whether red food dyes are harmful to the human system, has the minister any new information on this very important subject, primarily as a result of a study conducted by his department of scientific information gathered in the United States? Has there been any conclusion reached?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to what I reported in my last answer on this question. My department is still studying in detail the studies made in the United States, especially by the food and drug administration, but at the present time there is no indication of the necessity for any change in the current policy.

Can he inform the House of the situation with regard to the negotiations with the postmasters of Canada?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, if the question of the hon. member refers ot the Canadian Postmasters' Association, a tentative collective agreement was reached and signed last Friday. If it refers to individual postmasters who are not unionized, who are considered management but really lie in between, their salaries are under negotiation with the Treasury Board at the present moment.

TAKE-OVER OF CHECKERBOARD FOODS BY SWIFT CANADIAN—DATE OF DECISION BY COMBINES BRANCH

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerns the take-over of Checkerboard Foods by Swift Canadian. Last week the minister told the House that so far as he is concerned, FIRA had accepted the take-over and that he agreed with the decision, but that it had to be referred to the combines investigation branch for a decision on their part. My question is this: How soon can we expect an answer from the combines investigation people, because the company will close down tomorrow and there is no time to fool around between one department and another. Second, if the ruling of the combines investigation people is adverse, is the minister prepared to defend the decision of FIRA and support the company's application?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, to answer the first part of the question, we will deal with this matter on an urgent basis, I hope in the next day or two. On the question of whether I would, to use the hon. member's expression, defend the FIRA decision, let me say that I do not think the matter can be approached in precisely that way. It would be a matter of whether or not the Combines Investigation Act takes precedence in law. This is a highly technical issue and it is now being discussed.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

DATE OF DECISION ON CONTRACT CLAUSE BOYCOTTING TRADE WITH ISRAEL

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I, also, have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Last November 21 I asked if cabinet had completed its consideration of what its policy should be on the matter of the Export Development Corporation and the Arab boycott of Israel. The minister replied that it had not been completed, but he believed it was scheduled for consideration two or three weeks from that Monday coming. That was over nine weeks ago, the matter has been pending since last May and there still has been no decision announced by cabinet. I therefore ask him if he can now say when there will be such a decision and announcement.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I regret the delay, but a number of urgent and pressing matters have had to be dealt with and, unfortunately, I have not had the opportunity to deal with this matter as rapidly as I would have liked. I assure the hon. member that I will deal with it as fast as I can. In the meantime, I think the position of the government on this question is well known, as enunciated by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

INQUIRY WHETHER PERMITS HAVE BEEN ISSUED FOR IMPORTATION OF POULTRY

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Considering that the poultry producers' quotas will be greatly reduced during the next months, which will in turn reduce their revenue, can the minister tell the House whether his department issued licences or permits for the importation of poultry during 1975? If so, can the minister tell if he did so on the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information in front of me. I ask the hon. member to permit me to take the question as notice. I will give him the information as rapidly as I can.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF OTHER METHODS OF APPLYING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. During the Prime Minister's recent visit to British Columbia, he raised the subject of capital punishment. He said that the possibility exists that the government will have to hang some people. As the majority of Canadians favour the return of capital punishment, but not necessarily hanging by the rope, would the Prime Minister consider having this subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, for investigation of other methods of applying capital punishment? The committee could report back to the House. I believe this would help hon. members greatly in their deliberations on this important subject.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, we shall give first reading today to two bills, one of which will deal with this very subject. The hon. member knows my view, and I think many hon. members of this House do, that abolition will be accepted by this parliament. I would think if that does not happen, we could address ourselves to the question raised by the hon. member: how should we destroy these people.

POSSIBILITY OF VOTE OF CONFIDENCE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT BILL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister and is on the subject of the free vote on the bill being introduced today. The Prime Minister said in a letter sent to members of parliament that there would be a free vote on capital punishment. But the government risks defeat on the issue, in any event. As, by his statement, the Prime Minister delayed indefinitely the introduction of the bill until he had gathered the support he wants, is he not making the capital punishment vote a vote of confidence in the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the argument of the hon. member. We have indicated that the whip "would not be on" for this vote. The fact that we have delayed until today is a courtesy shown to the hon. member's party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: They have a new leader and I expect he will meet his caucus tomorrow. Perhaps hon. members opposite can decide in their caucus if they want to make following him on this vote an issue of confidence in their leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Prime Minister said that the "whips would not be on" for the purposes of the capital punishment vote. I ask the Prime Minister what meaning he puts on this, because when he wrote to members of parliament, he told them that an adverse vote could bring down the government. So, what does he mean when he says there will be a free vote? Is he implying that there will be no whip on the back benches but only on the cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's allegations are false.

CUSTOMS

ALLEGED DENIAL OF DUTY FREE ENTRY TO RELIGIOUS MATERIAL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. I know that the minister has received numerous representations expressing concern that the tariff regulations relating to imported religious materials in practice are being changed by individual customs officials. Has the minister sent, or is he prepared to send, a memo to all customs officials re-affirming his department's policy that all religious materials, especially printed material, shall enter this country duty free?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, being a Christian, I do not want to make a mistake in talking about the Bible. I assure the hon. member that duty is not, and never has been, charged on Bibles or on any book used for the promotion of, or advancement of, a specific religion or specific religious concept. That information is known to my officials. If the hon. member will let me know of any who do not know it, I will sure let them know.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF MEETING WITH MARITIME PREMIERS TO CLARIFY POLICY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The council of maritime premiers, meeting in its twenty first session in Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, on February 2 and 3, expressed in its press release gravest misgivings over the recent announcement by the federal Minister of Transport concerning changes in national transportation policies. They expressed special concern about the possible curtailment of rail service and other forms of transportation, which would severely reduce harbour, air and other transport facilities, thereby raising costs to consumers in the region. In light of the concern of the maritime premiers, does the minister intend to meet with the premiers, in the hope of clarifying his transport policy and allaying their fears? If so, when can we expect such a meeting?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would, of course, be prepared to meet with the premiers. I can tell the hon. member that subsequent discussions I have had lead me to believe that their fears were allayed when they learned that the transport policy involved the upgrading of facilities which can reasonably be kept in Canada, and learned that we intend to maintain good passenger train facilities in Canada. I think the premiers were reacting to press reports based on erroneous opposition comments made at the time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA CONCERNING LAND CLAIMS AND ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and relates to his meeting yesterday with the minister of labour for British Columbia who is also in charge of Indian affairs. Has the minister made new progress on the procedures to settle long outstanding cut-off land claims and on those relating to the broader question of aboriginal rights in all British Columbia?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I had a good discussion with the Hon. Allan Williams on the question of cut-off lands. I think his approach is somewhat different from that of his predecessor. In the long run it will be much more satisfactory from the Indian people's point of view.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER RELATING TO PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the first item of business which the House considered this day, the motion moved by myself, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque, pursuant to Standing Order 43, which deals with the restoration of private member's hour by the suspension of Standing Order 15(6).

● (1500)

I am not pointing any finger, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately someone did say no. However, from the point of view of House business, I wish to ask whether that meets with the general approval of the President of the Privy Council and whether he might consider, and perhaps consult in a way that we could succeed in the suspension of that Standing Order so that private members would have an opportunity of having their matters heard during this long session of parliament.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the answer, in brief, is yes. If necessary, I will bring down an order to accomplish the same purpose.

Order Paper Questions

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMISSION RESPECTING THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to section 19 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, to lay upon the table of the House a certified copy of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Northwest Territories.

FILING OF PETITION OBJECTING TO REPORT OF COMMISSION RESPECTING PROVINCE OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the hon. members for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), Central Nova (Mr. McKay), Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), Regina East (Mr. Balfour), and Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), has been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter E-2, RSC, 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia.

If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the supplementary report of the Chief Electoral Officer, made pursuant to section 59(1) of the Canada Elections Act, dated February 13, 1976, and tabled by Mr. Speaker, February 16, 1976, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The President of the Privy Council requires unanimous consent for the putting of this motion at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

AIR CARGO RATES AND CHARGES

Question No. 3,514—Mr. Lachance:

1. Does it cost twelve dollars to send, by air cargo from New York to Montreal, a letter weighing one ounce in a 10″ × 13″ envelope and five dollars more to the addressee to clear the said letter at customs and, if so, for what reason?

2. Are clearance fees provided for in the Act and/or in the Regulations on Customs and Excise and, if not, does the government intend to suggest to Air Canada to end such practice?

3. Is Air Canada's air cargo tariff subject to government approval with respect to (a) the type of parcel (b) its weight (c) the category of shipment and, if not, is it subject to any external control?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian Transport Commission and the Department of National Revenue as follows: 1. The minimum transportation charge for a single shipment between Montreal and New York is $12. The customs processing minimum charge of $5. is an accessorial charge for the presentation of the shipment for customs clearance.

2. Clearance fees are not provided for under the Customs Act or regulations, therefore, charges applied by Air Canada do not fall within the purview of Customs and Excise.

3. Air Canada Air Cargo Tariffs are not specifically approved by the Canadian Transport Commission, but are required to be filed in accordance with the Air Carrier Regulations and are accepted for filing by the Air Transport Committee who have the power to suspend or disallow any tariff, require an air carrier to substitute a tariff or toll satisfactory to the Committee or prescribe another tariff or toll in lieu of any tariff or toll so disallowed. Types of parcel, the weight and category of shipment are essential elements of air cargo pricing, and the carriers are prohibited from applying any rules or tolls which are not effective in tariffs published and available to the public.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN PHASE 2

Question No. 3,542—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the recent agreement on Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, what programmes are included which will help local, rural communities, as distinguished from sub-regional aggregates, to (a) maintain their cohesion in the face of modernization and rationalization (b) maximize participation in local decision-making (c) adapt government programmes to local needs?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: (a) All the programs in Phase 2 can help local, rural communities maintain cohesion. (b) Local decision making is a municipal-provincial matter. (c) Government programs are based on local needs. All programs are continuously monitored to allow for modification.

PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN PHASE 2

Question No. 3,543—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the agricultural sector of Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan, is there any provision in the agreement for the establishment of an overall planning section in the Provincial Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: No.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES EMPLOYEES

Question No. 3,647—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,124 (a) what are the reasons for the sizeable increases in the number of employees hired in high salary brackets (b) was the government's restraint programme taken into account when the extra persons were hired (c) is it the intention of the Minister of Supply and Services to continue expansion of his Department, particularly high salaried employees, at the same rate that has applied since January 1, 1974?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) On October 15, 1975, there were 161 incumbents on strength in the Department of Supply and Services who had been hired after January 1, 1974 and who were within the $20,000 or more salary range. Of these, ten were within the $30,000 or more salary range. In the $20,000 to $30,000 wage bracket, 99 persons were hired as replacements for previously incumbered positions, while 52 were hired to initially staff newly created positions. In the over $30,000 wage bracket, eight persons were hired as replacements for previously incumbered positions, while two were hired to initially staff newly created positions. The remaining increase in the number of persons in both wage brackets was due to the government-wide salary revisions which took place during the period. (b) The persons mentioned above were hired prior to the announcement of the government's restraint programme. (c) It is the intention of the Minister of Supply and Services to comply with the Treasury Board guidelines announced on December 18, 1975 in the House of Commons.

TRANSPORTATION DEVELOPMENT AGENCY FELLOWSHIP PROGRAMME—MEMORIAL UNIVERSITY, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 3,905—Mr. Marshall:

1. Did the Directorate of Public Affairs in the Department of Transport contact Memorial University of Newfoundland to advise them of the Transportation Development Agency Fellowship Programme and, if so, on what date?

2. Have applications been received from the University and, if so, by whom were they submitted?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. While the Directorate of Public Affairs did issue a press communique on this programme, it did not contact Memorial University of Newfoundland directly to advise them of the TDA Fellowship Programme. However, as indicated in the reply to question No. 3,809, the Transportation Development Agency, which administers the TDA Fellowship Programme on behalf of Transport Canada, forwarded to Memorial University information and application forms of the Fellowship Programme on November 11, 1975.

2. The Transportation Development Agency has not, to date, received applications from Memorial University.

SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDIES

Question No. 3,906—Mr. Marshall:

Under the federal expenditure reductions, will any of the reductions under Industry, Trade and Commerce—$15 million budgetary, affect shipbuilding subsidies in the Province of Newfoundland?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Based on applications now on hand and expected applications, we do not expect that the $15 million budgetary reductions for the fiscal year 1976-77 will affect shipyards located in the province of Newfoundland.

PARDONS FROM CRIMINAL RECORDS

Question No. 3,939—Mr. Saltsman:

1. How many applications for pardons from previous criminal records have been received in the past twelve months?

2. How many have been processed?

3. How many pardons have been granted in the past twelve months?

4. What is the average amount of time required from receipt of the application to the final processing?

5. For what reason does it take so long and what action can be taken to speed up the process?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1, 2 and 3. At the end of December 1974, 3,149 applications for pardon were under review. During 1975, 3,210 applications for pardon were received and 1,079 pardons were granted. At the end of December 1975, 5,660 applications were under investigation.

4. Eight to 12 months.

5. The long period of time required to process an application for pardon is due to the lengthy and complex investigation done in every case. Furthermore, this investigation involves requesting information from agencies over which we do not exercise administrative control. This situation, impeded by the ever-growing number of requests received and the limited resources with respect to staff within the Clemency and Criminal Records Act Division, has not helped to reduce the period of time required to process an application for pardon. At the present time a study is underway to review the entire process and determine if guidelines could be established which would permit shorter investigation in some circumstances. This study should also establish improved administrative systems for most stages of the investigating process. This study will also help to determine if additional staff is required to meet the ever-growing demand for pardons under the Criminal Records Act. In the meantime, manpower resources have been diverted from other branches of the National Parole Board to reduce the backlog which has accumulated for reasons noted above.

Order Paper Questions

FLIGHTS TO POINTS WEST OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 3,952—Mr. Fairweather:

How many passengers flew from the Saint John, New Brunswick Airport to points west of New Brunswick in (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975 and, of these, how many were on flights to (i) Boston (ii) Montreal (iii) Toronto?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Table I following provides the requested passenger statistics based on origin statistics. These figures consist of schedule data only. Table II following provides the requested passenger statistics based on traffic flow statistics. These figures consist of scheduled data only. Table II following contains data on charter operations between Saint John and foreign points (all west of New Brunswick). Further descriptions of the above statistics appear on the attached sheets.

TABLE I

ORIGIN STATISTICS

Year	Passengers Originating in Saint John destined for points west of New Brunswick	Passengers Originating in Saint John destined for Montreal	Passengers Originating in Saint John destined for Toronto	Passengers Originating in Saint John destined for Boston
1973	49,465	14,950	16,035	4,010
1974	58,540	17,230	18,810	3,950
1975	(Data for 1975 are not yet available)

Table I—Origin statistics refers to the first point in the itinerary (i.e. the point where the passenger first board an air carrier at the beginning of his trip).

TABLE II*

DEPARTING TRAFFIC FLOW STATISTICS

Year	Passengers next stop west of New Brunswick	Passengers next stop Montreal	Passengers next stop Toronto	Passengers next stop Boston
1973	52,609	28,460	912	23,237
1974	40,918	23,399	-	17,519
1975	51,300	27,100	10,200	13,000

* Table II—The traffic flow statistics in this table are the passengers on scheduled flights which departed from the Saint John airport. These passengers did not necessarily originate in Saint John. Passengers whose next stop is in the interior of New Brunswick with their ultimate destination west of New Brunswick would not be counted in these statistics.

 Annual 1975 traffic flow statistics have been estimated from 9 months of data. The 51,300 includes an estimated 1,000 passengers to Quebec City.

 There was a small amount of traffic flying directly to Toronto in 1974 which was not contained in the traffic sample. This volume is estimated at less than 1,000 passengers.

NUMBER OF CANADIANS RECEIVING OLD AGE SECURITY PENSIONS

Question No. 3,974—Mr. Whittaker:

1. How many Canadians are receiving the Old Age Pension?

2. How many have a per annum income over $6,000?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. 1,954,000 as of December 31, 1975.

2. The information requested is not available in departmental records. (Note: Net income has no bearing in determining eligibility for receipt of the Old Age Security pension. Net income is a factor only in the determination of eligibility for receipt of Guaranteed Income Supplement and spouse's Allowance.)

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—ACQUISITION OF BOAT TO SERVE MONTMAGNY AND GROSSE-ÎLE

Question No. 3,979—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Did the Department of Agriculture, in 1975, acquire a boat to serve Montmagny and Grosse-Île and, if so (a) from whom (b) at what cost?

2. Was the boat repaired or modified before being put into service and, if so (a) at what cost (b) by whom?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes. (a) Eastern Equipment Limited, P.O. Box 10, Lachine, Quebec. (b) $31,500.

2. No. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable.

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie).

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I bring to Your Honour's attention that when we were last debating this bill, I believe I called it ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I am now informed that the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is correct. He had the floor at the conclusion of the previous debate. The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, when I called it ten o'clock at the conclusion of the last time we were debating this bill, I had pointed out that this party considers Bill C-68 a denial and a cutback of a right which this party fought very hard to change for the Canadian people. We fought to have in Canada a Medical Care Act which provided a basic medicare program to those provinces which chose to participate in it. It should be pointed out that the federal government contributes to the cost of medicare to the tune of 50 per cent in any program which a province embarks upon. I pointed out last time that this did not include any special provincial programs for the benefit of their citizens, such as denticare or pharmacare which are paid for 100 per cent by the provinces. The federal government does not put one nickel into those kinds of programs.

Bill C-68, which will cut the federal government's contribution to any increase in medicare costs to 13 per cent, places participating provinces on the horns of a dilemma. I previously pointed out that the province of Ontario, for example, was forced to adopt an alternative which the citizens of that province are finding very prejudicial to proper medical care. The Ontario minister of health, without any prior consultation with the communities or staffs involved, is running from hospital to hospital, followed by a coterie of press people, announcing the closing of a hospital here and a hospital there. Rather than cutting back on the federal government's contribution to medicare, this party feels that it should be increased. We should be moving into the field of preventive medicine.

This party has taken a very positive stand with regard to prevention. We have always been in favour of denticare programs because it seemed to us it was much better to identify dental problems early and embark upon remedial work amoung young patients while it was easier and less expensive to do so.

I have stated before that the government stands condemned for its failure to introduce any kind of program with respect to occupational hazards. In particular, the government has a responsibility for occupational health in uranium mines. On the basis of our experience in the uranium mining operation at Elliot Lake, we have pointed out that the government cannot avoid its responsibilities under the Atomic Energy Control Act. The federal government stands condemned for its failure to enforce safety standards under the act. It seems they are prepared to allow these workers to continue mining in very dangerous conditions as a result of which they end up with silicosis or cancer of the lungs. The cost is borne, finally, by the taxpayers of this country, and this is something which should not be necessary.

We have pointed out, too, that among the government's own employees, in the year 1974-75 there were 22,280 accidents which cost our taxpayers $7 million, a figure which does not include the cost of medicare. Where is the government's safety program directed at the welfare of its own workers? We feel a great deal could be done to cut costs by developing an industrial safety program in this area. Where are the priorities in this country? We are prepared to spend over a billion dollars for the Olympics. There is no stopping of the taps when it comes to that event; we let the expenditure go up and up. We saw only the other day that a parking lot for cars is to cost $60 million instead of $30 million. Bread and circuses: they will be the downfall of the government across the way. As I say, we are prepared to spend over a billion dollars for a two-week performance of muscle-building by a very select group of athletes, while we do not appear to be concerned about embarking upon a program of preventive medical care in this country.

We in this party have urged greater use of paramedics as a means of improving health standards generally. We have called attention to the fact that out-patient facilities are sadly lacking. Far from cutting back expenditure in this area, this is one direction in which we should be increasing it. The government does not need to concern itself about disciplining the provinces, bearing in mind the provinces themselves have to contribute 50 per cent of the cost of the medicare program. In addition, they must pay 100 per cent of the cost of any special programs upon which they may choose to embark.

The party to which I belong has urged the minister responsible to withdraw this bill. We are making this suggestion again today in very positive terms. The government ought to withdraw the bill and seek ways in which to implement a program of preventive medicine, as well as means by which reasonable steps could be taken to economize, if hon. members opposite so desire. Pushing the bill through the House now can only result in actions by the provinces which will be deleterious to the health of their people; it will force them to set priorities which involve the saving of money in very narrow areas.

One would assume the government would agree that the idea of bringing together the ministers of health was a good one. After all, the party opposite has always talked about participatory democracy. What happened to that notion? If he has the health of the people in mind, it is surely not beyond the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to call together his provincial colleagues and talk this matter out with them once more. We know already how it is affecting the people of Ontario, for example. The minister of health of that province does not consult with the municipalities or with the communities concerned. He does not consult with the staff of the hospitals who are affected by his decisions. For dramatic effect, he drives around in a big limousine announcing he is closing this hospital or that hospital. He zaps them!

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Rodriguez: I said "zap". By doing so, he creates a problem for the community concerned. That is not a reasonable way of determining priorities, it seems to me. I suppose it is the Liberal way of doing things.

I would direct attention, now, to a field with which we have concerned ourselves very little, the field of mental health. A reasonable way to approach this problem, it seems to me, would be by making treatment programs available to school boards to enable early identification of young people who might be encountering emotional problems so that ways could be found of helping such persons adjust to the situation. Instead of providing adequate facilities and personnel to make this possible, it seems we are prepared to let this situation boil over, and when a problem is created for society we shall simply lock these people up and throw away the key while we run around demanding what we call law and order. To my way of thinking we could spend, with advantage, a lot more money on the treatment and care of the mentally afflicted. Again, this is a subject which might well be discussed at a meeting of the health ministers.

Again I call upon the government to withdraw this bill and reconsider the whole question at a meeting with the provincial ministers, in an effort to arrive at a solution of the problem in a way which would be much more appealing and satisfactory to the people of Canada.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it is always a responsibility for a member to address himself to an important piece of legislation. We have a great deal of legislation before us. I sometimes think we have become something of a legislative treadmill. We never seem to catch up with our order paper or get down to what we have planned to do. For instance, I think that after ten years it is time we disposed of the national anthem bill one way or the other.

• (1520)

In these times it is important to make a major effort to produce legislation of vital content. In the days of Mackenzie King and R. B. Bennett there used to be two parliamentary sessions a year. Under the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) we have two years per session, so it is very confusing as to what is priority legislation. But if I were a man capable of righteous indignation, I would be indignant about this particular bill. I do not make any pretence to being a righteous man, nor am I often indignant, but I believe this bill is the most serious, hurtful and dangerous piece of legislation that I have seen in all the years I have been here—which is now nearly a score. It is dangerous, hurtful and iniquitous because it is doing just the opposite to what the representatives of the people in this people's institution should be doing.

If there is any maxim that should govern us, which should direct those who govern the state, it is clearly that those in society who most need help should be helped the most. Today we find ourselves in the midst of an austerity program. We are in an anti-inflation mood. And who are the chief targets of the operation? The elderly people.

Not long ago, Mr. Speaker, we knocked off the unemployment roll the poor old guys who had worked for years and years. When they reached 65 years of age they were told, "It's too bad, but you are out of luck". We are now doing this with the sick. I agree with what the former speaker said. A lot of nonsense comes out of the NDP corner, and I have been listening to it for many years; but they are not always wrong. I am appalled to read about hospitals being closed. The only way that policy can be justified in a civilized society would be if we had reached the stage where the hospitals had empty beds. Yet we all know that thousands and thousands of Canadians want hospital care and are not able to get it. People all over this country have been told, "Yes, we might get you in in 9 months, 10, or perhaps 15. But unless it is a terrible emergency, unless you have a 50 per cent chance of dying tomorrow, you won't get in".

Despite all the slick optimism of a publication called "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians", we all know that today we are not providing adequate health services for the Canadian people. To bring in a piece of legislation that is clearly designed to diminish the effectiveness and the range of services now being offered is—and I choose my words carefully—criminal injustice. It is an outrage to the sick people of this country, to the people who most need compassion, who most need care and who most need to be in the thoughts of all of us here today.

I thought my colleague from Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) came out with a very fine truism. He expressed it in a very articulate way in this debate a few days ago when he said that health is not a privilege that should be tied to the bank account of the state. I am not a stubborn man, but no one can convince me that there is any justice, rationale or wisdom in making a move to strengthen the economy by hitting at the sick, the infirm, the aged and the ill in our society. It is repugnant, and should be repugnant to any man or woman of compassion as he or she views the needs of the Canadian people.

My former leader, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), has taken part in this debate; I think it was the last speech he made on a piece of legislation in this chamber. It was very appropriate that he did enter the debate and bring to bear his great wisdom, broad experience and deep compassion. One of the great privilieges in my public life has been the opportunity of serving under the hon. member for Halifax. We in this country sometimes foolishly talk about the ideology of right and left, which actually has no bearing upon Canadian public life at all but is an imported European term. In the connection, the values and the problems relating to the people of Canada the hon. gentleman was right in the moral sense. He was just, he was compassionate and concerned. I am immensely proud of what he said the other day. During the years that he has been here as our leader he has never forsaken the same maxim I repeated at the beginning of my remarks—that a government must care for those who most need care.

I note, too, that another member who engaged in the debate was a former premier of Saskatchewan, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). He is a socialist; that is, if the NDP are still socialists. They do not talk much about that. He, too, has been a great humanitarian. He is a man who knows and cares about the problems of the poor, the dispossessed, the suffering, the infirm. I think the country should know that the two former premiers in this House spoke eloquently and with feeling on this particular measure. I endorse their views.

The hon. member who has just spoken was quite right in suggesting that this most reprehensible piece of legislation should be put in cold storage, or perhaps frozen forever, and that we should have consultation with the provinces in regard to this subject. The two major iniquities in this bill are on the side of compassion and care for people and, as my former leader said, care for confederation. You cannot build a strong country by knocking around the health services. You cannot build a healthy tomorrow by closing hospitals and forcing upon the provinces a diminution in medical care grants. You cannot build a healthy Canada if the word of the federal government given to the provinces is not respected or honoured.

I was in this House when medicare was launched. I remember very well the four-point formula that was put forward and what the spokesmen for the provinces said at that time. Many of them were reluctant to accept medicare. Some were upset, others disturbed. But in the end they had to accept, and did accept—and I believe they were right in accepting this for their people in the long run—the four-point program. Now, having gone through all that exercise, they hear that, unilaterally, the central government has changed the rules and has put upon each province a burden impossible to bear, while hurting the very people who can least stand an assault from a narrow-minded government in a belated binge of penny-pinching.

What is confederation but a continuing relationship of faith and understanding between constituent parties? Every province entered under special arrangements and negotiations. Some of them were under the British North America Act and some were put there subsequently; but the whole basis of this continuing experiment was that a word was given as valid. An agreement once entered upon is changed by discussions, by negotiation and not by a fiat of the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. That is not the way to keep the country going. Although we love our country and are filled with hopes for its future, let us not think there is something inevitable or that this country can automatically sustain the fabric of confederation, or that it is not capable of being torn apart. It is frail fabric, confederation. It always has been and it has required wisdom, moderation, consideration and concern to hold the country together.

The most important element in holding this country together is, was, and has to be, the national government, the national institutions—the very things which are common to all Canadians. If you have bad faith at the centre of the institutions of the nation, and if you have unilateral declarations and sudden fiats from one of the partners of confederation, then not only the health of the people but the health of our society, of our political institutions, of our parliamentary democracy, of politics itself and of confederation are assaulted; and this country cannot stand that kind of assault.

I should think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) would prove himself a big man if he could stand up some day—perhaps today—and say, "All of us are prone to error. I and my colleagues have made a mistake. We have reflected upon it, and we are going to withdraw the bill." He would find that in this opposition group, although we are much invigorated—that is why we have such fighting, young people speaking now—we are still understanding and agreeable. We will help him withdraw, we will turn over a new page, we will redirect him to the problems so that he may come out with something sensible. Perhaps the minister could then come forth with some careful consideration. He could talk to the ministers from all the provinces and assess with them the needs of the nation. He should remember that you do not break your word and keep the country strong. You do not harass, distress and beset the suffering and build a just society, a new society or a good society.

This is an outrageous piece of legislation. It is built upon shortsightedness, a regrettable tendency toward what I am afraid is showmanship, and a break in the economy in the very area that cannot be sustained. It is bad faith, and it is tearing at the vitals of confederation.

I think the minister has tried hard in his portfolio. He has sometimes been too autocratic both inside the House and outside. I do not think he is a foolish man. I think he wants to do a decent job. But he has been far too prone to foolish optimism. The book to which I referred, "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians", is slick, nonsensical, stupid optimism of the worst kind. The suggestion that in this country we have so many doctors we do not need any more, and we are not going to let anyone else come in, is nonsensical.

There are thousands of Canadians who today are living miles and miles from medical services; old people fearful that in the middle of winter, and perhaps in the middle of the night, they may want the services of a doctor. My good friend, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald)—from that prime province of the whole Dominion, Prince Edward Island—knows that there are people in that category, old people living in fear. Yet we read and hear that we have so many doctors we do not need any more. That, too, is an outrage.

It is also an outrage that as the years have gone by we have not provided for the training of more qualified medical people in this country. If we ever reach the stage—and we are a long way from it—where we have an abundance of doctors, there are, God knows, many parts of the world which could benefit from their services. Our medical schools should be enlarged and there should be more of them. We should be turning out more medical people. I have never been very attracted to the suggestion of these closed societies among certain professionals because they are, like all of us—or should be—devoted to the service of their fellow citizens rather than building closed shops.

I add my voice to those who condemn this bill, and that is a heavy word that I do not often use. I condemn it because it is wrong it terms of compassion, and I condemn it because it is dangerous to the unfolding and developing of confederation. There is no way that bad faith can be the foundation of good legislation. There is no way that aiming at the weaker elements of society, the people in need, can become just. This measure is wrong and improperly inspired, if I may use that word. It is wrong in detail, it is wrong in principle, and it is hurtful to confederation.

I make this appeal on behalf of the thousands of Canadians who need friends. It is tough enough to be sick, but it is harder when you read every day that it is going to be more and more difficult to get the kind of attention that might bring you through a debilitating illness back to that great glory of life, the feeling of good health. I say, also, that at a time when tensions within our country are very severe and the centrifugal forces are far too strong, it ill behooves the federal government to be acting in such a way toward the provinces in an area so sensitive to human need and so sensitive to the principle of confederation.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate on Bill C-68 I think it appropriate that, as a layman in these matters, I should try to express the feelings of some of the very able and distinguished members of the medical profession in my own constituency of Medicine Hat and perhaps of their counterparts throughout the province of Alberta. This is what I propose to do in my contribution to this important debate.

● (1540)

First of all, let us go back to Monday, June 23, 1975, when the then minister of finance presented the budget speech in the House of Commons. The minister stated that in light of the existing inflationary environment, his government was committed to restraining public expenditure. One of the major expenditure restraint programs announced in that budget was related to the two main statutory programs in the health field, namely, hospital and medical care insurance. The minister defended his government's decision to introduce controls in respect of these programs by stating that the annual increase in their cost had, on average, run well ahead of the growth of the national income and had increased 19.8 per cent over the previous year. The measures announced by the minister to control the increasing cost of health care have created a great deal of concern among the medical profession.

I propose to examine the measures designed to limit federal contributions to the provinces under the Medical Care Act and some of the potential implications of this program. In order to understand the government's program to limit federal contributions to the provinces under the Medical Care Act, it is necessary to have an understanding of the cost-sharing formula. The formula which is contained in the Medical Care Act basically calls for the government to contribute to each province half the average per capita cost of all insured services for all participating provinces, multiplied by the number of insured persons within the province. Under this formula, a major proportion of the total provincial medical care cost is provided by the federal government to those provinces in which the per capita cost of medical care is lower than the national average. The following quotation is taken directly from the minister's budget speech of last June:

> A second measure aimed at more effective cost control involves the establishment of a ceiling on the yearly rise in the contributions the federal government makes to the provinces under the Medical Care Act. Since provincial administrations will need some time to adjust their planning, this ceiling will be made effective for 1976, and subsequent years. More specifically a ceiling will be placed on the per capita rate of growth of federal contributions to provinces. This ceiling will be 13 per cent in 1976-77, 10½ per cent in 1977-78, and 8½ per cent in 1978-79, and subsequent years. The per capita approach means that varying rates of population growth between provinces, or from year to year will be automatically taken into account in total contributions to provinces.

The Medical Care Act operates under a fiscal year ending March 31. This means that the year April 1, 1975, to March 31, 1976, will be the base year upon which the ceiling for the federal contribution will be calculated. For example, if the average rate of per capita cost for medical care services is $100 in the 1975-76 fiscal year, the maximum average rate per capita cost upon which the federal government would compute payment to each province for 1976-77 would be $113.

There are two fundamental problems with the proposed federal controls as outlined in the budget speech of the minister. The proposed ceilings amount to price controls on physicians' services. No other sector of the economy had been subjected to wage or price controls at that time. Again referring to last June 23, 1975, the second major shortcoming is that the proposed price ceilings must make allowance for several variables which directly affect real physician income such as increases in utilization, increased number of physicians, overhead and inflation. Despite the lack of stability in these variables, the proposed ceilings appear to be inflexible.

Before examining the implications of the ceilings on federal contributions to Alberta, it is worth while to determine whether in fact control is justified. In his budget speech, the minister stated that the previous year federal contributions to the provinces in respect of the hospital and medical care insurance programs had to be increased 19.8 per cent over the year before. The average per capita medical care cost for the ten major provinces rose only 5.9 per cent from the fiscal year ended March 31, 1973, to the fiscal year ended March 31, 1974.

It can be shown that the annual increase in average per capita medicare costs for Canada from 1971 to 1974 averaged 6.9 per cent. From 1971 to 1974 the average annual increase in per capita GNP at market prices was 12.8 per cent. Furthermore, from June, 1971, to June, 1974, the Canadian consumer price index rose an average of 7.9 per cent annually, while average weekly wages and salaries rose 8.5 per cent annually. The increases in per capita medicare costs in Alberta have been substantially below those of Canada as a whole. From 1970 to 1974, the annual rate of increase in per capita medicare costs in Alberta averaged only 3.8 per cent. In the same period of time, per capita gross domestic product in Alberta rose 13.6 per cent annually. Further, from June, 1970, to June, 1974, the consumer price index for Edmonton and Calgary averaged an annual increase of 5.7 per cent, while average weekly wages and salaries in Alberta averaged an increase of 8.6 per cent annually.

I want to point out that the physicians of Alberta have demonstrated a great deal of responsibility in controlling increases in the cost of medicare. For example, in 1971 the per capita cost of medical care in Alberta was almost identical to the national average. By 1974, Alberta's per capita cost of medicare services was 12.6 per cent less than the national average. This has resulted in the federal government assuming a larger proportion of the total Alberta medicare costs. From 1971 to 1974, the percentage of total costs for insured services in Alberta, paid for by the federal government, increased from 48.6 per cent to 56.3 per cent because Alberta is operating at a lower cost.

Further, federal contributions, plus premiums, are almost sufficient to pay for the total cost of basic medical services. It is only when the costs of chiropractic, optometric, podiatric, oral surgery and osteopathic services, as well as Alberta health care administrative costs are added, that the province of Alberta must contribute. The province of Alberta contributed $3.9 million in 1971, $8.7 million in 1972, $10 million in 1973, and $17.5 million in 1974.

● (1550)

Mr. Speaker, the foregoing suggests that per capita medicare costs in Canada, and especially in Alberta, have not been increasing at an unreasonable rate. Furthermore, the government of Alberta has not been required to subsidize the cost of medicare to any great extent. No one denies that total health care costs are increasing rapidly, but the responsibility for these large increases does not lie with medicare payments.

Now I should like to make some comments on the increases in these medicare payments. Legislation to impose the ceiling on federal contributions as outlined in the budget speech was drafted and received first reading in the House last July 8. Bill C-68 also contains the clause which excludes new insured services from the ceiling on federal cost-sharing. A new insured service is defined as—> a health service prescribed after June 23, 1975, by the minister pursuant to subsection 4(3) that was furnished pursuant to a medical care insurance plan of the province at a time during the first twelve months in which that health service was deemed by subsection 4(3) to be, in respect of that province, a service rendered by a medical practitioner that is medically required.

To examine the impact of Bill C-68 as it is currently written, we shall assume for the time being that the government of Alberta will not allow medicare payments to Alberta physicians to increase at a rate higher than the ceilings proposed by the federal government. I think this is a fair assumption. This would then amount to a global budgeting situation, with substantial declines in real physician income. There are several factors beyond the control of physicians which will reduce increases in average net physician income to a level far below that of the proposed ceilings. A real increase in total medicare payments to physicians should theoretically be an increase in income for providing the same number of equal medical services. Allowance must be made to pay for providing more medical services from the increase in total medicare payments as governed by the ceilings in Bill C-68. The demand for more medical services is a function of increased population and increased utilization. Another major factor in reducing average net physician income will be an increasing number of physicians sharing a limited pool of funds. Finally, rising costs of overhead will have to be paid for out of the increases as governed by Bill C-68.

To examine the combined impact of these factors upon average net physician income, taking into account the increases as proposed by Bill C-68, we shall first estimate what the future increases in the variables might be. We shall then utilize a hypothetical case to determine the proportion of the increases that the average Alberta physician would receive as increased net income. As mentioned previously, the demand for more medical services is a function of increased population and increased utilization. However, the federal government has indicated that the federal contribution to the provinces will be calculated on a per capita basis, which means that increased cost due to increasing population will not have to be accounted for within the ceilings proposed in Bill C-68.

However, no allowance has been made for increased utilization of medical services. Two major reasons for increasing utilization are that with reduced birth rates and longer life expectancy, there is a shift in the age distribution of the population toward the older segments who traditionally require more medical services. Since 1971, utilization in Alberta—measured by the total number of medical services per 1,000 persons—has increased at an average annual rate of about 2 per cent. Increases in average gross medicare payments to physicians will be considerably lower than the ceilings proposed under Bill C-68 because of increasing numbers of physicians sharing the pie. From 1964 to 1974, the number of Alberta physicians registered with the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta averaged an annual increase of 5.1 per cent. From 1971 to 1974, registration with the college averaged a yearly increase of 3.7 per cent. In the same period of time, the number of physicians receiving payments from the AHCIC has increased an average of 4.3 per cent annually. It therefore seems reasonable to project that the average annual rate of increase in the number of physicians in Alberta will be approximately 4 per cent.

The Department of National Health and Welfare publication "Earnings of Physicians in Canada" reported that overhead consumed 37.4 per cent of gross professional earnings of Alberta physicians in 1972. This overhead percentage was equivalent to $16,620 of the average gross AHCIC payments to physicians in 1972. From 1972 to 1974, average gross AHCIC payments to physicians increased only 9 per cent, while overhead costs have risen substantially in the light of inflation. The major components of increasing total overhead included increasing cost of rent, medical supplies and the unprecedented increases in salaries of allied health personnel. For example, in 1975 registered nurses received effective salary increases of about 33 per cent, certified nursing aides received a 48 per cent increase, laboratory and X-ray technologists received average increases of 35 per cent, and clerical staff in hospitals received average increases of approximately 40 per cent.

In the light of inadequate increases in average gross AHCIC payments and rapidly increasing overhead costs since 1972, it is estimated that for the average Alberta physician overhead will consume 45 per cent of professional earnings in 1975. This would represent an average 12.5 per cent annual increase in actual overhead dollars from 1972 to 1975. For the purpose of illustration, it has been conservatively estimated that overhead dollars will increase 10 per cent annually from 1976 onward.

Let us assume that the government of Alberta will not increase the proportion of total medicare costs paid for from the coffers of the province. We shall also assume that the government of Alberta is well aware that increased utilization will result in an increase in the number of medical services of approximately 2 per cent annually. It follows that the largest increase to physicians that the Alberta government would be willing to negotiate would be the federal ceiling, less 2 per cent. In other words, the maximum increase for 1976-77 would be 11 per cent, 8.5 per cent for 1977-78, and 6.5 per cent for 1978-79 and subsequent years.

To illustrate the impact of these effective ceilings on net physician income, let us assume that total payments to 2,400 Alberta physicians for insured medical care services were $120 million in the 1975-76 base year. With the previously determined estimates for increasing numbers of physicians and increasing overhead, average net physician income will increase only 4.1 per cent in 1976-77 and will actually begin to decline in 1977-78 and subsequent years. By the 1977-78 fiscal year the moneys required to compensate for increased overhead and increasing numbers of physicians will exceed the total dollar increase in medicare payments. This, of course is the reason for declining net income from 1977-78 onward.

● (1600)

This decline in average net physician income will be further exacerbated by general inflation in the economy which will reduce real net physician income. The Economic Council of Canada, in its eleventh annual review, showed that the incidence of inflation is about the same for all families, regardless of their income level. From December, 1972, to December, 1974, the consumer price index for Edmonton and Calgary rose 21.3 per cent. The latest Statistics Canada figures show that the Canadian CPI rose 11.1 per cent from July, 1974, to July, 1975. If it is conservatively estimated that the consumer price index will increase 9 per cent annually to 1980, it can be calculated that average net physician income, expressed 1975-76 constant dollars, will decline 34.5 per cent by the 1979-80 fiscal year.

[Mr. Hargrave.]

It can be shown that Bill C-68 does not adequately take into account such factors as increased population, utilization, number of physicians, overhead and inflation. If this bill is legislated, average net income in Alberta will decline substantially. This is obviously unacceptable to Alberta physicians as it can be illustrated that since the advent of medicare in Alberta the average real net income of the average physician has decreased almost 40 per cent. Alberta physicians require substantial increases in average gross income merely to regain the real net income received several years ago. I have demonstrated that there is no justification for the federal government imposing controls upon increases in medicare payments when the average annual rate of increase in per capita costs for Alberta has averaged only 3.8 per cent since 1970. A consequence of higher standards of medical care can be increased costs. If unreasonable cost controls are introduced, it is possible that health care standards could be adversely affected. Further, the physicians of Alberta may have no alternative but to look more to the patient in order to maintain income.

I think it is obvious that I cannot agree with the intent of this bill, and I certainly share the feelings which my colleague from Prince Edward Island expressed in his remarks just before mine. Surely we should at least set this bill aside until the new control and restraint policy which we are now endeavouring to put into effect has had a chance to operate.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I am rather sorry that the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) are not here. In the speech of the hon. member for Hillsborough this afternoon there were colourful adjectives. He said Bill C-68 was an outrage and a criminal injustice. He said that no rational wisdom should be imposed upon the poor and the infirm. I could not agree with him more, and I suggest that the hon. member send a copy of his speech to the minister of health of Ontario, because that is the very thing the minister of health of Ontario is doing by his actions. His actions are an outrage and an imposition on the poor and the infirm in Ontario. The hon. member also said it is necessary to have discussion and negotiation with regard to Bill C-68.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question at this point?

Mr. Gilbert: When I have finished my speech I will be delighted to handle about 30 or 40 questions. That is how good I feel today. The hon. member for Hillsborough also wanted the Minister of National Health and Welfare to have discussion and negotiation with regard to Bill C-68. I ask the hon. member for Hillsborough what discussion and negotiation the Ontario minister of health had with regard to closing hospitals in Ontario. Did he have discussions with the municipalities, the workers in the hospitals, or with patients? Not for one minute. In fact, the Ontario minister of health marched across the province closing hospitals without any negotiation or discussion whatsoever. The hon. member wound up his speech by saying that he would like the Minister of National Health and Welfare to say that he made a mistake and is prepared to correct this mistake by withdrawing the bill. Surely the hon. member for Hillsborough—

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order at this time to point out that the Ontario hospital closures are the direct result of federal Liberal policies.

Mr. Gilbert: Is that not an admission by the medical critic of the Conservative party? He says that just because we in Ottawa make a mistake, the minister of health in Ontario should make a mistake. Surely it is the purpose of this discussion to persuade the Minister of National Health and Welfare not to make the mistake which the Ontario minister of health is presently making. The hon. member for Hillsborough says we should withdraw the bill because there has been a mistake with regard to it. There certainly has been a mistake in Ontario, and the health critic for the Conservative party and the hon. member for Hillsborough should send copies of their speeches to the Ontario minister of health and persuade him to stop this nonsense about closing hospitals in Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: I really did not intend to participate in this debate, but when I read in the newspapers that a result of the closing of a hospital in Toronto is the laying off of 1,200 workers, that just indicates the impact of the action which the Ontario minister of health is taking. The Doctors' Hospital is, I am sure, in the riding of one of the Liberal members—probably the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) or perhaps the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia); I am not sure. But when I think of all the people in Ontario who depend on the Doctors' Hospital for care, hospitalization and medical services, and when I think of the Ontario minister of health, without a minute's notice, closing that hospital and affecting the patients in it, the people within the community, and causing the unemployment of 1,200 people, it is time I spoke up in this regard.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in view of the fact that during this debate we are discussing hospital closures, I wonder if the hon. member would also give us the number of closures in the province of Saskatchewan. This is pertinent to the argument he is presenting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest we listen to the hon. member, because we might learn something.

Mr. Gilbert: I think the answer has been provided to the hon. member. Not one hospital has been closed in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Brisco: I can prove you are wrong.

Mr. Gilbert: One can see that I have the picture in focus with regard to the Ontario government closing hospitals and the effect this will have on the people of Ontario. I am sorry the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not here this afternoon, but I notice his parliamentary secretary is here and I hope he will convey my message to the minister, because the minister really deserves the snowball treatment the Ontario minister of health received. When the Ontario minister of health went out and announced what he was doing, he got a snowball reception. I challenge the Minister of National Health and Welfare to go out and tell the people of Canada what is contained in this bill and what the impact and effect of the bill will be. I am certain he will receive the same snowball treatment. He deserves snowball treatment. You will notice that after the Ontario minister of health had finished going round the province telling communities that their hospitals would be closed, he took a week's rest in the Caribbean. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare were to cross Canada and tell people the impact of this bill, he would need to take two or three weeks off in the Caribbean.

● (1610)

Mr. Nystrom: Especially if he told the red Tories.

Mr. Gilbert: The minister disappoints me. I thought he was a red Liberal. This past weekend we heard much about red Tories. I thought the minister was a red Liberal with progressive ideas. I thought he had compassion and reason. He made changes with regard to family allowances and pensions. The minister is not a red Liberal; he is a bureaucratic administrator who concentrates on efficiency and not on the development of socially valuable programs in Canada. The minister should introduce the guaranteed annual income, a socially valuable program, instead of delaying it. I suspect the government is delaying it until the next election: it will introduce the program in the next election campaign and say, "Are we not wonderful?"

What sort of man is the minister? He favours family allowances not being indexed. What a thing to do! I thought the minister was progressive and compassionate, yet he favours the elimination of family allowance indexing. Instead of doing something progressive, the minister introduced Bill C-68 which will impose strict limits on the cost-sharing of medical services and the extension of services related thereto. If he were truly progressive and compassionate he would introduce amendments to include dental care, pharmacare and physiotherapy.

Mr. Yewchuk: And dental floss.

Mr. Gilbert: He would introduce nutritional programs. He should not limit health services; he ought to expand them. When will he implement phase two of his plan for Canadian medical services, the plan set forth in a beautiful pamphlet dealing with national perspectives on health? We need more health care centres, paramedics, community clinics and financial help for hospital building programs. What has happened to these plans? Where are the amendments for including these programs in our health policies? If the minister were progressive and compassionate, he would include them. Where are the preventive medicine measures? In his opening speech the minister said we must change our life-style and environment. What has he done?

An hon. Member: He's made it cheaper to die.

Mr. Gilbert: What is the government doing to clean up our environment? How will the minister help our native peoples who suffer from mercury poisoning in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories? He has done nothing to help them. What will the government do to help the people at Port Hope who are affected by residual radiation, radiation caused by the actions of a federal Crown corporation, Eldorado? What has the minister done to offset the financial losses the people of the area may have suffered? He has not done a thing.

An hon. Member: It's cheaper to die.

Mr. Gilbert: What has the minister done about lead contamination in Ontario, especially in Toronto? I notice two Toronto area Liberals in the far corner, the hon. member for Davenport and the hon. member from Scarborough. I ask them, what has the government done with regard to lead contamination in Toronto which has affected the lives of many, especially the young? The jobs of many are affected. What has the government done? I expect the minister would say, "This problem falls within provincial jurisdiction; therefore, we will do nothing about it."

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the hon. member permit an answer?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I shall be delighted to hear the parliamentary secretary when I have finished. My speech is nearing its conclusion. I shall have something to say about the parliamentary secretary too. The Minister of National Health and Welfare thinks he looks big and brave because he saved Canadians from an American football intrusion. But he has done little to correct Canadian environmental difficulties, and this makes him look small.

Let me discuss other issues which the minister raised. What has the minister done to correct drug abuse in Canada? I include cigarettes among drugs, as well as heroin, marijuana and other drugs? I will tell you: he has done little, to his shame. The minister whom we thought was progressive and compassionate is hiding behind a jurisdictional wall, saying, "Probably all we can do is introduce some kind of educational program." Is that how we are to correct this difficulty? If little or nothing is done to correct drug abuse, it will be to the minister's everlasting shame and discredit.

What has the minister done with regard to child abuse? Not long ago the minister and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs so ably chaired by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson). Both ministers made wide-ranging speeches voicing their concern over child abuse. Both said it was necessary to correct child abuse. Last week the committee heard the testimony of two most competent witnesses on child abuse. One was Bryon Gero and the other was Professor Cyril Greenland of the Ontario Association of Professional Social Workers. They told the committee many of the problems concerning child abuse. Bryon Gero said that we need a commonly understood definition of child abuse, a central registry, provisions for mandatory reporting of child abuse and, more importantly, preventive programs. He told the committee what the Minister of National Health and Welfare ought to do if we are to correct child abuse. He said that we need demographic information concerning housing and social service needs—an excellent point.

He said that we need programs which will strengthen family life and improve social services and education—another excellent point. He said, further, that we need detection programs involving schools, police, social workers, hospitals and doctors. We need to solve premarital problems, and need assessment services which will take into account family relationships. We need marriage and group counselling services and services to examine behavioural problems. He seems to say that we need, immediately, a guaranteed income plan and better day-care programs, I hope that the parliamentary secretary, who is a member of the committee, will tell the minister what Bryon Gero told the committee and convey to the House how necessary it is to introduce the guaranteed annual income and more day-care centres if we are to eliminate child abuse.

We then had Professor Greenland, who indicated a research experience arising out of a program in which he studied 100 persons who were not guilty of violent crimes by reason of insanity, another 100 persons guilty and in penitentiaries for violent crimes, another 96 persons who were dangerous sexual offenders, and another 65 persons who committed murder followed by suicide. The common denominator that he found with regard to the study was that there was a severe deprivation in childhood for all these people in some of the basic cares, needs and protections that they required. He pointed out that there was a high degree of the passing on of tendencies with regard to these people who suffered severe deprivation in their childhood. He also pointed out that a great number of the cases occurred as a result of alcohol and drug abuse. I would underline that fact to the parliamentary secretary.

He also pointed out that even though there had been adequate warning in 50 per cent of the cases—in other words, from the mother or the person seeking help—there was a failure to deal with the person seeking help. He said there has not been a serious epidemic of child abuse, but if conditions prevail there is a possibility that there will be. He pointed out how much research and identification is needed, with regard to this problem, and the necessity of programs to deal with these people.

In the minds of many people throughout this country, child abuse is one area where the Minister of National Health and Welfare could make a great contribution toward lessening the impact of the problem. What does he do? I fear I know what he is going to do. He is going to say that this is within provincial jurisdiction, and the government will try their best to give a few pennies to research. Instead of stimulating the provinces to take action and supplying moneys to develop research and programs so that we can have prevention, the minister does little or nothing. This is what he has done so far.

I want to deal with what some of the Liberal members have said in their speeches, especially the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Railton). I am sorry he is not here this afternoon. He replaces another Liberal member. I am sure all who knew Don Tolmie would say that without doubt he was a concerned and compassionate person. When I hear the remarks of the parliamentary secretary they send shivers down my spine. He said that the main unserviced areas in medical care are the frontiers. I take strong exception to that statement.

If the parliamentary secretary had heard what the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) said with regard to the problems in East Richmond, he would realize how necessary it is to expand medical and hospital services in the maritimes. I am sure that members from Newfoundland, Quebec, the prairie provinces, the north, and British Columbia can repeat the problems that they have with regard to the shortage of medical care. When the parliamentary secretary talks about a shortage on the frontiers, he is right. However, the frontiers are not only in the outlying areas; they are in the inlying areas in the main cities.

The hon. member for Spadina, who has a constituency fairly adjacent to mine, and the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Roberts), can tell you of the number of people who have related to us their problems with regard to medical and hospital care. There is not a shadow of doubt with regard to the shortage of medical hospital services in the city of Toronto. I am sure the same thing applies to other main cities across the province.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs compared Canadian medical services to United States medical services. He said that U.S. medical services are as good, if not better, than Canadian services. Any person who has experienced U.S. medical care services realizes that it is not difficult to beat or to better them. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) set forth the problem of a civil servant who went to Florida at Christmas with his wife and children. His child became ill and he took the child to the hospital. The greeting he received at the hospital was that if he placed $1,500 to the deposit of that hospital, they would take care of the child. A person whom I know lives in Florida a few months of the year. I asked why he did not stay there permanently. He said he could not afford to become ill in Florida; he has to come back to Canada to protect himself and his family. It is passing strange that Senator Ted Kennedy would come to Canada, study our program, praise it and want to implement it as part of the Democratic party's campaign in the next election, yet the parliamentary secretary wants us to take the American experience and the American service.

I wish to deal for a few minutes with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Kaplan). He stated that 6.9 per cent of our gross national product goes to medicare, compared to 7.7 per cent in the United States. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, as a very reasonable and understanding person, what relationship our gross national product should have to medical services. None whatsoever. The test should be that every Canadian is entitled to full and adequate medical and hospital care. That is the test we should apply to education, pensions, housing and unemployment. Every person in Canada is entitled to employment, to decent housing, to decent medical services and to a decent pension. That should be the test. There should not be a relationship to the gross national product. I can see the parliamentary secretary shaking his head and asking, "Where are we going to get the money?" What is necessary is that we arrange our priorities to look after the basic needs of the people.

I was rather proud to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last night on television when he dealt with the delegation from the chambers of commerce and read a few excerpts from their brief which said the government should cut its spending in this area and that area. Nowhere in the brief was there any mention of cuts in the area of corporate welfare. The government, they argued, should cut its spending in housing and on social services but should not consider for one moment cutting down the billions the corporations received.

It would be fair to ask what the NDP would do with regard to medicare. Look at our record. We stand tall and proud when we think of the medical services we have provided in Canada. Let me name them. In 1947, the member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) introduced hospitalization insurance in Saskatchewan. In 1962 he introduced the medicare program in Saskatchewan. The NDP has introduced medicare programs in Manitoba and in British Columbia, of which we are justly proud. We have added dental and pharmacare and we have developed community clinics and out-patient facilities which the people of those provinces appreciate and wish to protect.

Look at the Tory record. I give them credit for closing the loophole in 1958 in the Liberal legislation which stated that hospitalization programs would be constituted on a national scale when a majority of the provinces, representing a majority of the population, consented. I give the Tories credit for closing that loophole. I give them credit, too, for establishing a royal commission under the able leadership of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall. That commission produced one of the best reports on health care we have ever seen. Also, I must, reluctantly, give credit to the Liberal government under the late Lester Pearson in 1968 for finally introducing medicare insurance across the country. But when one comes to think of it, Mackenzie King said in 1919 that part of the Liberal program would be to institute hospital medical care. But it took from 1919 to 1968 to put that program into operation.

I notice that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) is here with us. It would be fair for me to say that he was the minister responsible for bringing forward that legislation, and for doing so he deserves the gratitude of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: He is a man of concern and conviction. It is unfortunate that he is in the wrong party, but whether he is in the Liberal party or in the NDP—

An hon. Member: Perhaps he is a red Tory.

Mr. Gilbert: —at least he is a concerned individual. We have another—Senator Croll in the other House. If I ever heard of a Jeremiah, there he is, that senator. When he heard about Bill C-68, his reaction was immediate. He said, "No, no; a thousand times no." He said the bill was wrong, wrong, wrong.

Mr. Brisco: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. The statement was made by myself that there had been closures of hospitals in Saskatchewan—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Brisco: Members on my left cannot stand the truth. They do not want to know the facts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): If the hon. member will come to his point of order, we will listen.

Mr. Brisco: It has been stated that no hospitals in Saskatchewan have been closed. The figures are these—

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): That is a matter of debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Gilbert: Madam Speaker, I have another hour and forty minutes to go. The hon. member's intervention has taken up some of my valuable time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: In his opening remarks, the minister said that Canada had one of the finest health systems in the world. We in the NDP will make it the finest health system in the world. Countries such as the United Kingdom, the Scandinavian countries, Holland, New Zealand, West Germany and Israel have programs which are far superior to those we have in Canada. Yet Canada is far richer than the United Kingdom and the other countries I have mentioned. It should be a matter of shame to us that we do not have the finest programs. We in the NDP would act in co-operation with the provinces, not unilaterally. We would not behave as the minister of health has done in Ontario, or as the federal minister has acted.

Before I go any further, and to protect myself, I move at this point, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That Bill C-68 be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months' hence.

I have stated that we in the NDP would act in a co-operative manner rather than unilaterally. We have noted the action taken by the federal government and by the government of Ontario—

Mr. Dinsdale: And by the Saskatchewan government.

Mr. Gilbert: I hope the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) makes a speech. He looks up and gives me a pleasant smile, but I do not know whether he is with me or against me. All of us know that the provinces are now spending $1.5 billion on extra care services which are not included in the 50-50 program. We in the NDP would certainly arrange our priorities to make sure that any national medicare program would include the services which are now being paid for by the provinces. We would set our priorities in such a way as to make this possible. Can you imagine the Ontario minister of health travelling across the province closing hospitals and creating unemployment to save $50 million? Surely the government of Ontario could cut $50 million from its highways budget without the impact being felt. We in this parliament could trim the defence program. Can you imagine spending $900 million on new planes, which we are hoping to get from Lockheed, and at the same time cutting down the money devoted to hospital services?

Finally, we in the NDP would strive for efficiency by developing community clinics and alternate care facilities, because it is too expensive to keep some people in hospitals. We would develop home nursing. We would develop pharmacare to reduce costs. It is very important to control costs.

[Mr. Brisco.]

● (1640)

What worries me and the people of this country is that the control the government is imposing is not really control but a mere shifting of the burden to people who cannot pay. When I hear some hon. members talk of the imposition of deterrent fees I realize that they do not have an appreciation of what deterrent fees mean or what they will do to poor people. All that deterrent fees will do is deter people who require services and cannot pay for them, from attempting to get them. Finally, Madam Speaker, I hope that we can establish a partnership on a 50-50 basis to cost-share all the required services, so all Canadians are healthier and happier people.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Before putting the hon. member's amendment to the House, may I inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight pursuant to Standing Order 40 are as follows: the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz)—Citizenship—Request that vacancies in Toronto citizenship courts be filled—Government position; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Transport—Possible discussions on use of Manhattan to move oil through northern waters; the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Alleged inadequacy of French language coverage of Conservative convention.

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It has been moved by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That Bill C-68 be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months' hence.

Mr. Brisco: Madam Speaker, is it now appropriate for me, in addressing the Chair, to ask whether the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) would permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. We would need unanimous consent, since the hon. member's time has expired. Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) allow a question?

Mr. Gilbert: Certainly.

Mr. Brisco: Madam Speaker, my question to the hon. member for Broadview is with reference to his remarks concerning the number of hospitals that have been closed in Saskatchewan. Would the hon. member be prepared to accept the figures of Statistics Canada, which indicate that in 1972 one hospital was closed in Saskatchewan and that in 1973 three hospitals were closed in Saskatchewan? Would he be prepared to accept the premise that in all likelihood Statistics Canada has not been able to compile the number of hospitals closed in Saskatchewan in 1975?

Mr. Gilbert: Madam Speaker, I would have thought the hon. member would have given some body and substance to his question by following it up with the reasons for these closings. I would speculate that one of the reasons is that they have developed more community clinics. It may be that there has been a shift in population from the country to the cities. I want the reason for the closings, not the mere fact that there have been closings.

What I wanted to stress was that in Ontario, where we need medical services, the Ontario minister of health deliberately closed hospitals. That is what struck me so forcibly. He closed them without even consulting the hospitals—one of the most dictatorial acts I have ever heard of. Yet the health critic for the Conservative party says, "The reason we closed them in Ontario was that the federal government brought forth Bill C-68". Madam Speaker, what an excuse! I hope that the next time the hon. member asks a question he will give it a little more strength and body by stating the reasons the hospitals were closed. I am doubly sure they were not closed because of a shortage of medical and hospital services. Rather, I suspect they were closed because there was a surplus.

[Translation]

Mr. Kaplan: Am I allowed to ask a last question?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member's time has expired, so it can only be done with unanimous consent. Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member for Broadview allow another question?

Mr. Gilbert: Madam Speaker, I did not realize I was so popular. I would be delighted.

Medical Care Act

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, are we to assume from the hon. member's devastating attack on the policies of the Conservative government of Ontario that the NDP at Queen's Park will seek to bring down the Conservative government at the earliest opportunity?

Mr. Gilbert: Madam Speaker, did you ever hear such a question put by such a person? I would have thought that he would have told us what the leader of the Liberal party of Ontario was going to do. It is obvious what he is going to do; he is going to vote with the Conservative party.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I am afraid the question and the answer are outside the motion.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, for one who has been in the House of Commons a number of years this is rather a sad occasion—I am taking my handkerchief out already. To see a once vigorous and creative government coasting to a conclusion in this way, even for members of the opposition brings a certain sense of sadness. I have been involved in all the debates giving rise to the excellent medicare program that we now have in Canada. The spirit of rising expectations moved us forward in 1958 when the then Conservative government—in this regard I appreciate the complimentary words of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)—brought in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. This was a great breakthrough in medical care for Canadians on a universal basis.

I think everyone will admit that it is the cost of hospitalization that breaks the financial back of families. Anyone who has had chronic illness in their family knows that hospital bills can leap forward to $25,000, $50,000, even to $75,000; and no family, regardless of its means, can stand financial burdens of that kind. We then came to 1968 when, based on the excellent report of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, the Medical Care Act was passed by the Pearson government.

Now we seem to be marching backwards. When the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) was leader of the opposition, he put the situation in very nice perspective, using the proper words, when he said that the government was busy drowning its own brainchildren. This is yet another example. The official opposition has just been reinvigorated by the election of a new, young and energetic leader, and I am hoping that this dramatic transformation in the political affairs of the nation will reverse the trend in public affairs that has become all too obvious in recent years.

Just to quote the spirit that prevails in government ranks as expressed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) as recently as 1974 when he presented his white paper on medicare in Canada, as recorded at page 5 of the report he said:

> Good health is the bedrock on which social progress is built. A nation of healthy people can do those things that make life worth while, as the level of health increases so does the potential for happiness.

● (1650)

Obviously, Bill C-68 is, as hon. members who have spoken have described it, a thoroughly bad bill and will certainly do nothing to increase the potential for happiness of the Canadian people. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who is in the House today, made many significant and optimistic statements in respect of health care in Canada some years ago when we were waiting for contemplated action on the Hall report. He said:

> Health is not a privilege tied to the state of one's bank account, but rather a basic right which should be open to all.

I trust that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is busy in conversation, has not forgotten those words. Hopefully, he will take part in this debate to reinforce the spirit of enthusiasm and creativity regarding health services expressed in those remarks which he made some ten years ago.

We have all been proud of the fact that Canada has a fine and outstanding medicare program. Indeed, when Canadians tended to become slightly hyperbolic we used to say it was the finest medicare program in the world. We are now running into problems of higher and rising costs. This was to be expected, as outlined when we took part in the debate back in 1968. The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) predicted this would be the case unless priorities were stressed, unless the preventive aspect of health care were stressed and unless the second stage, as it was described by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), were adopted. He said the passing of the hospital diagnostic act and the approval of the medicare act was only the beginning, and that these would do nothing to deal with the real problems of medicare and health in the nation other than to provide an adequate basis of financial support. The second and inevitable stage, with which we have really never come to grips, was the organization of a program of education and prevention that would provide the best possible medical services at the least possible cost.

This government, which has lost its zeal for the just society, has lost its momentum and is now coasting downhill to an inevitable conclusion. It has lost its vision and has come up with a simplistic solution. It has decided that putting an arbitrary ceiling on federal contributions will solve all the problems of the medicare program. This is as simplistic as the government's approach to inflation which was once described as the major attack of the government in wrestling inflation to the ground. The bill is very brief, consisting only of three pages. Its very brevity indicates that a simplistic solution has been applied to what is an extremely complex problem. To put the matter in proper perspective, perhaps we should look back on how we came to have the outstanding health care program that is Canada's resulting from action in the 1950s and 1960s.

At the time the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act was passed in 1958 there was a great and growing need for this basic hospital care program. There was agitation for a follow up with some sort of medicare financial protection program. Based on the hospital insurance act, some provinces seized the initiative and moved into this further area of development. Saskatchewan, with a great and noisy debate, led the way. Manitoba chose the road of voluntary health insurance, as did Ontario.

I remember, at the time the Government of Canada was insisting that every province conform to the compulsory program, it was proposing there was considerable resistance on the part of the province of Manitoba because it had a very successful and broad coverage under a voluntary program operated by the physicians of Manitoba. At the federal government's insistence, Manitoba was forcefully brought into line with the federal compulsory program. This has been dealt with by several speakers as the beginning of the federal invasion into the area of provincial prerogatives in respect of health and welfare. This led to the statement of the then minister of finance in the province of Ontario, the Hon. Charles MacNaughton, who said, "We have started down the slippery slope of fiscal irresponsibility, with the result that we are now faced with a further arbitrary and almost bewildering invasion of the prerogatives of provincial jurisdiction."

No wonder provincial governments of all stripes, and without exception, reacted with indignation and bewilderment when the program was first announced in the budget last June. Let me quote the immediate response of the minister of health and social development from my own province of Manitoba. He said this in a telegram of June 25, 1975:

> Your government's decision to proceed with major changes on a unilateral basis is a serious disappointment to our province and, I assume, to most others ... Not only does the decision represent an apparent breach of our earlier understanding ... (in January)

Let me interpolate by saying the government is still confused in this time of wrestling with inflation. According to the statement of the minister of health for Manitoba, it reversed itself from decisions and agreements that had been reached at the earlier conference in January. Of course, this is not the only reversal of the government. It reversed itself 180 degrees on prices and incomes policy without any warning other than the resignation of the then minister of finance. His resignation must have been based on his disagreement with this zig-zagging approach of the Government of Canada. Let me resume the quotation as follows:

> Not only does the decision represent an apparent breach of our earlier understanding (in January) but also, and more importantly, it suggests that your government has every intention of implementing legislative changes which will cause the primary financial reponsibility for the future reform of health care and for the maintenance of existing service standards to be borne by the provincial governments and their taxpayers ... It is obvious that such a decision would represent a significant threat to our national health standards ... standards based on a system which the federal government itself initiated.

That was on June 25 last year, from the province of Manitoba. That was followed by the statement of the province of Ontario, at the Victoria conference which was mentioned this afternoon by the hon. member for Broadview.

● (1700)

It was said they have very much to lose by this change in federal government policy because a heavy financial burden will fall upon them. The hon. member for Broadview attempted to severely castigate the province of Ontario in its attempt to deal with the financial problems that are already beginning to be felt. The minister of health for Manitoba, speaking at the Victoria conference that had been convened at the request of the government of Ontario, said:

> I think they (provincial premiers) will want to know what justification the federal government has for apparently choosing to make these essential programs one of the main targets of its campaign against inflation—even though it is obvious that the benefits these programs provide in terms of real income protection are among the most important safeguards we have against inflation for the low and middle income people in this country—and especially for the pensioners, the people who probably have been hurt worst by Ottawa's failure to bring rising prices under control.

Quebec also sent a telegram on June 25. There was an immediate response from right across the country which is being re-echoed by all speakers in the House at the present time. The minister of social affairs, the Hon. Claude E. Forget, of the Quebec Government sent a telegram in the following words:

First of all, I deplore the unilateral ceiling put on medical insurance by the federal government without warning—

There was absolutely no consultation. It was an arbitrary and a unilateral invasion of the provincial field. The quotation continues:

One must make the distinction between an economic measure favouring the Quebec taxpayer and an economic measure destined to advantage nothing but the federal treasury—the statement by (your) government belongs to this second category.

The federal government's hesitation in assuming its part of the financing of health services, in view of the present acts and agreements, shows once again how right Quebec is in favouring a fiscal transfer (of tax points) that would make the total financing responsibility coincide with the provinces complete responsibility in administering these services.

I could go on to quote from other statements by provincial ministers at the Victoria conference. Their objection and protest was universal, without exception, including the Liberal provincial administration. The Hon. Bill MacEachen minister of public health, at the Victoria conference said:

I share a good deal of the concern of my colleagues from other provinces on the announcements made by the Hon. John Turner—

If I might interpolate again, now that the bill is before us, I am sure he would be even more forthright in his protestations. So we have a government which consistently over the last eight years has followed the divisive course of confrontation rather than co-operative federalism. It has continued on this course which is dangerous to national unity in—and I go back to the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs—the most important area of political health of the nation, by arbitrarily moving in this way.

We will have a return to the old, basic problem of confederation in which the rich provinces will be able to opt out because of their financial resources, while the poor provinces will have to reduce the level of their medical services. The regional disparities will be exacerbated. This is one of the main reasons the government, in introducing the universality of the program in 1968, said that in some provinces the people were poorly served because they did not have adequate financial resources, whereas in the well-to-do provinces they had adequate medical service. This bill will take us backward into that unhappy situation of regional disparity.

There has been some attempt to blame the doctors for the rising cost of health care. This point has been made before, but I should like to touch briefly on it today. It has been mentioned during the debate as the main problem in respect of the rising cost of medical care. I shall in a moment be putting forward some suggestions for solutions in this regard. I wish now to come to the defence of the medical profession in Canada, because I think we are well served by our medical doctors and the people in the paramedical services.

I bring this particular point into the debate because of the difficulty that has been experienced in Manitoba in respect of the income of doctors in the past two months. There was a doctors' strike in my city of Brandon. For the first time, a professional group, the medical profession, paraded—with sandwich-boards—in front of the provincial hospital in that city. We were close to having another withdrawal of service, as the doctors were negotiating with the province of Manitoba for fair consideration of their salary position. The government started to blame the doctors for the inflationary costs in respect of medicine.

Let me put some figures on the record. If we say that the average income of a doctor is $50,000 per annum—and this is not excessive, in light of the salaries paid senior civil servants, and perhaps the attitude of the government in this regard is responsible for the inflationary pressure of salary demands among professionals—and there are some 36,000 physicians in Canada, the national gross income of physicians is approximately $1.17 billion. This means that each doctor would pay approximately $9,600 in federal taxes. This would represent a total of $346.5 million. If we look at the total of the federal transfer payments to the provinces in respect of medicare in 1974, we will find that the income tax paid by doctors amounted to 51 per cent of the total federal payment to the provincial governments.

The obvious attempt to place responsibility on the medical profession is a devious and irresponsible act on the part of the government. This problem did not come upon us suddenly: governments at the federal and provincial level have been wrestling with it for some time. The former minister of health, the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), initiated a task force on the cost of health services. That task force came up with three conclusions: one, that we could deal with it by reducing the standard of medical care—which we do not want to do in Canada—or we could increase taxes. Goodness knows, that has been going on in any event and we now are to have a further increase of 18 per cent in federal fiscal expenditures, which indicates that we are off into the stratosphere of financial irresponsibility. No wonder the Auditor General, in his report last year, said that federal financing is out of control completely. This is being confirmed as the committee dealing with the Auditor General's report deals with some of the examples of an irresponsible financial policy on the part of the federal government. Taxes have been raised and still they are not enough to meet the rising cost of government.

● (1710)

The third was the positive approach which has not been tried and which is regarded as the second stage of the health program in Canada. Ways and means must be found to keep down costs, and this is the point that I would like to deal with for a few moments before I conclude my remarks. There must be an initiative on the part of the federal government in achieving ways and means to keep down the costs, and there must be co-ordination among the provinces. Only the federal government is able to deal with this program on the basis of co-operative federalism, rather than confrontationist federalism. It is not good enough to put arbitrary ceilings on fiscal contributions to change the 50-50 formula which lured unsuspecting provincial governments into the program back in 1968. It is not good enough merely to dump the program on the provinces and tell them they have to solve it. This is precisely what Bill C-68 does.

First, I should like to deal with hospital care because it has been the worst offender. There are various ways of cutting the costs of hospital care which have never been implemented by any federal or provincial government up to the present time. We must have standards of hospital admission; this is now recognized by people in the health field. In fact, the Ontario government is busy setting up agencies throughout Ontario which would be able to deal with the problem of establishing standards for hospital admission. Ontario, rather than being criticized, should be complimented. I am sorry the hon. member for Broadview is not here, because they have pioneered in so many areas of health care in Canada that they should be receiving plaudits, not brick-bats, today.

The second area where costs should be cut is the length of bed occupancy. There is a great reluctance by patients to leave hospital once they have been able to obtain a bed, and many people in Canada have to wait weeks and even months to obtain a bed, particularly a surgical bed. Modern surgery does not agree to support the tendency present in all illness toward the invalid's complex, but prefers to get them moving and up and about as quickly as possible. So the length of bed occupancy must be taken into consideration.

The third item that could be dealt with in reducing the cost of hospital care is a review of the comprehensiveness of the medical care program. For example, should cosmetic surgery be covered under medicare? Should people who want their face lifted, for example, Madam Speaker, in order to improve their good looks, be covered under medicare? Yet this can be covered under the terms of reference as the program exists at present.

We have not begun to explore the possible savings under the home-visiting care plan. As a matter of fact, the patient recovers much more rapidly during the convalescent period in a happy home environment than he does in the sterile atmosphere of some of our hospitals. Even though the nurses are pretty, I am sure patients would find a much happier atmosphere in the home under a home-visiting care plan. Then we should do something about the provision of less costly convalescent beds. There is no necessity, during the convalescent period, to have all the costly resources of a modern hospital available. The convalescent period is merely biding one's time until he or she is able to return home and to their place of business and occupation.

Institutional care is most costly. I have been concerning myself with this matter with respect to the severely disabled and the chronically ill. I am the chairman of the Canadian Council for the Disabled which is engaged in a positive and constructive program of providing technical aids, adequate accommodation, transportation and accessibility to public buildings so that the severely disabled and the chronically ill can be assisted, some of them even to find useful and remunerative occupations. Certainly the chronically ill should be cared for in their own homes if they have the support of the home-visiting care service and some of the marvellous technical aids that are now available.

We should look at the increasing cost of diagnostic services. Another incomprehensible approach which the government is taking to the rising cost of health care is their cut-backs in funds for medical research. This is one area where the problems of major illnesses could be resolved. If it were not for funds accumulated from private contributions, the whole program of cancer research would be severely hobbled. The same with heart disease. This is Heart Fund Week, if I am correct, and hundreds of thousands of dollars will be raised in order to come up with a solution for the rising cost of heart disease.

Every year, 10,000 males between the age of 40 and 60 are cut off in the prime of life by reason of coronary heart disease. I almost joined the ranks myself a few months ago, so I know whereof I speak. This is a cost to the economy of Canada which is astronomical, and it is one of the major reasons for the uncontrollable rising costs of health care in this country. Yet the government is cutting back on its research grants.

Here is another interesting situation. Our whole life-style, instead of contributing to a sound and healthy mind and body is based upon the pursuit of affluence which negates the best rules and regulations in health care. As someone who has gone through heart surgery and has to follow a very rigid diet, I am astonished to find that it is almost impossible to follow the required diet in restaurants. I was glad to hear the president of the Canadian Restaurant Association recently criticizing the restaurants of Canada for their failure to provide a diet which would support the urgent demand for better health care through a more common sense life-style for Canadians.

We have the problem of drug abuse and the problem of alcohol abuse which is one of the major areas of illness in Canada. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has made noises about doing something about the rising incidence of alcoholism which is now causing much concern in the province of Ontario and other provinces as well where they hope to lower the legal age for the consumption of alcohol from 21 years of age to 18.

The Health League of Canada is a voluntary organization which has been headed by that enthusiastic crusader for many years—ever since I came into the House of Commons—Dr. Gordon Bates. We used to have an active branch of this league in the House of Commons. It was supported by some of our MD colleagues; but we have not been as active in recent years as we should have been. However, this is the sort of positive approach we should be taking to bring down the rising costs of medicare and hospital care by positive preventive programs rather than by being content with merely providing a financial support system which was the first and urgent requirement of adequate health care. But now we must move to the second stage, and that is to implement programs which will cut down escalating costs.

In concluding, I should perhaps mention some more positive ideas for the government in its state of somnambulance these days. It does not seem to be able to come up with very many constructive and creative ideas, so perhaps we can feed a few to it. The government should consider the motion which has been moved by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) for a six months' hoist. Perhaps that recommendation will be accepted. Certainly, the government should accept the recommendation which has been put forward by many speakers of the official opposition that something more positive and constructive must be implemented rather than merely shoving the blame and the responsibility on the provinces.

Here is one idea: recognizing the importance of financial control of the delivery of health services, it is proposed that a new financial partnership relationship with the provinces, in which the responsibility to manage and effectively to control these costs would be turned over to the provinces, where it belongs. Imperative to this policy decision will be an appropriate transfer of fiscal responsibilities through negotiated appropriate tax point transfers. At the same time, the provinces should allow constructive, co-ordinated entry by the Government of Canada into affairs of major concern on national health problems. I admit that the only way you can get an idea of this kind to operate is to have close co-operation and consultation, which has been the practice up until recent months in Canada.

A second proposal: for the serious Canadian health problems of mental health and drug and alcohol abuse it is proposed that a working partnership with the provinces and the professional agencies should be set up so we can quickly come to grips with these problems which are growing apace the longer we fail to deal with them. Third, with provincial acceptance and support, the Government of Canada should launch a new, all-encompassing research program under which biological and medical research, particularly in the areas of cancer and heart disease, would be intensified. As I have already indicated, instead of moving forward the government is moving backward in this regard.

Fourth, we must recognize that much research work must be done in the neglected areas of life-style and environmental health which contribute substantially to unacceptable disease levels. It would be my expectation that a national health research institute would represent a significant, well-balanced approach toward resolution of this problem. A fifth proposal would be that the federal government develop programs of prevention or education to alter the poor Canadian life-style habits as they contribute to the evolution of tragic and often fatal disease processes. In some cases, legislative intervention and action are requested to enhance healthy life-style habits. We have done this with regard to smoking. We hesitate to do it with regard to alcohol even though the minister has threatened to do so. I wish he would become active rather than merely speaking about the problem.

Sixth, governmental responsibility is supreme in the field of environmental factors affecting health. In the discussion of environmental health, specific courses of action should be taken by the government. Seventh, it is proposed that more appropriate participation by Canadian consumers in the future evolution of health policy be made by making public representation mandatory in a national institute for mental health and alcohol and drug abuse. The voluntary Health League of Canada has been doing a marvellous task with its limited resources. Now the government must give support.

Finally, as I said at the opening of my remarks, this is a sad and unhappy debate. There is much unhappiness and uncertainty in the country because of the failure of this government to provide the necessary responsible and creative leadership. There is an old proverb which says that a merry heart doeth good like medicine. I think the best thing that could happen to this country would be a change of government so that Canadians could have a little bit of happiness for a change, and the health of Canadians would improve as a result.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) who made many very constructive suggestions about how we could improve our health care. I sincerely hope that many of these suggestions are taken seriously by the government and considered carefully. I also listened to the speech of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). I recognize his concern and take note of the motion he moved to give the bill a six-month hoist in order that the provinces can look into this matter more thoroughly. At the outset of my remarks with regard to Bill C-68 I should like to quote from the minister's preface to the book, "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians", as follows:

> Good health is the bedrock on which social progress is built. A nation of healthy people can do those things that make life worth while, as the level of health increases so does the potential for happiness.

I am sure few people would dispute the advantages to be gained by encouraging individuals to pursue activities aimed at reducing health hazards and increasing health awareness among all Canadians. Preventive measures must be strengthened and people urged to become more health conscious and to assume more responsibility for their own physical well-being.

This is an issue which has always been of great concern to me, and as a relatively new member of parliament, in November of 1973 I moved a motion that in the opinion of the House the government should give consideration to the sponsorship and financing of a national recreation policy, in conjunction with the provinces and municipalities, to the allocation of responsibilities for recreational programming, to the determination of land use and to the encouragement of all aspects of recreational development by local citizens under permanent, federally-assisted programs. You can appreciate my pleasure when the government introduced its working document.

The government should provide us with health care. It is under an obligation, to the citizens of this country, to introduce programs and facilities which will make people aware of the detrimental effects on health of lack of exercise, improper diet, the consumption of excessive amounts of alcohol, and the smoking of cigarettes. I emphasize that all this should come under one comprehensive program and not under haphazard programs, as is the case at present. Present programs lead to much duplication of work in certain areas.

It seems paradoxical that this bill should have been introduced at the present time, a bill that will have the potential for doing irreparable, major damage to the quality of medical care and Canada's medical insurance program, particularly in have-not provinces which do not operate with large budgets. Surely a program promoting increased health awareness should work in conjunction with a cohesive, beneficial medical insurance scheme. Preventive measures are much desired, and undoubtedly in the long run will serve to decrease the cost of health services. But we must also ensure that comprehensive, high quality services will continue to be available to all eligible residents of Canada.

I emphasize the point made by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). It is totally illogical and unreasonable to freeze the Medical Research Council program. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris also mentioned this. Only with increased research and study of health problems and solutions thereto can the over-all health standard of all citizens be raised.

Canada's medical system has a fine reputation in the world. We have every right to be proud of a plan which has worked well, proved responsive, and demonstrated that it can work to the advantage of all citizens. Now it seems that the primary object of the program, the provision of health care to all Canadians, is to be sacrificed and tailored to financial exigencies of the moment rather than to medical care requirements. This policy naturally poses a major threat to the health of all Canadians.

Of utmost importance is the fact that the government has made a totally arbitrary, unilateral decision to impose budgetary ceilings on health care expenditures. The reaction of the provinces criticizing the government for its inflexibility, unilateral action, and arbitrariness in this matter is real and well founded. The need to reduce costs and control spending during this period of high inflation is not to be questioned. On the other hand the lack of prior consultation with provinces, in an effort to bring about economies in health care, ought to be questioned.

A unilateral decision was made by the federal government, contrary to the recommendations of the 1969 task force report, which suggested that consultation should take place between provincial and federal levels of government before any monetary changes in the program are made or even considered. In addition we must remember that the entire present day medical health system was forced down the throats of the provinces against their wishes. Apparently the federal government wants to opt out, to limit its contribution to cost-sharing. Its action leaves many provinces out on a limb. Small wonder the provinces are bewildered, indignant, and unanimous in opposing this legislation.

One of the main reasons for the introduction of Bill C-68 is that the government says that the cost of maintaining the present system is becoming too great. The costs are becoming unwieldy. In the budget speech of last June the then minister of finance maintained that the cost of health care had risen 20 per cent over the last year. In essence that statement was correct, but the minister neglected to mention that most of the increase was the direct result of escalating expenditures in hospital, not medical, care. In the last two years for which figures are fully available, 1972-73 and 1973-74, medical costs rose by 9.2 per cent and 7.2 per cent respectively. As well, medical care costs have decreased as a proportion of gross national expenditure. They constitute a smaller percentage of gross national product. The obvious question is: why has the federal government arbitrarily established spending ceilings on a program which has not been plagued with the sort of runaway cost increases evident in other federally-sponsored projects?

The government argues that in view of the past record of the somewhat slow increase in medical costs, the proposed ceiling is really no ceiling at all. Although expenditures appear to be under relative control the possibility still exists that there could be a rapid upturn in the capital outlay required to maintain our health standards. Many provinces claim that they need a catch-up period in order to bring their regional standards up to national levels. Such being the case, a marked increase in medical care expenditures would become evident.

The bill does not ensure economies in medical care, the very purpose for which the government imposed the ceilings. Provinces may wish to improve their health services, and doctors may demand higher salaries. As others have said, doctors are paid no more than many civil servants. In the event that either of the two situations alluded to should occur, the provinces would bear the burden of the additional capital outlay. Necessarily, premium rates will increase, or provincial revenues will have to be depleted. The third possibility is that if the provinces cannot meet this budgetary constraint, medical services will have to be reduced.

Bill C-68 may well endanger the quality and availability of medical care for Canadians. Medical care may be rationed and the increased ceilings may inhibit if not prohibit the introduction of new medical procedures and render it impossible for them to be made accessible to many individuals who would benefit greatly from them.

Recently on a trip to Calgary I visited a hospital auxiliary unit—I think that is the correct term—and was shown a very impressive piece of equipment which the unit had acquired. The people of the locality had raised money for the Foothills Hospital. Actually I was surprised to learn how many people were involved in raising money for the project. They raised money for a machine which neither the federal nor provincial governments could afford to buy for the hospital, a machine which, using a computer, will be able to detect aneurisms. It was an expensive machine, which the people bought through their own efforts.

What will the bill do to the have not provinces? The effect will be particularly detrimental to such provinces whose less developed health care programs have truly benefited from the federal-provincial cost-sharing formula.

● (1740)

We condone improved health care cost efficiency and the control of health care cost escalation. Positive steps should and must be taken. It is time for federal government initiative in health reform, but this legislation as it now stands offers no reform at all. It merely passes the buck, as it were, to the provinces without offering anything concrete in return.

Instead of imposing statutory ceilings the government should establish them by regulation which would allow an annual examination and revision, which would ensure close federal budget monitoring while at the same time it would guarantee the desired level of health standards.

The concept of establishing a tripartite committee to explore all fiscal aspects of medical financing is one that has already been mentioned by hon. members on this side of the House. Such a committee, consisting of both provincial and federal representatives as well as members of the medical profession, would play an integral part in developing the regulatory guidelines.

In the sphere of general health and hospital care the federal government should suggest specific areas in which investigation respecting need and efficiency could be carried out in conjunction with the provinces—for example, examination of the standards of hospital admission, as recently reported in the press, the length of bed occupancy in hospitals, the use of X-ray and laboratory equipment in local clinics and hospitals and, as stated by my colleague, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, the necessity of including cosmetic surgery under medicare.

To return to the point made earlier in my remarks, the escalation of a comprehensive health awareness program would prove invaluable to an eventual decrease of health care costs. The importance of regular physical examinations to detect and treat such irregularities as heart disease cannot be over-emphasized. It is unbelievable that some people do not have a physical examination once a year. They live for years with high blood pressure and do not know it.

Media campaigns such as that conducted by the government with regard to Participaction would be good. That campaign made people aware of their physical condition. It made me aware of it. I have a friend in my small town who is about 48 years of age. Every day he goes through an intensive physical program including jogging and various other exercises. When he asked me to join him on the track, I said that I would take him up on it. I was 27.

Miss Campbell: How old are you now?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Schellenberger: I am 28 now. Anyway, we started around the quarter mile track. I went around once and made it half way around again. I could not make it any further without walking. He went around six times and then stopped to talk to me. I decided there and then that it was time I got into that type of program. I now attempt to follow it as often as possible, every day in the summer, and in the gym upstairs in the winter. How many people realize the poor shape you get into by sitting at a desk every day? The majority of Canadians suffer from a lack of physical exercise in their job.

Mr. Brisco: Take Coline with you next time.

Mr. Schellenberger: She can join me on the track any time.

Recently I have had conversations with physicians. I believe there are some duplications in their expensive equipment. One physician stated he believed that proper equipment in centrally located hospitals is a necessity and that an ambulance ride of no more than 20 or 30 minutes would be adequate. As it is now some small hospitals feel it is necessary to have all this expensive equipment.

In summary, I recognize that we should try to curb or control health care costs. However, it is my opinion and that of my colleagues that the provisions of Bill C-68, while they may in the long-run serve this end, will undoubtedly be detrimental to the entire health care program and the purpose for which it was originally established. We have an excellent system in operation at the moment here in Canada, one highly regarded by other nations. Surely we must not jeopardize it by allowing this legislation to become law, but must instead seek other methods whereby health care cost efficiency can be increased, methods that will not be injurious but beneficial to the physical well-being of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, a number of years ago I would have thought it would be totally unnecessary for members of parliament to stand in this House and defend the type of medicare program we have enjoyed since 1968.

Years ago in Timmins, as a miner, I remember talking about the establishment of a health care plan for the miners in that area as the next stage in a form of insurance that then covered the miners with very limited medical service. In trying to sell the idea of a comprehensive plan for a limited number of people in a closed area, we met with violent reaction on the part of many people. There was to be a payment for this group health insurance.

The next stage was when I observed at some distance the province of Saskatchewan deciding to provide the citizens of that province with a group hospital insurance plan.

In 1968, the federal government introduced a program that was so advantageous that most provinces could not refuse to participate, even though they had never before been involved in such an extensive program. As the government was going to pay 50 per cent of their costs, they felt they had to go into the plan.

In several of the mining towns many of us had a group plan that we ourselves had operated for some years. At one time we had a doctor who lost his licence to practice because he had been guilty of procuring abortions. That doctor had been hired to assist in the operation of the plan. It was a very successful plan. But even after those years of participating in a comprehensive plan there was still violent reaction to everyone joining the Ontario plan.

It is interesting now to see the federal government trying to put on the brakes. Medical expenditures must be curtailed. This is being done by the federal government cutting down on its participation with the provinces. This is a backward step.

The federal government is doing one of two things, but has not stated which. It is either saying it is going to economise on the backs of the sick of the nation, or that the provinces should reduce the plans they have implemented because the federal government will not continue to make its contribution of 50 per cent. The federal government agreed in 1967-68 to continue to make a payment with an increase in view, but now it suggests that over a five-year period it wishes to curtail expenditures in this field.

● (1750)

I do not believe the federal government wishes to take over medicare services in Canada. I doubt whether it would be well advised to do so.

I recall some of the silly remarks made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) which certainly did not enhance his reputation with me. I can remember when contaminated meat was being sold in certain parts of the country, and his suggestion was to cook it more. I suppose this was an old Biblical or pre-Biblical quotation, something in the Talmud, according to which people did not eat certain types of meat, including pork, because they carried pestilence and infection. Their use was totally banned.

It might be possible in a few years for the minister, if he is still the responsible minister at that time, to bring in a whole list of things we are not supposed to eat because they are cancer-causing. Perhaps we shall find ourselves confronted with a whole list of these things, including charcoal broiled steaks and other items which might have some effect on our health.

The strength of a nation will be judged according to its ability to provide itself with a number of basic services. One of these must be a health service. When the world was uncivilized, emerging from the caves, those who got along best were those who knew how to cure their wounds in a manner better than their neighbours, those who could make best use of certain types of herbs or natural remedies which they were able to find. The use they made of these skills determined their type of culture to a great extent.

If we look back into history we find there were people in the world a long time ago who had developed certain skills in medical treatment to a relatively high degree, and if we examine those cultures we find they were also able to develop almost all the other facets of their civilization somewhat in keeping with their ability to provide medical services. Thousands and thousands of years ago there were physicians who could carry out operations on the brain, operations to repair broken bones, and so on. In some cases apparently abdominal surgery was undertaken; gallbladders were removed and primitive heart surgery was performed. These civilizations must have been quite highly developed. Consider the Egyptian civilization and the pre-Mexican civilization. Both had developed medical skills which enabled their people to move ahead faster than their neighbours.

It is interesting to reflect that our backward minister of health should hit out at reducing the money available for the development of health services. There is no doubt in my mind that the quality of health service across the nation is not consistent. Some people who live in Ontario's golden horseshoe suffer from restricted vision. If they cannot see a thing from the top of the new tower they have built in the city of Toronto, it doesn't exist. If they cannot see health services outside that area, they do not exist and therefore the people do not exist or, certainly, they are not entitled to the benefits available to those who live in the metropolitan area. What is happening in Ontario is only the beginning of what will happen across the nation.

[Mr. Peters.]

The provinces came into the scheme in many cases because they found it impossible to carry the total burden of providing adequate care for their people. Maybe it should not be mentioned, but there used to be a joke in the Armed Forces that if you went to one particular province you had only to buy a girl a set of false teeth and she would be your friend for life. Where that type of service is not available in a province it should be our responsibility, the responsibility of all Canadians, to provide it. Some of the provinces which are not as wealthy as the central provinces will be forced to cut down further in their provision of essential services.

It always amazes me—and I have said this to the Ontario minister of health—that we should be building new hospitals in some areas only to find, after three of four weeks of operation, on visiting those hospitals there are seven or eight beds out in the corridors. If we cannot plan far enough ahead to guess what is likely to happen in seven or eight weeks there must be something wrong with the type of planning we are doing.

We are experiencing a spot of trouble in Kirkland Lake at the present time. I am not referring to one of the hospitals they are going to close, though they did close the big hospital—parts of it were only 12 years old; they did so with the intention of building the new hospital, one which is considerably smaller. The old hospital had beds in the corridors. And again, in the new, small hospital, there are patients in the corridors.

I talked to the director of hospitals in Ontario and it was interesting to hear him say that 20 beds had been set aside for chronic care. There are hospitals in Florida where it costs $2,000 to stay. Kirkland Lake is cheap by those standards. I spent a few weeks in hospital in Ottawa and it cost well over $100 a day. It is a lot cheaper at Kirkland Lake, at $84. But it would be cheaper still to keep those people in a chronic care unit. That way you could keep three people for the price of one. May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Madam Speaker, before we adjourned for dinner I was pointing out that one of the difficulties in Ontario has been inability to adapt medicare to our hospital services in order to make full use of the facilities available and give the widest amount of health care in the most reasonable manner. I used the example of Kirkland Lake where a new hospital much smaller than the last has been built. A number of beds were set aside for chronic care patients; in fact almost one quarter of the hospital beds are allocated to such patients. The old hospital has been vacated. It is still owned and heated by the province and was very suitable for patients needing chronic care. This kind of care would considerably reduce medical costs. Yet we do not see fit to develop this kind of secondary service for patients who can be better cared for in chronic care hospitals. This kind of care makes less demands on surgical processes as it is a more residential type of care.

Closing hospitals in Ontario means that many persons will receive less care than previously. One of the matters of concern to the people of northern Ontario is that there is going to be a major change made in the northeastern psychiatric hospital. Ontario has never been very fair to the people in the northern part of the province so far as psychiatric care in this hospital is concerned. In my opinion this hospital was built as a monument to the representative of the area rather than as a centre providing psychiatric care. Nevertheless, it is a big facility and much better use could be made of it.

Consideration is now being given by the minister of health of Ontario to closing the facility and relocating the patients, using the hospital for some other purpose. Anyone who examines the development of that particular hospital will be made aware that we have never had adequate psychiatric care in that area. The hospital has been operated in the main by one psychiatrist, when they could have used seven or eight. The ancillary services required to operate this kind of hospital have been non-existent. People in the northeastern part of the province are well aware that the hospital may be used for some other purpose but feel it should continue to operate for the benefit of the people.

In addition to closing hospitals we are anticipating removal of the laboratory in North Bay. Although it is not a very big or important lab it is the place where specimens from my part of northern Ontario are sent. If the lab is closed it will mean these specimens will have to go to Toronto, or to a provincial lab in some other part of the province. The distance would be considerable and the process time consuming. The laboratory in North Bay has served a necessary function for the people of that area.

I believe the minister of health has traded off the health of the residents of Canada for money. He has traded off this kind of health care for a return of only $50 million. I am sure most Canadians believe that we in this nation are able to afford not reduced medicare but expanded medicare.

It is a fact that at the present time our jails contain many persons who should not be in them. I am always amused when someone makes the charge that under our parole or temporary relief system a mentally incapable person has been released and that our system has not been able to prevent this. A large number of people in jails in Canada today are not receiving adequate medical attention or psychiatric care simply because we have failed to supply the trained personnel who can give them this kind of treatment. If we did more in this field we would be able to reduce the population in our penitentiaries.

This represents no small saving, Madam Speaker. It costs a minimum of $10,000 to keep one person in jail for one year in one of our federal institutions. It would not require too many to use up the kind of return the minister is going to get from curtailing medical services.

This is also true in the field of drugs. I have been very interested in learning of some of the sentences that have been handed out in regard to drug abuse in the last two or three years. There is a tendency on the part of judges to be lenient with many of those who are not habitual drug users, or even with those who have been convicted more than once of selling drugs. I suspect this is because of one very simple fact, namely, if they are drug addicts of any kind and put into our jail system they receive absolutely no rehabilitative assistance. We have established very few half-way houses and very few centres directed toward curing some of these problems in our drug communities.

It seems to me the minister should be very interested in going into these fields and areas in which our young people have been affected so alarmingly in the last number of years. We have failed in many ways to provide the type of medical care we should be providing. It is wrong for the minister to say now that we are not going to meet the 50 per cent the provinces are willing to put up for the medicare programs they have established, and are not going into any additional programs or allow the provinces to go into them unless they finance them themselves.

While it is true that Ontario has a Conservative and probably a reactionary government, it is also true that other provinces will be going down the same road toward reducing medical costs because of an inability to meet added expenditures. There may well be some provinces that will make a contribution from the provincial treasury to develop or extend programs that are already in existence where there is an obvious demand for and an interest in those programs. Many of these efforts will be made in respect of those fields where people are not able to look after themselves. I suspect these efforts will be made in the psychiatric field, in respect of juvenile offenders, and in respect of the elderly. Provinces will have to face the difficulty of providing for those who cannot be cared for at home and who have to be institutionalized in one way or another.

The charge has been made that we are again establishing the idea of penalizing those who use medical services. I was always impressed by the argument put forward by a Liberal member many years ago when talking about automobile insurance. I think this argument applies equally as well to the medicare insurance program. He said he had driven an automobile for 20 or 30 years, never had an accident and had never collected one red cent from the insurance company, but that did not mean he did not believe in automobile insurance. It just meant he was fortunate enough not to have had to take advantage of the insurance for which he was paying the premium. I think that is true of medicare as well.

Those who are well surely do not object to making a contribution to the medicare scheme of this nation in order to cover all Canadians, even though they may feel they may never receive any benefit from the medicare program. This would only indicate that they expect never to be seriously ill or suffer from a lengthy sickness. Canadians generally have not made the decision to curtail medicare services. The general trend has been in the other direction.

There is great sympathy and support in all communities for the developement of day-care centres, schools for young children who have serious learning problems, and schools for young children with hypertension problems. There is a great deal of support for the establishment of schools to provide for slow learners, those hard of hearing and others suffering from all kinds of difficulties, particularly those that mainly affect young people. Much of this support comes from the educational system at the local level, supported by the communities, because the local people are knowledgeable and concerned about the welfare of those less fortunate than themselves.

It is wrong for the minister to assume that the people of Canada do not want to extend the medicare scheme. It is irresponsible to suggest that the federal government should no longer contribute toward the extension of medicare shemes but should curtail welfare programs and their extension. The increase of 13 per cent allowed under this measure is not sufficient to meet even the increase in population. It will not in the first year meet the anticipated population growth nor the increase in demand for health services. This means we will be worse off unless the provinces contribute more than their 50 per cent share.

I should like to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare pay more attention to some of the recommendations in the Hall report. I should like to see him bring before parliament some indication from his officials that studies had been conducted which would indicate there are alternatives to the curtailment of medical services in Canada. There are other curtailments that would allow for the same or increased medical services. One might be in the form of deterrent fees, while another might be in the form of more efficient supervision within the hospital structure. It may be there are certain types of cosmetic operations that could be eliminated from the plan. There are a number of possible alternatives which would allow the minister to contribute a 50 per cent share of a universal medicare scheme for all Canadians, thus providing the kind of health services that we living in this society demand.

I was impressed by those hon. members who said during this debate that they were shocked by the minister taking pride in the fact that Canada ranks fifth or sixth in the provision of health services in the world.

An hon. Member: We are first.

Mr. Peters: Maybe I am being parochial, but I think we should be first. I have been in other countries and observed health care services there, and I know we are not first. There are many things in the Canadian medicare service the minister of national health believes to be frills which in other countries are accepted as necessary. I suggest it would be very difficult even for the Conservatives to remove some of these added benefits.

An hon. Member: Even red Tories.

Mr. Peters: Any kind, left, right or centre. I am not surprised that Conservatives are joining us in this attempt to have the minister change his mind about reductions in this field. A long time ago I heard an interesting definition of a Conservative, and I was interested in comparing that definition to the one I heard used on television in the last few days.

An old gentleman told me years ago that a Conservative was a man who fights all his life to retain what his father fought all his life to prevent. I can remember Conservatives fighting very hard a number of years ago to see that medicare was not brought into being in Canada. Now they are fighting very hard to retain it in its present form. I congratulate them for that. I sincerely believe that if there is any field to which the government should give consideration it is the field of providing and extending medical care services to the people.

I do not think it is possible to equate money with people's lives. I do not think we can have a healthy population if people live in unsanitary or unsuitable accommodation. I do not believe it is possible to have a healthy nation when 10 per cent or 12 per cent of the population is continually unemployed, nor do I think we can have a healthy nation when we do not provide, to the best of our ability, adequate health service to all the people. I do not think we have been providing it to the best of our ability. I believe much more could be done.

I am quite sure we should be spending ten times the amount we spend on research. I am always shocked to hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare make statements such as we now have a report from the United States saying that cyclamates are cancer-forming and that they will have to be withdrawn. We do not have any research people in Canada capable of making such a decision. We have to hear about it from the Americans. This is the reason sometimes we make a mistake in taking an item off the market and then finding we have to put it back on the market again. We have not reached the stage where we can conduct our own research in respect of food additives and so on. We do not have the research facilities and qualified staff to provide this service.

I found it interesting to hear that while there is a shortage of blood in Canada the Red Cross can sell it internationally. Now it seems we are wondering whether the blood we are sending to other countries meets our standards. I understand there is some question about this.

We hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell the Canadian people that hamburger is bad, that it is horse meat or that it comes from dead animals. It is suggested that it contains a large amount of bacteria but that if it is cooked for another five minutes it will not have any bad effect. If that is the kind of advice our federal Department of Health provides the Canadian people then we have not progressed too far and we are not spending too much money on the health of our nation. I think the priorities of the government are wrong.

There is no doubt in my mind that if the government wishes to curtail services in a number of fields one of these fields is the civil service. It is obviously top heavy. I have heard that there is a cut-back in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. They are not cutting back those at the top but are cutting back on the number of Indians who have been hired by the Department. That is par for the course.

There are cuts which can be made in Canada, but there are some fields in which I do not think we should compromise. Certainly health must be one of the fields in which curtailment of service is neither desirable nor feasible if we are to have a strong and healthy nation.

I was very interested to listen to the, I presume, 27-year old member this afternoon when he indicated that when he was 26 years old he could not run around a quarter mile track more than once. I am pleased to learn that he has taken unto himself a training program that will provide fitness. I think this is a very good idea. It is something we should be looking at with a view to encouraging the Canadian people to exercise and take advantage of what I consider to be preventive measures which up to date we in this country have not taken much pain to promote.

I remember hearing the previous minister of national health and welfare talk about giving up smoking. It was supposed to be bad for the lungs and cancer-producing. But while he was lecturing the Canadian people his cigarette smoke was flying in all directions. I do not see the present minister engaging in athletic activities that would encourage our young people to follow his example. Certainly when we come back from an international series of games with only one gold medal it is obvious that we are not as developed in the athletic sense as are some other countries.

It is interesting to note that in most European countries the people engage in calisthenics and active sport from an early age, not for the purpose of beating up each other as we do in some of our sports but in order to gain athletic prowess so that the nation will have healthy people who will maintain their health in the years to come. I speak not from experience but from observation. I have reached the age at which people have heart attacks and all the other things. Since I left manual labour some years ago I certainly have not followed the kind of advice I advocate. However, there has been very little leadership given in this field.

An hon. Member: Shame!

An hon. Member: There has been leadership.

Mr. Peters: Someone said there has been leadership. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. There does not seem to be much benefit anyone can point to with pride. We have spent much money. The member who is speaking now should remember that one of the members who represented his riding before him went that way very early in life partly because of his habits and his lack of exercise. I would advise the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) not to push it because he too may get into our age category without the benefit of the protection of an athletic program that might help him develop. I think this would be one of the most important things the Canadian parliament could do for some time to come.

I believe it is absolutely necessary that all members of parliament speak out against this unreasonable reduction. We see the minister of health for Ontario traipsing around the country closing hospitals simply because his government must curtail expenses in order to keep within the budget dictated by the federal government.

An hon. Member: Shame on the federal government.

Mr. Peters: Yes. I think it is the federal government which has caused this. I do not think they would have closed those hospitals if the federal government had continued to provide the money.

Mr. Lalonde: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. The hon. member has spoken quite a bit about hospitals. This bill deals with medical care. It has nothing to do with hospital insurance. It has nothing to do with whatever the minister of health for Ontario is doing in respect of hospitals. I submit discussion of hospital costs and hospital insurance is outside the scope of the bill we are debating.

Mr. Peters: The Canadian people have now witnessed very plainly exactly why we are not satisfied with the Minister of National Health and Welfare or with the bill which is before us. He does not see any relationship between hospitals and medical care. I do not know where he thinks the money comes from in Ontario for the medical care aspect. I wonder whether we would have all the doctors and support staff we have if operations were to be carried out on someone's kitchen table.

● (2030)

Hospitals are part of the package. They are not financed by the federal government, but obviously if you rob Peter you will have to get it from Paul, or from Mark, to retain the biblical flavour. It would seem to me that the minister of health in Ontario, the same as every minister of health in Canada, is limited to the amount of money which he has available for health services in that province. If he has to pay more to medicare, he will have to take it from the hospital care budget because it will have to be a package deal and the money has to come from somewhere.

If the Minister of National Health and Welfare does not know that, then I feel sorry for him, but I am more sorry for the provincial ministers of health with whom he has to deal. If he can divide it up among them, I am sorry for them because it will not be possible for them to get what they need when they go to their respective cabinets and ask for their allotment. This has produced some very bad results in Ontario, and I think it will produce bad results all across the country. I am worried that this is likely to get progressively worse.

This legislation does not take into consideration an escalator clause in the cost of living which would normally be expected, and it does not take into consideration the population growth. These are fixed considerations which remain year after year. The criterion should be that as we increase in wealth in Canada, and as our gross national product and our productivity increase, we should be able to supply more medicare services to Canadians, not less.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has now expired. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): May I say, Madam Speaker, that I have followed this debate with great interest. Unfortunately, I have not been here for most of the speeches, but I have read them carefully and I think the majority of points have been made in this debate. However, there are a few issues with which I would like to deal for a few minutes this evening. Let me say at the outset that I believe this piece of legislation before us, in particular in view of the announcement by the former minister of finance in June that there would be renegotiation of the Hospital Diagnostic Services Act at a later date, is perhaps the most regressive legislation that I have seen introduced in the House since 1972.

I have no intention of repeating the various figures that have been supplied by many hon. members throughout this debate. They indicate in fact that the cost of the medicare program has been below the projected figures in the past two or three years.

I have no hesitation in supporting the suggestions that have been made that we need a far more flexible arrangement between the provinces and the federal government so that we can have programs which will permit the development of either comparable or better services at a lower cost.

I have no intention this evening of entering into the numbers game, but I submit that if any province were forced by this legislation to find additional sums of money to implement the program, the obvious winner of course would be the federal government. Let me give as an example, say, the province of Ontario. I think it is quite obvious that if this bill were introduced and passed and the provincial government found it necessary to find, speaking hypothetically, $100 million to service that program and they were taxed at the rate of approximately 50 per cent, it takes little imagination and a very dull pencil to figure out who would be the benefactor.

What concerns me about this bill is that it is obviously a political struggle between the provinces and the federal government, and I believe it is at the expense of the health care system and would involve the entire social security system in Canada. I was very interested in the minister's comments when he made his speech. He found it necessary to defend this bill, particularly following the inception of the anti-inflation program which, to the casual observer, should have made this bill somewhat obsolete. I could not help but recall an article in one of the Ottawa newspapers of June 26 written by Richard Gwyn. What he said is probably coming true. He wrote:

> The sharpest pre-budget debate pitted Turner against welfare minister Marc Lalonde, the minister best able to match him on even terms. Turner wanted hospital and medical services costs curbed: Lalonde argued for his own projects, and lost. The score between these cabinet heavyweights now is Turner two, Lalonde one. Earlier this year Turner got the starting date for Lalonde's guaranteed income plan postponed, but Lalonde came back later to win cabinet approval to make a financial offer to the provinces.

I think that a good deal of the negotiations that have taken place between the federal and provincial authorities are known to us in a general way. Many of us on this side of the House who are extremely interested in the entire social security program are somewhat concerned that greater details are not available to us, not only with reference to the medicare program—I know the minister was talking about this somewhat earlier—but with reference to the total security program, because this is in fact part of that parcel.

During his speech on January 28 of this year the minister was discussing ways and means of controlling health costs and he made reference to his working document "A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians". He emphasized preventive methods and the necessity of people assuming more responsibility for monitoring and improving their health. He also emphasized the necessity of reducing health hazards in the environment. I have no difficulty in identifying with the minister's comments, and indeed I myself have spoken on these issues and on the necessity of redirecting our resources within the health care system to achieve some of the goals the minister has mentioned.

The minister knows that I approve of the approach in principle in terms of the health policy, and particularly in terms of the cornerstones of this policy when he talks about lifestyles, environmental components, the health care organization, and human biology. I think it does permit a more rational and rapid method of analysing health policies, somewhat better than the traditional breakdown we have seen in the past, when we talk about such things as preventive or rehabilitative medicine and when we talk about mental health, public health, diagnostic services, a multitude of terms used in the past. There is no question that this formula which has been talked about in the past, and which I have written about, certainly rationalizes the health care system to a greater degree than has been experienced in the past.

It also has the advantage of emphasizing the preventive side of health care as opposed to the more traditional curative side about which we frequently talk.

What I object to is that the minister has utilized the working paper as a smoke screen to justify the introduction of this bill. He has really not provided an adequate forum for an adequate debate, and indeed has not provided leadership in translating these words in the past year or two into action. I must emphasize to the minister that the health field concept as visualized in his working document raises far more questions than answers. Surely he must realize that the literature is filled with articles which emphasize the prevention of diseases, articles which discuss the promotion of health, and articles dealing specifically with various areas of health education, and there is no doubt that this emphasis is relevent to our current and future needs.

However, the reality of the situation is that the record thus far has not been impressive, and the minister knows that the curative bias we see in our health care system will not magically disappear in the near future, and of course will have little impact in terms of the cost which the minister would like us to believe will occur with this particular concept.

I have no intention of embarking on a philosophical discussion at this particular time as to the extent government should be involved, whether it be in environmental matters or lifestyle matters. I think this is an important debate which should take place at some point in time, but I caution the minister to assess it very carefully—and I suggest that he should have a complete understanding of the implications of this particular document he has presented on a health perspective. The risk is not in the concept, but the risk and the danger are that the concept may be misinterpreted or misused, and in the final analysis if that were to occur, it would then fail because of lack of understanding.

I believe the minister is attempting to mislead us by employing this health concept which he has introduced and by saying that savings are available; yet we know that there is not adequate statistical or epidemiological data at this time to make certain that these concepts will surely work and will surely be effective. I think it is very important at some future date that we do have the statistical data and that we do have the epidemiological studies which are required before some of these particular decisions are made, or before governments embark on very grandiose programs which could be very costly and perhaps of little help.

There are many features of the working document and the concept which should be debated, but by way of illustration I should like briefly to look at two examples which I think would point out very clearly the lack of interest of the minister in the particular concept, or perhaps his lack of understanding of the concept, in areas in which he and the government could move in a more positive fashion.

The minister quite rightly emphasized throughout his speech the importance of the industrial safety program, and he specifically made reference to the program called LIFE, "learn industrial first aid effectively," a program which is carried out by that very superb group, the St. John Ambulance Society. However, it is more relevant to ask the minister what comprehensive program he and his department have developed in terms of industrial safety and in terms of occupational hazards. Just for a moment let me mention, for example, words like mercury poisoning, Minamata's disease, arsenic poisoning, lead poisoning and radiation poisoning. These are terms common to the tongues of all individuals. I suggest if there is an area where there is need and where federal leadership could be demonstrated in terms of environmental and lifestyle problems, surely this is such an area.

I suggest that at his first opportunity the minister present to this House his comprehensive document, if he has it, which would clearly define the policy of the government in terms of dealing with occupational hazards and safety standards, to which he referred in his speech in January.

Let me give one final example in this regard and refer to the minister's insincerity. Perhaps that is a little too harsh. I will refer to his lack of understanding of the health field concept which he has proposed. I now refer to that important concept referred to as the area of human biology. Yet if one reads his speech very carefully there is no reference to that particular cornerstone of the health field concept about which he has talked. I think it is important to understand why this was left out of the minister's speech.

Certainly since I came to the House in 1972 the minister has demonstrated very clearly that he has little or no interest in the field of medical research. I must admit that at one point after a great deal of effort in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs there was a supplementary estimate, as the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) pointed out in his speech, in which there was a freezing of funds for medical research within the past two years.

If we look at the definition of human biology, it deals principally with that area which applies to applied and pure research. Of course it also implies the implementation of measures to combat diseases which are genetic in origin or related to human biology. I think this is extremely important. As a matter of fact, if I may, I should like to quote an article from the Canadian Medical Association Journal of September, 1974, entitled "constitutional impasse has impeded health dialogue." I believe this article is as pertinent today as it was at that time. It relates to the entire area of medical research and was combined, actually, with the whole area of research at the time. If I may say so, I wrote this article in September of 1974.

However, I think it is relevant because in my view the minister again has ignored this particular problem which is part of his health field concept. I think this represents an attitude on the part of the minister and the federal government in the entire field of health. I should like to quote as follows:

> With the advent of universal hospital and medical coverage we have witnessed a rapid escalation of health costs and the inevitable platitudes demanding a more efficient, comprehensive and co-ordinated health care system.
> The inability to resolve the constitutional and fiscal responsibilities for health care at federal-provincial conferences has created an era of paralysis in dealing with health problems that are national in scope. Research, education and health care are the victims of this paralysis. Medical research typifies an important building block of our health care system that is seriously threatened by recent actions of the federal government.
>
> The decrease of funds in constant dollars to the Medical Research Council has created a crisis situation in the biomedical research community. The sweeping changes proposed for Canadian science in the throne speech in February have added to the uncertainty of the future role and importance of medical research. These changes and the absence of clearly defined objectives have produced instability and scepticism in many areas of science.
> The Medical Research Council, as an autonomous crown corporation, has been the agency responsible for the major allocation of federal support towards medical research. Successive budgets of the Medical Research Council and the Department of National Health and Welfare reveal a significant change in attitude, if not policy, towards medical research.
>
> During the late 60's, there was an expansion of the medical Research Council's budget augmented by the Health Resources Fund. The budgets reflected the need and desire to create a viable and effective Canadian health research community. The confidence experienced during that era and the hope for the future were the needed stimuli to attract scientists and provide career opportunities for young qualified students.

● (2050)

> In contrast to the late 60's, the budgets of the Medical Research Council during the 70's have seen a decline in constant dollar spending, a rejection of excellent research, cuts in personnel support programs and an increase in terminal grants. This has been accompanied by an increase of funds from the Department of National Health and Welfare for the National Health Grants Program established in 1970 to promote research into health care and the health care delivery systems, and an increase in expenditures for the non-medical use of drugs program. This shift in policy by the federal government has occurred at the expense of biomedical research and without an appreciation of the interdependence of all health research programs.
>
> The science policy announced in the throne speech—

And the announcement was extremely important.

> —constitutes substantial and significant changes that will undoubtedly have far-reaching effects in public policy. The scope and authority of the Ministry of State, Science and Technology . . . are to be broadened and strengthened to such an extent it will have the potential of a superministry virtually affecting every scientific endeavour in Canada.
>
> The proposed changes will involve government structures and future policy orientation and development. Thousands of the most able and highly qualified people in the country, together with the teaching and research institutions across Canada, will be directly affected. With the appropriation of hundreds of millions of dollars at its disposal every year, the total spectrum of research and development will be directly related to government priorities and national goals.
> Germane to the future of medical research is the proposed re-orientation of the Medical Research Council. The council will report to the government through the Minister of State for Science and Technology as will the two proposed new granting councils, the Natural Science Research Council and a Social Science and Humanities Research Council. These councils will be co-ordinated by an intercouncil co-ordinating committee chaired by the secretary of MOSST and will report to the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

In the vernacular of the politician we have been assured that the Medical Research Council will remain unchanged . . .

This, as we know, is nonsense.

. . . The council is now to relate to government through a science and technology ministry; this is significant in that it will in time result in substantial changes in its function. In addition, the throne speech announcements signal new directions in government research policy and the decision by the government that the work of the various research councils and granting bodies should more directly serve its own policy objectives.

In the relatively short span of eight years, the prestigious Medical Research Council has seen a confident future replaced by financial crisis and the sanctity of autonomy founded and developed on the principle of scientific excellence threatened by internal reorganization. In addition, the Medical Research Council will be divorced from the expanding intramural and extramural research programs developed by the Department of National Health and Welfare, thereby severing the interdependence of health research, creating fragmentation.

This atmosphere of stagnation and ill-defined change has created new phenonema alien to many in the academic and research community and to the profession as a whole.

The funds for medical research have not kept pace with society's demands or the research community's expectations. There are increased difficulties in deciding to which discipline or project money should preferentially go. There is a growing feeling that the quality of the research people and the significance of their work is not recognized by the policymakers responsible for funding research. The controversy of pure versus applied research remains as a vestige of an earlier era, unresolved and ill-fitted within the framework of health care research.

The ultimate goal of all health research is to improve the health of each Canadian. Society expects—and we have the responsibility to ensure—high standards of medical education, health service and health care. Research is linked intimately to the training of professional manpower and a high-quality health care system is therefore dependent on a viable research base. Medical and health education, medical and health research and the health-care delivery system are inseparably linked.

To date there is not a national policy for medical research. The federal and provincial governments have not defined their plans and policies for health, health resources and health-care systems, nor have they indicated a policy and financial support to preserve and strengthen medical research in Canada.

Since the throne speech of 1974 there has been no evidence of a national medical research policy. Certainly the minister has not shown that in his philosophy medical research is the cornerstone of the health delivery and health care system. To my knowledge there is no science policy for Canada, and certainly no medical research policy. Both policies would be important, and their lack is most strange.

The minister has talked of the importance of our understanding human biology, but in the last two or three years has done little to make possible our increased understanding. I cannot recall a single instance of leadership in this field since the reading of the throne speech.

As I said earlier, any definition of human biology must involve a definition of genetics. Problems associated with genetics must be solved; and here again the minister could show leadership. In recent years we have made great strides in terms of the diagnosis of genetic illnesses and problems. Unfortunately, centres for the treatment of genetic difficulties are sporadically scattered across this country. That this should be so illustrates the rigidity of the Medical Care Act. I do not know how this rigidity will be eliminated, even with the amendments the minister has mentioned. The rigidity of the law has prevented federal and provincial cost-sharing in certain areas of medical care. I submit that genetic counselling centres should be widespread, and such counselling should be available right across the nation. Genetic counselling centres are scattered across the country. There is no national program of counselling, no national program of accreditation. In short, there is no leadership.

Many physicians do not know the great advances made in this field, developments which would help immeasurably many families. Many physicians do not know where to send people for genetic counselling. They do not know the location of the centres. I say this merely to show the minister's lack of interest in an area where the government should provide forceful federal leadership.

I do not want to talk in detail about genetic difficulties. But allow me, Madam Speaker, to make some suggestions to the minister with regard to genetic counselling. I suggest that the minister should consider calling a national conference at which experts in genetics could be brought together. I do not doubt but that such a conference would convince the minister of the importance of this particular field of medicine. There is an immediate role for the federal government in this area. I have talked about this particular health concept in the House in the past.

I have made reference to other areas to which the minister should give consideration, such as mental health, the problems of drug and alcohol abuse, cardiovascular disease, cancer, disease of the lungs, motor vehicle accidents, and problems of the aged. There are many more. However, these are some of the problems that could benefit in a very positive way by leadership from the federal government and the minister and, of course, by a rationalization of our health care system.

Time does not permit a detailed analysis of these problems, but I believe this gives some examples of the problems that could be handled by the minister and that would fit into the concept of a health care field. In my view that is being ignored by the minister. It certainly has not been fertilized by this particular bill.

As I was reading the debates I really had no intention of discussing the issue of medical manpower. I know this is of major concern to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as it is to his counterparts in the various provinces. I know there have been innumerable discussions regarding this. However, I am prompted to make a few observations having read the speech of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier). I may say he made some excellent suggestions regarding the medicare bill before us. However, I was somewhat concerned about the section of his speech when he was referring to the number of doctors, specifically in the province of Quebec, and relating it to the number of doctors based on immigration. I want to quote from his speech. I quote from Hansard for January 28, 1976, page 10419:

The minister mentioned the increased number of physicians. In the last few years, the number of doctors has increased but I want to point out to the minister that this increase was not due to the number of students coming out of university but to immigration. We have to import doctors because our students cannot enter university, since the key is in the hands of the College of Physicians. Today, there is a shortage of doctors. The minister said earlier that he was worried about a surplus of physicians, when actually there is a shortage. In the province of Quebec, we need 2,000 more doctors and yet our students are kept out of university. That is why we have to bring in immigrants, so that we may receive medical care from foreigners. I do not mind it, personally, I have nothing against them, but I would much rather see our French-Canadian students enter university freely. This is the one area in the province of Quebec where the situation is most dramatic.

I have a good deal of sympathy for the comments made by the hon. member, but I was most concerned about one sentence in his speech when he said:

We have to import doctors because our students cannot enter university, since the key is in the hands of the College of Physicians.

I wrote a short article on this point which happened to be printed in the February 20, 1976, edition of the Chatham Daily News. I think it is germane and important because there is a myth in this particular regard. I wish to quote from that article:

The Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada in presenting their brief to the Special Joint Committee of Parliament on Immigration Policy failed to address itself to the commonly held myth that the medical profession is a "closed shop" and determines the number of Canadian students admitted to medical schools.

Historically, Canada has benefited from the immigration of exceptionally talented physicians. They have played an important role in serving the public in varying capacities ranging from family physicians to leaders in the academic and research community. Interrelated with this policy of immigration is the simple economic fact that it has been less costly for government to import undergraduate students than to train them. Today foreign medical graduates now comprise about one half of all specialists certified by the College and a majority of these remain in Canada to practice their specialty.

There is, however, another side of the scenario in addition to the economic implications. First, there is the moral question of accepting a significant number of specialist physicians in particular from developing countries where their professional needs are in demand. Indeed a case can be made that Canada has developed to the point that we should be a net exporter of health services rather than an importer of health services.

The second point raised by the College is the "reverse discrimination" encouraged by our open door policy in which it is possible for foreign medical graduates to enter our system, while at the same time this privilege is denied highly qualified Canadian students who are unable to gain entrance into Canadian medical schools because of a large number of applicants with superior scholastic records.

Of course, Madam Speaker, this is the very point to which the hon. member was referring.

The brief states: "Canada should move toward training enough undergraduate medical students to meet the needs of the country as a whole. We should look forward to being able to say to Canadian citizens, 'There are enough Canadian medical students to satisfy our needs, there are enough graduate programmes to satisfy their requirements if they all stay in Canada, and there are enough jobs for all if they choose to stay here.' Some will go to the United States, Britain or Europe. We will be able to accommodate some foreign medical graduates of a calibre equal to our own. There will continue to be movement across national borders."

The long term goal for Canada has been adequately outlined in the College's summary. Canada should be self-sufficient in physician manpower, maintaining a balance and ongoing emigration of specialist physicians, and adhering to the historical tradition that this country welcomes talented new citizens.

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, I do not want to get into the area of medical manpower, but I felt for the record it was important to destroy the myth which should have been destroyed by the college itself, but was ignored.

I want to turn for a moment to what I believe is a very basic question which has been avoided in this entire debate. The question is simply how much influence should economics have on the treatment of patients. This does not imply that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, his provincial counterparts, or indeed anyone who thinks about the problem, or any thoughtful Canadians are not concerned about receiving full value for each dollar that is spent in the health care delivery system. This does not decry the importance and the necessity of seeking alternative measures to replace high cost services with low cost services without affecting the quality of health care.

May I interject at this point and mention what I refer to as the add-on principle. I am somewhat concerned from time to time when I hear individuals in our society mention the various forms of health delivery care, noble as it may be, and say the type of service they provide may be excellent. What I am suggesting and what, I am sure, the provincial ministers are suggesting, is that if you are adding a service which is lower in cost you must be certain you are reducing something which is more costly. However, let us assume the minister is correct, that the federal government has taken a realistic stand and that health care costs should be reduced. I surely have no need to describe the effects his proposals are having on the delivery of health care in the various provinces.

Let us be realistic. The introduction of this bill and the announcement made by the former Minister of Finance in June have prompted several decisions within the province of Ontario resulting notably in the closing down of a number of hospitals and a reduction in the number of hospital beds available. The wearing of seat belts has been made mandatory. All these things are in the nature of restraints. I should not care to predict what further measures will be forced upon the provinces by such a program as we have before us, but I say to the minister in all sincerity that the unilateral action of the federal government has started a process of dilution in our health service system which will be felt in every province and every community in Canada. I have no doubt about this.

We must recognise that if we adopt this bill we are embarking on a program which must inevitably lead to mediocrity. The worst part of the legislation before us, irrespective of the amendments about which the minister spoke when he introduced the measure, is that the decisions which are made by him are all predicated on economics rather than on need. This is a factor which in my view has not received sufficient attention in the debate, yet it is a very basic question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Holmes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I shall try to be brief. What concerns me, as I say, is that I have the impression that the minister's attitude has really been predicated upon economics rather than needs. We are now seeing and hearing a reaction from both consumers and deliverers of the health care system; it becomes apparent that there is a feeling in the minds of the public that the quality of the health care received in the past will be prejudiced as a result of this legislation.

I might remind the minister that before the introduction of the act the very rich and the very poor always received the best of medical care. I recall that in the United States, in the City of Washington, the indigent population received the very best of care; not only did they enjoy the services of an extensive medical staff but their doctors were able to consult experts at the National Institute of Health and the Walter Reed Hospital, and so on. But how will the public react once it has experienced treatment in connection with which there has been no element of economic restraint?

How will deliverers of health care respond when they are confronted with restrictions which adversely affect the treatment of their patients? Will the public really accept diluted health systems which are predicated on economic rather than medical need? Will the public accept a system under which only the very rich may be able to afford access to the best treatment?

I believe the public will awaken and recognise that the minister is in effect proposing a second rate health care system, that the introduction of this bill, together with the announcement made by the former minister of finance in June has altogether changed the federal-provincial relationship. The minister has obviously established the priorities in his own mind and has placed concern for economics above concern for medical needs. I will only say to him that I hope he will persuade the public that public expenditure on the health care of Canadians is not a priority reduction item, particularly having regard to the funds which are spent on some other programs.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend from Timiskaming was speaking a short while ago, discussing the harm which would be done to the hospitalization plan if the government proceeded with this bill. The minister interjected, saying in effect that my hon. friend was dealing with something that had no relation to the bill. He could not have been more wrong and I am sure the minister knew it. I may criticize the minister for many things but I have never thought of him as being stupid. He knew he was wrong.

The bill is one step in a calculated and well planned move on the part of the government to get out of virtually all shared cost programs. The minister said this proposal had nothing to do with hospital insurance. Madam Speaker, it limits the increase in the amount of money the federal government will pay toward a universal medical insurance plan in the next two years by specific amounts, and leaves the increase in subsequent years to be decided unilaterally by the federal government. The government has given notice to the provinces that the present agreement on hospital insurance, under the provisions of which it pays about 50 per cent of hospital insurance costs, will be ended by 1980. That date arises because the federal government was required to give five years notice of its desire to terminate the present agreement and to enter upon a new one. The federal government is giving notice that it intends to work out a second agreement, and since it can decide for itself what it will be prepared to do in 1980, the provinces are on notice that the federal government will no longer pay the half cost it has paid up to now.

With hospitalization as with medical insurance, when Ottawa gets out of a shared cost program it has very direct consequences on the provincial governments and the people in the provinces. What can the provinces do in respect to medical or hospital insurance? If Ottawa no longer pays 50 per cent of the cost of these two programs, the provinces have a number of alternatives. For example, they can increase their own contributions to cover the deficit that will occur. All provinces, including the large have provinces of Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario, are now in financial difficulties and showing an increase in expenditure over revenue.

If the federal government cuts its percentage contribution below the increase in the cost of present or future hospital or medical insurance plans, the provinces will have to increase their contribution, and it is unlikely that they will be able to do so. In that event they will either have to cut back services or increase the revenue derived from their citizens. This can be done through deterrent fees or through a number of other methods.

We are rightly proud of our medical insurance and hospital insurance plans. When I spoke on this bill several weeks ago I talked about the federal civil servant who, when someone in the family went into a hospital in the United States, was required to put down a deposit of $1,500 before the hospital would admit that person.

Since that time I have come across the case of some friends from the city of Winnipeg who were visiting in Florida. The camper in which they were sleeping was hit by lightning during the course of an electrical storm and caught fire. The husband is now in hospital; he has been there for three weeks and will probably be there for another three weeks. The cost of the hospital alone, not including any medical bills, in Florida is over $2,000 a week. I would suggest there are very few people in this country or in any other country who could afford to meet this kind of bill.

If people do not have to worry about completely wiping out their life's savings at the present time to pay hospital bills, it is because we have a universal hospital insurance plan in this country. This kind of universal plan has taken away the fear of financial disaster from Canadian citizens, but the plan will disappear as the federal government's limitation on the amount of money it pays for hospital and medical insurance plans begins to bite.

A similar process has now begun in the field of post-secondary education. Having persuaded the provinces to expand vastly their university and community college programs begun in 1972, the federal government has put a ceiling of 15 per cent on the increased amount it will pay each year. Post-secondary education costs have been rising by a very substantial amount each year. In a recent study that was made of the Canadian educational system by an

OECD committee, Canada was given high marks for the tremendous job done by the federal and provincial governments in improving the educational system of this country. The study showed the tremendous increase in the number of students attending elementary and secondary schools as well as the large number of people attending post-secondary institutions, such as our universities, community colleges, and manpower training programs.

All the provinces have done an excellent job in this regard, to a large extent as a result of the financial inducements offered to them by the federal government. At a time when costs began increasing very rapidly, the federal government a couple of years ago put a ceiling on the increase that it would pay in any year of 15 per cent. The present agreement with the provinces expires in March, 1977, and there has been no indication given by the federal government that it is prepared to renew the agreement with the provinces, to improve it, or to do anything else. Indeed no discussions at all have been held with the provinces. It is not at all unlikely, given the example of medical and hospital insurance which we are now discussing, that in 1977 the federal government will cut the 15 per cent ceiling which it has already introduced unilaterally.

A similar situation existed in the welfare field. It was not many years ago that a Liberal government introduced the Canada Assistance Plan. We were given the most glowing description of what a great plan it was, how it was the culmination of a quarter century or more of Liberal party thought, planning, studies, and promises of a comprehensive social security system.

This plan has been in effect for only a few years, and lo and behold the minister has now given notice that he intends to introduce a social services act to come into effect in 1977. This is an act that will run parallel with the present Canada Assistance Plan for three years, after which time the Canada Assistance Plan will disappear.

It seems that the minister and his government have had second thoughts about universal fees, users' charges, and deterrent fees. We are talking about programs which are not even completely in place yet. We are also talking about expansion of day-care centres. I saw a report in today's newspaper about the minister meeting with a group of women and promising an expansion of day-care centres. We are also talking about nursing homes of which there are certainly not enough. If there is any hope that we can cut back on the sharp and continually increasing cost of hospitalization, surely one of the ways to do so is to establish adequate nursing homes and convalescent hospitals which would be much cheaper than the high cost, intensive hospitalization plans which the federal government now funds.

These are plans that are not yet funded, or funded on any regular, continuing basis, but which the provinces understand. Yet already the minister has given an indication that the federal government intends to cut back on the agreements it has with the provinces under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan.

In the field of manpower there have been unilateral and continuing cutbacks in grants for training programs in all provinces. What has happened? The provinces got into the delivery of manpower training largely because of what I believe was the mistaken concept of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government that the federal government has no business in the field of education, and that this is solely the responsibility of the provinces.

It was felt that the federal government could and should be involved in manpower training. However, Ottawa did not establish its own manpower centres. It contracted with the provinces and with local educational divisions to use their facilities. Facilities were built and extended, teachers were hired, and equipment was purchased, to a large extent to provide for the manpower training needs as defined by the federal department of manpower. Because of the financial constraints the federal government has unilaterally begun to cut back on manpower training agreements with the provinces. It has cut back on the purchase of manpower training equipment in the community colleges and other institutions in the provinces.

Let us consider the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. At a time when the have-not provinces, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, northern Ontario and northern Saskatchewan were experiencing sharp increases in unemployment—

Mr. Béchard: And eastern Quebec.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, and eastern Quebec, and I wish the hon. member who made that interjection would get up and support me in the case I am making. At a time when these areas are experiencing sharp increases in unemployment and in welfare costs, DREE is at best holding the line. There are virtually no increases in the funds of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Holding the line in a period when we have had a 10 per cent or more increase in inflation in each of the last two or three years means a cutback in the real money that can be spent to provide jobs in these areas.

Let us look at the department which supposedly was established to protect the rights and meet the needs of the most deprived people in this country, and I am talking about the native people, the Indians and Eskimos. At a time when costs are skyrocketing the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been chipping away at the expenditures it is prepared to make to provide for the health and welfare needs of our native people.

For example, when the province of Saskatchewan inaugurated a program of providing hearing aids for people who need them Ottawa said it was not going to pay for hearing aids for native people in Saskatchewan. How cheap can the government get? These are the programs the federal government decided to implement unilaterally.

I put these facts on the record not because I believe everything the provinces do is right, and not only because I am concerned about the very rapid and substantial increase in the cost of medical plans. Of course I am concerned about that. I am concerned about that as a member of parliament, as a citizen who has to pay the increases himself and whose constituents have to pay the increases.

The point surely is that when Ottawa gets out of these programs or limits its contributions to them, the shortfall of funds must be picked up by the provinces or by the individual citizen, regardless, and I emphasize that word "regardless", of their ability or inability to pay. This is why I am concerned.

We have had a health insurance plan and a hospital insurance plan in this country for many years; in the case of the health insurance plan, for more than ten years, and in the case of the hospital insurance plan for more than 20 years. During that time the federal government has not administered any of these programs, not the hospitalization or the medical insurance plans. They have been organized, run and operated by the provinces. The provinces have the experience. Ottawa does not have that experience or the know-how.

I would say the provinces of Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec must be more concerned about the rapid increase in the cost of medical insurance and the implications to their financial structures than is the federal government, because they are much less able to raise the money through taxation, deterrent fees or in any other way than is the federal government. They are concerned, but they are and have been willing from the beginning to meet at the official or at the ministerial level to work out in detail plans which can be made at least to begin to halt the constant escalation in costs.

Despite many promises by the minister, going back to 1973 at least, that the federal government would not implement changes unilaterally, that has not been the case. The minister and the government have broken all their promises to the provinces. Not many months ago the minister promised the provinces that his deputy would meet with provincial deputy ministers on March 16 and 17 to discuss cost-sharing programs and reforms that could be made to save money.

The minister agreed to meet with provincial ministers of health on April 27 and 28. That will be the first meeting since January 1975, to discuss this question. The minister has been meeting with individual provincial ministers of health. He has refused for more than a year to meet with them jointly. I can only assume that he thought by meeting with them individually he could drive a wedge between them.

I presume it is evidence of the minister's good faith that he is going to meet with provincial ministers of health to discuss in a friendly way methods of slowing down increasing costs of medical care without the necessity of using the big stick or threat of this bill. If the minister is interested in discussions and agreements rather than in confrontation and unilateral decisions he ought to agree to the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), which would set this bill aside at least until after the minister has met with provincial ministers to see whether an agreement can be reached.

If the minister insists on continuing with this bill then we can only assume that he and the government have no intention or desire to reach an agreement with the provinces which would be mutually acceptable to all the provinces and the federal government. We would have to assume that the minister intends to implement this despite the feelings of the provinces; that is, that he intends to make unilateral decisions in respect of cutting back on the shared cost program about which I have spoken.

We are talking about an extremely serious matter. We are talking about programs which cost the provinces not hundreds of dollars but more than $1,000 million for health insurance alone, the cost of which Ottawa does not now share with the provinces. It is no wonder the provinces are worried, are frightened, and are apprehensive. Given the kind of stubbornness and arrogance the minister has shown, the provinces, to say the least, are frightened sick.

I should like to spend a little time placing on the record the feelings of the provinces. Let me emphasize again that while I may be speaking in the main of the position of the government of Manitoba on this question, all the provinces are united in their objection to this bill and to the proposals being made by the minister. If we look over the list of the provinces we will see that the Conservative government of Newfoundland, the Liberal government of Nova Scotia, the Conservative government of New Brunswick, the Liberal government of Quebec—with which I think the minister has a good deal of relationship—the Conservative government of Ontario, the NDP governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, the Conservative government of Alberta, and although I have not seen anything specific I believe, the Social Credit government of British Columbia, as was the former NDP government of British Columbia, are united in their opposition.

The provinces have agreed to undertake a broad analysis in an attempt to define more precisely those concerns they have voiced in discussions over the past couple of years with the minister and his government. They have carried on some studies which show that most provinces would experience a serious shortfall in revenues under the proposal for a GNP escalator plan, even with the so-called risk sharing modifications the minister proposed.

Their studies showed that the proposed thrust funds would be barely adequate to cover these shortfalls in some provinces and would be far from sufficient to offset losses experienced in other provinces. The studies showed that most provinces have committed themselves in recent years to improving their services to bring about greater efficiencies despite the fact that these efforts are not supported by any cost-sharing assistance from the federal government. Their commitment in total terms is such that they cannot afford to consider, much less accept, any financing formula which would provide even less assistance to the provinces than they have been receiving up until now.

According to their joint study the ten provinces were spending last year a total of over $1.2 billion a year in respect of health programs for which there is no cost sharing available. They have calculated that by the fiscal year 1978-79 their expenditures will increase to $1.9 billion annually. What is happening is that when the provinces devise programs which are much less expensive than programs now jointly funded, they cannot obtain any money from the federal government even if they can demonstrate that the cost of such programs is substantially less than the present programs.

Let me give two illustrations. The province of Saskatchewan has inaugurated a nurse-practitioner program. Through this program a registered nurse is given further training so that she can deal with many of the health needs of the people who live in rural areas, in small areas or villages where there is not now medical service available. It should be obvious to the minister and to the government first of all that this is a needed service which has not been met in recent years in Saskatchewan, and I am sure in similar areas in other provinces where there is a shortage of doctors. Instead of encouraging such a program, and encouraging its expansion into other areas of Saskatchewan and other areas in other provinces, this program is not jointly funded by the federal government.

Several years ago the province of Manitoba inaugurated a program which is partially funded by the federal government. It is called "New Careers". Under this program the provincial government hires and trains native people and immigrants to work for the province in areas not now provided with health or welfare services.

These people, who very often do not even have a high school education, are given training for a period of from six weeks to a year to perform specific jobs in the field of health such as giving inoculations and performing other services which up until now have been carried out by doctors or registered nurses. These people work in areas where there are not sufficient doctors or registered nurses.

This program has been a tremendous success. It has been lauded by a number of federal government departments. This program cannot expand because it is not cost-shared by the federal government unless the federal government looks at every job and every training program that is inaugurated. Such programs should be encouraged because in this way services are provided more cheaply than are the nursing services now provided under the present system.

What is happening? Just when the provinces are developing programs, the federal government has decided unilaterally to cut back on the money which it pays them. As I have said on other occasions, and as I have said earlier tonight, I am not opposed to consideration by all levels of government of ways and means of cutting back on increased expenditure, but the way not to do it is by the kind of unilateral decision which is made by the government and proposed in this bill.

As I have said, the provinces have looked at what they are paying out in order to meet the health needs of their people. The estimates which they have made suggest that the total health care expenditure in the ten provinces, including federal shared cost support, will probably rise between 15 per cent and 20 per cent in the next year, an increase of more than $1 billion over the estimated $6.6 billion which was spent by the provincial governments in the last fiscal year. Given that tremendous problem, the provincial health ministers arrived at a number of conclusions among which I want to refer to just two.

In January of 1975 they agreed at a meeting which they held in Ottawa, first, that each province should receive no less federal financial support than it would have received for the funding of health insurance programs under the current arrangement; second, that new financing arrangements must allow the provinces flexibility to pursue programs in accordance with their own particular priorities; third, that the new arrangements must allow for equitable cost sharing of both the start-up and continuing operating costs of new programs, as well as changes within existing programs; and fourth, that new arrangements should relate to health goals and objectives, and should provide encouragement to new provincial programs which offer alternatives to high cost services. Examples of such alternatives include home care, geriatric services, community health services, and ambulatory care.

That kind of proposal has not even been discussed with the federal minister, not because the provinces have not been willing but because the minister has simply refused to meet with them. Yet on the day that that meeting was held in Ottawa, the minister held a press conference. I want to put on the record a couple of paragraphs from the interview which he gave for the press and which was reported in the Ottawa Journal of January 15, 1975. They read:

> The federal government may soon be contributing more money toward the cost of the country's health services . . .
> He told reporters at the federal-provincial health ministers conference that a committee will be set up to study cost-sharing legislation to see if the federal government can, under present laws, help pay for alternative provincial health services.

That committee has not yet met, and the minister has not yet met with the provinces. It is not surprising therefore that the provinces, to say the least, were highly critical and very vocal in their criticism of the minister and of his proposal.

On August 19, 1975, the provincial health ministers met in Victoria. Let me quote what some of them said, as reported in the Victoria Colonist of August 19, 1975, as follows:

> Health ministers from all ten Canadian provinces were unanimous Monday in their criticism of proposed new federal health service cost-sharing formulas . . .
> Saskatchewan Health Minister Walter Smishek charged that the federal government had misled the provinces over cost-sharing formulas for health services. He said the federal government had bargained "in bad faith, misled the provinces, and as a result left them to pick up large, increasing bills which were to have been shared by Ottawa".

In case the minister would suggest that this is a criticism which is politically partisan coming as it did from an NDP health minister, let me quote what the Liberal health minister from the province of Nova Scotia, Mr. MacEachen, said. He was concerned that the tapering off of federal financing can seriouly affect health care in his province, and he said:

> "If the federal government is suggesting that it has solved the problems of inflation, then the limitations proposed on increases of medical care payments may not have too great an effect . . . if, however, general inflation carries on at or near its present rate, we could be in serious difficulty.

When the premiers met in August of 1975 in Newfoundland, they passed a resolution which is as follows. I will just give the last part of it because my time is limited. It reads:

> Be it therefore resolved that the Prime Minister of Canada be requested to convene a conference of first ministers to consider the present shared cost programs and the future of such programs with particular reference to the fields of hospital insurance and medicare, currently the subject of concern, and to consider ways in which the Government of Canada and the provinces, together, can control the costs of shared cost programs in the most effective manner, consistent with desirable standards of service.

That was an excellent, well documented, well thought out resolution. I suggest to the minister that he could give meaning to that resolution by agreeing to the proposal made by my colleague the hon. member for Broadview, that this bill be stood over for six months.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in the one or two minutes available to me I will make just a few remarks and then perhaps continue at the next sitting.

I had no intention of rising to speak on this bill. However, it does perturb me to hear hon. members from opposition parties stand in the House and speak against many aspects of Bill C-68 and indeed against the content of the bill because, after all, what the government is attempting to do with this bill is, I suggest, a very important thing, namely, it is endeavouring to show leadership in the area of restraint, a matter that is extremely important in the eyes of so many Canadians today when ordinary people at all levels and in all walks of life are being asked to show restraint in terms of wages, and industries, big and large, are being asked to show restraint in terms of prices.

I think the government needs to be commended rather than criticized for endeavouring to take action which shows restraint in an area of great expenditure.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CITIZENSHIP—REQUEST THAT VACANCIES IN TORONTO CITIZENSHIP COURTS BE FILLED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, the abundant natural resources of Canada provided the material foundation for our country, and immigration provided the human resources to build and develop this great land which is the envy of the world. Since the dawn of Canadian history, successive waves of immigrants have come to our land from every continent on this planet. Canada's population has in fact increased faster than that of any other industrialized country in the twentieth century.

● (2200)

I should like also to state that it was to a great extent the freedoms we enjoy in Canada as well as the economic prosperity, and lately the federal government's enlightened policy of multiculturalism, which has attracted so many immigrants to this land and also encouraged them to become full citizens. In fact the total intake of immigrants to Canada since 1945 is nearly 4 million. This new wave of immigration brought to us people with great experience of life, rich human values, and plenty of special skills which contributed immensely to our economic growth and prosperity.

It should also be noted that the net immigration since the end of the second world war is approximately 3 million or slightly less. However, from 1947 to 1971 only 1,529,853 Canadian citizenship certificates were granted by our courts.

Once upon a time, at least until 1967, we had in Canada a department of citizenship and immigration, and since 1967 citizenship comes under the Department of the Secretary of State. But it was only since 1970 that a great impetus was given to citizenship matters. In that year a revitalized program of citizenship was launched. It was based on a five point policy, namely, certain objectives such as the reinforcement of Canadian identity and national unity, the encouragement of cultural diversification within the bilingual framework, the preservation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, an increased and vastly improved citizenship participation program, and the development of meaningful symbols of Canadian sovereignty. As a result, in 1974 alone, 130,278 persons were granted Canadian citizenship certificates in our courts.

Later an outreach program to increase the number of people applying for citizenship and to make that process much easier was launched by our government. As a result, storefront citizenship offices and additional courts such as those in Parkdale's Dufferin Plaza, Kensington in the Spadina constituency, and at Montreal's Jean Talon Street added greatly to the number of applications.

Today the 21 citizenship judges have a very heavy overload to clear up, especially in the city of Toronto. More applicants will increase the workload for these courts with the advent of the new Citizenship Act, which was debated at second reading in this House and is now being studied by a House of Commons committee. This new enlightened legislation is not only liberal and progressive, but also very attractive to the people who are waiting to become Canadian citizens. I must say that this legislation is most welcome. The government and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) are to be commended for bringing this piece of legislation to this House.

However, more funds for more qualified judges and support staff are needed without further delay. As I stated in my question to the Secretary of State last February 10, we are impatiently awaiting the appointment of more judges and staff in Toronto and other places where they are needed. The backlog must be cleared up quickly because qualified applicants are waiting to become Canadian citizens and to take their full place in the Canadian sun.

Any further undue delay would be denying the privileges of Canadian citizenship to many people. As the dictum goes, justice delayed is justice denied, and the sooner the necessary staff is provided for our citizenship courts, the better will be the morale of the present staff and also the earlier will Canada be strengthened with many more loyal citizens.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Faulkner) has been assured by the Registrar of Citizenship that the citizenship applications and certificate presentations in the Toronto area have been carefully looked into as a result of the hon. member's question. He has further been informed that the backlog alluded to is not as serious as suggested.

As an example and with reference to the St. Clair citizenship court, there were only 581 certificates on hand as of February 12, all of which will have been presented by February 26. For the information of this House it should be known that this particular citizenship court now has a scheduling whereby certificates are presented within 14 days of receipt from Ottawa. The 14 days in question are used for scheduling the ceremonies and informing the applicants.

With reference to the Dufferin court it had, as of February 12, some 726 certificates on hand, 400 of which will be distributed this month. Although another 300 certificates will have been received for presentation before the end of the month, this is not an unduly large number of certificates to have on hand in courts as large as the two to which I have referred.

In 1975, through our Toronto courts' system only, a total of over 49,000 grants of citizenship were made. This figure includes those grants made through storefront offices, the mobile team, and the subcourts in Oshawa, Brampton and Barrie. In addition to the large number of grants of citizenship processed by the Toronto citizenship court system, there were 36,391 proofs of citizenship given out in 1975. These proofs do not, of course, involve a court ceremony and presentation but nevertheless account for a large volume of work by court personnel.

I would also like to take the opportunity to say a word about the success of the citizenship outreach program, since I believe it has a bearing on the questions raised by the hon. member. The storefront concept was introduced in Toronto in July 1973, which means there have been two and a half years of storefront operation.

In 1975 there were 13,420 storefront grant applications, an increase of 21 per cent over the previous year. There were almost 4,000 proof applications processed in the storefront offices, a percentage increase of 53 per cent. There would seem, however, to be no need at the present time to increase staff in the Toronto court system beyond the filling of existing vacancies.

The effect of the outreach program has been to relieve the overburdened situation at the St. Clair office which, until 1973, was the only citizenship registration office in Toronto. With the opening of the Dufferin court in July, 1975, and with the outreach services provided by storefront and mobile operations, grants volume in the St. Clair court decreased by 10 per cent in 1975.

With respect to citizenship hearings, no backlog exists vis-à-vis the St. Clair court. There is, however, a one-month delay at the Dufferin court which involves approximately 600 applications. A delay in hearings also exists at Barrie and Brampton involving approximately 250 applicants. This situation will be corrected when a new citizenship judge is appointed.

Adjournment Debate

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF FRENCH LANGUAGE COVERAGE OF CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked if the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) had been made aware of complaints concerning the inadequate French language television coverage of the Progressive Conservative convention and if it was the intention of the minister to remind the publicly financed Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of its primary responsibility to report in both official languages all public affairs of national interest. The minister replied that the corporation had a responsibility to report important events in both official languages on both channels.

Last Thursday the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) expressed his dissatisfaction with programmed CBC radio coverage in his area.

Earlier today the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) proposed, by way of a motion under Standing Order 43, to refer the subject to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. The motion required unanimous consent which, unfortunately, was not forthcoming. I say unfortunately, because it is my opinion that a dissenting voice came from among the members of the party that was considerably disenchanted with the treatment accorded that party by the publicly owned television network.

During the question period today a member of the official opposition, I believe the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), again raised the subject of inadequate French language television coverage of the Progressive Conservative convention. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Miss Campbell) replied, giving information supplied by the CBC and which, in my opinion, was no answer at all. It was a reiteration of what programming there was and did not answer the question.

We are already aware of the amount of coverage accorded by the French network of the CBC. As Joan Irwin stated so well in an article in yesterday's Montreal Gazette, and I quote:

● (2210)

Both English networks made a major commitment to the Canadian public by providing an opportunity to participate in an important political event. They deserve our gratitude.

French-speaking Canadians, on the other hand, had almost no opportunity to acquaint themselves with the PC leadership candidates or with the political philosophies of a major national party at a crucial moment in its history.

It's not particularly surprising that TeleMetropole and the TVA network ignored the whole thing until the results of the voting were known.

It is surprising and entirely indefensible that the CBC French network showed so little interest in the convention or in the rights of its audience to be well informed on vital national issues.

Radio-Canada carried none of Saturday's convention live during the speeches of the 12 leadership candidates, despite the fact that three candidates were from Quebec—and two of them front-runners for the leadership.

Not until 11:10 p.m. (after the hockey game and the news) did Radio-Canada give its audience a glimpse of the convention, and then only in edited bits of each candidate's speech—of which many were poorly translated by an extremely uncertain male translator.

On Sunday, Radio-Canada had intended to devote only the six to eight p.m. period to the convention. Then it said it would begin its coverage at four p.m.

Finally someone in the French network saw the light, and it was announced that Sunday's coverage would begin at 2:30 p.m.

The indecision and irresponsibility of the French network indicate an alarming narrowness of view and curious perception of the tax-supported corporation's obligations to the Canadian public—all the Canadian public.

The estimates have now been tabled. Included in those of the Secretary of State is the sum of $416 million for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, an increase over last year for operating expenditures alone of over $50 million.

Whenever I question the present Secretary of State, and also when I questioned his predecessor, I was lectured on independence and the inability of the Secretary of State to interfere. They argue that they have no legal right to meddle in the affairs on an independent corporation. Well, I have news for the Secretary of State. As long as taxpayers in my constituency see vast sums of their tax moneys being poured into a corporation which services only an average 11 per cent of the population, they are going to be on my back, and rightly so. In turn, I am going to expect the Secretary of State to come up with answers.

I am sure the minister will not forget the political indiscretion that I committed in 1973 by proposing in committee a nominal cut in the estimates to indicate that the politician still had some say in the publicly financed CBC. That motion passed with the help of some of my more experienced colleagues. Whilst I may not take such a step again, I do want to point out that there must be some established line of communication between those who spend the money and those who are responsible for paying the bills.

The Progressive Conservative party may not be strong in its parliamentary representation from Quebec, but its total percentage vote in that province is healthy. However, apart from that party's supporters, there were those from all other parties and those with no political affiliation who wanted to watch the convention proceedings.

The English coverage extended over four days. It was generally well handled. Why were French Canadians shafted by the television channel which owes its very existence to the considerable financial support of the taxpayer; as I said earlier, $416 million?

May I request that an inquiry be instituted and a full statement made to all members of this House on this continuing saga of complete irresponsibility.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has been informed by the CBC that the CBC French television network covered the final day of the convention, Sunday, February 24, from 2:30 p.m. to the end of the convention at 9:10 p.m.

On the Saturday of the convention, a résumé of the speeches of the candidates was telecast from 11:10 p.m. until 12:40 a.m. A live telecast of the candidates' speeches would have involved five hours of almost continuous simultaneous translation which could have been a great strain for the television audience. The exigencies of production, i.e., the condensing in as polished a fashion as possible of the five hours from the afternoon, required a late evening scheduling of the résumé.

The "Stanfield Evening" on the Friday of the convention was telecast in its entirety, and an hour of the Diefenbaker tribute was telecast on Thursday.

A total of 11 hours of the convention were scheduled on the CBC French television network as compared with eight and one half hours at the last Progressive Conservative convention in 1967.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR CRITERIA FOR PSYCHIATRIC TREATMENT FOR INMATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. On February 10, the Solicitor General indicated he would provide details of the criteria or methods used by the penitentiary system to determine priorities for psychiatric treatment. Since it now appears there are no such criteria of general application and since the so-called peace and security legislation introduced to the House yesterday is silent in the area of the psychiatric treatment of inmates in Canadian penitentiaries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That this House direct the Solicitor General to immediately prepare criteria for priorities of psychiatric treatment and table same in the House with an accompanying motion for the consideration thereof by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be put. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR RE-EVALUATION OF JOB CREATING PROGRAMS TO COUNTER UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the real number of unemployed workers had risen to 241,000 in January from 216,000 in December 1975 that, at the present time, there is a very substantial increase of the unemployment rate in Quebec, especially among young people and, also, that an amount of $4 billion is to be spent in 1975-76 in unemployment insurance benefits, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House immediately take all necessary steps to enable the federal government to reassess the job creating programs now in effect so that Canadian workers, specially in Quebec, regain confidence and finally, the fight against inflation may be as effective as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CLOSURE OF BASES WILL NOT RESULT IN ECONOMIC HARDSHIP FOR REGION CONCERNED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent and important matter, at least to Atlantic Canada. The urgency arises out of replies given in the House yesterday by the Minister of National Defence with respect to base closing and consolidation studies. Because the report with respect to base closure is expected to be presented to the minister and cabinet in March, and having regard to the economic impact of such a development, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House instruct the Minister of National Defence to seek assurances from his colleague, the minister responsible for regional economic development, that any base closure will not result in widespread civilian lay-offs or undue economic hardship for the region concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, unanimous consent is required before the motion can be put.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PROPOSAL TO REQUEST INFORMATION ON LOCKHEED'S BRIBERY PAYMENTS AND TO CANCEL CONTRACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity. It was reported yesterday that Japan's upper and lower houses have called on the United States government and Senate to release all undisclosed information on Lockheed's bribery payments. It is well known, as well, that the general accounting office of the United States government has warned the U.S. Congress that Lockheed may fail to meet the 1978 deadline for repaying the $195 million it borrowed under a government loan guarantee. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

● (1410)

That the Canadian government follow the Japanese example and request all undisclosed information on Lockheed bribery payments and, as well, in view of the apparent shaky financial position of that corporation, we request the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) to consider immediate cancellation of contract proceedings with Lockheed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO CATTLE AUCTIONS TO PERMIT COMPETITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an urgent and important matter.

Since companies purchasing cattle for consumption, particularly those in Quebec, act through a single buyer at auction sales of livestock, thus removing any competition at the buying stage and enabling these companies to pay ridiculous prices to producers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs be requested to inquire into cattle auctions and investigate producers to identify companies responsible for procedures which ensure them monopoly over cattle buying, and that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs take court action against such companies.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO NEW LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Prime Minister on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope that this enthusiasm when I rise will not be interpreted as whistling in the dark by any ill-wishers of the party. I thank you for permitting me to rise for the second week in a row on a question of order relative to the leadership of the Conservative party. I hope this will not become a habit, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for permission to use this point of order to welcome into the House the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) as Leader of the Official Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: I think, Mr. Speaker, that I am voicing the feeling entertained by all members on the government side in congratulating the members of the Progressive Conservative Party for their convention held last weekend. It has been an event much to their credit, an event which has been followed by very many Canadians and reflected a sense of progress of democracy within this party much to its credit and which, I feel, augurs well of the destinies of Canada. When I see that the two major parties of this country, not to mention the other two, is imbued with a spirit of democracy, a spirit of service towards Canadian public, I am satisfied.

Last week, I was expressing the wish that the leader who would be chosen would follow the footsteps of the former leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), and I think this wish has been realized. Here is a leader who will do well in pursuing the ideals of the hon. member for Halifax. I know that we will have more than one political battle to fight one against the other, but I comfort myself with the feeling that we are both aiming at the same good, the Canadian commonweal, and of this I think everybody is assured.

[English]

I would admit, Mr. Speaker, that I feel a little bit as though we on this side of the House should put our wagons in a circle when I see how surrounded we are on the other side by leadership candidates, and by potential leaders of the party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am used to sitting opposite the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), and I probably could get used to sitting opposite the hon. member for Rocky Mountain.

An hon. Member: On which side?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You have done nothing but a Joe job.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can see that I have more than half the Tory caucus against me today. Anyone would be intimidated in my place if he were faced not by one, not by two but by three generations of Tory leaders.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are of the wrong generation.

Mr. Trudeau: I know that in these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition will not lack expert advice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am somewhat consoled by the fact that I do have several of his chums from southern Alberta in my office to advise me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: If that is not sufficient I would hope we will be able to pick up some Liberal members in Alberta at the next general election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Don't hold your breath, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: As the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) suggests, I do not think I should hold my breath in that regard, particularly when I look into the galleries and see the number of relatives the hon. member has.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Speaking seriously, Mr. Speaker, I have been told that the new Leader of the Opposition has wanted to become Prime Minister since he was in his teens. I can vouch for the fact that he has lost no time in coming to the point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Just yesterday, only two days after the leadership convention, I received a letter from the hon. leader's national president, Mr. Michael Meighen. It is a somewhat moving letter, or at least I find it moving. There is no doubt about the address; it is to the Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau, M.P., Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I assume that will still be my title for a little while. It begins very warmly by saying "Dear Friend".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It goes on to state:

Never has the need for an alternative to Trudeau and his party been more apparent;—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I won't read it all, Mr. Speaker, but it does get to the point—

An hon. Member: Read it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: All right, I will read some more, Mr. Speaker. It states:

The federal Progressive Conservative party has always taken tough stands on vital national issues;—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: That is a statement of fact with which I won't quarrel, Mr. Speaker, but the succeeding paragraph asks me to consider what I will do to share in the task before us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Resign, resign.

● (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: The advice here is not to resign; it is to give money to the Tory party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker it says here quite clearly: "The PC Party needs your help".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can say to the leader I will do my best to keep him in his present job as long as I can and, as I had occasion to say to the Leader of the New Democratic Party a few months ago, I wish him well, but not too well. I can understand the desire to be Prime Minister—you know, a big car and the swimming pool, especially now that the question of anonymous donors will no longer be an issue. But I assure him it is much more fun to be Leader of the Opposition and I will co-operate in every way I can to ensure that that is the case.

An hon. Member: What about the cheque?

Mr. Trudeau: The cheque is requested on a little leaflet—these will be my final words, Mr. Speaker—which says: "Yes, Mr. Meighen, you can count on me to do my share".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in welcoming the new Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) I should like to say first of all to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—and I am sure he will not misunderstand the spirit of my comment—that perhaps the reason he got the letter from Mr. Meighen was that, given his recorded and publicly known contribution to the Liberal party, it was thought that he might be willing to give more to his opponents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I do want, Mr. Speaker, to present very best wishes on behalf of my colleagues to the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, on what I think is almost universally acknowledged, both within his party and outside, as a remarkable personal victory for an extremely able young man.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I and some of my colleagues watched the television screen with considerable interest, particularly the discussions of the pundits who were making much of the problems he and the other candidates had in resolving certain conflicts between the left and the right in the party.

I should like to say to the hon. member that unless and until he is a member of a socialist party he really will not know what a battle is between the left and the right. I am sure also that the hon. member will understand that in congratulating him on his personal victory I and my colleagues want to make sure that all of his victories in the future continue to be of a strictly personal nature.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add one final note which is that as that well-known backbencher, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), might have put it if he were to comment at this point, I must frankly say that the new Leader of the Official Opposition does seem to be just a wee bit young to be taking on the onerous responsibilities of leading a political party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pointed out a moment ago that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) has many relatives in the opposition gallery. Not only are there relatives of the Leader of the Official Opposition, I also have some of my relatives in the opposition gallery. I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister as well has some of his relatives in the gallery of the government.

It is a great pleasure for me to echo the words of welcome of the Prime Minister and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I wish good luck to the "young" leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. As a matter of fact, I watched very closely the events of the convention last weekend, when the hon. member for Rocky Mountain started practically from square one to reach the top of his political party. Nobody expected that. As we say in English, it really was the victory of the dark horse.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite an honour for a young man of 36 to become leader of one of the main political parties in Canada. In the House, a lot of work awaits him. He now has one responsibility which he did not have last week. He also replaces a leader who did his best to promote understanding and unity in Canada. And I particularly remember what he said about national unity—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): —on the evening of his election. Everybody talks about national unity, and the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party was no exception Sunday night: he talked about national unity as the basis. What is unfortunate during such conventions, be it a Liberal, a Progressive Conservative or a Social Credit convention, is to hear grumblers behind the scene say for instance: We will lick those french frogs; or we will beat the French Canadians. Or Again, French Canadians say: "That is a move against the English". I know whereof I speak.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I hear one of my friends exclaim: Oh, oh! In 1961, I too could have said, oh, oh!, when a former Social Credit premier of Alberta came and told me straight to my face that the west would never accept a Catholic French Canadian as national leader of a political party. That is what I was told in 1961. Today, when the leaders, the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Official Opposition, the leader of the NDP and myself are all fighting for national unity, there are still narrow-minded people, not just out in western Canada, but in the east as well, who try to destroy Canada instead of building it up. The time has come for all leaders and all federal members without any exception to practice what they preach. The time has come to agree and reflect on Canada instead of thinking in terms of the English language and the French language.

The main problem in Canada if not one of languages but one of economic nature. When the day comes where all together we have solved the economic problem, we can continue to speak French in Quebec, English in western Canada, and we will then have at least the assurance of living decently in our country. I trust the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party will do everything in his power to achieve that true national unity.

Mr. Speaker, my last words will advise the Leader of the Opposition of something his predecessors never seemed to understand: that the official name of the party I represent here is the Social Credit Party of Canada. Even last week, I heard it called the ralliement créditiste. That party is in Quebec, not in Ottawa. Here, we have The Social Credit Party of Canada.

Good luck to the Leader of the Opposition and to his colleagues!

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —mes amis du parlement, it is naturally a very moving occasion for me to take my place here today and to hear so many kind things said, for the last time no doubt, by so many of my hon. colleagues in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I have been here but a short time but have had the privilege, both from the galleries and from a perspective across the country, to learn to appreciate the camaraderie which is the essence of this Chamber and of this House. I recognize that that has been expressed here again today, and I express from the bottom of my heart my very deep appreciation of the welcome that has been shown me, even though I realize how short lived that good will will be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I should warn the House that I am the second of my family to have assumed an official position here. A great uncle of mine was the first parliamentary secretary to be appointed in the history of Canada. Immediately after that appointment the House of Commons burned down—I trust there will be no unhealthy repetition of that precedent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I particularly appreciate the welcome of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of the other party leaders. I point out to the Prime Minister, since he, like the rest of us, is now in receipt of the mails—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —that the letter which he received was addressed to him as a member of parliament, and it was not addressed to 24 Sussex Drive. With regard to his title as the right honourable, we expect that even though he might be able to maintain the title to which the letter was addressed, mail coming from Michael Meighen to 24 Sussex Drive in the future will not be there through any computer error.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I should go on to indicate on behalf of my colleagues that we had no indication of the nature in which the Prime Minister intended to respond to that appeal from the national president, and we welcome support—and I should say we have been receiving it—from all quarters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I particularly appreciate also the indication of the Prime Minister of a willingness to help us in our work, and I can say to him—and I am sure he will take no offence at all—that there are very many of us who believe he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: I am very pleased to be able to address this House in French for the first time as Leader of the Opposition. I shall have the opportunity to do this very often in the future and I can assure you I shall take it each time. It is a great advantage for a Canadian politician to be able to speak both official languages. The French language represents a cultural wealth I want to study further so that one day I will feel pride in being a bilingual Canadian.

[English]

Because I missed some of the events of last week, for reasons which the House will understand, I just want to add a very brief word of my expression of personal gratitude, and on behalf of my party, to my temporary seatmate and my continuing friend and adviser, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who was honoured so appropriately and so fully in this House last week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

New P.C. Leader

Mr. Clark: As I had occasion to say the other day, it was my privilege to serve an apprenticeship under the Hon. Robert Stanfield, and one could not have a better teacher in learning about the art of conciliation and of governing this country. I respect that apprenticeship and I will do my utmost to honour that tradition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If I may be permitted one more remark of an internal partisan kind in this House—because occasionally the internal politics of my party become of interest beyond our party—I wish to express my personal appreciation to all my hon. colleagues here and from outside parliament who joined with me in a campaign which, as several have indicated, was indeed a model of democracy and an indication of the continuing effectiveness of the political systems in our country. I want particularly to express my appreciation, that of my party, and I believe that of my country to my colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —for the very gracious manner in which he indicated the national nature of our party and the importance of Canadians of whatever background coming together, in moments of elation or in moments of disappointment, to work together for a common country whose heritage we all appreciate and can all expand by working commonly together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I hope the Clerk of the House—and I naturally prefer that pronounciation to the British one—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —has not been paying too close attention to attendance lately. I have been away, and it is really quite startling to come back to the House and to hear oneself for the first time referred to by the Prime Minister as the Leader of the Opposition. It is a moving experience and one to whose satisfactions I hope to be able to introduce him myself sometime in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: It won't be long.

● (1440)

Mr. Clark: The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) has obviously taken in good grace the shock of no longer being the youngest party leader in the House of Commons. I thank him for his kind remarks. His problems of internal difficulties may continue; ours, of course, are over!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I want to reassure him that I still believe that in the world of socialist politicians he is easily still a match for many a 60 year old in Sweden.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

New P.C. Leader

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: I thank the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada for his good wishes. I am pleased to see that he and his party are so happy about what is happening to me. I shall not forget to reciprocate these wishes when I go to Quebec to make people in general and Social Credit members in particular better acquainted with me.

[English]

As the House may have noted I have had some early difficulties in becoming recognized in the country. One newspaper headline that I saw posed the question "Joe Who?" I did not take any exception to that.

An hon. Member: Joe Guay.

Mr. Clark: No, it was—

[Translation]

No, it was an English newspaper. It was not Joe qui—

[English]

I am so well prepared to let that pass that I would now probably have to ask myself "which Star?"

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: It is, of course, Mr. Speaker, a very proud and moving occasion for me to formally take my place in this House as leader of my great party and Leader of the Opposition, as well as of the alternative government of Canada. I will do my best to honour my post—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Not for long.

An hon. Member: Scattered applause!

Mr. Clark: My colleagues opposite indicated there was some scattered applause. Mr. Speaker, let me say I am proud to be here as leader of the alternative government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Talk about trained seals.

Mr. Hees: Any more comments?

Mr. Trudeau: Any more trained seals?

Mr. Clark: I shall do my best, Mr. Speaker, to honour my post with responsibility, with foresight and with partisanship, as did my two illustrious colleagues who immediately preceded me.

I thank you all for your good wishes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

FINANCE

AMOUNT OF ANTICIPATED DEFICIT—METHOD OF DEALING WITH DEFICIT—POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER CUTS IN EXPENDITURES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Well, Mr. Speaker, here we go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Hold on to your hats over there.

Mr. Clark: My question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the member for York-Simcoe asked the Prime Minister whether there will be a deficit this year of approximately $5 billion, to which the Prime Minister replied that the President of the Treasury Board had already made a statement on that subject. The Prime Minister might not have had a chance to refresh his memory at that time on exactly the nature of the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board on February 18 which indicated that the government now intends to spend $2 billion more than it said it intended to spend in the budget address of June 23. Would the Prime Minister now tell the House whether the government anticipates a deficit of nearly $5 billion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the figures speak for themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As I said, the estimates were tabled by the President of the Treasury Board and he made a statement. The estimates will be examined by the House, so the opposition will be in a position to examine the figures and criticize them, as undoubtedly they will want to do.

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question. Given the fact that we now have an anticipated deficit in the neighbourhood of $5 billion, will the Prime Minister indicate whether the government intends to respond to that deficit by continuing in debt, with the inflationary consequence that involves, by increasing taxation or by facing the realities and necessities of Canada directly and making an immediate announcement of some substantial and dramatic cuts in government expenditure?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has made it clear that he will be tabling a budget in the course of the coming months. The Leader of the Opposition knows that a question on whether or not we will cut taxes, or whether we will increase them or take other fiscal measures will be announced in the budget, and that is not done in answer to a question across the floor of the House.

Mr. Clark: Is it the final position of the Prime Minister that there will not be until the introduction of a budget at some future date, any further indication of significant cuts in the spending of the government of Canada? Are we going to have to live with the terribly bad example of a failure of restraint symbolized by a $5 billion deficit?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my answer relating to the budget referred to fiscal matters and tax cuts or increases. It did not refer to expenditures. After the exercise in cutting that the President of the Treasury Board announced before Christmas, the government had every intention of seeking out other areas where we can cut expenditures. There is no wish on the part of the government to postpone this to any particular date. I will be looking forward with great anxiety to specific propositions from the Leader of the Opposition.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF CHANGES IN LEGISLATION ON GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Considering that the government's contribution to unemployment insurance has increased by the unacceptably high rate of 91 per cent, from $890 million to $1.7 billion this year over last, can the minister assure the House that changes introduced in Bill C-69 will result in a decrease in federal contributions for next year or, merely, that the rate of increase will not be quite as high?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that matter was thoroughly discussed in the debate on Bill C-69. There will be a reduction of the government's share of whatever level of unemployment insurance benefit payments develops during 1976 which, of course, is based in the main on the level of unemployment.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the conference board among others predicts an increased rate of unemployment for 1976, and considering that the publication of the Treasury Board claims the increase in UIC payments "relects the increase in unemployment that took place from 1974 to 1975", is the minister now saying that he does expect a rise in contributions by the government to the UIC fund?

● (1450)

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, that is based on several variable factors, one of which the hon. member has already indicated, namely the rate of unemployment and the measure of unemployment in 1976.

ALLEGED SECRET AGREEMENT FOR SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS—INSISTENCE ON APPLICATION OF CANADIAN SAFEGUARDS TO PAKISTAN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. There is a report in the New York Times that an official in Washington said yesterday that Canada, along with a number of other countries, has signed a secret agreement covering safeguard requirements for the sale of nuclear equipment abroad. Has Canada in fact signed such an agreement? Also, is it a secret agreement as reported? If so, why are the details of it being kept secret?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no secret agreement. I very much doubt that there would be one. I have not seen the report referred to by the hon. member. It is possible that it would be based on the meeting of nuclear suppliers which was held in London some months ago, and which Canada attended with the very express purpose of enjoining other countries to upgrade their safeguards to the same high level as Canada has unilaterally upgraded her safeguards. Therefore, in this context, it is true that we are seeking agreement from other countries not to try to undercut us by having lower levels of safeguards and thereby increasing the danger of proliferation. We are seeking this. There is no secret about it. The results of the conference have not yet been conclusive. I will refer any supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who may be in a position to add some other facts.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is of such a general nature that I am sure the Prime Minister will not require particular knowledge to answer it. In his discussions with Prime Minister Ali Bhutto of Pakistan or in discussions between him and Canadian officials, has the Canadian government made clear to the government of Pakistan that we will be insisting that the new safeguard provisions apply to Canadian uranium or reactor by-products which would be used in that country for French plants? I ask this in light of the report that the government of Pakistan is saying that it will not apply the Canadian safeguards to Canadian nuclear material which may be used with equipment or reactors supplied by other countries.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can only indicate to the leader of the NDP that we have indeed been discussing safeguards; the Prime Minister of Pakistan, myself and my officials. They have been made aware of the very high level of safeguards that Canada is now demanding. They have argued, with some understanding, that they are concerned that our safeguards are in a sense being applied retroactively since they are being heightened in the process of an exchange which began some years ago. This is the essence of the argument. I cannot report today that the argument has been solved conclusively to the satisfaction of either party. The discussions are going on. I am sure that when we have reached an agreement, as I am confident we will, the House will be made aware of what that agreement is.

Mr. Broadbent: I understand that all the details have not yet been settled. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that one of the preconditions the government of Canada will insist upon is that the safeguard provisions, as they pertain to any further equipment or supplies in the nuclear field supplied by Canada, will in fact apply to equipment now in Pakistan, even though that equipment came from another country originally? Related to that, will he assure the House we will have an opportunity to debate this very important question before the signing of the agreement?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question of the reprocessing plant to which the hon. member is alluding is, of course, at the centre of our discussions with Pakistan, as it was in our discussions with South Korea. The House knows that in the case of South Korea, the government of that country announced it did not intend to proceed with the reprocessing plant. We have no such undertaking from Pakistan. I repeat, the discussion is going on. The House can assume from the position we took in previous cases that we are very concerned about the possibility of a reprocessing plant being set up in Pakistan. That is at the heart of the discussions. I repeat to the hon. member that the discussions are not concluded.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DATE BRITISH COLUMBIA WILL BE GIVEN FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister.

During his recent trip to British Columbia with his cabinet colleagues, the Prime Minister met his political friends many times to discuss the future of French-speaking television in British Columbia. I noticed that the Prime Minister was quite straight in his answers. Can he tell the House if the French-speaking community of British Columbia will really get CBC services in French and when?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as regards the government's intents or, more precisely, those of the Crown corporation called CBC, my answer is yes, for CBC is actually equipped to provide services in French to the French-speaking community of British Columbia. So, as regards the plans, the answer is yes. As for carrying out such plans, the hon. member knows that the corporation must get from the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission—the CRTC—the authority to broadcast its programs; and the request for such authority is now before the CRTC. Obviously we hope to have a positive answer. However, I do not want to add anything, for it is almost a judicial commission on which the government cannot exert political pressures.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister's explanations are clear enough. French television has obviously been promised by the government in order that French Canadians in Western Canada be provided with the services of the Crown corporation. Should the CRTC fail to issue the licence, does the government then not have some means, not by putting the matter aside, but to urge the CRTC to grant authorization for broadcasting in French in the west, as much as we in Quebec tolerate English programs in certain regions where there are almost no Anglophones?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will allow me to make three remarks: first, it is an extremely technical matter. We must know if the stations can be freed or occupied by French-language programs. This again depends on that quasi-judicial commission. Second, the question by the hon. member, in its very form, is purely hypothetical. Third, his question involves some pessimism I do not share.

MOOSONEE—SUGGESTION THAT HOUSES, SCHOOLS AND OTHER FACILITIES BE MADE AVAILABLE TO NATIVES

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief but important question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In his absence, I will direct it to the Prime Minister or the acting minister. The question arises out of the disturbing, indeed scandalous, situation at Moosonee portrayed on CBC television last evening. I would ask whether it is possible for the minister to sit down with the appropriate minister in the government of Ontario to make some firm decisions and agreements so that these expensive houses, schools and other facilities can be put to productive use by and for the native people of that region?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and get back to the hon. member with the information.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. The government of Canada is spending half a million dollars a year to maintain these facilities which include recreation facilities such as a swimming pool which, incidentally, was drained while the Prime Minister's pool was being built. Will the Prime Minister see that these facilities are put to use for those who have lived there all their lives in sub-human conditions? Will he personally take this matter in hand today in order to find a solution to this problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will see that the hon. member's representations are drawn to the attention of the minister.

NUCLEAR SAFEGUARDS—APPLICABILITY TO OLD AS WELL AS NEW INSTALLATIONS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to clarify the intent of the words of the Prime Minister in the answers he gave to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. Am I to understand that it is the policy of the government, in connection with requests for assistance involving nuclear installations in underdeveloped countries, that when those nations already possess facilities or installations from Canada the government will insist that the new nuclear safeguards will apply equally to the new installations as well as to the old?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can answer the question easily as it applies to new installations of countries which want to share in Canada's technology. As far as installations which already exist are concerned, for example in Pakistan and, for that matter, in India, we are doing our utmost to ensure that our present very high level of safeguards obtains. I cannot give the results of the negotiations with Pakistan and India because they are still going on. We are trying to get the best possible results. The House should be aware of one danger. If we are absolutely dogmatic about this and withdraw all co-operation with such countries, there is no guarantee that we will not end up with even less safeguards than were originally agreed upon, because these countries will say: Okay, you are now imposing new conditions; we do not agree with them. They will break off, and look for technology and supplies in other areas, as indeed has happened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: May I attempt to draw out the Prime Minister further by asking him whether the new safeguards would also apply when any nation contracts in the future for fuel for an installation, whether the installation emanates from Canada or not?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is our intention that there should be safeguards over the entire life of the overall components of the nuclear process.

NUCLEAR REACTORS—WILLINGNESS OF PAKISTAN TO SIGN NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: In the discussions with Pakistan were any indications given as to when that country would be prepared to sign and ratify the nuclear non-proliferation treaty?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The matter was raised on several occasions—prior, I mean, to this particular visit. I believe the subject has been discussed in various forums. I know the answer that Pakistan gives, but I cannot give the House any assurance that they will change their position on it.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH REGIONAL NUCLEAR FUEL CYCLE CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): With respect to the concern shown by the Prime Minister in terms of the reprocessing facilities, I wonder whether the government has yet taken a position on the proposal of Secretary of State Kissinger at the United Nations last September when he spoke about the need for the establishment of a multinational regional nuclear fuel cycle centre whose purpose would be to encourage regional energy co-operation and safeguard the peaceful use of nuclear power. Has the government yet taken a position on this proposal and has it formed a part of the negotiations with the other countries mentioned in the context of nuclear safeguards?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would have to inquire whether that particular subject was raised at the nuclear suppliers' meeting in London. Personally, I do not know. I do know that Canada's safeguards have been moved by us to a higher degree of safety than those of any other nuclear supplier and we are trying to bring other countries along in our wake.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO CHANGE IN CURFEW HOURS OR PLANS FOR EXPANSION

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. On Tuesday, the Toronto Globe and Mail reported that a letter had been sent by the minister to the City of Mississauga implying that the Toronto International Airport might be expanded. The minister subsequently denied this but said arrival times might be spread out. Can the hon. gentleman confirm, first, that in planning to spread arrival times the minister will not drop the present curfew hours, and, second, that the government will not alter its commitment that there will be no significant airport expansion at Malton, despite the Tory government in Ontario reneging on its commitments in connection with Pickering.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I am happy to reassure the hon. member on both those points. No consideration has been given to any change in the curfew. The lack of facilities at Pickering does mean that we face a heavy volume of approaching traffic in the Toronto region and are obliged to look at the Malton facilities to determine how the airport can, indeed, cope with the pressure which will be placed upon it. That was the point of the sentence in my letter to which the hon. member referred. I might say that my letter went on to emphasize our consciousness of the concern and interest of the people in the area of the airport, and the way they suffered as a result of the increased use of that airport. It did refer to the commitment against further expansion at Malton.

TAKEOVER OF CHECKERBOARD FOODS BY SWIFT CANADIAN—APPROVAL BY COMBINES BRANCH—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? It relates to the takeover of Checkerboard Foods by Swift Canadian and has to do with the question I put to the hon. gentleman yesterday. He told us then that he would have an answer the next day or two from the combines investigation branch. In view of the fact that the company is due to close down today and lay off 180 workers, may I ask the minister whether he has received that answer from the Combines Investigation Branch and, further, whether he has looked into the other part of the answer he gave me about the Combines Investigation Act taking precedence over FIRA?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I regret I do not have the answer today. I am sure we shall have it tomorrow, because the matter will have to be considered tomorrow; it is precisely on the point about which the hon. member asks, namely, whether one act does take precedence over the other. That is a matter we shall have to decide tomorrow; it is not quite clear and there will need to be considerable discussion about it.

Mr. Saltsman: Will the minister take a look at the precedent established by a former minister of trade and commerce, Mr. Howe, that of rejecting any advice from the Combines Investigation Branch?

ALLEGATION CONCERNING CLOSURE OF BASES IN ALBERTA AND REMOVAL OF AIRBORNE REGIMENT FROM EDMONTON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In the light of a statement by a senior officer of the National Defence Employees' Association last Thursday or Friday that we can announce on unimpeachable authority that it was being recommended that the airborne regiment be moved from Edmonton and that two other bases in Alberta would be closed, may I ask whether the minister is able to verify this information. If so, can he tell us whether these recommendations have reached his cabinet colleagues and what his position will be?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): I am unable to go beyond the answer I gave yesterday on this same general subject. I cannot comment on individual decisions, or individual bases or individual regiments. They are all being considered in the course of the infrastructure study which is going ahead at the present time.

INFRASTRUCTURE STUDY—DATE OF RELEASE OF REPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Will the minister confirm or deny reports that the land forces based in Calgary are to be moved and that bases are to be closed in the Province of Alberta? If he cannot give an answer today, may I ask him when that secret report he has been studying will be publicly disclosed so that he can give honest and straightforward answers in the House?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): I said yesterday that the recommendation would probably go before cabinet next month, and that I did not know how long cabinet would take to consider them.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister said that recommendations will go forward, I take it he now has positive and definite information. What are the recommendations, and are these bases going to be closed?

CLOSURE OF BASES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES WILL RECEIVE HELP FINDING EMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Since 35 to 40 per cent of the civilian employees at Canadian military bases across the country are between the ages of 52 and 54 years and have a general education level less than grade 10, and since they are in a sense technologically redundant which would make it extremely difficult to place them in equivalent jobs in their present home situations, what assurances can the Prime Minister give these individuals that when the time comes for a hard decision, for biting the bullet, every possible opportunity, indeed priority, will be given them to find or help them to find equivalent jobs in their local areas without undue hardship?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, part of the question is by way of representation, of which, of course, I take note. The hon. member will have heard the Minister of National Defence indicate on previous occasions when there was a discussion of base closings that all these precautions were indeed important, that we would take them, and we will continue to take them.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

MEANS OF GIVING PROVINCES JURISDICTION OVER CULTURAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering the declarations by the Leader of the Opposition during the leadership campaign, to the effect that the field of cultural affairs should be transferred to the provinces, and considering that on Monday, February 23, the secretary of the office responsible for federal-provincial relations declared before the Institute of Public Administration of Canada that the cultural security which Quebec is seeking could be achieved without entailing a transfer of jurisdiction, can the right hon. Prime Minister confirm whether or not he agrees with this opinion and advise the House whether the government is working to devise a formula which would enable Quebec or any other Canadian province to fulfil its objectives of cultural identity without having to reopen the issue of separation of jurisdiction, such as it is defined in sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer in one word is yes. I agree with this view. Indeed I believe it is possible and desirable for each province to work very efficiently in this field. I think that the history of the last decades also indicates that the federal government must keep playing its role in the cultural field, in particular as far as protecting and promoting the French language. I think it is an acknowledged fact that federal agencies have done a lot for the development and progress of the French language in this country. Therefore I think that, within the framework of the constitution as it is presently written, it is possible to achieve enormous progress in this domain and enable the provinces to protect their cultural legacy without having to amend the constitution.

INVESTIGATION OF LENGTH OF TIME TAKEN TO START SEARCH FOR MISSING FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is diverted to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister had a chance to investigate the length of time it took the air-sea rescue unit in Halifax to respond to the unfortunate incident when two fishermen were lost off the east coast of Newfoundland?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that I have been able to examine the facts at this time, I may say this was essentially a marine search. There were three vessels in the area. The main function of our air search and rescue is to identify and find missing objects, such as missing ships, from the air. There was no reason to send out an aircraft because the Coast Guard were already in contact with the ship that was in difficulty. It was only later when contact with the ship was lost during the night that we had to send out an aircraft, and that explains in part the time it took for the aircraft to get there. There was no reason for it to start out in the first instance, but once it was needed it got there and did discover the ship.

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING AIR RESCUE UNIT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I cannot agree with that philosophy or strategy but I do not want to argue with the minister. In view of the fact that there have now been three incidents, would the minister consider the provision of an air rescue element in the province of Newfoundland? Would the minister also consider, having regard to his statement last year that he was going to set up two new air force auxiliary reserve units, locating one in Newfoundland where the infrastructure exists as a result of the existence of SAC bases there during there war? It could be done at low cost, and recruits would be available from air cadet units and other units.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did explain to the hon. member before why it was not practical or efficient for us to have an air search and rescue capability in Newfoundland, that we should not spread that capability around to places where maintenance work could not be done. There are also other reasons why it would not be cost-effective. As for the air reserve, I would be glad to take another look at that possibility.

WOOD BUFFALO—REMOVAL OF LAND FROM PARK TO SATISFY LAND CLAIMS OF TREATY NO. 8—CONSIDERATION OF ALTERNATIVE

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would the minister inform the House whether it is still the intention of the government to proceed with the removal of land from Wood Buffalo National Park to satisfy land claims of treaty No. 8?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the government knew of Treaty No. 8 in 1922 when the park was first established and made no allowance for the removal of land to cover treaty requirements at that time, would the minister consider negotiating with the province so that provincial Crown land could be used to satisfy the treaty requirements, instead of portions of Wood Buffalo National Park, so we can preserve the park intact?

Mr. Buchanan: There was considerable study made of this selection, by the Indian people, prior to this action being taken and they did identify roughly 42,000 acres which are being withdrawn from Wood Buffalo National Park. There are an additional 55,000 acres still outstanding which will quite likely come from Alberta Crown lands. That was the land identified, and since this was an obligation, as the hon, member has said, ante-dating the creation of the park, we felt it had a prior claim.

GUATEMALA—PRODUCTION OF PREFABRICATED HOUSES TO AID EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS AND RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Since shelter is of paramount importance to the unfortunate and homeless people of Guatemala, I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman and his government would give consideration to a program that would produce prefabricated housing involving Canadian materials and workmanship: and in view of the fact that this type of housing can be produced quickly at the Point Edward industrial park in Cape Breton, such a program would serve a two-fold purpose: it would aid the victims of the earthquake in Guatemala, and also tend to reduce somewhat the very high unemployment rate in Cape Breton, of which I am sure the right hon. gentleman is very much aware.

[Mr. Elzinga.]

● (1520)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his suggestion on a matter which is obviously of serious concern. Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: How does the right hon. gentleman view the strange and absurd paradox in the recent utterances of His Worship the mayor of Hull in today's press, voicing objection to Her Majesty presiding at the opening of the Canadian Olympic Games in Montreal when he said:

She has no business being there. We don't need foreigners to open our games.

At the same time, His Worship voices no objection to the presence in the latest of Her Majesty's public works estimates of $50 million for Hull.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

VALUE OF CONTRACTS FOR MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED—SUGGESTION FINANCING BENEFITS BE SPREAD MORE EQUITABLY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce aware that three companies, two foreign controlled and the Simard-Bourassa dominated Marine Industries Limited, received 52½ per cent of the benefit of some $695 million in contracts signed by Export Development Limited in 1975 and, if so, would the minister indicate whether he feels it is desirable to have such a concentration of financing for the benefit of a corporate few?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the question asks for an opinion and I will be glad to give it. If it results in, what was the figure, some half a billion dollars worth of business I would think the EDC was fully justified, with the normal kind of protection for Canadian people, investing in that kind of undertaking for export. I only wish we had half a dozen more like it.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the huge sums that are involved here, will he indicate whether he intends to take any steps to ensure in future that the EDC financing benefits will be spread more equitably to businessmen throughout Canada, and that financings of up to $130 million, as in the case of Marine Industries Limited, of dredging fame, will not be permitted to occur in the future, bearing in mind that these financings have a seven per cent interest rate which is a tremendous subsidy by the people of Canada to these corporate few?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I would really like to know from the hon. member if he is telling me that the Export Development Corporation should not be making substantial efforts to get every dollar's worth of export that we can. It seems to me he is calling into question the whole proposition. If he is, I would be glad to debate it with him. As for the money being available to further business, of course we are making every effort to do this, and if the hon. member knows of any businesses anywhere in this country which have a legitimate opportunity abroad and can be helped by EDC financing I will personally take them by the hand down to the bank.

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF TRADING WHEAT FOR VENEZUELAN OIL

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's recent trip to Venezuela, I should like to ask whether he had discussions with Venezuelan officials about entering into an agreement for the sale of wheat to Venezuela against the sale of Venezuelan oil to Canada and, if so, could he inform the House of the outcome of the discussions that took place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the context of discussions on trade, particularly with a view to reducing the deficit trade balance we have with Venezuela because of our large imports of petroleum to eastern Canada, the matter of various food stocks was raised. This was raised by me in general terms and officials pursued the discussions in more concrete terms. I have no announcement to make about any specific agreement that has been made in that regard, but both sides have agreed to advance the interests of each other in so far as possible.

FINANCE

MONITORING OF INCOME OF INSURANCE AGENTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. In British Columbia the ICBC insurance rates have recently experienced an across the board doubling, and the income of eight private agents selling that insurance has also been increased to a very substantial degree. Would the parliamentary secretary advise whether the department is carrying out any monitoring of incomes of insurance agents in the province of British Columbia in view of the fact that the people buying that insurance are having their wages frozen, whereas agents in some cases are substantially increasing their incomes, obviously well above the federal government guidelines?

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member put that question for the first time on February 5, 1976. The Minister of Finance has already answered it. On the adjournment motion on February 10, 1976, he put the same question again and I answered him. Today I am glad to see that he introduces a new aspect which concerns the commission paid to the agent. I shall be glad to get an interpretation on this thoroughly new aspect of his question and I want to mention that we are dealing with a provincial Crown corporation and that I shall make the required representations.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBILITY OF MERGING OFFICES WITH MANPOWER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and its purpose is to seek some clarification of a fairly recent statement by the minister in northern Ontario in which he indicated that the offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and Canada Manpower should be combined. I would ask first whether the minister was quoted accurately and, if so, will he give some indication as to the proposed timing of such a move?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I was not quoted precisely. I was asked whether this possibility was being examined. I indicated it was an option that had been looked at and was under consideration, but that no decision had yet been taken.

ELECTIONS

DATE OF BY-ELECTIONS IN ST. JOHN'S WEST AND OTTAWA-CARLETON

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the constituency of St. John's West has been vacant now since last September, will the Prime Minister tell the House when he intends to call a by-election there, as well as in Ottawa-Carleton and wherever else he would care to meet us in combat?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed the matter of the vacancy in St. John's West with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I hope I will have an announcement to make in that regard within the next 10 or 12 days.

PETITION PRESENTED BY MR. LAMBERT (BELLECHASSE)

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the standing orders of the House, I want to table a petition signed by 4,700 residents of various provinces in Canada. It says:

WHEREAS Interpol, an international police agency, obtains information on Canadian people;

WHEREAS Interpol gives that information to its fascist or communist members;

WHEREAS the personal integrity of each Canadian citizen must be protected against such actions;

THEREFORE the undersigned humbly ask your Honourable House to agree to break all relations with Interpol until an investigation by the government of Canada is completed or legislation passed to forbid the submission of information on Canadian citizens to fascist and communist countries by Interpol

And the undersigned will continue to urge you.

INCOME TAX PAID BY CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 3,890—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Have the chartered banks paid income tax during each year between 1967 and 1974 and, if so, what was the amount in each case?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Yes. Income tax paid by chartered banks is as follows:

	Total federal and provincial tax in million of dollars
1967	104.7
1968	117.1
1969	231.4
1970	245.1
1971	254.9
1972	285.6
1973	274.5
1974	316.5

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS INFORMATION KIT "INTRODUCING CTS, CATALYST IN SPACE"

Question No. 3,944—Mr. Lachance:

1. What private or public agency was authorized to prepare the Department of Communications' information kit entitled Introducing CTS, Catalyst in Space?

2. (a) What were the production and distribution costs of the kit (b) how many issues were distributed (i) in what locations (ii) to whom?

3. (a) What were the fees, if any, paid to the publicity agency that designed the kit (b) who, in particular, designed the big poster included in the kit (c) who authorized its production (d) what were the production costs?

4. Under the budget restrictions of the Anti-Inflation Programme, does the Department of Communications expect to reduce its publicity expenditures and, particularly, to produce simple information kits?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): 1. The Department of Communications.

2. (a) $22,583.20. Total production cost (including design and printing). $2,932.14, Distribution cost. (b) 10,000. (i) Across Canada and abroad. (ii) 4,500 persons in industry and institutions, e.g., universities, libraries, etc. in Canada and abroad who specifically ask for material emanating from the Department; 2,000 to the Department's five regional offices for subsequent distribution; 2,500 to CTS experimenters, and 1,000 in reserve to enable the Department to respond to specific requests for information on CTS.

3. (a) $12,080.20 (including 3d). (b) Don Hewson and Associates, Ottawa. (c) The Department of Communications. (d) $9,634.

4. The CTS program is of major significance to the Department of Communications, in terms both of the effort involved and of the proportion of the departmental budget devoted to it. Because of the value of the kit as an informational tool designed to explain an area of science and technology in which Canada is increasing its expertise and gaining a world-wide reputation, and in view of the cost of information material of this sort, the expenditure on this aspect of the project is not considered to be high.

"A CONSERVER SOCIETY"

Question No. 3,961—Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

1. Has a core group been formed as a result of a project called "A Conserver Society" and, if so, what is its title?

2. Does the group center its activities in Montreal?

3. Aside from an Interuniversity Committee representing McGill and Montreal Universities, the Science Council, Department of the Environment and the Department of Supply and Services, what other departments and/or agencies form the rest of the core group for this study?

[Mr. Cullen.]

4. What functions does the group or committee serve and what is its budget?

5. What are the names of the (a) individuals involved and which departments and/or agencies do they represent (b) representatives from the Interuniversity Committee?

6. What salaries and/or expenses are received by each individual for the services on the group?

7. Are all of the departments and/or agencies able to issue contracts independently and, if not, is it done by one agent for all and, if so, who is the agent?

8. What contracts have been awarded (a) by each of the 12 or more departments and/or agencies involved in the study or the central agent on their behalf (b) by the core group for this study in lifestyles entitled the "Conserver Society" and, for each project (i) what was the amount (ii) what was the initiating and terminating date (iii) was it tendered (iv) was it a result of an unsolicited proposal?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes, no specific title is used other than "Progress Review Committee."

2. No.

3. Other departments or agencies—Energy, Mines and Resources, Agriculture Canada, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Dept. of Industry, Trade and Commerce, National Research Council, Privy Council Office, Canadian International Development Agency, Dept. of Indian and Northern Affairs, Ministry of State for Science and Technology, National Film Board and Secretary of State. Note: There are no university representatives on this Committee.

4. Review progress of project, there is no specific budget for the "Progress Review Committee." The task is considered as part of their normal project work.

5. The following are the only permanent members of the "Progress Review Committee:" (a) Dr. A. J. Cordell (Science Council of Canada), Dr. W. R. Durie (Environment Canada), Dr. H. F. Fletcher (Environment Canada), Mr. John St. Louis (Dept. of Supply and Services). Representatitves from the other departments/agencies on an "as required basis." (b) No university representatives.

6. No salaries/or expenses are received under this contract by members of "Progress Review Committee."

7. No—the Department of Supply and Services is the sole contracting agency.

8. Only one contract has been awarded by the Department of Supply and Services for the study—(i) $195,000. (ii) November 1, 1974 to April 30, 1976. (iii) No. (iv) Yes.

LANGUAGE TRAINING PROGRAMS TO ASSIST VOLUNTARY AGENCIES

Question No. 3,981—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the Department of the Secretary of State ever granted funds for language-training programmes designed to assist voluntary agencies and, if so, what was the total amount?

2. For each such grant, what was (a) the name and address of the agency (b) the amount?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): The Department of the Secretary of State has not granted funds for language training programmes designed to assist voluntary agencies.

MILK PRODUCTION

Question No. 3,986—Mr. Brisco:

By province, what was the total milk production in (a) 1974 (b) 1975?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: Total Milk Production in Canada, by Province, 1974, 1975. Total milk production for 1975 will be published March 15, 1976. The table below shows milk production in Canada by province for 1974 and production by province for the eleven month period January-November for the years 1974 and 1975.

	12 months 1974	12 months 1975	11 months 1974	11 months 1975

Saskatchewan	560,952		521,429	496,128
Alberta	1,283,456		1,184,542	1,220,118
British Columbia	1,020,135		922,745	984,536
Canada	16,670,362		15,443,849	16,169,891

GRANTS

Question No. 3,996—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs granted subsidies under the Consumer Subsidy Programme in the Constituency of Champlain and, if so, what is the total amount?

2. For each such subsidy, what was (a) its purpose (b) the amount (c) the year it was made?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No.

NOTE: Consumer Assistance grants are not made on the basis of constituency allocation.

ALLOTTED FUNDS FOR ON THE JOB TRAINING PROGRAMME IN CHAMPLAIN CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 4,060—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the Department of Manpower and Immigration allotted funds for the On the Job Training Programme in the Constituency of Champlain and, if so, in what amount?

2. What (a) are the addresses of the Manpower Centres (b) are the courses offered (c) is the salary paid to persons who are registered for such courses?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The On the Job Training Programme was terminated on June 17, 1974.

2. Not applicable.

*PEI COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,529—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Will the government's anti-inflation measures have any effects on the negotiations for costing arrangments in the final three years of Phase 2 of the PEI Comprehensive Development Plan and, if so, what are they?

[English]

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is: There is no reason to believe at this stage that anti-inflation measures will have a negative impact on future development plan negotiations. However, planning for the final three years will be guided by existing economic conditions.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is some disposition, upon unanimous consent, to revert to the introduction of bills to permit the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) to introduce a bill respecting immigration security. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TEMPORARY IMMIGRATION SECURITY ACT

PROVISION RESPECTING DEPORTATION ORDERS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-85, respecting immigration security.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and the amendment of Mr. Gilbert (p.11210).

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, before coming back to the comments I started last night in connection with this particular bill, as the first backbencher on the government side to be on my feet in debate since the election of the new Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition (Mr. Clark), and particularly as a backbencher, I wish to take this opportunity to offer, not only on behalf of myself but I trust all my colleagues in the backbenches on this side, sincere congratulations and good wishes to the hon. member for Rocky Mountain on his outstanding victory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin: If there was ever any question of the worth and importance of backbenchers in our parliamentary system, I think the accomplishment of our distinguished colleague from Rocky Mountain has underlined once and for all the significance and even the ultimate potential of this particular group of parliamentarians.

● (1620)

The hon. member follows a distinguished line of leaders of the Official Opposition in Canadian parliamentary history, most of whom seemed to have emerged from members of his own party, particularly in this century. I can only wish him, once again, a long and successful life in that important role as Leader of the Opposition which he is now commencing. I would, of course, emphasize that latter phrase.

To get back to the bill, I should like at this point to add a comment in connection with the subject of budgetary restraint to which I was referring last night. It is very pertinent to the question asked by the new Leader of the Opposition today, and I would bring it to his attention that Bill C-68 is an example of the kind of restraint I assume he was talking about. It amazes me that his hon. friends—and I hope he will take this up with them—should be spending so much time filibustering this endeavour on the part of the government to exercise restraint in an important area of federal expenditure.

There is another point I wish to make, and I am encouraged to do so now by the filibuster which is taking place. It amazes me that at a time when the rate of inflation was less than 10 per cent the Conservative party should have been running round the country proposing a major anti-inflation program—not one which would have started in a reasonable manner, like the current program, but one which would have commenced with a freeze to be followed by severe anti-inflation measures—yet now, some 16 months later, when the rate of inflation has moved beyond 10 per cent, it decides to fight against the policy it felt so appropriate when the rate of inflation was considerably lower. I mention this because the new Leader of the Opposition threw a spotlight on this aspect in his question today in the House concerning government expenditure, a subject in which we are all very interested, and with which the minister and his colleagues are attempting to come to grips through measures such as Bill C-68.

The bill before us goes back to the budget of June 25 introduced by a former distinguished member of the House, then minister of finance. There were two major features to which I would call attention. The first related to measures the government was proposing in the area of medicare costs, and the second related to hospitalization costs. Bill C-68 deals with only one of those areas, that is to say, with medicare costs; it does not touch hospitalization costs. Since then, amendments have been proposed and will be introduced in committee, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has indicated following recent meetings with representatives of the Canadian Medical Association and others, including provincial ministers of health.

There was some suggestion that the objective which Bill C-68 seeks to obtain could have been arrived at by means of the regular anti-inflation program. It was argued that it would not be necessary to enact any particular restrictive measure in the area of medicare but that the anti-inflation program could bring about the desired results. The difficulty here is that such a course would not, of itself, encourage all those concerned to exercise cost control, and the more prudent use of our resources which is so evidently needed in medicare programs across the country.

I might at this point put on record a quotation, the author of which I shall name after reading it.

> In simple terms, this means for us and all Canadians that if we allow a system as critical as health service for the needy and, the old and the population as a whole to become more expensive than our taxpayers can afford, then it will collapse, and if it does, only the rich and the advantaged will have care and benefits.

That quotation fits in very neatly with Bill C-68. Those words were not spoken by a member of this House or a member of the government. They were spoken by the Premier of Ontario, the leader of the Tory party in that province.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin: In that province, the province of Ontario, it was brought sharply to the attention of the citizens by a prominent member of the government that if something were not done in the near future, the costs of health and education alone would rise to the point at which they would exceed 100 per cent of over-all provincial revenues. Obviously action was required.

There are a number of ways in which health care costs can be reduced over a period of time. One of these involves a fundamental improvement in the health care system, thereby making it more efficient. This was mentioned by the minister in his speech. Second, there is the idea of introducing a new perspective, a new way of approaching the health of Canadians by strengthening personal effort and encouraging people to assume responsibility for improving and maintaining good health. In addition, we might well place extra emphasis upon the reduction of health hazards and measures to protect the health of workers.

As an example of government action in the preventive field one need only mention the recent decision of the Ontario governmnet to make the wearing of seatbelts mandatory. Australia took this step some years ago, and I understand that Quebec is planning to do the same in the not-too-distant future. It is important we should bear in mind that accidents in this country cost up to $2 billion a year, of which some $200 million is directly related to hospital costs and a further $100 million to medicare costs.

A further question which concerns many Canadians is the need to seek ways in which our health care delivery system can be made more efficient. Many Canadians are concerned as to whether or not they are getting the best possible value for the buck which is expended indirectly by them through taxation. It is essential that a realistic ceiling be imposed on medical care cost-sharing arrangements. The bill now before us is a first step in this area. What is called for, and what has already been started, is a general review of health financing arrangements in this country. I repeat that Bill C-68 is merely one step; it relates only to medicare costs. I should like to take a moment or two to explain the two aspects, since it is important that the people should understand them.

In the case of medicare, which is the subject of Bill C-68, costs can indeed increase up to 13 per cent per capita grant, and a further 1.5 per cent for population increase. Here is an important point. This is less than the 16 per cent over-all increase forecast in government expenditures for the coming year; I think that is a very significant point to be made.

Hospital care is an item on which we have heard a good number of speeches and which has been highlighted in the media. It is not affected by Bill C-68. What the former minister of finance proposed in the budget was that in the case of hospital care no change would be made to the existing cost sharing formula between the federal government and the provinces until 1980, at which time the federal government would opt out of the existing arrangement and new kinds of arrangements would have to be negotiated. This is an important point to make, because it is really of no concern to the federal government, or a particular responsibility of the federal government if, for example in the province of Ontario, it is deemed necessary to close the Doctors Hospital in Toronto or any other hospital across the province. Clearly that matter is in the realm and responsibility of the provincial government, and it is not our task either to commend or to criticize that particular move. Obviously Ontario has its financial problems. That becomes obvious when one looks at their own projected deficits of recent years. The province must handle them as it best sees fit.

There has been the insinuation in some of the things we have heard in this House, and which we have read in the media of recent date, that Bill C-68, in some way or another, has a direct or indirect relationship with the current program of the province of Ontario to reduce hospital costs. I repeat that Bill C-68 has no relationship to hospital costs per se. What happens in 1980 in regard to hospital costs will, of course, be a matter for negotiation, and discussions in this area have already commenced.

In conclusion I should like to point out that the Canadian health insurance program is obviously a very important part of our social insurance system. It is clear though that we have not yet been able to resolve the problem of the rising cost of health services, and in particular the cost of high quality services that have been available to Canadians through the two major national health programs that we have before us. The problem is really both at the provincial and at the federal level.

An important point to make is that health expenditures over-all, despite the highlighting of this item, have been declining in terms of percentage of the gross national product in recent years. For example, in 1971 health care expenditures in Canada were 7.3 per cent of the gross national product. By 1973, two years later, they have moved down to 6.9 per cent. Certainly hospital costs are rising; they have gone up 25 per cent over the level of last year and there is a further 20 per cent predicted this year, with medicare expected to be up as much as 16 per cent. We must keep these programs within bounds that Canadians can afford so that they can get the most out of them.

Open-ended agreements between the federal and provincial governments, I suggest, are a thing of the past; I think that point has been clearly made. They may have had their place when they were initially instituted in the 1960's as a means of getting some of these programs off the ground and achieving some form of basic agreement between the provinces and the federal government. However, I suggest they are not appropriate in face of the present restraint program and some of the other programs before us. Neither are they appropriate for the reasons announced by the minister and those I referred to earlier, and they will not be appropriate in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the number of members who have spoken on this bill that it is of particular concern to members across the country. It is certainly of concern to me because I happen to represent one of the poorer provinces in this country, some parts of which have never seen medical care of any form whatsoever.

The minister defines the problem as the need to control increasing medical care costs, particularly in a period of staggering inflation. In a speech that he made in Calgary last September, in discussing the choices that governments must make in regard to spending priorities he had this to say:

> In making their decisions, governments must always consider whether for some activities there are lower cost means of achieving the same ends. If there are, cost control measures are clearly appropriate and realistic for these areas. In examining the total range of its programs, the federal government decided there were opportunities for significant savings in the health care field.

No one will argue with a minister who says that we must spend the taxpayers' money prudently. But we can and must take issue with the minister when he suggests that Bill C-68 is the solution to the problem of rising medical care costs. With Bill C-68 the minister is not facing the problem but running away from it.

What the bill does is to limit increases in federal contributions to medicare irrespective of what the actual increases in cost may be. The bill is not going to stop costs from escalating. With Bill C-68 the minister is not solving the problem; he is only putting it out of sight and washing his hands of the whole affair, passing it on to the provinces. However, the provinces cannot put the problem out of sight; they will have to bear the increase in costs.

It is sometimes embarrassing to talk about the province of Newfoundland and the difficulties it faces after 27 years of confederation. Some parts of my district have nothing resembling a hospital, have never seen a doctor or a public health nurse. In some cases the people there are suffering from disease because they cannot afford the transportation costs involved in their getting care.

Mr. Breau: Perhaps that is why they are so healthy.

Mr. Marshall: Perhaps it is the fish protein that keeps them healthy. In my district some children are going blind because they cannot afford to buy glasses. People on cancer treatments cannot afford to drive to the proper hospital two, three, four hundred miles away, to get that treatment, which means we are slowly torturing them to death by cutting costs. I do not think that medical care should ever be related to price. It should be the right of every Canadian, be he poor or rich, to get the best medical care, and if this parliament here in Ottawa is responsible for helping the nation, we should see each Canadian does.

The minister has said that this bill is an added inducement to the provinces to find less costly means of providing health services. This implies that the provinces do not have enough inducement already, and that suggestion is not appropriate. The provinces are very much aware of the need to save money wherever they can, more aware than the federal government, it would seem. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces had to beg the federal government to take action on inflation, but that action to date has not been very satisfactory.

To return to the question of medical care costs, the minister seems to be suggesting that the provinces will be more careful in spending one hundred cent dollars than fifty cent dollars under shared cost arrangements. This argument defies the very essence of shared cost programs, the purpose of which is to help induce or compel the provinces to make certain types of expenditures priority items in provincial budgets. Such expenditures cannot be equated with wasteful expenditures.

The minister talks of an inducement to the provinces to cut costs. What kind of an inducement can it be when the federal government antagonizes the provinces by taking unilateral action? The minister has thrown consultation to the winds, and that seems to be the way that he is trying to promote this bill.

In the same Calgary speech I referred to earlier the minister said that he was disappointed by the reaction of some provincial ministers of health to the recent budgetary announcements affecting the shared cost health insurance programs. One would have thought they would have welcomed federal leadership in the area of cost restraint.

● (1640)

I can only ask, where is the minister showing leadership? He is not saying how cost increases can be restrained, he is only saying that he will not assume the increased costs above the ceilings. He is giving up on finding ways to cut costs in a situation in which health costs are very difficult to control. The minister should be referring to federal abdication, not federal leadership.

The provinces have rightly protested this federal abdication, this unilateral action of the government, and the two former provincial premiers who sit in this House and well understand the situation from the perspective of the provinces have been very justified in criticizing this bill in the House.

Bill C-68 sets ceilings on increases in federal contributions regarding national per capita costs of services. Initially the bill had a ceiling of 13 per cent for the first year, 10.5 per cent for the second year, and 8.5 per cent for succeeding years. However, the minister has said that the 8.5 per cent ceilings for the third and subsequent years will be removed and substituted by a ceiling dictated by cabinet upon consultation with the provinces. We know that this really means in the end that the federal cabinet will make the decision, whatever the provinces think.

In addition to the fact that this amendment is another example of the cabinet's taking power unto itself, the proposed change is of further significance. By making the size of the limits non-statutory the minister is admitting it is unrealistic to try to predict the increases in medical care costs. If it is unrealistic to make such predictions there can be no justification for imposing statutory limits on federal contributions; that is, there is no justification for this bill at all.

The medicare program provides this country with much needed health care services, and it is because of federal cost sharing that the provinces, particularly the poorer ones, are able to finance the program. If the increase in federal contribution is limited, as this bill proposes, we run the risk that the provinces will have to cut back on services for lack of funds. The minister should make an examination of what will be the effect on the province of Newfoundland.

The president of the Canadian Medical Association brought to bear very forcefully the feelings of that association about this bill when he indicated:

> The introduction of Bill C-68 has the potential for major irreparable harm to the quality of medical care and Canada's medical care insurance program.

He went on to say:

> Must we now view the program as one in which the primary concern is financial, and that in the future the program will be tailored to the financial exigencies of the moment, not medical care requirements? Such a policy poses a major threat to Canadians.

I do not want to belabour the point, but only try to point out again that the richer provinces can cope with increased medical costs or with restraints, but in provinces in the Atlantic region and in the northern areas of the country it is obvious we are not fulfilling our duty to many millions of people in Canada. This is no way to help Canadians keep healthy. Indeed the children of our country are going to school with a lack of nutrition. We should be introducing nutritional programs in schools and considering assisting our senior citizens by providing drug care programs so they can get the drugs they cannot now afford. I suggest to the minister that he would do well if he went along with the pressure brought to bear by my colleagues, and hoisted the bill or abandoned it altogether.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate in this debate this afternoon. First of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for the very fine speech he has just made on behalf of those who are disadvantaged, not only in his province of Newfoundland but right across this country. That hon. gentleman has become very well known in this House for that kind of speech and that kind of concern.

My personal intervention today in respect of this bill is somewhat based on the same premise, that while we may talk about the fact that hospitalization at this moment is not really a major issue, as the next two or three years go by I predict that hospitalization will also start going the same way medicare is going at the present time as far as the federal government is concerned. All the indicators are there to warn us of this.

The thrusts of the amendments introduced in the June budget reflect this bill. At that time the former minister of finance aimed to renegotiate the costs and percentages of the act. He had laid down ceilings of 13 per cent for 1976-77, 10 per cent for 1977-78, and 8.5 per cent for years subsequent to that.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) opened his remarks on January 28 by stating that Canadians enjoy one of the best health systems in the world. While that is true one must keep in mind that our national coverage, that is, all programs funded on a 50-50 basis, are not as comprehensive as the health insurance programs offered by such nations as West Germany, Holland, and the Scandinavian countries. In essence, then, our national coverage is limited.

Certain provinces have on their own opted to enter into such services as home nursing, denticare, and pharmacare. The costs of these extra programs will run at about $1.9 billion this coming fiscal year. It is for that reason only the wealthier provinces can participate in these extra schemes. Therefore when the minister speaks of "one of the best health systems in the world" he should make sure he qualifies that statement. I would ask him about the provinces that cannot enter into these costlier schemes because of the lack of funds.

What this bill will do is limit the financial contributions in respect of the limited program. In other words, instead of taking a progressive step and having Ottawa expand the medicare program beyond the services provided for in 1968, we will witness a possible reduction in financial contributions. As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) stated on February 2, the government has been seeking to reduce its responsibility with regard to medicare. We in this party have always believed that added health services should be provided through the 1960 medicare act.

We are talking about one of the most serious social problems in our country today. We are not simply talking about building highways, bridges or airports. We are talking about the health care of our citizens, and we are not necessarily speaking from the point of view of our own constituents whom we represent, but from the point of view of all Canadians, whether they live in the wealthy provinces, the poorer provinces, or in northern or southern Ontario.

In fact there is a provision in the act for the government, by order in council, to include additional services and enter into agreements with provinces for that purpose. Obviously the government has no intention of doing this. That is regrettable as far as we are concerned. To cut back on its present responsibility, on the other hand, is not only regrettable but clearly unacceptable to me as a member of this House, and to my party.

The actions of the minister by way of Bill C-68 will clearly jeopardize our existing national medicare program, as well as the new programs initiated by some of the provinces. I suggest that the government, instead of trying to control costs, has instituted spending limits just for the sake of cutting government expenditures. As one columnist has said, "It is no longer fashionable to advocate government spending on anything". The government, and indeed the minister, have fallen prey to the myth that all government spending is considered evil. This is something we have to be very concerned about at this time.

I agree with other hon. members that we must cut government spending. The important thing is to pinpoint those areas in which we can most afford cuts, areas that are not really that important to the lifestyle of every Canadian citizen. I have no quarrel with the idea that wasteful government expenditures should be curtailed. However, I find it difficult to believe that the great increase in health costs, especially at the provincial level, has been as a result of waste and inefficiency.

What an insult it must have been to the provinces to be told that the ceilings will provide "an incentive to exercise appropriate cost control over medical costs." That is a quotation from the minister's speech. Again, as other speakers have pointed out, this justification seems absurd when one considers that provincial governments, out of necessity, have been anxious to keep down costs. The reason is that the cost of health services for the most part represents a larger percentage of the provincial budget than of the federal budget. The inevitable results of this type of across-the-board cuts are already being felt across the country.

Just recently one of the headlines in the Globe and Mail read: "Toronto Hospitals Face 700 Bed Cut; 1200 Jobs May Go". I shall refer to that a little later. The article went on to say that about 700 hospital beds in Toronto may be eliminated and 1,200 hospital workers in that city may be fired in the Ontario government's cost-cutting campaign. In time 3,000 beds would be eliminated throughout the province. I do not mean to suggest that this is a direct result of the federal government action. What it does signify is that this whole country seems to be on a rampage of financial cuts regardless of the merit of the programs being cut. I suggest that the same holds true in respect of this particular bill.

The minister is simply limiting expenditures for the sake of saving federal funds, without paying enough regard to the actual programs that will be cut. I just referred to the massive cuts in the number of hospital beds that will take place in Ontario. I do not deny that there are a large number of people who need not be in active treatment hospitals. The chronically ill should be in extended care units. Others could be taken care of via home nursing programs. However, no action has been taken in these areas.

People are being put out of hospital beds when they have nowhere to go. In my area of Brant we face an acute shortage of nursing homes as well as of rehabilitation centres which could provide physiotherapy and psychotherapy for many people on an out-patient basis. Most of the short-term programs mentioned above, and indeed many of those referred to by others speakers, would cost a fair amount of money in the short run, but the savings in the long run would be incalculable. The provinces, however, cannot do this alone.

The provinces by themselves would be hard pressed financially, as some already are, in instituting programs such as denticare and pharmacare. I see no reason why children in Newfoundland, New Brunswick, or in the northern parts of Canada should not be entitled to as much denticare or pharmacare as the people in Vancouver, Toronto or Montreal. This bill will only add to the burden faced by the provinces.

The whole idea of providing lower cost services, in effect preventive medicine, certainly is not a novel one as the minister well knows. The minister's department produced a document entitled "A new perspective on the health of Canadians" in 1974 which emphasized the long-run benefits of preventive medicine. In fact the minister even referred to that document in his remarks on second reading of the bill.

I agree that individuals could and indeed should assume more responsibility for maintaining and improving their own health. But this is only part of the solution. Home nursing programs, denticare programs, pharmacare and the like all cost money. Little mention of these was made by the minister. The government should embark immediately on some sort of federal-provincial cost sharing agreement in respect of all programs which provincial governments have financed entirely on their own in many cases. Surely the provision of fully adequate medical and hospital services for Canadians wherever they may live is not asking too much.

References have been made in this House in the past few days during this debate to the cut-back in hospital beds in the province of Ontario. I do not suggest for a moment that this has a direct relationship to Bill C-68, but it has an indirect relationship because the federal government has put the squeeze on the provinces to cut back on medical services. I am not speaking specifically of medical care but medical services in general.

An interesting thing happened in my constituency. There is a hospital in my constituency called the Willett Hospital which has been in operation for 15 years. It is to be closed down. It has over 60 active beds. The cost of each bed is $70. These people will be forced to go to the Brantford Hospital which is overcrowded, and where the cost of a bed is approximately $105 or $110. That is not really much of a saving. In fact it is waste. Indeed the Brantford General Hospital cannot even handle the extra load coming from the hospital in Paris.

When the formula of four active beds per 1,000 was worked out, the 7,000 inhabitants of the Six Nations Indian Reserve were left out; they were treated as if they did not belong to or live in Brant county. During the last election campaign in Ontario—and I expect I will hear some comment from my friends to the right—the Ontario government gave away $450 million, an amount which would have kept 40 Willett hospitals in operation. A similar hospital would cost about $1.2 million. So there are ways in which to cut costs other than by cutting back on medical care itself. There are many ways in which to do this.

As a matter of fact some doctors in Paris, admittedly a small town, have said they probably would have to move to Brantford. There is another aspect of the cut-back so far as medical care is concerned. In this one instance the equivalent of 90 people will be laid off in a town with a population of 6,500. I have indicated that in a community like Brant county, where there are 5,000 persons chasing 160 jobs, these people will be unemployed and their total UIC benefits will represent $8,000 a week. While the government is desperately trying to cut costs I ask whether it is better to have people working in hospitals such as this, which has a good reputation and where the cost of a bed is $70 compared to $110, and to keep the doctors in the community, or to close down the whole thing at a greater cost to the province or the federal government.

That is really all I have to say at this point. I certainly hope changes will be made to this legislation. I sincerely hope hospitalization will not go the same way medicare is going. In closing, again in all honesty to my political philosophy and political background, I wish to reiterate that I am very proud to belong to a party which pioneered medicare and hospitalization on this continent, and I will be dammed if I will see this thing go down the drain.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address myself to the amendment of my friend, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). I am very sorry that most compelling public duties and responsibilities made it impossible for me to be in the Chamber when he made his speech. I was very happy to note that he referred to me every so often. Although I am one of the most modest persons in this Chamber I must confess that like most of our breed, I like a little attention. I thank him for that. He has made the suggestion that I should send my speech to the minister of health in the province of Ontario. I believe the minister of health in the province of Ontario subscribes to Hansard. He is a fairly wise man, and I am sure he always looks up my speeches and reads them carefully. But I might drop him a note and tell him also to have a look this time at the address of the hon. member for Broadview.

I am sure that all the provincial ministers are very much aware of what is happening. They may not have been advised beforehand, but they are very concerned now, as well they might be, because even though taken by surprise by the unilateral move, they know full well what this measure will mean to the discharge of their role in providing proper health services to the people of their own provinces, and they know what an effect it will have on their responsibilities, how it will enlarge their problems, and increase their anxieties. However, I will not join in any provincial election campaigning and I am sure that my good friend, the hon. member for Broadview, for whom I have the highest regard, would not have anything like that in mind either, because party politics is very minuscule in reference to a problem so grave and so hurtful to so many Canadians, a matter affecting their health and possibly their lives.

I have been following this important debate very carefully for the short time during which it has been conducted, and there are some observations I hear from the few hon. members who have chosen to debate the bill by which, I must say, I find myself totally unconvinced. One is the suggestion that what is being done by the provinces bears no relationship to what the dominion government is undertaking in this measure and in other withdrawals from shared cost programs. I would just as soon believe that suggestion as I would the emanations of the Flat Earth Society. We all know that the provincial governments are finding it tough because of the withdrawal of the federal government from its promises and commitments in the financial sector, in the whole area surrounding the matter which we are discussing.

Another assertion that I find unacceptable is that which we have heard this afternoon that this really has nothing whatever to do with hospitalization. If you can conceive a society in which medicare and hospital care are separate and distinct entities in no way related one to the other, then one could accept almost any assertion from anybody on any matter. Of course we know that one affects the other, and both profoundly affect and injure the health of the Canadian people.

I also note an assertion that comes up from time to time. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), who spoke this afternoon, made reference to the termination of open-ended shared programs as being a good thing. He was obviously not listening to my learned and articulate colleagues who had been saying on more than one occasion that there is nothing open-ended about a program which requires one partner to put up 50 per cent, and naturally any provincial government is going to take a close look and give careful attention to the administration of this portion. So to cast about the suggestion that this is an open-ended program or that the provinces have been profligate and careless is, I think, something less than a serious examination of a very grave problem.

I was much impressed, as I always am, by the utterances of my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). His speech was very valuable, showing the usual compassion and sensitivity which always mark his utterances in this Chamber. He expressed great concern over what happens in the poorer provinces as we see a breakdown of established shared costs programs.

I agree with what the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) was just saying, that it is not only in the poorer provinces that there will be danger, suffering, and inequity visited upon the people, but I think the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe is right in pointing out that one of the most serious dangers of this legislation is that it is going to be a very backward step in a program on which many devoted Canadians before us embarked this country, namely, a move toward a Canada in which there was an equality of services for all Canadians. No Canadian because he lives in a have-not province should be denied those vital social services which could be extended under a program based and funded in a rich province.

We know that one of the vital underpinnings of Confederation was the sharing of advantages and disadvantages as we built up a new community. Some of us in eastern Canada thought we got a bigger share of disadvantages than of advantages, but we are not big enough to be separatist or rich enough to be alienist, so we just have to make a reference to it from time to time to indicate that we know what really took place and has not stopped taking place since.

Dicey, the great English constitutionalist, looks upon the 1870's as the beginning of the modern welfare state. One of the unfortunate situations was that this was about the time we were building a country under our Confederation, and our forefathers put far too many of the social services and requirements and legislative responsibilities into the provincial area where the tax base was limited. So in the last century we have had a constant and urgent necessity to equalize and to have the larger entity, the larger governmental body, pick up more and more of the responsibilities which were assigned to the provinces at a time when a broad program of social services was just beginning.

It is said that while the 1870's may be the first phase of concern of governments for the welfare of their people, we really got into a program of concern for people on the part of the government in the post-war period, and it is not surprising that many of our very important measures in reference to pensions, family allowances and the like stem from that period.

Perhaps the report of the Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations, referred to usually as the Rowell-Sirois report, is the finest that this country has ever seen. After studying the matter for many years all across the country this commission came out with the truism, I would call it, certainly its final recommendation and observation, which in 1940 was fundamentally sound and which I think should be looked at again with increasing respect in 1976 when we find that some of the advances which came as a result of their wisdom and their foresight are now in danger because the central government is backing down on its word and forgetting its essential role in providing services for all the people in all the provinces.

● (1710)

This, of course, is what the problem is today: the executive about which this House is most concerned, and indeed, the executive, strictly speaking, rests upon the consent of this House. We find that our executive is reneging on its commitments and forgetting its historical responsibilities.

I should like to quote the final paragraph of the Sirois report as follows:

> It has been the aim of the Commission to frame proposals which will, if implemented, place jurisdiction over the social services in the hands of the governments most likely to design and administer them, not merely with the greatest economy and the greatest technical efficiency, but with the regard for the social, cultural and religious outlook of the various regions of Canada, which is essential to genuine human welfare. The financial proposals have been designed to enable every province of Canada to rely on having sufficient revenue at its command . . . in years of adversity as in years of prosperity, to carry out the important functions entrusted to it.

We know that we are in a time of adversity. Many of us saw it coming from far off and said so, but it ill becomes any government which cares for its people to make its first move under austerity against the sick of the land.

One more aspect to which I should like to make reference was stimulated by the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), yesterday. He pointed out, as have other hon. colleagues, that apart from the mathematical provisions of this bill and the diminution of the federal government's contribution we are, in many and closely related areas, shrinking the medical services made available to the people of Canada. He referred to what was happening with reference to research in the field of medicine, and it is a shocking thing that here is another area which has fallen the first victim—or perhaps the second—in this particularly unpleasant effort to bring about austerity on the backs of the poor and the weak.

I noted with great interest a very prestigious publication which came my way just the other day, the Chemical and Engineering News, a United States publication, and its points out that in the United States—not immune to financial problems—they are doing exactly the opposite to cutting back on funds for medical research and for scientific research generally. I shall quote from the issue of January 26 as follows:

> President Ford has proposed a $23.5 billion budget for federally funded R & D in fiscal year 1977—about 10% or $2.2 billion more than in fiscal 1976.

It points out that health research and development makes a gain. There has been an increase in the United States, and we are cutting back—freezing—this absolutely essential field, the field of medical research. We will never, never bring about a healthy society if we consider nothing but the curative aspect, diminish that and cut back funds for research.

Another most encouraging thing about the United States is that they have given special grants and special emphasis to pure research. This is a sensitive awareness of the needs of their people, which is lacking in those who do the planning in our present government for or with the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The national institutes of health will receive under the Ford budget a $185 million increase, bringing the total up to $2.165 million. This is what we should use as an example.

We should never allow such a measure as this to be passed through this parliament. I find myself 100 per cent behind the amendment of the hon. member for Broadview. This bill is wrong morally and wrong in terms of Confederation. We should consult our hearts and our consciences and vote for the amendment.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is indicative of the lack of economic foresight which is prevalent with the government of the day. It virtually forced from the top down a program upon all the provinces of Canada whether they felt they could afford it or not. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) pointed out the problems which some provinces have experienced in maintaining their percentage of the cost of this program.

This is not a program on which the government did not receive a great amount of advice. The government of New Brunswick which at that time was favourable to the Government of Canada, namely the Pierre Trudeau administration, hesitated and hesitated for years before it entered the program. The legislation was passed but it was not proclaimed. Why? Because even then the Robichaud administration in the province of New Brunswick recognized the possibility of the withdrawal of the vital financial participation of the Government of Canada. That program was not instituted in New Brunswick until Premier Hatfield became the premier of the province.

I should like to go back to the point in time when hospitalization was forced upon the provinces of Canada by a federal government, and I think of some of the conversations which took place in the little province of New Brunswick as it was being introduced. I remember the remark made by the then minister of finance, the Hon. D. D. Patterson, since unfortunately deceased, as he addressed the members of the government. He said the budget would be about $9 million for the balance of that year. It would be about $12 million required from the people of New Brunswick in the full fiscal year to follow, "but the thing I fear, and the thing about which I warn this House, is that in ten and not more than fifteen years the cost of hospitalization in the province of New Brunswick will exceed the entire budget which we will present to the House in this session." Let us bear that figure in mind.

The then minister of finance of New Brunswick predicted that hospitalization would cost more than the total budget for the fiscal year in which he was talking, and this would take only ten or maybe fifteen years. That astute minister of finance was in error because eight years from the date of the introduction of hospitalization the cost exceeded the budget for the year of which the minister was speaking. In other words, the Government of Canada was told what its bill would be for the program of hospitalization that it was introducing.

● (1720)

The government was told by a Liberal premier and his staff that the province of New Brunswick could not enter the program without the positive assurance of the federal government that help would be continuing for at least and not less than the formula presented. The provincial minister resisted until 1970, when it was too late, and the program was introduced by Premier Hatfield.

Are we to believe that the Government of Canada was so shortsighted that it did not undertake a study to predict the cost burden? It seems incredible that this should be so, but its members were either shortsighted or irresponsible. It is incumbent upon the Government of Canada to review the forceful position it took with respect to hospitalization and medicare.

Any provincial government which was at all hesitant about embarking upon these programs was mocked by those who represented the Government of Canada, or was threatened by it. The provincial governments were virtually forced by political pressures within their own provinces to accede to this great universal program. That being the case it is not proper for the Government of Canada to withdraw from the situation. Not only was this program to be universal but it was to be carried out under the regulations of the Government of Canada which did not trust the local administrations at the provincial level to formulate regulations and conditions under which they would operate and which would meet federal standards.

I grant that hypothetically this program should create equal medical treatment for everyone across Canada. It is a fact of politics, however, that you cannot legislate equality in little rural communities such as Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe or little rural communities in any other province, but hypothetically when the Liberal government brought in the legislation it was to be equal for everybody.

That government could not have been more wrong or more deceitful than when it led the urban and rural people of New Brunswick to believe they would be treated equally under the legislation. The program obviously had to escalate in cost because of the additional people brought under it. Everybody was obviously in a position to ask for a consulting physician, and every consulting physician could call in another. I do not blame the doctors for this, but the cost of the increased number of doctors and office calls precipitated by the program should have been perceived.

The Government of Canada should cut its suit to fit the cloth. It should have cut down on other expenditures, not health care. It might have considered having fewer office towers in Ottawa and Hull, fewer monuments such as that at Matane. It should have considered decentralizing and not doubling the number of employees used to achieve the same purpose. This is where cuts should have been made, not in the field of medical health. Why does the government not use the provinces as they deserve to be used in regard to health care?

I wonder how many members on your right, Mr. Speaker, have looked at the estimates to see how the money is being spent? The minister says in effect, "I am sorry, we cannot follow our own guidelines. We have to increase our expenditures by 18 per cent, but the provinces can cut back on hospitals and medicare. We do not care if they close hospitals, but we will not close them." The government has been irresponsible and has transferred political responsibility, which it will not accept, to the provinces. But they must accept responsibility, Mr. Speaker.

I feel extremely sorry for two premiers in this country, and I sympathize with the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) who spoke about the closure of a hospital in his area. Something had to go when the Government of Canada failed to predict what it was doing to provincial pocketbooks by initiating this program,— and even worse what it was doing when it withdrew support for the program.

As a result of federal regulations in the field of health we have seen a massive transfer of federal responsibility from government to government. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) it has become very clear that for welfare requirements the Government of Canada must provide some money, but it has become equally clear that it cannot forecast its requirements. This means the provinces cannot therefore forecast their needs. The federal government will just not supply those requirements if it finds itself pinched.

Let us examine what was going on prior to these programs being forced on the government. Provincial hospitals were operated in small communities at tremendous expense. They were staffed by very good doctors, but the cost of bringing them up to the standard demanded by the federal government put municipalities out of business. Responsibility moved them from the municipal to the provincial structure in New Brunswick but the cost of this move was immense. It was predictable. I submit that if a hospital is built in a community at one end of Prince Edward Island, the other end of the island is going to want a comparable hospital. This is what has happened to the spending program on health in Canada. There has been an escalation of costs because one community wants to be as well supplied as the other. This should have been planned and budgeted; there should be no shocking cutback.

The great problem with the federal program in the field of welfare is that it has acted as a leveller, a land roller. I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) is familiar with what is done with a field of grain. You run the land roller over it to level the field; you simply push the top down, you do not bring the bottom up.

Through the lack of encouragement, and indeed the cutback in research programs by the government at the private level, it is as if the land roller has taken its toll in the fields of medicine and hospital care. It has knocked the top down and not brought the bottom up.

I have not heard all the speeches, Mr. Speaker, but have read most of them. The government has been remiss in the field of research, as has been pointed out many times, particularly in geriatrics, cancer, and the diseases of children. This is something on which the government should be spending money. If there is a hope of saving money without a detriment to health, it is in the field of research. The research should precede the cutback in expenditure. We should not have a cutback in expenditure for medical care and research.

● (1730)

We should have research in preventive medicine, but we do not have it to the same degree as other countries. This same problem has been experienced in the United Kingdom. The standard of care has definitely deteriorated as we have gone into this kind of program. We should be learning from the example of others. When we went into this program we should have seen that it was properly financed, projected, and carried out, so that there would not be a degeneration in the level of care as is promised by this kind of act.

It is time that the government looked at the future. It is time for it to begin to make recommendations, adopt policies, make proposals, and not just to draw the puckering string on the purse, but go into an in-depth study on how this can be done. What are the ways and means by which it can be done?

The hon. member for Hillsborough mentioned the Rowell-Sirois report. That report had a great many recommendations, some of which were ridiculous and others of which had an element of practicality. One thing the government ignored was that statement referred to by the hon. member for Hillsborough. It stated that the cost sharing should be done by the Government of Canada for those who needed help on the basis of the greatest possible economy. I submit that the governments on the site can make their own regulations, administer their own affairs, and accomplish the greatest economy. That is precisely what the Government of Canada should take a long hard look at now.

When one gets on a plane today to go home for a week end or to take a trip, he rarely gets on at any provincial capital without there being a rush of provincial civil servants going to Ottawa to negotiate for heaven knows what, but among them would be medicare, health care payments, DREE, ARDA and on and on.

I submit that all parties should look at the Rowell-Sirois report. We must begin to find ways and means to take people out of the air and put them at their desks. We must put the money were it is needed. The regulations must be made by the people who are going to spend it. Municipalities and provinces should be independent of the crushing responsibility of confirming legislation passed by the Government of Canada. A member of a provincial legislature today is little more than a rubber stamp, whether it be in the field of labour, transportation, health, education or insurance. He sits in a legislature and is told by a minister that they have to pass this bill or that bill to agree with the regulations of legislation of the Government of Canada.

If there is one reason more than any other why I wanted to be in this House it was in the hope that I might influence the House to restore the responsibility of administration to the field where it belongs, namely, the local level, to the greatest degree possible. The local government of a town, municipality or city is responsible immediately to the electors who are knowledgeable about how money is spent. In fact they have to raise a little of it themselves. At that point attention is paid to the spending of the dollar.

However, as long as the Government of Canada lays down the rules and regulations, and ties strings to its grants, whether it be for health or any other field, there will be a squandering of money which we cannot afford. That is now taking place in all these fields. I say we should follow the Rowell-Sirois report. Distribute the money to the provincial governments and let them administer themselves.

If the provinces did not have to buy civil servants plane tickets to come to Ottawa for negotiations, tens of millions of dollars would be left in the treasuries across this country. That would eliminate the necessity of the Government of Canada reducing the amount of money to be spent on medicare.

No government has introduced a more inexcusable or cruel bill than this. Very few could have been more predictable. One of the things the Government of Canada was told about when it was going into hospitalization and medicare was a report prepared by a group of people in the United States. They made a very careful study of the capability of that economy to sustain a program comparable to ours. The report stated there was a need for catastrophic assistance in the field of health, and a need for total payment for those below a certain level of income.

If the government of the United States adopts a total program such as the one presently operated in Canada, I doubt very much that the economy of that country could carry it. The department was made familiar with that report. It was passed on by provincial representatives. The Government of Canada mocked it. However, it is coming home to roost today that we are draining our resources by poor administration, poor regulation, and federal interference. It costs so much that the Government of Canada is now in a dither.

It is irresponsible to pass this responsibility back to the provinces after virtual compulsion to enter under federal terms. It is a retreat from a principle which they guaranteed everybody could sustain. We now find that the federal treasury, let alone the provincial treasuries, cannot sustain payments in the field of health across the board, to the degree that it will now cut back hospital, medical and research payments in the field of health. This is an irresponsible and inexcusable act by a party which sold the program to every province in Canada by compulsion and threat.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, yesterday my colleague, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), said that the federal government had taken another step backward in producing this bill. The member also said that he was saddened to see a once vigorous and creative government coasting to a conclusion in this way. I say to this House that the government has been coasting to a conclusion since that dark day in June, 1968, when it first set itself up in business.

I must agree that this has been a creative government. It has created a level of waste and inefficiency never before accomplished by a government of Canada. It has created the largest deficits ever known in our history and it has created an atmosphere of fear, suspicion, and despair all across our great nation. In my concern over what is happening to our country I am compelled to plead with the government to stop creating and start managing.

I am sure that my colleagues in the official opposition are just as confused about the government's motives in tabling this bill as I am. When the government hit us over the heads the other day with the estimates for the coming year, I was dumbfounded. Considering the fact that we are in an economic straitjacket imposed by a government which only a year ago launched a scurrilous attack on our own modest prices and incomes proposal, I fully expected to see the government table estimates roughly equal to those for the past year. What we have instead is an increase of 16 per cent over last year's estimates, with a further increase to come when the supplementary estimates are tabled later this year.

It is incomprehensible to me that the government could take for itself a slice of the public treasury equal to twice the limit it has allowed for the private sector, while at the same time introducing legislation which would reduce the level of hospital and medical care that we in the provinces have built up over the years, partly on the basis of a pledge of co-operation from the federal government.

The present medicare program was not a unilateral effort initiatied by the provinces in isolation. The provinces were sucked into the present arrangement by a federal government not known for honouring its pledges. However, in our concern for the welfare of our citizens we were compelled to enter into a cost-sharing arrangement with the federal government on pure faith. Now that we are deeply committed, with little or no turning room, the government tables this monstrous instrument of deceit.

The only party in this House which appears to like this bill is the NDP, those self-styled champions of the little people. If we are to believe all the propaganda they spread about themselves, they are the party that invented human kindness, brotherly love, and motherhood. They are having a field day with this bill because they think they will be able to use it against the governments of provinces they have not been able to get their hands on so far.

Mr. Nystrom: What about the red Tories?

Mr. Darling: Don't worry about red Tories, centre Tories and all the rest. We shall stick together, don't worry about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: I am well aware how disenchanted hon. members to my left are with our choice of a new leader. They were praying it would be somebody else. Let them deny it if they wish.

Mr. Paproski: Right on!

Mr. Darling: We have heard a succession of those socialists make speeches on this question that lead one to believe that they have not even read the bill. I have heard member after member try to shift the blame for this proposed legislation from the federal government to the government of Ontario. I believe the New Democrats have the mistaken idea they can "con" the voters of Ontario into believing that the provincial government of Premier Davis drew up this legislation and somehow managed to table it in this House.

The NDP underestimate the intelligence of the people they are so anxious to govern. In taking part in the debate on this measure they are interested less in placing the blame for this cop-out at the door of the federal government than they are in trying to piece together a political platform for the next Ontario provincial election campaign. I can picture the NDP running about the province telling people that on their way to the polling booths they will have to walk over the bodies of those who could not obtain hospital beds. The fact is that Ontario has a medical care and hospital care record second to none, and the people know that. We in this province will continue to provide that high level of health care despite the efforts of the federal government to back out of a firm commitment.

If there is no room for present levels of provincial health care schemes on an equitable cost-sharing basis in the inflated estimates tabled a few days ago, I have to ask what, in the name of all that is holy, is going on in our country? No thinking man or woman would deny that the cost of health care has been rising over the years; but so has the cost of everything else since the federal government came to power.

It has been pointed out a number of times in this debate that the cost of medicare has not increased as much, on a percentage basis, as the cost of most other services. In fact the cost of medical and hospital services has increased less than was expected, something which cannot be said of any other sector of the economy.

It has also been pointed out that the greatest rate of increased cost is connected with hospital services and, as everyone is aware, Ontario has set out to try to correct the situation without, however, permitting any decrease in the level of service. In its determination to maintain its record for consistent contradiction, the NDP acknowledges, on one hand, that hospital costs represent the largest element of increase in medicare. On the other hand it has in the past few weeks been engaging in a scurrilous, partisan attack against the government of Ontario for attempting to do something about this problem. That government is presently attempting to eliminate surplus hospital services while maintaining an adequate service. Like many of my hon. friends, I am sickened by this attempt on the part of a political party to create an election atmosphere by dangling non-existent corpses in front of the voters.

The federal government reneged on another pledge when this bill was tabled without warning.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Darling: Shall I carry on, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that we have a visitor at the door. I suppose we should determine for what reason.

Royal Assent

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (1750)

[Translation]

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Honourable Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-41, An Act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof.—Chapter No. 87.

Bill C-78, An Act to repeal An Act respecting the Halifax Relief Commission and to authorize the continuation of pensions, grants or allowances paid by the Halifax Relief Commission.—Chapter No. 88.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.04 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CANADIAN COASTGUARD

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO RESPONSE OF THE "BARTLETT" TO THE CALL FOR ASSISTANCE OF THE FISHING BOAT "SAN JUAN"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the most recent tragedy off the coast of Newfoundland in which two Canadian fishermen were lost, which once again highlights the inadequacies of present search and rescue procedures. My motion, for which I ask the unanimous consent of the House, is as follows: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) immediately order a special judicial inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the foundering of the fishing boat San Juan on February 23, 1976, with the loss of two lives, and the response of the Canadian Coastguard Ship Bartlett in relation thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AFFIRMATION OF NON-RECOGNITION OF TERRITORIAL STATUS QUO IN EUROPE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion concerning an urgent and important matter. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni):

That in view of concerns expressed in Canada that the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe signed at Helsinki may be regarded as having given legal status to the incorporation of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania into the Soviet Union, and in view of statements by the leaders of the Soviet Union that suggest that they so interpret the Final Act, it is moved that this House supports the Canadian government's position, as expressed in the House on December 2, 1975 by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), that the Final Act in no way confirms the territorial status quo in Europe, and that in particular the status of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania as it is at present recognized by Canada has in no way been altered thereby.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSAL TO STOP JOB TRANSFERS FROM CAPREOL, ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the CNR has announced the transfer of 11 jobs in their accounting department in Capreol, Ontario, to Toronto in the next couple of months as part of a centralization program, and in view of the fact that this represents a serious blow to the town's economic health, and in view of the fact that, contrary to centralizing its various services, the corporation should be decentralizing into areas like Capreol, and in view of the fact that the CNR is supposedly the people's railway, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to approach the CNR with a view to having these job transfers halted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be debated with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OLYMPIC GAMES

PROPOSED LOAN FROM BANK OF CANADA AT COST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the Olympic Games which will be held in Montreal in 1976 concern all Canadians, since Canada as a whole will profit by the publicity and the international prestige of these games, since the cost of the games will reach about $1.2 billion while until now the participation of the federal government totals only $200 million, leaving a balance of $1 billion which Quebecers will have to pay because of these games, and since the federal government grants interest-free loans to foreign countries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That, through the Bank of Canada, the federal government grant to the City of Montreal a loan covering the deficit incurred because of the games, at a rate of interest not superior to the administration cost and repayable in 50 years.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

NATIONAL PARKS

SUGGESTED RESCINDING OF FEES FOR HISTORIC PARKS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to propose under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the dramatic decline in the number of visitors to Lower Ft. Garry and other national historic parks in 1975 compared with previous years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development act immediately to rescind all regulations regarding the admittance fee structures to Ft. George, Ft. Langley, Fortress of Louisbourg and Lower Ft. Garry.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF CABINET COMMITTEE TO REVIEW PLAN TO CLOSE BASES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I should like to propose a motion on a matter of some urgency to a large body of Canadians. In view of the fact that base closure or base consolidation programs being planned at the present time by the Department of National Defence could affect upwards of 7,000 civilian employees, and because approximately 42 per cent to 44 per cent of these people have grade ten education or less and have more than ten years service, in large part are veterans and are over 50 years of age, and because these people by government definition are technologically redundant, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That the House direct this government to establish a special committee of Cabinet and direct that committee to review any such plans prior to their submission to Cabinet, and where such a special committee finds that undue hardship will result from such plans, that they be empowered to refer such plans back to DND with instructions to find other solutions to the problems brought about by this government's failure to adequately fund the Canadian armed forces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The said motion can only be debated with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR MEASURE TO ENSURE EMPLOYMENT FOR YOUNG PEOPLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

There is no member in this House who knows the government's intentions regarding the increasing rate of unemployment, particularly among people within the 18-30 age range, which is very high in Canada. So I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the government inform this House as soon as possible of their legislative intentions to check unemployment in order to give real hope and opportunity for work to all our young workers across Canada, so that we set ourselves to build this country rather than merely fight against inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF GENERAL DR. KARL SCHNELL

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure hon. members would want to join with me in calling attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor. I refer to a very distinguished German general, who is at the present time commander in chief of our allied forces in Central Europe, General Dr. Karl Schnell.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—ALLEGED OVER-PRICING OF EGGS BY MARKETING AGENCY—JUSTIFICATION FOR HIGH ADMINISTRATIVE AND ADVERTISING BUDGET OF AGENCY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture based on allegations contained in a brief by the Consumer Association of Canada to the Farm Products Marketing Council that Canadian consumers are paying anywhere from 15 cents to 19 cents more for a dozen eggs than can be justified. Does the minister intend to review the so-called P. S. Ross formula now in operation within CEMA so that both the consumers and farmers in Canada may receive optimum benefits of supply-management?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the reason the hearings are being held is that we asked for hearings and representations to be made about the price of eggs to find out the facts. I hope the hearings will bring out the facts. The National Farm Products Marketing Council is holding those hearings and will be holding them in several places in Canada. I think at this time it would not be proper for me to make a comment until those hearings are completed.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he has satisfied himself in respect of the $11 million administrative and promotional budget for CEMA, which is pushing the cost of eggs in Canada to the point where they are approximately 30 cents more per dozen in this country than in the United States, that what would appear to be a disproportionately high administrative cost factor is in fact justified.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, as I said, if facts are brought out at the hearings which indicate this is not a proper formula to follow, it certainly will be changed because the National Farm Products Marketing Council, which is made up of producers, non-producers, consumers and labour, I am sure will do its job in a diligent manner.

REASON FOR IMPORTATION OF EGGS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he can explain to the House why it has been necessary for CEMA to import 7 million dozen United States eggs for the breaker trade in this country when the cost to the breaker trade has to be subsidized through CEMA and that additional cost is being passed on to the Canadian consumer?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is trying to import the suggestion that eggs were never imported before; that is not true. The main reason eggs are being imported is that we have an agreement with the United States as to how many thousands of cases they can export into Canada. The program is there, and the main reason they had to do that is that the consumption of eggs went up 9 per cent in the month of January in Canada over and above any other January for which we have kept records. The final thing is that the eggs were such a good buy.

TRADE

FOOTWEAR—REQUEST MINISTER DISCUSS IMPORTS WITH ASIAN COUNTRIES AND POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING QUOTAS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister discuss with trade officials of the Asian countries he will visit next month our deep concern over the high level of imports into Canada of footwear from their countries where applicable.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the question of the so-called preferred tariff structure and so on is on the agenda for discussion with the countries concerned.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, will the minister discuss either voluntary or mandatory quotas of footwear with the various countries he will visit before our domestic industry is completely on its uppers.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure just what form the discussions will take. Obviously I will convey our concern about the impact of the so-called cheap imports on the footwear industry in Canada. But of course, as I said in answer to a question a few days ago in the House, this is only one portion of the problem. I also have a meeting scheduled immediately upon my return with the footwear industry—I believe it is the Footwear Industry Council—in order to discuss other aspects of the problem as well.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF SAFEGUARD AGREEMENT WITH COUNTRIES SUPPLYING NUCLEAR MATERIAL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, yesterday it was, "Here we go" and I am tempted to say the question today is: "Where has he gone?" My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform the House whether or not a safeguard agreement has yet been reached with other nuclear supplier countries and, if it has not been reached, could he tell us when the government of Canada expects this to take place? Will he reconsider his position and arrange for a debate to take place in the House outlining Canada's position before the signing of such an agreement?

● (1420)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is true that there have been a number of meetings among the concerned countries, namely nuclear suppliers, in which the question of international standards has been discussed. What has emerged from this meeting has been that Canada, along with certain other countries, has made a unilateral declaration of the safeguard standards which it proposes to follow. These standards have been substantially outlined in the background paper which I tabled earlier. No international treaty was signed nor was any secret agreement of any kind reached. What has happened has been that a number of countries, including Canada, have made a unilateral declaration of the standards which they propose to apply. We hope that on review further countries will subscribe to these standards which we have been advocating in the world community.

PAKISTAN—APPLICATION OF CANADIAN SAFEGUARD STANDARDS TO ALL NUCLEAR EQUIPMENT AND SUPPLIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): With direct reference to those standards to which the minister has referred and following questions put to the Prime Minister yesterday, can the minister assure the House that the standards unilaterally imposed by Canada in terms of its sale of nuclear equipment and supplies will apply in the case of Pakistan, not only to nuclear equipment made in Canada and used in Pakistan but also to equipment that has been purchased by Pakistan from other countries, more specifically France?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We are presently engaged in negotiations with Pakistan with the object in mind of increasing the level of safeguards on the reactor that is presently in Pakistan. These negotiations have not yet been completed. It is public knowledge that discussions have taken place between Pakistan and France on the provision by the latter of a reprocessing plant. That plant which is to be supplied by France, as I understand it, would be covered by safeguards negotiated between Pakistan and France as certified by the International Atomic Agency. We certainly cannot negotiate with Pakistan with respect to a facility provided by a third country. We are at present engaged in discussions with Pakistan with respect to this, what happens and under what conditions material coming out of the Canadian reactor may be subsequently used.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Broadbent: I have a final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Once again the minister did not answer the question. Will he assure the House that as a precondition laid down by the government of Canada for sale of uranium to Pakistan, plutonium, which can be produced by the Canadian reactor, in Pakistan, could not be used by Pakistan on the French reprocessing equipment?

Mr. MacEachen: As I understand it, the plutonium itself would be the end product of a reprocessing facility supplied by France, if and when it goes into production. What is of concern to Canada of course is the spent fuel that comes out of the Canadian reactor which may subsequently be reprocessed in the facility provided by France. It is with respect to this spent fuel that we are presently negotiating with Pakistan, with which country we already have a safeguard provision with respect to the use of that spent fuel. We are attempting to arrange new safeguards or additional safeguards with respect to that spent fuel, but not for plutonium, which is a separate process.

RESEARCH

REQUEST NOT TO REDUCE SUBSIDIES

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board. I wonder where he is now: he was there a moment ago. In his absence, I shall put it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Here comes the President of the Treasury Board: I shall therefore address my question to him, since it deals with university research assistance.

As there is pressing need for new knowledge to develop with efficiency our natural resources, renewed and renewable, and as scientific conferences are an indispensable source of knowledge to all our scientists, does the minister not feel that the new directive designed to limit our expenditures to a single scientist in a given discipline, at future conferences, constitutes a step back for Canada in the field of scientific research, which dealt a fatal blow to our researchers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I do not agree with the assumption of the hon. member. The Canadian government contributions to research have always been quite considerable in the last few years. Unfortunately, this year we have had to reduce our investments in that field, strictly because of budgetary restriction measures.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I admit, as the minister said, that subsidies were made in years past, but does the minister not agree that, in spite of the act imposing restrictions, it is more pressing to give research the money it requires than to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to open new income tax offices?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is essential that we have an excellent tax levy system if we want to spend money later on.

FINANCE

EFFECT ON BALANCE OF PAYMENTS OF ANTI-INFLATION EXPORT LEVY—POSSIBLE DIVERSION OF EXPORT ORDERS TO SUBSIDIARIES OF MULTINATIONALS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Faced as we are with international balance of payments deficits amounting to billions of dollars, would the minister indicate if he does not think that the anti-inflation export levy is acting as a deterrent to expanding our export sales abroad? Specifically, would he indicate if there is any evidence that multinational corporations active in Canada are diverting business to their subsidiaries in other lands to avoid the impact of the current export levy in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the second part of the question, we have certainly seen no evidence of that to this point. With respect to the first part, I anticipate being able to make a statement before very long on the question of the export levy.

IMPACT OF ANTI-INFLATION REGULATIONS ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): In view of the answer of the minister that he will be making a statement, would he also refer to the lot of the small businessman with respect to the export levy and the anti-inflation regulations themselves, bearing in mind the statement made by Mr. Biddell of the Anti-Inflation Board that he felt small business was being hurt by the impact of the anti-inflation regulations, and that if it was not to be hurt, he hoped the regulations would be amended forthwith?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I have not seen that particular statement, but I remind the hon. gentleman that on the private sector side the mandatory aspect of the regulations applies only to firms with 500 or more employees unless they are in the construction trades. We hope that all firms would accord in their pricing and compensation policies with the standards we have set, but with respect to the mandatory provisions of the law prima facie, small business would not be affected by it.

FISHERIES

REASON FOR EXCLUSION OF DEEP-SEA TRAWLERS FROM GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fisheries. In light of a report received today from the President of the Seafood Workers Union in Nova Scotia that the government plans to exclude deep-sea trawlers from fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which at present produces more than 50 per cent of the production processed by fish plants in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, what compensation will be provided to the Canadian fishermen and fish plant workers as a result of this action? Will all foreign trawlers be restricted from fishing in the gulf? On what scientific research was such a move predicated? Finally, why has such a move been initiated against Canadian fishermen prior to any agreement being reached on a 200 mile economic zone?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather lengthy question and I hope I can cover all the points. There will be discussions between government officials and representatives of the unions and the companies tomorrow, I understand. The problem is one of preserving the spawning stocks of red fish which are required to have another generation class growing up in the future. The other problem is that because of light ice conditions the fishery has gone on considerably longer than usual. The foreign vessels which are fishing in the gulf are there under the phase-out agreement and may not take red fish as a directed fishery. The 200-mile economic zone matter does not apply in this case.

CLOSING OF FISH PROCESSING PLANTS IN NOVA SCOTIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVOID

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. At the present time, the Nova Scotia Port Bickerton Co-operative Fish Plant is operative under the management of the provincial government and the same government is looking for owners for the bankrupt fish processing plant at Petit de Grat Bridge previously owned by Richmond Fisheries, Ltd., and on which 1,000 residents of Isle Madam depend directly or indirectly for their livelihood and they are looking also for new operators for the Booth fisheries plant at Canso and the Swim Brothers plant at Lockeport. My question to the minister is, how many processing plants must be closed in Nova Scotia before this government takes some action which will be helpful in expanding rather than closing down this important primary industry?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that the management of the gulf has been ours for a certain number of years. The problem of the red fish stocks which are there now, these two years classes, is one which is completely familiar to the industry. I would also say to the hon. member that unless we manage our own gulf properly we will have more bankruptcies.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY SERVICE TO CHATEAUGUAY AND SOUTHWESTERN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. It relates to the negative decision of the Canadian Transport Commission made public yesterday concerning an application for restoration of the passenger train service between Valleyfield, Chateauguay and Montreal. I want first to give notice that I intend to appeal to the Governor in Council for a modification of that decision on the grounds that the CTC erred in its appraisal of the facts submitted to it as well as in its conclusions. My question is this: would the minister undertake to review with his officials and the CTC possible initiatives whereby the existing rail facilities presently owned by the Penn Central can contribute to the solution of the atrocious transit problems affecting Chateauguay and southwestern Quebec residents.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated having the opportunity the other day to go over the issue of the use of this particular railway for a commuter type service with the municipal representatives of the Chateauguay area. While we ordinarily expect a significant involvement on the part of the municipality and province in commuter services, I will certainly follow up with the CTC the question of the future use of that track.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR PROVISION TO ASSURE REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS TO COMMITTEE—APPOINTMENT OF AUDITOR GENERAL AS JOINT AUDITOR

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the proposed changes in the Air Canada Act, could the minister tell the House, in the interests of achieving a more effective and ongoing mechanism of Air Canada's accountability to parliament, whether we could expect any changes in the Air Canada Act in this regard and, hopefully, some mechanism to ensure that the annual reports of Air Canada are referred to the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications on a regular basis? Also, has the minister explored the possibility of appointing the auditor general as a joint auditor of this major Crown corporation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we expect to have amendments to the Air Canada Act come before the House within a number of weeks and to have an opportunity at that time to look at the changes in detail. I had discussions with Air Canada about the possibility of looking at the annual report for 1974-75 which may be available at the same time. I shall be glad to make that a general practice. I would reserve comment on the question of the auditor general, however. Our general tendency has been to move more in the direction of giving broad guidelines to Air Canada, but then to let it run very much on the basis of the best possible business management.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

Mr. Mazankowski: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister if he or his officials have had discussions with the auditor general with respect to looking at the possible advantages that could occur as a result of this joint auditorship of the auditor general and the private auditing firm?

Mr. Lang: No, I have not.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION CANADA ASK PAKISTAN TO SIGN NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY AND CANCEL PURCHASE OF REPROCESSING PLANT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the Canadian government and the government of Pakistan are discussing the sale of a nuclear reactor and in view of the fact that two things concern a great many people in Canada—first, the fact that Pakistan has not signed a non-proliferation treaty and second, that it has not cancelled its order to purchase a reprocessing plant as South Korea did—I want to ask the minister if the government can assure this House that the signing of the non-proliferation treaty and the cancellation of the contract to purchase a reprocessing plant will be conditions which Canada will impose before it will agree to sign any such agreement with Pakistan?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question is based upon a mistaken premise. We are not discussing the sale of a nuclear reactor with Pakistan; we are not discussing at all the sale of a reactor or any other facility.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing with them the sale of nuclear technology and uranium; they already have a reactor. I am perfectly aware of that. I ask the minister the question with respect to these two things: is the Canadian government prepared to impose the two conditions I have suggested?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the premise of the second question is also mistaken.

FISHERIES

CHANGES IN LOBSTER FISHING LICENCE POLICY—POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION FOR LOSS OF CAPITAL INVESTMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Fisheries with respect to the announcement made some time late last year that a number of lobster fishermen who, in the eyes of the department, are moonlighting in the lobster fishery would be removed from the fishery. In view of the number of requests that have come from fisheries associations, as well as from provincial governments, that there be some form of compensation due to the heavy capital investment that a number of these lobster fishermen would have, I wonder if any understanding has been reached with the provincial governments with respect to this matter or the fisheries associations that have made requests to the minister?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, it may be that the hon. member, in relating this matter to provincial governments, is speaking of a possible buy-back program that has been discussed with the provincial governments. This matter will come on course eventually as the moonlighter problem is solved. For those who have had the extra privilege of fishing for lobster while they had full time jobs, I believe it is the general consensus that they have had access to a fairly rewarding privilege, and that they should not be compensated.

CHANGES IN LOBSTER FISHING LICENCE POLICY—CLARIFICATION OF GUIDELINES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question. I am sure that the minister will be hearing more from the various fishermen about this. With regard to those people who received letters about a month and a half ago about the loss of their fishing licences and the meeting the minister had with a number of hon. members concerning a second letter that was to go out as well as the clarification of the guidelines defining who in effect are moonlighters, can he tell the House what action has been taken on both those matters in order that the very serious situation affecting a number of fishermen can be alleviated?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I have approved the content of the second letter which is to be sent out. The criteria have also been clarified and appeal boards are being set up. In some cases they are already looking at the appeals, so the procedure is proceeding rather well at the moment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—POSSIBILITY GUIDANCE OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD SOUGHT ON MAXIMUM PERMISSIBLE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I did not bring my whip with me today, but I will bring it every day after today.

My question is addressed to the Minister of Labour, and has to do with the statement that rail workers are urging conciliation commissioner Emmett Hall to disregard federal inflation guidelines. Has the commissioner asked for the clarification of the Anti-Inflation Board on just what would be the maximum permissible settlement?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member on his new appointment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): To answer his question; no.

CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ESSENTIALITY OF RAILWAY SERVICE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government taken a position with regard to the essentiality of rail service and, if so, indicated that position to those involved in this dispute?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, they are certainly aware that the government considers rail service very important indeed in Canada.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COST OF ISSUING PERMITS FOR GUNS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, the answer to which may assist us in the second reading debate on the peace and security bill. As sportsmen of Canada assess that about six million guns will be affected by the legislation, has the minister assessed how many public servants, including police officers, will be needed to issue permits for restricted guns and licences for all guns, and what the cost in this regard will be to the Canadian public?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there has been a careful analysis, but it is impossible to say what the result will be and how many people will be involved because this will depend to some extent on special arrangements made in each province. Naturally, we hope to keep the administrative and licensing staff to a minimum, but, at the same time, make licensing personnel available in communities throughout Canada so that there will not be difficulty in obtaining licences. I anticipate that we shall use provincial and federal police forces and, hopefully, with the co-operation of some provinces, wildlife officers. It is impossible for me to be specific about these matters until these arrangements have been entered into specifically and the provisions are proclaimed in each province.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The police associations of Canada having said in their brief that there would not be enough police personnel to handle the program—and I do not think the Minister of Justice would seriously consider transferring the cost of the program to the provinces—may I ask if he has considered how many people will be needed for the program and how the increased expenditure will fit into the anti-inflation program?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recall that the Prime Minister in his December statement indicated that law enforcement would be given a special place in the expenditures of the government. Secondly, the legislation provides for a licensing fee and a licensing scheme. It is designed to be self-financing or self-supporting. The bill provides that the regulatory power may divide the licence fee between provincial and federal governments, depending on the work each level of government does in this field. With regard to the number of police officers available, I refer the hon. member, for example, to the statement made yesterday by the attorney general of Ontario, who is responsible for the police in the province, indicating his full support for the scheme.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANTI-INFLATION APPEAL TRIBUNAL

DESIGNATION OF DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL AS LEGAL COUNSEL—POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and relates to the rules of procedure in an appeal to the anti-inflation tribunal from an order of the administrator. Since the legal counsel to the administrator is designated to be the deputy attorney general of Canada, under the statute, is the minister prepared to assure the House that the legal contest which could develop between the appellant and respondent will be conducted on an impartial basis? More specifically, can the minister assure the House that the opponent of a corporation in an appeal tribunal hearing will not be more than the administrator and that the corporation will not be doing battle with the whole legal force and might of the federal government, which, of course, has a vested interest in enforcing the program? Really, is there not a conflict of interest contained in the regulations or statute?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks a most technical question.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): With respect, it is not technical at all.

Mr. Basford: I should like to review the wording of the regulations to which the hon. member refers. I have no hesitation in assuring him that any conflict of the kind the hon. member suggests I will undertake to avoid.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF FULL USE OF EAST COAST PORTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In the interests of sharing whatever transportation dollars can be made available among the Canadians, would the minister and the government consider measures which will keep goods moving into or out of Canada moving as much as possible through Canadian transportation systems, not United States ports?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that we aim to have good Canadian port facilities well used in the trans-shipment of Canadian goods.

Mr. McCleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the somewhat Draconian measures which will be presented and which will affect east coast ports, will there also be included counter-measures, to make certain that goods moving into or out of this country move through our east coast ports rather than through New York, Baltimore, Boston, etc.?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be party to any Draconian measures.

FREIGHT RATES—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES IN LEGISLATION TO ACCOMPLISH CHANGES IN RATE STRUCTURE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport? In changing the freight rate structure, does the minister contemplate amendments to the freight rates legislation, in order to achieve the general, broad policy the government has set forth?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yes, several legislative changes are necessary to accomplish the changes in rates anticipated.

AIRPORTS

INCREASED LANDING CHARGES FOR LIGHT AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF BASIS FOR INCREASE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question, also, is addressed to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that the proposed new landing charges at airports for light aircraft call for increases ranging from 30 cents to $1.90 an hour? This represents an increase in levies of more than 500 per cent which, by my reckoning, somewhat exceeds what the Anti-Inflation Board will allow. Is the minister aware that these increases will reduce if not altogether eliminate pilot training in this country? Is the minister satisfied that we have an over-abundance of pilots?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am told that the fee increase over-all, if one does not isolate one particular aspect, represents an increase in the order of 5 per cent. Therefore, it is a modest change in a fee which has not been changed for a long time.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in light of the minister's answer, I think my supplementary question is very much in order. Will the minister tell the House, perhaps by making a statement on motions, the basis on which the new rates have been established? Plan one, or phase one, is now in effect, and calls for increases from 30 cents and 60 cents, to $1.30 for the last landing, and so on. I do not see how the increase is 5 per cent. Will the minister explain, also, what phase two and phase three mean?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member surprises me. Hon. members opposite have been rather critical at times of government spending balances; yet here is a situation where, in a particular area, it seemed reasonable for those who use the service to pay a greater proportion of the cost of the service rather than letting the burden fall on the general taxpayer who is not making use of that service. That is a general principle you will see applied in many more places.

ENERGY

SARNIA—MONTREAL PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO ASSURE SUPPLY OF OIL

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A news story appearing yesterday indicated that oil was expected to flow into the Sarnia-Montreal portion of the pipeline within five days. Will the minister explain why no oil has been offered, why the pipeline cannot purchase any, and advise the House what efforts he is bending to getting the six refinery consortium in Montreal to make nominations so that oil will flow for May delivery?

● (1450)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The story which appeared in the press was in error in a number of important particulars. Oil will not be flowing until some time in May. Activities right now are being devoted to completing the line; the National Energy Board has not yet given it formal approval. We are also working out with the various refineries a system to handle tariffs on the through-put to Montreal.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the minister first advise us how he proposes to see that some two million barrels of oil will come down at the rate of 40,000 barrels a day to fill the pipeline when no nominations have been made and nobody will buy the oil and, second, whether he feels that the Montreal refineries are too comfortable on the nipple of the ample breast of federal subsidies to balance off sources?

Mr. Gillespie: I am overwhelmed by the eloquence of the question. Discussions are under way at the present time.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO AVOID FISHING BOAT DISASTERS ON WEST COAST

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I wrote to him over a month ago expressing the concern felt by myself and fishermen on the West Coast in connection with the herring boat fishing disasters. The season is due to start on Sunday. Apart from the usual acknowledgement of the receipt of my letter, I have received no reply. Can the minister inform the House what he has done to prevent a recurrence of last spring's disasters when 19 boats went down with heavy loss of life?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The hon. member from that area has been pressing me very hard for consideration of safety measures. I have told her on a number of occasions that we shall be trying to do a variety of things to assist. We are arranging a meeting in short order in an attempt to assist in introducing the best possible techniques to deal with these risks, including some improvement in communications. There has been some improvement in the equipment in the area. We are trying to make sure that as far as possible we have, on our side, done what can be done. A good deal depends, of course, on the precautions which are taken by the fishermen themselves. We can only be helpful to the point of trying to ensure that they are aware of the necessary precautions and take as many as possible.

Mr. McKinnon: I received a reply from the Minister of National Defence who merely listed the equipment available on the west coast and there is no change from last year. Can the minister tell us specifically whether he feels the recommendations of the West Coast Fishing Vessels Casualties Inquiry which the Department of Transport convened, have been carried out? In particular, has anything been done to ensure the co-ordination and positioning of defence and rescue services?

Mr. Lang: Well, Mr. Speaker, work has been going on in an attempt to ensure that as many of the recommendations as possible are carried out.

RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM FOR TORONTO—DATE OF DECISION ON GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. I have not given him notice but I am sure he is familiar with the subject. In the light of the promises made by the Prime Minister that the federal government would extend financial support for the development of urban transportation systems, and in view of cutbacks in government spending on the development of such a transport system in metro Toronto which are likely to destroy the whole plan for the extension of rapid transit lines in east and west Toronto, has the government decided to postpone indefinitely its promised contribution to capital or operational costs of rapid transit in the Toronto area and elsewhere, and, if so, will it reconsider this decision?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have not taken such a decision. We did some time ago indicate we were willing to provide a special type of assistance for commuter programs over a five-year period. That leaves out a significant piece of action in relation to urban transit generally. We are considering the approach we should take to that situation and I hope it will not be very many weeks before we can announce definitively what we believe we can and should do in that area.

Mr. Brewin: Will the minister and the cabinet bear in mind when making a decision on this matter, that the conservation of fossil fuels is more dependent on the extension of rapid transit than almost any other form of fuel saving?

Mr. Lang: We always take the energy issue, the cost issue and other issues into consideration when determining the appropriate course of action.

BILINGUALISM

DATE OF DECISION ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF ADVISORY COUNCIL ON BILINGUAL DISTRICTS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of Treasury Board.

[English]

Since the hon. gentleman's department is in charge of the implementation of the policy on biligualism, and in view of the fact that the bilingual advisory board's report outlining possible areas to be designated as bilingual districts in Canada was tabled in the House as long ago as November, 1975, is there any indication when the minister or the cabinet intend to make a decision and subsequent announcement with regard to the recommendation of the advisory board?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the report has been received three months ago. We are now considering it, but no decision has yet been taken about the date when we will be able to determine by order in council which districts will be bilingual in Canada. As soon as we are ready to say so, we will advise the hon. member in the House.

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY IF MINISTER MET WITH QUEBEC MINISTER CONCERNING CABLEVISION IN RIMOUSKI

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Communications. During the latest conference of ministers of communications, the province of Quebec deemed it advisable to elect a different course than the one which the nine other provincial governments adopted. Considering the situation which now prevails in my own area of Rimouski with respect to cable TV, can the minister advise the House whether she recently held discussions with her Quebec counterpart? If so, can she tell the House what was the essence of the discussions?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I recently met with my Quebec counterpart. We discussed all the problems pertaining to cable TV and to the whole sector within the jurisdiction of our two departments. We also studied the Rimouski problem but I would like to remind the hon. member that the only reason why there is a problem in Rimouski is that the Quebec Public Service Commission has chosen to disregard a federal agency's regulation.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGED DISCREPANCY BETWEEN ITEM IN ESTIMATES AND IN PAMPHLET "HOW YOUR TAX DOLLAR IS SPENT"

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of Treasury Board. I should like to ask him to clear up an apparent discrepancy between the estimates blue book and the guide "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent". Can the minister explain why this guide reports that the estimates of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources have provided for increased payments under the oil price subsidy program while the blue book says there has been a $250 million decrease in expenditure on that same program?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member realizes that this is a question which ought to be put to the minister when he is before the standing committee.

HEALTH

RED FOOD DYES—SUGGESTED BANNING UNTIL AGREEMENT REACHED CONCERNING DANGER TO HEALTH

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the government does not seem at this point to be able to clear up the confusion as to whether or not red food dyes are harmful to the human system, would the minister not agree that there should be a ban on the use of all red food dyes until there is agreement as to whether or not a danger to human life exists?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

SAFETY OF GREEN DYE ADMINISTERED TO SEALS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A question to the same minister, or to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that the Greenpeace organization has indicated that it will interfere with the seal hunt by administering a green dye to the bodies of the seals, would either the minister of health or the Minister of Fisheries adopt my suggestion that an analysis should be made of that particular green dye to see whether it really harms the bodies of the seals? If this is proven to be the case, does the government not feel that the Greenpeace organization ought to be brought to trial?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think the hon. member can keep on eating seals.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REASON FOR REFUSAL TO PERMIT AIR LINE EMPLOYEES TO PROSECUTE AIR CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): May I direct my question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker? It arises from the fact that the Minister of Labour has refused an application for consent to prosecute pursuant to Section 194, part V of the Canada Labour Code by the Canadian Air Line Employees Association regarding alleged improper labour practices by representatives of Air Canada. Can the minister say briefly why he refused and what criteria he used for witholding the granting of consent pursuant to section 194, part V, of the Canada Labour Code?

● (1500)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in this particular case I think the hon. member will agree that I should accept the independent legal advice of the law officers of the Crown regarding the adequacy of the grounds for this application. I shall be pleased to give the hon. member further details, perhaps tomorrow, but I do believe there is other recourse for the union in question in terms of the Canada Labour Relations Board.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, might I ask the government House leader the business for the balance of this week and perhaps next week, and as far ahead as he can see.

Mr. Sharp: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate my hon. friend on his elevation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I should just like to offer him some advice, and that is in most respects to follow his predecessor in office—not in all respects but in most respects.

I should like to designate the remaining allotted days for the period ending March 26, pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), as follows: Monday, March 1; Friday, March 12; Tuesday, March 16; Friday, March 19; Tuesday, March 23; Wednesday, March 24; and Thursday, March 25.

Today, as first order of business, it has been agreed among the House leaders that we will deal with all stages of Bill C-85, including consideration in committee of the whole rather than the usual reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. When that bill has been disposed of, we will resume consideration of second reading of Bill C-68.

May I also indicate the date for the beginning of the debate on Bill C-83, which will be the first of the criminal law amendment bills to be called, the other being Bill C-84. This is a complicated bill and the government has been prepared to let some days elapse between first and second reading. Originally we felt that a week might have been an appropriate interval. After discussion among the House leaders, we have agreed to a few additional days. It is therefore my intention to call Bill C-83 for second reading on Monday, March 8.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. gentleman for his kindness and also for his advice, which I will follow to the degree suggested by the hon. gentleman. Might I ask him one further question with respect to the consideration by the House of Bills C-83 and C-84. The Department of the Solicitor General and the Department of Justice have a number of statistical analyses relating to crime, and I am sure there are a number of studies being undertaken with respect to various kinds of crime. These reports would be very helpful to members of the House as well as to members of the public as the debate proceeds.

It is difficult to know how long that debate may go, but I think it would be important to members of parliament as well as members of the public that the government House leader and the ministers I have mentioned consider the tabling of those reports, having regard to the extent of their availability. There are certain issues involved on which a lot of work must be done by the public and by members of parliament. As I say, I think it would be facilitating the work in the House as well as the consideration of the public if the government were prepared to give this matter consideration.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I appreciate the hon. member's remarks. We have not prepared a special study or compilation for publication, but we will go through the material that we have and see that we table everything we possibly can. I did intend, as did the Solicitor General, putting in as much information as possible of an even more detailed nature for all members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the actual clause by clause study of the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I join with the government House leader in extending congratulations to my hon. friend, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, on his promotion. If the hon. member is looking for advice, I should be glad to offer it to him, but rather than giving it to him here on the floor I would be happy to give it to him behind the curtains or some day out on Commanche Drive.

Since I know what is coming in a moment or two I do not need to ask my usual Thursday question, the one I have been asking every Thursday since last October, so may I ask the government House leader whether he can tell us when we are going to deal with a bill which is of interest to all members of the House, Bill C-81, which goes part way toward freezing the incomes of members of parliament at the level of our income in 1975?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have given some consideration to this measure, but when I looked at the other bills that were before us it did not seem to me that I could give it that much priority as to assign it a place on the agenda yet. At any rate, I do not think any of us is getting the extra money that the bill would deny us.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On that point, Mr. Speaker, if the bill is going to be delayed, since the cheques that we are now receiving have frozen one element of our pay and not the other, would the government indicate what its intention is with respect to our proposed amendment to freeze our entire income?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when the bill is introduced for debate, that indication, of course, will be given.

Mr. Holmes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not use this privilege very often, but I am quite concerned. My point of order relates to the inappropriate answer given in response to a follow-up to a question I raised in this House yesterday. To refresh Your Honour's memory my question was to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and in his absence I directed it to the Acting Prime Minister. It relates to the TV program on Tuesday evening about the terrible situation in Moosonee.

I asked, very simply, that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs meet immediately with the appropriate minister in the province of Ontario to work out an agreement so that the facilities available there could be used by these native people. We know that the native people in that particular area are living in squalor. We know that in terms of educational facilities students must travel literally hundreds of miles. My point of order is simply this. In view of the answer given by the parliamentary secretary, that a response would be made to me, and in view of the seriousness of the situation, I feel at this period in time that the information should be available by now.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON COMMITTEE REPORT RESPECTING EX-PRISONERS OF WAR

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs reported its recommendations to the House on the report of a study on European prisoners of war, hon. members and many veterans have been eagerly waiting for an announcement of the government's reaction to the committee report. It is, therefore, with considerable pleasure that I am able to inform the House that the government intends to introduce a bill to provide special compensation for former prisoners of war.

● (1510)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): The proposed bill will provide additional benefits for those who were prisoners of war of the Japanese and who suffered so severely at the hands of their captors. The malnutrition, personal indignities and the harsh conditions of imprisonment left effects and scars on these gallant people which were not always identifiable.

It will also provide for similar compensation, but to a lesser degree and on a sliding scale relating to the period of time spent as a prisoner of war, to those who were captured in other theatres of war during or after World War II. While it is intended, for example, that those who were captured at Dieppe in August, 1942, will receive less than the former prisoners of war of the Japanese, they will receive greater benefits than those who became prisoners of war later in the war. This compensation which will be of benefit to former prisoners of war and their families will be indexed to keep pace with changes in the consumer price index.

In making this announcement, I must again pay special tribute to the lead taken by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which, in its usual non-partisan manner, heard evidence and made the report on which the government's decision is based.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should first say that all good things come to those who wait. We have certainly waited for some time for this statement by the minister. Let me say at the outset that we appreciate the advance notice given by the minister of the contents of his statement, as well as the statement itself which reached my office this morning. That advance notice came in the form of very careful discussions with the minister in his office and critics from the opposition parties in this House. I think this ability of the minister to speak freely with us indicates the mutual understanding and respect we have for one another, as well as the non-partisan nature of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

The one sentence or phrase from the statement, that "many veterans have been eagerly waiting for an announcement" is an understatement of considerable magnitude. The minister might be considered a conservative, with a small "c", in putting it that way. The constant prodding by members of the opposition parties, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and, if I may not be too immodest, myself has been aimed at the minister to bring forth a statement or the legislation.

The prodding has not been aimed so much at the minister, because we understand his concern about this problem, but more especially at his cabinet colleagues who the minister had a great deal of difficulty convincing as to the necessity of bringing in something for these prisoners of war. I make one notable exception, his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), who was a member of the committee on veterans affairs and was instrumental in bringing about some consensus which enabled the committee to bring in the report on which this statement is based.

We in the opposition will certainly expedite the passage of the bill which will implement the proposals in this statement. In fact, I think we are willing to do that in a matter of hours when the legislation is brought forward.

An hon. Member: Minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I have discussed this matter with some of my colleagues on this side and I am almost certain I can give this assurance to the minister. I think we are right in asking how soon the legislation will be prepared and introduced to the House. The veterans referred to in the statement are in advancing years, and because of that the grim reaper is taking his toll year by year—as a matter of fact, month by month—with increasing frequency. While we are setting aside "X" millions of dollars to finance this program, I think it will be a decreasing amount year by year as these men pass on to their reward. This is something that should be kept in mind when we talk about the number of dollars the program is going to cost the government.

I do not wish to take too long, but I think I should point out that the report on which this statement is based had three main proposals: an adjustment to pensions received by Hong Kong veterans, compensation to prisoners of war other than Hong Kong veterans, and an adjustment to widows' pensions whose veteran spouses received less than 48 per cent.

It is obvious from the statement that it takes into consideration compensation to prisoners of war but omits widows' pensions. We have agreed to pass the bill, but I do not think we need gag ourselves by not asking the minister at some time down the line to keep this in mind. The Minister of National Revenue indicated that they had flagged this particular recommendation of the report, which indicates to me that they had it in mind and I sincerely hope that is the case. The minister explained earlier the reasons for this omission. We accept those and will not press the point now. When another budget comes down and we are again reviewing government spending, I give the minister notice that we will be asking more questions about this matter.

Again I say to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we welcome this statement and will do everything in our power to expedite passage of the legislation which we hope will come in at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as my first word I should like to thank the minister for the tribute he paid in his statement today to the members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. It may be that some of us have been doing the prodding in public about this matter, most of us being on this side of the House, but I know I speak for every member on the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs when I say that we have been unanimous in our anxiety to get this legislation, and we are all delighted the minister has finally got cabinet approval and has been able to indicate that the legislation will be brought in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Coming as I do from the city of Winnipeg, I know a good many Canadian veterans who were at Hong Kong, and a good many who were at Dieppe as well as in other prison camps in Europe. That experience enables me to confirm that those who suffered the experience of being prisoners of war in Hong Kong, after Dieppe and at other prison camps, went through something for which they should have been compensated long, long ago. It is too bad we have had to wait this long, but now that the legislation has been announced we welcome it.

I join with my namesake who spoke just now in saying that once this bill is brought in the minister will be surprised at how little time it will take to get through. I hope it has an effective date with some retroactivity to cover all the time that these veterans have had to wait. In the main, since we are led to believe that the pension proposals for Canadian veterans who were former prisoners of war will be more or less those that were set out in the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, we welcome the proposed legislation and we shall give it our full support.

Like the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), I regret that there are certain things that were in the report which have not been mentioned today by the minister. One of those is any reference to escapees and evaders. In our report we expressed the hope that this legislation would cover them as well. I believe we have at least one member in this House who would be covered by that provision. I am sorry that is not included in the minister's statement.

I also express my very deep regret that there is no reference in the statement to anything being done for widows of veterans generally, having in mind widows of all veterans who are on disability pensions. On at least three occasions in recent years the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has recommended that the Pension Act be amended so that widows of veterans where the veteran's pension was 48 per cent or less be given a pro rata pension as of right. This was also strongly recommended some years ago in the Woods report. I would hope that some time this will be implemented. As it is not mentioned in the minister's statement, I suppose we will not see it in the bill, but I join with my colleague who spoke before me when he said that down the road we shall keep the pressure on for this improvement in respect of the widows of veterans who were on disability pensions.

In the meantime, we are glad that this long, long wait is over. I refer particularly to the time that has elapsed since the committee made its report on June 12, 1975. If the minister can just get this bill on the order paper in a very few days, we will have it passed in almost no time at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to join the previous speakers to extend my sincere thanks to the minister who quickly sent us a copy of the statement on the government's reaction to the report from a study on prisoners of war.

Moreover, I am very glad to see that the government at last decided to implement the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs with the firm intention of putting forward a bill giving deserved compensation to prisoners of war. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the prisoners of war suffered greatly by their captivity and that, in my humble opinion, we have a responsibility towards these prisoners, as most of them grew old very quickly, or are handicapped because of malnutrition or of the cruelties they endured.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government will consider the distress of the widows, of the orphans and of the families of these prisoners because, in a way, they also had their share of distress and misgivings.

Once again, I agree with the minister's statement considering that the bill which he intends to introduce shortly will result in reducing the hardships of those prisoners. I hope the government will keep worrying about those prisoners who left a part of themselves in enemy prisons. Somebody said a moment ago that everything comes to him who waits. I would add that it is never too late to be right. So once again I thank the minister and I hope that this bill, as the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said so well, will not raise too many objections and will be passed as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the Standing Order there is discretion to allow questions, or to limit them as the Chair sees fit. The statement made today by the minister proposes the introduction of legislation which has been anticipated, and obviously questioning should be carried out when the legislation is presented. Also, there does not seem to be much disagreement; therefore, I intend severely to limit the questioning.

Since I realize two or three members have waited here with the intention of asking questions, I think the purpose would be served if each member were allowed to put one question. I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As you know, Mr. Speaker, it would have been rather difficult to keep me down today since I am the only person in this chamber directly interested in that I might, shall I say, benefit from this announcement. Beyond that, however, may I say, in welcoming this statement and finding myself among many relatively latter-day advocates of prisoner of war compensation, that I am wondering whether the minister, in his accolades in this regard, would not remember the Dieppe veterans and their prisoner of war association which was among the first to go after this legislation.

May I ask the minister whether, in establishing the gradations of entitlement, adequate regard has been paid to those men who were prisoners of war for up to four and five years in Europe, the early RAF and RCAF prisoners of war who spent, as I have said, four or five years in prison camps and who suffered the early rigours of prisoners of war in 1939 and 1940. If the minister wants any description of them, I am quite prepared to fill his ear for a couple of hours, because their treatment in many ways in the end was comparable to that of the Japanese starting in December, 1941.

So I ask the minister if special attention is being paid to those former prisoners of war, and also what attention is being paid to the first three months of one's prisoner of war treatment, because I have heard that those who do not have a three-month period may not qualify under the legislation. The toughest time, psychologically and physically, is in the first three months.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, there is no particular reference to those who served five years. So far as the European prisoners are concerned, we seem to have uppermost in our minds the Dieppe prisoners who, as we know, were prisoners for approximately three years. In respect of those with longer periods, as yet the legislation is not drawn with anything specific in it about them. What was the other question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Whether there is to be a qualifying three months' period and whether those people with less than three months would not qualify under this compensation legislation.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): The reason the period is there is that, for instance, many people may have been prisoners for only half an hour. I refer to those people who got away. This is the reason the period was put in the first place.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I shall abide by your request in respect of a short question. I had a short, five-part question but the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) pre-empted two or three parts. Would the minister give us an indication of the status of the drafting of this legislation at the present time, when he expects to introduce it, and whether any consideration is being given to First World War veterans who were prisoners of war?

Also, will he tell us whether any consideration, before the legislation is drafted by his officials, is being given to escapees and others who may have suffered comparable or even worse hardships by avoiding capture? Can we expect, in the future, consideration of pensions for widows of veterans who had disability pensions below 85 per cent, and is consideration being given to retroactivity? Might I say I am very pleased that the rates are to be indexed. I have one final question. Will the schedule and recommendation indicate that the graduating scale will be in accordance with the recommendations of the committee on veterans affairs? That supplements the question of the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I should have had someone taking shorthand. The answer to the hon. member's question with reference to First World War veterans is that they are not considered in the legislation. The chief reason, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is that the treaty with regard to the treatment of prisoners in the First World War was pretty well adhered to so far as we know. They were not subjected to malnutrition or other suffering such as World War II veterans were.

So far as benefits for widows are concerned, no, this is not in the legislation. It will be considered at a later date. This matter is always under consideration. As far as retroactivity is concerned, it is not being considered at this time. I have felt a wee bit lucky to get this without going back. How far back would you go—one year, two years, five years, thirty years? The graduating scale as recommended by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs is to be considered in the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I put one question to the minister? In effect, it is supplementary to the one he has just answered. Even if he feels he cannot win a substantial amount of retroactivity, can he tell us what the effective date of the legislation will be? It may take perhaps a few days before the government brings in the bill. Surely veterans who have been waiting for this should get it backdated to January I, or even as far back as last October—some such date as that. Can the minister give any indication as to what the effective date of the legislation will be, so that it does not get lost in further delays on the floor of parliament?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) asked me a question about the legislation. As hon. members know, I have received permission today to have the legislation drafted. Hon. members can rest assured that this will take place today. As to the effective date of the legislation, I would be inclined to think that when it is passed by the House it will be proclaimed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the minister has misunderstood me. I know the legislation comes into effect on proclamation, but what will be the effective date of the payments?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): It would be hard for me to say for sure, but I suggest that the effective date for payments will be when the legislation comes into effect.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in line with questions on the same subject. The minister mentioned the effective date. Having listened to the discussion in which hon. members have participated, I am sure he is aware that we are very concerned about the fact that so many of those who were prisoners of war seem to be disappearing from our numbers at a very early stage in their lives, in my view. So I have some concern, as hon. members have said, with regard to the effective date. Possibly the minister cannot give us an answer at this time, but perhaps at a later time, if he foresees any long debate on the legislation or any delay, he could make a statement concerning the effective date.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I will be glad to, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McKinnon: I have a supplementary question to that posed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The minister has given us no word to take to the veterans regarding when their benefit cheques will start to go out. Perhaps the minister could give us a firm assurance with regard to the date on which he will bring the legislation before the House. We had an example today from the House leaders regarding Bill C-71 which was brought in for first reading more than two months ago and has not been spoken of since. It affects the pay of members of parliament. We know he is a well intentioned minister in this regard, but if he cannot give us the effective date on which the payments will be made, surely he can give us a ballpark guess as to when he will bring in the legislation and then we will see to it that it is passed quickly.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): My answer to that is, as soon as the legislation is prepared and brought before the House, in a matter of days, I suggest.

Mr. Haidasz: In thanking the Minister of Veterans Affairs for announcing to us the good news of special compensation for former prisoners of war, including European prisoners of war, I should like to ask the minister whether he will take into consideration compensation for former prisoners of war who are Canadian citizens, and who during the time of war fought under Canadian command but were not Canadian citizens then.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Veterans from other countries who fought with the allies are generally looked after by the country from which they came.

REQUEST FOR FUNDS BY SOCIETY FOR THE STUDY OF THE HERITAGE OF CANADA

Question No. 3,602—Mr. Brisco:

1. Did the Department of Indian Affairs fund the Society for the Study of the Heritage of Canada for the Heritage Stoney Wilderness School and, if so, on what date?

2. Did the Department actually fund this project and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what amount?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. In early 1974, the Stoney Wilderness Centre requested that the Department contribute to a maximum of $75,000 for an advertising program.

2. On May 8, 1974 the Department disbursed $48,000 against invoices for advertising and promotion from the Society for the Study of the Heritage of Canada. On June 4, 1974 another $27,000 was disbursed against properly receipted invoices.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE—COST OF FURNISHINGS SINCE 1968

Question No. 3,655—Mr. Cossitt:

Since April 20, 1968, what amount of public funds was spent on furniture, equipment, fixtures, carpets, etc. for the Prime Minister's Office in the (a) Centre Block, including offices occupied by his staff (b) East Block, including all offices occupied by (i) members of his staff (ii) members of the Privy Council staff?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The "General Records Disposal Schedules of the Government of Canada"—Amendment No. 3 requires that we keep records only for six years; therefore information is not available prior to April 1, 1969. Insofar as the Department of Public Works is concerned, our expenditure was as follows:

	1969-70	1970-71	1971-72	1972-73	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76 to November 30/75
(a) Prime Minister's Centre Block Office, including offices occupied by his staff	—	$1,512	$70,052	$11,458	$5,193	—	—
(b) Prime Minister's East Block Office	—	2,228	13,372	60	—	—	—
Prime Minister's Centre and East Block Offices (not possible to split expenditure)	—	5,753	20,802	—	—	—	—
(i) Office of Prime Minister's staff in East Block	$1,756	—	—	—	—	$980	—
(ii) Offices of Members of Privy Council in East Block	—	1,973	8,819	—	4,490	—	—
Total	$1,756	$11,466	$113,045	$11,518	$9,683	$980	—

In so far as the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices are concerned: (b) (i) Prime Minister's East Block Office: nil. Prime Minister's Office, Staff East Block: 1968-69, $7,921.00; 1969-70, $16,829.00; 1970-71, $5,749.00; 1972-72, $3,189.00; 1972-73, $14,904.00; 1973-74, $5,878.00; 1974-75, $12,044.95; 1975-76, $1,701.00. (ii) Privy Council Office, Staff East Block: 1968-69, $7,745.50; 1969-70, $17,651.00; 1970-71, $18,232.00; 1971-72, $10,603.00; 1972-73, $15,621.00; 1973-74, $30,772.00; 1974-75, $21,820.00; 1975-76, $7,835.00.

TRANSFER OF LIP EMPLOYEES FROM MONTREAL TO OTTAWA

Question No. 3,833—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were three employees transferred to the Local Initiatives Programme's Ottawa Headquarters located at 400 Cumberland Avenue from the Regional Office in Montreal in July, 1975 and, if so (a) what were their names and job designations (b) did their duties consist of performing in any way liaison work involving contacts with Members of Parliament, LIP Regional Offices or the office of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration?

2. In each case (a) for what period of time did they remain in Ottawa (b) what were their annual salaries (c) did the government pay their hotel accommodation and, if so (i) in what hotels did they stay (ii) at what cost?

3. In each case, did they receive a daily food or meal allowance and, if so, what was the (a) amount per day (b) total amount?

4. What were the reasons they were brought to Ottawa and was personnel not available in Ottawa with sufficient qualifications to fill the particular positions?

5. Were any Programme Officers with LIP or any other persons working with LIP in Ottawa relieved of their duties during this period of time in order to make way for the three employees from Montreal and, if so, what were the reasons justifying such a step?

6. Before being transferred to Ottawa did any of the three employees challenge or disobey directives from LIP Headquarters in Ottawa and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. (a) André Aubry, program officer (acting PM-3); Jacinthe Brunet, program officer (acting PM-3); Christiane Peloffy-Dostie, program officer (acting PM-3). (b) Yes.

2. (a) A. Aubry, July 7, 1975 to present; J. Brunet, July 7, 1975 to present; C. Peloffy-Dostie, July 7, 1975 to July 25, 1975; September 15, 1975 to October 31, 1975. (b) $14,054—$15,930. (c) Yes. (i) Until suitable single bedroom apartments could be found, the three employees stayed at the Carleton Towers Hotel, with the exception of July 29, 30, 31, 1975, when A. Aubry used the Park Lane Hotel. (ii) A. Aubry, hotel $526.11, apartment $2,661.24; J. Brunet, hotel $894.72, apartment $2,661.24; (Calculations to December 19/75); C. Peloffy-Dostie, hotel $410.08, apartment $900. (Calculations to October 31/75).

3. Yes. (a) The meal allowance paid each employee was $12.45 daily up to September 30, 1975. This rate became $13.25 on October 1, 1975. (b) A. Aubry, $1,736.90 (Calculations to December 19/75); J. Brunet, $1,804.25 (Calculations to December 19/75); C. Peloffy-Dostie, $765.75 (Calculations to October 31/75).

4. At the inception of the 1975-76 Local Initiatives Program there was a need for additional staff to deal with an increased work load at the National Office. In view of the immediate need to fill these positions, three experienced employees from the Quebec Provincial Office who were knowledgeable about the Program and the Quebec region were assigned to these duties on a temporary basis during the peak period of operation of the LIP Program until such time as the positions could be filled through regular staffing action. In addition to meeting an immediate requirement, the Department believed it would be advantageous for Regional staff to obtain Headquarters experience. The remaining officers will complete their assignment on January 30th, 1976.

CONSUMER ASSISTANCE GRANTS PROGRAMME

Question No. 3,913—Mr. Marshall:

1. Under the Consumer Assistance Grants Programme, what contact has been made with consumer groups in the Province of Newfoundland?

2. What staff is provided by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the Province (a) what are their names (b) what is the distribution of such staff across the Province?

3. What organizations have been formed as a result of information directed to the citizens of Newfoundland since the inception of the Programme?

4. What funds have been allocated in the Province to encourage the formation of groups to encourage consumer complaints and how many meetings have been held with such groups?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Under Consumer Assistance Grants program, the only contact with consumer groups in the province of Newfoundland has been the receipt of a grant application from the Consumers' Association of Canada, Newfoundland, on February 2, 1976. This followed their request for grant information in September, 1975.

2. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has the following staff members located in the province of Newfoundland.

COMMITTEE ON ABORTION LAW STUDY

Question No. 3,938—Mr. Reid:

1. Did the government appoint Dr. Marion C. Powell, Toronto, Ontario to the Committee on Abortion Law Study and, if so, for what reason?

2. Was the government aware at the time of the appointment that Dr. Powell was a member of Doctors for the Repeal of the Abortion Laws at least as of June 21, 1975?

Order Paper Questions

3. Is it the policy of the government to appoint individuals to commissions of inquiry and investigation who are known to have stated specific views on one side of the issue under inquiry?

4. Was there consultation or discussion with members of the (a) Doctors for the Repeal of the Abortion Laws (b) pro-abortion groups (c) pro-life groups before the appointment of Dr. Powell?

5. Has the government appointed anyone holding contrary views to Dr. Powell to the Committee and, if so (a) who is the person (b) what organizations does the person represent (c) what consultations took place and with whom, before the appointment was made?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): 1. The then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Otto Lang, announced the appointment of a Committee on the operation of the Abortion Law on September, 26, 1975. Those individuals appointed to the Committee were Dr. R. Badgley as Chairman, Dr. Marion G. Powell and Mme Denyse Fortin-Caron. Each appointment, including that of Dr. Powell, was made on the basis of the professional qualifications and expertise of each member in the areas to be studied by the Committee.

2. I am informed that Dr. Powell has never been a member of Doctors for the Repeal of the Abortion Laws.

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN VESSELS AT SEA AND LIFEBOAT BASES—CANADIAN COAST GUARD FLEET

Question No. 3,947—Mr. Marshall:

1. What is the drill for communication between vessels at sea and Lifeboat Bases in the Canadian Coast Guard fleet?

2. What are the details of the logs of missions carried out by Lifeboat Bases and areas covered by CG 107-108-109 and CG 114?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Canadian Coast Guard search and rescue lifeboats are equipped with radiotelephones covering very high, high and medium frequency bands assigned for marine communications. They are also equipped with radiotelephones enabling them to communicate with aircraft and small vessels. Lifeboats monitor all the radiotelephone distress frequencies 24 hours a day. The coxswains and assistant coxswains hold the required Radiotelephone Operator Certificate and conduct communications with ships in accordance with procedures laid down in the Radiotelephone Operator Handbook.

2. The log books of lifeboats 107, 108, 109 and 114 contain entries on the following: (1) Name or license number of vessel assisted, her position, number of people on board, her port of registry, her particulars, the name of her master and names of other persons in distress. (2) Names of coxswain and assistant coxswain of lifeboat. (3) Times of receiving distress calls, departures and returns, duration of mission. (4) Geographical area of search, state of sea, wind, visibility, etc. (5) Names of other vessels involved in mission. (6) Communications with Rescue Coordination Centres and Radio Stations. (7) Other entries necessary to prepare a full report on completion of each mission.

NEWS RELEASE "STOL EXPERIMENT"

Question No. 4,020—Mr. McKenzie:

With reference to the January 30, 1976, News Release from the Department of Transport entitled: "Stol Experiment", how many of the 100,000 travellers were public servants travelling on official government business?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): While we are unable to answer the question exactly as posed, we do know that 13 per cent of Airtransit Canada passengers to date have used the Central Travel Service of the federal government, and are therefore civil servants deemed to be travelling on official government business.

APPLICATION FOR FUNDS UNDER FLIP

Question No. 4,052—Mr. Corbin:

Did the regional office of the Department of Transport in Moncton request or apply for funds under FLIP in either 1974 or 1975, for the creation of jobs on a site near St. Leonard, New Brunswick, designated for airport development and, if so (a) on what date was the application made (b) what amount was requested (c) how many man years would have been created (d) what was the response?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Atlantic Regional Office applied for funds under FLIP in 1975 for the creation of jobs on a site near St. Leonard, New Brunswick. (a) September 10, 1975. (b) $300,000. (c) 18.3 man years. (d) The project was not among those approved under the FLIP program.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Would you be so kind, Mr. Speaker, as to call starred question No. 3,919.

*LOCATION OF LIFEBOAT BASES ON ATLANTIC COAST

Question No. 3,919—Mr. Marshall:

1. Does the location of lifeboat bases on the Atlantic Coast show a gap of some four hundred miles along the west coast of Newfoundland and, if so (a) is the Department of Transport considering adding bases to this area to protect fishing vessels (b) is a promised review of the national search and rescue policy to determine marine vehicle systems requirements and jurisdictional areas related to search and rescue operations completed?

2. If such a review has been completed, will it be Tabled in the House of Commons and, if so, on what date?

[English]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. However, the fact that there are no lifeboats based on the west coast of Newfoundland does not mean that fishermen in that area are without protection. The law requires that all mariners help one another in case of distress at sea and this obligation has long ago developed into a tradition. Fishing vessels off the west coast of Newfoundland can rely on assistance from other fishing vessels, government vessels and commercial vessels of any nationality that may be in a position to render assistance. (a) The need to establish additional marine search and rescue facilities is under consideration for all Canadian waters including waters off the west coast of Newfoundland. (b) Yes.

2. No. The review was carried out in Transport Canada to gather facts and information necessary for developing a new national search and rescue policy. A revised policy on search and rescue which will be based on the results of the review is now being prepared and will be placed before the cabinet for approval as soon as possible.

TEMPORARY IMMIGRATION SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR DEPORTATION OF UNDESIRABLE ALIENS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-85, respecting immigration security, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe the House leader indicated earlier today that rather than have this bill referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, it should go to the committee of the whole following second reading.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to confirm that that is the understanding.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If that is the agreement of the House, the motion will be changed.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I should like to start by thanking hon. members, particularly the House leaders and hon. members of each of the parties who specialize in immigration matters, for their co-operation and accommodation in dealing with this bill with dispatch today. This bill is significant, although it is a short and temporary measure, and if approved it will facilitate the exclusion from Canada of persons who might engage in violent criminal activity in this country. It provides for the minister of manpower and immigration to make a deportation order against any person—other than a Canadian citizen, a permanent resident of Canada, in other words, a landed immigrant—who, in the opinion of the minister, is likely to engage in violent criminal activity if admitted to Canada.

As some hon. members already know, this bill was prepared primarily to enable my department to deal more effectively with potential threats related to the forthcoming Olympic Games in 1976. At present, I am empowered under the Immigration Act to order deportation of such dangerous people if they are detected while within Canada as visitors. I say that to illustrate that in effect there is no change in principle inherent in the proposal in the bill today. That principle has been long established in Canadian immigration law.

However, there is the rather alarming and peculiar situation that I have no equivalent power to deal with such people at ports of entry. Dangerous aliens detected at ports of entry cannot summarily be refused admission but must be dealt with in accordance with normal deportation proceedings, including a formal inquiry at which evidentiary requirements must be met. This is known usually as a special inquiry. This is the nub of my problem. In the case of suspected terrorists—if I may use that expression, although we have accommodated one party with a revision in the draft bill—it is often impossible to meet such evidentiary requirements since the information available to me and my department is obtained from sensitive or protected sources which, frankly, cannot be revealed at an inquiry hearing.

In addition, not all those who pose a threat are covered by the existing prohibitions of the Immigration Act. Persons who might engage in violent activity directed against democratic states or governments are quite clearly prohibited, but there is no clear prohibition against the admission of persons intending to carry out such acts against representatives of governments other than democratic governments or even against individuals without political motivation.

I intend to be very brief in my elaboration on the reasons for bringing this measure in, and I will be glad to answer questions when we get to the report stage. As I have indicated, this measure will be temporary in nature, with the expiry clearly indicated to take place at the end of 1976. There are two reasons for that date. As I have indicated, one is that we are concerned primarily about threats relating to the forthcoming Olympics and possibly at the Habitat conference which takes place a little later. The second reason is that I will be presenting a major bill to the House during 1976 which will propose new immigration legislation. At that time the House will have the opportunity for a full debate on all aspects of immigration, including the types of people whose admission to Canada will be prohibited.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Before I sit down I want to clarify one point which I think is very important. I have seen some allusions in the press which are incorrect. This bill does not in any way abrogate appeal rights as they now exist in the immigration Appeal Board. This bill is applicable to visitors to Canada, it does not affect landed immigrants, and in no way affects Canadian citizens who are either naturalized or native born. It will apply only to those people who come to Canada temporarily as visitors. Even in that case there is one class of visitor who will still retain appeal rights even in face of this power I am asking for today, and that is the visitor who was screened abroad and received a non-immigrant visa before coming to Canada. In that case, I would still have the power to order deportation but the right of appeal would be there. In current practice this amounts to about one-tenth of 1 per cent of visitors to Canada. There are about 40 million visitors annually, plus the additional visitors we think we will have for the Olympics.

Only those coming from certain countries are now subject to previous screening under visa requirements. I want to establish that no appeal rights are affected in any way by the provisions of this bill. This bill simply gives me the power to turn people away at the border where we have, in my opinion, satisfactory evidence of the dangers they might present to this country. As I have said, this bill expires on December 31, 1976. When we come to the committee of the whole House, I will be glad to respond to questions which may arise.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-85 I first should like to thank the minister for the manner in which he approached representatives of the opposition with regard to this bill. Discussions have taken place as to how the bill should be introduced. The minister has been very candid as to the provisions of the bill. When we called them, his officials and staff were more than helpful in explaining the purpose and the provisions of the bill. I should like to thank the minister and his officials for that co-operation.

I suppose there is a natural hesitancy on the part of many hon. members to give what might almost appear to be blanket approval to any legislation which is introduced in the House of Commons, especially legislation which would increase the discretionary power of any individual, in this case the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras). However, I appreciate his assurances relating to the appeal procedure and that it has not been abrogated in any way. On that basis we have given assurances in private that we will allow speedy passage of Bill C-85.

One need only look at the events surrounding the October crisis of 1970 and the use of the War Measures Act to feel somewhat uneasy about giving speedy passage to this bill. But notwithstanding that, it is my view and the view of my party that it is incumbent on all of us to co-operate in every way with the government to enable our security officials in the RCMP, in the Department of Manpower and Immigration and in the armed forces to prevent an incident such as that which occurred in Munich during the 1972 Olympics.

At the present time the deportation procedures are fairly clear. One procedure is the special inquiry whereby a special inquiry officer presents evidence at a hearing which would then affect whether a deportation order would be served. The second procedure is possibly more obscure. A minister can also make a deportation order. That is outlined in section 7 (4) and (5) of the Immigration Act. However, in that case a person must physically be in Canada and must be, in the opinion of the minister, a person who, as outlined in section 18, violates the Immigration Act.

Madam Speaker, under present conditions, where there are grounds for suspicion that someone at a port of entry might be a member of an international terrorist organization, it appears this is hardly a case to be presented at a special inquiry and it is to cover such cases that Bill C-85 is before us.

This year two international events will turn the eyes of the world to Canada: the United Nations Habitat conference to be held in Vancouver in June, and the summer Olympics to be held in Montreal in July. With these in mind, this party gives approval to Bill C-85 notwithstanding some of the caveats I have placed before the House. Personally, I should have liked to see the expiry date changed from December 31, 1976, to July 31 or the end of August. Those of us who sat many long hours on the joint committee to study immigration policy—I know some of us have not recovered from that exercise yet, and probably never will—are anxiously awaiting the new Immigration Act which we hope will reflect some of the recommendations of the committee. Meanwhile, we accept the minister's explanation for the December 31 date.

I was gratified and immensely relieved when the winter Olympics at Innsbruck, Austria, concluded recently without any terrorist incidents. Those of us who watched television could tell there was a lot of security evident, but nothing happened such as happened in Munich in 1972. I hope the spirit that was evident at Innsbruck will prevail in Montreal in 1976. We all know that international terrorists can strike anywhere with lightning speed. With international jet travel it can happen in the Netherlands, Vienna, the Philippines or, for that matter, in North America. Any attempt to prevent incidents such as have been experienced in the past has the support of this party.

One thing that concerns me deeply is the tremendous outlay of funds and manpower on the summer Olympics of 1976. In the two-week period of the Olympics we will spend more on security than has been spent on physical fitness or amateur sport in a year. Maybe that is an indictment of our society. It is obviously not the fault of the minister, and I am not trying to suggest that. However, it is a sobering thought and a terrible testimony to the society in which we live in 1976. Possibly we on this side of the House differ from the government about the cost of the Olympics and the benefits that may accrue to Canadians generally. Many of us are resolved that the Prime Minister's statement that Canadian taxpayers generally will not be asked to pay for any deficit incurred will be adhered to.

Despite the differences that there may be, despite the construction delays, strikes and the clouds that have surrounded the Olympics, I believe we are all agreed that every precaution must be taken and no effort spared to prevent an incident such as that which occurred at the 1972 Olympics in Munich. If this bill in some small measure can assure that prevention, it has our support. While many of us might have reservations about the discretionary powers that the bill embodies, we nevertheless pledge our support and will see that it receives speedy passage.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Madam Speaker, we are also anxious to expedite passage of this bill. We appreciate that there will be a large number of visitors coming to Canada this year to see the Olympic Games and for other purposes. On the basis of experience there is real danger, in such circumstances, of acts of violence. We agree that whatever is possible should be done by our security forces and by the law to enable the government to deal with these threats and to ensure that as far as possible no disorders occur. We believe the provisions of the present Immigration Act dealing with this matter are entirely inadequate.

Included in the prohibited classes under the present act are people who committed crimes or admit having committed crimes, people who are members of so-called subversive organizations or who are supposed to be involved in sabotage or activities detrimental to the security of Canada. These provisions were drafted a good many years ago, however, and are quite unsatisfactory now. The definitions are vague and in some cases virtually meaningless. There are gaps which make them quite inappropriate to present conditions.

The joint committee on immigration has recommended changes to these sections. We would therefore have preferred that the Immigration Act itself be amended on a permanent basis to take care of the new order of things in which it seems there are groups of people in different parts of the world anxious to secure their political ends and to attract attention to their political causes by acts of violence, hijacking and other forms of terrorism. However, we are persuaded by the minister that there is a necessity for speed, and we have been impressed by the fact that the minister has made it clear that the Immigration Act is to be revised and comprehensive legislation introduced before the end of the year. Notwithstanding that, it is necessary to deal with the special sections of this legislation because of the Olympics situation and the unusual circumstances.

When we had the opportunity to see the earlier draft of this bill, we had two objections. One was the word "terrorist" which was used to define the persons liable to be deported under the act. We thought this was too vague. However, the government has seen fit to expand the definition and we are perfectly satisfied with the new version which refers to acts of violence which would, or might endanger the lives or safety of persons in Canada. We appreciate the minister's action in this respect.

The other objection, however, remains. The present wording confers on the minister and, what is more important, in effect his officials, the right to deport on the basis of purely subjective judgments, without review or appeal. I say it confers this power on the officials because there will be perhaps thousands of cases and the minister cannot deal with all of them himself. We do not think this is necessary, and we will move an amendment to add after the words "in his opinion" the words "on reasonable grounds". It would still remain basically the minister's judgment as to whether a person should be deported, and we doubt very much whether, with the amendment we propose, the courts would be disposed to interfere. We think it wrong that the minister and his officials should have the unfettered discretion to order deportation. We think it wrong that even in clear cases, for example, of mistaken identity the right of the court to intervene should be entirely removed.

● (1600)

Many hundreds of thousands of people come to this country as visitors and it is often said that they have no rights. We repudiate this theory. Of course they have no rights except those given to them by parliament and this country. If we choose to confer on those who come to Canada for the Olympic Games or other purposes the right to question the objective opinions of the minister or his officials, we shall, in that sense, give them rights and in that sense they have rights and deserve consideration. We believe it would be well for us, in our laws dealing with visitors to this country, to continue to show respect for the judicial process, individual rights and human dignity.

We have included in the proposed amendment a new subsection which would protect, as the minister says, against disclosure of information prejudicial to the security of Canada. I understand that there is general agreement for this bill to be dealt with promptly. We do not intend to make our contribution lengthy on second reading or in committee. We hope to see the bill passed promptly but believe it would be much improved by the amendment we suggest.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak briefly on this bill which, although not long, is significant. I listened carefully to the minister's introductory remarks and reasons for introducing this bill. Let me say here and now that I concur with the remarks of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). This bill has been introduced to cope with security difficulties. Soon, two major events are to take place in this country and acts of terrorism might be anticipated. On the whole, the minister's arguments did not convince me, but I will not go into detail. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood addresses itself to the problem of security. If necessary, I shall be happy to speak on the amendment later at greater length.

Proposals for dealing with visitors to this country who may contravene our laws, without reasons being given for the actions taken, are dangerous. Such legislation would constitute a dangerous precedent which we should not accept lightly.

I realize that the reasons for this legislation are of the utmost importance. Nevertheless, despite the most strenuous security precautions, as the hon. member for Provencher said, one cannot be certain that acts of violence will not occur at either of the two major international events which will take place in this country. I call as my witness the events of the last decade and a half. We have seen the assassination of a president, of a president's brother, and of other outstanding citizens despite stringent security precautions. In the final analysis, there is little one can do to prevent the most tragic, the most diabolical of incidents occurring.

Therefore, even though we will give this legislation speedy passage, we shall not ensure that which the minister seeks when asking for approval of this bill. The minister suggested that this bill, a most illiberal measure in parts, is to be temporary. We know only too well how this government's temporary measures tend to become permanent. It gives me little pleasure to say that this government's track record in keeping so-called short-term, temporary measures short term and temporary is not good. The public order bill passed in the latter part of 1970 was to be a short-term measure. Yet shortly after it was rooted there was almost universal rejection of its principles which were not acceptable to those concerned about civil liberties in this country.

Because of the public outcry against that legislation, the government so far has not introduced what it called a permanent replacement for the War Measures Act. However, it introduced the temporary public order bill. Frankly, I am worried about this short-term measure. It is not that I do not trust the present minister; I have the greatest respect for him. All the same, I think it unwise to give any minister a blank cheque, which is exactly what this legislation asks of us.

The minister assured the House that this legislation will not abrogate normal appeal procedures. That is an important assurance, confirmed by the third paragraph of the bill. I remind the minister, it is one thing to maintain appeal procedures but quite another to deny evidence and material which is necessary if the appeal procedure is to work fairly. Therefore, the minister's assurance is not plausible. I say this with the greatest respect. The assurance cannot be effective if the most vital ingredient of all, the evidence on which the deportation order is based, cannot be made available to the individual involved.

I am as anxious as anyone to give the minister full opportunity to deal with potential or actual acts of violence or terrorism. We hope such acts will not occur in our two forthcoming major international events. Of course, we must consider this kind of legislation in its correct perspective. When people remember what happened at the Munich games, at the international conference of oil ministers, and to other athletes who were either kidnapped or murdered there is a terrible tendency for them to think that we can prevent a repetition of these tragic events by suspending the normal workings of the immigration process or the process governing the movement of individuals across our national borders. The danger is that we shall take the simplistic view and legislate against that which has already happened.

I know that officials may have convinced the minister he needs this authority. I would urge all members to take into account the significance of what the minister said in connection with this legislation. Perhaps later this year, when we are dealing with the permanent legislation which is to be presented to us, we could be given a detailed report telling us how important this legislative provision really was. Indeed, we might receive a report from others, not just from the minister, so that we shall not too easily be led into passing legislative measures similar to this one which I think would not be in the best interests of the country and which would certainly not provide the rights which individuals have come to expect from Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Morin in the chair.

On clause 2—Minister may make deportation order.

Mr. Brewin: Madam Chairman, I move:

That the Temporary Immigration Security Act, clause 2, be amended by adding after the words in line 10 "in his opinion", the words "on reasonable grounds" and that subclause (2) be added as follows:

"Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require the production before any court of tribunal of any sources of information whose disclosure the minister certifies would be prejudicial to the security of Canada."

I have already sought to explain the reason for this amendment. It is to introduce into this process something of a judicial nature so that the discretion of the minister or of his officials will not be absolute. I appreciate the danger which may exist if some of the information secured by the minister came from confidential security sources whose disclosure would be damaging or prejudicial to the security of the state. That is the reason for subclause (2).

I merely want to add that when one is thinking in terms of perhaps a million visitors—I do not know the exact figure; certainly it is likely to be hundreds of thousands—it is of the utmost importance to Canada's international relationships and friendships that the rest of the world should have an opportunity to see our judicial process in action. I am sure all members will agree we should do our best to prevent any possibility of arbitrary action. I do not accuse the minister of being disposed to arbitrary action in any way and, indeed, I have some respect for our immigration officials, but I do know that mistakes can be made, that prejudice can exist and that things can be done that should not be done. This is why I have moved the amendment which has just been read to the House.

Mr. Epp: Madam Chairman, I have a word or two with respect to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood. I should state from the outset that it has our support. This matter was of concern to us earlier in our discussions with the minister. The minister felt he would be placed in an untenable position if we simply added the words "on reasonable grounds", but I believe the subclause referred to by the hon. member for Greenwood takes care of this objection and that the powers of the bill will remain. Reasons must now be given, but a person to be expelled or deported does not have the right to a hearing by a tribunal.

Mr. Andras: Since the question raised by the hon. member for Provencher pertains, in the main, to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood, perhaps I could respond to both hon. members and also take an opportunity to deal with other comments made on second reading. I might say they relate to concerns which I share. The hon. member for Greenwood, if I understood him correctly, indicated that there might be thousands of cases. Frankly, we anticipate that this power would rarely be used. I hope to goodness it will be rarely necessary to use it: I say this because of reasons for it. I can tell hon. members, from where I have sat as minister of immigration for some three years, that there is no question in my mind as to the need for this provision. I speak in terms of the current situation, and I shall obviously not deal with that aspect in detail. We need this provision now.

The hon. member for Egmont expressed concern about the implications of such an amendment in the long term. I simply say to him that to extend the period for which provision is now being made would require further legislation. As I have said, there will be an opportunity when a significant and, I hope, profound immigration bill is placed before the House, to deal with this kind of question and other aspects of security as related to immigration in the wider context of a more general debate. The bill before us is not, by its nature, a permanent one. Of course, its very existence opens up debate on these issues, but there is no way in which it could be extended beyond the envisaged date in the absence of parliamentary approval.

Of course, action of this kind brings no surety that we can avoid violence or problems of a security nature at the Olympics or elsewhere. But with my awareness of the situation, one which I have shared with hon. members even during the course of this brief debate, I believe this is a reasonable measure to take and I would certainly not want to stand before Canada eight or ten months from now without having taken the action I am proposing. Nor do I think any other hon. member would wish to share the ignominy of having neglected to take that measure, recognizing full well that we cannot plug every hole or apprehend every person who might be a danger to us. The bill is not a blank cheque. I say this in the sense that it does not extend powers which I do not already possess. I already have the power to remove a person who has been admitted to Canada, but there is a weakness in the act which in the past, I suppose, we really did not realize existed. I suppose we were not alerted to the new wave of terrorism and violent acts that have already been alluded to by hon. members in their comments, but the impending Olympics did alert us to the fact that there is a soft spot in the act.

I already have the power, Madam Chairman, arbitrarily at my discretion, to deport persons after they have been admitted to Canada. As the act now reads, at the border, at the port of entry, it requires our officers, who would not be in possession of this evidence for reasons already placed before you, to admit in the absence of a reason not to. So I would be in the silly position of having to let a person in and then having to trump up or find a reason later to apprehend him and turn him around. But I can do that now without appeal, so there is no change whatever in the appeal structure.

This power, which bothers all of us—this question of arbitrariness—already exists in another form, too, in our immigration law, and that is in the application of section 21 of the act. Even where the appeal right does exist, as it does now for landed immigrants, for refugees, for Canadian citizens where there is a doubt about their papers or the validity of their claim to citizenship, and for non-immigrants with a visa, we can and still do—and unfortunately have had to in some 40 cases in the last eight or nine years—submit to the Immigration Appeal Board what we call a section 21 certificate, which in fact is a guillotine on the use of the Immigration Appeal Board's compassionate and humanitarian jurisdiction. It is based totally on a statement by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, with the co-operation and collaboration of the Solicitor General, that evidence available to us of a security and intelligence nature indicates that this person should not be granted that compassionate jurisdiction because of a threat to the security—criminal, subversive or terrorist—of the state.

As I say, Madam Chairman, the principle really has been established. One can argue that it is Draconian, but it exists in almost every state in the world that I know of. In Britain the Home Secretary has more Draconian powers than those I am asking for here. The same applies in the United States, I believe in Sweden, and I think in all countries that we are inclined to agree fit into our pattern of democratic, civil libertarian traditions. We are certainly not stretching beyond that.

The appeal right where it exists, and we are not changing anything there, of course, would be more in the sense of identification. Is this the person to whom my evidence or my decision applies? That already exists in the Immigration Appeal Board so we are not changing anything there. Already visitors can be deported or prevented from coming in where there are other reasons to refuse them, without appeal rights, so it is not a question of access to identification. That is the Immigration Appeal Board Act argument which again we will have the opportunity of dealing with when the main bill is before the House.

Coming now directly and specifically to the amendment that has been placed before us by the hon. member for Greenwood, we had a pretty fair discussion about this, as indeed I had with members of the official opposition and others, and I really did search my soul to see if we could accept this amendment. I am not a lawyer, but I have been advised—

Mr. Epp: Good for you.

Mr. Andras: I say that with respect to the many in the House who are. However, I have sought independent confirmation of the advice given me by the law offices of the Crown, because it was a legal debate, as I recall in our private discussions, as to where the words "on reasonable grounds" would fit, what they actually did in the end. I regret to say that I only saw the amendment itself in the last few minutes when the hon. member for Greenwood tabled it. I have looked at it to see if the additional subclause would in fact relieve me of the difficulty that the additional words "on reasonable grounds" would have placed me in, and I regret to say that I do not think I can accommodate him. It will, of course, be for the will of the House, but I must oppose it. First, with regard to "on reasonable grounds", that seems like a very fair expression. But the very nature of my dilemma is that I cannot produce that evidence, those reasonable grounds, in a court or before a special inquiry. It is the nature of the source and type of information that I have; this is where the dilemma lies.

[Mr. Andras.]

I am told by the legally trained people that there is an implied requirement for the minister and for the Crown to act in a responsible manner. If there were an overt abrogation of that, with or without the words "on reasonable grounds" in the amendment there is some recourse, and I presume there is the general constitutional, Bill of Rights approach to it. That is implied. I think it has been accepted by the courts that a minister, given that kind of power, must in fact use it honourably, or sooner or later, through public opinion, etc., he and the government are going to get it in the neck.

Unfortunately, I think the subclause (2) proposed in the amendment, which has been designed, I know very sincerely, to relieve me of the problem I have described—that is, of producing the evidence—is itself a contradiction. If, on the one hand, there are reasonable grounds, which is assumed anyway, that on their own would require deportation, how are you going to establish that? I cannot produce the evidence before anybody, for reasons which I have described. The amendment goes on to say:

> Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require the production before any court or tribunal of the sources of information whose disclosure the minister certifies will be prejudicial to the security of Canada.

With respect, I think that is meaningless. The hon. member is saying you have to establish reasonable grounds and then is saying, "Don't produce any evidence". There are reasonable grounds and I cannot produce the evidence. That is the nature of the evidence that I have. So I think the amendment is a little off base there. There is a more precise and narrow limitation to the amendment, I think, had I been able to accept it, or if the House were able to accept it—which I hope will not be the case—which is a little bothersome too. The amendment makes reference to "prejudicial to the security of Canada". There are incidents or situations, I hope hypothetical and which I tried to describe in my opening comments on second reading, which I suppose would be indirectly prejudicial to the security of Canada. But we could have dangerous people motivated to attack individuals in this country which might not necessarily endanger the security of Canada. One questions whether the events at Munich, as reprehensible and tragic as they were, endangered the security of West Germany.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not in total, but surely partially.

Mr. Andras: I agree. As I say, if I could find my way to accept the general intent of the amendment, I would suggest that that wording "prejudicial to the security of Canada" be tidied up a little.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, "security in Canada", not "of Canada".

Mr. Andras: The amendment I have reads, "security of Canada". Anyway, by virtue of my argument I regret I cannot accept the amendment, and I therefore look to the House to join me in my views and not vote for the amendment. When we come to the measures that we will be proposing in the new main immigration legislation, I shall very much value the points that have been made and I shall see what I can do. We shall have the opportunity of considering alternatives to this temporary bill.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Before recognizing the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich I should like to put the amendment to the House. It is moved by the hon. member for Greenwood—

—that the Temporary Immigration Security Act, clause 2, be amended by adding after the words in line 10 thereof, "in his opinion", the words, "on reasonable grounds"; and that a subsection (2) be added as follows:

"Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require the production before any court or tribunal of the sources of information whose disclosure the minister certifies will be prejudicial to the security of Canada."

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Chairman, I should like to say a few words in the general context of this amendment. Bearing in mind that deportation has a long-term effect on the individual concerned, it would mean that the person would never again have the chance to apply for admission to Canada, unless of course the minister gave his approval. I am wondering if this "reasonable grounds" notion that has been put forward in the amendment might not be a safeguard against an unintended misuse of the statutory discretion that is given the minister now, under this particular bill, to deport a person. If there were a mistake made—and one could be made, with all the best intentions in the world, on the part of the minister—and an individual were deported but a year later sought admission to this country, how could that person again get in?

● (1630)

Mr. Andras: Madam Chairman, any person deported cannot enter the country again without the consent of the minister. I can tell you from practice that from time to time, where a person has been deported, a deportation order executed and the person removed, and circumstances have changed and an appeal has been made to me or my predecessor—this goes back perhaps to the days when Ellen Fairclough was sitting here, so I am not talking about parties—the minister has the power to admit that person who had been deported. Indeed, in some cases people who have been deported have applied for landed immigrant status and have been granted such because of rehabilitation or other reasons. These are individual cases, and one has to examine the facts.

The fact is that visitors in the category to which this bill will apply do not now have appeal rights. This contemplates no change whatsoever in the appeal system. It does not add or subtract from the category of people who have the right to appeal to the board or the courts. It makes no change there at all. There is no change to the principles that already have been established, as I indicated earlier, under which I can summarily deport such people from the country. What I cannot do is stop them at the border. The bill extends that power so I can do this at the border.

I do not want to go into too much detail, for rather obvious reasons, but I have experienced situations where time is of the essence. I assure hon. members, with every degree of sincerity I can muster here, without going into too much detail, that time is of the essence in some of these situations. It is not good enough, if we believe in the power that is already in the act under which I can deport visitors who are dangerous, to do it after the fact rather than before. That is what we are asking for here.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Madam Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) on a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: Would it be possible to know whether we on this side of the House can be recognized at the same rate as the other side of the House, Madam Chairman? I have been rising for about four or five minutes.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Government members will be recognized at the same rate as members sitting on the other side of the House. For the time being I recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Chairman, I will be very brief. However, I wonder whether the minister is not influenced by the general attitude in his department.

[English]

What I am saying is that this almost becomes an occupational hazard in the department and that practically any information is withheld even from the people concerned. If it becomes a matter of health or some physical disability that is discovered on examination, the whole blessed rigmarole has to be gone through again, with doctors consulting doctors; but the person involved cannot be advised. If it is a matter of assigning points, and so forth and so on, that again is not disclosed. It formerly was disclosed, but this immigration process has gone into a shell, which I submit is totally wrong.

There should be a fairness in this matter. I know the minister takes the view that this sounds to be fair. With the greatest respect, this has coloured the minister's reaction to what I think is a very legitimate proposition by the hon. member for Greenwood. Perhaps the language of his amendment might be more felicitous in respect of one or two points which might take away from the difficulties the minister foresees, but surely to goodness it is fair.

We are dealing with a very tough thing. We saw the excesses of October, 1970. There is a tendency here, when dealing administratively, nicely and neatly, to overreact. The minister admits he is not a lawyer. The giving of reasons is not giving of the evidence; that is the point I want to make. The minister does not have to disclose the source of information or the nature of the danger a person involved poses to security in Canada—not security "of" Canada, security "in" Canada. This covers Canadians and visitors here under the umbrella of security. I would not expect the minister to disclose the evidence.

The proviso introduced by the hon. member for Greenwood is correct because it leaves to the minister the discretion he desires in relation to a duly signed certificate under which the minister exercises his responsibility. It would not be in the public interest to disclose the information or the source of that information, but surely that is all that can be expected. The individual and the public surely must, and should, know that an individual has been deported or barred from Canada because his presence here could pose a threat to security in Canada. That is a reasonable suggestion and I find the reasoning of the minister somewhat difficult to understand.

There was another point I wanted to cover, but it has slipped my mind for the moment. Perhaps it will come back to me later. In the meantime, I will yield the floor to other hon. members who want, and have, the right to speak on this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: The minister said there was no doubt in his mind that the powers Bill C-85 gives him were absolutely necessary to fight possible abuses that could occur during the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal if known terrorists had access to the olympic site, for example, via the US-Canada border which is relatively easy to cross.

My question is as follows. First, since this bill is meant to cover the 1976 Olympic Games and to protect both athletes and Canadians in 1976 why—and it would seem the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) knows the answer but we on this side do not—why is the expiry date of Bill C-85 December 31, 1976 rather than the actual end of the Olympics? I do not know that date. Will it be in late July or early August? And second, does the minister consider—he did not say in his remarks—that the powers granted under Bill C-85 could be included in the new version of the Immigration Act that should be before the House at the end of the year—a revised and corrected version, of course, and hopefully with sophisticated powers? Furthermore, is consideration being given to including those powers in the future Immigration Act because I consider it to be necessary for the protection of Canadian citizens to control arbitrarily the entry into Canada of terrorists or other undesirable aliens?

● (1640)

[English]

Mr. Andras: Madam Chairman, I think earlier I indicated the answer to that question. I believe the hon. member has in his final comments indicated the reasons. This weakness in the act, if it is a weakness—and of course we were stimulated by our concern about the Olympics particularly and primarily, and Habitat, as well as some other events scheduled for this year—is because we wanted to bridge that period until such time as this House could deal permanently with the matter.

This is emergency legislation, but we have made the commitment—and I feel very definitely that the commitment will be met—that we will be placing before this forum the more profound immigration bill and new policies which are being developed now. Unquestionably, this area of concern will have to be dealt with. I want the House to have the opportunity to deal with it in a broader context than this particular situation permits, or the time or emergency permits, and indeed I want to bridge that period but with a definite expiry date which is December 31, 1976. With this time-frame and these conditions and events, we had in mind the setting of the date. We looked at 60 days, or even precisely the end of the Olympics. We felt we needed a clean-up period and thought it would be wise to provide for the other bill to come in, at which time the matter in broader context than this will be placed before the House.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with what I think is at the heart of the minister's objection to placing in this particular legislative provision some protection against abuse. At one point in his speech the minister, in speaking to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood, said his problem was that he cannot in this current situation reveal either the nature, the source or the type of information he would have with regard to the possible exercise of this provision. I think that is at the heart of what we are trying to deal with this afternoon. The minister stated this as being the prime reason for requesting these Draconian powers.

I think he is assuming something all members of the House are supposed to assume, which is that indeed the sources and the information in themselves would be impeccable. I think this is what disturbs many members and quite a few people in the country. We know only too well that what is being dealt with often by way of information that would come to the minister is not in fact information that would come from convictions, from events that would be well known and for which individuals would have been convicted in their own country. We are not, I expect, in effect dealing with people who are so well known to the police authorities that it would be obvious they are people who should not be admitted to our country.

What we will be dealing with, and what I suspect the minister is dealing with in the way of privileged information given to him by his officials, is in the nature of dossiers, information and reports acquired not only by police officials but by various kinds of informers in other countries. It is not necessary to mention the countries from which this information comes.

We know that in many instances the information that is relayed is information as much of a political nature as of a criminal nature. This is what makes the exercise of this act so difficult. We are being asked to give the minister power in respect of information which can, and frankly will, be coloured by the nature of political opinions and political authorities in a host of different countries. The minister receives this information, often filtered as well by those who exercise positions of responsibility, particularly in situations where there may be a considerable amount of political turmoil in their country, which suggests to the minister that certain people are not appropriate to be admitted to this country and could in fact endanger the lives of others.

Of course, the minister will have to take his responsibility. No one, certainly not myself, would deny him the full ability to take that responsibility. What concerns many of us, I believe, is the very fact that the minister feels there might be a certain endangering of our citizens in making this information public—I know he must be very concerned about this—and that he could on occasion in fact not only be poorly advised but could be given information which could be, in effect, largely untrue.

In trying to deal with this legislation, I attempted to see whether there was no other way to get around this problem. I had hoped that the minister's consultations with the law officers of the Crown, and independent legal advice, would have indicated that he had some safeguards for these difficulties. He might have suggested, perhaps in place of the recommendation of the hon. member for Greenwood, that the responsibility might be shared for this brief period by someone who has full knowledge of the immigration laws of this country and great responsibility for them. In this case I think of the chairman of the Immigration Appeal Board. In that way at least there would be one additional safeguard.

Quite frankly, this is the part of the legislative initiative which concerns me most. I have seen certain aspects of this over the past few months in respect of communications being transmitted. Let us take, for instance, Interpol. It is well known that Interpol has received a good deal of criticism in recent months, particularly in the United States where there have been certain congressional investigations. Because Interpol is not a public but is, rather, a private police agency it can, in effect, be used by those who would not have the best interests either of their country or a number of individuals at heart.

That is why I am not at all happy with the provisions being requested by the minister. There are no safeguards whereby Canadians can be assured that the minister will not make decisions on the basis of information which is heavily politically coloured and may therefore, in effect, deprive individuals of rights which they would normally expect to receive from this country. I know the nature of the problem here is most serious and requires the responsibility of all members of this House, but without some kind of assurance concerning safeguards I am not happy to leave the bill in its present state. I hope the minister, with his officials, will find some acceptable compromise which would give the assurance which I think members on all sides of the House seek.

Mr. Brewin: Madam Chairman, if we had unlimited time I would find it very interesting to discuss with the minister some of the legal opinions he seems to have received from the law officers of the Crown which I find mystifying in the extreme from my experience as a lawyer. I shall confine myself to considering, with the hon. member for Edmonton West, some of the real points which exist here. There is a distinction that has been drawn between evidence, certainly the substance of evidence, and the reasons for taking an action which could be disclosed in many cases without revelation of the confidential sources. The minister has a perfect right in those cases, under the amendment we propose, to file a certificate in respect of the security of Canada.

● (1650)

There was a very clear illustration of this on an even graver matter, and that was the internment of people during the war who were suspected of being close to one of the powers we were fighting against. Originally, under the defence of Canada regulations, when many people were interned nothing whatever was disclosed as to the reasons. The minister was not required to say a word. But a tribunal was set up which was given the power to require the minister or his officials to give general particulars without giving details of names or sources. This was done and it worked perfectly well. That is the procedure which I think would be highly appropriate in this particular situation. It is not every fact that comes under the provisions of subclause (2), not everything that affects security. There may be the most open evidence of certain acts of violence which have nothing to do with confidential sources. Why, in those cases, should there not be disclosure?

There are other matters which I would rather like to discuss with the minister, but in view of our undertaking to be brief I will not pursue them at this stage. I am glad he thinks the debate has been useful. Certainly when we get on to permanent legislation we may have to debate this matter at greater length and with greater care than we have today, when the circumstances require us to act quickly.

Mr. Andras: Madam Chairman, I am attempting to resist the temptation to rise again because, as we have all indicated privately and publicly, we have time problems. I will simply say this. The hon. member for Egmont has put his finger on the problem. I do not think he has resolved it. I am trying to. We already have the situation in section 21, and it is more Draconian there if one accepts that a landed immigrant has acquired more rights by far than a temporary visitor to this country with whom this act deals. I totally accept the necessity to take my responsibility under section 21. Believe me, both he and I have been through this on a few occasions and have looked very carefully at that evidence.

With respect to the point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West, the possibility exists that you do get influenced by your officials, and indeed my concern is that the train of events can lead to that. I am totally conscious of that. I will say this much, that when we come to the immigration bill I will have some ideas which we are exploring now. Unfortunately, time does not permit their association with this quick job which I have to do because of the Olympics coming up. We are exploring avenues and mechanisms by which to lessen the confidentiality aspect of sources of information and yet try to get an independent view of the judgment which must be applied to that information. I am totally conscious of that and I have some ideas which I am discussing with my colleagues. I assume they will surface when we present the package to the House.

Some hon. Members: Bring on the package.

Mr. Andras: I respected the admonition of the joint committee that I not develop policies in the back room and then spring them on the people of this country. That is the reason we have this time lag to a degree. As the hon. member for Greenwood has indicated, I will welcome a debate at greater length on the permanent legislation. I am quite sure it will be a more detailed debate, with more concrete proposals to try to resolve to some degree this dilemma of the confidentiality of this kind of information, and therefore evidence that I can present now because these matters are all interrelated.

There are many versions of what that mechanism could be and how it could work. I do not have the final version in my mind, frankly, although I have definite ideas. I am in a position to say that that debate, on the permanent legislation, will come later. Regrettably, I cannot become enthusiastic about the proposals in the amendment because if I were asked by a court for reasonable grounds, and then said to the court that I was not required to produce evidence, they could say, "Therefore we will reverse the deportation order." I would be in a real jam then.

As to the comments made by the hon. member for Edmonton West, he is right. I worry sometimes about confidentiality throughout the whole government on some occasions when we are a little cautious. But the particular case of certificates under section 21 and what I am proposing here is quite different from the matter of how many points a person has accumulated. I am open to see how we can open that area of information more, but I know that this one must be kept confidential although I do want to find some cushion of independent examination which can help me make those kinds of decisions without the concern I have often felt when I have been looking at these files in the middle of the night and have had to make a decision rather quickly as a lonely person, and I know that my colleague has felt the same way. I have some ideas on that question but I cannot put them in place at this time; they will have to await the major legislation.

Amendment (Mr. Brewin) negatived: Yeas, 26; nays, 32.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—National Defence—Reason for delay in starting search for missing fishermen—Possible reassessment of search and rescue capability; the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—Regional Economic Expansion—Liaison with Manpower in reporting job opportunities in companies funded by department; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Transport—Possible discussions on use of Manhattan to move oil through northern waters.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has been agreed that for private members' business we will proceed to private bills and to Bill S-30 which stands on the order paper for Thursday, February 26, at page 13.

Mr. Speaker: Is it understood and agreed that the House will proceed to the consideration of Bill S-30?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I understand, however, that there are some procedural arguments to be put forward in respect to the consideration of that bill.

[Mr. Andras.]

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-30, to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: There are a number of motions placed on the order paper at the report stage the first of which is in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I may use a phrase our new leader used yesterday, "Here we go." That is so because at this point I suggest that all the motions appearing in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) are out of order in the place in which they are positioned. If one consults our Standing Orders, chapter III of Standing Order 75, and bears in mind that the order paper posts these private bills under Standing Order 75 and then gives notice that there are motions under Standing Order 75, I suggest first that that is an abuse of language. All the rules under chapter XIII come under the heading of proceedings on public bills.

Then chapter XVIII appears at page 91 of our Standing Orders, and it deals with private bills. Chapter XVIII specifically states that any bill dealing with incorporation of a bank shall be a private bill, and the reason private bills dealing with the incorporation of banks or dealing with insurance companies go to the Senate first is the difficulty of incorporating them in this House, or proceeding with them in this House and getting them before this House for consideration. There used to be so many private bills here with regard to divorces which were dealt with in this chamber, that a private bill to incorporate a bank just could not be considered. So the procedure always was in reverse.

I suggest that the chaptering, paging and numbering of our Standing Orders has meaning and relevance. I think it is quite wrong to consider a bill which comes down the route from the other place, a private bill sponsored in this House, coming through the private members' channels, being considered in committee, coming back and then suddenly appearing under provisions which deal with public bills. I suggest that that is wrong. There is Standing Order 75(5) under which we are alleged to be working with the amendments put forward by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge. The procedure at this moment under which Your Honour is proceeding is 75(8), but of equal import is Standing Order 109, which is found in chapter XVIII, and I cite it as follows:

> No important amendment may be proposed to any private bill in the House unless one day's notice of the same has been given.

I agree that the hon. member has conformed to notice, but under a heading dealing with public bills and rules of procedure purporting to deal with public bills. I remember the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) many years ago, when a bill was coming down the pipe from the Senate and there was an amendment suggested which went to the heart of the bill, quite successfully utilizing what is now Standing Order 109 in order to block the amendment, as he quite properly was entitled to do. This is quite a meaningful amendment, but Standing Order 109 says that no important amendment may be proposed to any private bill in the House unless one day's notice of the same has been given. I also draw to the attention of the House Standing Order 116 which provides:

Except as herein otherwise provided, the Standing Orders relating to public bills shall apply to private bills.

However, our Standing Orders do apply with regard to amendments to private bills; therefore, Standing Order 116 is exhausted and cannot be used to bring in Standing Order 75(5), which apparently someone thinks is the procedure. What we have before us is a committee report and the motion should be as to the acceptance of that committee report with any rights of debate or amendment, which I do not think exist, at that time for the adoption or the rejection of the report. What the hon. member is trying to do indirectly, he cannot do directly: he is trying to kill the bill.

● (1710)

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He is trying to kill the bill, because his second amendment deletes any reference to provisional directors, which is required under the Bank Act. He moves to delete the whole of clause 2(2) which names by reference the provisional directors and a number of other things. I suggest that the only avenue open to the hon. member is not putting down those amendments, but to vote against the motion to adopt the report, and at a latter stage, at third reading—if we reach that—then the hon. member is limited to third reading amendments and recommitment with a recommendation. Then he can draw up all the amendments he wants.

Mr. Peters: Why do we have report stage, then?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member asks why we have report stage, but he is confusing it with the procedure on public bills. Our rule book has particularly divided chapters, some dealing with public bills and some distinctly with private bills. I ask, why proceed, under public bills, with a private bill? My final argument is that if we are proceeding with a private bill under the public bills section, then the government should adopt the bill because public bills, if they are of this nature, and government bills should appear under government orders, not in the Thursday afternoon slot every second week. This is the point I want to have clarified.

It has been pointed out to me that there have been previous occasions on which a private bill has been proceeded with under the report stage procedure. That was Bill S-7, in February, 1969; and Bill S-6, on February 13, 1969, to which the same hon. member put down an amendment that clause 1 of the said bill be deleted. I recall the incident, Mr. Speaker. It was soon after this new procedure had been adopted. With the greatest respect, the Table and the Chair misled themselves in that the bill in each case was a one-clause bill, as I recall it. One was providing a French name for the Canada Trust Company, and the other concerned its affiliate, the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation. Those amendments were put down in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There was one reason why the amendment should not have been accepted. The amendment was an expanded negative. The alternative was to vote against the bill, because deleting the one and only clause in the bill was, of course, negating the bill. It was an expanded negative and should not have been accepted. I say, with the greatest respect, if this is to be the principal precedent on which this present procedure is founded, then it is extremely thin ice on which to walk. I think it must be established once and for all that there are rules for public bills and rules for private bills. Each must be respected and they must not be confounded. With the greatest respect to all, sir, it is my view that they have been terribly confounded on this particular occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before hearing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I want to be clear that we are not dealing with an argument about the individual motions themselves, which were referred to by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in his presentation, as attempting to do indirectly what the hon. member could not do directly; that is to say, indicating they were in fact negativing the provisions of the bill rather than voting against it.

That may be an argument when the House moves to individual motions, but I take it that is not the point at this moment. The procedure which is being proposed by placing the motions in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) on the order paper pursuant to Standing Order 75(5) is the procedure used in public bills for report stage after consideration by committee. The point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West is that that procedure ought to be followed on public bills and not on private bills.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, even though I disagree with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I appreciate the clear way in which he has stated his case and I appreciate also the fact that he has forced us to consider the very point that Your Honour has now identified. At this point the hon. member for Edmonton West is trying to argue that it is not open to a member of this House to put down report stage amendments to private bills. I disagree with him thoroughly and I thank him for drawing attention to the Standing Orders and citations and precedents—which I think are on my side of the argument rather than his.

As for the argument that Standing Order 75 is in chapter 13 of the book which is headed proceedings on public bills and that therefore you cannot use any of the rules or rights in that chapter on private bills, may I point out there are all kinds of rules all though the book that are not repeated in the chapter on private bills. There is no repetition of the rule about 20-minute speeches, voting procedures or any of those things. They do not need to be repeated. As a matter of fact, I do not think the chapter headings can be used to any great extent at all as to what is meant. The very

Standing Order that the hon. member quoted, namely, Standing Order 116, the last one in the book, it seems to me was put there to answer the very point the hon. member is now raising. It says, in very clear language:

Except as herein otherwise provided, the Standing Orders relating to public bills shall apply to private bills.

If it were not a tradition around here that when you have an argument you develop it and use all the words you can think of, perhaps I should sit down on that point. Standing Order 116 says that the rules of chapter 13 apply.

● (1720)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It says "except as herein otherwise provided."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But there is no provision in the chapter on private bills which says that the rules regarding report stage amendments do not apply to private bills, any more than there is a provision in chapter 18 which says that the rules on 20-minute speeches do not apply. You do not have to repeat all of the rules in every chapter. I suggest it is clear that unless there is a rule somewhere that says there shall be no report stage amendments to private bills, report stage amendments are in order by virtue of Standing Order 116 and also by virtue of the language in Standing Order 75, which in all its parts refers to bills. Also, the standing order does not talk about public, private or government bills; it says "bills".

By the way, is my hon. friend going to make a distinction some day between public bills and government bills? When a private member has a public bill before the House, it comes under Standing Order 75 and a report stage amendment can be moved with respect to it. Likewise, a government bill is brought back at the report stage. Government bills are brought back subject to report stage amendments, and I have not heard anyone say, "It is a government bill and you cannot do this, because report stage amendments are provided in chapter 13, which has to do with proceedings on public bills."

Sir, you have identified this as the important point. It seems very clear. I am surprised that my hon. friend quoted Standing Order 116. I think the whole case is right there. By the same token, I was surprised that he quoted the precedent of February 13, 1969. The bill before the House then was Bill S-6, an act respecting the Canada Trust Company. It was a private bill. It had been through committee and was brought back for the report stage, as all bills must be. There is nothing in the chapter on private bills which says that private bills must be put through the report stage. You do not need that. That provision is in other parts of the Standing Orders.

On that occasion, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) put down his report stage amendment. At the moment we are not discussing what that report stage amendment was. He did put it down. It was seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). The then hon. member for Grenville-Carleton—not the present House leader for the Conservatives, but the hon. member from the other side who has gone to his reward on the bench—raised a point of order against the amendment. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux had trouble with it and admitted he saw difficulty. He said,

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

"Suppose there is a three-clause bill and three different members put down three report stage amendments to delete one clause after the other: there would be difficulty."

Mr. Speaker Lamoureux said that the matter gave him great difficulty, and then said that he could not see how he could deny the procedural admissibility of the report stage amendment. My friend from Edmonton West tried to argue that the ruling was wrong; that the Chair and Table were wrong. He has argued that before. I sometimes think the Chair and the Table are wrong, but, I am smart enough not to say so. I rely on the good judgments of the Chair and the Table. The fact is, there is a precedent. It was allowed, and not just by chance. There was argument, Mr. Speaker saw the problems, admitted it was a new situation created by the rules we had passed only a few months before, but admitted the report stage amendment to that private bill as in order.

On the notice paper of that day there was another amendment, also in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, to Bill S-7, an act respecting the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation. I do not know what happened to it, whether it was reached or not. On May 28, 1971, a report stage amendment was put down by Mr. Skoberg, the then member for Moose-Jaw, to Bill S-12, an act respecting Canada Del Rio Oils Limited. I have not had the opportunity to check what happened to these amendments. But in the one instance, when an hon. member questioned whether there was this right to put down report change amendments, it seems to me that the ruling made was correct.

I go back to the question to which you asked us to address ourselves, Mr. Speaker, the question the hon. member for Edmonton West has raised. We have provided for a report stage; we have provided for report stage amendments. Nowhere in the book have we said that report stage amendments apply to only one class of bill. No. They apply to private members' public bills. That has not been questioned. They apply with respect to government bills. That has not been questioned. In the one instance to which I alluded, that right has been applied to a private member's private bill. Whatever Your Honour may have to say later about the subject matter or content of some of the amendments, the question we must consider is very simple: Does the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge have the right to put down a report stage amendment to a private bill? It seems to me the answer to that question is beyond doubt.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question, for clarification? Can the hon. member clarify the apparent conflict between Standing Order 109 and Standing Order 75(5), (7) and (8)? The conflict is this: Standing Order 109 mentions "important amendment". Presumably, there are unimportant amendments to private bills which can be in manuscript form. Yet Standing Order 75(5), (7) and (8) indicates that notice is required and that only those amendments may be debated with respect to which 24-hour notice has been given. How can the hon. member explain this conflict?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was mystified at the hon. member's raising that argument in his principal submission. I see no conflict. Standing Order 109 speaks of an important amendment. I ask, who moves an amendment that is not important? The Standing Order says that one day's notice of such an amendment must be given. The various subsections of Standing Order 75 say the same, that there must be one day's notice with respect to report stage amendments. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge gave that one day's notice. He gave it to the Table yesterday and the amendment is printed in today's order paper. I may be slow, but I see no conflict. Both Standing Orders say the same.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about unimportant amendments?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We must be clear. I understand the argument of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), but there is one point on which I should like to receive further comment. It was my impression that Standing Order 116, in which there is no provision for the elimination of the report stage, would apply. The argument of the hon. member for Edmonton West is that Standing Order 116 is ruled out because it uses the words, "Except as herein otherwise provided." Standing Order 109 makes a provision with respect to notice of amendments that is different from the notice required with respect to report stage motions. It seems to me that the difference, if any, is one of notice, not of procedure.

It may be argued that there is some conflict with respect to Standing Order 109. There may be some argument as to whether at the report stage, if there is one, a member is bound to give 48 hours' notice or only 24 hours as contemplated in Standing Order 109. That question involves only a question of notice.

There is another difficulty to which hon. members have not addressed themselves and about which we must be clear. At the report stage we deal with motions, not amendments. That point has not been touched on. The intent of a motion may be to alter a bill. The fact is, these are not amendments; they are motions. We must make that clear distinction.

● (1730)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I suggest we are dealing with a problem similar to the one the hon. member for Edmonton West raised when he opened up the question of chapter titles. Perhaps the motion put down by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge should have been listed on the order paper under some heading other than Notices of Motions pursuant to Standing Order 75(5). Maybe it should have been put down under the terms of Standing Order 109. I do not find any greater difficulty there than I do about those chapter titles generally.

There is no doubt that under S.O. 109, if it is an important amendment—and they are all important—24 hours' notice is required. Mr. Speaker, the necessary 24 hours' notice was given yesterday in writing to the Table. The item appears in print; it is on the order paper. Surely it is not invalidated if it has been placed under a heading which does not altogether attach to it. It seems to me that if we go back to the original proposition, namely, that any bill is subject to a report stage amendment—I am thinking now of Your Honour's distinction between an amendment to a bill and an amendment to a clause in a bill—if any bill is subject to a report stage amendment, then private bills are covered, and my hon. friend has met the relevant provision by giving notice under 75(5).

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in this very important procedural debate dealing with the amendments moved by my hon. colleague for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) to Bill S-30. I was impressed by the arguments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who referred to Standing Orders 109 and 116. Mr. Speaker, having heard your own arguments in reply to that intervention, it seems obvious that the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge has the same right as any parliamentarian, namely to take an active part in presenting the amendment if he so wishes, and he may do so at any stage of the bill. That is the case of Bill S-30.

The subject of the amendment is of no consequence at this point. The fact remains that Standing Order 109 stipulates that an hon. member cannot move an important amendment to a private bill, in the House, unless he has given one day's notice.

That is how I see it, and so does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, according to his testimony.

This is perfectly in keeping with Standing Order 109. As far as Standing Order 116 is concerned, it says the following:

> Except as herein otherwise provided, the Standing Orders relating to public bills apply to private bills.

Mr. Speaker, this means that the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) is entirely right in introducing an amendment at this stage of the study on Bill S-30. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, the result would be that the report stage for the study of this kind of bill would not exist at all. If an hon. member cannot put forward an amendment at the report stage of such a bill, it means this stage simply does not exist. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you, with all due respect, to quote the Standing Order which would enable you to assert that, in effect, this stage does not exist. If it does, this means that the hon. member enjoys the same rights for this kind of bill as for a government bill. This is the essence of Standing Order 116.

Standing Order 116 is a basic protection for hon. members whether they are backbenchers, opposition or government members, in that sense that they can participate in the study of legislation and this means that not only can they speak on it but also bring forward amendments.

At that stage we run across Standing Order 109 which states that in this particular case a major amendment cannot be brought to the House unless notice has been given 24 hours before, a rule which the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge complied with. In other words, Mr. Speaker, your decision is extremely important. If you deny the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge the opportunity to oppose this bill in any manner through amendments, regardless of their contents since it would be another matter, that means you are giving a member the right to intervene at the report stage. For us, Mr. Speaker, this matter is paramount and deserves our consideration for an additional reason and this constitutes my second point which I wish to bring up before concluding.

Right now, we are not dealing with just any bill, we are dealing with a bill which will make it possible for the IAC finance company to become a chartered bank. As everybody knows, chartered banks will be reviewed soon. It is a study undertaken every ten years and referred to Parliament. It is an open secret that this bill clashes with the Bank Act on at least 16 specific points. We can, Mr. Speaker, even if this is not the substance of this argument, prove that Bill S-30 is an exception, and I repeat an exception to the Bank Act on at least 16 points. And Again I refer to the Standing Orders. This bill is out of order. A member, such as the sponsor of this bill, cannot introduce in committee a bill which goes beyond the law. In our opinion, Bill S-30 is a derogation to that rule. It provides preferential treatment for the Continental Bank.

Mr. Speaker, on several occasions my Social Credit and New Democrat colleagues have tried during the consideration of such bills to introduce amendments which were called out of order by the Speaker because they went beyond the scope of the bill. Now Bill S-30 goes 16 times farther than the Bank of Canada governing the chartered banks. It is an exception. This bill—and this is my last argument Mr. Speaker—is especially important because if it were passed today and that tomorrow we were reviewing the Bank Act and the Bank of Canada Act, we would have to take into account in such a revision the decision taken today about Bill S-30, since despite the amendment to be introduced, those 16 exceptions would have to be included. Morever my comments were included in the arguments brought forward by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge.

Mr. Speaker, for this reason your decision is extremely important since, first of all it might be interpreted as a way of disregarding a member's right to take part in a debate at the report stage and, second it enables any member to move an amendment which will be placed at any time within the framework of a public bill and in this sense, Mr. Speaker, we will reverse all precedents.

That is why I believe, given the importance of the subject concerned as well as the sound arguments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and the content of Standing Orders 109 and 116 with which the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge complied very well, and given the precedents on which this House has taken a stand for hundreds of years—thousands of years, if I refer to the slowness of some of our procedures—Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge will be entitled to move his amemdments.

As for the content of the amendments that is an entirely different story. At that time, it will be possible to consider them by seeing how far Bill S-30 goes.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I take part in a procedural debate, and I hope you will excuse me should I experience difficulties in expressing my views. But I will try to say properly what I have to say.

In my opinion, there is no problem as regards the interpretation of Standing Order 116. I quote:

> Except as herein otherwise provided, the standing orders relating to public bills shall apply to private bills.

Now, Standing Order 75(5) provides, I quote:

> If, not later than twenty-four hours prior to the consideration of a report stage, written notice is given of any motion to amend, delete, insert, etc. . . .

Then, in the present case, we can expect Standing Order 75, but this does not solve the problem of Standing Order 109 as raised by the hon. member for Hamilton. Then, we get to a point which, in my opinion, was not sufficiently discussed, that is: what is an "important amendment"? Why have this small book's authors used the terms "important amendment"? Has this ever been defined by anyone? I do not know.

In my opinion, there should be once and for all a definition of what exactly is an "important amendment" as mentioned in S.O. 109. I submit respectfully, whatever that is worth, that an important amendment would be one which relates to the very integrity of a bill in its wholeness and in its substance. For example, we would have an important amendment if, on third reading, we had an amendment to give a bill a six months' hoist or an amendment to send back a bill to a committee for a new study, or some amendment of this kind, but not a motion as defined in S.O. 75(5). That would be a motion to amend a part or a clause or a subclause of a bill.

In my opinion, S.O. 75(5) applies in this case because of S.O. 116. And since in the chapter on private bills there is no section which stipulates explicitly that S.O. 75(5) does not apply, S.O. 109 would thus have been included by the authors of our Standing Orders to cover precisely those cases where there is a special amendment, an "important amendment", which relates to the very substance of a bill in its integrity, namely, an amendment which would give the bill a six months' hoist, or have the bill examined anew in committee.

● (1740)

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on the second point that Your Honour raised, the problem I am facing is that under Standing Order 75(5), 75(7) and 75(8) no private member, other than one who has given notice of a motion under 75(5), may make a motion during the debate. There is the exception that he may make a subamendment to an amendment made within the 24 hour time limit.

To turn to Standing Order 109 dealing with private bills, the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) referred to what is an important amendment and what is not. Under Standing Order 75(7) amendments can be of a consequential nature arising out of another amendment that has been carried, but must be moved by a minister of the Crown on a government bill. There is no provision whatsoever, in the case of a private member's public bill, for making amendments that are clearly consequential. The note clearly explains the relationship to public bills only.

If Standing Order 109 is to mean anything, it means that there are two categories of amendments, important amendments and ones not so important. Therefore since notice is required of important amendments, obviously no notice whatever is required of unimportant amendments, not even 48 hours' notice. It is that problem which is at the root of it. There may be a conflict in our rules.

With regard to the second point to which you adverted, Mr. Speaker, as to whether these amendments are in order having regard to the motion being put, it is my understanding that the motion the Chair will now be putting is the adoption of the committee report. My memory may be at fault, but if the motion to the House is that the committee's report be adopted, I find it extraordinarily difficult for the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) to come up with a single amendment which attempts to modify a clause of the bill. It does not attempt in any way to modify the report.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I make a brief comment?

Mr. Speaker: By rotating again and again we are really inviting an endless discussion, and I do not want to do that. This is an important procedural point and I do not want to shut anyone off, but neither do I want it to be an open-ended debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I quite agree with you, Mr. Speaker, and I shall be quite brief. The hon. member for Edmonton West a moment ago said that the motion the Chair should be putting is a motion for concurrence in the report. I submit that under Standing Order 75(4) that happens only when it is consideration of the report stage of a bill from committee of the whole. There can be no report stage debate at that time, and the motion is put immediately.

But if the hon. member would turn to Standing Order 75(12), he will see that provides:

> When proceedings at the report stage on any bill have been concluded, a motion "That the bill, as amended, be concurred in" or "That the bill be concurred in" shall be put and forthwith disposed of, without amendment or debate.

It seems to me that this is really begging the question and we are back to the question Your Honour posed some time ago, namely, does the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge have the right to make report stage amendments to a private bill? If he has, then those motions have to be put before you put the motion for the adoption of the report.

One other comment that the hon. member for Edmonton West made in his recent submission was that the way this is set up only the hon. member who put down the report stage amendment can now make one. That is true. But every one of the 264 members of the House has the right to put down report stage amendments. This is why we have rules that permit Your Honour to combine them, and that sort of thing.

I come back again to the question of what is important. That word does seem to be giving us some difficulty. I suggest that unimportant amendments are really just amendments to form, to take out a comma, to unsplit a split infinitive, or something like that. Any amendment with any substantial meaning to it would have to be treated as an important amendment. From my point of view in this whole argument, I would come right back to the original position that I took, which is that the right to move report stage amendments applies to all classes of bills. Nowhere is there a provision in the rule book which provides that they do not apply to private bills. Therefore my answer to the initial question from the Chair is that there is a right to move report stage amendments to a private bill.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I just want Your Honour to note that I have a point of order dealing with the acceptability of these amendments, both individually and collectively, in the form of an expanded negative. I wonder whether Your Honour would recognize me after you have settled this point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise two points and I will be very brief. First I would like to refer to Standing Order 75(5) which provides that a written notice of any motion to amend be given at least 24 hours prior to the consideration of a report stage and be printed on the order paper. This has been done by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman).

I would like to remind you as well of the statement the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who, I believe, does not understand the Standing Orders, because this has nothing to do with a minister of the Crown.

The question is whether a member of parliament, from whatever side of the House, is allowed to intervene at report stage.

Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, this is a fundamental question. Otherwise, depending on your decision, the questions whether we are really going to decide on the report stage and on the right of member of parliament, or whether we are going to abolish purely and simply the report state for this category of bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has put forward a very fascinating argument about the validity of in fact having a report stage in respect of private bills or private members' private bills.

The analogy, if it were not expressed in Standing Order 116, would probably be understood in any case, but in order to make it perfectly clear, Standing Order 116 says, and it has been referred to many times, that except as otherwise provided the provisions of the Standing Orders as to public bills apply to private bills. If that Standing Order were not there it might be interesting to note that there would, I suppose, be no regulation which would say that a private bill has to be read a first, second, and third time, that there are restrictions on second reading amendments, that the bill can only be amended in detail when it gets to the standing committee, and that the stages of the bill can only be taken on different days without leave, and so on.

The fact of the matter is, in other words, that there is no specific provision that I can see, as I have been scanning through the arguments and research dealing with private bills, which would provide for the regular and orderly dealing with private bills. It is done only by virtue of the fact that all of those regulations which apply to public bills have to apply to private bills as well. Since that sets up the first reading, second reading, and third reading stages of the bill it would seem to me to be unacceptable to argue that it would not apply to the report stage of the bill in the same way.

If by analogy, therefore, private bills proceed from one stage to another because of Standing Order 116 making applicable all of the rules in respect of public bills to private bills, surely that must also apply to the rules as they relate to the report stage unless, of course, there is some provision which indicates that report stage is not at the disposition of the member. I think this is the point. It is not a question as to whether the report stage follows automatically.

What we are dealing with here is whether hon. members ought to enjoy the same privileges under Standing Order 75 relating to report stage amendments with private bills as they do with public bills. It is a question of the right of the member. A member, it would seem to me, has the right as given to him by Standing Order 116 in every way to put down notice to require a report stage, to require 48 hour's notice between the placing of the bill on the order paper and the beginning or report stage, and 24 hours' notice of any amendment to be given. In order to take that right away from members it would seem to me there would have to be very clear authority somewhere for it.

The hon. member alludes to the fact that Standing Order 116 only applies except as herein otherwise provided, and refers to Standing Order 109, which is a notice provision requiring 24 hours' notice of an amendment. The fact is I must take that only as a requirement as to notice and not as to substance. Besides that, it is exactly identical to the 24 hours' notice requirement in respect of a report stage amendment, and therefore it can scarcely be taken as a departure from the Standing Orders as they relate to report stage amendments.

I therefore must conclude that since Standing Order 116 is really the only authority for setting up all of the other stages and prescribing the manner in which to deal with private members' bills, I have to accept that the same Standing Order provides in exactly the same way for the report stage of private bills as it exists in fact for public bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) has given the Chair notice of his intention to raise a point of order in respect of another matter. Am I correct in that? Perhaps we should clarify this. In addition to the several motions for amendments, I should say to be correct on this, that the hon. member puts forward, he also wishes to raise a general point of order about the procedural regularity of the bill.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has also indicated he has a procedural argument to make.

It is now close to three minutes to six o'clock. It is obvious there is going to be much more said about the procedure in respect of this bill. Frankly I would be reluctant now to open up a new point, allowing three or four minutes on it, and attempting to pick up the thread a week or two weeks from now, as the case may be. I therefore must ask the indulgence of hon. members in calling it six o'clock.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know it is approaching six o'clock but it is my information that the House leader wanted to seek the consent of—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think this is being done behind the curtains; is that not right?

Mr. Paproski: Yes, I think it is being negotiated right now. We should be hearing during the dinner hour whether there has been a decision to bring in a verdict.

Mr. Blais: I understand there are negotiations proceeding now; therefore we can call it six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) on a point of order.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among representatives of the parties and I ask whether there would be leave to return to statements by ministers so that my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), could make a statement.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, discussions have taken place and we are agreeable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—STATEMENT ON PROPOSED EXPORT LEVY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: Are you really going to resign?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will have to disappoint the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski). I will start off, however, by congratulating him on his appointment. This is indeed evidence that the meek shall inherit the earth.

I should like to make a brief statement this evening on the subject of the export levy which is one of the measures the government proposed last fall as part of the anti-inflation program.

As hon. members are aware, the proposed features of this levy were tabled last December 18, and consultation on the measure was invited. Since that time the government has received representations from many interested parties, both about the general nature of the levy as well as its precise details. In particular, the matter was discussed extensively at the meeting with provincial finance ministers on February 2, and I undertook at that time I would reconsider the levy and discuss it further with my colleagues in the federal cabinet.

As members will recall, under this proposal exporters would remain free to sell at international price levels so that Canada would gain the full advantage of any increase in the value of Canadian products on world markets. In the interest of equity, however, it was also proposed that any profits of Canadian exporters, in excess of the guidelines applying to firms selling in the domestic market, would be subject to a special levy. Up to 90 per cent of the levy could be refunded to companies to help finance new capital investment in productive facilities and other specified projects.

From the standpoint of equity the government felt that with respect to the work force of exporting firms or with respect to firms in Canada which sell only to the Canadian market, both of which would be subject to restraints under the control program, that some balance was necessary with respect to exporting firms which, if uncontrolled, would have the possibility of achieving substantial profit increases during the control period. While it would be difficult to achieve an exactly balanced treatment it was felt that the levy would at last provide a more even treatment as between exporting firms and others in Canada who are subject to the restraint program.

[Translation]

The foregoing argument has not commended itself to a majority of provincial governments in Canada who are representative of all parties and all regions. At the Federal-Provincial Conference and since, several provincial governments have expressed to me their concern that the export levy might discourage the initiative to achieve greater exports from Canada at a time when the revival of Canadian export sales is of critical importance to regional and national economy. They expressed the concern that the levy could add further uncertainly to investment decisions in Canada and might discourage new capital investment. This despite the provision in the proposal for refunding excess profits for the purpose of investment. Cleary any measure that might have an adverse impact on further investment in Canada or might check our pursuit of markets abroad would not be in the interest of anyone, neither exporters, their employees, governments, nor consumers.

[English]

I therefore wish to announce the government's decision not to proceed with the export levy measure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): However, the Anti-Inflation Board will be asked to monitor profits of exporting firms and, where excess export revenues are generated the way in which they are re-invested. If there is evidence of excess export profits and evidence that they are not being re-invested, the matter will again be reviewed by the government.

● (2010)

I would interpolate here another comment, that contrary to the opinion that has been expressed in the House with respect to the possible diversion of investment from Canada if the export levy should take place, one provincial government at least has expressed concern lest export profits not subject to the levy might be diverted to investment outside the country. I would say in respect of that particular concern that the Anti-Inflation Board and the other agencies of government will monitor with particular care the fact that the relief of export profits from this particular measure should not result in investments taking place outside Canada.

At the same time the government will follow developments in the Canadian economy for signs of diversion of goods to export markets at the expense of adequate domestic supply. There is little prospect of this developing in the near future in view of the extra productive capacity available in most sectors, but the government will be prepared to act if special situations arise.

In view of the fact that the existing anti-inflation regulations had anticipated the introduction of an export levy, a number of consequential amendments to the regulations will be required. In particular, export sales will generally be exempt from the domestic guidelines; however, where a firm voluntarily cuts back on supplying its Canadian customers in favour of foreign customers, the diverted export sales will be regarded as resulting in excess revenues and will be viewed as a contravention of domestic guidelines.

As I have had the occasion to state many times both inside and outside the House, we believe that the application of the anti-inflation program should be as responsive as possible to the concerns of the provincial governments which are participating in the program and to all those in Canada who will be affected by it. Recent developments have indicated that there are other areas of the program which also require some important change, particularly the need to ensure that people's rights remain fully protected. These issues are now under review, and I hope to be able to report to the House within the next week or two on a number of other changes which will further improve the operation of this program.

May I express my thanks to the House for the opportunity to make my statement at this time.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, if I may be forgiven some expression of humour here to consider the rather ludicrous situation in which the government finds itself, let me remind the House of the time in the spring and summer of 1974 when the minister and his colleagues, under the brillant leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), said precisely that a program of price and wage controls would be one of trial and error, that it would cause all sorts of problems in the country, and that we could not afford to put it into operation. We have got it now and we are experiencing those same controls.

I also had not only to smile but to laugh at the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) who was striking his desk, beating a seal-like tattoo on it, when the minister announced that he was withdrawing this particular export tax. He reminded me of the man who finds pleasure in no longer feeling any pain because he has stopped butting his head against a stone wall.

Basically I can sympathize with the minister—there is no doubt about it. I think any of us who were advocating wage and price controls or an incomes policy in 1974 were quite conscious of the fact that there would have to be some changes because there was no one who could forecast precisely what would happen. However, I suggest that there would have been a difference of approach which would not have caused as much difficulty in the Canadian economy, and such resentment by provincial governments, particularly with regard to the proposed export levy.

Any firm that was engaged in the export of Canadian commodities immediately reacted and said that these people opposite have taken leave of their senses, as indeed they have, when we consider that Canada's deficit balance on commodity exchange was not plummeting downward but was skyrocketing, if one can imagine a deficit skyrocketing. It is going to be worse in the next fiscal year because we have seen extraordinarily long strikes in the forest industry, particularly in the pulp and paper industries which were contributing so much toward our export totals. We are going to see a much wider gap between exports and imports.

The government should have known this in October. It should have known that there might be some sort of an attraction to divert goods from the domestic market to the export market. I suppose that under certain ideal conditions one could argue that this might happen, but there is not a person in the House, particularly on the government side and among any of their supporters, who could say that there is any commodity in Canada today that is in such tight supply that a diversion of any amount of it to a favourable export market could result in an increase in price to Canadian consumers under a demand pull influence in the market, the traditional inflationary demand pull. The thinking behind that was totally confused, yet it was the basic premise with regard to this proposal. I dare say that some people said, well, there is a tight market with regard to paper, and if the market in the U.S. or overseas continues to be good, we will send paper there, and there will be an increase in price or a blackmarket for it in Canada.

Some other people, again unthinkingly, because I do not think they realize just what controls apply, may have thought that with a forecasted possible shortage of petroleum products it might be more attractive for the Canadian refining industry to send refined products south to the U.S., and that there would be either an increase in price due to the pressures of demand in Canada or there could arise a blackmarket with regard to petroleum products. There again they failed to take account of the day-to-day effectiveness of the Energy Resources Board of the province of Alberta which monitors the production and shipping of petroleum products out of the province, the effectiveness of the National Energy Board, and of the export tax which already exists on both crude oil and refined products destined for the United States. Therefore this export levy proposal had no justification whatsoever, and it never did.

It would have been far better for the government to have gone ahead with a freeze for 60 days or thereabouts. As the minister himself said that we are going to see some other changes. There will be some more backing and filling, which would have been unnecessary had the government proceeded with a freeze for 60 days, and consultation with the provinces within that period. It would have seen that most of the provinces thoroughly dislike and do not agree with the export levy. Then members of the government could have taken other and necessary steps. They would not have had to eat crow on this particular proposition if there had been proper consultation first. Wage and price controls across this country are not entirely a federal responsibility, but the federal government, on I do not know whose foolhardy policy, went ahead and tried to go it alone hoping it could drag the provinces along. That is the general attitude of the government, but that is not the way to do things. If there had been proper consultation with regard to wage and price controls we would be ahead of where we are now.

The minister talked about monitoring the sale of goods here in Canada and setting up domestic guidelines on goods sold in the foreign market. This is a proposal to tax additional profits of Canadian businesses working in a foreign market where Canadian economic conditions do not set the price, with the exception of the cost of production. And if our goods have a competitive edge in a foreign market which is going ahead on an inflationary basis, and our dollar return because of advancing prices in that country is higher, what right does the government have to tax and why should the government tax those additional profits on business not accomplished here in Canada? Why?

We have a tough enough time as it is working in the foreign market. Since when is Canadian business on a public utility basis? The bureaucrats are going to monitor all Canadian business, which is not going to be allowed to make one cent more than some backroom boys will allow, or some other people who want to tie up the economy so tight that it will crack.

I think it was salutary for the minister to come forward and admit the error on this occasion. I welcome this step, and I will welcome his statements in the future which may make the policy of wage and price controls more effective for the benefit of the Canadian economy as a whole.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my case on this subject can be made rather briefly, and I will try to do so. I think the minister has put the program back to what it was in its general form before the special situation under the regulations was created to deal with the particular problems which arose for the first time with firms in the export market.

As I understand the regulation, the reason for its introduction and for this particular section to deal with exports was twofold. The export levy was intended to deal with profits which were going to be excessive for firms which were in the export market, on the one hand, and second, there was a desire to prevent the diversion of goods originally produced for the domestic market to foreign markets. There were anomalies which arose from the export levy, which the minister has dealt with by removing it, but by removing it we are back to square one with the two problems which existed before the export levy was introduced.

What are the consequences now of removing the levy? First, firms which are exporting have the right to go scot-free in terms of the regulation of their profits, but I remind the House that in statements, not made tonight but earlier, by the minister the employees in those companies will not be exempt from the guidelines.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I said that tonight.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister said that tonight. I read his statement quickly and did not notice that it was said. I stand corrected. He has said that employees will still come under the guidelines but the companies will not, which is at least a consistent application of the rough justice principle which goes with the rest of the program.

The second point to be made is that firms selling in the export market will have a clear advantage, from a profit point of view, over those selling in the domestic market in the same industry. In our view, and I suspect in the minister's as well, this leads to an unfair situation for many Canadian companies.

As the minister well knows, in virtually every province in Canada there are some firms which are now producing, within the same industry, primarily for the export market, and other firms producing primarily for the domestic market.

The paper industry is a good example of this. This means that companies which are producing just by chance—historically now with this program—for the export market are going to have profit expectations and the right to them which firms producing in the domestic market will not have. The minister may say that he is going to deal in some vague, unspecified way with requirements for reinvestment for those firms, but the point remains that even if the government produces at a later date some tough regulations about the necessity to reinvest in the Canadian economy the excess profits of these firms which produce for the export market, that still means they are given a financial advantage, under this program, over their domestic competitors. They will be able to use their higher profits to reinvest, and that will provide more jobs, but it also means they will have a greater opportunity for investing and expanding than their competitors who now happen to be producing for the domestic market.

The second point from a broader, community point of view, as opposed to that of the corporations themselves, is more serious. I think the hon. member who preceded me is substantially correct that in the short run, because of a world-wide recession from which we have not yet recovered, there are few opportunities for firms in Canada to divert production from the domestic market to the foreign market and make greater profits, but I submit that that is very short run indeed. This program runs until the end of 1978, and I think every corporation worth its salt in this country, after the minister made his announcement tonight, will be looking very carefully indeed at future sales abroad as opposed to sales at home. I have little doubt that, if not in a matter of weeks, at least in a matter of months we will run into some serious domestic shortages which will be the result of firms quite understandably transferring production from the domestic market to the export market.
